Buyer purchasing tractors from merchant-entrustee, without notice and in ordinary course of business, takes free from lien of prior-recorded chattel mortgage not only as to cash paid and trade-in allowance, but also as to that part of purchase price represented by merchant's cancellation of pre-existing debt to buyer. GECC v. R.A. Heintz Constr. Co., 302 F. Supp. 958 (D. Or. 1969).

A "buyer in the ordinary course of business" of an automobile from a dealer takes title superior to that of the repossessing lien creditor who had stored the automobile with the dealer, since the Code § 2-403 relating to entrustment of possession is most applicable to a repossessing lienholder with right of sale. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Associates Disct. Corp., 246 Ark. 118, 436 S.W.2d 809 (1969).

The code provision defining "entrusting" and providing that any entrusting of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him the power to transfer all the rights of the entruster to a buyer in the ordinary course of business is applicable to sales between merchants. The purpose of Code § 2-403 affording this protection is to protect a person from a third-party interest in goods purchased from the general inventory of a merchant regardless of that merchant's actual authority to sell these goods. Therefore, the section was not expressly or by implication restricted to the sale by a merchant to a member of the consumer public. However, the court held that one merchant purchasing automobiles from another merchant was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business where the purchasing merchant was chargeable with knowledge that there was a certificate of title registration law for the purchased automobiles. Mattek v. Malofsky, 42 Wis. 2d 16, 165 N.W.2d 406 (1969).

Where plaintiff bought truck from a merchant in the ordinary course of business, without knowledge of a security agreement entered into by the seller and later assigned to a bank, in repossessing the truck after the sale, bank was liable for conversion and damages. Makransky v. Long Island Reo Truck Co., 58 Misc. 2d 338 (1968).

The purchaser of a truck was entitled to damages for conversion of his property when a bank "repossessed" the vehicle upon the seller's failure to meet the obligation for which the truck had been pledged as security. The court pointed out that plaintiff was a buyer in the ordinary course of business, that seller was a merchant under provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, and that possession of the tractor by the truck company entitled it to transfer title in the ordinary course of its business. Makransky v. Long Island Reo Truck Co., 58 Misc. 2d 338 (1968).

When the goods are delivered to a dealer as inventory, his sale is effective under § 2-403 to transfer title to a buyer in the ordinary course of business. Humphrey Cadillac & Oldsmobile Co. v. Sinard, 85 Ill. App. 2d 64, 229 N.E.2d 365, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 640 (1st Dist. 1967).

Once a buyer acquires title, by virtue of UCC § 2-403 subsequent purchasers from him benefit by his title without regard to whether they themselves would qualify as buyers in ordinary course of business. Linwood Harvestore, Inc. v. Cannon, 427 Pa. 434, 235 A.2d 377 (1967).

One who acquires property from a merchant who was entrusted with possession of the goods must demonstrate that he was "a buyer in ordinary course of business", and this term as defined in UCC § 1-201(9) is more restrictive than the term "good faith purchaser for value". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

The fact that an employee of an automobile distributor was instructed not to sell to a given dealer did not destroy the employee's power to do so nor preclude a buyer from the dealer from being a buyer in ordinary course. Humphrey Cadillac & Oldsmobile Co. v. Sinard, 85 Ill. App. 2d 64, 229 N.E.2d 365 (1st Dist. 1967).

Where a wholesaler entrusts a retail dealer in such property with furniture and appliances under a "floor-plan arrangement" and such property was subsequently purchased in the ordinary course of business from the retailer, the legal title and right or claim to such property had passed out of the wholesaler and into the purchasers at retail, and the wholesaler could not thereafter bring an action in trover against the retailer, alleging unlawful conversion. Charles S. Martin Distrib. Co. v. Banks, 111 Ga. App. 538, 142 S.E.2d 309 (1965).

An acceptance company which had made loans to a dealer was required to look to the dealer for repayment, rather than to a new automobile in possession of one who had purchased it from the dealer in the ordinary course of business, paying the full purchase price therefor, notwithstanding that the acceptance company had filed a blanket security agreement executed by the automobile dealer, who had also executed and delivered to the acceptance company a trust receipt agreement describing the automobile in question. Sterling Acceptance Co. v. Grimes, 194 Pa. Super. 503, 168 A.2d 600 (1961).

Recognized automobile dealer has power to transfer an automobile held in inventory in ordinary course of business free of any security interest. Murphy v. Plymouth Nat'l Bank, 22 Mass. App. Dec. 36 (1961).

Where notwithstanding that buyer who bought an automobile from the dealer out of inventory and in ordinary course of business had paid the full purchase price, the dealer thereafter fraudulently executed a collateral mortgage with the identical automobile as security in favor of a bank with whom dealer had an existing floor plan agreement, the transaction between the dealer and the bank was void as to the buyer. Weisel v. McBride, 191 Pa. Super. 411, 156 A.2d 613 (1959).

7. —Merchants.

In an action by the owners of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of statutory estoppel (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-403, subd [2], which provides that any entrusting of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entruster to a buyer in the ordinary course of business) is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner of the painting and had no authority from the owner to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it, since the art dealer was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business, defined as a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest of a third party in the goods buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind (Uniform Commercial Code, § 1-201, subd [9]), inasmuch as the person from whom the dealer bought the painting was not an art dealer and never held himself out to be one and the dealer was not a person in good faith because he made no effort to verify whether the seller was the owner or authorized by the owner to sell the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

Where bank sued automobile dealer to recover on promissory notes given to bank by dealer and sought to impose constructive trust on dealer's assets to secure payment of notes, on theory that dealer had fraudulently obtained loans from bank and used funds therefrom to purchase such assets; where dealer's assets included automobile that dealer had sold to buyer in violation of court order prohibiting sale or transfer of such vehicle or any other assets of dealer; where buyer of automobile, while unaware of such restraining order, sold it to third person and then, after acquiring knowledge of restraining order, bought it back from such person to honor warranty of title to vehicle; and where such automobile was thereafter sold under court order and proceeds of sale were claimed by both bank and buyer, (1) buyer, on buying automobile from dealer, was purchaser in ordinary course of business under UCC § 2-403(2) and UCC § 2-403(3), since dealer at that time was engaged in business of buying and selling automobiles; (2) title to proceeds of court-ordered sale of such vehicle vested in buyer; (3) doctrine of lis pendens did not preclude buyer from asserting interest in such automobile superior to bank's interest therein, since lis pendens doctrine is not exception to Uniform Commercial Code; and (4) buyer's buying automobile back from third person with knowledge of bank's claim to such vehicle did not affect buyer's right to proceeds of court-ordered sale of vehicle, since vehicle was merely reacquired by buyer to make good his warranty of title thereto where such title was in question. Riverside Nat'l Bank v. Law, 564 P.2d 240 (Okla. 1977).

Where manufacturer of modular home, or house trailer, sold home to dealer who, in turn, resold it to defendant buyers, installed it on land owned by buyers, and then absconded with purchase money, and where manufacturer brought suit against buyers claiming that it, as unpaid holder of certificate of title to home, had title to home as against claim of buyers, trial court properly ruled in favor of title claim of buyers since under UCC § 2-403(2), (1) dealer was merchant who dealt in goods of that kind, (2) defendants were buyers in ordinary course of business, and (3) manufacturer's entrusting of home to dealer gave dealer power to transfer all rights of manufacturer to buyers (holding that buyers were entitled to have their ownership interest in home evidenced by certificate of title). Fuqua Homes, Inc. v. Evanston Bldg. & Loan Co., 52 Ohio App. 2d 399, 370 N.E.2d 780 (1977).

UCC § 2-403 is intended to protect persons who buy out of inventory from merchants. Northwestern Nat'l Bank v. Maher, 258 N.W.2d 623 (Minn. 1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

Purchaser who bought manufacturing equipment from lessee could not invoke protections of UCC § 2-403(2) in action by owner to recover possession or reasonable value of machinery, although purchaser acted in good faith in that he purchased equipment only after reasonable assurances of title and in belief that lessee owned equipment, where seller, by reason of this isolated transaction, did not meet standards of "merchant dealing in goods of this kind," and where purchaser's failure to request additional proof of ownership was not "commercially reasonable" approach to transaction (holding, however, that owner was estopped under common law to assert his title). Tumber v. Automation Design & Mfg. Corp., 130 N.J. Super. 5, 324 A.2d 602 (L. Div. 1974).

Where plaintiff purchased trailers from manufacturer, retained title and parked them on dealer's used car and truck lot, under arrangement that whenever dealer found buyer plaintiff was to bring in certificate of origin and indorse it over to buyer, under mistaken impression that dealer could not register title without such certificate, dealer sold trailers to buyers but failed to pay plaintiff, buyers financed purchases with defendant bank and bank foreclosed on its security interest in trailers after buyers defaulted, whether plaintiff could recover against bank for conversion depended on whether consignment of trailers was intended as security; if plaintiff's retention of title was limited to reservation of security interest, he could not prevail against bank since he did not retain possession of collateral nor did debtor sign security agreement describing collateral as required by UCC § 9-203(1); if consignment was not intended as security and if dealer was not "merchant who deals in goods of that kind" or if buyers were not "buyers in ordinary course of business" within meaning of UCC § 2-403(2) plaintiff would prevail against bank since buyers would not have obtained good title and could not have created security interest in bank. Nauman v. First Nat'l Bank, 50 Mich. App. 41, 212 N.W.2d 760 (1973).

Where plaintiff automobile dealer sold car to second dealer who in turn sold car to defendant buyer, who 15 years previously had had experience as automobile dealer, transaction was not "between merchants" as contemplated by Code § 2-104(3), so as to charge buyer with "knowledge or skill of merchants"; and, although buyer accepted automobile without instrument of title as required by Motor Vehicle Title and Registration Law, and accepted new automobile from non-franchised dealer without receiving manufacturer's certificate of origin to that vehicle, buyer took title to car free from plaintiff dealer's claim, under Code § 2-403(2) and (3). Couch v. Cockroft, 490 S.W.2d 713 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

8. Defects cured; mistake.

Goods were erroneously shipped by customs broker contrary to instructions of owner-importer; textile finisher received goods for processing on behalf of owner; held, there was no "entrusting" within UCC provision relating to powers of merchant to whom goods were entrusted. Toyomenka, Inc. v. Mount Hope Finishing Co., 432 F.2d 722 (4th Cir. N.C. 1970).

9. —Bad check.

Where meat packer's operations were financed by secured creditor who had properly perfected security interest in meat packer's assets, including after-acquired property, where cattle sellers delivered cattle to meat packer on "grade and yield basis" (cattle were first slaughtered, chilled and then graded before purchase price was calculated), where checks were subsequently issued to sellers, but before checks were paid, secured party, believing itself to be insecure, refused to advance more funds to meat packer for operation of plant, and where meat packer then filed petition in bankruptcy and cattle sellers sought to reclaim cattle or right to proceeds from sale of slaughtered meat: (1) course of conduct prescribed by Packers and Stockyards Act and regulations issued thereunder, coupled with undisputed intent of cattle sellers, compelled conclusion that sale of cattle was cash and not credit transaction; (2) strict application of ten-day limitation on right to reclaim cattle for some substantial period of time after filing of petition for bankruptcy was warranted inasmuch as such limitation is absolute; (3) however slight or tenuous or marginal was sellers' interest, it was necessarily great enough to permit attachment of secured party's lien; (4) even if evidence had established that secured party knew of meat packer's nonpayment its status as good faith purchaser would be unaffected; and (5) the perfected security interest was superior to the interest of the seller. Stowers v. Mahon, 526 F.2d 1238 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 834, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

Notwithstanding subsequent purchaser did not know that intermediate seller's title was voidable due to intermediate seller's obtaining truck on basis of check which was dishonored, subsequent purchaser did not have good title against original seller by status of "good faith purchaser for value" under UCC §§ 1-201(19), 1-201(44) and 2-403, where subsequent purchaser knew that intermediate seller was sophisticated about value of automotive equipment, subsequent purchaser had just received three dishonored checks from intermediate seller, subsequent purchaser had no reason to believe that intermediate seller would give equipment worth $13,500 or more to settle debt of $9,100, and subsequent purchaser let intermediate seller retain possession of truck. Graves Motors, Inc. v. Docar Sales, Inc., 414 F. Supp. 717 (E.D. La. 1976).

In action by seller to recover possession of racing vehicle from third party after seller delivered vehicle to buyer and bank refused to honor "certified draft" which seller received from buyer as payment for vehicle, although buyer had power to transfer vehicle to "good faith purchaser for value" under UCC § 2-403, third party had burden of proving that he was such purchaser and trial court erred in granting summary judgment where there was issued of fact as to third party's status as "good faith purchaser for value." Landrum v. Armbruster, 28 N.C. App. 250, 220 S.E.2d 842 (1976).

Under UCC § 9-105(1)(i), a secured party under Article 9 is a "purchaser" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(33); thus, where credit corporation had prior valid security interest in automobile dealer's inventory, where automobile wholesaler sold and delivered used cars and trucks to dealer with unencumbered certificates of title, but where dealer's checks in payment for vehicles were dishonored, under UCC § 2-403, dealer could transfer good title to "good faith purchaser for value," despite fact dealer tendered, for purchase of vehicles, checks which were subsequently dishonored, and, hence, credit corporations' security interest in automobiles delivered to dealer was superior to wholesaler's interest. Swets Motor Sales, Inc. v. Pruhsner, 236 N.W.2d 299 (Iowa 1975).

If passage of title is dependent upon the performance of some condition subsequent, one in possession of an article has a voidable title which can be transferred to a bona fide purchaser for value even if the transferor was deceived as to the identity of the purchaser, the delivery was in exchange for a check later dishonored, or procured through a fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

Where the person purchasing goods with a bad check resells to third persons, the original vendor may prove that the transferee did not purchase in good faith as is evidenced by the fact that the goods thus resold appeared to be new but were sold at one half the regular price and the buyer making such resale did not have a bill of sale. Hollis v. Chamberlin, 243 Ark. 201, 419 S.W.2d 116 (1967).

10. —Fraud.

In action by wholesale seller against retailer-buyer for conversion of carpeting, in which (1) seller's salesman validly sold buyer carpeting worth $24,000 and buyer made payment with four checks, one of which was returned for insufficient funds, (2) salesman improperly obtained buyer's returned check and one of buyer's four other checks, instructed buyer to issue two checks for $10,000 to corporation that was salesman's alter ego, and appropriated proceeds of such checks, (3) salesman later diverted shipment of carpeting worth $76,000 from party to whom wholesaler had sold it, delivered such shipment to buyer, and appropriated $10,000 downpayment that buyer made on such shipment, (4) buyer eventually returned part of diverted shipment to wholesaler and sold remainder, which was worth $30,000, and (5) wholesaler sought (a) $5,000 spent to recover returned carpeting, (b) $30,000 for carpeting that buyer had sold from diverted shipment, and (c) $10,000 balance still due on carpeting that buyer had bought under valid contract with wholesaler's salesman, court held (1) that buyer, although misled by salesman into giving salesman two checks made out to corporation that was salesman's alter ego, nevertheless knew at that time that wholesaler was party to which buyer owed $10,000 balance on buyer's valid carpet purchase from wholesaler, (2) that salesman had stolen diverted carpeting shipment from wholesaler, (3) that buyer had not acquired valid title to diverted carpeting, under UCC § 2-403(1)(d), since wholesaler had not dealt with its salesman in transaction of purchase, (4) that buyer also had not obtained valid title to diverted carpeting shipment, under entrustment provisions of UCC § 2-403(2) and (3), since wholesaler had not entrusted its salesman with such shipment, (5) that salesman's theft of diverted carpeting gave him void, instead of voidable, title to such carpeting which he could not pass on to even bona-fide purchaser, with result that wholesaler still had title to such carpeting, (6) that since buyer had converted part of diverted carpeting shipment by selling it, buyer was liable to wholesaler for such conversion, together with sum that wholesaler had spent to recover carpeting that buyer returned, and (7) that buyer's remedy, if any, was against salesman or his alter-ego corporation, in action under UCC § 2-312, for breach of implied warranty of title to carpeting in diverted shipment. Textile Supplies, Inc. v. Garrett, 687 F.2d 123 (5th Cir. 1982).

Where bank sued automobile dealer to recover on promissory notes given to bank by dealer and sought to impose constructive trust on dealer's assets to secure payment of notes, on theory that dealer had fraudulently obtained loans from bank and used funds therefrom to purchase such assets; where dealer's assets included automobile that dealer had sold to buyer in violation of court order prohibiting sale or transfer of such vehicle or any other assets of dealer; where buyer of automobile, while unaware of such restraining order, sold it to third person and then, after acquiring knowledge of restraining order, bought it back from such person to honor warranty of title to vehicle; and where such automobile was thereafter sold under court order and proceeds of sale were claimed by both bank and buyer, (1) buyer, on buying automobile from dealer, was purchaser in ordinary course of business under UCC § 2-403(2) and UCC § 2-403(3), since dealer at that time was engaged in business of buying and selling automobiles; (2) title to proceeds of court-ordered sale of such vehicle vested in buyer; (3) doctrine of lis pendens did not preclude buyer from asserting interest in such automobile superior to bank's interest therein, since lis pendens doctrine is not exception to Uniform Commercial Code; and (4) buyer's buying automobile back from third person with knowledge of bank's claim to such vehicle did not affect buyer's right to proceeds of court-ordered sale of vehicle, since vehicle was merely reacquired by buyer to make good his warranty of title thereto where such title was in question. Riverside Nat'l Bank v. Law, 564 P.2d 240 (Okla. 1977).

In cattle buyer's action against bank for fraudulently misrepresenting to buyer that seller of cattle owned them and that buyer would receive clear title thereto if he bought such cattle and left them in seller's feed lot for specified period to be fattened for market, when in fact defendant held mortgage on all of seller's cattle and was in position to know that seller did not have enough cattle to cover both plaintiff's purchase and also purchases made by other persons, defendant's contention that "entrusting of possession" provision of UCC § 2-403(2) barred judgment for plaintiff was rejected because defendant, at time of making its fraudulent misrepresentations, knew that buyer intended to leave cattle with seller to be fattened for market. Thus, defendant's misrepresentations pertained not only to time of sale of cattle to buyer, but also to subsequent period of feeding out of cattle, and "entrusting of possession" provision of UCC § 2-403(2) did not, as matter of law, preclude plaintiff's action. Forrester v. State Bank, 52 Ill. App. 3d 34, 363 N.E.2d 904 (3d Dist. 1977).

Defendant was properly convicted of receiving stolen goods, notwithstanding defendant's claim that third party, who acquired television set by fraud, passed valid title to him as good faith purchaser for value under UCC § 2-403(1), where there was evidence that defendant had conspired with third party to defraud merchant in acquiring television set and, thus, defendant was not good faith purchaser. Sacks v. State, 172 Ind. App. 185, 360 N.E.2d 21 (1977), reh'g denied, 172 Ind. App. 185, 361 N.E.2d 190 (1977).

Where notwithstanding that buyer who bought an automobile from the dealer out of inventory and in ordinary course of business had paid the full purchase price, the dealer thereafter fraudulently executed a collateral mortgage with the identical automobile as security in favor of a bank with whom dealer had an existing floor plan agreement, the transaction between the dealer and the bank was void as to the buyer. Weisel v. McBride, 191 Pa. Super. 411, 156 A.2d 613 (1959).

11. —Larceny.

Although seller of automobile, who was ostensibly individual in automobile business and who sold automobile to good faith purchaser, had facially valid Mississippi title, ultimately based upon Alabama tag receipt issued pursuant to forged bill of sale, seller did not have "voidable title" such that he could transfer good title to good faith purchaser under UCC § 2-403(1); title remained in insurance company that obtained valid title subsequent to paying Florida dealer's loss. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Estes, 345 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1977).

Defendant was properly convicted of receiving stolen goods, notwithstanding defendant's claim that third party, who acquired television set by fraud, passed valid title to him as good faith purchaser for value under UCC § 2-403(1), where there was evidence that defendant had conspired with third party to defraud merchant in acquiring television set and, thus, defendant was not good faith purchaser. Sacks v. State, 172 Ind. App. 185, 360 N.E.2d 21 (1977), reh'g denied, 172 Ind. App. 185, 361 N.E.2d 190 (1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-403(1) and 2-403(2), where automobile dealer purchased stolen automobile for value from individual who had innocently purchased from thief, dealer did not purchase from dealer in ordinary course of business, did not obtain good title, and was therefore not entitled to recover automobile from police following impoundment; however, dealer could have transferred good title to an innocent bona fide purchaser for value by means of a completed sale. Johnny Dell, Inc. v. New York State Police, 84 Misc. 2d 360 (1975).

If passage of title is dependent upon the performance of some condition subsequent, one in possession of an article has a voidable title which can be transferred to a bona fide purchaser for value even if the transferor was deceived as to the identity of the purchaser, the delivery was in exchange for a check later dishonored, or procured through a fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

If the title of a thief or his receiver is voidable title, the vendee acquires good title if the transaction occurs before notice or avoidance is given. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. v. Walston & Co., 21 N.Y.2d 219, 234 N.E.2d 230 (1967), reargument granted, 21 N.Y.2d 1041 (1968), on reargument, 22 N.Y.2d 672, 291 N.Y.S.2d 366, 238 N.E.2d 754 (1968).

12. Curative devices.

Under "shelter principle" of Code § 2-403(1), good title of transferor rebounds to purchaser regardless of latter's good faith. Linwood Harvestore, Inc. v. Cannon, 427 Pa. 434, 235 A.2d 377 (1967).

13. —Voidable title.

A salesman of wholesale carpeting could not have passed valid title to a shipment of carpet, even to a good faith purchaser, since the salesman acquired only "void title" when he stole the carpet from the wholesaler. Textile Supplies, Inc. v. Garrett, 687 F.2d 123 (5th Cir. 1982).

Although seller of automobile, who was ostensibly individual in automobile business and who sold automobile to good faith purchaser, had facially valid Mississippi title, ultimately based upon Alabama tag receipt issued pursuant to forged bill of sale, seller did not have "voidable title" such that he could transfer good title to good faith purchaser under UCC § 2-403(1); title remained in insurance company that obtained valid title subsequent to paying Florida dealer's loss. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Estes, 345 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1977).

Notwithstanding subsequent purchaser did not know that intermediate seller's title was voidable due to intermediate seller's obtaining truck on basis of check which was dishonored, subsequent purchaser did not have good title against original seller by status of "good faith purchaser for value" under UCC §§ 1-201(19), 1-201(44) and 2-403, where subsequent purchaser knew that intermediate seller was sophisticated about value of automotive equipment, subsequent purchaser had just received three dishonored checks from intermediate seller, subsequent purchaser had no reason to believe that intermediate seller would give equipment worth $13,500 or more to settle debt of $9,100, and subsequent purchaser let intermediate seller retain possession of truck. Graves Motors, Inc. v. Docar Sales, Inc., 414 F. Supp. 717 (E.D. La. 1976).

Judgment debtor, who, prior to levy of execution, sold mobile home to mobile home dealer, who in turn sold to bona fide purchaser for value who had financed purchase through a Federal Credit Union, held at least "voidable title", and thus under UCC § 2-403, purchaser received title which was immune from attack by later levy. Flemming v. Thompson, 343 A.2d 599 (Del. 1975).

A person can get good title from one with voidable title only if former is "good faith purchaser" under UCC § 2-403, and evidence was sufficient to support finding that buyer was not acting in good faith when he "bought" boat with awareness that party with voidable title had signed name of purported owner on transfer of ownership papers. Lane v. Honeycutt, 14 N.C. App. 436, 188 S.E.2d 604 (1972), cert. denied, 281 N.C. 622, 190 S.E.2d 466 (1972).

If the title of a thief or his receiver is voidable title, the vendee acquires good title if the transaction occurs before notice or avoidance is given. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. v. Walston & Co., 21 N.Y.2d 219, 234 N.E.2d 230 (1967), reargument granted, 21 N.Y.2d 1041 (1968), on reargument, 22 N.Y.2d 672, 291 N.Y.S.2d 366, 238 N.E.2d 754 (1968).

If passage of title is dependent upon the performance of some condition subsequent, one in possession of an article has a voidable title which can be transferred to a bona fide purchaser for value even if the transferor was deceived as to the identity of the purchaser, the delivery was in exchange for a check later dishonored, or procured through a fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

A buyer who acquires property from one who has avoidable title must show that he was a "good faith purchaser for value", which requires "honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

14. —Delivery under purchase transaction.

Where meat packer's operations were financed by secured creditor who had properly perfected security interest in meat packer's assets, including after-acquired property, where cattle sellers delivered cattle to meat packer on "grade and yield basis" (cattle were first slaughtered, chilled and then graded before purchase price was calculated), where checks were subsequently issued to sellers, but before checks were paid, secured party, believing itself to be insecure, refused to advance more funds to meat packer for operation of plant, and where meat packer then filed petition in bankruptcy and cattle sellers sought to reclaim cattle or right to proceeds from sale of slaughtered meat: (1)

course of conduct prescribed by Packers and Stockyards Act and regulations issued thereunder, coupled with undisputed intent of cattle sellers, compelled conclusion that sale of cattle was cash and not credit transaction; (2) strict application of ten-day limitation on right to reclaim cattle for some substantial period of time after filing of petition for bankruptcy was warranted inasmuch as such limitation is absolute; (3) however slight or tenuous or marginal was sellers' interest, it was necessarily great enough to permit attachment of secured party's lien; (4) even if evidence had established that secured party knew of meat packer's nonpayment its status as good faith purchaser would be unaffected; and (5) the perfected security interest was superior to the interest of the seller. Stowers v. Mahon, 526 F.2d 1238 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 834, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

15. —Entrusting.

In an action by the owner of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of equitable estoppel, which provides that an owner may be estopped from setting up his own title and the lack of title in the vendor as against a bona fide purchaser for value where the owner has clothed the vendor with possession and other indicia of title, is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner and had no authority to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it pursuant to an agreement with the true owner since the owner had consigned the painting for display only and conferred no other indi-cia of ownership; moreover, the owner's conduct did not in any way contribute to the deception practiced on the purchaser, and the purchaser was not a purchaser in good faith since he made no inquiry or investigation as to the true ownership of the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

Contract for sale of citrus fruit prior to harvest did not fail for indefiniteness pursuant to UCC § 2-403(3), even though terms as to price, harvesting date and harvesting and delivery charges were left open and no deposit by buyer was paid; contract operated to constructively sever citrus crop from mortgage on underlying citrus grove to the benefit of mortgagor in mortgage foreclosure action. Bornstein v. Somerson, 341 So. 2d 1043 (Fla. App. 1977), cert. denied, 348 So. 2d 944 (Fla. 1977).

Where dealer assigned title to used car to salesman who used title as collateral to obtain bank loan; where bank perfected security interest in car by timely filing, but such lien, not being required by state law to be recorded on certificate of title in order to be perfected, was not so recorded; and where car was thereafter sold for cash to buyer who took possession of vehicle, in bank's replevin action to obtain possession of car, (1) buyer's claim that bank's perfected security interest was cut off by UCC § 2-403(2) could not be sustained, since bank was not owner of car and thus could not be its "entruster" under UCC § 2-403(2); but (2) since nothing in comments to UCC Art 9 requires "created by his seller" limitation in UCC § 9-307(1) to be insurmountable barrier to good faith acquisition of preencumbered property from dealer who was instrumental in creating encumbrance on, and conflict of rights to, such property, buyer's right to possession of car was protected by "created by his seller" provision in UCC § 9-307(1), on theory that same entity (dealer) both created security interest in car and later sold car to "buyer in ordinary course of business," and bank's security interest in car therefore terminated on its sale to buyer. Adams v. City Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 565 P.2d 26 (Okla. 1977).

In cattle buyer's action against bank for fraudulently misrepresenting to buyer that seller of cattle owned them and that buyer would receive clear title thereto if he bought such cattle and left them in seller's feed lot for specified period to be fattened for market, when in fact defendant held mortgage on all of seller's cattle and was in position to know that seller did not have enough cattle to cover both plaintiff's purchase and also purchases made by other persons, defendant's contention that "entrusting of possession" provision of UCC § 2-403(2) barred judgment for plaintiff was rejected because defendant, at time of making its fraudulent misrepresentations, knew that buyer intended to leave cattle with seller to be fattened for market. Thus, defendant's misrepresentations pertained not only to time of sale of cattle to buyer, but also to subsequent period of feeding out of cattle, and "entrusting of possession" provision of UCC § 2-403(2) did not, as matter of law, preclude plaintiff's action. Forrester v. State Bank, 52 Ill. App. 3d 34, 363 N.E.2d 904 (3d Dist. 1977).

Where entruster filed financing statement, incorporating security agreement, one year before other claimant of bankrupt's equipment, entruster's interest had priority over other claimant with respect to office machines entrusted. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Olivetti Corp. of Am., 130 Ga. App. 896, 204 S.E.2d 781 (1974).

Where plaintiff purchased trailers from manufacturer, retained title and parked them on dealer's used car and truck lot, under arrangement that whenever dealer found buyer plaintiff was to bring in certificate of origin and indorse it over to buyer, under mistaken impression that dealer could not register title without such certificate, dealer sold trailers to buyers but failed to pay plaintiff, buyers financed purchases with defendant bank and bank foreclosed on its security interest in trailers after buyers defaulted, whether plaintiff could recover against bank for conversion depended on whether consignment of trailers was intended as security; if plaintiff's retention of title was limited to reservation of security interest, he could not prevail against bank since he did not retain possession of collateral nor did debtor sign security agreement describing collateral as required by UCC

§ 9-203(1); if consignment was not intended as security and if dealer was not "merchant who deals in goods of that kind" or if buyers were not "buyers in ordinary course of business" within meaning of UCC § 2-403(2) plaintiff would prevail against bank since buyers would not have obtained good title and could not have created security interest in bank. Nauman v. First Nat'l Bank, 50 Mich. App. 41, 212 N.W.2d 760 (1973).

16. —Entrusting: "merchant".

In replevin action, where (1) plaintiff truck dealer "dropshipped" two of its trucks to another dealer for purpose of resale, (2) second dealer sold trucks to defendant cartage company but failed to give defendant full set of title papers, and (3) second dealer thereafter went out of business without paying plaintiff for trucks, plaintiff was not entitled to replevy trucks from defendant, who was buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9) and § 2-403(2), since it was plaintiff which placed trucks into stream of commerce, being well aware that second dealer intended to sell them, and waited two and a half months before attempting to collect payment from second dealer (holding that under circumstances of case, defendant consumer should not bear loss, even though defendant was commercial corporation). Coffman Truck Sales v. Sackley Cartage Co., 58 Ill. App. 3d 68, 373 N.E.2d 1026 (2d Dist. 1978).

In criminal prosecution for copyright infringement of motion-picture films in violation of 17 USCS § 104, requested defense instruction based on UCC § 2-403 which stated that "any entrusting of possession of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of the entrustor to a buyer in ordinary course of business" was properly refused, since mere possession is insufficient to invoke "first-sale" doctrine of 17 USCS § 27 under which transfer by copyright proprietor to another of title to copyrighted work gives transferee right to sell such work. United States v. Drebin, 557 F.2d 1316, 195 U.S.P.Q. 619 (9th Cir. Cal. 1977), reh'g denied, 572 F.2d 215 (9th Cir. Cal. 1978), cert. denied, 436 U.S. 904, 98 S. Ct. 2232, 56 L. Ed. 2d 401 (1978),

Where manufacturer of modular home, or house trailer, sold home to dealer who, in turn, resold it to defendant buyers, installed it on land owned by buyers, and then absconded with purchase money, and where manufacturer brought suit against buyers claiming that it, as unpaid holder of certificate of title to home, had title to home as against claim of buyers, trial court properly ruled in favor of title claim of buyers since under UCC § 2-403(2), (1) dealer was merchant who dealt in goods of that kind, (2) defendants were buyers in ordinary course of business, and (3) manufacturer's entrusting of home to dealer gave dealer power to transfer all rights of manufacturer to buyers (holding that buyers were entitled to have their ownership interest in home evidenced by certificate of title). Fuqua Homes, Inc. v. Evanston Bldg. & Loan Co., 52 Ohio App. 2d 399, 370 N.E.2d 780 (1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

First buyer of wrecker truck entrusted truck to dealer under UCC § 2-403 so as to allow dealer to pass title to second buyer who was a "buyer in ordinary course of business" under UCC § 1-201 and who took possession of truck and extracted from dealer a transfer of registration and warranty of title, where first buyer left truck with dealer or dealer's apparent agent after paying for it without taking possession. Simson v. Moon, 137 Ga. App. 82, 222 S.E.2d 873 (1975), cause dismissed, 236 Ga. 786, 225 S.E.2d 314 (1976).

In determining whether art objects held on consignment by art gallery were part of the gallery's "stock-in-trade" subject to personal property tax, fact that gallery could pass legal title to consigned items sold could not be regarded as incident of ownership since, as one entrusted with goods, it must of necessity pass legal title to good faith purchasers under UCC § 2-403(2). District of Columbia v. Powers Gallery, Inc., 335 A.2d 244 (D.C. 1975).

In action by manufacturer of mobile home against dealer and purchaser of unit arising when dealer failed to pay manufacturer purchase price, mobile home fell within definition of "goods" under UCC § 2-105 and purchaser was entitled to protection from manufacturer's claim under UCC § 9-307(a) where purchaser, who took title from merchant entrusted with goods under UCC §§ 2-401 and 2-403, qualified as buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 1-201(9), notwithstanding purchaser's failure to request certificate of title of purchase. Apeco Corp. v. Bishop Mobile Homes, Inc., 506 S.W.2d 711 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 12, 1974).

Purchaser who bought manufacturing equipment from lessee could not invoke protections of UCC § 2-403(2) in action by owner to recover possession or reasonable value of machinery, although purchaser acted in good faith in that he purchased equipment only after reasonable assurances of title and in belief that lessee owned equipment, where seller, by reason of this isolated transaction, did not meet standards of "merchant dealing in goods of this kind," and where purchaser's failure to request additional proof of ownership was not "commercially reasonable" approach to transaction (holding, however, that owner was estopped under common law to assert his title). Tumber v. Automation Design & Mfg. Corp., 130 N.J. Super. 5, 324 A.2d 602 (L. Div. 1974).

Evidence established that entruster entrusted possession of copying machine to merchant, now bankrupt, giving him power to transfer all rights of entruster to buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 2-403(2) and (3) and fact that price was not specified was of no consequence under UCC § 2-305(1). First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Olivetti Corp. of Am., 130 Ga. App. 896, 204 S.E.2d 781 (1974).

Consignor who had entrusted mobile home to mobile home seller converted mobile home when he repossessed home which consignee had sold to good faith purchaser in ordinary course of business. Williams v. Western Sur. Co., 6 Wash. App. 300, 492 P.2d 596 (1972), review denied, 80 Wash. 2d 1007 (1972).

Where plaintiff automobile dealer sold car to second dealer who in turn sold car to defendant buyer, who 15 years previously had had experience as automobile dealer, transaction was not "between merchants" as contemplated by Code § 2-104(3), so as to charge buyer with "knowledge or skill of merchants"; and, although buyer accepted automobile without instrument of title as required by Motor Vehicle Title and Registration Law, and accepted new automobile from non-franchised dealer without receiving manufacturer's certificate of origin to that vehicle, buyer took title to car free from plaintiff dealer's claim, under Code § 2-403(2) and (3). Couch v. Cockroft, 490 S.W.2d 713 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

Where borrowers had "entrusted" boat to dealer who sold it without informing buyers of bank's interest, and where bank repossessed boat, without giving buyers opportunity to protect their equity, the bank then turning over the boat to borrowers on their settlement with bank, bank and borrowers were jointly and severally liable to buyers for buyers' loss of equity. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Goodman, 24 Cal. App. 3d 131 (2d Dist. 1972).

Material issues of fact as to whether seller was "merchant" to whom possession of machines had been entrusted precluded summary judgment in trover action to recover machines in possession of buyer. Greater S. Distrib. Co. v. Usry, 124 Ga. App. 525, 184 S.E.2d 486 (1971).

One who acquires a mobile home in the ordinary course of business from a merchant entrusted with the mobile home receives title to the motor home under UCC § 2-403(2), notwithstanding that there was no receipt of certificate of title under Motor Vehicle Certification of Title Act which includes mobile homes within its provisions. Rockwin Corp. v. Kincaid, 124 Ga. App. 570, 184 S.E.2d 509 (1971).

Where person purchases automobile in good faith and without knowledge of any title defect or security interest of third party from used car dealer who has been entrusted with its possession, he is a "buyer in the ordinary course of business," even though sale was made without transfer of certificate of title. Medico Leasing Co. v. Smith, 457 P.2d 548 (Okla. 1969), but see, Mitchell Coach Mfg. Co. v. Stephens, 19 F. Supp. 2d 1227 (N.D. Okla. 1998).

A "buyer in the ordinary course of business" of an automobile from a dealer takes title superior to that of the repossessing lien creditor who had stored the automobile with the dealer, since the Code § 2-403 relating to entrustment of possession is most applicable to a repossessing lienholder with right of sale. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Associates Dist. Corp., 246 Ark. 118, 436 S.W.2d 809 (1969).

The code provision defining "entrusting" and providing that any entrusting of goods to a merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him the power to transfer all the rights of the entruster to a buyer in the ordinary course of business is applicable to sales between merchants. The purpose of Code § 2-403 affording this protection is to protect a person from a third-party interest in goods purchased from the general inventory of a merchant regardless of that merchant's actual authority to sell these goods. Therefore, the section was not expressly or by implication restricted to the sale by a merchant to a member of the consumer public. However, the court held that one merchant purchasing automobiles from another merchant was not a buyer in the ordinary course of business where the purchasing merchant was chargeable with knowledge that there was a certificate of title registration law for the purchased automobiles. Mattek v. Malofsky, 42 Wis. 2d 16, 165 N.W.2d 406 (1969).

A floor-plan security agreement did not cover any cars owned by third persons which were merely in the temporary possession of the dealer, as an agent, for sale purposes in which the dealer's only interest was in a commission in the event that a sale was consummated. Cosgriff v. Liberty Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 58 Misc. 2d 884 (1968).

One who acquires property from a merchant who was entrusted with possession of the goods must demonstrate that he was “a buyer in ordinary course of business”, and this term as defined in UCC § 1-201(9) is more restrictive than the term “good faith purchaser for value”. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

That an auto rental company seeking to sell a car had placed it in the hands of a prospective buyer for a test run, after rejecting the prospective purchaser's uncertified check was not competent evidence to show the entrusting of the car to a “merchant who deals in goods of that kind,” and the offer by one who purchased the car from the prospective buyer of an invoice indicating the buyer was such a merchant was not sufficient to establish the fact of entrusting. In order that the “entrusting” provisions of this section apply, it must appear that the original owner and the ultimate purchaser be aware of the status of the merchant as a dealer in goods of the kind in dispute. Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

Where a wholesaler entrusts a retail dealer in such property with furniture and appliances under a “floor-plan arrangement” and such property was subsequently purchased in the ordinary course of business from the retailer, the legal title and right or claim to such property had passed out of the wholesaler and into the purchasers at retail, and the wholesaler could not thereafter bring an action in trover against the retailer, alleging unlawful conversion. Charles S. Martin Distrib. Co. v. Banks, 111 Ga. App. 538, 142 S.E.2d 309 (1965).

Where the owner of a truck delivered it to a used car dealer to be sold and the dealer sold it to a bona fide purchaser for value and converted the purchase price, the owner is not entitled, to recover either the vehicle or its value from the purchaser, notwithstanding the latter never received license plates or a certificate of title, since under the circumstances he gave the dealer the power to transfer all of his rights to a buyer in the ordinary course of business within the purview of § 2-403, subsections (2) and (3) of the Uniform Commercial Code. Gricar v. Bairhalter, 11 Pa. D. & C.2d 723 (1958).

A county was entitled to summary judgment in an action to determine the legal title to two fire trucks where (1) the defendant supplied the truck chassis to a third party, which then converted them into fire trucks for the county pursuant to contract, (2) the defendant delivered the chassis to the third party without any formal attempt to limit the third party's authority to complete the fire trucks and deliver them to the county, and (3) the county was unaware of any legal impediment to the third party's authority to deliver the completed fire trucks to it. Genesis Indem. Ins. Co. v. Bolivar County, 793 So. 2d 683 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

Evidence established that entruster entrusted possession of copying machine to merchant, now bankrupt, giving him power to transfer all rights of entruster to buyer in ordinary course of business under UCC § 2-403(2) and (3) and fact that price was not specified was of no consequence under UCC § 2-305(1). First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Olivetti Corp. of Am., 130 Ga. App. 896, 204 S.E.2d 781 (1974).

Where dealer in new and used cars sold used automobiles to used car dealer but instructed him not to dispose of the cars until the latter's check had cleared the bank, such transaction constituted an entrustment within the meaning of the code and the seller's instructions did not effect the rights of a buyer in the ordinary course of business without knowledge of the limitation. Sherman v. Roger Kresge, Inc., 67 Misc. 2d 178 (1971), aff'd, 40 A.D.2d 766, 336 N.Y.S.2d 1015 (3d Dep't 1972).

A retailer buyer did not acquire valid title to carpet under Code § 75-2-403(1)(d), (2), and (3), there being no evidence that the wholesaler ever entrusted its salesman with the subject shipment of carpet, where the salesman stole invoices from the company to which the subject carpet was intended for shipment from the wholesaler, where the salesman then forged the name and address of his own alter ego corporation on the invoices as consignee and diverted the carpet shipment to such corporation and then to the retailer buyer, where the wholesaler never dealt with the salesman on the shipment, where the salesman did not obtain the carpet through a "transaction of purchase" and where the wholesaler never intended the retailer buyer to become owner of the carpet. Textile Supplies, Inc. v. Garrett, 687 F.2d 123 (5th Cir. 1982).

Where owners of pleasure motor boat rented stall at marina, and marina operator's business of renting stalls for vessels was separate and apart from his business as boat repairer and boat merchant, owners did not entrust vessel to marina operator as merchant within meaning of UCC section providing that any entrusting of possession of goods to merchant who deals in goods of that kind gives him power to transfer all rights of entruster to buyer in ordinary course of business. Gallagher v. Unenrolled Motor Vessel River Queen (Hull No. A-681 84), 475 F.2d 117 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

Goods were erroneously shipped by customs broker contrary to instructions of owner-importer; textile finisher received goods for processing on behalf of owner; held, there was no "entrusting" within UCC provision relating to powers of merchant to whom goods were entrusted. Toyomenka, Inc. v. Mount Hope Finishing Co., 432 F.2d 722 (4th Cir. N.C. 1970).

A licensed automobile wrecker and junk dealer who purchased a two-year-old station wagon from a thief for $900 by placing $300 down, and who sold the vehicle for $1200 that same day, although he never obtained a bill of sale or registration certificate, was liable to the two owners, since the car had not been entrusted to a merchant who dealt in used cars and the defendant had not demonstrated that he was a "buyer in ordinary course of business" or that he was a "good faith purchaser for value". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

That an auto rental company seeking to sell a car had placed it in the hands of a prospective buyer for a test run, after rejecting the prospective purchaser's uncertified check was not competent evidence to show the entrusting of the car to a "merchant who deals in goods of that kind," and the offer by one who purchased the car from the prospective buyer of an invoice indicating the buyer was such a

The entrustment provision of the Code does not apply where the goods had not been entrusted to the seller and he merely agreed to obtain the goods if the buyer would pay him in advance, with the consequence that the seller's conduct did not pass title and when the true owner, from whom the seller obtained the goods specified that title should not pass until payment was made, such condition was effective and where the check given in payment was not honored by the drawee bank the owner was entitled to recover the goods. DePaulo v. Williams Chevrolet-Cadillac, Inc., 10 Lehigh C.L.J. 465 (1965), exceptions dismissed, 11 Lehigh C.L.J. 70.

Where bank sued automobile dealer to recover on promissory notes given to bank by dealer and sought to impose constructive trust on dealer's assets to secure payment of notes, on theory that dealer had fraudulently obtained loans from bank and used funds therefrom to purchase such assets; where dealer's assets included automobile that dealer had sold to buyer in violation of court order prohibiting sale or transfer of such vehicle or any other assets of dealer; where buyer of automobile, while unaware of such restraining order, sold it to third person and then, after acquiring knowledge of restraining order, bought it back from such person to honor warranty of title to vehicle; and where such automobile was thereafter sold under court order and proceeds of sale were claimed by both bank and buyer, (1) buyer, on buying automobile from dealer, was purchaser in ordinary course of business under UCC § 2-403(2) and UCC § 2-403(3), since dealer at that time was engaged in business of buying and selling automobiles; (2) title to proceeds of court-ordered sale of such vehicle vested in buyer; (3) doctrine of lis pendens did not preclude buyer from asserting interest in such automobile superior to bank's interest therein, since lis pendens doctrine is not exception to Uniform Commercial Code; and (4) buyer's buying automobile back from third person with knowledge of bank's claim to such vehicle did not affect buyer's right to proceeds of court-ordered sale of vehicle, since vehicle was merely reacquired by buyer to make good his warranty of title thereto where such title was in question. Riverside Nat'l Bank v. Law, 564 P.2d 240 (Okla. 1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

Where borrowers had "entrusted" boat to dealer who sold it without informing buyers of bank's interest, and where bank repossessed boat, without giving buyers opportunity to protect their equity, the bank then turning over the boat to borrowers on their settlement with bank, bank and borrowers were jointly and severally liable to buyers for buyers' loss of equity. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Goodman, 24 Cal. App. 3d 131 (2d Dist. 1972).

The purchaser of a truck was entitled to damages for conversion of his property when a bank "repossessed" the vehicle upon the seller's failure to meet the obligation for which the truck had been pledged as security. The court pointed out that plaintiff was a buyer in the ordinary course of business, that seller was a merchant under provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, and that possession of the tractor by the truck company entitled it to transfer title in the ordinary course of its business. Makransky v. Long Island Reo Truck Co., 58 Misc. 2d 338 (1968).

Recognized automobile dealer has power to transfer an automobile held in inventory in ordinary course of business free of any security interest. Murphy v. Plymouth Nat'l Bank, 22 Mass. App. Dec. 36 (1961).

Since, under Pennsylvania law, the seller's right of rescission is not an absolute right but is subject to the right of a lien creditor who extended credit subsequent to the sale, and by virtue of § 70, sub c of the Bankruptcy Act, the trustee in bankruptcy has rights of lien creditor, the trustee in bankruptcy has superior rights to the proceeds from the sale of seller's goods, even if the sale of goods on credit has been induced by positive misrepresentation by the bankrupts, and the seller had attempted to rescind the sale. In re Kravitz, 278 F.2d 820 (3d Cir. Pa. 1960).

Where dealer assigned title to used car to salesman who used title as collateral to obtain bank loan; where bank perfected security interest in car by timely filing, but such lien, not being required by state law to be recorded on certificate of title in order to be perfected, was not so recorded; and where car was thereafter sold for cash to buyer who took possession of vehicle, in bank's replevin action to obtain possession of car, (1) buyer's claim that bank's perfected security interest was cut off by UCC § 2-403(2) could not be sustained, since bank was not owner of car and thus could not be its "entruster" under UCC § 2-403(2); but (2) since nothing in comments to UCC Art 9 requires "created by his seller" limitation in UCC § 9-307(1) to be insurmountable barrier to good faith acquisition of preencumbered property from dealer who was instrumental in creating encumbrance on, and conflict of rights to, such property, buyer's right to possession of car was protected by "created by his seller" provision in UCC § 9-307(1), on theory that same entity (dealer) both created security interest in car and later sold car to "buyer in ordinary course of business," and bank's security interest in car therefore terminated on its sale to buyer. Adams v. City Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 565 P.2d 26 (Okla. 1977).

Where meat packer's operations were financed by secured creditor who had properly perfected security interest in meat packer's assets, including after-acquired property, where cattle sellers delivered cattle to meat packer on "grade and yield basis" (cattle were first slaughtered, chilled and then graded before purchase price was calculated), where checks were subsequently issued to sellers, but before checks were paid, secured party, believing itself to be insecure, refused to advance more funds to meat packer for operation of plant, and where meat packer then filed petition in bankruptcy and cattle sellers sought to reclaim cattle or right to proceeds from sale of slaughtered meat: (1) course of conduct prescribed by Packers and Stockyards Act and regulations issued thereunder, coupled with undisputed intent of cattle sellers, compelled conclusion that sale of cattle was cash and not credit transaction; (2) strict application of ten-day limitation on right to reclaim cattle for some substantial period of time after filing of petition for bankruptcy was warranted inasmuch as such limitation is absolute; (3) however slight or tenuous or marginal was sellers' interest, it was necessarily great enough to permit attachment of secured party's lien; (4) even if evidence had established that secured party knew of meat packer's nonpayment its status as good faith purchaser would be unaffected; and (5) the perfected security interest was superior to the interest of the seller. Stowers v. Mahon, 526 F.2d 1238 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 834, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

Under UCC § 9-105(1)(i), a secured party under Article 9 is a "purchaser" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(33); thus, where credit corporation had prior valid security interest in automobile dealer's inventory, where automobile wholesaler sold and delivered used cars and trucks to dealer with unencumbered certificates of title, but where dealer's checks in payment for vehicles were dishonored, under UCC § 2-403, dealer could transfer good title to "good faith purchaser for value," despite fact dealer tendered, for purchase of vehicles, checks which were subsequently dishonored, and, hence, credit corporations' security interest in automobiles delivered to dealer was superior to wholesaler's interest. Swets Motor Sales, Inc. v. Pruhsner, 236 N.W.2d 299 (Iowa 1975).

Where entruster filed financing statement, incorporating security agreement, one year before other claimant of bankrupt's equipment, entruster's interest had priority over other claimant with respect to office machines entrusted. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Olivetti Corp. of Am., 130 Ga. App. 896, 204 S.E.2d 781 (1974).

Where plaintiff purchased trailers from manufacturer, retained title and parked them on dealer's used car and truck lot, under arrangement that whenever dealer found buyer plaintiff was to bring in certificate of origin and indorse it over to buyer, under mistaken impression that dealer could not register title without such certificate, dealer sold trailers to buyers but failed to pay plaintiff, buyers financed purchases with defendant bank and bank foreclosed on its security interest in trailers after buyers defaulted, whether plaintiff could recover against bank for conversion depended on whether consignment of trailers was intended as security; if plaintiff's retention of title was limited to reservation of security interest, he could not prevail against bank since he did not retain possession of collateral nor did debtor sign security agreement describing collateral as required by UCC § 9-203(1); if consignment was not intended as security and if dealer was not "merchant who deals in goods of that kind" or if buyers were not "buyers in ordinary course of business" within meaning of UCC § 2-403(2) plaintiff would prevail against bank since buyers would not have obtained good title and could not have created security interest in bank. Nauman v. First Nat'l Bank, 50 Mich. App. 41, 212 N.W.2d 760 (1973).

When one purchases an auto from auto dealer's inventory in ordinary course of business without notice of trust security agreement between dealer and financial institution, purchaser acquires title free of bank's trust security lien. Correria v. Orlando Bank & Trust Co., 235 So. 2d 20 (Fla. App. 1970).

A "buyer in the ordinary course of business" of an automobile from a dealer takes title superior to that of the repossessing lien creditor who had stored the automobile with the dealer, since the Code § 2-403 relating to entrustment of possession is most applicable to a repossessing lienholder with right of sale. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Associates Dist. Corp., 246 Ark. 118, 436 S.W.2d 809 (1969).

A floor-plan security agreement did not cover any cars owned by third persons which were merely in the temporary possession of the dealer, as an agent, for sale purposes in which the dealer's only interest was in a commission in the event that a sale was consummated. Cosgriff v. Liberty Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 58 Misc. 2d 884 (1968).

Where plaintiff bought truck from a merchant in the ordinary course of business, without knowledge of a security agreement entered into by the seller and later assigned to a bank, in repossessing the truck after the sale, bank was liable for conversion and damages. Makransky v. Long Island Reo Truck Co., 58 Misc. 2d 338 (1968).

Rejecting the contention of a buyer of an automobile from a dealer without notice of a prior security interest that UCC § 2-403(1) provided an escape from the prior security interest, the court held that UCC § 9-306(2) which provides for the continuation of the security interest except when "this Article" provides otherwise limited any exceptions to those contained in Article 9. The court also noted that UCC § 2-403 provided the rights "lien creditors are governed by the Articles on Secured Transactions." National Shawmut Bank v. Jones, 108 N.H. 386, 236 A.2d 484 (1967).

An acceptance company which had made loans to a dealer was required to look to the dealer for repayment, rather than to a new automobile in possession of one who had purchased it from the dealer in the ordinary course of business, paying the full purchase price therefor, notwithstanding that the acceptance company had filed a blanket security agreement executed by the automobile dealer, who had also executed and delivered to the acceptance company a trust receipt agreement describing the automobile in question. Sterling Acceptance Co. v. Grimes, 194 Pa. Super. 503, 168 A.2d 600 (1961).

21. — Chattel mortgagee.

Buyer purchasing tractors from merchant-entrustee, without notice and in ordinary course of business, takes free from lien of prior-recorded chattel mortgage not only as to cash paid and trade-in allowance, but also as to that part of purchase price represented by merchant's cancellation of pre-existing debt to buyer. GECC v. R.A. Heintz Constr. Co., 302 F. Supp. 958 (D. Or. 1969).

22. — True owner.

In an action by the owner of a valuable painting to recover the painting or its value, the defense of equitable estoppel, which provides that an owner may be estopped from setting up his own title and the lack of title in the vendor as against a bona fide purchaser for value where the owner has clothed the vendor with possession and other indicia of title, is not available to an art dealer who purchased the painting from a delicatessen employee who was not the owner and had no authority to dispose of it although he had obtained the painting from a person who rightfully had possession of it pursuant to an agreement with the true owner since the owner had consigned the painting for display only and conferred no other indicia of ownership; moreover, the owner's conduct did not in any way contribute to the deception practiced on the purchaser, and the purchaser was not a purchaser in good faith since he made no inquiry or investigation as to the true ownership of the painting. Porter v. Wertz, 68 A.D.2d 141 (1st Dep't 1979), aff'd, 53 N.Y.2d 696, 439 N.Y.S.2d 105, 421 N.E.2d 500 (1981).

Although seller of automobile, who was ostensibly individual in automobile business and who sold automobile to good faith purchaser, had facially valid Mississippi title, ultimately based upon Alabama tag receipt issued pursuant to forged bill of sale, seller did not have

"voidable title" such that he could transfer good title to good faith purchaser under UCC § 2-403(1); title remained in insurance company that obtained valid title subsequent to paying Florida dealer's loss. Allstate Ins. Co. v. Estes, 345 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1977).

Where plaintiff purchased trailers from manufacturer, retained title and parked them on dealer's used car and truck lot, under arrangement that whenever dealer found buyer plaintiff was to bring in certificate of origin and indorse it over to buyer, under mistaken impression that dealer could not register title without such certificate, dealer sold trailers to buyers but failed to pay plaintiff, buyers financed purchases with defendant bank and bank foreclosed on its security interest in trailers after buyers defaulted, whether plaintiff could recover against bank for conversion depended on whether consignment of trailers was intended as security; if plaintiff's retention of title was limited to reservation of security interest, he could not prevail against bank since he did not retain possession of collateral nor did debtor sign security agreement describing collateral as required by UCC § 9-203(1); if consignment was not intended as security and if dealer was not "merchant who deals in goods of that kind" or if buyers were not "buyers in ordinary course of business" within meaning of UCC § 2-403(2) plaintiff would prevail against bank since buyers would not have obtained good title and could not have created security interest in bank. Nauman v. First Nat'l Bank, 50 Mich. App. 41, 212 N.W.2d 760 (1973).

A licensed automobile wrecker and junk dealer who purchased a two-year-old station wagon from a thief for $900 by placing $300 down, and who sold the vehicle for $1200 that same day, although he never obtained a bill of sale or registration certificate, was liable to the two owners, since the car had not been entrusted to a merchant who dealt in used cars and the defendant had not demonstrated that he was a "buyer in ordinary course of business" or that he was a "good faith purchaser for value". Atlas Auto Rental Corp. v. Weisberg, 54 Misc. 2d 168 (1967).

The entrustment provision of the Code does not apply where the goods had not been entrusted to the seller and he merely agreed to obtain the goods if the buyer would pay him in advance, with the consequence that the seller's conduct did not pass title and when the true owner, from whom the seller obtained the goods specified that title should not pass until payment was made, such condition was effective and where the check given in payment was not honored by the drawee bank the owner was entitled to recover the goods. DePaulo v. Williams Chevrolet-Cadillac, Inc., 10 Lehigh C.L.J. 465 (1965), exceptions dismissed, 11 Lehigh C.L.J. 70.

§ 75-2-501. Insurable interest in goods; manner of identification of goods.

(1) The buyer obtains a special property and an insurable interest in goods by identification of existing goods as goods to which the contract refers even though the goods so identified are nonconforming and he has an option to return or reject them. Such identification can be made at any time and in any manner explicitly agreed to by the parties. In the absence of explicit agreement identification occurs

(a) when the contract is made if it is for the sale of goods already existing and identified;

(b) if the contract is for the sale of future goods other than those described in paragraph (c), when goods are shipped, marked or otherwise designated by the seller as goods to which the contract refers;

(c) when the crops are planted or otherwise become growing crops or the young are conceived if the contract is for the sale of unborn young to be born within twelve (12) months after contracting or for the sale of crops to be harvested within twelve (12) months or the next normal harvest season after contracting whichever is longer.

(2) The seller retains an insurable interest in goods so long as title to or any security interest in the goods remains in him and where the identification is by the seller alone he may until default or insolvency or notification to the buyer that the identification is final substitute other goods for those identified.

(3) Nothing in this section impairs any insurable interest recognized under any other statute or rule of law.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

UCC applies to sales of natural gas, and therefore governs sales contract between oil company and royalty owners in certain Mississippi oil and gas leases; in action by royalty owners seeking unrecovered payments from oil company under leases, gas underground is future goods pursuant to § 75-2-105, and thus no particular gas is sold until it is identified or brought to surface; accordingly, under § 75-2-107(1), contracts are contracts to sell and only become effective as sales when gas is severed from land; where sales contract itself provides that title to gas passes when gas is delivered, gas was not sold until it was produced, and accordingly, basis of royalty should be market value at well at time of production and delivery. Piney Woods Country Life Sch. v. Shell Oil Co., 726 F.2d 225 (5th Cir. 1984), reh'g denied, 750 F.2d 69 (5th Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 471 U.S. 1005, 105 S. Ct. 1868, 85 L. Ed. 2d 161 (1985).

A cattle buyer became vested with a special property interest within the meaning of § 75-2-501, where the seller contracted for the sale of cattle to the buyer and identified such cattle to the contract; accordingly, the seller was bound to deal with the animals without impairing or defeating the rights of the buyer. Ross Cattle Co. v. Lewis, 415 So. 2d 1029 (Miss. 1982).

Sugar in 100 pound bags fell within definition of fungible, UCC § 1-201(17); therefore, when delivery was tendered to warehousemen on behalf of buyer under UCC § 2-503(4), buyer acquired insurable interest in goods, title to goods, and at same time buyer bore risk of loss with respect to those goods, notwithstanding warehousemen's failure to segregate sugar. Henry Heide, Inc. v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 80 Misc. 2d 485 (1975).

Even if "bucket shop" act was formerly applicable to contracts for actual sale and delivery of commodities, contracts for sale of cotton to be grown in future were valid under UCC § 2-501, making valid contracts for sale of crops to be grown within 12 months or next normal harvest season even though not planted at date of contract, since UCC provision was later enactment than "bucket shop" act. Mitchell-Huntley Cotton Co. v. Waldrep, 377 F. Supp. 1215 (N.D. Ala. 1974).

Contract for sale of crop was not invalid merely because contract was executed before crop in question was planted. Mitchell-Huntley Cotton Co. v. Lawson, 377 F. Supp. 661 (M.D. Ga. 1973).

Under § 2-401 title cannot pass before identification of goods; but while § 2-501 does provide that identification may be made at any time and in any manner explicitly agreed to by parties, this does not mean that parties may delay passage of title by simple expedient of agreeing that goods are not yet identified to contract when, in fact, they have already been delivered to buyer. First Nat'l Bank v. Smoker, 153 Ind. App. 71, 286 N.E.2d 203 (1972), reh'g denied, 153 Ind. App. 89, 287 N.E.2d 788 (1972).

Buyer has special property interest in tractor within Code § 2-501, where he was shown tractor on seller's store premises and told that it was buyer's, even though, at that time, tractor did not conform to sales contract provision for cab; where such property interest was free and clear of security interest of seller's reposessor, action for damages may be maintained by buyer against reposessor under Code § 2-722. Draper v. Minneapolis-

Moline, Inc., 100 Ill. App. 2d 324, 241 N.E.2d 342 (3d Dist. 1968).

This section states nothing as to passing of title, but only sets the manner in which identification of the goods in the contract will be made, thus giving the buyer a "special property" and an insurable interest in the goods. Silver v. Sloop Silver Cloud, 259 F. Supp. 187 (S.D.N.Y. 1966).

§ 75-2-502. Buyer's right to goods on seller's repudiation, failure to deliver, or insolvency.

(1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3) and even though the goods have not been shipped a buyer who has paid a part or all of the price of goods in which he has a special property under the provisions of Section 75-2-501 may on making and keeping good a tender of any unpaid portion of their price recover them from the seller if:

(a) In the case of goods bought for personal, family, or household purposes, the seller repudiates or fails to deliver as required by the contract; or

(b) In all cases, the seller becomes insolvent within ten (10) days after receipt of the first installment on their price.

(2) The buyer's right to recover the goods under subsection (1) (a) vests upon acquisition of a special property, even if the seller had not then repudiated or failed to deliver.

(3) If the identification creating his special property has been made by the buyer he acquires the right to recover the goods only if they conform to the contract for sale.

1. In general.

Buyer is able to recover goods which remain in possession of seller after seller has become insolvent under UCC § 2-502 only if seller has become insolvent within 10 days after receipt of the first installment of the purchase price, and where insolvency of seller occurred prior to delivery of goods and not within 10 days after delivery buyer could not take advantage of this section. First-Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Academic Archives, Inc., 10 N.C. App. 619, 179 S.E.2d 850 (1971), cert. denied, 278 N.C. 703, 181 S.E.2d 601 (1971).

§ 75-2-503. Manner of seller's tender of delivery.

(1) Tender of delivery requires that the seller put and hold conforming goods at the buyer's disposition and give the buyer any notification reasonably necessary to enable him to take delivery. The manner, time and place for tender are determined by the agreement and this chapter, and in particular

(a) tender must be at a reasonable hour, and if it is of goods they must be kept available for the period reasonably necessary to enable the buyer to take possession; but

(b) unless otherwise agreed the buyer must furnish facilities reasonably suited to the receipt of the goods.

(2) Where the case is within the Section 75-2-504 respecting shipment tender requires that the seller comply with its provisions.

(3) Where the seller is required to deliver at a particular destination tender requires that he comply with subsection (1) and also in any appropriate case tender documents as described in subsections (4) and (5) of this section.

(4) Where goods are in the possession of a bailee and are to be delivered without being moved

(a) tender requires that the seller either tender a negotiable document of title covering such goods or procure acknowledgment by the bailee of the buyer's right to possession of the goods; but

(b) tender to the buyer of a nonnegotiable document of title or of a written direction to the bailee to deliver is sufficient tender unless the buyer seasonably objects, and receipt by the bailee of notification of the buyer's rights fixes those rights as against the bailee and all third persons; but risk of loss of the goods and of any failure by the bailee to honor the nonnegotiable document of title or to obey the direction remains on the seller until the buyer has had a reasonable time to present the document or direction, and a refusal by the bailee to honor the document or to obey the direction defeats the tender.

(5) Where the contract requires the seller to deliver documents

(a) he must tender all such documents in correct form, except as provided in this chapter with respect to bills of lading in a set (subsection (2) of Section 2-323) [Section 75-2-323(2)]; and

(b) tender through customary banking channels is sufficient and dishonor of a draft accompanying the documents constitutes nonacceptance or rejection.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Since the contract required the seller to deliver the encyclopedias to buyer's street address and the seller admitted both that the delivery team was part of the contract and that the UPS tracking slip revealed that the encyclopedias were shipped to buyer's post office box rather than its street address, the risk of loss remained with the seller, relieving buyer of responsibility for paying for the encyclopedias she never received. Merchants Acceptance, Inc. v. Jamison, 752 So. 2d 422 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

In a suit for replevin of personal property sold to the plaintiffs by defendant bank, the chancellor erred in granting the bank's demurrer where the complaint alleged two breaches of § 75-2-503 by the bank's alleged failure to put and hold the goods at the buyers' disposition and by the bank's alleged failure to inform the buyers that there was a one-year time limitation in the real property owner's deed for removal of the property purchased by the plaintiffs. Ward v. Merchants & Farmers Bank, 394 So. 2d 1374 (Miss. 1981).

Under UCC § 2-503(1) and § 2-507(1), seller, as condition precedent to buyer's duty to accept and pay for the goods, must tender them by placing and holding conforming goods at buyer's disposal. Goldstein v. G.D. Searle & Co., 62 Ill. App. 3d 344, 378 N.E.2d 1083 (1st Dist. 1978).

Ordinarily, under contracts for sale of goods contemplating transportation by a carrier, the seller is not obligated to deliver at a named destination unless he has specifically agreed to do so or the commercial understanding of the terms used by the parties contemplates such delivery (see UCC § 2-503, Official Comment 5).

Such an agreement is called a "destination contract," under which the seller's duty is to deliver conforming goods to the buyer at the named destination. On the other hand, the manner of delivery may be designated under what is called a "shipment contract." Under such a contract, the seller is required or authorized to ship the goods to the buyer, but is not required to deliver them at a particular destination (See UCC § 2-504, Official Comment 1). Both of these types of contracts usually employ mercantile terms or trade symbols that specify the requirements for delivery, such as "F.O.B. the place of shipment" (see UCC § 2-319(1)(a)) or "F.O.B. the place of destination" (See UCC § 2-319(1)(b)). Where no such term is employed and there has been no specific agreement to the contrary, a contract for the transportation of goods by carrier will be presumed to be a "shipment contract." Droukas v. Divers Training Academy, Inc., 375 Mass. 149, 376 N.E.2d 548 (1978).

Where an anticipatory repudiation was amply demonstrated by a communication to plaintiff seller by an administrator and a purchasing agent of defendant nursing home that the leased television sets were no longer needed and that delivery would not be accepted, defendant buyer may not escape liability by asserting a failure to tender by the seller. Tenavision, Inc. v. Neuman, 45 N.Y.2d 145, 379 N.E.2d 1166 (1978).

In action for breach by seller of contract to repurchase Blonde D'Aquitaine heifers, where contract provided that buyer would buy 16 heifers from seller, that all would be fertile for breeding, that seller would "purchase same heifers" each guaranteed "safe in calf" to purebred Blonde D'Aquitaine bulls, and that contract would be "dissolved" if buyer should resell heifers to another person before July 31, 1974, and where buyer did not resell heifers to another person before such date, but sellers refused to repurchase heifers because of drastic drop in their market price, (1) seller's repurchase was not contingent on buyer's providing proof that heifers were pregnant before tender to seller; (2) buyer was not obligated to have all 16 heifers pregnant at end of period for seller's repurchase, and seller was obligated to repurchase all that had become pregnant by that time; (3) buyer's allegation that seller was guilty of anticipatory repudiation of contract was not based on reasonable grounds within meaning of UCC § 2-609(1); (4) although buyer did not make tender at place agreed on, buyer's tender in telephone call of 11 pregnant heifers sufficiently complied with UCC § 2-503(1) in view of buyer's reasonable belief that seller would not accept heifers if buyer should transport them to place agreed on; and (5) on seller's breach of repurchase agreement, buyer's measure of damages was not difference between resale price and contract price under UCC § 2-706(1)-because of buyer's failure to effect commercially reasonable sale within meaning of UCC § 2-706(1) but was difference between contract price and market price under UCC § 2-708(1), plus incidental damages for sheltering and feeding rejected heifers. Cole v. Melvin, 441 F. Supp. 193 (D.S.D. 1977).

Where seller of tires sent shipment of new passenger car and truck tires by trucking company, as carrier, to oil company, as consignee, and carrier was instructed by consignee before delivery to deliver tires to specified destination on specified date (Friday); where driver of carrier's truck-trailer arrived at specified destination (consignee's premises) on specified date and was told by consignee's warehouse supervisor to drive truck into fenced enclosure (which was kept locked), back trailer up to consignee's loading dock, and await unloading of trailer on either that day (Friday) or following Monday; and where consignee decided to unload trailer on following Monday, but trailer and tires were stolen from consignee's premises during weekend, evidence was factually sufficient to establish sufficient tender of delivery of tires to consignee within meaning and for purposes of UCC § 2-503(1)(a), so as to shift risk of loss from seller to consignee pursuant to UCC § 2-509(1)(b). Ada Oil Co. v. Dunlop Tire & Rubber Corp., 550 S.W.2d 129 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Acceptance of delivery of foreign currency purchased from bank pursuant to futures contract and arrangements for delivery were responsibility of buyer under UCC § 2-503(1)(b). United Equities Co. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 52 A.D.2d 154 (1st Dep't 1976), aff'd, 41 N.Y.2d 1032, 395 N.Y.S.2d 640, 363 N.E.2d 1385 (1977).

Seller neither tendered delivery nor delivered concrete forms to buyer pursuant to UCC §§ 1-201(14), 2-301 and 2-503(1), and seller breached express warranties under UCC § 2-313 that forms were free from incumbrance and that seller would warrant and defend against demands of all other persons, where third party claimed storage lien on forms, refused to allow buyer to take possession, and seller was unsuccessful in securing release from third party of his claimed lien. Goosic Constr. Co. v. City Nat'l Bank, 196 Neb. 86, 241 N.W.2d 521 (1976).

Where tractor which was to be traded in as part of purchase price to be paid for new tractor was damaged in accident while it was being driven to tractor dealer's premises by employee of company which was trading in tractor, and dealer had damaged tractor repaired at its own expense, paid lien balance owed on trade-in vehicle in accordance with contract terms, and did not seek any adjustment to contract for purchase of new tractor because of damage to trade-in vehicle, dealer by its own course of conduct placed its mark of approval on meaning of agreement of parties by completing its performance in manner consistent with transfer of ownership to it prior to accident in question. Home Indem. Co. v. Twin City Fire Ins. Co., 474 F.2d 1081 (7th Cir. Ind. 1973).

In action by diamond wholesaler against purchaser under "sale or return" contract, shipper's insurance coverage, use of registered mail, and use of term "merchandise is delivered to you" established delivery contract under UCC § 2-503, and where diamonds were never delivered, risk of loss remained with wholesaler under UCC § 2-510.

Baumgold Bros. v. Allan M. Fox Co., 375 F. Supp. 807 (N.D. Ohio 1973).

Under UCC where goods are delivered to buyer under contract for sale and are physically received by him, they are in his possession. North Platte State Bank v. Production Credit Ass'n, 189 Neb. 44, 200 N.W.2d 1 (1972).

That consignee permitted carrier's driver to leave damaged boom section at its place of business "as an accommodation" to carrier did not alter fact that physical delivery occurred, and where bill of lading required written notice to carrier of claim for damage within 9 months after delivery, consignee's failure to give such notice within required time barred recovery. Johnson & Dealaman, Inc. v. Wm. F. Hegarty, Inc., 93 N.J. Super. 14, 224 A.2d 510 (App. Div. 1966).

The cost of meals which an airline furnishes its passengers during flight being included in the cost of the ticket, a sale of the meals occurs when and where the ticket is purchased, and when the ticket is purchased in Georgia a sale occurs in that state, regardless of where the aircraft is when the meal is served. Undercofler v. Eastern Air Lines, 221 Ga. 824, 147 S.E.2d 436 (1966).

The fact that the actual delivery of meals furnished by an airline to its in-flight passengers does not occur until later does not prevent perfection of its sale of the meals at the time of the purchase of the passenger ticket, for the passenger at the time the ticket is purchased impliedly consents for delivery of the meal to be made during the flight. Undercofler v. Eastern Air Lines, 221 Ga. 824, 147 S.E.2d 436 (1966).

The acknowledgment by the person with whom a boat and trailer were stored of the buyer's right to possession was a good tender of delivery of the articles. Whately v. Tetrault, 29 Mass. App. Dec. 112 (1964).

§ 75-2-504. Shipment by seller.

Where the seller is required or authorized to send the goods to the buyer and the contract does not require him to deliver them at a particular destination, then unless otherwise agreed he must

(a) put the goods in the possession of such a carrier and make such a contract for their transportation as may be reasonable having regard to the nature of the goods and other circumstances of the case; and

(b) obtain and promptly deliver or tender in due form any document necessary to enable the buyer to obtain possession of the goods or otherwise required by the agreement or by usage of trade; and

(c) promptly notify the buyer of the shipment.

Failure to notify the buyer under paragraph (c) or to make a proper contract under paragraph (a) is a ground for rejection only if material delay or loss ensues.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action by account-assignee to recover money due on account receivable covering table-hockey games sold by assignor-seller to defendant buyer, where (1) in connection with purchase orders placed by defendant with assignor-seller, defendant and assignor-seller agreed in writing that defendant would be allowed $22,000 to advertise goods purchased and that such sum could be deducted from any of seller's invoices, (2) defendant received goods worth $28,517 that were covered by three invoices, but goods worth $10,053 that were covered by two other invoices were stolen, (3) defendant expended virtually all of its advertising allowance to promote sale of goods, (4) defendant, although not paying for any of the goods, reshipped some goods at assignor-seller's direction to third party, who paid seller $7,300 therefore, and (5) defendant also re-shipped some goods to another third party after assignor-seller went out of business, and neither plaintiff account-assignee nor defendant were paid therefore, court held (1) that since assignor-seller had complied with requirements of UCC § 2-319(1)(a), dealing with shipment of goods F.O.B. place of shipment, and UCC § 2-504, dealing with shipment of goods under "shipment" contract, plaintiff account-assignee was entitled to recover from defendant buyer invoice value of goods which were stolen, (2) defendant was also liable for value of unpaid-for goods that it shipped to third party after assignor had gone out of business, and (3) defendant was entitled to deduct from its total liability its $22,000 advertising allowance (applying Mo Law; entering judgment for plaintiff for $9,270, which represented award of $31,270 for goods sold and delivered, less the $22,000 advertising allowance). United Nat'l Indus., Inc. v. Pool Mart, Inc., 449 F. Supp. 583 (E.D. Mo. 1978).

In buyer's suit for damages for loss in transit of shipment of pocket calculators, where parties intended that delivery be made to a carrier and delivery was made to United States post office, (1) request in buyer's letter to seller that goods be shipped to buyer's residence was mere shipping instruction that did not convert contract into one requiring delivery to a destination, instead of a carrier, and risk of loss therefore passed to buyer under UCC § 2-509(1)(a). However, since seller underinsured the goods, which were shipped in two cartons, and by mistake shipped one carton to another state, seller entered into improper transportation contract with carrier under UCC § 2-504(a) and thus became liable for buyer's loss. La Casse v. Blaustein, 93 Misc. 2d 572 (1978).

Ordinarily, under contracts for sale of goods contemplating transportation by a carrier, the seller is not obligated to deliver at a named destination unless he has specifically agreed to do so or the commercial understanding of the terms used by the parties contemplates such delivery (see UCC § 2-503, Official Comment 5). Such an agreement is called a "destination contract," under which the seller's duty is to deliver conforming goods to the buyer at the named destination. On the other hand, the manner of delivery may be designated under what is called a "shipment contract." Under such a contract, the seller is required or authorized to ship the goods to the buyer, but is not required to deliver them at a particular destination

(See UCC § 2-504, Official Comment 1). Both of these types of contracts usually employ mercantile terms or trade symbols that specify the requirements for delivery, such as "F.O.B. the place of shipment" (see UCC § 2-319(1)(a)) or "F.O.B. the place of destination" (See UCC § 2-319(1)(b)). Where no such term is employed and there has been no specific agreement to the contrary, a contract for the transportation of goods by carrier will be presumed to be a "shipment contract." Droukas v. Divers Training Academy, Inc., 375 Mass. 149, 376 N.E.2d 548 (1978).

In action by Massachusetts buyer against Florida seller for breach of warranty in sale of two marine engines, where Massachusetts non-UCC statute conferred jurisdiction over defendant as to plaintiff's cause of action if breach of warranty alleged by plaintiff arose from defendant's "contracting to supply...things in this commonwealth," defendant's motion to dismiss was properly granted where agreement between parties was "shipment" contract under UCC § 2-504, under which defendant's only obligation was to arrange for shipment of engines to plaintiffs by carrier and to put engines in possession of carrier, which then had burden of "supplying" or delivering engines to plaintiffs in Massachusetts (holding that defendant did not contract "to supply...things in this commonwealth," so as to come under non-UCC jurisdiction statute in issue, and that defendant's responsibility for physical delivery of engines ended when it delivered them to carrier in Florida for shipment to Massachusetts). Droukas v. Divers Training Academy, Inc., 375 Mass. 149, 376 N.E.2d 548 (1978).

Buyer breached contract for sale of steel by improperly and prematurely rejecting shipment, although contract called for shipment date of September-October, 1974 and steel was not shipped until November 14, 1974, where steel in question did arrive at destination on November 29, 1974, and where, under recognized trade usage, shipment term of September-October implied delivery by October-November and, thus, any delay in shipment was cured by timely delivery; contract in question included "C.I.F." shipping term, which rendered contract shipment, as opposed to destination, contract under UCC § 2-504(c), "material delay" was required before buyer could reject C.I.F. contract on basis of late shipment. Harlow & Jones, Inc. v. Advance Steel Co., 424 F. Supp. 770 (E.D. Mich. 1976).

Seller's act of loading goods into container supplied by buyer and in notifying buyer of such loading did not operate to shift risk of loss to buyer in absence of contrary agreement. A.M. Knitwear Corp. v. All Am. Export-Import Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 14, 359 N.E.2d 342 (1976).

Where seller was required to cut from younger sheep, bag, assemble, place in yard and load ewes for shipment to buyer to complete sale, risk of loss passed to buyer upon delivery to carrier for shipment, and not at time of payment by buyer or receipt of ewes by buyer. S-Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Monier & Co., 509 P.2d 777 (1973).

The fact that the addresses are described as "ship to" does not overcome the presumption of the Code in favor of a shipment contract rather than a destination contract. Electric Regulator Corp. v. Sterling Extruder Corp., 280 F. Supp. 550 (D. Conn. 1968).

Where New York supplier agreed to pay shipping charges for finished products sent to it by Louisville manufacturer, and manufacturer agreed to pay common carrier charges for shipment to it of raw materials from New York, the agreement constituted a shipment contract, and delivery under it was at the point of departure. Permalum Window & Awning Mfg. Co. v. Permalum Window Mfg. Corp., 412 S.W.2d 863 (Ky. 1967).

That consignee permitted carrier's driver to leave damaged boom section at its place of business "as an accommodation" to carrier did not alter fact that physical delivery occurred, and where bill of lading required written notice to carrier of claim for damage within 9 months after delivery, consignee's failure to give such notice within required time barred recovery. Johnson & Dealaman, Inc. v. Wm. F. Hegarty, Inc., 93 N.J. Super. 14, 224 A.2d 510 (App. Div. 1966).

(1) Where the seller has identified goods to the contract by or before shipment:

(a) his procurement of a negotiable bill of lading to his own order or otherwise reserves in him a security interest in the goods. His procurement of the bill to the order of a financing agency or of the buyer indicates in addition only the seller's expectation of transferring that interest to the person named.

(b) a nonnegotiable bill of lading to himself or his nominee reserves possession of the goods as security but except in a case of conditional delivery (subsection (2) of Section 2-507) [Section 75-2-507(2)] a nonnegotiable bill of lading naming the buyer as consignee reserves no security interest even though the seller retains possession of the bill of lading.

(2) When shipment by the seller with reservation of a security interest is in violation of the contract for sale it constitutes an improper contract for transportation within Section 75-2-504 but impairs neither the rights given to the buyer by shipment and identification of the goods to the contract nor the seller's powers as a holder of a negotiable document.

(1) Tender of delivery is a condition to the buyer's duty to accept the goods and, unless otherwise agreed, to his duty to pay for them. Tender entitles the seller to acceptance of the goods and to payment according to the contract.

(2) Where payment is due and demanded on the delivery to the buyer of goods or documents of title, his right as against the seller to retain or dispose of them is conditional upon his making the payment due.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Since the contract required the seller to deliver the encyclopedias to buyer's street address and the seller admitted both that the delivery team was part of the contract and that the UPS tracking slip revealed that the encyclopedias were shipped to buyer's post office box rather than its street address, the risk of loss remained with the seller, relieving buyer of responsibility for paying for the encyclopedias she never received. Merchants Accep- tance, Inc. v. Jamison, 752 So. 2d 422 (Miss. Ct. App. 1999).

Under UCC § 2-503(1) and § 2-507(1), seller, as condition precedent to buyer's duty to accept and pay for the goods, must tender them by placing and holding conforming goods at buyer's disposal. Goldstein v. G.D. Searle & Co., 62 Ill. App. 3d 344, 378 N.E.2d 1083 (1st Dist. 1978).

In seller's action for buyer's breach of contract to buy specified quantity of potatoes suitable for processing into potato chips, which potatoes were to be delivered to buyer "as needed," trial court correctly concluded (1) that contract, pursuant to UCC § 1-102(3), varied normal rules for tender contained in Uniform Commercial Code in that contract required buyer to request delivery of quantity of potatoes, which buyer at no time did, before seller would become obligated to tender delivery, and (2) that as a result, seller's failure to tender delivery of any potatoes at all during entire contract period did not relieve buyer of liability for payment under UCC § 2-301 and § 2-507(1) (also holding that even if potatoes in seller's warehouse were not suitable for buyer's use throughout entire contract period, buyer still breached contract by not requesting any deliveries at all during such period). Halverson v. Pet, Inc., 261 N.W.2d 887 (N.D. 1978).

At common law, if sale of goods was on credit, all incidents of ownership passed to buyer, and seller merely had claim for purchase price against buyer but no rights to goods sold. However, if sale was for cash, title to goods did not pass until purchase price was paid, and since buyer did not have title until goods were paid for, he could not pass title to third party, and lienholder or attaching creditor obtained no interest in goods. The Uniform Commercial Code, in UCC § 2-403(1), has changed this rule by favoring good-faith purchaser over aggrieved seller, and defaulting buyer under UCC § 2-507(2) has power to transfer title to good-faith purchaser, even though buyer lacks right to do so. GECC v. Tidwell Indus., Inc., 115 Ariz. 362, 565 P.2d 868 (1977).

Where meat packer's operations were financed by secured creditor who had properly perfected security interest in meat packer's assets, including after-acquired property, where cattle sellers delivered cattle to meat packer on "grade and yield basis," where checks were subsequently issued to sellers, but before checks were paid, secured party, believing itself to be insecure, refused to advance more funds to meat packer for operation of plant, and where meat packer then filed petition in bankruptcy, interest of unpaid seller was subordinate to interest of secured creditor, and seller who did not attempt to reclaim cattle until year after filing petition for bankruptcy, was not entitled to either reclamation of cattle or proceeds from sale of slaughtered meat. Stowers v. Mahon, 526 F.2d 1238 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 834, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

Where plaintiff, operator of livestock ring, sold cattle which it held on consignment to buyer, plaintiff then paid its consignor in full, buyer paid for cattle by check and plaintiff gave buyer purchase sheets for sale, where buyer then had cattle shipped to defendants' sales ring and later delivered to defendants purchase sheets given him by plaintiff, where plaintiff presented buyer's check for payment at drawee bank, but it was dishonored because of insufficient funds, and where plaintiff immediately contacted defendants and demanded return of livestock but defendants, instead, sold cattle: (1) plaintiff would be deemed "seller" under Uniform Commercial Code and was, thus, entitled to seller's remedies under Code; (2) under UCC §§ 2-507(2) and 2-511(3) when bank refused to honor buyer's check upon plaintiff's presentment, buyer no longer had right to retain or dispose of cattle, even though he retained title to them, and when defendants sold cattle on buyer's behalf, they acquired and then passed title, but since they acted with notice of plaintiff's claim to livestock, they did not acquire status of good faith purchaser and could not prevent plaintiff from asserting its right of reclamation and, thus, if they could not redeliver cattle they must deliver proceeds from sale thereof. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co. v. Honey, 38 Colo. App. 69, 552 P.2d 313 (1976), cert. dismissed, 191 Colo. 503, 553 P.2d 799 (1976).

Removal of equipment, with keys in machines, to buyer's field near his home was such surrender of possession by seller to buyer as to constitute tender of delivery under UCC § 2-507. Dehahn v. Innes, 356 A.2d 711 (Me. 1976).

Under UCC § 9-301, security interest of cattle seller was subordinate to rights of garnishing lien creditor where debtor purchased cattle from seller and paid for them with check which was subsequently dishonored for insufficient funds, where debtor shipped cattle to livestock auction company for resale and writ of garnishment was served on auction company, where seller and debtor subsequently executed security agreement and financing statement, back-dated, and properly describing cattle in question and where financing statement was filed within ten days after debtor purchased cattle from seller. Seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702 was not security interest within purview of Article 9 on secured transactions and acceptance of check did not change cash sale into credit transaction. Since there was no security agreement between debtor and seller, either oral or written, at time writ of garnishment was served, security interest attached sometime later when security agreement was signed by debtor. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co. v. First State Bank, 531 S.W.2d 167 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 7, 1976).

Where seller never tendered delivery of automobile under installment sales contract, not only did risk of loss remain on seller under UCC § 2-509(3), but buyer had right to cancel contract. Schleimer v. Googe, 50 A.D.2d 944 (2d Dep't 1975).

Where buyer of automobile resold it to third party, received check in payment therefore, original seller took possession of automobile from third party and third party notified buyer he was canceling transaction, although ownership of car passed to third party at time payment was accepted and car was delivered, such payment was conditional under UCC § 2-511(3) and, although check was never presented for payment, third party in effect dishonored check and countermanded payment when he notified buyer he was canceling transaction; under UCC § 2-507(2), third party's right to retain or dispose of automobile was conditional upon his making payment due, and thus, when his check was dishonored, buyer had right to reclaim automobile by maintaining action in trover against original owner. Lawrence v. Graham, 29 Md. App. 422, 349 A.2d 271 (1975).

In action by creditor of bankrupt arising out of sale of bar equipment which was originally negotiated as cash sale with payment due on delivery, seller waived his right to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-507(2) by failing to reclaim equipment until it had been in buyer's possession for over 4 months; nor did seller become "reclaiming seller" once transaction became credit sale since UCC § 2-702 requirement that demand for return of goods be made within 10 days of their receipt was not satisfied. Thereafter, actual retaking by seller did not, under UCC § 2-703(f), accomplish cancellation of the sale as a remedy and was not effective to prevent the retaking being a preference under Bankruptcy Act. In re Colacci's of Am., Inc., 490 F.2d 1118 (10th Cir. Colo. 1974).

Tender of specially fabricated precast concrete products which conformed to contract was equivalent of delivery, and fixed duty to pay therefor, even though concrete products were never delivered because of lack of requested delivery instructions. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Maryland Cast Stone Co., 254 Md. 109, 253 A.2d 872 (1969).

Where a check received in payment for a cash transaction was dishonored because of insufficient funds and more than ten days were permitted to elapse before a demand for a return of the goods sold was made, the seller's right to reclaim the goods had been waived and the seller's remedy was then on the instrument as well as for breach of contract and his rights were reduced to those of a general creditor. In re Helms Veneer Corp., 287 F. Supp. 840 (W.D. Va. 1968).

Where the sellers of automobiles to a buyer who disposed of them through an auction company later found the checks received by them from the buyer in payment for the cars were dishonored because of the auction company's actions in stopping payments on checks previously delivered to the buyer and by withholding from him the proceeds derived from the sales of the sellers' cars, the sellers had a right of reclamation of their property had it remained in the buyer's hands either under § 2-702 or § 2-507 because the auction company's action had in effect rendered the car buyer insolvent, and although the cars had been resold at auction the sellers' rights survived the resale and, on equitable principles, attached to the proceeds of the sales in the hands of the auction company. Greater Louisville Auto Auction,

Inc. v. Ogle Buick, Inc., 387 S.W.2d 17 (Ky. 1965).

§ 75-2-508. Cure by seller of improper tender or delivery; replacement.

(1) Where any tender or delivery by the seller is rejected because nonconforming and the time for performance has not yet expired, the seller may seasonably notify the buyer of his intention to cure and may then within the contract time make a conforming delivery.

(2) Where the buyer rejects a nonconforming tender which the seller had reasonable grounds to believe would be acceptable with or without money allowance the seller may if he seasonably notifies the buyer have a further reasonable time to substitute a conforming tender.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Mobile home purchasers' continued use of the mobile home after they notified the seller of their intention to revoke acceptance did not constitute a waiver of their right to revoke acceptance where they were financially unable to move elsewhere and they were repeatedly assured by the seller that the defects would be repaired; the purchasers were merely complying with § 75-2-508, which requires a consumer who expresses an intention to revoke acceptance to provide a seller with a reasonable opportunity to attempt to cure the defect; moreover, any excessive or unreasonable use of the home by the purchasers could be remedied through quantum meruit recovery, not through an effectuation of revocation. North River Homes, Inc. v. Bosarge, 594 So. 2d 1153,

A seller's right to cure before the buyer may revoke acceptance is not unlimited; there comes a time when "enough is enough" and a purchaser is entitled to seek revocation notwithstanding the seller's repeated good faith efforts. Guerdon Indus., Inc. v. Gentry, 531 So. 2d 1202 (Miss. 1988).

Since a buyer's acceptance of goods precludes any rejection thereof, and since buyer's rejection is prerequisite to seller's right under UCC § 2-508 to cure defects in such goods, mobile home buyer's acceptance of home under UCC § 2-606(1), despite knowledge of defects therein, deprived seller of right to cure such defects. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

Where (1) seller sued to recover unpaid balance of purchase price of cinders purchased by buyer for installation in playground, (2) buyer counterclaimed for expenses incurred because seller delivered cinders of improper size, and (3) buyer also contended that seller had no right to "cure" the breach because situation involved a revocation of acceptance by buyer, court held (1) that while seller might not have right to cure nonconformity in revocation-of-acceptance situation, buyer by letter had expressly given seller opportunity to cure breach, (2) seller had not cured breach within meaning of UCC § 2-508(1) because seller refused to deduct cost of regrading replacement cinders from purchase price of cinders contracted for, and (3) buyer's counterclaim was erroneously denied by trial court on ground that seasonable demand by buyer for reimbursement was necessary in addition to notice of revocation of acceptance, since UCC §§ 2-607(3)(a) and 2-608(2) require only that buyer, on revoking acceptance, give notice of breach to seller which states that buyer is not accepting the goods. Moulden & Sons v. Osaka Landscaping & Nursery, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 194, 584 P.2d 968 (1978).

In action against lessee of two refrigerator display cases for accelerated rent allegedly due lessor for lessee's breach of lease agreement, court held, on affirming judgment for lessee, (1) that transaction was sale within meaning of UCC § 2-

106(1), since shipping order executed simultaneously with alleged "lease" gave lessee option to obtain, at no further cost, title to refrigerator cases at end of lease, (2) that waiver of any warranties of merchantability or fitness for particular purpose in lease agreement was not conspicuous under UCC § 2-316(2) and thus was ineffective, and (3) that lessee did not lose right to rescind sale agreement by failure to give lessor adequate opportunity to "cure" under UCC § 2-508(1), since replacement refrigerator cases purchased elsewhere by lessee were not installed until more than one month after lessor's attempt to cure defective cases sold to lessee. Transcontinental Refrigeration Co. v. Figgins, 179 Mont. 12, 585 P.2d 1301 (1978).

With respect to seller's right to "cure" under UCC § 2-508(1), buyer is not required to allow seller to tinker indefinitely with defective article in hope that it ultimately may be made to comply with its warranty. Transcontinental Refrigeration Co. v. Figgins, 179 Mont. 12, 585 P.2d 1301 (1978).

In buyer's action for seller's breach of written and oral warranties in sale of marine diesel engine, (1) where terms of sale contract were contained in seller's letter to buyer, buyer's written purchase order, and manufacturer's written warranty which accompanied sale of engine; (2) where seller also orally warranted to buyer that engine would deliver specified standard of performance, that if it did not do so it could be removed from buyer's boat at seller's expense, and that it would be delivered in time to meet requirements of builder of buyer's boat; (3) where such oral warranties were breached and buyer, within six-months period provided in written engine warranty for manufacturer's repair or replacement of defective parts, refused to allow manufacturer's mechanic to inspect defective engine; (4) where buyer, more than six months after date engine was put into operation, notified seller that he had removed engine from his boat, tendered engine back to seller, and demanded return of purchase price; and (5) where such tender and demand were refused by seller, (1) trial court properly found that all terms of sale contract had not been reduced to writing; (2) admission in evidence of oral warranties as part of sale contract did not violate parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202; (3) such oral warranties did not constitute "sale or return" provision in contract under UCC § 2-326(1)(b), but were analogous to "sale on approval" provision under UCC § 2-326(1)(a) and thus were not required by UCC § 2-326(4) to be in writing; (4) buyer's failure to allow seller to exercise right under UCC § 2-508(1) to inspect and repair engine negated warranty provisions of sale contract; (5) buyer accepted engine under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) by not seasonably notifying seller of buyer's election to return engine; and (6) buyer's delay of nearly six months in informing seller of buyer's intention to revoke acceptance of engine was insufficient compliance with buyer's good faith obligation under UCC § 1-203 and did not revoke such acceptance under UCC § 2-608. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

In certain defined situations, seller under UCC § 2-508 has right to cure defective tender both within time fixed for performance and also after time for performance has expired. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

In action by buyer of new Lincoln Continental automobile against seller in which buyer alleged seller's breach of warranty and buyer's justifiable revocation of acceptance of vehicle, (1) where buyer, although he did not revoke acceptance until 14 months after sale, was in almost constant touch with seller concerning vehicle's condition and was relying on seller's continued assurances that vehicle would be satisfactorily repaired; (2) where buyer's unequivocal notification to seller that buyer was revoking acceptance of vehicle occurred only when it became apparent to buyer that repeated attempts at adjustment had failed; and (3) where circumstances of case involved almost continuous series of negotiations and repairs, buyer's delay in giving notice of revocation of acceptance did not prejudice seller and was not unreasonable under UCC § 2-608(2). Although seller had right under UCC § 2-508 to attempt to cure vehicle's defects, this right did not last for indefinite period. Furthermore, since continued use of vehicle was inevitable while seller was attempting to repair vehicle's defects as they became apparent, such use did not defeat buyer's revocation of acceptance. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Seller did not have right to repair and cure defects in accord with UCC § 2-508, notwithstanding buyer's notification of revocation of acceptance, where seller was unable to say how long it would have taken him to make all repairs necessary to get mobile home back into good condition. Davis v. Colonial Mobile Homes, 28 N.C. App. 13, 220 S.E.2d 802 (1975), cert. denied, 289 N.C. 613, 223 S.E.2d 391 (1976).

In buyer's action for breach of contract to deliver trailer house, UCC § 2-508, authorizing seller to cure non-conforming delivery under certain circumstances, was inapplicable since buyer never rejected trailer house as required by UCC § 2-508(1). Boies v. Norton, 526 S.W.2d 651 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Nov. 26, 1975).

In action by tool and die maker to recover for breach of contract under which plaintiff was to custom make two molds—a lid and a cup—to be used in manufacturing plastic containers, defendant having rejected tender of non-conforming goods after plaintiff made several attempts to remedy defective product, evidence failed to disclose any compliance with UCC § 2-508(2), extending time for performance and "cure", and depriving defendant of his right to reject, where plaintiff failed to notify defendant of intent to cure and failed to affect cure within "further reasonable time" or at any time; after plaintiff's last attempt to put molds in working order, there was no showing of any tender to defendant, of any examination of mold by him or by anyone for him, or of any acceptance or rejection by him, or any evidence parts even then met necessary standards. Hayes v. Hettinga, 228 N.W.2d 181 (Iowa 1975).

508(1) to make conforming delivery at anytime before expiration of time for performance regardless of prior nonconforming delivery. Meads v. Davis, 22 N.C. App. 479, 206 S.E.2d 868 (1974).

Under contract for delivery and installation of pin spotter machines in bowling alley, where buyers did not reject defective, nonconforming pin spotters, but instead accepted them notwithstanding their defects, buyers were not required to give seller notice of particular defects as required by UCC § 2-605(1) in order to maintain action for breach of warranty, and letter from buyers' attorney to seller's sister, after seller's death, stating that pin spotters were not installed within meaning of contract, that pin spotters needed repairs although contract included guaranty as to quality and performance of equipment, and that buyers were keeping record of their expenses so that they could substantiate claim for any loss which might be sustained, was sufficient notice under UCC § 2-607(3) to preserve buyers' rights; furthermore, buyers did not waive their rights to warranty recovery by refusing to permit seller to cure defects in pin spotters under UCC § 2-508 since they did not reject nonconforming goods but accepted them. Bonebrake v. Cox, 499 F.2d 951 (8th Cir. Iowa 1974).

Seller's breach of its express warranty with relation to sale of mobile home and its non-conforming delivery were not cured within meaning of UCC § 2-508, where record contained no pleading that seller seasonably notified buyers of its intention to cure defects complained of, or of fact that they were cured. Mobile Hous., Inc. v. Stone, 490 S.W.2d 611 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Where original Christmas tree delivery date was December 9, but where buyer later informed seller that customers would have to have trees by weekend of December 16 at latest, tender of conforming delivery on December 14 was seasonable under UCC § 2508(1), giving seller valid right to cure previously nonconforming delivery. Traynor v. Walters, 342 F. Supp. 455 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

Rescission of a contract of sale cannot be made by the buyer under UCC § 2-508, where the defects relied on for the rescission are minor defects and an offer is made by or on behalf of the seller to repair all of the defects complained of and the buyer refuses to accept such offer. Reece v. Yeager Ford Sales, Inc., 155 W. Va. 453, 184 S.E.2d 722 (1971).

Seller may cure defective tender through repair, replacement or price allowance, if seller reasonably notifies buyer of curative intention and, in effecting cure, makes timely conforming tender. Graulich Caterer, Inc. v. Hans Holterbosch, Inc., 101 N.J. Super. 61, 243 A.2d 253 (App. Div. 1968).

Even where the contract period has expired and a buyer has revoked acceptance of nonconforming goods, the seller may cure the defect where he had originally believed nonconforming goods were acceptable because a new and improved version of what was ordered and seller notified buyer within a reasonable time of proposed proper tender and the buyer had not yet purchased substitute goods elsewhere. Bartus v. Riccardi, 55 Misc. 2d 3 (1967).

Even where contract period had expired and buyer has rejected a nonconforming tender or has revoked an acceptance, seller may substitute a conforming tender if he had reasonable grounds to believe that nonconforming tender would be accepted and if he seasonably notifies buyer of his intention to substitute a conforming tender. Bartus v. Riccardi, 55 Misc. 2d 3 (1967).

The seller of a malfunctioning color television receiver should be afforded the opportunity to cure the improper tender by making minor repairs or reasonable adjustments where he can do so without subjecting the buyer to any great inconvenience, risk or loss; and where the buyer adamantly refused to permit the removal of the television chassis to seller's place of business for a short period of time to determine the cause of the malfunction and extent of adjustment or correction needed to effect full operational efficiency he is not entitled to rescind the purchase and demand refund of the purchase price. Wilson v. Scampoli, 228 A.2d 848 (D.C. 1967).

§ 75-2-509. Risk of loss in the absence of breach.

(1) Where the contract requires or authorizes the seller to ship the goods by carrier

(a) if it does not require him to deliver them at a particular destination, the risk of loss passes to the buyer when the goods are duly delivered to the carrier even though the shipment is under reservation (Section 2-505) [Section 75-2-505]; but

(b) if it does require him to deliver them at a particular destination and the goods are there duly tendered while in the possession of the carrier, the risk of loss passes to the buyer when the goods are there duly so tendered as to enable the buyer to take delivery.

(2) Where the goods are held by a bailee to be delivered without being moved, the risk of loss passes to the buyer

(a) on his receipt of a negotiable document of title covering the goods; or

(b) on acknowledgment by the bailee of the buyer's right to possession of the goods; or

(c) after his receipt of a nonnegotiable document of title or other written direction to deliver, as provided in subsection (4)(b) of Section 2-503 [Section 75-2-503(4)(b)].

(3) In any case not within subsection (1) or (2), the risk of loss passes to the buyer on his receipt of the goods if the seller is a merchant; otherwise the risk passes to the buyer on tender of delivery.

(4) The provisions of this section are subject to contrary agreement of the parties and to the provisions of this chapter on sale on approval (Section 2-327) [Section 75-2-327] and on effect of breach on risk of loss (Section 2-510) [Section 75-2-510].

1. In general.

In action by assignee of account of buyer of carpeting for balance due on such account, where (1) buyer ordered carpeting from seller-assignor on discount terms specified by buyer, (2) invoice mailed after goods were shipped contained different discount terms, (3) buyer continued to hold goods, although claiming that it had rejected them, and (4) entire shipment of goods was later destroyed by fire at buyer's warehouse, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-206(1)(b), when seller-assignor shipped goods to buyer, it accepted buyer's offer to purchase goods, (2) that even if UCC § 2-207 superficially applied to alter terms of parties' contract, buyer properly objected under UCC § 2-207(2)(c) to different credit terms on seller-assignor's invoice and such terms did not apply, (3) that contract therefore was on buyer's own credit terms, (4) that there was nothing that buyer could reject as nonconforming, since goods were admittedly satisfactory, (5) that contract had not been breached by either party, (6) that since there had been no breach, risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3) passed to buyer on his receipt of goods, and buyer thus had to bear loss of goods by fire, and (7) that under UCC § 2-210(2), assignment of buyer's account to plaintiff was valid. Trust Co. Bank v. Barrett Distribs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 959 (S.D. Ind. 1978).

Where (1) buyer paid for motorcycle in full, was given necessary registration and insurance papers, and registered machine and secured liability insurance for it prior to its theft from seller's premises, although its license plates were never affixed, (2) seller agreed to hold machine on seller's premises until buyer returned from vacation, and (3) machine was stolen from seller's premises without negligence on seller's part, court held (1) that evidence showed that buyer had never exercised dominion or control over motorcycle, and (2) that in such situation, seller must bear risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3), which provides that risk of loss passes to buyer on his receipt of goods if seller is merchant, and UCC § 2-103(1)(c), which provides that "receipt" of goods means taking physical possession of them. Ramos v. Wheel Sports Ctr., 96 Misc. 2d 646 (1978).

Regardless of whether the contract involves delivery at the seller's place of business or at the situs of the goods, a merchant seller cannot transfer risk of loss and it remains on him, under UCC §§ 2-509(3) and 2-103(1)(c), until actual receipt by the buyer, even though full payment has been made and the buyer has been notified that the goods are at his disposal. The underlying theory is that a merchant who is to make physical delivery at his own place of business continues to control the goods in the meantime and can be expected to insure his interest in them. Ramos v. Wheel Sports Ctr., 96 Misc. 2d 646 (1978).

Where part of shipment of seeds to be delivered by carrier to buyer without specification of particular destination was mistakenly delivered to person other than buyer, risk of loss as to such shipment under UCC § 2-509(1)(a) was clearly placed on buyer when shipment was delivered to carrier (holding that buyer's cause of action for misdelivery of seeds was against carrier). Montana Seeds, Inc. v. Holliday, 178 Mont. 119, 582 P.2d 1223 (1978).

Although risk of loss may pass to purchaser prior to time title passes, it is implicit under UCC § 2-509 that neither title nor risk of loss can pass prior to time there is a contract of sale. Kiecker v. Pacific Indem. Co., 5 Wash. App. 871, 491 P.2d 244 (1971).

Where the seller retains a security interest in the goods, the risk of loss passes to the buyer so that he remains liable for the purchase price although the goods have been destroyed through no fault of the seller. Conte v. Styli, 26 Mass. App. Dec. 73 (1963).

2. Shipment contract.

In buyer's suit for damages for loss in transit of shipment of pocket calculators, where parties intended that delivery be made to a carrier and delivery was made to United States post office, (1) request in buyer's letter to seller that goods be shipped to buyer's residence was mere shipping instruction that did not convert contract into one requiring delivery to a destination, instead of a carrier, and risk of loss therefore passed to buyer under UCC § 2-509(1)(a). However, since seller underinsured the goods, which were shipped in two cartons, and by mistake shipped one carton to another state, seller entered into improper transportation contract with carrier under UCC § 2-504(a) and thus became liable for buyer's loss. La Casse v. Blaustein, 93 Misc. 2d 572 (1978).

In a contract for the sale of goods when the evidence suggests that the seller is to deliver the goods to a carrier rather than to a specific destination, the risk of loss passes to the buyer when the goods are duly delivered to the carrier (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-509). La Casse v. Blaustein, 93 Misc. 2d 572 (1978).

Although goods are delivered to a carrier for shipment pursuant to contract, and risk of loss passes to the buyer upon such delivery (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-509), where the goods are lost in transit and the evidence indicates that the seller insured the goods for an amount substantially less than their value and misaddressed the package, the buyer is entitled to recover, since the seller did not act reasonably in fulfilling his portion of the contract. La Casse v. Blaustein, 93 Misc. 2d 572 (1978).

Where shipping contract for sale of liquor contained no instructions as to where goods were to be delivered and liquor was allegedly hijacked while in possession of shipper, under UCC § 2-509, risk of loss passed to buyer when goods were duly delivered to the carrier. Black Prince Distillery, Inc. v. Home Liquors, 148 N.J. Super. 286, 372 A.2d 638 (App. Div. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-509 risk of loss was upon seller until goods were put into possession of carrier in absence of evidence that parties "otherwise agreed" or that there was "contrary agreement" with respect to risk of loss. Thus, seller's act of loading goods into container supplied by buyer and in notifying buyer of such loading did not operate to shift risk of loss to buyer in absence of contrary agreement. A.M. Knitwear Corp. v. All Am. Export-Import Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 14, 359 N.E.2d 342 (1976).

In action to recover for quantity of polyester yarn sold and delivered, summary judgment for defendant was entered where there was neither physical delivery of trailer which contained yarn to carrier in compliance with purchase agreement, nor delivery within meaning of UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-509(1)(a), and therefore, title to and responsibility for yarn remained with plaintiff. A.M. Knitwear Corp. v. All Am. Export-Import Corp., 50 A.D.2d 558 (2d Dep't 1975), aff'd, 41 N.Y.2d 14, 390 N.Y.S.2d 832, 359 N.E.2d 342 (1976).

Contract for sale of goods which contained neither F.O.B. term nor term explicitly allocating risk of loss was "shipment contract," notwithstanding contract contained term that goods were to be shipped to a specified destination. Therefore, under UCC § 2-509(1)(a), risk of loss passed to buyer following seller's due delivery of goods to carrier. Eberhard Mfg. Co. v. Brown, 61 Mich. App. 268, 232 N.W.2d 378 (1975).

Ohio buyer was subject to jurisdiction of Illinois courts where, under UCC §§ 2-401(2)(a) and 2-509(1)(a), seller's obligation, title, and risk of loss in goods at issue ceased on delivery to carrier in Illinois. Colony Press, Inc. v. Fleeman, 17 Ill. App. 3d 14, 308 N.E.2d 78 (1st Dist. 1974).

Where seller was required to cut from younger sheep, bag, assemble, place in yard and load ewes for shipment to buyer to complete sale, risk of loss passed to buyer upon delivery to carrier for shipment, and not at time of payment by buyer or receipt of ewes by buyer. S-Creek Ranch, Inc. v. Monier & Co., 509 P.2d 777 (1973).

3. Destination contract.

Under contract for sale of scrap metal which required delivery "FAS Steamer your berth Port Elizabeth, New Jersey," where delivery was made according to these terms, and barge was at buyer's berth at least 3 days before it capsized and was for at least 2 days alongside vessel which was to receive scrap metal, title to scrap metal passed to buyer, and buyer was liable to seller for purchase price, in absence of any evidence that loss of cargo resulted from seller's negligence in selecting carrier or any evidence of improper loading of cargo. Luria Bros. & Co. v. Associated Metals & Minerals Corp., 73 Misc. 2d 937 (1972).

4. Bailed goods.

Where person with whom a boat and trailer were stored was informed that they had been sold, and the buyer subsequently made arrangements with the bailee to pick them up, this was the same as acknowledgment by the bailee of the buyer's right to possession, and sufficiently cast upon the buyer the risk of loss while the articles were in the possession of the bailee. Whately v. Tetrault, 29 Mass. App. Dec. 112 (1964).

5. Receipt of goods from merchant.

Subdivision (3) of section 2-509 of the Uniform Commercial Code states that when the seller is a merchant the risk of loss passes to a buyer upon his taking physical possession of the goods; accordingly, the risk of loss remains with a merchant seller as to goods in his possession and stolen from him even though the buyer has made full payment and was notified that such goods were at his disposal. Ramos v. Wheel Sports Ctr., 96 Misc. 2d 646 (1978).

Where seller of tires sent shipment of new passenger car and truck tires by trucking company, as carrier, to oil company, as consignee, and carrier was instructed by consignee before delivery to deliver tires to specified destination on specified date (Friday); where driver of carrier's truck-trailer arrived at specified destination (consignee's premises) on specified date and was told by consignee's warehouse supervisor to drive truck into fenced enclosure (which was kept locked), back trailer up to consignee's loading dock, and await unloading of trailer on either that day (Friday) or following Monday; and where consignee decided to unload trailer on following Monday, but trailer and tires were stolen from consignee's premises during weekend, evidence was factually sufficient to establish sufficient tender of delivery of tires to consignee within meaning and for purposes of UCC § 2-503(1)(a), so as to shift risk of loss from seller to consignee pursuant to UCC § 2-509(1)(b). Ada Oil Co. v. Dunlop Tire & Rubber Corp., 550 S.W.2d 129 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Risk of loss remained with seller of mobile home under UCC § 2-509(3) where purchaser had not received mobile home, notwithstanding parties executed "Agency Rental Agreement" which provided, inter alia, that "at the owner's request" seller would store vehicle at seller's location without charge to owner and rent it to other parties on certain terms and conditions, there never having been any delivery to purchasers nor any redelivery to seller, and notwithstanding purchaser paid balance of purchase price, registered vehicle with state department of motor vehicles and secured policy insuring against certain risks, including comprehensive and collision coverage. Galbraith v. American Motorhome Corp., 14 Wash. App. 754, 545 P.2d 561 (1976).

Where buyer and seller entered into contract for sale of housetrailer and subsequent to signing of sales contract and note, but prior to buyer's taking delivery, trailer was stolen from seller's place of business: (1) risk of loss did not pass to buyer under UCC § 2-509(2), since seller was not "bailee" within meaning of UCC; (2) furthermore, clause of sales contract providing that "no loss, damage or destruction of said motor vehicle shall release buyer from his obligation hereunder," was insufficient to constitute "contrary agreement" between parties pursuant to UCC § 2-509(4), thus shifting risk of loss to buyer; (3) risk of loss remained with seller pursuant to UCC § 2-509(3), since seller was a "merchant" and since buyer never received (i.e., took physical possession of) trailer. Caudle v. Sherrard Motor Co., 525 S.W.2d 238 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 15, 1975).

Where approximately 10 days after defendant received diamonds as part of "sale or return" transaction, diamonds were stolen from his jewelry store, plaintiff was entitled to contract price of diamonds, regardless of binding effect of memorandum which accompanied shipment of diamonds and provided that jewels were delivered at defendant's risk from all hazards regardless of negligence. Harold Klein & Co. v. Lopardo, 113 N.H. 400, 308 A.2d 538, 66 A.L.R.3d 187 (1973).

Damage loss to television antenna system caused by lightning fell on antenna system buyer who had received system from seller-merchant under UCC § 2-509(3), where buyer had uninterrupted use of system from time of installation until lightning struck, notwithstanding fact that under conditional sales contract buyer was prohibited from moving system from his own premises. Lair Distrib. Co. v. Crump, 48 Ala. App. 72, 261 So. 2d 904 (Civ. App. 1972).

Risk of loss under UCC § 2-509(3) passed to buyer "on his receipt of the goods" despite (1) seller's retention of title under terms of conditional sales contract, and (2) contractual provision denying buyer right to move television from his own premises until it had been paid for. Lair Distrib. Co. v. Crump, 48 Ala. App. 72, 261 So. 2d 904 (Civ. App. 1972).

6. Tender of delivery.

Where seller never tendered delivery of automobile under installment sales contract, not only did risk of loss remain on seller under UCC § 2-509(3), but buyer had right to cancel contract. Schleimer v. Gooze, 50 A.D.2d 944 (2d Dep't 1975).

Where contract for sale of real estate included agreement for sale of personal property, risk of loss of such personal property remained on the vendor pending delivery of possession to the purchaser and where a part of such personal property disappeared before completion of tender of possession, the risk of loss was on the seller. Deitch v. Shamash, 56 Misc. 2d 875 (1968).

7. Agreements and course of dealing.

In action by Maine paper manufacturer against Massachusetts newspaper publisher for breach of contract to purchase newsprint, defendant was subject to personal jurisdiction in Maine where parties had long history of prior dealing, contracts recited that they were executed in Maine and that Maine law should govern, and all shipments were F.O.B. from Maine and returnable cores were shipped freight prepaid from Massachusetts, thereby placing risk of loss on purchaser. Georgia-Pacific Corp. v. WHDH Corp., 374 F. Supp. 1076 (D. Me. 1974).

In action by diamond wholesaler against retailer to recover price of goods shipped under "all-risk" memorandum, custom and usage of industry established liability of consignee for full memorandum price of merchandise stolen while in his possession. Lipschutz v. Gordon Jewelry Corp., 373 F. Supp. 375 (S.D. Tex. 1974).

8. Third party actions.

The fact that the risk of loss has passed to the buyer does not prevent suit by the seller against a third person causing the damage to the goods to which the contract relates. Leist v. Schattie, 197 Pa. Super. 456, 179 A.2d 277 (1962).

§ 75-2-510. Effect of breach on risk of loss.

(1) Where a tender or delivery of goods so fails to conform to the contract as to give a right of rejection the risk of their loss remains on the seller until cure or acceptance.

(2) Where the buyer rightfully revokes acceptance he may to the extent of any deficiency in his effective insurance coverage treat the risk of loss as having rested on the seller from the beginning.

(3) Where the buyer as to conforming goods already identified to the contract for sale repudiates or is otherwise in breach before risk of their loss has passed to him, the seller may to the extent of any deficiency in his effective insurance coverage treat the risk of loss as resting on the buyer for a commercially reasonable time.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action by seller-manufacturer against buyer for contract price of polystyrene plastic pellets which had been specially manufactured for buyer and destroyed by fire while stored in seller's plant: (1) buyer's failure to accept delivery of pellets according to contract term which provided buyer would accept delivery of 1,000 pounds per day, following seller's repeated tenders of delivery, constituted breach of contract; (2) seller did not intentionally waive its rights to sue for contract price, and was not estopped to seek such remedy; and (3) risk of loss of pellets was on buyer under UCC § 2-510(3), where buyer was in breach of contract, and where period from August 20 (date buyer breached contract by promising to issue release orders, which were never in fact issued) and September 22 (date of fire) was commercially reasonable period to treat risk of loss as resting on buyer.

Multiplastics, Inc. v. Arch Indus., Inc., 166 Conn. 280, 348 A.2d 618 (1974).

In action by seller-manufacturer against buyer for contract price of polystyrene plastic pellets which had been specially manufactured for buyer and destroyed by fire while stored in seller's plant, risk of loss of pellets was on buyer under UCC § 2-510(3), where buyer was in breach of contract, and where period from August 20 (date buyer breached contract by promising to issue release orders, which were never in fact issued) and September 22 (date of fire) was commercially reasonable period to treat risk of loss as resting on buyer. In action by diamond wholesaler against purchaser under "sale or return" contract, shipper's insurance coverage, use of registered mail, and use of term "merchandise is delivered to you" established delivery contract under UCC § 2-503, and where diamonds were never delivered, risk of loss remained with wholesaler under UCC § 2-510. Baumgold Bros. v. Allan M. Fox Co., 375 F. Supp. 807 (N.D. Ohio 1973).

Even if it be held that buyer repudiated contract as to goods already identified to it, seller may not treat risk of loss as resting on buyer to enable seller to recover deficiency in effective fire insurance coverage under Code § 2-510(3). Portal Galleries, Inc. v. Tomar Prods., Inc., 60 Misc. 2d 523 (1969).

(1) Unless otherwise agreed tender of payment is a condition to the seller's duty to tender and complete any delivery.

(2) Tender of payment is sufficient when made by any means or in any manner current in the ordinary course of business unless the seller demands payment in legal tender and gives any extension of time reasonably necessary to procure it.

1. In general.

In action by two subcontractors against owner of land and company which had leased restaurant that it was building on such land to enforce mechanic's lien claims for unpaid labor and materials employed in restaurant's construction, where evidence showed (1) that defendant lessee's procedure was to make progress payments to main contractor on receipt of labor and materials releases executed by all subcontractors working on project, (2) that plaintiffs had executed such releases to main contractor to cover all claims for labor and materials up through specified date, (3) that defendant lessee had then paid main contractor for all work done on project as of such date, and (4) that main contractor had thereafter paid plaintiffs by checks on which payment was subsequently stopped, plaintiffs could not successfully contend that because taking of seemingly solvent party's check is proper and normal commercial practice under UCC § 2-511(3) and UCC § 3-802, and because under such sections if check is dishonored, payee can either sue on check or on underlying obligation, such sections therefore made plaintiffs' lien claim releases conditional as to defendants, and defendants were not entitled to rely on releases as defense to plaintiffs' claims. In such situation, if releases were intended to be conditional, plaintiffs should have inserted in them language appropriate for such purpose (observing that as against main contractor, plaintiff lien claimants retained rights enumerated by UCC § 3-802). Mountain Stone Co. v. H.W.

Hammond Co., 39 Colo. App. 58, 564 P.2d 958 (1977).

Under UCC § 9-301, security interest of cattle seller was subordinate to rights of garnishing lien creditor where debtor purchased cattle from seller and paid for them with check which was subsequently dishonored for insufficient funds, where debtor shipped cattle to livestock auction company for resale and writ of garnishment was served on auction company, where seller and debtor subsequently executed security agreement and financing statement, back-dated, and properly describing cattle in question and where financing statement was filed within ten days after debtor purchased cattle from seller. Seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702 was not security interest within purview of Article 9 on secured transactions and acceptance of check did not change cash sale into credit transaction. Since there was no security agreement between debtor and seller, either oral or written, at time writ of garnishment was served, security interest attached sometime later when security agreement was signed by debtor. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co. v. First State Bank, 531 S.W.2d 167 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 7, 1976).

2. Agreements and other factors obviating tender.

Buyer was not precluded by UCC § 2-511(1) from maintaining action for seller's breach of contract to deliver corn by fact that buyer did not tender payment, where price for such corn could not be determined until corn had been delivered by seller and inspected and graded by buyer. Until these events had taken place, buyer was under no obligation to tender payment (applying Iowa law; observing also that tender of payment is not required where it would be futile gesture, and that evidence indicated that seller would not have delivered corn even if buyer had tendered payment). Froning's, Inc. v. Johnston Feed Serv., Inc., 568 F.2d 108 (8th Cir. Iowa 1978).

In action for breach of oral contract to sell and deliver by end of 1973 10,000 bushels of corn to plaintiff grain dealer, who in reliance on such contract resold the corn for delivery on or before January 1, 1974, course of performance by parties justified finding that parties had agreed that tender of payment by plaintiff prior to delivery of corn, which would ordinarily be required under UCC § 2-511(1), was not condition precedent to defendant's duty to tender and complete deliveries of corn contracted for. Furthermore, even assuming that plaintiff could have treated defendant's silence, after delivering and receiving payment for 2,700 bushels of corn by March, 1973, as repudiation of contract, plaintiff's waiting until December 28, 1973 before considering contract breached was not unreasonable under UCC § 2-610(a) (noting that earliest date on which plaintiff could have learned of defendant's breach was August 14, 1973, and also holding that under UCC § 2-713(1), use of December 28, 1973 as date for determining, with respect to plaintiff's damages, market value of undelivered corn was proper). Carson v. Mulnix, 263 N.W.2d 701 (Iowa 1978).

Where owners of real property subject to vendor's lien entered into agreement with holder of vendor's lien note that bank would pay note upon presentation of necessary documents to enable bank to succeed to full rights of holder, where holder sent note and assignment of note and lien to bank but bank declined to complete transaction because no endorsement had been made upon note itself, and where, after papers were returned to holder, deed of trust on property was foreclosed, tender made by property owners qualified as legal tender under UCC § 2-511(2), unless holder was excused from his obligation to endorse note upon instrument itself. Penny v. Kelley, 528 S.W.2d 330 (Civ. App. 1975).

Tender of payment was not condition precedent to seller's duty of delivery where, if buyers' evidence was accepted as true, seller of mobile home agreed to install it before full payment was received.

Berube v. Mobile Homes Sales & Serv., 28 N.C. App. 160, 220 S.E.2d 636 (1975).

3. Means and manner of payment.

Where envelope drafts were frequently used in sales of aircraft, and vice president of bank in which buyer maintained line of credit for purchase of aircraft testified that envelope draft was only method in normal use for transfer of title to aircraft, envelope draft was means or manner of payment "current in ordinary course of business," despite seller's alleged ignorance of practices in business of selling aircraft. Modern Aero Sales, Inc. v. Winzen Research, Inc., 486 S.W.2d 135 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), ref. n.r.e. (Feb. 7, 1973).

Where declaration that retail instalment contract for purchase of automobile was in default and demand for entire balance due was not communicated to plaintiff until November 14, and on evening of November 12 defendant was demanding instalment payment due and not entire balance, plaintiff had right to tender payment due by any means or in any manner current in ordinary course of business, or was entitled to extension of time reasonably necessary to procure cash demanded by defendant. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Barnes, 126 Ga. App. 444, 191 S.E.2d 121 (1972).

4. Check.

The acceptance of a check does not change a cash sale into a credit transaction, and the Uniform Commercial Code recognizes that payment by check is a commercially normal and proper method of payment. In re Helms Veneer Corp., 287 F. Supp. 840 (W.D. Va. 1968).

The requirement that a check contained an unconditional promise to pay applies only to the matter of the form of a negotiable instrument, and as between the original parties payment by check is conditional. Mansion Carpets, Inc. v. Marinoff, 24 A.D.2d 947 (1st Dep't 1965).

That at the time the successful bidder at a public auction issued the city his personal check for the required deposit against his bid there were insufficient funds in his account to pay it did not invalidate the bid when the check was duly paid on presentation to the drawee bank, for the check was not payment at the time of sale but merely a promise of future payment at the time of its presentation. Kensil v. Ocean City, 89 N.J. Super. 342, 215 A.2d 43 (App. Div. 1965).

A check can be a negotiable instrument without constituting immediate payment, and unless the parties agree otherwise, a check is not payment until presented and paid. Kensil v. Ocean City, 89 N.J. Super. 342, 215 A.2d 43 (App. Div. 1965).

5. —Dishonor.

Where buyer of automobile resold it to third party, received check in payment therefore, original seller took possession of automobile from third party and third party notified buyer he was canceling transaction, although ownership of car passed to third party at time payment was accepted and car was delivered, such payment was conditional under UCC § 2-511(3) and, although check was never presented for payment, third party in effect dishonored check and countermanded payment when he notified buyer he was canceling transaction; under UCC § 2-507(2), third party's right to retain or dispose of automobile was conditional upon his making payment due, and thus, when his check was dishonored, buyer had right to reclaim automobile by maintaining action in trover against original owner. Lawrence v. Graham, 29 Md. App. 422, 349 A.2d 271 (1975).

Between the original parties to a check payment is conditional, and if the instrument is dishonored, an action may be maintained on either the instrument or the underlying obligation. Mansion Carpets, Inc. v. Marinoff, 24 A.D.2d 947 (1st Dep't 1965).

6. Acceptance of payment.

In action by prospective buyer to enforce oral contract for sale of piece of construction equipment, question of fact was raised as to whether sellers had accepted payment, thus removing oral contract from statute of frauds under UCC § 2-201(3)(c) and precluding entry of summary judgment, where sellers received and retained buyer's check, in amount alleged to be full purchase price of equipment, for 30 days before check was returned unendorsed to buyer. Kaufman v. Solomon, 524 F.2d 501 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975).

7. Seller's remedies.

Where meat packer's operations were financed by secured creditor who had properly perfected security interest in meat packer's assets, including after-acquired property, where cattle sellers delivered cattle to meat packer on "grade and yield basis," where checks were subsequently issued to sellers, but before checks were paid, secured party, believing itself to be insecure, refused to advance more funds to meat packer for operation of plant, and where meat packer then filed petition in bankruptcy, interest of unpaid seller was subordinate to interest of secured creditor, and seller who did not attempt to reclaim cattle until year after filing petition for bankruptcy, was not entitled to either reclamation of cattle or proceeds from sale or slaughtered meat. Matter of Samuels & Co., Inc., C.A.5 (Tex.) 1976, 526 F.2d 1238, certiorari denied 97 S. Ct. 98, 429 U.S. 834, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 Stowers v. Mahon, 526 F.2d 1238 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 834, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

Where plaintiff, operator of livestock ring, sold cattle which it held on consignment to buyer, plaintiff then paid its consignor in full, buyer paid for cattle by check and plaintiff gave buyer purchase sheets for sale, where buyer then had cattle shipped to defendants' sales ring and later delivered to defendants purchase sheets given him by plaintiff, where plaintiff presented buyer's check for payment at drawee bank, but it was dishonored because of insufficient funds, and where plaintiff immediately contacted defendants and demanded return of livestock but defendants, instead, sold cattle: (1) plaintiff would be deemed "seller" under Uniform Commercial Code and was, thus, entitled to seller's remedies under Code; (2) under UCC §§ 2-507(2) and 2-511(3) when bank refused to honor buyer's check upon plaintiff's presentment, buyer no longer had right to retain or dispose of cattle, even though he retained title to them, and when defendants sold cattle on buyer's behalf, they acquired and then passed title, but since they acted with notice of plaintiff's claim to livestock, they did not acquire status of good faith purchaser and could not prevent plaintiff from asserting its right of reclamation and, thus, if they could not redeliver cattle they must deliver proceeds from sale thereof. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co. v. Honey, 38 Colo. App. 69, 552 P.2d 313 (1976), cert. dismissed, 191 Colo. 503, 553 P.2d 799 (1976).

In action between lender who held unperfected security interest in automobiles and car dealer who sold collateral to debtor, seller's right to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-702(3), when buyer's check for purchase price was dishonored by bank, did not have priority over lender's unperfected security interest in automobiles which arose when lender, who qualified as "purchaser" under UCC § 1-201, acquired certificates of title; under UCC § 2-403(1), once certificates of title were delivered, debtor acquired voidable title and could convey enforceable right in automobiles to lender as good faith purchaser for value, even though debtor's check to seller of automobiles was later dishonored. Guy Martin Buick, Inc. v. Colorado Springs Nat'l Bank, 184 Colo. 166, 519 P.2d 354 (1974).

§ 75-2-512. Payment by buyer before inspection.

(1) Where the contract requires payment before inspection nonconformity of the goods does not excuse the buyer from so making payment unless:

(a) The nonconformity appears without inspection; or

(b) Despite tender of the required documents the circumstances would justify injunction against honor under Section 75-5-109(b).

(2) Payment pursuant to subsection (1) does not constitute an acceptance of goods or impair the buyer's right to inspect or any of his remedies.

§ 75-2-513. Buyer's right to inspection of goods.

(1) Unless otherwise agreed and subject to subsection (3), where goods are tendered or delivered or identified to the contract for sale, the buyer has a right before payment or acceptance to inspect them at any reasonable place and time and in any reasonable manner. When the seller is required or authorized to send the goods to the buyer, the inspection may be after their arrival.

(2) Expenses of inspection must be borne by the buyer but may be recovered from the seller if the goods do not conform and are rejected.

(3) Unless otherwise agreed and subject to the provisions of this chapter on C.I.F. contracts (subsection (3) of Section 2-321) [Section 75-2-321(3)], the buyer is not entitled to inspect the goods before payment of the price when the contract provides

(a) for delivery "C.O.D." or on other like terms; or

(b) for payment against documents of title, except where such payment is due only after the goods are to become available for inspection.

(4) A place or method of inspection fixed by the parties is presumed to be exclusive but unless otherwise expressly agreed it does not postpone identification or shift the place for delivery or for passing the risk of loss. If compliance becomes impossible, inspection shall be as provided in this section unless the place or method fixed was clearly intended as an indispensable condition failure of which avoids the contract.

Where delivery was not accomplished until seller of mobile home "blocked it up" on buyer's lot, seller cannot contend that buyer's inspection of mobile home at seller's place of business destroyed the implied warranty of fitness imposed by law upon the sale. Performance Motors, Inc. v. Allen, 280 N.C. 385, 186 S.E.2d 161 (1972).

Where a ring did not live up to an express warranty that it would appraise for $30,000, the buyer had a right to revoke her acceptance of the ring under Code §§ 2-711(1) and 2-608(1). However, a perhaps more accurate characterization of the facts in this case involved the right given to all buyers under Code § 2-513(1) to inspect goods before purchase. Inspection in a case involving valuable gems entails an appraisal by an expert. Therefore the court concluded that the sale in this case was made subject to the right of the buyer to have the ring appraised and that if the ring did not live up to expectation she had the right to revoke her acceptance under Code § 2-608(1)(b). Lawner v. Engelbach, 433 Pa. 311, 249 A.2d 295 (1969).

The fact that a race horse, sound at the time of its purchase, was soon afterward discovered to have a bowed tendon, afforded the purchaser no defense of a breach of an express warranty of soundness, for the condition of the animal subsequent to the time that title passed was immaterial. Strauss v. West, 100 R.I. 388, 216 A.2d 366 (1966).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Grounds for rejection.
3. Time of rejection.
4. Loss of right to reject.

1. In general.

There is no provision under Mississippi Code § 75-2-601 for the allowance of attorney's fees. Chrysler Corp. v. Evans, 493 So. 2d 982 (Miss. 1986).

The Uniform Commercial Code incorporates, in UCC § 2-601, the "substantial performance" rule of the common law by giving the buyer the option of rejecting an entire shipment of goods if the goods fail in any respect to conform to the contract. In other words, even a technical breach of the contract will justify the buyer's rejection of the goods, with the result that perfection in performance on the part of the seller is required. However, in UCC §§ 2-606 and 2-607, the code makes it equally clear that if the buyer, instead of rejecting the goods, accepts them and thereafter fails to revoke his acceptance in accordance with the code's provisions, he must pay the purchase price of the goods, even though he may thereafter recover damages as provided in the code for breach of contract. Envirex, Inc. v. Ecological Recovery Assocs., 454 F. Supp. 1329 (M.D. Pa. 1978), aff'd, 601 F.2d 574 (3d Cir. Pa. 1979).

The Uniform Commercial Code has replaced the pre-Code remedy of rescission with the concepts of rejection and revocation of acceptance, but UCC § 2-721, dealing with remedies for fraud, recognizes that such change of remedies does not affect a buyer's right to pursue non-Code remedies (applying Texas law; action by buyer for misrepresentation in horse trade). Calloway v. Manion, 572 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

In action for breach by buyer of contract to purchase bank-building equipment, where buyer contended that it had properly rejected the entire contract pursuant to UCC § 2-601(a), and seller contended that under UCC § 2-609(1), it had right to refuse to render further performance until buyer had given adequate assurance that it would honor its contractual commitments, evidence amply supported jury's findings that seller, pending appropriate assurance from buyer, had right to refuse full performance of the contract, and that this right did not constitute a breach of contract by the seller. Financial Bldg. Consultants, Inc. v. St. Charles Mfg. Co., 145 Ga. App. 768, 244 S.E.2d 877 (1978).

Where (1) buyer purchased boat under contract of sale which expressly provided that sale would be void if boat did not perform to buyer's satisfaction, (2) boat never performed to buyer's satisfaction, although buyer tested it on weekends for eight days during month following sale, (3) seller refused to accept return of boat at end of such one-month period and repeatedly attempted to correct boat's problems, (4) seller three months later again refused to accept return of boat, and (5) trial court in seller's action for balance due entered judgment in favor of buyer, evidence supported two legal theories, either of which would sustain trial court's judgment. Under first theory, buyer never accepted boat within meaning of UCC § 2-601(a), § 2-602(1), and § 2-606(1), and his rejection of it one month after sale was effective under UCC § 2-602(1). Under second legal theory, buyer did accept boat but later validly revoked his acceptance of it under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), since his delay of over three months in revoking acceptance was reasonable under UCC § 2-608(2) in view of seller's repeated assurances that boat's problems, which were major, would be corrected. Don's Marine, Inc. v. Haldeman, 557 S.W.2d 826 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Mar. 8, 1978).

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of Ferrari sports car of limited availability ordered for buyer from another dealer, where order form and bill of sale identified car by name, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number, and stated that car was "used" car and that buyer had made $15,000 deposit on purchase price of $17,500; where half of such deposit was paid by buyer's personal check (on which was written name of car, year of manufacture, and serial number) and other half by cashier's check issued by bank making loan to buyer, which check was made payable to joint order of both buyer and seller and which contained restrictive indorsement requiring "payee" to record first lien on car in bank's favor; where car, when received by seller from other dealer, proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself; and where seller informed buyer that he would try to locate another Ferrari for him, sale was governed by UCC Art 2 and buyer was entitled to maintain replevin action, despite seller's contention that since car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered, since (1) under UCC § 2-209, parties had modified their prior oral agreement concerning sale of "used" car by entering into written agreement, evidenced by purchase order and bill of sale prepared by seller, which identified car sold by make, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number; (2) parties' modification of prior oral agreement also was evidenced by seller's acceptance of buyer's personal check and by negotiation by both seller and buyer of bank cashier's check bearing restrictive indorsement; (3) under UCC § 2-106(2), car delivered to seller conformed to modified contract; (4) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(b) and § 2-606(1)(a) to accept car that did not conform to purchase order, had delivery been tendered by seller; and (5) since car was identified to contract by purchase order and bill of sale which were in buyer's possession, title to car passed to buyer under UCC § 2-401(3)(a), even though seller retained vehicle. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

Having elected to rescind purchase of stud horse, any actions by buyer in breeding the horse and collecting stud fees were, in effect, as trustee for seller; buyer was entitled to offset the expenses of maintenance and this net profit was to be deducted from the purchase price to be returned. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Seller stated quasi-contract cause of action to recover from defaulting buyer the price quantum valebant of one knitting machine delivered under express contract for sale of 2 such machines. Singer Co. v.

Alka Knitting Mills, Inc., 41 A.D.2d 856 (2d Dep't 1973).

Buyer may accept or reject goods which fail to conform to contract in any respect under Code § 2-601. Ingle v. Marked Tree Equip. Co., 244 Ark. 1166, 428 S.W.2d 286 (1968).

Under the language of § 2-608 and of this section, a buyer is relieved of his obligations under former law of rescission to tender back property previously received, and it is sufficient if he seasonably notifies seller of his revocation of acceptance. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

The UCC does not change the already established law of Pennsylvania as to the buyer's right to rescind and recover the purchase price where there has been a breach of an implied warranty of merchantability or fitness. Sarnecki v. Al Johns Pontiac, 56 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 293 (Pa. 1966).

A buyer of 16 automobiles under an "entire" contract of sale could reject seven of the automobiles and accept the rest, where the seller accepted the return of the rejected automobiles from the buyer. Ofgant-Jackson Chevrolet, Inc. v. MacQuade, 338 Mass. 144, 154 N.E.2d 344 (1958).

The Commercial Code leaves no doubt that a purchaser can accept any commercial unit or units and reject the rest if the goods fail in any respect to conform to the contract. Paramount Paper Prods. Co. v. Lynch, 182 Pa. Super. 504, 128 A.2d 157 (1956).

2. Grounds for rejection.

In breach-of-warranty action for damages by buyer of allegedly defective dump trailers against manufacturer-seller, court held (1) that buyer and its ultimate Mexican customers were "merchants" within meaning of UCC § 2-104(1); (2) that seller was "merchant" within meaning of both UCC § 2-104(1) and § 2-314(1); (3) that telephoned order for 20 additional trailers was not enforceable under statute of frauds in UCC § 2-201(1) because it did not come within exceptions to such statute contained in UCC § 2-201(3); (4) that "specially manufactured goods" exception in UCC § 2-201(3)(a) applies only when seller, rather than buyer, seeks to escape statute-of-frauds defense; (5) that since three trailers purchased under valid written contract were put to improper use by buyer's Mexican customers, rather than being used for their "ordinary purposes," no breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) occurred; (6) that use of trailers for improper purposes, rather than for their stated "particular purpose," prevented recovery under implied warranty of fitness in UCC § 2-315; (7) that buyer could not recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(a) because it failed to prove that it had relied on statements in manufacturer-seller's brochure either prior to or contemporaneously with making of parties' contract; and (8) that since buyer had no right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject two unused and undamaged trailers, manufacturer-seller was not required to retake them or to refund their purchase price to buyer. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

Where 3 trailers of 5 purchased by buyer tipped over due to misuse and not existence of defect, rejection of remaining 2 trailers under 75-2-601 was improper, since seller was not required to retake possession of goods or refund purchase price for 2 unused trailers. Global Truck & Equip. Co. v. Palmer Mach. Works, Inc., 628 F. Supp. 641 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

In rem action in admiralty involving counterclaims by seller and buyer arising from breaches of contract to sell flour, (1) seller breached implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), and also federal adulterated-food statute, as to one cargo of flour which was infested with insects when it arrived at warehouse prior to being loaded on ship, (2) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject all of such cargo and therefore was not liable for its purchase price or any consequential damages, (3) seller also breached implied warranty of merchantability with respect to two other cargoes of flour, and since buyer had paid for such flour and had ultimately accepted it, buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-606(1)(a), (4) buyer was not barred from claiming damages for such nonconforming cargoes by failure to give notice of nonconformity by registered mail, since buyer's warning to seller of buyer's dissatisfaction with cargoes constituted adequate notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (5) under UCC § 2-714(2), although there was no evidence as to value of such cargoes at time and place of their acceptance (Mobile, Alabama), buyer was entitled to damages for difference between prices for good and infested flour in Bolivia, South America, plus damages for expenses incurred because of flour's infestation, since buyer had accepted such flour after it had been loaded on ships that transported it to Bolivia and had had no reasonable opportunity to inspect it before it was loaded. T.J. Stevenson & Co. v. 81,193 Bags of Flour, 449 F. Supp. 84 (S.D. Ala. 1976), rev'd on other grounds, 629 F.2d 338 (5th Cir. Ala. 1980), reh'g denied, 651 F.2d 779 (5th Cir. Ala. 1981).

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was ordered submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where arbitrators found that steel contracted for was nonconforming, that price adjustment for delivery of nonconforming steel was accepted trade usage, and that such remedy had failed because of seller's refusal to grant adjustment, declining price of Class II steel, and limited market for Class II steel, (1) trade usage of price adjustment was part of contract of sale and acted as limitation on buyer's rejection remedy under UCC § 2-601(a); but (2) since limited remedy of trade-usage price adjustment had failed in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), buyer was entitled under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject entire shipment of steel. North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

In action arising out of auction sale of mare described in sales catalog as "barren," but which subsequently "slipped" a dead foal, buyer who effectively revoked sale had right under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-608 to reject mare after acceptance and burden under UCC § 2-607 upon buyer to show breach did not apply. Since acceptance was revoked, burden was on seller to show mare's conformity with catalog description but seller did not meet that burden where he failed to prove that mare was either barren or that, pursuant to usage of trade under UCC § 1-205, mare pronounced in foal and later found empty without evidence of abortion could be described as barren. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

Right of buyer to rescind purchase of stud horse was to be determined at time election to rescind was properly exercised, i.e., when initial attempts at breeding did not meet with success and examination of sperm revealed that stallion was not acceptable as a breeder; fact that stallion subsequently was bred to 38 mares and produced 27 live foals did not negate claims that warranties as to stallion's capacity as a breeder were breached; not only was stallion warranted as being fit for stud purposes but parties agreed that semen samples had to be within normal acceptable limits. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Question as to compliance with warranties is to be measured by the specifics that the parties agreed on, and not by a generalized conclusion as to whether there was an overall fitness for the purposes intended. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Purchaser of mobile home who advised seller of numerous defects upon delivery of home, but took possession after seller advised buyer that downpayment would be forfeited and assured buyer that repairs would be made to home, was entitled to recover damages against seller for defects on basis of either: (1) theory of rejection of goods under UCC § 2-601, since evidence established that home did not comply with contract terms and seller had no right to threaten to forfeit downpayment; or (2) even if home was accepted, buyer was entitled to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 after using home and discovering further numerous defects. Under either theory, use of mobile home as residence for over year after delivery was not sufficient to render rejection or revocation of acceptance ineffective since use of goods was direct result of oppressive conduct of seller in threatening to forfeit downpayment and further assurances of seller that defects would be repaired. Jones v. Abriani, 169 Ind. App. 556, 350 N.E.2d 635 (1976).

Buyer of garbage truck was justified in refusing to accept delivery of truck where it had such defects as to be unfit for use on public streets as garbage collection vehicle. Stephenson Equip., Inc. v. Rinier, 68 Pa. D. & C.2d 698 (1975).

Upon record showing five commercial units of valves shipped under a single order, buyer had right to accept four units which conformed to contract and to reject non-conforming unit, and where rejection was made within a reasonable time after delivery and seller was seasonably notified thereof, rejection was rightful and seller was not entitled to payment for non-conforming unit. Perkins Pipe & Steel Co. v. Acme Valve & Fitting Co., 2 Ill. App. 3d 338, 276 N.E.2d 355 (1st Dist. 1971).

"Conformity" and "non-conformity" of goods sold applies not only to quantity and quality, for the goods are also required to conform to the obligations of the contract of sale; and where one of the obligations of the contract is warranty of title, seller's inability to deliver title to a portion of the goods sold constitutes "non-conformity" sufficient to support buyer's revocation of acceptance. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

The seller breaches his obligation to sell on credit by shipping the goods and then presenting bills of lading with sight drafts attached and insisting that the sight drafts be paid before the bills of lading will be surrendered. The buyer in such case may reject the shipment and exercise his rights for the breach of the contract, including rescission of the contract and proceeding to cover. United States ex rel. Industrial Instrument Corp. v. Paul Hardeman, Inc., 202 F. Supp. 124 (N.D. Tex. 1962), aff'd, 320 F.2d 115 (5th Cir. Tex. 1963).

Whether the goods conform or not and whether any nonconformity substantially impairs the value of the goods is a question which ordinarily cannot be determined on the pleadings but must be determined at the trial. Santai v. Seitzinger Bros., Ford, 58 Schuy. L. Rec. 42 (Pa. 1962).

The reasonableness of the rejection of the goods is ordinarily a question to be determined by the trier of fact and is not to be determined on the pleadings. Santai

v. Seitzinger Bros., Ford, 58 Schuyt. L. Rec. 42 (Pa. 1962).

3. Time of rejection.

Mere fact that because of seller's action the passing of title to stud horse was accelerated by some six months did not affect timing of obligation to inspect horse to determine its fitness for breeding purposes or decision to accept or reject the horse since, pursuant to agreement, it was only in the two-month period prior to stated date for passing of title and after end of racing season that seller was to have horse tested to determine his fitness for breeding purposes, actual inspection took place during such time and horse sustained no serious bodily injury during last months of racing; inspection and rejection in months before title would have passed absent acceleration was timely. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Parties to an agreement of sale are entitled to get what they bargained for at the time they bargained for it; right of a buyer to rescind must be determined as of the time the election to rescind is properly exercised, and the party's rights are not to be determined by subsequent events. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Buyer's use of a truck for five months during which time he failed to reject purchase contract amounted to an acceptance. Hudspeth Motors, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 238 Ark. 410, 382 S.W.2d 191 (1964), but see, Stimson Tractor Co. v. Heflin, 257 Ark. 263, 516 S.W.2d 379 (1974).

Defective condition existed in new carpeting; continual complaints were made to seller; one month after purchase, buyer demanded that seller remove carpeting and refund purchase price; seller failed to take any action; held, plaintiff-buyer had made justifiable rejection within reasonable time and proper notification was given to seller; held, plaintiff-buyer was then permitted to retain carpet on his floor and in use awaiting removal, without prejudicing his right to have purchase price refunded. Garfinkel v. Lehman Floor Covering Co., 60 Misc. 2d 72 (1969).

Where the buyer of a combine failed to reject the machine despite its alleged unsatisfactory performance until two months after delivery when he was called upon to make payment the trial court was justified in holding the rejection was not within a reasonable time after delivery or discovery of the breach. Ingle v. Marked Tree Equip. Co., 244 Ark. 1166, 428 S.W.2d 286 (1968).

Buyer who kept an automobile for more than 5 months and drove it more than 3,000 miles, and exercised dominion and control over it at all times during the period could not thereafter reject it. Green Chevrolet Co. v. Kemp, 241 Ark. 62, 406 S.W.2d 142 (1966).

4. Loss of right to reject.

In action by meat seller against buyer to recover for buyer's wrongful rejection of shipment of meat, where (1) neither confirmation of broker who arranged sale nor contract of sale itself called for any particular markings on the meat cartons, (2) buyer based its rejection on alleged failure of seller to tender "Richardson Production" meats, (3) evidence showed that meat cartons were marked "Tasmeats" instead of "Richardson Production", and (4) it was common knowledge in the trade that "Tasmeats" was equivalent of "Richardson Production," court affirmed district court's holding that buyer's rejection of meat shipment was wrongful under UCC § 2-601(a). Intermeat, Inc. v. American Poultry Inc., 575 F.2d 1017 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1978).

Purchaser of nonconforming mobile home under installment sales contract rightfully rejected unit and notified seller of rejection within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-602, but purchaser's security interest in goods under UCC § 2-711 did not give him right to continued use of goods until security interest was satisfied; and where purchaser, instead of storing, reshipping, or reselling goods as provided by UCC § 2-604, moved into unit and corrected deficiencies, he accepted goods under UCC § 2-606 and became obligated to pay contract price under UCC § 2-607, retaining only his rights for damages under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715; although exclusion of expressed and implied warranties in dark print which was underlined complied with UCC § 2-316, purchaser could nevertheless recover for breach of express warranty under UCC

§ 2-313 should trier of fact conclude that dealer made express warranties that mobile home would conform to sample or model shown purchaser on dealer's lot. Bowen v. Young, 507 S.W.2d 600, 67 A.L.R.3d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Where plaintiff-buyer told defendant-seller, when mobile home was being installed, "now this is not right and I do not want it," but nonetheless moved into mobile home, all the while complaining of numerous defects—some of which plaintiff attempted to correct—and made three monthly payments under the terms of the contract, there was insufficient evidence to support a finding that plaintiff rejected mobile home. Performance Motors, Inc. v. Allen, 280 N.C. 385, 186 S.E.2d 161 (1972).

Buyer did not reject machine for processing credit card purchases and rescind contract therefor as required by UCC §§ 2-601, 2-602, 2-606 and was liable for contract price where evidence failed to support any improper operation of machine and any assurances by seller that it would remedy alleged defects, and where buyer did not use machine for 4 ½ months after delivery, and then for 2 months without rejecting or paying therefor. Stephens Indus., Inc. v. American Express Co., 471 S.W.2d 501 (Mo. Ct. App. 1971).

Buyer who kept an automobile for more than 5 months and drove it more than 3,000 miles, and exercised dominion and control over it at all times during the period could not thereafter reject it. Green Chevrolet Co. v. Kemp, 241 Ark. 62, 406 S.W.2d 142 (1966).

§ 75-2-602. Manner and effect of rightful rejection.

(1) Rejection of goods must be within a reasonable time after their delivery or tender. It is ineffective unless the buyer seasonably notifies the seller.

(2) Subject to the provisions of the two (2) following sections on rejected goods (Sections 2-603 and 2-604) [§§ 75-2-603 and 75-2-604],

(a) after rejection any exercise of ownership by the buyer with respect to any commercial unit is wrongful as against the seller; and

(b) if the buyer has before rejection taken physical possession of goods in which he does not have a security interest under the provisions of this chapter (subsection (3) of Section 2-711) [§ 75-2-711(3)], he is under a duty after rejection to hold them with reasonable care at the seller's disposition for a time sufficient to permit the seller to remove them; but

(c) the buyer has no further obligations with regard to goods rightfully rejected.

(3) The seller's rights with respect to goods wrongfully rejected are governed by the provisions of this chapter on seller's remedies in general (Section 2-703) [§ 75-2-703].

1. In general.

Enactment of UCC §§ 9-503 and 9-504, providing for self-help repossession of mortgaged vehicle, did not constitute "state action" for purpose of determining constitutionality of procedure; nor did repossession of vehicle deprive buyer of any right of possession or ownership where buyer had voluntarily abandoned those rights by returning vehicle and rejecting it for alleged defect under UCC § 2-602. Mayhugh v. Bill Allen Chevrolet, 371 F. Supp. 1 (W.D. Mo. 1973), aff'd, 496 F.2d 16 (8th Cir. Mo. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 1006, 95 S. Ct. 328, 42 L. Ed. 2d 283 (1974).

Seller's false representation that used airplane had passed a 100-hour inspection by a licensed mechanic and was airworthy was a material one, and where buyer's acceptance of the plane was in reliance upon such misrepresentation he was entitled to rescind or cancel the contract. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

A seller who fails to reject goods in the manner provided in § 2-602 is held to have accepted them. Julian C. Cohen Salvage Corp. v. Eastern Elec. Sales Co., 205 Pa. Super. 26, 206 A.2d 331 (1965).

Instalment buyers of automobile from salesman who unsuccessfully attempted to secure certificate of title to automobile from the dealer were entitled to rescind the contract and return the automobile, and where the buyers returned the automobile to the dealer only after unsuccessfully attempting for a period of many months to obtain the title certificate, and the dealer wanted the automobile back and accepted it without complaint, fact that the return of the automobile to the dealer was made against the wishes of the assignee of the instalment sales contract did not estop the buyers from asserting against such assignee defense available to them under the Pennsylvania Motor Vehicle Sales Financing Act. Commonwealth Bank & Trust Co. v. Keech, 201 Pa. Super. 285, 192 A.2d 133 (1963).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, an offer by the buyer to return the goods after notice of rescission is given is no longer necessary. Marks v. Lehigh Brickface, Inc., 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 666 (1960).

2. Time for rejection, reasonable.

Where (1) buyer purchased boat under contract of sale which expressly provided that sale would be void if boat did not perform to buyer's satisfaction, (2) boat never performed to buyer's satisfaction, although buyer tested it on weekends for eight days during month following sale, (3) seller refused to accept return of boat at end of such one-month period and repeatedly attempted to correct boat's problems, (4) seller three months later again refused to accept return of boat, and (5) trial court in seller's action for balance due entered judgment in favor of buyer, evidence supported two legal theories, either of which would sustain trial court's judgment. Under first theory, buyer never accepted boat within meaning of UCC § 2-601(a), § 2-602(1), and § 2-606(1), and his rejection of it one month after sale was effective under UCC § 2-602(1). Under second legal theory, buyer did accept boat but later validly revoked his acceptance of it under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), since his delay of over three months in revoking acceptance was reasonable under UCC § 2-608(2) in view of seller's repeated assurances that boat's problems, which were major, would be corrected. Don's Marine, Inc. v. Haldeman, 557 S.W.2d 826 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Mar. 8, 1978).

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where arbitrators found that such steel was received for buyer's inspection on November 8, 1974, that buyer did not accept steel because it did not conform to contract of sale, and that buyer orally rejected steel on December 4, 1974, and gave seller written notice of such rejection on December 12, 1974, buyer's rejection was proper and seller received timely notification thereof under UCC § 2-602(1) and UCC § 1-204(2). North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

Where buyer received automobile on December 16, 1972, where due to delay in delivery of title and in obtaining license plates, buyer's utilization of auto was minimal until about December 29 or 30, and where automobile went into garage on January 1, 1973, and was still there on January 6, the date of buyer's letter to seller asking for return of purchase price, letter was attempted rejection; due to difficulty of discovering extent of defects, buyer's limited mechanical experience, and limited opportunities to discover defects, January 6 was reasonable time after delivery and, thus, buyer effectively rejected car as of that date. Lloyd v. Classic Motor Coaches, Inc., 74 Ohio Op. 2d 493, 388 F. Supp. 785 (N.D. Ohio 1974).

Notification within 24 hours of delivery of rejection of Christmas trees was within a reasonable time under UCC § 2-602(1). Traynor v. Walters, 342 F. Supp. 455 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

Buyers are under the burden to make a timely and unequivocal rejection if they do not intend to accept the goods delivered. Woods v. Van Wallis Trailer Sales Co., 77 N.M. 121, 419 P.2d 964 (1966).

The purchasers of a race horse misrepresented to them by the seller have the same right to rescission as though they had rejected the goods in the first place provided their revocation of acceptance occurs within a reasonable time. Grandi v. LeSage, 74 N.M. 799, 399 P.2d 285 (1965).

Where, at the time of completion and for some time afterwards, plaintiffs had been satisfied with the job performed by the defendants in covering their house with artificial stone, but later the mortar began to crack and colors began to fade from the stones, plaintiffs were not precluded from maintaining their action by their failure to give notice of rescission until over two years after the contract had been completed. Marks v. Lehigh Brickface, Inc., 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 666 (1960).

3. —Not reasonable.

Contract for sale of pyrenone was enforceable under statute of frauds where (1) pyrenone was "received and accepted" by buyer under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), and (2) buyer's attempt to reject pyrenone three months later was not effective under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and § 2-602(1) (under circumstances of case, rejection three months after delivery was not attempted within reasonable time). Pride Lab., Inc. v. Sentinel Butte Farmers Elevator Co., 268 N.W.2d 474 (N.D. 1978).

Where, pursuant to terms of contract of purchase, tender of coal screens was made by seller to buyer by written notification as to when and where screens could be picked up and buyer, although provided with opportunity to inspect screens, did not at any time give seller any indication that screens would not be accepted, buyer's failure to reject screens within reasonable time after their tender, as required by UCC § 2-602(1), resulted in acceptance of screens under UCC § 2-606(1)(b), so as to render buyer liable as matter of law for unpaid balance of purchase price. Unlaub Co. v. Sexton, 568 F.2d 72 (8th Cir. Ark. 1977).

Buyer was liable as matter of law for contract price of cast-iron pipes and other materials purchased for use in water-main construction project where buyer (1) accepted materials under UCC § 2-606(1)(c) by receiving them and installing them into the ground, (2) failed to reject materials within reasonable time after their delivery by seasonable notification to seller required by UCC § 2-602(1), (3) did not comply with duties under UCC § 2-603 as to any materials that buyer might rightfully have rejected, and (4) repaired all leaks in defective pipes shortly after their installation without requesting credit for such defects or revoking acceptance of such pipes under UCC § 2-608(2). Clow Corp. v. Metro Pipeline Co., 442 F. Supp. 583 (N.D. Ga. 1977).

Where defendant, who was officer and stockholder of buyer-corporation, guaranteed payment of contract for sale of goods to corporation, corporation breached contract, and seller brought action against defendant on his guarantee, provisions of Uniform Commercial Code did not apply; however, assuming that Code was applicable, defendant could not avail himself of any of its remedies because of his admitted and undisputed failure to act seasonably to reject contract or seek its rescission as required by UCC § 2-602(1). Unlaub Co. v. Sexton, 427 F. Supp. 1360 (W.D. Ark. 1977), aff'd, 568 F.2d 72 (8th Cir. Ark. 1977).

Where buyer had machine in its possession for four and a half months before an attempt was made to operate it, buyer did not exercise right of rejection within a reasonable time under UCC § 2-602. Stephens Indus., Inc. v. American Express Co., 471 S.W.2d 501 (Mo. Ct. App. 1971).

Where the buyer of a race horse at an auction failed to inspect the animal on the day of the sale and attempted to reject the sale on the next day alleging the horse was unsound by reason of a fractured splint bone, which defect would have been readily ascertainable upon ordinary inspection, it was held the attempted rejection did not come within a reasonable time, that the buyer had the burden of establishing any breach of warranty, and that he had failed to do so. Consequently, a judgment in favor of the seller was affirmed. Miron v. Yonkers Raceway, Inc., 400 F.2d 112 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968).

Where goods were delivered to buyer on June 24, and buyer attempted to return same on July 29, lower court did not err in finding that buyer had failed to make effective rejection within reasonable time. Beco, Inc. v. Minnechaug Golf Course, Inc., 5 Conn. Cir. Ct. 444, 256 A.2d 522 (1968).

Where the buyer of a combine failed to reject the machine despite its alleged unsatisfactory performance until two months after delivery when he was called upon to make payment, the trial court was justified in holding the rejection was not within a reasonable time after delivery or discovery of the breach. Ingle v. Marked Tree Equip. Co., 244 Ark. 1166, 428 S.W.2d 286 (1968).

Buyer who kept an automobile for more than 5 months and drove it more than 3,000 miles, and exercised dominion and control over it at all times during the period could not thereafter reject it. Green Chevrolet Co. v. Kemp, 241 Ark. 62, 406 S.W.2d 142 (1966).

4. —Agreement of parties.

In action to rescind or revoke sale of silo and recover back purchase price as well as installation expense incurred under contract, UCC § 2-602 requiring buyer's rejection to be made within reasonable time was not applicable, since buyer here by contract had one year to determine if silo would be satisfactory for his purposes; but he would be expected to make good faith attempt to adapt it to those purposes.

Maas v. Scoboda, 188 Neb. 189, 195 N.W.2d 491 (1972).

Where instalment buyers who purchased automobile from salesman notified dealer and tried unsuccessfully for many months to obtain certificate of title to the vehicle from the dealer, and only returned automobile on becoming convinced that the title certificate would not be delivered to them, dealer, who wanted the automobile returned and accepted it without complaint, could not complain that the automobile was not returned within a reasonable time. Commonwealth Bank & Trust Co. v. Keech, 201 Pa. Super. 285, 192 A.2d 133 (1963).

5. Notice of rejection, sufficient.

Where delivered goods did not conform to contract and where buyer rejected goods, notified seller of rejection immediately and promised to return non-conforming goods, buyer's rejection was not rendered ineffective merely because non-conforming goods were not returned until 125 days after buyer's promise to do so; under UCC § 2-602(2) buyer had no obligation to return goods and, thus, buyer's promise was wholly gratuitous. Presto Mfg. Co. v. Formetal Eng'g Co., 46 Ill. App. 3d 7, 360 N.E.2d 510 (1st Dist. 1977).

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where arbitrators found that such steel was received for buyer's inspection on November 8, 1974, that buyer did not accept steel because it did not conform to contract of sale, and that buyer orally rejected steel on December 4, 1974, and gave seller written notice of such rejection on December 12, 1974, buyer's rejection was proper and seller received timely notification thereof under UCC § 2-602(1) and UCC § 1-204(2). North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

Code provisions pertaining to manner and effect of rightful rejecting and acceptance of goods were inapplicable to action by seller of hog fence paneling to recover price of extra panels ordered by buyer who counterclaimed for damages for nonconformity between heavy-duty panels ordered and light-weight panels received, although evidence raised fact issue, particularly as to panels first received, under Code section providing for revocation of acceptance. Jones v. Atkins, 254 Ark. 472, 494 S.W.2d 448 (1973).

6. —Insufficient.

Where buyer of transformers admitted to making of oral contract with seller and where buyer accepted goods without giving reasonable notice of rejection as required by UCC § 2-602, oral contract for sale of goods was enforceable pursuant to UCC § 2-201(3)(b)(c). Carolina Transformer Co. v. Anderson, 341 So. 2d 1327 (Miss. 1977).

In action on contract for removal and replacement of fill material, where buyer permitted seller to deliver 141 loads of fill from April 3-5 without objection being made until April 8, and never advised seller in what particulars fill failed to meet specifications, buyer had not established rejection of goods under Code. L.J. Robinson, Inc. v. Arber Constr. Co., 292 A.2d 809 (D.C. 1972).

Defense of breach of warranty is without merit where buyer provided seller with no notice of rejection or of receipt of alleged damaged paintings, except for single shipment for which acceptable adjustment was made for shortage and damage, and where buyer did not reject goods within reasonable time. Portal Galleries, Inc. v. Tomar Prods., Inc., 60 Misc. 2d 523 (1969).

In the absence of a rejection in writing and any offer or attempt to return goods purchased there can be no rightful rejection of a purchase under this section. Julian C. Cohen Salvage Corp. v. Eastern Elec. Sales Co., 205 Pa. Super. 26, 206 A.2d 331 (1965).

7. Exercise of ownership.

Applying UCC rules to a copier lease contract, after revocation of acceptance of the copier by the lessee any exercise by the lessee of dominion over it could be considered wrongful as against the lessor. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Under UCC § 2-602 where buyer properly elected to and did reship nonconforming goods to seller and, on failure of seller to accept such goods, buyer incurred additional expenses in storing and testing goods and in disposing of them at later time when goods had no value, such course of conduct on part of buyer did not constitute exercise of ownership and buyer was entitled to offset for costs incurred. Askco Eng'g Corp. v. Mobil Chem. Corp., 535 S.W.2d 893 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Purchaser of concrete pump waived its revocation of acceptance by resuming use of the pump. Concrete Equip. Co. v. William A. Smith Contracting Co., 358 F. Supp. 1137 (E.D. Wis. 1973).

Buyers of an ice cream freezer and refrigeration compressor unit by using the compressor unit to operate an air conditioner exercised dominion inconsistent with the seller's ownership, and seller by entering judgment for the unpaid balance ratified the sale as represented by the instalment sales contract, and since the seller never accepted or agreed to a rescission by the buyers, the buyers were deemed to have accepted the goods and were precluded from unilaterally asserting a rescission of the sales contract. F.W. Lang Co. v. Fleet, 193 Pa. Super. 365, 165 A.2d 258 (1960).

Acceptance was made of a "Dearborn Beautydryer" where the buyers retained it for seven and one-half months before notifying the seller that it failed to operate properly, and offering to return it, and hence the buyers were deemed to have accepted the article and were liable for the agreed price thereof. Dearborn Stove Co. v. Clark Appliance Co., 104 Pitts. Legal J. 403 (Pa. 1956).

8. —Motor vehicles.

The evidence was insufficient to show that purchasers of a used vehicle properly revoked acceptance of the vehicle in a manner sufficient to trigger damage entitlement pursuant to § 75-2-711, where the purchasers turned the vehicle over to the bank to which their financing documents were assigned, rather than returning the vehicle to the dealer from which they purchased it, the bank was not a party to the litigation, and the purchasers neither pled nor proved an agency relationship between the bank and the dealer; the purchasers' actions in declining to make the necessary payments and delivering the vehicle to the bank for sale with application of the sales proceeds to their benefit were contrary to any justifiable revocation of acceptance. Additionally, the purchasers' action in turning the vehicle over to the bank, and its subsequent sale, did not constitute notice of revocation, which is an essential element for recovery under § 75-2-711, since the record did not reflect that the dealer was aware of this transaction. Moreover, this action was inconsistent with the seller's ownership, and therefore could not constitute notice of revocation; such action confirmed acceptance under § 75-2-606(1)(c). Gast v. Rogers-Dingus Chevrolet, 585 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1991).

Buyer's use of a truck for five months during which time he failed to reject purchase contract amounted to an acceptance. Hudspeth Motors, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 238 Ark. 410, 382 S.W.2d 191 (1964), but see, Stimson Tractor Co. v. Heflin, 257 Ark. 263, 516 S.W.2d 379 (1974).

Where seller refused to acknowledge buyer's revocation of acceptance of used automobile, and buyer then kept automobile, used and maintained it, and made payments on financing agreement to bank, buyer failed to revoke his acceptance properly, was in the position of one who had accepted the goods, and had through his notification of revocation of acceptance given seller sufficient and timely notification of breach of warranty (automobile warranty book showed 14000 more miles than car's odometer). Fecik v. Capindale, 54 Pa. D. & C.2d 701 (1971).

When a buyer, at his own expense, began installing a hoist and dump bed on a truck he performed an act inconsistent with the seller's ownership, and acceptance of the truck occurred at that time. Park County Implement Co. v. Craig, 397 P.2d 800 (Wyo. 1964).

A car buyer who complained that the car was difficult to control at a speed in excess of 30 miles per hour could not revoke his acceptance and at the same time keep the car for driving around town at low speeds, for such use of the car was an exercise of rights of ownership over it, and was consequently wrongful under this section. Grucella v. GMC, 10 Pa. D. & C.2d 65 (1957).

9. —Mobile homes.

Tender back of defective mobile home was not prerequisite to buyers' action for cancellation of contract, return of purchase price and incidental and consequential damages resulting from seller's breach, where buyers justifiably revoked their acceptance under UCC § 2-711(1) but seller never made request to have mobile home returned; after revocation of acceptance, buyers and security interest in mobile home for purchase price and they had not only right to retain mobile home, but under certain circumstances had right, after having given notice of revocation of acceptance and no response having been received, to hold mobile home with reasonable care and to sell it if necessary in order to acquire money to get back purchase price; thus, buyers by living in home and maintaining it to best of their ability were also preserving it for benefit of seller as well as holding it for their own security. Mobile Home Sales Mgt. Inc. v. Brown, 115 Ariz. 11, 562 P.2d 1378 (Ct. App. 1977).

In action by mobile home purchasers against seller and manufacturer for rescission of purchase agreement, although purchasers' revocation of acceptance was effective, their continued occupancy of mobile home as their residence for approximately six months after revocation of acceptances was wrongful and manufacturer and seller were entitled to offset amount of fair and reasonable use value of mobile home for this period. Stroh v. American Recreation & Mobile Home Corp., 35 Colo. App. 196, 530 P.2d 989 (1975).

Contract for sale of mobile trailer, specifically excluding all warranties except those written in the contract, excluded implied warranty of fitness, and buyer of trailer accepted it where he kept trailer and equipment for over two years without giving notice of rejection or desire to rescind contract. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Burns, 527 P.2d 655 (Utah 1974).

10. Care of goods in buyer's possession.

Purchaser of nonconforming mobile home under installment sales contract rightfully rejected unit and notified seller of rejection within reasonable time under

UCC § 2-601 and 2-602, but purchaser's security interest in goods under UCC § 2-711 did not give him right to continued use of goods until security interest was satisfied; and where purchaser, instead of storing, reshipping, or reselling goods as provided by UCC § 2-604, moved into unit and corrected deficiencies, he accepted goods under UCC § 2-606 and became obligated to pay contract price under UCC § 2-607 retaining only his rights for damages under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715; although exclusion, of expressed and implied warranties in dark print which was underlined complied with UCC § 2-316, purchaser could nevertheless recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 should trier of fact conclude that dealer made express warranties that mobile home would conform to sample or model shown purchaser on dealer's lot. Bowen v. Young, 507 S.W.2d 600, 67 A.L.R.3d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

11. Seller's remedies.

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

Purchaser was not liable for damages resulting from theft of rejected cable, where notice of nonconformity of cable was promptly given, purchaser acted in accordance with request of seller in attempting to facilitate return of rejected cable, and seller with full notice of place of storage which was at place of delivery delayed repossessing its property for more than 3 months. Graybar Elec. Co. v. Shook, 283 N.C. 213, 195 S.E.2d 514 (1973).

12. Procedure.

Whether buyer accepted or rejected cattle purchased for breeding purposes and whether buyer acted within reasonable time after delivery of cattle and inspection, which showed cattle to be infected with Brucellosis, were matters properly left for jury determination. Harding v. Grant City Sale Barn, Inc., 492 S.W.2d 99 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973).

§ 75-2-603. Merchant buyer's duties as to rightfully rejected goods.

(1) Subject to any security interest in the buyer (subsection (3) of Section 2-711) [Section 75-2-711(3)], when the seller has no agent or place of business at the market of rejection a merchant buyer is under a duty after rejection of goods in his possession or control to follow any reasonable instructions received from the seller with respect to the goods and in the absence of such instructions to make reasonable efforts to sell them for the seller's account if they are perishable or threaten to decline in value speedily. Instructions are not reasonable if on demand indemnity for expenses is not forthcoming.

(2) When the buyer sells goods under subsection (1), he is entitled to reimbursement from the seller or out of the proceeds for reasonable expenses of caring for and selling them, and if the expenses include no selling commission then to such commission as is usual in the trade or if there is none to a reasonable sum not exceeding ten per cent (10%) on the gross proceeds.

(3) In complying with this section the buyer is held only to good faith and good faith conduct hereunder is neither acceptance nor conversion nor the basis of an action for damages.

Buyer was liable as matter of law for contract price of cast-iron pipes and other materials purchased for use in water-main construction project where buyer (1) accepted materials under UCC § 2-606(1)(c) by receiving them and installing them into the ground, (2) failed to reject materials within reasonable time after their delivery by seasonable notification to seller required by UCC § 2-602(1), (3) did not comply with duties under UCC § 2-603 as to any materials that buyer might rightfully have rejected, and (4) repaired all leaks in defective pipes shortly after their installation without requesting credit for such defects or revoking acceptance of such pipes under UCC § 2-608(2). *Clow Corp. v. UCC §§ 2-603, 2-604 make it plain that a buyer in possession who has rightfully and effectively rejected goods may resell the goods, either for the account of the seller, with the right to reimbursement for expenses and commission, if the buyer has no security interest in the goods, or for the buyer's own account to the extent of his security interest, plus expenses; and his action in either case, if it is exercised in good faith and is reasonable under the circumstances will not constitute an acceptance or conversion or serve as the basis of an action for damages. *Clark v. That consignee permitted carrier's driver to leave damaged boom section at its place of business "as an accommodation" to carrier did not alter fact that physical delivery occurred, and where bill of lading required written notice to carrier of claim for damage within 9 months after delivery, consignee's failure to give such notice within required time barred recovery. *Johnson & Dealaman, Inc. v. A buyer who received a shipment of rubber mats which he had not ordered, after requesting of the seller authority to return the goods (which authority he did not receive) was under an obligation to sell the goods for the seller's account, and on failing to do so he became indebted to the seller for their value. *Mitchell Rubber Prods., Inc. v. JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where court order submitting matter to arbitration stated that buyer would have right to sell and make deliveries of nonconforming steel rejected by buyer; where buyer, prior to such order, had informed seller that it would sell nonconforming steel for seller's account if seller did not give buyer other instructions within reasonable time; and where seller did not give any other instructions to buyer and buyer resold such steel, (1) seller had sufficient notice under UCC § 2-706 of buyer's intent to resell; (2) such resale under UCC § 2-604 did not constitute acceptance of goods; and (3) arbitrators under UCC § 2-715(1) properly allowed buyer sales commission on such resale as damages resulting from seller's breach. North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

Under UCC § 2-326 sale or return business arrangement, where seller wrongfully refused to accept return of fertilizer, buyer was justified under UCC § 2-604 in storing it at buyer's expense and later selling fertilizer at best price obtainable, but expenses of caring for and selling fertilizer could not include storage of other stock in rented warehouse due to fact that fertilizer took up other storage space needed for other stock. Gulf Oil Corp. v. Rice & Agric. Co-op, Inc., 536 S.W.2d 236 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 29, 1976).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In General.

Under contract for delivery and installation of pin spotter machines in bowling alley, where buyers did not reject defective, nonconforming pin spotters, but instead accepted them notwithstanding their defects, buyers were not required to give seller notice of particular defects as required by UCC § 2-605(1) in order to maintain action for breach of warranty, and letter from buyers' attorney to seller's sister, after seller's death, stating that pin spotters were not installed within meaning of contract, that pin spotters needed repairs although contract included guaranty as to quality and performance of equipment, and that buyers were keeping record of their expenses so that they could substantiate claim for any loss which might be sustained, was sufficient notice under UCC § 2-607(3) to preserve buyers' rights; furthermore, buyers did not waive their rights to warranty recovery by refusing to permit seller to cure defects in pin spotters under UCC § 2-508 since they did not reject nonconforming goods but accepted them. *Bonebrake v. § 75-2-606. What constitutes acceptance of goods.

(1) Acceptance of goods occurs when the buyer

(a) after a reasonable opportunity to inspect the goods signifies to the seller that the goods are conforming or that he will take or retain them in spite of their nonconformity; or

(b) fails to make an effective rejection (subsection (1) of Section 2-602) [§ 75-2-602(1)], but such acceptance does not occur until the buyer has had a reasonable opportunity to inspect them; or

(c) does any act inconsistent with the seller's ownership; but if such act is wrongful as against the seller it is an acceptance only if ratified by him.

(2) Acceptance of a part of any commercial unit is acceptance of that entire unit.

1. In general.

Prior to the adoption of the Uniform Commercial Code, actual delivery was an essential element of the seller's proof in an action to recover the price of goods shipped to the buyer. At that time, actual delivery determined in whom title to the goods vested. Under the Uniform Commercial Code, however, as is reflected in UCC § 2-606(1) and § 2-709(1)(a), acceptance is the concept that is utilized to determine the rights of the seller in an action for the price of goods. Montana Seeds, Inc. v. Holliday, 178 Mont. 119, 582 P.2d 1223 (1978).

Where (1) buyer purchased boat under contract of sale which expressly provided that sale would be void if boat did not perform to buyer's satisfaction, (2) boat never performed to buyer's satisfaction, although buyer tested it on weekends for eight days during month following sale, (3) seller refused to accept return of boat at end of such one-month period and repeatedly attempted to correct boat's problems, (4) seller three months later again refused to accept return of boat, and (5) trial court in seller's action for balance due entered judgment in favor of buyer, evidence supported two legal theories, either of which would sustain trial court's judgment. Under first theory, buyer never accepted boat within meaning of UCC § 2-601(a), § 2-602(1), and § 2-606(1), and his rejection of it one month after sale was effective under UCC § 2-602(1). Under second legal theory, buyer did accept boat but later validly revoked his acceptance of it under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), since his delay of over three months in revoking acceptance was reasonable under UCC § 2-608(2) in view of seller's repeated assurances that boat's problems, which were major, would be corrected. Don's Marine, Inc. v. Haldeman, 557 S.W.2d 826 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Mar. 8, 1978).

Purchaser who executed conditional sales contract on new automobile in which acceptance of vehicle was acknowledged, and who immediately drove it away from seller's place of business had accepted it, within the meaning of this section. Rozmus v. Thompson's Lincoln-Mercury Co., 209 Pa. Super. 120, 224 A.2d 782 (1966).

2. Inspection by buyer.

Buyer accepted automobile when he failed to make a rejection after having had a reasonable opportunity to inspect it. Rester v. Morrow, 491 So. 2d 204 (Miss. 1986).

In action by lessor of ice-vending machine against lessee for overdue lease payments, in which lessee cross-complained against machine's seller alleging breach of seller's implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose, where evidence showed (1) that seller had sold machine to lessor in order to facilitate leasing it to lessee, (2) that both seller and lessor had advised lessee not to accept machine until he was satisfied with its performance, and (3) that both machine's acceptance notice and lease itself expressly declared that lessee understood that lessor made no warranties, express or implied, concerning machine, court held (1) that since lease agreement between lessor and lessee was merely a financing tool whereby lessee acquired use of machine after seller sold it to lessor, lessor thus was lessee's agent in purchasing machine from seller, (2) that as a result, seller's implied warranty of fitness of machine for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 extended to lessee, (3) that seller breached such warranty when machine proved to be only 80 percent effective when used, (4) that lessee, by signing acceptance notice wherein he acknowledged that machine was operative and had no defects, accepted it under UCC § 2-606(1) in an "as is" condition and thus released seller from its implied warranty, and (5) that lessee's use of machine for 22 months with full knowledge of its limitations was unreasonable and prevented him from revoking his acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2). World Wide Lease, Inc. v. Grobschmit, 21 Wash. App. 537, 586 P.2d 889 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1023 (1979).

The Uniform Commercial Code incorporates, in UCC § 2-601, the "substantial performance" rule of the common law by giving the buyer the option of rejecting an entire shipment of goods if the goods fail in any respect to conform to the contract. In other words, even a technical breach of the contract will justify the buyer's rejection of the goods, with the result that perfection in performance on the part of the seller is required. However, in UCC §§ 2-606 and 2-607, the code makes it equally clear that if the buyer, instead of rejecting the goods, accepts them and thereafter fails to revoke his acceptance in accordance with the code's provisions, he must pay the purchase price of the goods, even though he may thereafter recover damages as provided in the code for breach of contract. Envirex, Inc. v. Ecological Recovery Assocs., 454 F. Supp. 1329 (M.D. Pa. 1978), aff'd, 601 F.2d 574 (3d Cir. Pa. 1979).

Since a buyer's acceptance of goods precludes any rejection thereof, and since buyer's rejection is prerequisite to seller's right under UCC § 2-508 to cure defects in such goods, mobile home buyer's acceptance of home under UCC § 2-606(1), despite knowledge of defects therein, deprived seller of right to cure such defects. Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

In rem action in admiralty involving counterclaims by seller and buyer arising from breaches of contract to sell flour, (1) seller breached implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), and also federal adulterated-food statute, as to one cargo of flour which was infested with insects when it arrived at warehouse prior to being loaded on ship, (2) buyer had right under UCC § 2-

601(a) to reject all of such cargo and therefore was not liable for its purchase price or any consequential damages, (3) seller also breached implied warranty of merchantability with respect to two other cargoes of flour, and since buyer had paid for such flour and had ultimately accepted it, buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-606(1)(a), (4) buyer was not barred from claiming damages for such nonconforming cargoes by failure to give notice of nonconformity by registered mail, since buyer's warning to seller of buyer's dissatisfaction with cargoes constituted adequate notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (5) under UCC § 2-714(2), although there was no evidence as to value of such cargoes at time and place of their acceptance (Mobile, Alabama), buyer was entitled to damages for difference between prices for good and infested flour in Bolivia, South America, plus damages for expenses incurred because of flour's infestation, since buyer had accepted such flour after it had been loaded on ships that transported it to Bolivia and had had no reasonable opportunity to inspect it before it was loaded. T.J. Stevenson & Co. v. 81,193 Bags of Flour, 449 F. Supp. 84 (S.D. Ala. 1976), rev'd on other grounds, 629 F.2d 338 (5th Cir. Ala. 1980), reh'g denied, 651 F.2d 779 (5th Cir. Ala. 1981).

Where seller was aware that buyer was not ready to use carpet it shipped and that it would be stored because of construction strike, and where evidence showed that no set time for inspection existed but that industry practice was not to inspect until purchaser was found and was ready to use carpet, buyer's nine-month delay in inspecting and subsequently rejecting carpet as non-conforming did not in itself constitute acceptance as matter of law under UCC § 2-606. La Villa Fair v. Lewis Carpet Mills, Inc., 219 Kan. 395, 548 P.2d 825 (1976).

Where last purchase of goods as demonstrated by accounts occurred 20 days prior to commencement of action on accounts, difference between 2 dates represented reasonable time within which any inspection and rejection of goods should have been made, so that sales of goods represented by account were taken out of statute of frauds by receipt and acceptance of goods by defendant. Gardner & Beedon Co. v. Cooke, 267 Or. 7, 513 P.2d 758 (1973).

Where the buyer of a race horse at an auction failed to inspect the animal on the day of the sale and attempted to reject the sale on the next day alleging the horse was unsound by reason of a fractured splint bone, which defect would have been readily ascertainable upon ordinary inspection, it was held the attempted rejection did not come within a reasonable time, that the buyer had the burden of establishing any breach of warranty, and that he had failed to do so. Consequently, a judgment in favor of the seller was affirmed. Miron v. Yonkers Raceway, Inc., 400 F.2d 112 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968).

If the buyer receives delivery of corrugated paper boxes or "voids" used in pouring concrete beams, with knowledge obtained by immediate inspection that they are not satisfactory, an acceptance of the goods occurs and the buyer cannot sue the seller for breach of warranty when, with knowledge of the defect, he decides to take a chance and use the goods. Safe-Carry Paper Prods. Co. v. Concrete Eng'g Co., 64 Lack. Jur. 53 (Pa. 1962).

3. Conduct signifying conformity.

Lawnmower manufacturer accepted grass catcher bags under § 75-2-606 where, although it was aware of tremendous magnitude of defects in bags, it continued to indicate to manufacturer of bags that it would attempt to sell bags it had in stock and that it anticipated delivery of additional bags in future, thus indicating that bags were accepted in spite of their nonconformity, and where lawnmower manufacturer's continued attempts to sell bags, as well as its destruction of defective bags, were inconsistent with effective rejection. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Where, pursuant to terms of contract of purchase, tender of coal screens was made by seller to buyer by written notification as to when and where screens could be picked up and buyer, although provided with opportunity to inspect screens, did not at any time give seller any indication that screens would not be accepted, buyer's failure to reject screens within reasonable time after their tender, as required by UCC § 2-602(1), resulted in acceptance of screens under UCC § 2-606(1)(b), so as to render buyer liable as matter of law for unpaid balance of purchase price. Unlaub Co. v. Sexton, 568 F.2d 72 (8th Cir. Ark. 1977).

Conduct of general contractor in taking and using concrete forming equipment manufactured by plaintiff constituted acceptance of goods as provided in UCC § 2-606(1)(c) where, inter alia, contractor received and kept goods, used them throughout dam construction project for which they were ordered and continued to use them since that time, and where, although contractor received forms two to three months before actually using them, and in that time could have rejected forms entirely and built job with wooden forms, decided to keep forms, keep silent and continue to use them. Economy Forms Corp. v. Kandy, Inc., 391 F. Supp. 944 (N.D. Ga. 1974), aff'd, 511 F.2d 1400 (5th Cir. 1975).

Buyer who was general contractor on dam construction project accepted steel concrete forming equipment manufactured and delivered by seller, under UCC § 2-606(1)(a), where contractor received erection drawings in October, 1970, and forms themselves in January, 1971, where contractor's agents, in their discussion with seller's agent agreed that forms as shown on erection drawings were conforming, where, in addition, contractor's agents received and then used forms in their delivered condition for many months without notifying seller that goods were inadequate; in addition, contractor failed under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) to reject goods within reasonable time where six months elapsed between date of approval of erection drawings in November and first complaint to seller's agents in May. Economy Forms Corp. v. Kandy, Inc., 391 F. Supp. 944 (N.D. Ga. 1974), aff'd, 511 F.2d 1400 (5th Cir. 1975).

Failure to notify growers of beets at any time of alleged defect in quality could be construed to be an acceptance of the goods. Maine Sugar of Montezuma, Inc. v. Wickham, 37 A.D.2d 381 (3d Dep't 1971).

Buyers of a house trailer who, after having a reasonable opportunity to inspect and with full knowledge of its defects, made partial payments and performed acts of dominion have accepted the trailer and cannot thereafter rescind their contract to purchase. Woods v. Van Wallis Trailer Sales Co., 77 N.M. 121, 419 P.2d 964 (1966).

A city which used traffic signal equipment delivered to it under purchase orders accepted the equipment. Marbelite Co. v. Philadelphia, 40 Pa. D. & C.2d 347 (1966), aff'd, 208 Pa. Super. 256, 222 A.2d 443 (1966).

Acceptance was made of a "Dearborn Beautydryer" where the buyers retained it for seven and one-half months before notifying the seller that it failed to operate properly, and offering to return it, and hence the buyers were deemed to have accepted the article and were liable for the agreed price thereof. Dearborn Stove Co. v. Clark Appliance Co., 104 Pitts. Legal J. 403 (Pa. 1956).

4. Waiver of nonconformity.

In action by seller under UCC § 75-2-709(1) for price of defective lawnmower bags sold to defendant buyer, court held (1) that buyer had accepted bags (a) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(a) by conduct that signified to seller that buyer was accepting bags despite knowledge of their nonconformity, and (b) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(b) by conduct, such as continuing to try to sell bags and destruction of defective bags, that was inconsistent with effective rejection of bags; (2) that buyer did not effectively revoke acceptance of bags under UCC § 75-2-608(1) because (a) its acts of dominion over bags, including continuing efforts to sell them, were inconsistent with its claim of revocation of acceptance, and (b) buyer also did not comply with notice requirement of UCC § 75-2-608(2) for revocation of acceptance; (3) that seller's damages under UCC § 75-2-709(1)(b) for specially manufactured goods included damages for cost of materials, labor and overhead, administrative and sales expenses, and incidental damages; and (4) that although buyer satisfied burden of proof under UCC § 75-2-607(4) with regard to seller's breach of warranty, buyer's breach-of-warranty counterclaim was foreclosed by failure to give seller adequate notice of breach required by UCC § 75-2-607(3)(a) and Official Comment 4. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of Ferrari sports car of limited availability ordered for buyer from another dealer, where order form and bill of sale identified car by name, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number, and stated that car was "used" car and that buyer had made $15,000 deposit on purchase price of $17,500; where half of such deposit was paid by buyer's personal check (on which was written name of car, year of manufacture, and serial number) and other half by cashier's check issued by bank making loan to buyer, which check was made payable to joint order of both buyer and seller and which contained restrictive indorsement requiring "payee" to record first lien on car in bank's favor; where car, when received by seller from other dealer, proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself; and where seller informed buyer that he would try to locate another Ferrari for him, sale was governed by UCC Art 2 and buyer was entitled to maintain replevin action, despite seller's contention that since car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered, since (1) under UCC § 2-209, parties had modified their prior oral agreement concerning sale of "used" car by entering into written agreement, evidenced by purchase order and bill of sale prepared by seller, which identified car sold by make, year of manufacture, model number, and serial number; (2) parties' modification of prior oral agreement also was evidenced by seller's acceptance of buyer's personal check and by negotiation by both seller and buyer of bank cashier's check bearing restrictive indorsement; (3) under UCC § 2-106(2), car delivered to seller conformed to modified contract; (4) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(b) and § 2-606(1)(a) to accept car that did not conform to purchase order, had delivery been tendered by seller; and (5) since car was identified to contract by purchase order and bill of sale which were in buyer's possession, title to car passed to buyer under UCC § 2-401(3)(a), even though seller retained vehicle. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

Since buyer, after reasonable opportunity to inspect truck, did not reject it, even though truck was 1963 model rather than 1962 model as represented, buyer accepted nonconformity of truck and could not recover for breach concerning model year. Bunch v. Signal Oil & Gas Co., 505 P.2d 41 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Buyer's continued use of 83 lengths of non-conforming pipe after defect had become apparent was clearly an acceptance. Fred J. Miller, Inc. v. Raymond Metal Prods. Co., 265 Md. 523, 290 A.2d 527 (1972).

5. Defective rejection.

In action by seller under UCC § 75-2-709(1) for price of defective lawnmower bags sold to defendant buyer, court held (1) that buyer had accepted bags (a) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(a) by conduct that signified to seller that buyer was accepting bags despite knowledge of their nonconformity, and (b) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(b) by conduct, such as continuing to try to sell bags and destruction of defective bags, that was inconsistent with effective rejection of bags; (2) that buyer did not effectively revoke acceptance of bags under UCC § 75-2-608(1) because (a) its acts of dominion over bags, including continuing efforts to sell them, were inconsistent with its claim of revocation of acceptance, and (b) buyer also did not comply with notice requirement of UCC § 75-2-608(2) for revocation of acceptance; (3) that seller's damages under UCC § 75-2-709(1)(b) for specially manufactured goods included damages for cost of materials, labor and overhead, administrative and sales expenses, and incidental damages; and (4) that although buyer satisfied burden of proof under UCC § 75-2-607(4) with regard to seller's breach of warranty, buyer's breach-of-warranty counterclaim was foreclosed by failure to give seller adequate notice of breach required by UCC § 75-2-607(3)(a) and Official Comment 4. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Contract for sale of pyrenone was enforceable under statute of frauds where (1) pyrenone was "received and accepted" by buyer under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), and (2) buyer's attempt to reject pyrenone three months later was not effective under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and § 2-602(1) (under circumstances of case, rejection three months after delivery was not attempted within reasonable time). Pride Lab., Inc. v. Sentinel Butte Farmers Elevator Co., 268 N.W.2d 474 (N.D. 1978).

Oral contracts for sale of lettuce were enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), notwithstanding they were not in writing, where seller transferred lettuce from its cooler to motor carrier for delivery for buyer; for purpose of satisfying UCC § 2-201(3)(c), lettuce was "received" by buyer when it was shipped in accordance with each invoice, and buyer would be deemed to have "accepted" lettuce, as defined in UCC § 2-606, since (1) transfer of lettuce to carrier was "an act inconsistent with the seller's ownership," and (2) buyer "failed to make an effective rejection" of lettuce after it was received. O'Day v. George Arakelian Farms, Inc., 24 Ariz. App. 578, 540 P.2d 197 (1975).

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

Where fuse manufacturers established that they had manufactured and delivered to prime government contractor fuses contracted for, that fuses as tendered had been accepted, and that contractor had refused to pay balances due thereon, and where there was no effective rejection of goods by contractor under UCC § 2-606(1)(b), nor any notification of breach in warranty of goods under § 2-607(3)(a), nor any effective revocation of acceptance under § 2-608(2), any defense or any "remedy"-that contractor might have had under UCC for nonacceptance of goods or for breach of their warranty or revocation of acceptance was predicated, as condition precedent, upon notification to sellers. However, letter from contractor to fuse manufacturers stating that contractor's cash flow had been severely interrupted due in part to quality problem on part of fuse manufacturers could not be construed to suggest either rejection of acceptance of fuses delivered, nor notification of breach of warranty, nor revocation of conformity, much less to constitute identification of particular contract, sale or transaction concerning which complaint was therein attempted by contractor. Lynx, Inc. v. Ordnance Prods., Inc., 273 Md. 1, 327 A.2d 502 (1974).

Buyer did not reject machine for processing credit card purchases and rescind contract therefor as required by UCC §§ 2-601, 2-602, 2-606 and was liable for contract price where evidence failed to support any improper operation of machine and any assurances by seller that it would remedy alleged defects, and where buyer did not use machine for 4 ½ months after delivery, and then for 2 months without rejecting or paying therefor. Stephens Indus., Inc. v. American Express Co., 471 S.W.2d 501 (Mo. Ct. App. 1971).

6. Acts inconsistent with seller's ownership.

The evidence was insufficient to show that purchasers of a used vehicle properly revoked acceptance of the vehicle in a manner sufficient to trigger damage entitlement pursuant to § 75-2-711, where the purchasers turned the vehicle over to the bank to which their financing documents were assigned, rather than returning the vehicle to the dealer from which they purchased it, the bank was not a party to the litigation, and the purchasers neither pled nor proved an agency relationship between the bank and the dealer; the purchasers' actions in declining to make the necessary payments and delivering the vehicle to the bank for sale with application of the sales proceeds to their benefit were contrary to any justifiable revocation of acceptance. Additionally, the purchasers' action in turning the vehicle over to the bank, and its subsequent sale, did not constitute notice of revocation, which is an essential element for recovery under § 75-2-711, since the record did not reflect that the dealer was aware of this transaction. Moreover, this action was inconsistent with the seller's ownership, and therefore could not constitute notice of revocation; such action confirmed acceptance under § 75-2-606(1)(c). Gast v. Rogers-Dingus Chevrolet, 585 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1991).

Applying UCC rules to a 2 party copier lease agreement, the lessee accepted the copier when it failed to make an effective rejection after having had a reasonable opportunity to inspect it. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

In action for purchase price of new automobile, where (1) buyer's acts in signing all necessary papers and taking delivery of car were so inconsistent with seller's ownership as to constitute acceptance under UCC § 2-606(1)(c), and (2) buyer had no right to revoke her acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(a), since she had accepted car without knowledge of any nonconformity, court held that seller's proof of sale and delivery of car at agreed price, together with buyer's admission that she took car, executed paper work connected with its sale, and then refused to pay purchase price, made out case that entitled seller to recover purchase price (stating that fact that fan belt broke two days after car's sale did not show such nonconformity as would allow buyer to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(b)). American Imports, Inc. v. G.E. Employees W. Region Fed. Credit Union, 37 N.C. App. 121, 245 S.E.2d 798 (1978).

Oral contracts for sale of lettuce were enforceable under UCC § 2-201(3)(c), notwithstanding they were not in writing, where seller transferred lettuce from its cooler to motor carrier for delivery for buyer; for purpose of satisfying UCC § 2-201(3)(c), lettuce was "received" by buyer when it was shipped in accordance with each invoice, and buyer would be deemed to have "accepted" lettuce, as defined in UCC § 2-606, since (1) transfer of lettuce to carrier was "an act inconsistent with the seller's ownership," and (2) buyer "failed to make an effective rejection" of lettuce after it was received. O'Day v. George Arakelian Farms, Inc., 24 Ariz. App. 578, 540 P.2d 197 (1975).

Seller of machinery was entitled to finding as to whether buyer accepted machinery, thus precluding rescission contract by buyer and recovery of money paid on account, where buyer claimed that it retained and used machinery in its business only upon seller's assurance that seller would correct any problems in connection with machines, but where, on other hand, seller claimed that buyer accepted machines unconditionally. Lenkay Sani Prods. Corp. v. Benitez, 47 A.D.2d 524 (2d Dep't 1975).

Evidence did not support position of buyer who claimed that she had been oversupplied by seller for some time with goods not ordered, that she had offered to return goods but had been refused, and that, therefore, she did not accept such goods, where, although buyer testified that she held goods allegedly not ordered for reshipment to seller, she could not identify them as having been shipped during disputed period and there was no evidence of what was done with items allegedly overshipped during that period, but it was reasonable assumption that if they were not held for reshipment they were offered for sale, which would appear to be act inconsistent with seller's ownership and constitute acceptance, and where, furthermore, evidence showed complaint of overshipment by seller for years preceding disputed period, during which time defendant had, however, paid and continued to pay for those goods. Phil Jacobs Co. v. Mifflin, 23 Ill. App. 3d 999, 320 N.E.2d 329 (5th Dist. 1974).

Fact that buyer of automobile kept it for more than 5 months and drove it over 3,000 miles constituted an acceptance of the vehicle. Green Chevrolet Co. v. Kemp, 241 Ark. 62, 406 S.W.2d 142 (1966).

A buyer, who with knowledge of the defect, decides to take a chance and uses the defective goods assumes all risks and cannot hold the seller liable. Safe-Carry Paper Prods. Co. v. Concrete Eng'g Co., 64 Lack. Jur. 53 (Pa. 1962).

7. —Ratification by seller.

Buyers of an ice cream freezer and refrigeration compressor unit by using the compressor unit to operate an air conditioner exercised dominion inconsistent with the seller's ownership, and seller by entering judgment for the unpaid balance ratified the sale as represented by the instalment sales contract, and since the seller never accepted or agreed to a rescission by the buyers, the buyers were deemed to have accepted the goods and were precluded from unilaterally asserting a rescission of the sales contract. F.W. Lang Co. v. Fleet, 193 Pa. Super. 365, 165 A.2d 258 (1960).

8. —Repair or modification.

Buyer of vinyl-laminating machine that did not operate properly was entitled under UCC § 2-606(1)(c) to rescission of purchase contract and return of money paid thereunder where buyer's use of machine after commencement of action, although substantial and not in mitigation of damages, was to make machine function and not for production purposes in buyer's business (rejecting seller's contention that if buyer's conduct over goods after commencement of action was substantial and not in mitigation of damages, such conduct as matter of law constituted act "inconsistent with seller's ownership" within meaning of UCC § 2-606(1)(c)). Distco Laminating, Inc. v. Union Tool Corp., 81 Mich. App. 612, 265 N.W.2d 768 (1978), appeal denied, 403 Mich. 848 (1978).

Buyer, notwithstanding protests as to defective operational condition of equipment, did not reject contract outright but accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(c) with reasonable expectation that defects would be corrected, where there was evidence, inter alia, that buyer himself worked on equipment to put it in proper condition and that he used some of machinery for his own purposes. Dehahn v. Innes, 356 A.2d 711 (Me. 1976).

Purchaser of nonconforming mobile home under installment sales contract rightfully rejected unit and notified seller of rejection within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-602, but purchaser's security interest in goods under UCC § 2-711 did not give him right to continued use of goods until security interest was satisfied; and where purchaser, instead of storing, reshipping, or reselling goods as provided by UCC § 2-604, moved into unit and corrected deficiencies, he accepted goods under UCC § 2-606 and became obligated to pay contract price under UCC § 2-607, retaining only his rights for damages under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715; although exclusion of expressed and implied warranties in dark print which was underlined complied with UCC § 2-316, purchaser could nevertheless recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 should trier of fact conclude that dealer made express warranties that mobile home would conform to sample or model shown purchaser on dealer's lot. Bowen v. Young, 507 S.W.2d 600, 67 A.L.R.3d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Repairing, correcting, and altering a purchased unit which is deemed "satisfactory" by the buyer is an indication of acceptance; buyer could not retain possession of the incinerator, use the equipment in its business for an extended period of time, and at the same time claim rejection. Brule C.E. & E., Inc. v. Pronto Foods Corp., 3 Ill. App. 3d 135, 278 N.E.2d 477 (1st Dist. 1971).

9. —Installation or incorporation.

Buyer was liable as matter of law for contract price of cast-iron pipes and other materials purchased for use in water-main construction project where buyer (1) accepted materials under UCC § 2-606(1)(c) by receiving them and installing them into the ground, (2) failed to reject materials within reasonable time after their delivery by seasonable notification to seller required by UCC § 2-602(1), (3) did not comply with duties under UCC § 2-603 as to any materials that buyer might rightfully have rejected, and (4) repaired all leaks in defective pipes shortly after their installation without requesting credit for such defects or revoking acceptance of such pipes under UCC § 2-608(2). Clow Corp. v. Metro Pipeline Co., 442 F. Supp. 583 (N.D. Ga. 1977).

Contractor's installation of kitchen units in dormitory was act inconsistent with seller's ownership, and at that time title to units passed to contractor, regardless of effect of contractor's failure to inspect and reject units for period of approximately 3 months after delivery. Cervitor Kitchens, Inc. v. Chapman, 82 Wash. 2d 673, 513 P.2d 25 (1973).

Buyer of brick, stone, and mill irons hauled some of each from seller's property to buyer's building site and incorporated them into his building; buyer further acted inconsistent with seller's ownership by selling some of excess materials at their original site; held, evidence was sufficient to support finding that there had been acceptance of all goods. Haken v. Scheffler, 24 Mich. App. 196, 180 N.W.2d 206 (1970).

10. —Sale to third party.

Lumber dealer accepted shipment of lumber under UCC § 2-606, as matter of law, even though he did not order shipment, where he took possession of lumber, put it into inventory in his lumberyard, offered it for sale to public and did, in fact, sell portions thereof, and where, moreover, dealer failed to effectively express dissatisfaction, made partial payment on lumber shipment, and never attempted to return or tender shipment back to seller. Pace v. Sagebrush Sales Co., 114 Ariz. 271, 560 P.2d 789 (1977).

Under Code provision indicating that acceptance of goods occurs when buyer does any act inconsistent with seller's ownership, such an act clearly occurred with respect to instalment contract when buyer sold first shipment to its customer. Gulf Chem. & Metallurgical Corp. v. Sylvan Chem. Corp., 122 N.J. Super. 499, 300 A.2d 878 (1973), aff'd, 126 N.J. Super. 261, 314 A.2d 73 (1973), certification denied, 64 N.J. 507, 317 A.2d 720 (1974).

A buyer of materials and supplies, for use in manufacturing rubber stamp handles, who processed the materials and at least attempted to sell the product to a third person, without a prior rejection of any of the materials, clearly accepted the materials by acts inconsistent with the seller's ownership. Sincavage v. Howells, 8 Pa. D. & C.2d 515 (1957).

11. Misrepresentations as affecting acceptance.

Seller's false representation that used airplane had passed a 100-hour inspection by a licensed mechanic and was airworthy was a material one, and where buyer's acceptance of the plane was in reliance upon such misrepresentation he was entitled to rescind or cancel the contract. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

12. Procedural matters.

Seller of machinery was entitled to finding as to whether buyer accepted machinery, thus precluding rescission of contract by buyer and recovery of money paid on account, where buyer claimed that it retained and used machinery in its business only upon seller's assurance that seller would correct any problems in connection with machines, but where, on other hand, seller claimed that buyer accepted machines unconditionally. Lenkay Sani Prods. Corp. v. Benitez, 47 A.D.2d 524 (2d Dep't 1975).

Whether buyer accepted or rejected cattle purchased for breeding purposes and whether buyer acted within reasonable time after delivery of cattle and inspection, which showed cattle to be infected with Brucellosis, were matters properly left for jury determination. Harding v. Grant City Sale Barn, Inc., 492 S.W.2d 99 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973).

Code provisions pertaining to manner and effect of rightful rejecting and acceptance of goods were inapplicable to action by seller of hog fence paneling to recover price of extra panels ordered by buyer who counterclaimed for damages for nonconformity between heavy-duty panels ordered and light-weight panels received, although evidence raised fact issue, particularly as to panels first received, under Code section providing for revocation of acceptance. Jones v. Atkins, 254 Ark. 472, 494 S.W.2d 448 (1973).

§ 75-2-607. Effect of acceptance; notice of breach; burden of establishing breach after acceptance; notice of claim or litigation to person answerable over.

(1) The buyer must pay at the contract rate for any goods accepted.

(2) Acceptance of goods by the buyer precludes rejection of the goods accepted and if made with knowledge of a nonconformity cannot be revoked because of it unless the acceptance was on the reasonable assumption that the nonconformity would be seasonably cured but acceptance does not of itself impair any other remedy provided by this chapter for nonconformity.

(3) Where a tender has been accepted

(a) the buyer must within a reasonable time after he discovers or should have discovered any breach notify the seller of breach or be barred from any remedy; and

(b) if the claim is one for infringement or the like (subsection (3) of Section 2-312) [Section 75-2-312(3)] and the buyer is sued as a result of such a breach he must so notify the seller within a reasonable time after he receives notice of the litigation or be barred from any remedy over for liability established by the litigation.

(4) The burden is on the buyer to establish any breach with respect to the goods accepted.

(5) Where the buyer is sued for breach of a warranty or other obligation for which his seller is answerable over

(a) he may give his seller written notice of the litigation. If the notice states that the seller may come in and defend and that if the seller does not do so he will be bound in any action against him by his buyer by any determination of fact common to the two (2) litigations, then unless the seller after seasonable receipt of the notice does come in and defend he is so bound.

(b) if the claim is one for infringement or the like (subsection (3) of Section 2-312) [Section 75-2-312(3)] the original seller may demand in writing that his buyer turn over to him control of the litigation including settlement or else be barred from any remedy over and if he also agrees to bear all expense and to satisfy any adverse judgment, then unless the buyer after seasonable receipt of the demand does turn over control the buyer is so barred.

(6) the provisions of subsections (3), (4) and (5) apply to any obligation of a buyer to hold the seller harmless against infringement or the like (subsection (3) of Section 2-312) [Section 75-2-312(3)].

A. In General.

1. Generally.

"Voucher to warranty" has deep roots in the common law and is codified, insofar as it relates to the law of sales involving "middlemen," by UCC § 2-607(5)(a). Vouching-in is a simple and expedient way for defendants who have a right over against another to avoid the necessity of relitigating in a second suit issues of liability to the plaintiff that were litigated in the first suit. Although it has the unique advantage of not requiring personal service of process, vouching-in does not alleviate the necessity of a second suit. It merely binds the vouchee to any determination of fact that is common to the two actions (holding, where buyer of defective gaskets sued manufacturer, manufacturer filed third-party complaint against supplier of materials, and trial court severed the two actions, that manufacturer had properly vouched in supplier and that supplier was therefore bound under UCC § 2-607(5)(a) by those determinations of fact that were common to the two suits, so as to be precluded from later denying existence of defects in materials used to manufacture the gaskets). Uniroyal, Inc. v. Chambers Gasket & Mfg. Co., 177 Ind. App. 508, 380 N.E.2d 571 (1978).

In action by livestock owner against feed company for breach of express warranty, there was sufficient evidence to support finding of express warranty based on alleged representations of defendant company where there was evidence that employees of company verbally stated that their feed mixture would cause two-pound weight gain per day on calves belonging to livestock owner; however, there was insufficient evidence to support finding that it was this breach of warranty and not combination of number of other factors which proximately caused calves' failure to gain weight as expected. Heil v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 301 Minn. 315, 223 N.W.2d 37 (1974).

A contract providing that all claims for defective goods shall be deemed waived unless presented within 8 days after receipt is manifestly unreasonable and will not be enforced where the defects are latent and could not be discovered until many months after receipt of the merchandise. Q. Vandenberg & Sons v. Siter, 204 Pa. Super. 392, 204 A.2d 494 (1964).

UCC § 2-607 does not apply to a transaction occurring prior to the effective date of the Code. Clarizo v. Spada Distrib. Co., 231 Or. 516, 373 P.2d 689 (1962).

The Uniform Commercial Code continues the well-established concept of mitigation of damages, applying it with respect to the acceptance of latently defective goods. Powell v. Scottdale Mach., Foundry & Constr. Co., 25 Fayette Legal J. 167 (Pa. 1962).

2. Payment at contract rate.

Defendant, domestic manufacturer of prestressed concrete, is obligated to pay "at contract rate" under UCC § 2-607 for all steel strand accepted from Dutch manufacturer since defendant failed to make any showing that strand tendered by plaintiff was in any way defective or that defendant notified plaintiff of non-conformity in tender at any time. Nederlandse Draadindustrie NDI B.V. v. Grand Pre-Stressed Corp., 466 F. Supp. 846 (E.D.N.Y. 1979), aff'd, 614 F.2d 1289 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

The Uniform Commercial Code incorporates, in UCC § 2-601, the "substantial performance" rule of the common law by giving the buyer the option of rejecting an entire shipment of goods if the goods fail in any respect to conform to the contract. In other words, even a technical breach of the contract will justify the buyer's rejection of the goods, with the result that perfection in performance on the part of the seller is required. However, in UCC §§ 2-606 and 2-607, the code makes it equally clear that if the buyer, instead of rejecting the goods, accepts them and thereafter fails to revoke his acceptance in accordance with the code's provisions, he must pay the purchase price of the goods, even though he may thereafter recover damages as provided in the code for breach of contract. Envirex, Inc. v. Ecological Recovery Assocs., 454 F. Supp. 1329 (M.D. Pa. 1978), aff'd, 601 F.2d 574 (3d Cir. Pa. 1979).

Buyer's failure to make payments on truck constituted unjustifiable breach of sale contract that entitled seller to full remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code and seller's security agreement, including the right to receive balance due on truck, where (1) buyer accepted truck and became obligated under UCC § 2-607(1) to pay contract price for it; (2) buyer used truck and did not at any time attempt to revoke his acceptance of it; and (3) buyer's only excuse for not making payments was that because county court clerk had not received truck's title papers from seller as required by state law, buyer could not get truck licensed for further use after vehicle's temporary license tags had expired (stating that statutes requiring seller to send title papers to county court clerk were revenue measures that were entirely distinct from provisions of Uniform Commercial Code that govern sales). Lexington Mack, Inc. v. Miller, 555 S.W.2d 249 (Ky. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-607(1), directed verdict against raiser of chickens for $46,391.28 was proper where evidence showed that raiser had accepted chicken feed worth such sum under contract in which seller agreed to furnish buyer with sufficient feed to raise 40,000 chickens during 26-week period. Ralston Purina Co. v. Hobson, 554 F.2d 725 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977).

Purchaser of nonconforming mobile home under installment sales contract rightfully rejected unit and notified seller of rejection within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-602, but purchaser's security interest in goods under UCC § 2-711 did not give him right to continued use of goods until security interest was satisfied; and where purchaser, instead of storing, reshipping, or reselling goods as provided by UCC § 2-604, moved into unit and corrected deficiencies, he accepted goods under UCC § 2-606 and became obligated to pay contract price under UCC § 2-607, retaining only his rights for damages under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715; although exclusion of expressed and implied warranties in dark print which was underlined complied with UCC § 2-316, purchaser could nevertheless recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 should trier of fact conclude that dealer made express warranties that mobile home would conform to sample or model shown purchaser on dealer's lot. Bowen v. Young, 507 S.W.2d 600, 67 A.L.R.3d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

A buyer is liable for the contract price where he has received the goods and has failed to prove or offered to prove nonacceptance, effective rejection, or revocation of acceptance within a reasonable time. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

3. Acceptance as precluding rejection.

The express language of UCC § 2-607(3)(a) mandates the giving of notice by the buyer, regardless of whether the buyer, or the seller, or both had actual knowledge of the breach. Standard Alliance Indus., Inc. v. Black Clawson Co., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 246, 587 F.2d 813 (6th Cir. Ohio 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 923, 99 S. Ct. 2032, 60 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1979).

In action by buyer of forging machine for seller's breach of both its express performance warranties and its repair-and-replacement-of-parts warranty, where (1) delivery and installation of machine took place in October, 1967, (2) buyer, on December 29, 1967, sent letter to seller which detailed machine's performance defects, (3) seller for five months attempted to repair machine, but stopped such efforts on June 21, 1968, (4) buyer filed suit for breach of seller's warranties on May 29, 1969, and (5) contract between parties contained one-year limitation period for bringing such suit, which was minimum period allowed by UCC § 2-725(1), court held (1) that under UCC § 2-725(2), cause of action for breach of warranty accrues on initial installation of product, regardless of whether it functions properly, as long as seller's warranty does not extend to future performance, (2) that in present case, seller's express performance warranties explicitly extended to future performance for period of one year, since seller had expressly warranted machine's performance for such period, (3) that as a result, buyer's cause of action on such warranties accrued, under UCC § 2-725(2), when buyer discovered, or should have discovered, that machine was defective, as long as such defects occurred during machine's warranty period, (4) that since parties' contract provided for one-year limitation period for bringing suit for breach of contract, and since buyer had discovered and reported machine's defects to seller by letter on December 29, 1967, buyer's failure to institute suit until May 29, 1969, which was more than one year after discovery of defects, caused such suit to be barred under UCC § 2-725(2), (5) that seller was not estopped to assert statute of limitations as defense because of its spending over five months in attempting to repair machine, since such repair efforts did not toll running of statute under Ohio law, which applied to case under UCC § 2-725(4), (6) that buyer's cause of action for seller's breach of its express warranty to repair or replace defective parts was not barred by contract's one-year period of limitations, since seller's repair efforts were terminated on June 21, 1968 and buyer's suit was filed within a year thereafter on May 29, 1969, and (7) that buyer's failure to notify seller of its breach of repair-or-replacement-of-defective-parts warranty, which was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), was fatal to buyer's cause of action on such warranty. Standard Alliance Indus., Inc. v. Black Clawson Co., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 246, 587 F.2d 813 (6th Cir. Ohio 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 923, 99 S. Ct. 2032, 60 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1979).

Buyer of silage and baled alfalfa, who in suit against seller for breach of express and implied warranties of merchantability of such commodities had failed to give seller reasonable notice of alleged breach required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), was obligated to pay seller contract price for alfalfa and silage accepted, instead of market price therefor. Cox v. Mesa Petro. Co., 572 S.W.2d 110 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Feb. 28, 1979).

In an action based on the breach of an implied warranty, notice of the breach from buyer to seller, as prescribed by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), is an essential element of the plaintiff's cause (action for breach of implied warranty in sale of intrauterine device wherein court held that buyer's delay of fifteen months in giving notice of breach to defendant manufacturer, which delay was caused in part by buyer's inability to ascertain who had manufactured the device, did not constitute, as a matter of law, giving of notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a) within reasonable time). Branden v. Gerbie, 62 Ill. App. 3d 138, 379 N.E.2d 7 (1st Dist. 1978).

Since the remote manufacturer's implied warranty is tendered along with the goods to the ultimate consumer by the consumer's immediate seller and notice to the immediate seller of the consumer's discovery of any breach, which is required of the consumer by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), inures in the ordinary course of events to the benefit of the remote manufacturer, the remote manufacturer may raise, as a defense to the maintenance of a suit by a subpurchaser for breach of an implied warranty, the subpurchaser's failure reasonably to notify his immediate seller of the breach, except in cases where the subpurchaser has actually given notice of the breach to the manufacturer. This rule eliminates placing on the unsophisticated consumer the duty to notify a party with whom he has not dealt (the remote manufacturer) and yet affords the remote manufacturer, whether sued alone or with others, the protection of the code, namely, the avoidance of being confronted with stale claims that prevent the marshaling of evidence for a defense. Goldstein v. G.D. Searle & Co., 62 Ill. App. 3d 344, 378 N.E.2d 1083 (1st Dist. 1978).

Where (1) seller sued to recover unpaid balance of purchase price of cinders purchased by buyer for installation in playground, (2) buyer counterclaimed for expenses incurred because seller delivered cinders of improper size, and (3) buyer also contended that seller had no right to "cure" the breach because situation involved a revocation of acceptance by buyer, court held (1) that while seller might not have right to cure nonconformity in revocation-of-acceptance situation, buyer by letter had expressly given seller opportunity to cure breach, (2) seller had not cured breach within meaning of UCC § 2-508(1) because seller refused to deduct cost of regrading replacement cinders from purchase price of cinders contracted for, and (3) buyer's counterclaim was erroneously denied by trial court on ground that seasonable demand by buyer for reimbursement was necessary in addition to notice of revocation of acceptance, since UCC §§ 2-607(3)(a) and 2-608(2) require only that buyer, on revoking acceptance, give notice of breach to seller which states that buyer is not accepting the goods. Moulden & Sons v. Osaka Landscaping & Nursery, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 194, 584 P.2d 968 (1978).

"Seller," as used in UCC § 2-607(3)(a), which provides for notification to seller "where a tender has been accepted," necessarily refers to only to the immediate seller. Hence, buyer is required to give notice of breach only to his immediate seller. Goldstein v. G.D. Searle & Co., 62 Ill. App. 3d 344, 378 N.E.2d 1083 (1st Dist. 1978).

In suit by consumer-subpurchaser against manufacturer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability in sale of oral contraceptive, where (1) plaintiff, who did not give notice of breach to her immediate seller, alleged that by filing suit, she gave reasonable notice of the breach to defendant manufacturer, and (2) evidence showed (a) that plaintiff had last ingested drug on October 21, 1967, (b) that suit had been filed on October 15, 1971 (within applicable four-year statute of limitations), and (c) that notice of adverse effects of using such drug, which constituted basis of breach of warranty alleged, had been received by manufacturer from sources other than plaintiff prior to October 21, 1967 (date plaintiff last used drug), court held, on remand of case, (1) that plaintiff had to have some knowledge of identity of causal agent before she could ascertain party to whom notice of breach should be directed, (2) that even an extended period of time preceding giving of notice to manufacturer could be viewed as reasonable where, as in present case, such notice did not come as surprise to manufacturer, (3) that in view of the foregoing facts, genuine issue of fact was presented as to reasonableness of plaintiff's notice to manufacturer, which notice court deemed to be required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (4) that summary judgment in the case was therefore inappropriate (remanding case for fact determination as to reasonableness of plaintiff's notice to manufacturer). Goldstein v. G.D. Searle & Co., 62 Ill. App. 3d 344, 378 N.E.2d 1083 (1st Dist. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), notice of a breach of an implied warranty must be given to both the immediate seller and the remote manufacturer. The statute provides such requirement by viewing the acceptance of each tender of the goods moving down the distributive chain as a distinct and separate transaction. In this manner, whether one or more of those upstream of the consumer in the distributive chain is ultimately sued for a breach of the implied warranty by the consumer, the code envisions that when the consumer's notice of the breach is given to the consumer's immediate seller, such person, in order to preserve any right of action that he may have for a breach of the implied warranty, will give notice to his immediate seller, and so on upstream, until the seminal point of the distributive chain is reached (observing that demise of privity in personal injury actions grounded on breach of implied warranty causes warranties to flow downstream with the goods through any number of intermediate sales, eventually inuring to benefit of ultimate consumer). Goldstein v. G.D. Searle & Co., 62 Ill. App. 3d 344, 378 N.E.2d 1083 (1st Dist. 1978).

Inspection clause contained in contract for manufacture, sale and delivery of railroad hopper cars did not bar manufacturer's liability for delivery of defective cars where clause provided that waiver of inspection by purchaser entitled manufacturer to perform its own inspection and such inspection would have constituted acceptance of railcars, where, in any event, provisions of contract neither expressly provided nor even implied that failure to exercise right of inspection constituted waiver of any other contractual remedy, and where purchaser notified manufacturer of faults or defects when they were first discovered and afforded manufacturer opportunity to verify and repair or replace faults or defects; under UCC §§ 2-607(2), when right to inspect arises after creation of contract, acceptance of goods, even with knowledge that they do not conform to contract, may preclude rejection but it does not impair any other remedy and, under UCC §§ 2-714(1), buyer's right to recover damages for goods that have been accepted but do not conform to contract was expressly reserved. Soo Line R.R. v. Fruehauf Corp., 547 F.2d 1365 (8th Cir. Minn. 1977).

Although buyer knew there was some "pan scale" in some of the 732 bags of sugar retained by buyer out of 800 bags delivered in two shipments, fact that seller accepted return of 68 bags of defective sugar was insufficient evidence that buyer had not accepted sugar prior to inspection and, thus, was insufficient to support exclusion of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-316. However, buyer's knowledge of defect (pan scale) gained through inspection of sugar that was used to process frozen food prevented buyer from recovering lost profits as consequential damage under UCC § 2-715. Furthermore, although buyer notified seller in November, 1969, of 68 defective bags, notice in May, 1971, that other sugar was defective was not made within commercially reasonable time under UCC § 2-607 where buyer used sugar promptly after delivery in November of 1969. Michigan Sugar Co. v. Jebavy Sorenson Orchard Co., 66 Mich. App. 642, 239 N.W.2d 693, 93 A.L.R.3d 357 (1976).

4. —Reasonable expectation of repair.

In suit by consumer-subpurchaser against manufacturer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability in sale of oral contraceptive, where (1) plaintiff, who did not give notice of breach to her immediate seller, alleged that by filing suit, she gave reasonable notice of the breach to defendant manufacturer, and (2) evidence showed (a) that plaintiff had last ingested drug on October 21, 1967, (b) that suit had been filed on October 15, 1971 (within applicable four-year statute of limitations), and (c) that notice of adverse effects of using such drug, which constituted basis of breach of warranty alleged, had been received by manufacturer from sources other than plaintiff prior to October 21, 1967 (date plaintiff last used drug), court held, on remand of case, (1) that plaintiff had to have some knowledge of identity of causal agent before she could ascertain party to whom notice of breach should be directed, (2) that even an extended period of time preceding giving of notice to manufacturer could be viewed as reasonable where, as in present case, such notice did not come as surprise to manufacturer, (3) that in view of the foregoing facts, genuine issue of fact was presented as to reasonableness of plaintiff's notice to manufacturer, which notice court deemed to be required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (4) that summary judgment in the case was therefore inappropriate (remanding case for fact determination as to reasonableness of plaintiff's notice to manufacturer). Goldstein v. G.D. Searle & Co., 62 Ill. App. 3d 344, 378 N.E.2d 1083 (1st Dist. 1978).

Seller of machinery was entitled to finding as to whether buyer accepted machinery, thus precluding rescission of contract by buyer and recovery of money paid on account, where buyer claimed that it retained and used machinery in its business only upon seller's assurance that seller would correct any problems in connection with machines, but where, on other hand, seller claimed that buyer accepted machines unconditionally. Lenkay Sani Prods. Corp. v. Benitez, 47 A.D.2d 524 (2d Dep't 1975).

5. —Acceptance as affecting other remedies.

In an action based on the breach of an implied warranty, notice of the breach from buyer to seller, as prescribed by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), is an essential element of the plaintiff's cause (action for breach of implied warranty in sale of intrauterine device wherein court held that buyer's delay of fifteen months in giving notice of breach to defendant manufacturer, which delay was caused in part by buyer's inability to ascertain who had manufactured the device, did not constitute, as a matter of law, giving of notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a) within reasonable time). Branden v. Gerbie, 62 Ill. App. 3d 138, 379 N.E.2d 7 (1st Dist. 1978).

In action by contractor against supplier of concrete based on supplier's furnishing of substandard strength concrete, contractor was entitled to recover, inter alia, cost of tests performed to determine if slab containing substandard concrete could still be used as floor of building, even though buyer accepted concrete within meaning of UCC § 2-607, where, after performing customary cylinder tests to determine general quality, buyer had no reasonable way to discover insufficiency of compression strengths and cost of tests to determine whether concrete could still be used was reasonable incidental expense within meaning of UCC § 2-715. S.M. Wilson & Co. v. Reeves Red-E-Mix Concrete, Inc., 39 Ill. App. 3d 353, 350 N.E.2d 321 (5th Dist. 1976).

Evidence was sufficient to support finding that seller breached implied warranty that feed was of merchantable quality and reasonably fit for commercial feeding of dairy cattle, where, inter alia, veterinarian testified that cows often backed away from quality of mix which defendant sold plaintiff; although buyer was obligated under UCC § 2-607 to pay for goods accepted at a contract rate, he was not barred thereby from recovering damages resulting from defects in such goods. Jorritsma v. Farmers' Feed & Supply Co., 272 Or. 499, 538 P.2d 61 (1975).

Buyer of combine that was repossessed by seller and sold at public sale after buyer defaulted on payments was not precluded from recovering damages for breach of warranty from seller notwithstanding buyer did not revoke his acceptance (ovrlg Hudspeth Motors, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 238 Ark 410, 382 SW2d 191, 2 UCCRS 273, to extent it holds that buyer was precluded from recovering damages for breach of warranty where there was no rejection or revocation by buyer). Stimson Tractor Co. v. Heflin, 257 Ark. 263, 516 S.W.2d 379 (1974).

Under contract for delivery and installation of pin spotter machines in bowling alley, where buyers did not reject defective, nonconforming pin spotters, but instead accepted them notwithstanding their defects, buyers were not required to give seller notice of particular defects as required by UCC § 2-605(1) in order to maintain action for breach of warranty, and letter from buyers' attorney to seller's sister, after seller's death, stating that pin spotters were not installed within meaning of contract, that pin spotters needed repairs although contract included guaranty as to quality and performance of equipment, and that buyers were keeping record of their expenses so that they could substantiate claim for any loss which might be sustained, was sufficient notice under UCC § 2-607(3) to preserve buyers' rights; furthermore, buyers did not waive their rights to warranty recovery by refusing to permit seller to cure defects in pin spotters under UCC § 2-508 since they did not reject nonconforming goods but accepted them. Bonebrake v. Cox, 499 F.2d 951 (8th Cir. Iowa 1974).

Since buyer, after reasonable opportunity to inspect truck, did not reject it, even though truck was 1953 model rather than 1962 model as represented, buyer accepted nonconformity of truck and could not recover for breach concerning model year. Bunch v. Signal Oil & Gas Co., 505 P.2d 41 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Purchaser did not waive right of damages for late delivery, by acceptance of such late deliveries. Beacon Plastic & Metal Prods., Inc. v. Corn Prods. Co., 57 Misc. 2d 634 (1968).

Subsection (2) does not impair any other remedy provided by this Article for non-conformity of goods, and a city which alleged that traffic signal equipment purchased by it, and accepted by reason of its use, has a cause of action for damages resulting from failure of the equipment to meet specifications. Marbelite Co. v. Philadelphia, 40 Pa. D. & C.2d 347 (1966), aff'd, 208 Pa. Super. 256, 222 A.2d 443 (1966).

Where subdivision (3) of this section speaks of a "tender," it means a tender of goods, and a tender being an offer, if it is accepted the buyer is required to notify the seller of any breach. Tomczuk v. Town of Cheshire, 26 Conn. Supp. 219, 217 A.2d 71 (1965).

B. Buyer's Claim of Breach.

6. In general.

The trial court improperly instructed the jury concerning a franchisor's alleged breach of implied warranty of merchantability, where such instruction precluded the jury from making an independent factual determination of whether the franchisee had properly notified the franchisor of alleged defects in its products so as to preserve the franchisee's claim that the franchisor breached implied warranties of merchantability. Carter Equip. Co. v. John Deere Indus. Equip. Co., 681 F.2d 386 (5th Cir. 1982).

In suit by buyer under Texas Deceptive Trade Practices Act for treble damages for seller's alleged breach of implied warranty in making repairs on new Volvo automobile that buyer had purchased from seller, which vehicle had oil leak that damaged its clutch allegedly because of seller's failure to repair leak satisfactorily, trial court erred in holding that UCC § 2-607(3)(a), providing for notice to seller of defects in accepted goods and allowing seller opportunity to cure such defects, did not apply to case. Under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), where evidence showed that plaintiff's vehicle again began to leak oil six months after seller had last repaired vehicle's earlier leaks and that buyer did not notify seller of reoccurrence of leaking problem and give seller opportunity to repair it, buyer was barred from recovering for seller's alleged breach of implied warranty that its repair service was of customary quality within automobile repair business. Import Motors, Inc. v. Matthews, 557 S.W.2d 807 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Mar. 22, 1978).

In action by feed company on installment sales contracts and security agreements providing for loan to enable defendant to purchase two hog-feeder houses from plaintiff's alleged agent, where houses were defective because they caused pigs placed therein for fattening to become sick and to die, and where plaintiff claimed that it merely financed purchase of such houses and did not sell them to defendant, (1) evidence supported finding that plaintiff's alleged agent was its agent in fact and that plaintiff was bound by agent's acts, including agent's sale of hog houses to defendant; (2) fact that plaintiff acted as financing agency in defendant's purchase of such houses did not preclude finding that plaintiff was also seller of such houses; (3) houses were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1); (4) defendant, by affirmative defense incorporated by reference in counterclaim, gave plaintiff notice of breach of implied warranty of fitness of goods for particular purpose, which notice was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (5) whether such implied warranty of fitness, which was in force at time of sale, was breached by plaintiff was question of fact to be determined by trial court on remand of case. Thompson Farms, Inc. v. Corno Feed Prods., 173 Ind. App. 682, 366 N.E.2d 3, 4 A.L.R.4th 58 (1977).

Where buyer purchased truck scale and seller constructed pit and installed scale therein, buyer in suit for defective construction of pit and installation of scale was not required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a) to give seller notice of alleged defects as condition precedent to bringing suit, since suit was based not on sale of scale but on contractual provision for performance of services to which Uniform Commercial Code did not apply. Dixie Lime & Stone Co. v. Wiggins Scale Co., 144 Ga. App. 145, 240 S.E.2d 323 (1977).

Where fuse manufacturers established that they had manufactured and delivered to prime government contractor fuses contracted for, that fuses as tendered had been accepted, and that contractor had refused to pay balances due thereon, and where there was no effective rejection of goods by contractor under UCC § 2-606(1)(b), nor any notification of breach in warranty of goods under § 2-607(3)(a), nor any effective revocation of acceptance under § 2-608(2), any defense-or any "remedy"-that contractor might have had under UCC for nonacceptance of goods or for breach of their warranty or revocation of acceptance was predicated, as condition precedent, upon notification to sellers. However, letter from contractor to fuse manufacturers stating that contractor's cash flow had been severely interrupted due in part to quality problem on part of fuse manufacturers could not be construed to suggest either rejection of acceptance of fuses delivered, nor notification of breach of warranty, nor revocation of conformity, much less to constitute identification of particular contract, sale or transaction concerning which complaint was therein attempted by contractor. Lynx, Inc. v. Ordnance Prods., Inc., 273 Md. 1, 327 A.2d 502 (1974).

Notice requirement of Code § 2-607(3)(a) is applicable only to immediate sellers and has no application to remote seller or manufacturer. Hickman v. Bross, 58 Pa. D. & C.2d 137 (1972).

The provisions of the instant section relative to notice of breach of warranty are comparable to those contained in former Sales Act provision relating to acceptance of goods by buyer as affecting seller's liability on warranty. Sullivan v. H.P. Hood & Sons, 341 Mass. 216, 168 N.E.2d 80 (1960).

7. Persons required to give notice.

UCC § 2-607 requires only "buyer" to notify seller of breach and UCC § 2-103 clearly defines "buyer" so as to exclude third party beneficiaries; consequently, where automobile body repairman was injured as result of using defective body alignment clamp manufactured by defendant and sold to repairman's employer, repairman's breach of warranty claim as third party beneficiary of warranties under UCC § 2-318, was not barred by his failure to notify seller of breach prior to filing suit, notwithstanding repairman dealt directly with defendant's salesman and requested his employer to buy clamps. Mattos, Inc. v. Hash, 279 Md. 371, 368 A.2d 993 (1977).

In action against manufacturer of birth control pills and association from whom pills were purchased arising when plaintiff suffered stroke, lack of privity between plaintiff and manufacturer under UCC § 2-318 was of no consequence and 4 year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725 governed; birth control association which gave advice and dispensed birth control pills was engaged in sale of goods as required by Code and plaintiff's failure to allege that pills did not prevent contraception would not bar recovery on theory of breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; however, under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), plaintiff was required to notify association of alleged breach of implied warranty. Berry v. G.D. Searle & Co., 56 Ill. 2d 548, 309 N.E.2d 550, 70 A.L.R.3d 304 (1974).

Notice provisions of Code § 2-607(3)(a) do not apply to third party beneficiary, under § 2-318, for as to third party there had been no tender of the goods by seller and no acceptance by third party. Chaffin v. Atlanta Coca Cola Bottling Co., 127 Ga. App. 619, 194 S.E.2d 513 (1972).

Class action for breach of warranty was not precluded by fact that each class member might be required ultimately to satisfy notice requirement of § 2-607. Metowski v. Traid Corp., 28 Cal. App. 3d 332 (3d Dist. 1972).

Buyer of rifle need not give seller notification of injury in order to make submissible case on issue of strict liability. McLain v. Hodge, 474 S.W.2d 772 (Tex. Civ. App. 1971), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 19, 1972).

Where the child of a farm employee is injured there is no requirement that notice of breach of warranty be given the manufacturer as the manufacturer could not possibly be prejudiced by the absence of such notice. Bengford v. Carlem Corp., 156 N.W.2d 855 (Iowa 1968).

Notice now required only of the buyer under this section need not be given by anyone claiming an extended warranty under § 2-318 of this chapter. Menard v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 22 Mass. App. Dec. 170 (1961).

8. Sufficiency of notice.

Lawnmower manufacturer did not sufficiently notify manufacturer of grass catcher bags of breach of warranties, where notification consisted solely of several vague references to problems with product, return of, at most, 3 bags, and warranty claim of $64.40, and where, at same time, lawnmower manufacturer's president stated that he anticipated taking delivery of all bags in future when problems unrelated to defects were resolved. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

In in rem action in admiralty involving counterclaims by seller and buyer arising from breaches of contract to sell flour, (1) seller breached implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), and also federal adulterated-food statute, as to one cargo of flour which was infested with insects when it arrived at warehouse prior to being loaded on ship, (2) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject all of such cargo and therefore was not liable for its purchase price or any consequential damages, (3) seller also breached implied warranty of merchantability with respect to two other cargoes of flour, and since buyer had paid for such flour and had ultimately accepted it, buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-606(1)(a), (4) buyer was not barred from claiming damages for such nonconforming cargoes by failure to give notice of nonconformity by registered mail, since buyer's warning to seller of buyer's dissatisfaction with cargoes constituted adequate notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (5) under UCC § 2-714(2), although there was no evidence as to value of such cargoes at time and place of their acceptance (Mobile, Alabama), buyer was entitled to damages for difference between prices for good and infested flour in Bolivia, South America, plus damages for expenses incurred because of flour's infestation, since buyer had accepted such flour after it had been loaded on ships that transported it to Bolivia and had had no reasonable opportunity to inspect it before it was loaded. T.J. Stevenson & Co. v.

81,193 Bags of Flour, 449 F. Supp. 84 (S.D. Ala. 1976), rev'd on other grounds, 629 F.2d 338 (5th Cir. Ala. 1980), reh'g denied, 651 F.2d 779 (5th Cir. Ala. 1981).

UCC § 2-607(3), requiring that the buyer, within a reasonable time after discovering the breach, must notify the seller of the breach or be barred from any remedy, is designed to defeat commercial bad faith and is not intended to deprive a good-faith consumer of his remedy. Under UCC § 2-607(3), the contents of the buyer's notification to the seller need merely be sufficient to let the seller know that the transaction is still troublesome and must be watched. There is no reason to require that the notification must include a clear statement of all of the objections that will be relied on by the buyer. Carlson v. Rysavy, 262 N.W.2d 27 (S.D. 1978).

Buyer who told seller that certain pipes delivered to buyer for use in water-main extension project appeared to be unusually corroded, but who did not request credit for such defective pipes or inform seller that buyer considered seller to be in breach of contract for purchase of pipes, did not give seller effective notice of alleged breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and thus was barred as matter of law from asserting any remedy, including counterclaim for expenses incurred in testing and repairing leaks in defective pipes. Clow Corp. v. Metro Pipeline Co., 442 F. Supp. 583 (N.D. Ga. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-607(3)(a) and Official Comment 4, the contents of the buyer's notification to the seller of the alleged breach of contract need merely be sufficient to let the seller know that the transaction is still troublesome and must be watched. The notification, which saves the buyer's rights, does not have to include a clear statement of all the objections that the buyer will rely on. Clow Corp. v. Metro Pipeline Co., 442 F. Supp. 583 (N.D. Ga. 1977).

In action by seller for purchase price of coal, buyer's counterclaim based on seller's alleged breach of express warranty and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness of coal for particular purpose could not be sustained where (1) evidence did not show that seller had created express warranty under UCC § 2-

313(1)(c) by showing buyer samples and analyses of coal's quality, but revealed instead that such samples and analyses were shown to buyer solely for his information; (2) coal delivered by seller was fit for ordinary purpose for which it was used, was burned as fuel by buyer's customers, and thus complied with seller's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1); (3) implied warranty of fitness of coal for particular purpose did not arise under UCC § 2-315, since buyer did not rely on seller's skill and judgment in furnishing coal suitable for buyer's customers; and (4) even assuming that seller had breached such express and implied warranties as buyer contended, buyer still could not recover on counterclaim because he did not give seller adequate notice of alleged breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and such breach also was not proximate cause of damages buyer allegedly sustained. Kopper Glo Fuel, Inc. v. Island Lake Coal Co., 436 F. Supp. 91 (E.D. Tenn. 1977).

In action by airline against airplane manufacturer for damages resulting from delay in delivery of airplanes purchased by airline, UCC § 2-607(3)(a) required the airline to give notice to the manufacturer of delays claimed as breach of contract; although notice need not set forth specific claim for damages or assertion of legal right, question whether notice given by airline was sufficient within test of "commercial good faith" was one for jury where correspondence between parties was ambiguous and airline continued to negotiate new, and to amend old, contracts with manufacturer during period of alleged delays, particularly since merchants are held to a higher standard of good faith than ordinary consumers. Eastern Air Lines v. McDonnell Douglas Corp., 532 F.2d 957 (5th Cir. Fla. 1976).

Under contract for delivery and installation of pin spotter machines in bowling alley, where buyers did not reject defective, nonconforming pin spotters, but instead accepted them notwithstanding their defects, buyers were not required to give seller notice of particular defects as required by UCC § 2-605(1) in order to maintain action for breach of warranty, and letter from buyers' attorney to seller's sister, after seller's death, stating that pin spotters were not installed within meaning of contract, that pin spotters needed repairs although contract included guaranty as to quality and performance of equipment, and that buyers were keeping record of their expenses so that they could substantiate claim for any loss which might be sustained, was sufficient notice under UCC § 2-607(3) to preserve buyers' rights; furthermore, buyers did not waive their rights to warranty recovery by refusing to permit seller to cure defects in pin spotters under UCC § 2-508 since they did not reject nonconforming goods but accepted them. Bonebrake v. Cox, 499 F.2d 951 (8th Cir. Iowa 1974).

Notice given prior to delivery that late delivery would be considered breach of contract was sufficient to preserve buyer's remedies and second notice after acceptance of delivery was not required under UCC § 2-607. MacGregor v. McReki, Inc., 30 Colo. App. 196, 494 P.2d 1297 (1971).

Where seller refused to acknowledge buyer's revocation of acceptance of used automobile, and buyer then kept automobile, used and maintained it, and made payments of financing agreement to bank, buyer failed to revoke his acceptance properly, was in the position of one who had accepted the goods, and had through his notification of revocation of acceptance given seller sufficient and timely notification of breach of warranty (automobile warranty book showed 14000 more miles than car's odometer). Fecik v. Capindale, 54 Pa. D. & C.2d 701 (1971).

In view of the Uniform Laws comment to the instant section indicating that the requirements as to the notice of breach under the instant section are intended to be less rigorous than those required by § 38 of the former Sales Act, at least as applied to a household purchaser as distinguished from a "merchant buyer", a notice given on behalf of a retail consumer alleging injury to the consumer from food purchased at a retail store was not insufficient because it did not set forth the date of the purchase of the food, where the notice did set forth the food purchased by its brand name and the date of the injury, because such a notice is only required to alert the seller to a claim of breach and thus to lead to settlement through negotiation, and because, once the seller is so altered, may seek further information as to circumstances which he may wish to know about. Nugent v. Popular Mkts., Inc., 353 Mass. 45, 228 N.E.2d 91 (1967).

It is manifest from the comment to the Code that the notice of breach required by UCC Sec 2-607 was intended to be less rigorous than that required by Sec 38 of the Sales Act at least so far as applied to a household purchaser rather than a "merchant buyer." Nugent v. Popular Mkts., Inc., 353 Mass. 45, 228 N.E.2d 91 (1967).

For a case involving the alleged explosion of a bottle of ginger ale purchased by the plaintiff from the defendant retailer in which it was held that the notice given to the retailer was adequate under (3)(a) of the instant section, and in which it was held that there was no variance in that the declaration alleged that the bottle contained soda while the notice referred to both ginger ale and soda since ginger ale is carbonated and is a soda, see Manfredi v. James C. Fettes, Inc., 352 Mass. 775, 226 N.E.2d 365 (1967).

Poultry farmer's regularly submitted reports of egg production obtained from experimental flocks of chickens purchased from seller constituted timely and sufficient notice of breach of seller's warranty that the experimental chickens would average "as good or better" in egg production than farmer's control flock. Babcock Poultry Farm, Inc. v. Shook, 204 Pa. Super. 141, 203 A.2d 399 (1964).

In Clarizo v. Spada Distributing Co. (1962) 231 Or 516, 373 P.2d 689, the court stated that while the Sales Act § 49 was construed to require that the buyer notify the seller not only of the breach of warranty but also that he intended to claim damages for such breach, "a different interpretation is recommended for a similar provision in the Uniform Commercial Code." Clarizo v. Spada Distrib. Co., 231 Or. 516, 373 P.2d 689 (1962).

A notice which does not give the date of sale and from which it cannot be inferred that a sale of the product as to which a breach of warranty is claimed was made by the defendant is insufficient under the provisions of this section. Menard v. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co., 22 Mass. App. Dec. 170 (1961).

The institution of proceedings before an alderman for breach of warranty did not constitute sufficient notice to the seller of the breach, since by beginning the action the buyers were exercising a remedy rather than giving notice, and hence a complaint not alleging notice of the breach and the time of such notice was demurrable. Solomon & Son v. Thomas, 45 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 269 (Pa. 1955).

9. —Oral notice.

Purpose of notice required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a) is not to enable buyer to claim damages or pursue any other remedy, but to let seller know that transaction is still troublesome and must be watched. Such notice may be given in any manner or form, including oral communications such as phone calls, that is sufficient to apprise seller that there are problems with the transaction. Oregon Lumber Co. v. Dwyer Overseas Timber Prods. Co., 280 Or. 437, 571 P.2d 884 (1977).

Word "notify" as used in UCC § 2-607(3)(a) encompasses proper oral notification of any breach; thus, buyer of camper was not required to give seller written notice of breach before bringing action for breach of warranty, and timely oral notice by buyer to effect that seat in camper gave way due to faulty construction and that buyer suffered injuries as result, was sufficient to inform seller of breach and its possible ramifications. Page v. Camper City & Mobile Home Sales, 292 Ala. 562, 297 So. 2d 810 (1974).

In action for injuries sustained by purchaser of facial cosmetic cream, notice of breach of warranty was not sufficient, where buyer's telephone call to defendant seller's store complaining of the effect of her use of cream could not be said to have alerted seller to claim of breach and thus have opened way for normal settlement through negotiations. Ford v. Barnard, Sumner & Putnam Co., 1 Mass. App. Ct. 192, 294 N.E.2d 467 (1973).

In breach of warranty action by distributor of carbon dioxide against brewer which sold its surplus carbon dioxide to distributor, telephone call to one of brewer's foremen made within week of time distributor learned of defective quality of carbon dioxide and informing brewer that no further pick-ups would be made until problem had been resolved was sufficient and timely notice of alleged breach under Code. Rock Creek Ginger Ale Co. v. Thermice Corp., 352 F. Supp. 522 (D.D.C. 1971).

10. —Constructive notice.

By having car towed to dealer's place of business, and by informing its employees that car was again in need of major repair, thus clearly implying that it could not be operated in safe manner until such repairs were completed, buyer of used car gave sufficient notice to dealer that its implied warranties had been breached. Overland Bond & Inv. Corp. v. Howard, 9 Ill. App. 3d 348, 292 N.E.2d 168 (1st Dist. 1972).

Evidence that seller's representatives had participated in attempts to make helicopter perform in an expected manner established that the seller had notice of breach of implied warranty of fitness. Boeing Airplane Co. v. O'Malley, 329 F.2d 585 (8th Cir. Minn. 1964).

11. Timeliness of notice.

In action by seller under UCC § 75-2-709(1) for price of defective lawnmower bags sold to defendant buyer, court held (1) that buyer had accepted bags (a) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(a) by conduct that signified to seller that buyer was accepting bags despite knowledge of their nonconformity, and (b) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(b) by conduct, such as continuing to try to sell bags and destruction of defective bags, that was inconsistent with effective rejection of bags; (2) that buyer did not effectively revoke acceptance of bags under UCC § 75-2-608(1) because (a) its acts of dominion over bags, including continuing efforts to sell them, were inconsistent with its claim of revocation of acceptance, and (b) buyer also did not comply with notice requirement of UCC § 75-2-608(2) for revocation of acceptance; (3) that seller's damages under UCC § 75-2-709(1)(b) for specially manufactured goods included damages for cost of materials, labor and overhead, administrative and sales expenses, and incidental damages; and (4) that although buyer satisfied burden of proof under UCC § 75-2-607(4) with regard to seller's breach of warranty, buyer's breach-of-warranty

counterclaim was foreclosed by failure to give seller adequate notice of breach required by UCC § 75-2-607(3)(a) and Official Comment 4. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Notice of alleged breach of warranty attaching to birth control device, which was given more than 30 months after plaintiff's delivery of stillborn baby, did not as matter of law satisfy requirement of UCC § 2-607(3)(a). Wagmeister v. A.H. Robins Co., 64 Ill. App. 3d 964, 382 N.E.2d 23 (1st Dist. 1978).

Even adopting lessee's contention that truck-rental-and service contract, which provided that lessee would purchase rented trucks on cancellation of contract within first three years of contract's operation, was actually a sale that was subject to provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, lessee's reliance on Uniform Commercial Code remedies was misplaced where evidence did not show proper and timely rejection of the goods under either UCC § 2-607(2) and (3)(a) or in the manner required by the contract itself. Furthermore, since lessee's defenses, in action for deficiency arising out of lessee's refusal to purchase rented trucks, related solely to alleged inadequacy of services provided by lessor and not to trucks themselves, and since remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code apply only to sale of goods and not to sale of services (see UCC § 2-102), lessee could not avail itself of UCC remedies relating to nonconforming goods. Pepsico Truck Rental, Inc. v. Eastern Foods, Inc., 145 Ga. App. 410, 243 S.E.2d 662 (1978).

In action arising out of sale of sporting goods business, sale of inventory as part of transaction amounted to sale of "goods" under UCC 2-105(1) and UCC § 2-607(3)(a) requirement that buyer must within reasonable time notify seller of breach, governed buyers claim, made 14 months after sale, that seller had fraudulently overstated inventory. Jarstad v. Tacoma Outdoor Recreation, Inc., 10 Wash. App. 551, 519 P.2d 278 (1974), review denied, 83 Wash. 2d 1014 (1974).

In action by seller of mobile home against purchaser for balance of purchase price, purchaser did not fail to notify seller of deficiencies in mobile home where seller was notified from very beginning of certain of deficiencies and of others as they were found in connecting utilities to mobile home. Holiday Homes, Inc. v. Bragg, 132 Ga. App. 594, 208 S.E.2d 608 (1974).

Breach of warranty action commenced in 1965 was barred neither by provisions of UCC § 2-607, subd 3, nor by former Personal Property Law § 130, where wholesaler notified buyer immediately upon discovering that hand cream purchased in 1961 and 1962 had liquefied, and where wholesaler had no reason earlier to believe that hand cream, sold in solid form, would liquefy. Alris, Inc. v. Gojer, Inc., 75 Misc. 2d 962 (1973).

In breach of warranty action against breeding service company, jury was justified in finding that proper notice of breach was given when rancher found he had only 7 percent calf crop in spring, rather than some 10 months earlier when he found that clean-up bull which had been sent in to cover those cows where artificial insemination did not take was overworked. Waddell v. American Breeders Serv., Inc., 161 Mont. 221, 505 P.2d 417, 61 A.L.R.3d 801 (1973).

Where defendant seller contracted with plaintiff buyer to supply sleeve bearings impregnated with specified oil in accord with government specifications for use in manufacture of bomb fuses, but instead supplied bearings coated with non-conforming oil, and where, although bearings coated with non-conforming oil were visibly different from conforming bearings, buyer used non-conforming bearings to manufacture two lots of bomb fuses which were discovered to be defective as result of use of such bearings, buyer gave timely notice of defect under UCC § 2-607(3)(a) when it gave notice on day it discovered defect, although this was three weeks after it had received bearings. General Instrument Corp., F.W. Sickles Div. v. Pennsylvania Pressed Metals, Inc., 366 F. Supp. 139 (M.D. Pa. 1973), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1051 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1052 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974).

Lessee of television broadcasting equipment which used equipment for more than one year before entering novation contract and making substantial payments on revised lease lost any express or implied warranty rights it might have possessed by accepting goods and by failing to give lessor notification of breach of warranty within reasonable time. KLPR TV, Inc. v. Visual Elecs. Corp., 465 F.2d 1382 (8th Cir. Ark. 1972).

Defense that goods did not meet warranted sample may be asserted only if buyer within reasonable time after discovery of defect notifies seller, notwithstanding acceptance. Vitromar Piece Dye Works v. Lawrence of London, Ltd., 119 Ill. App. 2d 301, 256 N.E.2d 135 (1st Dist. 1969).

Notice of breach of contract for sale of goods must be given within reasonable time after goods are received and accepted by buyer; notice requires no formality and is adequate if it merely informs seller that transaction is claimed to involve breach and thus opens way for normal settlement through negotiation. Warren's Kiddie Shoppe, Inc. v. Casual Slacks, Inc., 120 Ga. App. 578, 171 S.E.2d 643 (1969).

Where a sales contract expressly creates an unlimited express warranty of merchantability which in a separate clause purports to indirectly modify the warranty without expressly mentioning the word merchantability, the language creating the unlimited express warranty must prevail over the time limitation insofar as the latter modifies the warranty, and the express warranty of merchantability includes latent shading defects and defendants may claim for such defects not reasonably discoverable within the time limits established by the contract if plaintiff was notified of these defects within a reasonable time after they were or should have been discovered. Wilson Trading Corp. v. David Ferguson, Ltd., 23 N.Y.2d 398, 244 N.E.2d 685 (1968).

Notice of any breach of warranty of property sold preserves the buyer's remedy of damages if given within a reasonable time after the breach was or should have been discovered. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

The buyer must give notice of breach of warranty within a reasonable time. Avant Garde, Inc. v. Armtex, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 949 (1967, NY Sup).

Whether notice is given within a reasonable time depends upon all the circumstances of the case and not merely the lapse of time. Downey v. Mahoney, 25 Mass. App. Dec. 196 (1962).

12. —Wholesale and retail sales distinguished.

Prescription of timely notice under Code § 2-607 is to be applied, if at all, differently in commercial and retail sales situations; and notice requirement did not apply in breach of warranty action for personal injuries sustained by user of oral contraceptives. Fischer v. Mead Johnson Lab., 41 A.D.2d 737 (2d Dep't 1973).

The term "his seller" in paragraph (a) of subdivision (5) of this section refers to the person who made the immediate sale to one who is his buyer, and in so providing the legislature intended to make a distinction between the manufacture as a seller to a retailer as buyer, and the retailer as a seller to the public as buyer. Tomczuk v. Town of Cheshire, 26 Conn. Supp. 219, 217 A.2d 71 (1965).

The time for giving notice of a breach of warranty is to be deemed extended in the case of notice from a retail consumer. Pritchard v. Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., 295 F.2d 292 (3d Cir. Pa. 1961).

13. —Agreement of parties.

Notwithstanding contract specified that buyer had thirty days to inspect fabricated pipe, which constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105, trial court erred in holding buyer's performance bond liable by reason of buyer's failure to reject allegedly defective pipe within thirty days of delivery: (1) under UCC § 2-607, buyer was required to notify seller of breach of warranty within a reasonable time after actual or constructive discovery of defects; (2) UCC § 1-204 provides that whenever UCC requires action within reasonable time, any time which is not manifestly unreasonable may be fixed by agreement; (3) seller guaranteed workmanship and material in contract provided claim was made within one year from shipment; and (4) buyer made claim within one year following shipment. United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. North Am. Steel Corp., 335 So. 2d 18 (Fla. App. 1976).

14. —Question of law or fact.

Where, under franchising agreement between manufacturer of industrial equipment and manufacturer's franchisee, reserve account was created to aid franchisee in financing sales to customers, court held (1) that if no fiduciary relationship existed between parties, manufacturer was required to handle funds in reserve account in "commercially reasonable manner" required by UCC § 9-502(2); (2) that if fiduciary relationship did exist between parties and if other factors necessary to create constructive trust were present, manufacturer, as trustee of such trust, was required to handle trust (reserve-account funds) in "prudent and proper manner"; (3) that if manufacturer was not trustee and "commercially reasonable manner" standard applied to case, under UCC § 9-507(2), element of price-with regard to sales of repossessed equipment involved in suit was one factor in determining commercial reasonableness of such sales, although it was not determinative factor; and (4) that whether franchisee had given manufacturer notice of defects in equipment supplied by manufacturer, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), was jury question. Carter Equip. Co. v. John Deere Indus. Equip. Co., 681 F.2d 386 (5th Cir. 1982).

What is a reasonable time under UCC § 2-607(3)(a) for giving notice of a breach of warranty is usually a mixed question of law and fact to be determined by the trier of fact. Jeffries v. Clark's Restaurant Enters., Inc., 20 Wash. App. 428, 580 P.2d 1103 (1978).

Buyer's continued use of non-conforming machines for over 2 years and long after the seller's failure to cure became apparent presented a jury question as to whether his notice of revocation of acceptance was served within a reasonable time. Fablok Mills, Inc. v. Cocker Mach. & Foundry Co., 125 N.J. Super. 251, 310 A.2d 491 (App. Div. 1973), certification denied, 64 N.J. 317, 315 A.2d 405 (1973).

In an action on a sales contract of yarn, where the plaintiff moved for summary judgment, defendant's affidavit alleging that a claim was made immediately upon discovery of the breach of warranty after the yarn was knitted and washed, and this was the earliest possible moment at which the defects could reasonably be discovered in the normal manufacturing process, such affidavit was sufficient to create a question of fact concerning whether notice of the latent defects alleged was given within a reasonable time. Wilson Trading Corp. v. David Ferguson, Ltd., 23 N.Y.2d 398, 244 N.E.2d 685 (1968).

Under subparagraph (3)(a) of this section it is a question of fact for the jury if a delay of six months by a purchaser in giving the seller notice of the defective condition of a horse and making demand for a refund of the purchase price is or is not made within a reasonable time. Schneider v. Person, 34 Pa. D. & C.2d 10 (1964).

The application of the rule that party has reasonable time for discovering and giving notice of breach of warranty is a question of law where the facts are undisputed and only one inference can be drawn therefrom. Pritchard v. Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., 295 F.2d 292 (3d Cir. Pa. 1961).

15. —Reasonable.

In automobile manufacturer's indemnification action against supplier that had manufactured defective part of steering mechanism in vehicle sold to third person, which defect had resulted in personal injury judgment in prior action against manufacturer, manufacturer's tender of suit was seasonable and reasonable under UCC § 2-607(5)(a), even though made only five days before trial of prior action, where supplier had been on notice of such defect for more than a year, had been thoroughly prepared on issue litigated in prior action, and had had notice of all claims asserted in such action (stating that plaintiff's tender of suit was seasonable and reasonable, whether considered under common-law doctrine of "vouching in" or codification of that doctrine in Uniform Commercial Code). Ford Motor Co. v. Bendix Corp., 83 Mich. App. 108, 268 N.W.2d 305 (1978).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of merchantability of houseboat built by defendant seller for plaintiff buyer, plaintiff gave defendant timely notice of breach within meaning of UCC § 2-607(3)(a), requiring buyer to notify seller of breach of warranty within reasonable time after acceptance of tender, where plaintiff notified another boat construction company, to which defendant had assigned contract to build plaintiff's houseboat, of numerous defects in houseboat within three days after its delivery to plaintiff and defendant became aware of such notice within three months after such delivery. Tarter v. MonArk Boat Co., 430 F. Supp. 1290 (E.D. Mo. 1977), aff'd, 574 F.2d 984 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

Buyer of hardwood lumber, under contract providing that lumber would be equal in quality to lumber inspected by buyer's agent at seller's supply source in foreign country, sufficiently complied with notice requirement of UCC § 2-607(3)(a) by notifying seller of defects in delivered lumber within one month from date that first batch of such lumber was processed in buyer's dry kiln. Oregon Lumber Co. v. Dwyer Overseas Timber Prods. Co., 280 Or. 437, 571 P.2d 884 (1977).

Jury verdict for buyer of defective earth-mover tires, on buyer's counterclaim against manufacturer for damages for breach of express and implied warranties, was proper where (1) manufacturer's printed tire-warranty limitations and exclusions were never brought to buyer's attention in violation of UCC § 2-316(2), (2) manufacturer's regional sales manager orally committed manufacturer to specific performance warranty and had apparent authority to make such warranty, and (3) tires purchased by buyer failed to perform as warranted, despite fact that they were properly used. Moreover, since buyer seasonably notified manufacturer of tires' defects in accordance with UCC § 2-607(3)(a), buyer was not barred from recovery by continued acceptance and use of tires over six-month period in face of repeated tire failures. Edwards-Warren Tire Co. v. J.J. Blazer Constr. Co., 565 F.2d 401 (6th Cir. Ohio 1977).

Plaintiff, who purchased automobile jack stands from defendant, and subsequently suffered serious injuries to his arm and hand when one of stands collapsed, complied with requirement of UCC § 2-607(3)(a) that in order to utilize any Code remedy, including breach of warranty, buyer must, within reasonable time after he discovers breach, notify seller of breach, where he returned to seller's shop "probably a week or a month later", recited details of accident, and exhibited injured part of his body, and where approximately eight months after accident, buyer's attorney sent written notification of breach to seller. Bennett v. United Auto Parts, Inc., 294 Ala. 300, 315 So. 2d 579 (1975).

In action by purchasers of mobile home against manufacturer for breach of warranty, evidence that purchasers moved into mobile home during June, 1969, that they notified manufacturer of defects by telephone and by letter during same month, and that manufacturer admitted having received written notification in letter sent August 26, 1969, supported finding under UCC § 2-607 that purchasers notified manufacturer within reasonable time after discovery of defects; purchasers claim for damages was not waived by acceptance and use of mobile home nor by fact they did not undertake to repair defective conditions. Melody Home Mfg. Co. v. Morrison, 502 S.W.2d 196 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e. (Mar. 20, 1974).

Seller of fabric was liable to buyer for breach of express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, where buyer notified seller within 12 to 20 days after receipt of fabric that it had received substantial number of complaints with respect to colorfastness and thus gave reasonable notice to seller under UCC § 2-607. Rite Fabrics, Inc. v. Stafford-Higgins Co., 366 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

In action arising out of contract for purchase of component parts and assemblies for use in manufacture of sound actuated electrical switches, buyer's conduct in sending seller detailed drawings and explanations of problem created by seller's failure to conform to specifications and suggested means for remedying problem satisfied statutory requirement mandating notice within reasonable time after discovery of breach or nonconformity with contract requirements. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am. v. Sonus Corp., 362 Mass. 246, 284 N.E.2d 880 (1972).

Accepting party could seek damages for breach of warranty provided there was reasonable notice of defect given to seller under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); held, letter from buyer to seller outlining additional labor due to non-properly expanded pipe ends met test of reasonable notice. Fred J. Miller, Inc. v. Raymond Metal Prods. Co., 265 Md. 523, 290 A.2d 527 (1972).

Where the plaintiff is made sick because food was not fit for consumption and he was confined to his home for two weeks, a notice given thirty-two days after the breach is given within a reasonable time under the circumstances. Downey v. Mahoney, 25 Mass. App. Dec. 196 (1962).

The determination of the period which will constitute a "reasonable time" under the section within which a buyer who desires to prosecute a claim against a seller for breach of warranty must give notice to the seller of the fact of the breach as a condition precedent to his action, depends upon the particular circumstances of each case, and where the retail buyer of a salami give immediate notice to its manufacturer that while attempting to eat it he discovered that it had an embedded piece of metal which caused the buyer a dental injury with pain and suffering, but did not notify the seller until after the lapse of 70 days during which period the representative of the manufacture visited the buyer and took away the piece of metal, and caused the buyer to be examined by a dentist, it was properly found that the notice to the seller was given within a "reasonable time" to hold the seller liable for the breach. Primak v. Star Mkt. Co., 38 Mass. App. Dec. 218 (1967).

16. —Not reasonable.

Notice of alleged breach of warranty attaching to birth control device, which was given more than 30 months after plaintiff's delivery of stillborn baby, did not as matter of law satisfy requirement of UCC § 2-607(3)(a). Wagmeister v. A.H. Robins Co., 64 Ill. App. 3d 964, 382 N.E.2d 23 (1st Dist. 1978).

Where buyer of trucks paid for repairs to trucks over one year after purchase and after they had been driven minimum of 120,000 miles, where buyer talked to salesman of seller about trading trucks in because they weren't doing job for which he had purchased them, and where buyer talked to mechanics about problems with trucks, such actions by buyer did not constitute notice to seller within reasonable time that sale of trucks was claimed to involve breach of warranties. Cotner v. International Harvester Co., 260 Ark. 885, 545 S.W.2d 627 (1977).

Although notice of breach of warranty as required by UCC § 2-607 may be fulfilled by pleadings, counterclaim by lumber dealer in action by seller to recover purchase price of lumber delivered to dealer filed more than four months following receipt of lumber, was not, as matter of law, made within reasonable time after dealer discovered or should have discovered breach where lumber dealer was merchant and, as such, held to higher standard of dealing than consumers, lumber was of semi-perishable nature when left outside, as it was in present case, dealer had goods in his yard for sale with ample opportunity to inspect, and should have discovered any defects soon after acceptance of lumber. Pace v. Sagebrush Sales Co., 114 Ariz. 271, 560 P.2d 789 (1977).

Buyer of automobile was not entitled to recover damages from automobile dealer, based on alleged breach of contract, for difference between value of automobile as it was allegedly represented to be equipped by dealer and its value as actually equipped when delivered, where buyer, although having opportunity to do so, failed to inspect automobile for four or five days after delivery, failed to notify dealer of alleged breach for three weeks thereafter, and continued to make payments with knowledge of defect, thereby failing to comply with notice requirement of UCC § 2-607(3)(a). Romey v. Willett Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 136 Ga. App. 67, 220 S.E.2d 74 (1975).

Action for damages based upon alleged breach of implied warranty of can of starch was barred where buyer plaintiff failed to notify retail merchant of alleged breach until civil action was filed one year after discovery of breach. Leeper v. Banks, 487 S.W.2d 58 (Ky. 1972).

Buyer waived right to assert counterclaim alleging defects in merchandise where there was unreasonable delay in asserting this claim and where buyer continued to order and pay for additional goods from seller without asserting claim or demanding set-off. G. & D. Poultry

Farms, Inc. v. Long Island Butter & Egg Co., 33 A.D.2d 685 (2d Dep't 1969).

17. Pleading.

To plead properly cause of action for breach of warranty under Uniform Commercial Code, complaint should at least allege the following: (1) facts respecting sale of the goods; (2) identification of warranty created as being express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1), implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1), or implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; (3) facts respecting creation of such warranty; (4) facts respecting its breach; (5) giving to seller of notice of breach required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (6) injuries sustained by buyer as result of breach (holding that third-party complaint failed to state cause of action because it did not comply with above list of essential allegations). Dunham-Bush, Inc. v. Thermo-Air Serv., Inc., 351 So. 2d 351 (Fla. App. 1977).

Notice of breach of warranty required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a) is in nature of condition precedent to recovery, since no remedy is ordinarily available to buyer unless notice is given. Basis for notice requirement is to give seller opportunity to correct defect or to effect settlement through negotiation (holding, in action for seller's breach of warranty to sell hamburger patties of certain weight, that seller had waived proof of notice of breach by failing to plead specifically buyer's failure to give notice). Rich's Restaurant, Inc. v. McFann Enters., Inc., 39 Colo. App. 545, 570 P.2d 1305 (1977).

In seller's action to recover contract price of 200 air conditioners purchased by defendant contractors, trial court erred in granting plaintiff judgment on the pleadings and dismissing defendants' counterclaim for damages for breach of contract where undisputed evidence showed that although delivery of air conditioners was to have been made only on defendants' orders, plaintiff nevertheless delivered them without such orders. In such case, (1) defendants were not barred from any remedy under UCC § 2-607(3)(a) because they failed to allege in their counterclaim that they had notified plaintiff of its alleged breach; (2) defendants' original contention that notice of plaintiff's breach need not have been given to plaintiff (because plaintiff knew that its unauthorized delivery was a breach of the sale contract) was not inconsistent with defendants' subsequent allegation that notice had been given to plaintiff and defendants' pleadings, if amended, would do no more than state an alternative theory for obtaining relief; and (3) plaintiff's motion for judgment on the pleadings should not have been granted, since genuine issues of material fact existed as to whether plaintiff had breached contract by making unauthorized delivery of air conditioners, whether defendants were thus entitled to damages for expense of storing air conditioners and protecting them from theft, and whether defendants had notified seller of its alleged breach. Bennings Assocs. v. Joseph M. Zamoiski Co., 379 A.2d 1171 (D.C. 1977).

In action by seller of cattle against buyer to recover purchase price of cattle, proffered amendment to seller's answer was insufficient to raise defense of breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315 where buyer failed to plead ultimate facts which would bring sale within provisions of statute, i.e., that cattle were being purchased for particular purpose and that buyer was relying on seller's skill and judgment to select suitable cattle; proffered pleading was also deficient in that it failed to allege that buyer gave seller timely notice of breach as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a). Timmerman v. Hertz, 195 Neb. 237, 238 N.W.2d 220 (1976).

In action by farmer who bought consignment hog harrowing house designed and manufactured by defendant for breach of express or implied warranty arising when hogs developed certain illness, under UCC § 2-607(3)(a) buyer had duty to plead and prove notice of alleged defect and pleading notice of claimed breach of warranty was condition precedent to recovery. Winter v. Honeggers' & Co., 215 N.W.2d 316 (Iowa 1974).

Where there is a requirement that buyer give notice to seller of breach of warranty within reasonable time after buyer discovers or should have discovered alleged breach, giving of notice must be pleaded as condition precedent to recovery for breach of warranty; complaint which does not contain allegation of notice is subject to demurrer. L.A. Green Seed Co. v. Williams, 246 Ark. 463, 438 S.W.2d 717 (1969).

A complaint must aver facts showing the particular time that notice of defects was given or facts from which it can be concluded that the notice was given within a reasonable time. Avant Garde, Inc. v. Armtex, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 949 (1967, NY Sup.).

Pleadings showing that food processor did not discover the alleged breach of warranty until more than six months after delivery, and did not notify the seller of frozen corn until more than four months later, disclosed on their face what appears prima facie to be an unreasonable delay by the fruit processor in discovering a breach of warranty in delivered goods, and a delay in notifying the seller of the breach, and the claim of the fruit processor was subject to demurrer unless it simultaneously therewith explained and justified the delay. General Foods Corp. v. Bittinger Co., 31 Pa. D. & C.2d 282 (1963).

It is not necessary for a buyer to expressly plead notice to the seller that the buyer was holding the merchandise for the seller's disposition, or otherwise, as provided by the Uniform Commercial Code. It is sufficient that the buyer avers that he notified the seller of the breach of warranty and requested the seller to pick up the goods at his place of business. A. & H. Paint Co. v. Michaels, 21 Lawr. L.J. 153 (Pa) (Penna practice).

If the time when notice was given is material to an action for breach of warranty, the time when notice was given must be pleaded. A. & H. Paint Co. v. Michaels, 21 Lawr. L.J. 153 (Pa) (Penna practice).

18. Burden of proof.

In action by purchaser of rifle against seller under UCC § 2-314(2)(c) for breach of implied warranty of merchantability and fitness of rifle for ordinary purposes for which it was to be used, defendant failed to discharge its burden of proof to show that there was no defect in rifle and thus no breach of implied warranty sued on. Furthermore, defendant, who alleged that plaintiff did not give notice of alleged breached of warranty within reasonable time after discovery of breach, as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), also did not discharge burden of establishing that reasonable notice of breach had not been given (stating that fact that rifle exploded while it was being loaded constituted evidence that it was unfit for ordinary purposes for which it was intended). Jones v. Cranman's Sporting Goods, 142 Ga. App. 838, 237 S.E.2d 402 (1977).

Under UCC § 2-607(4), buyer has burden of establishing any breach with respect to goods accepted. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

In action arising out of auction sale of mare described in sales catalog as "barren," but which subsequently "slipped" a dead foal, buyer who effectively revoked sale had right under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-608 to reject mare after acceptance and burden under UCC § 2-607 upon buyer to show breach did not apply. Since acceptance was revoked, burden was on seller to show mare's conformity with catalog description but seller did not meet that burden where he failed to prove that mare was either barren or that, pursuant to usage of trade under UCC § 1-205, mare pronounced in foal and later found empty without evidence of abortion could be described as barren. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

Seller of crane was entitled to recover purchase price of replacement parts furnished to buyer, where buyer claimed that it was not required to pay for such parts because they were furnished under seller's warranty obligation, since burden was on buyer to establish any claimed breach of warranty and there was no evidence to establish breach of warranty or that parts were ordered on claim of breach of warranty. R.G. Moeller Co. v. Van Kampen Constr. Co., 57 Mich. App. 308, 225 N.W.2d 742 (1975).

Where goods are effectively rejected for breach of warranty, the burden of proving that they conform presumably remains on the seller, whereas upon acceptance the buyer has the burden to establish any breach. Miron v. Yonkers Raceway, Inc., 400 F.2d 112 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968).

Because burden of proof on issue of express warranty of soundness of race horse could not fairly rest on seller where buyer had taken possession of horse, transported it to his barn, and kept it overnight before discovering injury and informing seller thereof, and because Code § 2-607(4) imposes burden on buyer "with respect to the goods accepted", attempted rejection on day after sale was not "within a reasonable time" under Code § 2-602(1), and therefore ineffective to avoid buyer's acceptance under Code § 2-606(1)(b) (see this case, supra § 30). Miron v. Yonkers Raceway, Inc., 400 F.2d 112 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968).

19. Other procedural matters.

In action by cattle buyer against seller for breach of express and implied warranties, buyer's failure to plead and prove notice required under UCC § 2-607(3) was waived by seller's failure to raise lack of notice issue at pre-trial conference. Dold v. Sherow, 220 Kan. 350, 552 P.2d 945 (1976).

In breach of contract action relating to allegedly defective siding, failure of buyer to renew its complaint for 2 years could create inference for trier of fact that buyer did not consider alleged defects to be substantial or did not consider that buckling of siding was due to faulty materials; but failure to make prompt renewal of claim does not act as statute of limitations and inflexibly cut off buyer's right to assert its claim, since the initial notice of breach satisfied statute. Metro Inv. Corp. v. Portland Rd. Lumber Yard, Inc., 263 Or. 76, 501 P.2d 312 (1972).

A seller having taken no exception to the failure of the trial court to charge on the notice issue, having offered no request on the point, and having failed to raise the issue in the court below, may not for the first time on appeal attempt to take advantage of the alleged error. Boeing Airplane Co. v. O'Malley, 329 F.2d 585 (8th Cir. Minn. 1964).

20. Vouching in original seller.

Failure of buyer/subsequent seller to tender defense of breach of warranty action brought by subsequent purchaser against buyer and original seller to original seller precludes buyer from recovering attorney fees from seller. Contractor's Lumber & Supply Co. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 463 So. 2d 1084 (Miss. 1985).

A rubber hose manufacturer, made a cross-defendant in an action in which it was alleged that an airbrake company had manufactured and supplied a defective brake hose that caused a collision between an automobile and a truck, was not bound by a special jury finding that there had been a manufacturing defect in the hose in question, where the brake company's cross-complaint for indemnity against the rubber company had been severed and the rubber company had not participated in the trial in which the jury had returned the finding and had found generally against the brake company, and where, though the brake company had, prior to trial, demanded in writing that the rubber company assume the defense and had stated that indemnity was claimed, it had not expressly stated, as required by UCC § 2-607, subd. (5)(a), that unless the rubber company assumed the the defense, it would be bound in any subsequent litigation "by any determination of fact common to the two litigations." Bendix-Westinghouse Automotive Air Brake Co. v. Swan Rubber Co., 55 Cal. App. 3d 256 (3d Dist. 1976).

Retailer was entitled to recover from manufacturer of electronic signalling device sums paid to defend action and pay judgment for personal injuries caused by defective electronic signalling device which retailer purchased from manufacturer and sold to employer of injured workman where, inter alia, manufacturer was advised by letter from counsel representing retailer, pursuant to UCC § 2-607, that manufacturer should come in and defend litigation between injured workmen and retailer, and that if it did not do so, it would be bound in any action against it by retailer, and where manufacturer, after reasonable receipt of such notice, did not come in and defend. Smith Radio Communications, Inc. v. Challenger Equip., Ltd., 270 Or. 322, 527 P.2d 711 (1974).

§ 75-2-608. Revocation of acceptance in whole or in part.

(1) The buyer may revoke his acceptance of a lot or commercial unit whose nonconformity substantially impairs its value to him if he has accepted it

(a) on the reasonable assumption that its nonconformity would be cured and it has not been seasonably cured; or

(b) without discovery of such nonconformity if his acceptance was reasonably induced either by the difficulty of discovery before acceptance or by the seller's assurances.

(2) Revocation of acceptance must occur within a reasonable time after the buyer discovers or should have discovered the ground for it and before any substantial change in condition of the goods which is not caused by their own defects. It is not effective until the buyer notifies the seller of it.

(3) A buyer who so revokes has the same rights and duties with regard to the goods involved as if he had rejected them.

1. In general.

In action by seller under UCC § 75-2-709(1) for price of defective lawnmower bags sold to defendant buyer, court held (1) that buyer had accepted bags (a) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(a) by conduct that signified to seller that buyer was accepting bags despite knowledge of their nonconformity, and (b) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(b) by conduct, such as continuing to try to sell bags and destruction of defective bags, that was inconsistent with effective rejection of bags; (2) that buyer did not effectively revoke acceptance of bags under UCC § 75-2-608(1) because (a) its acts of dominion over bags, including continuing efforts to sell them, were inconsistent with its claim of revocation of acceptance, and (b) buyer also did not comply with notice requirement of UCC § 75-2-608(2) for revocation of acceptance; (3) that seller's damages under UCC § 75-2-709(1)(b) for specially manufactured goods included damages for cost of materials, labor and overhead, administrative and sales expenses, and incidental damages; and (4) that although buyer satisfied burden of proof under UCC § 75-2-607(4) with regard to seller's breach of warranty, buyer's breach-of-warranty counterclaim was foreclosed by failure to give seller adequate notice of breach required by UCC § 75-2-607(3)(a) and Official Comment 4. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Applying UCC rules to a copier lease contract, a lessee who asserts the right to revoke acceptance has the same duties as a buyer who rejects goods before acceptance. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

In action by seller of upholstery fabrics against buyer for balance due on unpaid invoices, in which buyer admitted ordering fabrics but alleged that seller had overshipped fabrics to buyer, that buyer had revoked acceptance of overshipped goods and returned them to seller, that seller had allowed credit for returned goods, and that buyer had then paid balance of its account, court held (1) that no overshipments had occurred; (2) that seller had agreed that buyer could return fabrics that buyer could not dispose of at reduced price; (3) that seller never notified buyer that credit memorandum for major part of returned fabrics had been erroneously sent to buyer; (4) that since disputed shipments had conformed to oral orders placed by buyer, buyer's revocation of its prior acceptance of goods under UCC § 2-608(1) was wrongful; (5) that seller was thereafter entitled to remedies provided by UCC § 2-703; (6) that seller's postbreach conduct—which consisted of allowing discount on disputed fabrics, accepting great number of pieces returned to seller, and sending buyer memorandum allowing credit for returned fabrics with no qualification as to memorandum's meaning—showed acquiescence in alleged agreement for return of goods and allowance of discount thereon; and (7) that seller, by failing to exercise diligence in enforcing its rights under the contract, had not exercised good faith required by UCC § 1-203, had seriously misled buyer, and thus was estopped to assert its abandoned rights. Castle Fabrics, Inc. v. Fortune Furn. Mfrs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 409 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

In most instances, the Uniform Commercial Code has abandoned use of the term "rescission" in favor of such terms as "cancellation" or "termination." However, "rescission" and "revocation of acceptance" (see UCC § 2-608(1)) are generally viewed as amounting to the same thing under the code, especially since "cancellation," under UCC § 2-711(1), is a remedy that is available to a buyer who has established justifiable grounds for "revocation of acceptance." Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

Before a buyer can revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1), he must show that the goods are nonconforming and that the nonconformity substantially impairs their value to him. If the buyer knew of the nonconformity when he accepted the goods, he must show that he acted on the reasonable assumption that the nonconformity would be cured and that it was not seasonably cured. If the buyer did not know of the nonconformity when he accepted the goods, he must then show that his acceptance was reasonably induced by the difficulty of discovering the nonconformity before acceptance or by the seller's assurances. A revocation of acceptance by the buyer must occur, under UCC § 2-608(2), within a reasonable time after he discovered the defect, or should have discovered it, and before any substantial change occurs in the condition of the goods that was not caused by their own defects. Moreover, a revocation of acceptance is not effective until the buyer notifies the seller. Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

Revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1) is possible only where the nonconformity substantially impairs the value of the goods to the buyer. In this regard, the test is not what the seller had reason to know at the time of contracting; instead, it is whether the nonconformity is such as will, in fact, cause a substantial impairment of value to the buyer, even though the seller had no advance knowledge of the buyer's particular circumstances. Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

Buyer was liable as matter of law for contract price of cast-iron pipes and other materials purchased for use in water-main construction project where buyer (1) accepted materials under UCC § 2-606(1)(c) by receiving them and installing them into the ground, (2) failed to reject materials within reasonable time after their delivery by seasonable notification to seller required by UCC § 2-602(1), (3) did not comply with duties under UCC § 2-603 as to any materials that buyer might rightfully have rejected, and (4) repaired all leaks in defective pipes shortly after their installation without requesting credit for such defects or revoking acceptance of such pipes under UCC § 2-608(2). Clow Corp. v. Metro Pipeline Co., 442 F. Supp. 583 (N.D. Ga. 1977).

To revoke acceptance of goods under UCC § 2-608, buyer must show that his acceptance was excused for one of the following reasons: (1) buyer accepted on unreasonable assumption that seller would eliminate defect in goods, but seller failed to do so; (2) buyer accepted without discovering defect in goods, but such failure was caused by difficulty of discovering defect; or (3) buyer accepted without discovering defect, but such failure was caused by seller's assurances that goods were conforming. UCC § 2-608 also requires that buyer's revocation of acceptance must occur before occurrence of any substantial change in condition of goods which was not caused by their own defects and that there must be substantial impairment in value of goods to buyer. Sauers v. Tibbs, 48 Ill. App. 3d 805, 363 N.E.2d 444 (4th Dist. 1977).

UCC § 2-608 prescribes the following requirements for an effective revocation of acceptance: (1) the goods must have been nonconforming; (2) the nonconformity must have substantially impaired the value of the goods to the buyer; (3) the buyer must have accepted the goods on the reasonable assumption that the nonconformity would be cured; (4) the nonconformity must not have been seasonably cured; (5) the buyer must have notified the seller of the buyer's revocation; (6) revocation must have occurred within a reasonable time after the buyer discovered or should have discovered the ground therefor, and before any substantial change in the condition of the goods which was not caused by their own defects; and (7) the buyer must have taken reasonable care of the goods. Durfee v. Rod Baxter Imports, Inc., 262 N.W.2d 349, 98 A.L.R.3d 1170 (Minn. 1977).

Question as to compliance with warranties is to be measured by the specifics that the parties agreed on, and not by a generalized conclusion as to whether there was an overall fitness for the purposes intended. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

In action by buyer of new 1970 Lincoln Continental automobile against dealer and manufacturer, in which buyer alleged seller's breach of warranty and buyer's justifiable revocation of acceptance of vehicle, manufacturer was not "seller" under UCC § 2-103(1)(d), on theory that dealer from whom buyer actually purchased vehicle was "agent" of manufacturer, where (1) sales contract expressly recited that buyer understood that no principal-and-agent relationship existed between dealer and manufacturer, (2) dealer's franchise agreement with manufacturer also expressly stated that dealer was not manufacturer's agent, and (3) no other evidence supported conclusion that dealer was manufacturer's agent in sale of vehicle to buyer. Thus, manufacturer was entitled to directed verdict since buyer, to be entitled to remedy of revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608 as against manufacturer, was required to prove existence of buyer-seller relationship, and such proof was absent (also observing that ordinarily automobile dealer's only attribute as agent of manufacturer is authority to extend manufacturer's limited warranty to dealer's purchasers). Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

UCC § 2-608 sets up following conditions for buyer who seeks to justify revocation of acceptance: (1) nonconformity that substantially impaired value to buyer; (2) acceptance (a) with discovery of defect, if acceptance was on reasonable assumption that nonconformity would be cured, or (b) without discovery of defect, if acceptance was reasonably induced by difficulty of discovery or by seller's assurances; (3) revocation within reasonable time after nonconformity was discovered or should have been discovered; and (4) revocation before substantive change occurred in condition of goods that was not caused by their own defects. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Code provisions pertaining to manner and effect of rightful rejecting and acceptance of goods were inapplicable to action by seller of hog fence paneling to recover price of extra panels ordered by buyer who counterclaimed for damages for nonconformity between heavy-duty panels ordered and light-weight panels received, although evidence raised fact issue, particularly as to panels first received, under Code section providing for revocation of acceptance. Jones v. Atkins, 254 Ark. 472, 494 S.W.2d 448 (1973).

Co-owner of boat mold, through his representative, accepted mold in its then condition from other co-owner; held, first co-owner was not entitled to recover for alleged injury to mold while it was in possession of second co-owner. Marcoux v. Davis, 230 So. 2d 485 (Fla. Ct. App. 1970), overruled on other grounds, Blue v. Weinstein, 381 So. 2d 308 (Fla. Ct. App. 1980).

The time for revocation of acceptance will be governed by decisions under the Sales Act relating to the time for rescission. Braginetz v. Foreign Motor Sales, Inc., 76 Dauph. Co. 1 (Pa. 1961).

2. Scope.

The Uniform Commercial Code has replaced the pre-Code remedy of rescission with the concepts of rejection and revocation of acceptance, but UCC § 2-721, dealing with remedies for fraud, recognizes that such change of remedies does not affect a buyer's right to pursue non-Code remedies. Calloway v. Manion, 572 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

This section performs the same general functions as a rescission of a sale did under § 69 of the Uniform Sales Act.

3. Alternative remedies.

UCC § 2-608(2) does not prescribe any particular form or content for the notice of the buyer's revocation of acceptance. However, the notice must be sufficient to inform the seller that the buyer has revoked his acceptance of the goods. It must also be sufficient to identify the particular goods that are the subject matter of such revocation. Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

Before a buyer can revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1), he must show that the goods are nonconforming and that the nonconformity substantially impairs their value to him. If the buyer knew of the nonconformity when he accepted the goods, he must show that he acted on the reasonable assumption that the nonconformity would be cured and that it was not seasonably cured. If the buyer did not know of the nonconformity when he accepted the goods, he must then show that his acceptance was reasonably induced by the difficulty of discovering the nonconformity before acceptance or by the seller's assurances. A revocation of acceptance by the buyer must occur, under UCC § 2-608(2), within a reasonable time after he discovered the defect, or should have discovered it, and before any substantial change occurs in the condition of the goods that was not caused by their own defects. Moreover, a revocation of acceptance is not effective until the buyer notifies the seller. Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

In action by purchaser of new automobile against dealer seeking revocation of acceptance and damages, contract provision between dealer and purchaser to effect that there were no warranties express or implied made by either dealer or manufacturer, other than manufacturer's warranty against defective materials, although sufficient to exclude all warranties by dealer except implied warranty of merchantability, did not eliminate implied warranty of merchantability in manner required by UCC § 2-316, and evidence that automobile battery was defective as result of poor materials or poor workmanship was sufficient to establish breach of warranty of merchantability; however, there was no evidence that such nonconformity substantially impaired value of car to purchaser as required by UCC § 2-608 before he could revoke his acceptance of automobile and recover price paid; thus, purchaser's remedy was action for damages and, since purchaser failed to present evidence to support award based on proper measure of damages, i.e., value of automobile in its non-conforming condition at time and place of acceptance, purchaser was not entitled to recover damages. Bill McDavid Oldsmobile, Inc. v. Mulcahy, 533 S.W.2d 160 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Before enactment of Uniform Commercial Code, breach of warranty and rescission were considered alternate remedies. The code, however, which is much more comprehensive and explicit than precode law, generally avoids use of ambiguous term "rescission" and provides in UCC § 2-608 specific remedy that permits buyer, under proper conditions, to force seller to retake nonconforming goods, even though buyer has already accepted them. Under the code, buyer's revocation of acceptance is distinct course of action that is not to be confused with rescission by mutual consent. Nor is revocation of acceptance an alternative remedy for breach of warranty. Under UCC § 2-711(1), when buyer justifiably revokes acceptance, he may cancel and recover as much of purchase price as he has paid. On the other hand, under UCC § 2-714(2), basic measure of damages for breach of warranty is difference between value of goods accepted and value that they would have had if they had been as warranted. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

4. —Rescission.

imity, court held that seller's proof of sale and delivery of car at agreed price, together with buyer's admission that she took car, executed paper work connected with its sale, and then refused to pay purchase price, made out case that entitled seller to recover purchase price (stating that fact that fan belt broke two days after car's sale did not show such nonconformity as would allow buyer to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(b)). American Imports, Inc. v. G.E. Employees W. Region Fed. Credit Union, 37 N.C. App. 121, 245 S.E.2d 798 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-608(2), revocation of acceptance is required within a reasonable time after discovery of the grounds therefor. Since this remedy is generally resorted to only after attempts at adjustment have failed, the reasonable-time period should extend in most cases (1) beyond the time in which notification of the breach must be given, (2) beyond the time for discovery of the nonconformity after acceptance, and (3) beyond the time for rejection after tender. However, the parties, by their agreement, may limit the time for notification of revocation. Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

Before a buyer can revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1), he must show that the goods are nonconforming and that the nonconformity substantially impairs their value to him. If the buyer knew of the nonconformity when he accepted the goods, he must show that he acted on the reasonable assumption that the nonconformity would be cured and that it was not seasonably cured. If the buyer did not know of the nonconformity when he accepted the goods, he must then show that his acceptance was reasonably induced by the difficulty of discovering the nonconformity before acceptance or by the seller's assurances. A revocation of acceptance by the buyer must occur, under UCC § 2-608(2), within a reasonable time after he discovered the defect, or should have discovered it, and before any substantial change occurs in the condition of the goods that was not caused by their own defects. Moreover, a revocation of acceptance is not effective until the buyer notifies the

Where seller was unable to obtain acceptable substitute tractor after original tractor proved defective, buyer was entitled under UCC § 2-608 to rescind contract and recover incidental and consequential damages such as value of trade-in allowance for combine, expenditures for travel, telephone calls, and tractor rental fees. Welken v. Conley, 252 N.W.2d 311 (N.D. 1977).

Although Uniform Commercial Code does not specifically provide remedy of rescission of contract, rescission and revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1) amount to the same thing, particularly since cancellation of contract under UCC § 2-711(1) is remedy that is available to buyer who has established a justifiable revocation of acceptance. Werner v. Montana, 117 N.H. 721, 378 A.2d 1130 (1977).

Parties to an agreement of sale are entitled to get what they bargained for at the time they bargained for it; right of a buyer to rescind must be determined as of the time the election to rescind is properly exercised, and the party's rights are not to be determined by subsequent events. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Where testimony of interested parties was in direct conflict as to extent to which delivered boat differed from display boat, court would not reverse order of rescission of sales contract under UCC § 2-608(1), since Chancellor below had opportunity and advantage of seeing and hearing the witnesses. Marine Mart, Inc. v. Pearce, 252 Ark. 601, 480 S.W.2d 133 (1972).

5. Tender back.

In action by seller of upholstery fabrics against buyer for balance due on unpaid invoices, in which buyer admitted ordering fabrics but alleged that seller had overshipped fabrics to buyer, that buyer had revoked acceptance of overshipped goods and returned them to seller, that seller had allowed credit for returned goods, and that buyer had then paid balance of its account, court held (1) that no overshipments had occurred; (2) that seller had agreed that buyer could return fabrics that buyer could not dispose of at reduced price; (3) that seller never notified buyer that credit memorandum for major part of returned fabrics had been erroneously sent to buyer; (4) that since disputed shipments had conformed to oral orders placed by buyer, buyer's revocation of its prior acceptance of goods under UCC § 2-608(1) was wrongful; (5) that seller was thereafter entitled to remedies provided by UCC § 2-703; (6) that seller's postbreach conduct—which consisted of allowing discount on disputed fabrics, accepting great number of pieces returned to seller, and sending buyer memorandum allowing credit for returned fabrics with no qualification as to memorandum's meaning—showed acquiescence in alleged agreement for return of goods and allowance of discount thereon; and (7) that seller, by failing to exercise diligence in enforcing its rights under the contract, had not exercised good faith required by UCC § 1-203, had seriously misled buyer, and thus was estopped to assert its abandoned rights. Castle Fabrics, Inc. v. Fortune Furn. Mfrs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 409 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Having elected to rescind purchase of stud horse, any action by buyer in breeding the horse and collecting stud fees were, in effect, as trustee for seller; buyer was entitled to offset the expenses of maintenance and this net profit was to be deducted from the purchase price to be returned. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

If plaintiffs' notice of revocation of acceptance was inadequate for failure to offer to return all goods purchased under contract upon payment of proper amount, plaintiffs' submission to jurisdiction of equity constituted adequate offer to do so. Melms v. Mitchell, 266 Or. 208, 512 P.2d 1336, 65 A.L.R.3d 376 (1973).

Auto buyer called seller's attention to knock in motor of new auto; seller elected to pass auto on to seller in that condition; auto returned when it would not operate to satisfaction of buyer; held, buyer was entitled to recover on his demand for return of auto purchase price. Carretta v. Bud Jack Corp., 64 Misc. 2d 689 (1970).

Under the language of § 2-601 and of this section, a buyer is relieved of his obligations under former law of rescission to tender back property previously received, and it is sufficient if he seasonably notifies seller of his revocation of acceptance. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, an offer by the buyer to return the goods after notice of rescission is given is no longer necessary. Marks v. Lehigh Brickface, Inc., 9 Pa. D. & C.2d 666 (1960).

6. Exercise of ownership.

Evidence that the plaintiff revoked acceptance of a farm combine was sufficient to support a jury verdict, even though he retained possession of it, continued to use it, and generated a tax benefit for himself by claiming depreciation of the combine on his tax returns for two years, because (1) it was unlikely that the plaintiff could have purchased or rented another combine as the cost of replacement was high and his credit was adversely affected when he failed to make payments on the loan for the combine, (2) the defendant did not allege that the combine was damaged by continued use by the plaintiff and only alleged that such use caused depreciation, and (3) the defendant refused to accept the return of the combine. Deere & Co. v. Johnson, 271 F.3d 613 (5th Cir. 2001).

Mobile home purchasers' continued use of the mobile home after they notified the seller of their intention to revoke acceptance did not constitute a waiver of their right to revoke acceptance where they were financially unable to move elsewhere and they were repeatedly assured by the seller that the defects would be repaired; the purchasers were merely complying with § 75-2-508, which requires a consumer who expresses an intention to revoke acceptance to provide a seller with a reasonable opportunity to attempt to cure the defect; moreover, any excessive or unreasonable use of the home by the purchasers could be remedied through quantum meruit recovery, not through an effectuation of revocation. North River Homes, Inc. v. Bosarge, 594 So. 2d 1153, 38 A.L.R.5th 869 (Miss. 1992).

Where (1) buyer purchased mobile home on January 29, 1973, and moved into it three days later, (2) buyer made numerous complaints about home's defects between February 29, 1973, and September, 1973, but defects were never seasonably repaired by seller, (3) buyer revoked acceptance of home in September, 1973, but continued to use home until time of filing suit in 1974, and (4) seller never attempted to remove home from buyer's premises after being notified of buyer's revocation of acceptance, trial court erred in holding that buyer had waived right to revoke acceptance of home under UCC § 2-608(1)(a) & (b) because of his continued use of it after giving seller notice of revocation. Lawrence v. Modern Mobile Homes, Inc., 562 S.W.2d 729 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

In action for purchase price of new automobile, where (1) buyer's acts in signing all necessary papers and taking delivery of car were so inconsistent with seller's ownership as to constitute acceptance under UCC § 2-606(1)(c), and (2) buyer had no right to revoke her acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(a), since she had accepted car without knowledge of any nonconformity, court held that seller's proof of sale and delivery of car at agreed price, together with buyer's admission that she took car, executed paper work connected with its sale, and then refused to pay purchase price, made out case that entitled seller to recover purchase price (stating that fact that fan belt broke two days after car's sale did not show such nonconformity as would allow buyer to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(b)). American Imports, Inc. v. G.E. Employees W. Region Fed. Credit Union, 37 N.C. App. 121, 245 S.E.2d 798 (1978).

Retention of pleasure fishing boat by buyer for 32 months before attempting revocation constituted unreasonable delay after discovery of defects and, therefore, revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608 was not available remedy; although seller's assurances and attempted repairs justified some of buyer's delay, delay of 32 months was not reasonable particularly where buyer retained possession of boat after his attempted revocation and continued to use it for fishing trips right up to time of trial. Furthermore, continued use of boat for fishing trips did not indicate that buyer retained boat under UCC § 2-711(3) and § 9-207(1) and

(4) for purpose of protecting his security interest pending reimbursement, but rather such use appeared to be "act inconsistent with the seller's ownership" which, under UCC § 2-606(1)(c), constituted new acceptance. Wadsworth Plumbing & Heating Co. v. Tollycraft Corp., 277 Or. 433, 560 P.2d 1080 (1977).

In action by mobile home purchasers against seller and manufacturer for rescission of purchase agreement, although purchasers' revocation of acceptance was effective, their continued occupancy of mobile home as their residence for approximately six months after revocation of acceptance was wrongful and manufacturer and seller were entitled to offset amount of fair and reasonable use value of mobile home for this period. Stroh v. American Recreation & Mobile Home Corp., 35 Colo. App. 196, 530 P.2d 989 (1975).

Auto purchaser waived his right to make effective revocation of acceptance where he used auto for 17 months and 30,000 miles. Cooper v. Mason, 14 N.C. App. 472, 188 S.E.2d 653 (1972).

Where seller refused to acknowledge buyer's revocation of acceptance of used automobile, and buyer then kept automobile, used and maintained it, and made payments on financing agreement to bank, buyer failed to revoke his acceptance properly, was in the position of one who had accepted the goods, and had through his notification of revocation of acceptance given seller sufficient and timely notification of breach of warranty (automobile warranty book showed 14000 more miles than car's odometer). Fecik v. Capindale, 54 Pa. D. & C.2d 701 (1971).

Buyer's exercise of ownership over farm equipment was inconsistent with alleged revocation of acceptance, despite assurances of salesman that any nonconformity would be cured. Ingle v. Marked Tree Equip. Co., 244 Ark. 1166, 428 S.W.2d 286 (1968).

7. Partial revocation.

Buyer removed integral working parts of car wash equipment; buyer was not using that part of electrical system, was not using water softeners or water heaters to full capacity, and interior lining of equipment had been removed; held, removed parts did not constitute "commercial unit" within UCC § 2-608 permitting revocation of acceptance of commercial unit which substantially impairs value to him. Abbett v. Thompson, 148 Ind. App. 25, 263 N.E.2d 733 (1970).

A buyer of 16 automobiles under an "entire" contract of sale could reject seven of the automobiles and accept the rest, where the seller accepted the return of the rejected automobiles from the buyer. Ofgant-Jackson Chevrolet, Inc. v. MacQuade, 338 Mass. 144, 154 N.E.2d 344 (1958).

8. Substantially impaired value.

The question of whether there has been substantial impairment of the value to the consumer, within the meaning of § 75-2-608(1), is one for the factfinder to resolve; the factfinder's resolution of this issue should entail a subjective and objective review of the evidence; the subjective component of the factfinder's review involves consideration of the "unique circumstances" of the consumer while the objective component involves consideration of whether the defect would substantially impair the value of the good to a reasonable person whose unique circumstances are similar to the consumer's. North River Homes, Inc. v. Bosarge, 594 So. 2d 1153, 38 A.L.R.5th 869 (Miss. 1992).

Applying UCC rules to a 2-party copier lease agreement, upon a determination that the deficiencies in the leased copier were such that its value to the lessee was substantially reduced, the lessee could revoke its acceptance of the copier. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Automobile buyer may revoke his acceptance only if there is a substantial impairment of value to him, and substantial impairment is determined by reference to the particular needs of the buyer, even though the seller may have no advance knowledge of those needs and even though such needs may change after acceptance of the automobile. Rester v. Morrow, 491 So. 2d 204 (Miss. 1986).

The statute governing an automobile buyer's right to revoke acceptance has both a subjective and an objective component; the "to him" language requires that courts proceed by reference to the buyer's unique circumstances and, once those circumstances have been determined, to proceed to an objective determination of whether the nonconformity would substantially impair the value of the automobile to a reasonable person in the buyer's circumstances. Rester v. Morrow, 491 So. 2d 204 (Miss. 1986).

Under UCC § 2-608(1) and Official Comment 2, the test of "substantial impairment" justifying buyer's revocation of acceptance is whether the nonconformity is such as will in fact cause substantial impairment of value to the buyer, even though the seller had no advance knowledge of the buyer's particular circumstances. The statute creates a subjective test in the sense that the requirements of the particular buyer must be examined and deferred to. However, since the rationale of the "substantial-impairment" requirement is to bar revocation for trivial defects or defects that can easily be corrected, the impairment of the buyer's requirements must be substantial in objective terms. Keen v. Modern Trailer Sales, Inc., 40 Colo. App. 527, 578 P.2d 668 (1978).

In buyers' action for rescission of contract for purchase of mobile home, which was treated by trial court as action for revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), determinative issues before trial court on remand of case were (1) whether buyers had sought to purchase home of specified dimensions for their particular living requirements, and (2) whether nonconformity of home delivered to buyers, which lacked approximately eight percent of total space warranted by seller, was substantial impairment, in an objective sense, of home's value to buyers. Keen v. Modern Trailer Sales, Inc., 40 Colo. App. 527, 578 P.2d 668 (1978).

Revocation of acceptance is possible under UCC § 2-608 only if the nonconformity substantially impairs value of goods to buyer. For this purpose, test is not what seller had reason to know at time of contracting, but whether nonconformity is such as will in fact cause substantial impairment of value to buyer, even though seller had no advance knowledge of buyer's particular circumstances. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Where organ was delivered to buyers' home on December 7, 1972, shortly thereafter two bass pedals and two keys on keyboard failed to play, buyer called seller on December 27, 1972, but nothing was done until March 13, 1973, when seller repaired organ, where, following repairs, one key in every octave in both keyboards failed to play, buyer called seller on May 11, 1973, and told seller that she was still having difficulty with organ and that she wanted refund of purchase price, where buyer agreed to permit seller to bring out replacement organ on condition that if it did not work seller would take it back and refund purchase price of first organ, rhythm system on replacement organ began to malfunction, seller was unable to remedy problem and, during last service call serviceman removed rhythm system component from replacement organ following which lower keyboard failed to play, and where some time after June 1, 1973, seller's employees attempted to return original organ, but were prevented from doing so by buyers who insisted on return of purchase price of organ: (1) evidence was sufficient to establish that defects in organ substantially impaired its value to buyers within meaning of UCC § 2-608(1), thus justifying revocation of acceptance and recovery of purchase price; (2) under all circumstances, buyers notified seller within reasonable time after learning of defects in organ that they intended to revoke their acceptance and ask for refund of purchase price. Schumaker v. Ivers, 90 S.D. 75, 238 N.W.2d 284 (1976).

Fact that transmission fell out of used car and that brakes failed in car shortly after transmission trouble was fixed clearly indicated that car was so hazardous to drive that value of buyers' contract for car was substantially impaired, justifying buyers' revocation of acceptance when buyers received unfulfilled assurances that defects would be cured. Overland Bond & Inv. Corp. v. Howard, 9 Ill.

App. 3d 348, 292 N.E.2d 168 (1st Dist. 1972).

Right to revoke acceptance of automobile does not arise from every breach of warranty; to revoke acceptance defect must substantially impair value of car to plaintiff, and each case must be carefully examined on its own merits to determine what is substantial impairment of value. Collum v. Fred Tuch Buick, 6 Ill. App. 3d 317, 285 N.E.2d 532 (1st Dist. 1972).

9. —Failure to deliver title.

Buyer of automobile was entitled to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 when seller was unable to furnish clear title certificate as required; under UCC §§ 2-711 and 2-713, buyer was entitled to recover purchase price plus difference between purchase price and market value of vehicle with clear title as "non-delivery" damages; fact that automobile was delivered to and used by buyer did not impair buyer's right to revoke acceptance or to recover "non-delivery" damages. Gawlick v. American Bldrs. Supply, Inc., 86 N.M. 77, 519 P.2d 313 (Ct. App. 1974).

UCC § 2-608 permits a buyer to revoke his acceptance of a mobile home if no title is provided, and further if the revocation of acceptance complies with the conditions contained in this section, it being immaterial whether plaintiff chooses to term his remedy rescission or revocation of acceptance. Gilson v. Twin Trailer Sales, Inc., 53 Pa. D. & C.2d 311 (1971).

Seller's inability to deliver title to boiler, blowers, and light fixtures previously represented as included in sale of equipment of automatic car wash substantially impaired value of entire purchase, and entitled buyer to revoke his acceptance or sale, even though value of these items was disproportionately small in comparison with total consideration paid. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

"Conformity" and "non-conformity" of goods sold applies not only to quantity and quality, for the goods are also required to conform to the obligations of the contract of sale; and where one of the obligations of the contract is warranty of title, seller's inability to deliver title to a portion of the goods sold constitutes "non-conformity" sufficient to support buyer's revocation of acceptance. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

10. —Failure or refusal to repair.

In buyers' action to revoke acceptance of motor home, (1) buyers' signing of document entitled "Pre-Delivery Inspection and Acceptance Declaration"—by means of which seller had attempted both to disclaim all express and implied warranties and to limit remedies available to buyers, in event of a breach, to repair and replacement of defective parts—did not deprive buyers of right to seek revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608, since seller's failure after reasonable time to repair numerous defects in home resulted in failure of buyer's limited repair-and-replacement-of-parts remedy in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), thus enabling buyers to invoke any remedies available under Uniform Commercial Code; (2) buyers were entitled to revoke acceptance of home under UCC § 2-608(1) and (2), since jury found on sufficient evidence that its defects had substantially impaired its value and that buyers' formal revocation of acceptance had immediately followed several months of nearly continuous efforts to have home repaired; and (3) buyers were entitled to only $500 as consequential damages allowable under UCC § 2-715(2)(b) for loss of home's use, since there was no evidence of extent to which home would have been used by buyers if it had not been defective. Murray v. Holiday Rambler, Inc., 83 Wis. 2d 406, 265 N.W.2d 513 (1978).

Seller did not have right to repair and cure defects in accord with UCC § 2-508, notwithstanding buyer's notification of revocation of acceptance, where seller was unable to say how long it would have taken him to make all repairs necessary to get mobile home back into good condition. Davis v. Colonial Mobile Homes, 28 N.C. App. 13, 220 S.E.2d 802 (1975), cert. denied, 289 N.C. 613, 223 S.E.2d 391 (1976).

Language contained in contract between buyer and seller of accounting machine that seller's "obligation if the equipment does not meet these warranties is limited solely to correcting the defect or failure, without charge," did not apply to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose; but even if it did, buyer's remedy of revocation was saved, since nothing short of effective right of revocation would satisfy essential purpose of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose where particular accounting machine delivered and installed by seller did not, and could not, solve buyer's problem by getting accurate payroll out on time, which was purpose for which it was purchased. NCR v. Adell Indus., Inc., 57 Mich. App. 413, 225 N.W.2d 785 (1975).

Where a new car warranty is limited to repair and replacement of parts, buyer was entitled to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608, where there was refusal to repair or an unsuccessful repair. Jacobs v. Metro Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 125 Ga. App. 462, 188 S.E.2d 250 (1972).

Auto buyer called seller's attention to knock in motor of new auto; seller elected to pass auto on to seller in that condition; auto returned when it would not operate to satisfaction of buyer; held, buyer was entitled to recover on his demand for return of auto purchase price. Carretta v. Bud Jack Corp., 64 Misc. 2d 689 (1970).

11. —Extent or cost or repairs.

While an automobile seller has the right to attempt a cure, he cannot postpone revocation in perpetuity, and there comes a time when, after having to take the car into the shop for repairs an inordinate number of times and experiencing all of the attendant inconveniences, the buyer is entitled to revoke his acceptance, notwithstanding the seller's repeated good faith efforts to fix the car. Rester v. Morrow, 491 So. 2d 204 (Miss. 1986).

After having accepted nonconforming goods (equipment which was not in ready-to-go condition as promised by seller), buyer could not revoke his acceptance where repairs would cost only $200 which did not amount to substantial impairment of value under UCC § 2-608(1)(a). Dehahn v. Innes, 356 A.2d 711 (Me. 1976).

In buyers' action for rescission of automobile sales contract, evidence showing that cost of repairs needed to bring automobile to standard approximated 25 percent of sale price of car compelled finding that defects in automobile substantially impaired its value. Moore v. Howard Pontiac-American, Inc., 492 S.W.2d 227 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

Non-conformity of station wagon was of such magnitude as to cause "substantial impairment of value" to buyer, where wagon was returned for repairs on at least 30 occasions within 50 days of purchase date for, inter alia, excessive oil use, new fuel pump, new carburetor, new piston rings, "short block", and continual uncorrected skipping and misfiring of engine. Tiger Motor Co. v. McMurtry, 284 Ala. 283, 224 So. 2d 638 (1969).

12. —Substantial impairment found.

A buyer of a new car was justified in revoking acceptance, where three successive engines failed within less than 6,000 miles per engine. Volkswagen of Am., Inc. v. Novak, 418 So. 2d 801 (Miss. 1982).

Where new car with paint chipped off on front end and improper difference in color between paint on front end and paint on rear end was delivered to buyer in darkness, buyer on observing such defects on the next day demanded either new car or return of purchase price from dealer, dealer in compliance with manufacturer's firm policy refused buyer's demand and attempted to repair paint defects, and car after being stripped down to bare metal and repainted three times still had paint defects that marred its appearance and value for buyer, (1) buyer justifiably revoked acceptance of car under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), (2) such revocation of acceptance was timely under UCC § 2-608(2), and (3) buyer under UCC § 2-711(1) was entitled to rescind contract of sale and be returned purchase price of car, less specified offset for buyer's use of car (stating that buyer is no longer barred from remedy of rescission because of his continued use of substantially impaired goods which are a necessity to him). Pavesi v. Ford Motor Co., 155 N.J. Super. 373, 382 A.2d 954 (Ch. Div. 1978).

In action by buyer of mobile home against seller for breach of implied warranty of fitness of home for particular purpose, evidence established substantial impairment in value of home within meaning of UCC § 2-608 where it showed that at time of sale of home to plaintiff and plaintiff's commencement of habitation therein, home was infested with numerous "confused flour beetles"; that home's infestation with such beetles in numbers testified to rendered it unfit for use as residence; and that plaintiff's efforts to exterminate beetles had failed. Furthermore, under UCC § 2-608, such impairment in home's value justified plaintiff in revoking acceptance of home. Sauers v. Tibbs, 48 Ill. App. 3d 805, 363 N.E.2d 444 (4th Dist. 1977).

Where new car after its purchase exhibited numerous minor defects and one major defect (frequent stalling of engine), and where seller, despite frequent attempts, failed seasonably to repair such defects, (1) buyer was entitled under UCC § 2-608(1)(a) to revoke acceptance of car, since its defects collectively constituted substantial impairment of its value to buyer; (2) seller did not have unlimited time to repair car's defects; (3) provision in owner's manual limiting buyer's remedies to repair or replacement of defective parts failed as exclusive remedy under UCC § 2-719(2), thus justifying buyer's cancellation of contract and recovery of purchase price; (4) buyer, although failing to prove consequential damages, was entitled to recover incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1) for repair and maintenance costs incurred in caring for car; and (5) lack of privity between buyer and United States distributor of type of car in suit did not relieve distributor of liability to buyer, since distributor was unable to assure court of continued existence of corporate dealer from which buyer had purchased car. Durfee v. Rod Baxter Imports, Inc., 262 N.W.2d 349, 98 A.L.R.3d 1170 (Minn. 1977).

Buyer of new car was entitled to revoke his acceptance pursuant to UCC § 2-608 where, within three weeks after its purchase, car was discovered to be totally inoperable due to defective transmission and where buyer immediately notified seller and manufacturer upon learning of defect. Asciolla v. Manter Oldsmobile-Pontiac, Inc., 117 N.H. 85, 370 A.2d 270 (1977).

Buyer's revocation of acceptance of sloop because it was unseaworthy and continued to leak, despite being allowed to soak in the water and swell for over six weeks, met test for revocation under UCC § 2-608(1) and (2) where (1) buyer purchased sloop in January, 1972, as result of seller's assurances that it was seaworthy; (2) buyer put sloop into the water for first time in June, 1972, and discovered that it was unseaworthy; and (3) buyer notified seller of revocation of acceptance within reasonable time after discovering that sloop was unseaworthy (holding that as matter of common sense, unseaworthy condition of sloop substantially impaired its value to buyer). Werner v. Montana, 117 N.H. 721, 378 A.2d 1130 (1977).

Right of buyer to rescind purchase of stud horse was to be determined at time election to rescind was properly exercised, i.e., when initial attempts at breeding did not meet with success and examination of sperm revealed that the stallion was not acceptable as a breeder; fact that stallion subsequently was bred to 38 mares and produced 27 live foals did not negate claims that warranties as to stallion's capacity as breeder were breached; not only was stallion warranted as being fit for stud purposes but parties agreed that semen samples had to be within normal acceptable limits. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

Where buyers purchased mobile home for purpose of using it as their residence, but soon after they moved in, buyers discovered water and air leaks, gaps in hinged section of mobile home used to widen living room when mobile home was set up, as well as defective doors, cabinets, vents and walls, and where buyers promptly gave seller list of these defects, but seller failed to cure them, value of mobile home to buyers as residence was substantially impaired within meaning of UCC § 2-608(1), thus justifying revocation of acceptance; although defects in mobile home probably could have been repaired at relatively small cost, buyers were deprived of benefits of comfortable home for substantial period of time as result of seller's failure to make timely repairs. Jorgensen v. Pressnall, 274 Or. 285, 545 P.2d 1382 (1976).

Where organ was delivered to buyer's home on December 7, 1972, shortly thereafter two bass pedals and two keys on keyboard failed to play, buyer called seller on December 27, 1972, but nothing was done until March 13, 1973, when seller repaired organ, where, following repairs, one key in every octave in both keyboards failed to play, buyer called seller on May 11, 1973, and told seller that she was still having difficulty with organ and that she wanted refund of purchase price, where buyers agreed to permit seller to bring out replacement organ on condition that if it did not work seller would take it back and refund purchase price of first organ, rhythm system on replacement organ began to malfunction, seller was unable to remedy problem and, during last service call serviceman removed rhythm system component from replacement organ following which lower keyboard failed to play, and where some time after June 1, 1973, seller's employees attempted to return original organ, but were prevented from doing so by buyers who insisted on return of purchase price of organ: (1) evidence was sufficient to establish that defects in organ substantially impaired its value to buyers within meaning of UCC § 2-608(1), thus justifying revocation of acceptance and recovery of purchase price; (2) under all circumstances, buyers notified seller within reasonable time after learning of defects in organ that they intended to revoke their acceptance and ask for refund of purchase price. Schumaker v. Ivers, 90 S.D. 75, 238 N.W.2d 284 (1976).

In action arising out of auction sale of mare described in sales catalog as "barren," but which subsequently "slipped" a dead foal, buyer who effectively revoked sale had right under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-608 to reject mare after acceptance and burden under UCC § 2-607 upon buyer to show breach did not apply. Since acceptance was revoked, burden was on seller to show mare's conformity with catalog description but seller did not meet that burden where he failed to prove that mare was either barren or that, pursuant to usage of trade under UCC § 1-205, mare pronounced in foal and later found empty without evidence of abortion could be described as barren. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

Language contained in contract between buyer and seller of accounting machine that seller's "obligation if the equipment does not meet these warranties is limited solely to correcting the defect or failure, without charge," did not apply to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose; but even if it did, buyer's remedy of revocation was saved, since nothing short of effective right of revocation would satisfy essential purpose of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose where particular accounting machine delivered and installed by seller did not, and could not, solve buyer's problem of getting accurate payroll out on time, which was purpose for which it was purchased. NCR v. Adell Indus., Inc., 57 Mich. App. 413, 225 N.W.2d 785 (1975).

Under UCC § 2-608, buyer was entitled to revoke his acceptance of new automobile following fire under dashboard, where fire substantially impaired value of vehicle, defect causing fire was virtually impossible to discover before acceptance of vehicle, revocation within six weeks of fire was reasonable time within meaning of UCC § 2-608(2), and no substantial change in condition of vehicle occurred between date of fire and date of revocation. Henry v. Don Wood Volkswagen, Inc., 526 S.W.2d 483 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1974).

Under UCC § 2-608, buyer of cattle justifiably revoked acceptance of 398 steers when it was determined that sellers were unable to deliver total of approximately 600 steers in accordance with their obligation under sales contract. Johnsrud v. Lind, 219 N.W.2d 181 (N.D. 1974).

In action by seller to recover purchase price of carpeting there was sufficient evidence to support trial court judgment in favor of purchasers on their counterclaim alleging breach of warranty of merchantability and seeking revocation of acceptance of carpeting pursuant to UCC § 2-608 where, after carpeting was installed in purchaser's home, seams in carpeting split and, upon examination, carpeting was found to be wet, notwithstanding seller's contention that moisture was seeping up into carpeting from concrete slab on which it was installed. Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. v. Planes, 305 So. 2d 248 (Fla. App. 1974).

The test of substantial impairment is not determined by a dollar percentage appraisal but by the effect of the defect upon the intended user of the goods. Hence heating and lighting equipment used in a car wash business in a northern state is such that its absence substantially impairs the contract for the sale of equipment to run such an enterprise. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

13. —Substantial impairment not found.

In action for purchase price of new automobile, where (1) buyer's acts in signing all necessary papers and taking delivery of car were so inconsistent with seller's ownership as to constitute acceptance under UCC § 2-606(1)(c), and (2) buyer had no right to revoke her acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(a), since she had accepted car without knowledge of any nonconformity, court held that seller's proof of sale and delivery of car at agreed price, together with buyer's admission that she took car, executed paper work connected with its sale, and then refused to pay purchase price, made out case that entitled seller to recover purchase price (stating that fact that fan belt broke two days after car's sale did not show such nonconformity as would allow buyer to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608(1)(b)). American Imports, Inc. v. G.E. Employees W. Region Fed. Credit Union, 37 N.C. App. 121, 245 S.E.2d 798 (1978).

Buyer's extensive use of crawler-tractor for 13 months after its purchase, absent proof that such use was not normally productive, negated buyer's attempt to show that tractor had nonconformity, consisting of an allegedly excessive oil consumption, that substantially impaired its value within meaning of UCC § 2-608(1). Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Sygitowicz, 18 Wash. App. 658, 571 P.2d 224 (1977).

In action by purchaser of motor home against seller to enforce written revocation of acceptance pursuant to UCC § 2-608, nonconformity of vehicle at time of surrender approximately one year after delivery did not substantially impair its value to purchaser and did not justify his action in attempting to revoke his acceptance where, inter alia, despite evidence of a large number of defects and repairs, there was no evidence that repairs were inadequate or unsatisfactory, none of defects discovered earlier remained when acceptance was revoked, vehicle was in immaculate condition and for all practical purposes only repair needed was quite minor, and where there was no evidence that purchaser missed business trips or would do so in future because of lingering defects which seller was unwilling or unable to repair. McGilbray v. Scholfield Winnebago, Inc., 221 Kan. 605, 561 P.2d 832 (1977).

Where buyer of truck claimed that vintage of truck affected working agreement buyer had with employer, but where buyer's employability was not impaired as employer hired buyer as a trucking contractor after inspecting truck, buyer failed to prove that difference in age of truck substantially impaired its value to him within contemplation of UCC § 2-608(1). Bergenstock v. Lemay's G.M.C., Inc., 118 R.I. 75, 372 A.2d 69 (1977).

Fact that immediately following acceptance by purchaser new automobile began emitting smoke and making a thumping noise-defects speedily remedied by seller's mechanic-did not constitute substantial impairment in value of vehicle sufficient to support a revocation of acceptance. Rozmus v. Thompson's Lincoln-Mercury Co., 209 Pa. Super. 120, 224 A.2d 782 (1966).

14. Reasonable assumption that defect will be cured.

In action based upon automobile dealer's failure to accept purchaser's notice of revocation of acceptance and tender of automobile back to dealer, jury verdict in purchaser's favor was not against weight of evidence in light of purchaser's previous attempt at revocation, total failure of dealer to notify plaintiff of damage to automobile which had been repaired by dealer prior to sale of car, and dealer's constant representation that any defects in car would be rectified. Luther v. Bud-Jack Corp., 72 Misc. 2d 924 (1972).

In action by buyer of truck against seller and manufacturer for breach of warranty, directed verdict for defendants was error, since factual issue was established as to whether defendants' actions and repeated attempts to make repairs induced buyer to retain truck or prevented him from seeking independent advice from mechanic of his own choice to determine cause of truck's mechanical failure.

15. Discovery of nonconformity.

Applying UCC rules to a 2 party copier lease agreement, lessee's acceptance of copier was reasonably induced by the difficulty of the discovery of defects before acceptance and by the lessor's assurances. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Buyer's acceptance of defective automobile was reasonably induced by difficulty of discovery of defects before acceptance and by the seller's assurances. Rester v. Morrow, 491 So. 2d 204 (Miss. 1986).

In action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose of trailer that was dangerously unroadworthy, (1) trailer's condition demonstrated that implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 were breached, (2) buyer accepted trailer by offering to pay balance of contract price on assumption that trailer could be repaired, (3) under UCC § 2-608(1)(a), buyer was entitled to revoke acceptance on discovering structural defects in trailer's welding and design that he could not have known about without aid of an expert, (4) buyer's revocation of acceptance was timely under UCC § 2-608(2), and (5) under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was not required to prove that damages were inadequate remedy before obtaining right to rescind contract. McCormick v. Ornstein, 119 Ariz. 352, 580 P.2d 1206 (Ct. App. 1978).

Where a ring did not live up to an express warranty that it would appraise for $30,000, the buyer had a right to revoke her acceptance of the ring under Code §§ 2-711(1) and 2-608(1). However, a perhaps more accurate characterization of the facts in this case involved the right given to all buyers under Code § 2-513(1) to inspect goods before purchase. Inspection in a case involving valuable gems entails an appraisal by an expert. Therefore the court concluded that the sale in this case was made subject to the right of the buyer to have the ring appraised and that if the ring did not live up to expectation she had the right to revoke her acceptance under Code § 2-608(1)(b). Lawner v. Engelbach, 433 Pa. 311, 249 A.2d 295 (1969).

A contract providing that all claims for defective goods shall be deemed waived unless presented within 8 days after receipt is manifestly unreasonable and will not be enforced where the defects are latent and could not be discovered until many months after receipt of the merchandise. Q. Vandenberg & Sons v. Siter, 204 Pa. Super. 392, 204 A.2d 494 (1964).

16. Assurances by seller.

Applying UCC rules to a 2 party copier lease agreement, lessee's acceptance of copier was reasonably induced by the difficulty of the discovery of defects before acceptance and by the lessor's assurances. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

Buyer's acceptance of defective automobile was reasonably induced by difficulty of discovery of defects before acceptance and by the seller's assurances. Rester v. Morrow, 491 So. 2d 204 (Miss. 1986).

Buyer's exercise of ownership over farm equipment was inconsistent with alleged revocation of acceptance, despite assurances of salesman that any nonconformity would be cured. Ingle v. Marked Tree Equip. Co., 244 Ark. 1166, 428 S.W.2d 286 (1968).

Where seller assured buyer that all equipment located within four walls of leased building and used in operation of car wash business was included in sale, buyer who subsequently discovered that landlord was claiming title to boiler, blowers, and light fixtures was entitled to revoke his acceptance. Campbell v. Pollack, 101 R.I. 223, 221 A.2d 615 (1966).

Defendant's advertisement that the car he sold to plaintiff was in "very good condition" and his statements at the time of sale that the car had not been in a collision, when in fact the car had previously been "totaled" in an accident and then rebuilt by defendant at his body and fender shop, and that he was selling the car for a friend who had left the country in order to divert plaintiff's suspicion concerning possible trouble with the car, constitute express warranties which may be enforced against both merchants and nonmerchants (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-313) and which may exist, despite the absence of the words "guarantee or warranty", as long as there is an affirmation of fact which is made a part of the basis of the bargain; in addition, defendant's active concealment and failure to disclose the fact that the car had been in an accident constitute fraud especially since defendant used his skill to restore the exterior of the car to lull to rest any suspicion as to the existence of the facts concealed; accordingly, since plaintiff properly revoked his acceptance (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-608) one month after purchase, having first tried on his own to have the car repaired, he is entitled to the cost of the car less the amount realized from the subsequent sale. McGregor v. Dimou, 101 Misc. 2d 756 (1979).

Revocation of acceptance was timely where buyer of used car relied on seller's fraudulent representations that vehicle had not been used for racing and did not contain racing equipment, and, upon discovery of nonconformities, buyer was persuaded not to rescind by seller's unkept promises to cure defects and replace engine; fraud prevented seller from relying on written warranty and parol evidence rule was not applicable. Ed Fine Oldsmobile, Inc. v. Knisley, 319 A.2d 33 (Del. Super. 1974).

The court cited UCC § 2-608 as analogous authority in reaching the conclusion that the buyer of a business could rescind the purchase where it had been induced by fraud and earlier rescission was delayed by the seller's assertions that the business would improve with the summer season, and that the right to rescind was not lost because two substantial payments had been made on the purchase price with knowledge of the falsity of the misrepresentations. Parker v. Johnston, 244 Ark. 355, 426 S.W.2d 155 (1968).

Code § 2-608 recognizes buyer's right to revoke his acceptance of vending machine business despite continued monthly payments, where seller's pre-sale representation as to value and net monthly income were false, were material, and were relied upon by buyer. Parker v. Johnston, 244 Ark. 355, 426 S.W.2d 155 (1968).

Seller's false representation that used airplane had passed a 100-hour inspection by a licensed mechanic and was airworthy was a material one, and where buyer's acceptance of the plane was in reliance upon such misrepresentation he was entitled to rescind or cancel the contract. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

The purchasers of a race horse misrepresented to them by the seller have the same right to rescission as though they had rejected the goods in the first place provided their revocation of acceptance occurs within a reasonable time. Grandi v. LeSage, 74 N.M. 799, 399 P.2d 285 (1965).

18. —Assurance of repair.

In action by buyer of new Lincoln Continental automobile against seller in which buyer alleged seller's breach of warranty and buyer's justifiable revocation of acceptance of vehicle, (1) where buyer, although he did not revoke acceptance until 14 months after sale, was in almost constant touch with seller concerning vehicle's condition and was relying on seller's continued assurances that vehicle would be satisfactorily repaired; (2) where buyer's unequivocal notification to seller that buyer was revoking acceptance of vehicle occurred only when it became apparent to buyer that repeated attempts at adjustment had failed; and (3) where circumstances of case involved almost continuous series of negotiations and repairs, buyer's delay in giving notice of revocation of acceptance did not prejudice seller and was not unreasonable under UCC § 2-608(2). Although seller had right under UCC § 2-508 to attempt to cure vehicle's defects, this right did not last for indefinite period. Furthermore, since continued use of vehicle was inevitable while seller was attempting to repair vehicle's defects as they became apparent, such use did not defeat buyer's revocation of acceptance. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Seller of machinery was entitled to finding as to whether buyer accepted machinery, thus precluding rescission of contract by buyer and recovery of money paid on account, where buyer claimed that it retained and used machinery in its business only upon seller's assurance that seller would correct any problems in connection with machines, but where, on other hand, seller claimed that buyer accepted machines unconditionally. Lenkay Sani Prods. Corp. v. Benitez, 47 A.D.2d 524 (2d Dep't 1975).

A purchaser of van trailers who proposes to use them to haul loads of soft drinks of stated size and weight, who purchases in reliance on the sellers assurance that they are suitable for this purpose, who thereafter on discovery that because of the defects due to light weight construction the vans sag in the middle to the extent that it is necessary to use a fork lift to open and close the doors, who immediately notifies the seller and is given assurance that the defects will be remedied, is not necessarily precluded from subsequently rejecting the vans because of continued use where, after a series of conversations in which he receives assurance that they will be fixed he eventually turns them in on the understanding that he will resume instalment payments at such time as they are returned to him in a usable condition. Trailmobile Div. of Pullman, Inc. v. Jones, 118 Ga. App. 472, 164 S.E.2d 346 (1968).

While revocation of acceptance must be made within a reasonable time, it is not required that it be made within the same period in which notice of breach must be given, or within the time for the discovery of non-conformity after acceptance, or within the time for rejection of tender. This is particularly so when notice of breach was timely given and delay was caused by four successive attempts of the seller to remedy the defect, the seller assuring the buyer each time that the defect had been remedied. Braginetz v. Foreign Motor Sales, Inc., 76 Dauph. Co. 1 (Pa. 1961).

19. Notice of revocation.

Where fuse manufacturers established that they had manufactured and delivered to prime government contractor fuses contracted for, that fuses as tendered had been accepted, and that contractor had refused to pay balances due thereon, and where there was no effective rejection of goods by contractor under UCC § 2-606(1)(b), nor any notification of breach in warranty of goods under § 2-607(3)(a), nor any effective revocation of acceptance under § 2-608(2), any defense or any

"remedy"—that contractor might have had under UCC for nonacceptance of goods or for breach of their warranty or revocation of acceptance was predicated, as condition precedent, upon notification to sellers. However, letter from contractor to fuse manufacturers stating that contractor's cash flow had been severely interrupted due in part to quality problem on part of fuse manufacturers could not be construed to suggest either rejection of acceptance of fuses delivered nor notification of breach of warranty, nor revocation of conformity, much less to constitute identification of particular contract, sale or transaction concerning which complaint was therein attempted by contractor. Lynx, Inc. v. Ordnance Prods., Inc., 273 Md. 1, 327 A.2d 502 (1974).

Notice that a party intends to consider a contract at an end or terminated amounts to a revocation of acceptance, and preserves to the buyer the remedies afforded by § 2-711. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

20. —Sufficient.

In action by buyer of used car to recover purchase price from seller for seller's breach of express and implied warranties, where engine in vehicle at time of sale and also replacement engine subsequently installed were both defective, so as to cause breach of seller's express engine warranty and also breach of vehicle's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), remedy of recovery of purchase price was available to buyer because (1) language in seller's express warranty did not expressly limit buyer's remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts; (2) even if seller's express warranty could be construed as limiting buyer's remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts, such exclusive remedy failed in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2); and (3) buyer's remedies were not limited by any exclusion or modification by seller, under UCC § 2-316(2), of vehicle's implied warranty of merchantability. Furthermore, since buyer under UCC § 2-608(2) had sufficiently revoked her acceptance of vehicle, she was entitled to recover its purchase price. Stream v. Sportscar Salon, Ltd., 91 Misc. 2d 99 (1977).

Evidence, inter alia, that mobile home was delivered and installed on June 7, that buyer had to wait three weeks in order to inspect interior because no keys were delivered with mobile home, that buyer notified seller by letter dated July 3 that he demanded immediate replacement of mobile home, or refund of purchase price where he paid prior to delivery, was sufficient to support conclusion that buyer revoked his acceptance; fact that buyer stayed in unit after revoking did not vitiate any of his rights; seller did not have right to repair and cure defects in accord with UCC § 2-508, notwithstanding buyer's notification of revocation of acceptance, where seller was unable to say how long it would have taken him to make all repairs necessary to get mobile home back into good condition. Davis v. Colonial Mobile Homes, 28 N.C. App. 13, 220 S.E.2d 802 (1975), cert. denied, 289 N.C. 613, 223 S.E.2d 391 (1976).

Where purchaser of mobile home notified seller of defects approximately two weeks after delivery, where on numerous occasions seller attempted to cure defects but failed to do so, where purchaser refused to allow seller to perform any further work, and purchaser sued for return of purchase price, conduct was sufficient notice of revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2). Fenton v. Contemporary Dev. Co., 12 Wash. App. 345, 529 P.2d 883 (1974), review denied, 85 Wash. 2d 1007 (1975).

Constant complaints from September to December with cessation of payment would seem to constitute sufficient notice of revocation of acceptance of mobile home into which buyer had moved. Performance Motors, Inc. v. Allen, 280 N.C. 385, 186 S.E.2d 161 (1972).

21. —Insufficient.

The evidence was insufficient to show that purchasers of a used vehicle properly revoked acceptance of the vehicle in a manner sufficient to trigger damage entitlement pursuant to § 75-2-711, where the purchasers turned the vehicle over to the bank to which their financing documents were assigned, rather than returning the vehicle to the dealer from which they purchased it, the bank was not a party to the litigation, and the purchasers neither pled nor proved an agency relationship between the bank and the dealer; the purchasers' actions in declining to make the necessary payments and delivering the vehicle to the bank for sale with application of the sales proceeds to their benefit were contrary to any justifiable revocation of acceptance. Additionally, the purchasers' action in turning the vehicle over to the bank, and its subsequent sale, did not constitute notice of revocation, which is an essential element for recovery under § 75-2-711, since the record did not reflect that the dealer was aware of this transaction. Moreover, this action was inconsistent with the seller's ownership, and therefore could not constitute notice of revocation; such action confirmed acceptance under § 75-2-606(1)(c). Gast v. Rogers-Dingus Chevrolet, 585 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1991).

Lawnmower manufacturer did not effectively revoke acceptance of grass catcher bags under § 75-2-608, where it indicated to manufacturer of bags that it would accept future shipments and continued to attempt to sell bags, and where, under circumstances of case, defects in bags were never sufficiently brought to bag manufacturer's attention. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

While notice of revocation of acceptance required by UCC § 2-608(2) need not be in any particular form and may be implied from conduct, such notice must inform seller that buyer does not wish to keep the goods. Thus, buyer of crawler-tractor did not effectively revoke acceptance of tractor simply by notifying seller shortly after purchase date about tractor's excessive oil consumption, since such notice did not inform seller that buyer did not wish to keep tractor. Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Sygitowicz, 18 Wash. App. 658, 571 P.2d 224 (1977).

Under Code § 2-608(2) revocation of acceptance not effective until buyer notifies seller thereof; buyer failed to establish revocation of acceptance of wig cases by letters to assignee of seller's accounts receivable asking for credit and promising return of unused cases at buyer's expense, or by non-completed telephone calls to seller with whom buyer had conversation about other matter without speaking of revocation. Grossman v. D'Or, 98 Ill. App. 2d 198, 240 N.E.2d 266 (1st Dist. 1968).

22. Timeliness of notice.

Notice of revocation of acceptance of leased copier, given on August 14th, was timely, where copier had been installed on lessee's premises on May 15th and had provided acceptable service for about a month. J.L. Teel Co. v. Houston United Sales, Inc., 491 So. 2d 851 (Miss. 1986).

In action by buyer of new type of portable sawmill against manufacturer-seller for latter's breach of express and implied warranties attaching to such sawmill, where buyer testified that he was induced into retaining sawmill by defendant's continued representations that it would repair it, and that he modified sawmill under defendant's directions, defendant could not avail itself of UCC § 2-608(2) to foreclose buyer's revocation of acceptance. Butcher v. Garrett-Enumclaw Co., 20 Wash. App. 361, 581 P.2d 1352 (1978), review denied, 91 Wash. 2d 1004 (1978).

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

Seller of dictating machines was entitled to recover agreed price from buyer who accepted delivery under UCC § 2-607(1); seller's termination of buyer as its exclusive distributing agent could not be asserted as defense where, after buyer learned that it was no longer distributor, it failed to take timely action to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 or to give seller timely notice of election to offset damages under UCC § 2-717; nor could buyer rely on UCC § 2-609 right to demand adequate assurance of performance where buyer had already accepted goods in question. Gutor Int'l AG v. Raymond Packer Co., 493 F.2d 938 (1st Cir. Mass. 1974).

The buyer of a used airplane was not required to notify the seller of his intention to revoke his acceptance until he was reasonably certain that the nonconformity impaired the value of the plane to him, and buyer was entitled to have the plane inspected by experts in order to determine the effect of the nonconformity. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

A reasonable time for revocation of acceptance will extend ordinarily beyond the time in which notice of breach must be given. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

While revocation of acceptance must be made within a reasonable time, it is not required that it be made within the same period in which notice of breach must be given, or within the time for the discovery of non-conformity after acceptance, or within the time for rejection of tender. This is particularly so when notice of breach was timely given and delay was caused by four successive attempts of the seller to remedy the defect, the seller assuring the buyer each time that the defect had been remedied. Braginetz v. Foreign Motor Sales, Inc., 76 Dauph. Co. 1 (Pa. 1961).

A rescission based on breach of warranty must be made within a reasonable time and cannot be made if the buyer exercises dominion over the goods or permits the goods to be altered or changed while in his exclusive possession. F.W. Lang Co. v. Fleet, 193 Pa. Super. 365, 165 A.2d 258 (1960).

23. —Substantial change of condition.

Buyer of industrial machine was not entitled to revoke his acceptance under UCC § 2-608, notwithstanding there was breach of warranty, where there was not sufficient showing of damage to warrant conclusion that defects complained of substantially impaired value of machine to buyer, where buyer's use of machine and its depreciation over period of five and one-half years out of a total of seven to ten years life expectancy clearly constituted substantial change in condition of goods, and where although only one and one-half years elapsed by time buyer commenced suit, thus giving notice of revocation, during four-year period that elapsed thereafter, buyer's conduct throughout indicated clear intent to keep machine in production and reap all benefits that would normally attach to ownership. Fargo Mach. & Tool Co. v. Kearney & Trecker Corp., 428 F. Supp. 364 (E.D. Mich. 1977).

Where auto had been returned to seller on numerous occasions for free repairs, there was no effective revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608 where engine finally blew up eighteen months after date of purchase and after auto had been driven 27,000 miles. Poole v. Marion Buick Co., 14 N.C. App. 721, 189 S.E.2d 650 (1972).

24. —Agreement of parties.

Mere fact that because of seller's action the passing of title to stud horse was accelerated by some six months did not affect timing of obligation to inspect horse to determine its fitness for breeding purposes, or decision to accept or reject the horse since, pursuant to agreement, it was only in the two-month period prior to stated date for passing of title and after end of racing season that seller was to have horse tested to determine his fitness for breeding purposes, actual inspection took place during such time and horse sustained no serious bodily injury during last months of racing; inspection and rejection in month before title would have passed absent acceleration was timely. White Devon Farm v. Stahl, 88 Misc. 2d 961 (1976).

25. —Question of law or fact.

Whether acceptance was revoked within reasonable time under UCC § 2-608(2) is question of fact to be determined by circumstances of each case. Heller v. Sullivan, 57 Ill. App. 3d 190, 372 N.E.2d 1036 (1st Dist. 1978).

Fact that buyers stayed in and used mobile home during pendency of lawsuit for cancellation of contract, return of purchase price and incidental and consequential damages could not be, as matter of law, considered waiver of buyers' right to revoke prior acceptance of mobile home under UCC § 2-608; whether there was proper revocation of acceptance due to breach of warranty was question for jury. Mobile Home Sales Mgt. Inc. v. Brown, 115 Ariz. 11, 562 P.2d 1378 (Ct. App. 1977).

Trial court properly submitted to jury issue of whether buyer revoked acceptance of cattle herd within reasonable time under UCC §§ 1-204 and 2-608 and buyer failed to persuade jury that his revocation occurred within reasonable time, notwithstanding cattle were nonconforming, value of herd was substantially impaired and buyer gave notice of nonconformity 17 days after delivery, where, prior to notice of revocation given 15 months later after failure of adjustment negotiations, herd was underfed, herd suffered weight and death loss, and introduction of bulls into herd caused pretermisison of registration. Sylvester v. Watkins, 538 S.W.2d 827 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.re. (Nov. 10, 1976).

Whether goods were substantially impaired by nonconformity under UCC § 2-608(1) and whether buyer's revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608(2) was given within reasonable time are questions of fact for jury. Under UCC § 1-204(2), what is reasonable time for taking any action under the code depends on nature, purpose, and circumstances of such action. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Under subsection (2) of this section, it is a question of fact for the jury if a delay by a purchaser of six months' time in giving the seller notice of the defective condition of a horse and making demand for a refund of the purchase price is or is not made within a reasonable time. Schneider v. Person, 34 Pa. D. & C.2d 10 (1964).

Whether goods are non-conforming and whether such a non-conformity exists as to substantially impair the value of the goods to the buyer are questions of fact to be determined at the trial and should not be determined by the court on the pleadings. Braginetz v. Foreign Motor Sales, Inc., 76 Dauph. Co. 1 (Pa. 1961).

26. —Reasonable.

Where new car with paint chipped off on front end and improper difference in color between paint on front end and paint on rear end was delivered to buyer in darkness, buyer on observing such defects on the next day demanded either new car or return of purchase price from dealer, dealer in compliance with manufacturer's firm policy refused buyer's demand and attempted to repair paint defects, and car after being stripped down to bare metal and repainted three times still had paint defects that marred its appearance and value for buyer, (1) buyer justifiably revoked acceptance of car under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), (2) such revocation of acceptance was timely under UCC § 2-608(2), and (3) buyer under UCC § 2-711(1) was entitled to rescind contract of sale and be returned purchase price of car, less specified offset for buyer's use of car (stating that buyer is no longer barred from remedy of rescission because of his continued use of substantially impaired goods which are a necessity to him). Pavesi v. Ford Motor Co., 155 N.J. Super. 373, 382 A.2d 954 (Ch. Div. 1978).

Where (1) buyer purchased boat under contract of sale which expressly provided that sale would be void if boat did not perform to buyer's satisfaction, (2) boat never performed to buyer's satisfaction, although buyer tested it on weekends for eight days during month following sale, (3) seller refused to accept return of boat at end of such one-month period and repeatedly attempted to correct boat's problems, (4) seller three months later again refused to accept return of boat, and (5) trial court in seller's action for balance due entered judgment in favor of buyer, evidence supported two legal theories, either of which would sustain trial court's judgment. Under first theory, buyer never accepted boat within meaning of UCC § 2-601(a), § 2-602(1), and § 2-606(1), and his rejection of it one month after sale was effective under UCC § 2-602(1). Under second legal theory, buyer did accept boat but later validly revoked his acceptance of it under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), since his delay of over three months in revoking acceptance was reasonable under UCC § 2-608(2) in view of seller's repeated assurances that boat's problems, which were major, would be corrected. Don's Marine, Inc. v. Haldeman, 557 S.W.2d 826 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Mar. 8, 1978).

Buyer of new car was entitled to revoke his acceptance pursuant to UCC § 2-608 where, within three weeks after its purchase, car was discovered to be totally inoperable due to defective transmission and where buyer immediately notified seller and manufacturer upon learning of defect. Asciolla v. Manter Oldsmobile-Pontiac, Inc., 117 N.H. 85, 370 A.2d 270 (1977).

In action arising out of auction sale of mare described in sales catalog as "barren," but which subsequently "slipped" a dead foal, buyer made effective revocation within reasonable time under UCC §§ 1-204 and 2-608 where buyer wrote letters five days after mare "slipped" to seller and to sales director of organization which conducted sale indicating that the sale should be "null and void" on basis of misrepresentation of mare in sales catalog. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

Purchaser of mobile home who advised seller of numerous defects upon delivery of home, but took possession after seller advised buyer that downpayment would be forfeited and assured buyer that repairs would be made to home, was entitled to recover damages against seller for defects on basis of either: (1) theory of rejection of goods under UCC § 2-601, since evidence established that home did not comply with contract terms and seller had no right to threaten to forfeit downpayment; or (2) even if home was accepted, buyer was entitled to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 after using home and discovering further numerous defects. Under either theory, use of mobile home as residence for over year after delivery was not sufficient to render rejection or revocation of acceptance ineffective since use of goods was direct result of oppressive conduct of seller in threatening to forfeit downpayment and further assurances of seller that defects would be repaired. Jones v. Abriani, 169 Ind. App. 556, 350 N.E.2d 635 (1976).

In action by buyer of new Lincoln Continental automobile against seller in which buyer alleged seller's breach of warranty and buyer's justifiable revocation of acceptance of vehicle, (1) where buyer, although he did not revoke acceptance until 14 months after sale, was in almost constant touch with seller concerning vehicle's condition and was relying on seller's continued assurances that vehicle would be satisfactorily repaired; (2) where buyer's unequivocal notification to seller that buyer was revoking acceptance of vehicle occurred only when it became apparent to buyer that repeated attempts at adjustment had failed; and (3) where circumstances of case involved almost continuous series of negotiations and repairs, buyer's delay in giving notice of revocation of acceptance did not prejudice seller and was not unreasonable under UCC § 2-608(2). Although seller had right under UCC § 2-508 to attempt to cure vehicle's defects, this right did not last for indefinite period. Furthermore, since continued use of vehicle was inevitable while seller was attempting to repair vehicle's defects as they became apparent, such use did not defeat buyer's revocation of acceptance. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Where organ was delivered to buyers' home on December 7, 1972, shortly thereafter two bass pedals and two keys on keyboard failed to play, buyer called seller on December 27, 1972, but nothing was done until March 13, 1973, when seller repaired organ, where, following repairs, one key in every octave in both keyboards failed to play, buyer called seller on May 11, 1973, and told seller that she was still having difficulty with organ and that she wanted refund of purchase price, where buyers agreed to permit seller to bring out replacement organ on condition that if it did not work seller would take it back and refund purchase price of first organ, rhythm system on replacement organ began to malfunction, seller was unable to remedy problem and, during last service call serviceman removed rhythm system component from replacement organ following which lower keyboard failed to play, and where some time after June 1, 1973, seller's employees attempted to return original organ, but were prevented from doing so by buyers who insisted on return of purchase price of organ: (1) evidence was sufficient to establish that defects in organ substantially impaired its value to buyers within meaning of UCC § 2-608(1), thus justifying revocation of acceptance and recovery of purchase price; (2) under all circumstances, buyers notified seller within reasonable time after learning of defects in organ that they intended to revoke their acceptance and ask for refund of purchase price. Schumaker v. Ivers, 90 S.D. 75, 238 N.W.2d 284 (1976).

Evidence supported finding that emergency electric power plant was substantially valueless to purchaser and that purchaser was entitled to revoke its acceptance under UCC § 2-608, where it was stipulated that power plant did not produce amount of power specified by contract, where seller himself warranted full unit for performance and did not take any exception to any of specifications as written, and where output of power plant was 65 percent of that called for in specifications and was insufficient to run equipment; furthermore, purchaser acted within reasonable time in revoking its acceptance of contract where seller knew of defects in power plant shortly after delivery, where seller attempted to repair it during 1968 and 1969, and where seller was present at test in June, 1970, when power plant failed to deliver specified power, after which purchaser revoked its acceptance. Regents of Univ. v. Pacific Pump & Supply, Inc., 35 Colo. App. 36, 528 P.2d 941 (1974).

Under UCC § 2-608, buyer was entitled to revoke his acceptance of new automobile following fire under dashboard, where fire substantially impaired value of vehicle, defect causing fire was virtually impossible to discover before acceptance of vehicle, revocation within six weeks of fire was reasonable time within meaning of UCC § 2-608(2), and no substantial change in condition of vehicle occurred between date of fire and date of revocation. Henry v. Don Wood Volkswagen, Inc., 526 S.W.2d 483 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1974).

In action between purchaser of nonconforming mobile home and assignee of security agreement, purchaser's revocation of acceptance occurred within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-608 and 1-204(2) where purchaser relied on dealer's promises to make corrections while retaining option of cancellation; under UCC § 2-711(1) and (3) purchaser retained security interest in price paid and was allowed to recover so much of price as had been paid. Frontier Mobile Home Sales, Inc. v. Trigleth, 256 Ark. 101, 505 S.W.2d 516 (1974).

Allegation that purchaser of new automobile, which was defective, returned it to dealer and demanded either refund of purchase price or new car was sufficient to support claim based on revocation of acceptance pursuant to UCC § 2-608; even though purchaser did not surrender vehicle to dealer until 11 months after date of purchase, notice of revocation of acceptance may have been made within reasonable time after discovery of grounds for revocation in accord with UCC § 2-608 where purchaser allegedly delayed taking any dispositive action pending dealer's unsuccessful attempt to remedy defects in automobile. Galloway v. Cameron Auto, Inc., 97 Dauph. Co. 56 (Pa. 1974).

Where plaintiffs notified defendant of revocation of acceptance of cordwood business 3 months after execution of sales contract, delay was not unreasonable, since it was to be expected from very nature of transaction that plaintiffs might not discover immediately that quantity of dry wood was not as represented. Melms v. Mitchell, 266 Or. 208, 512 P.2d 1336, 65 A.L.R.3d 376 (1973).

In action to recover purchase price of new car, revocation of acceptance was justified and timely, where buyer returned car following repeated but unsuccessful attempts to have seller correct vibration and stalling problems. Stofman v. Keenan Motors, Inc., 63 Pa. D. & C.2d 56 (1973).

Buyers' revocation of acceptance of automobile 9 months after sale of automobile and 7 months after filing of suit for rescission of sale contract was within "reasonable time" when balanced against obligation of automobile dealer under contract. Moore v. Howard Pontiac-American, Inc., 492 S.W.2d 227 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1972).

Where buyer of used car waited 3 weeks for dealer to repair brakes and then notified 2 salesmen and credit manager of seller of revocation of acceptance, revocation was timely and reasonable, especially in view of other problems with car which resulted in buyer's actual possession of it for only 7 days during about 6 weeks of ownership, and lack of any evidence that seller ever attempted to cure defect by repairing faulty brakes. Overland Bond & Inv. Corp. v. Howard, 9 Ill. App. 3d 348, 292 N.E.2d 168 (1st Dist. 1972).

Acceptance of crane delivered in July 1965 and repeatedly repaired for malfunctioning over a period of time while in use was effectively revoked by notice of revocation of acceptance and election to rescind given on June 17, 1966. Uganski v. Little Giant Crane & Shovel, Inc., 35 Mich. App. 88, 192 N.W.2d 580 (1971).

Where repeated attempted (30 returns for repairs within year of purchase) adjustment of auto's excessive oil use, skipping and misfiring failed, buyer revoked his acceptance of auto within "reasonable time" when revocation occurred within year of purchase. Tiger Motor Co. v. McMurtry, 284 Ala. 283, 224 So. 2d 638 (1969).

A delay of less than three weeks between the time that the buyer discovered the unairworthiness of the used airplane he had purchased and the date on which he gave notice to the seller of his intention to rescind was not an unreasonable delay. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

27. —Not reasonable.

refused to allow manufacturer's mechanic to inspect defective engine; (4) where buyer, more than six months after date engine was put into operation, notified seller that he had removed engine from his boat, tendered engine back to seller, and demanded return of purchase price; and (5) where such tender and demand were refused by seller, (1) trial court properly found that all terms of sale contract had not been reduced to writing; (2) admission in evidence of oral warranties as part of sale contract did not violate parol evidence rule contained in UCC § 2-202; (3) such oral warranties did not constitute "sale or return" provision in contract under UCC § 2-326(1)(b), but were analogous to "sale on approval" provision under UCC § 2-326(1)(a) and thus were not required by UCC § 2-326(4) to be in writing; (4) buyer's failure to allow seller to exercise right under UCC § 2-508(1) to inspect and repair engine negated warranty provisions of sale contract; (5) buyer accepted engine under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) by not seasonably notifying seller of buyer's election to return engine; and (6) buyer's delay of nearly six months in informing seller of buyer's intention to revoke acceptance of engine was insufficient compliance with buyer's good faith obligation under UCC § 1-203 and did not revoke such acceptance under UCC § 2-608. Peter Pan Seafoods, Inc. v. Olympic Foundry Co., 17 Wash. App. 761, 565 P.2d 819 (1977), review denied, 90 Wash. 2d 1015 (1978).

Retention of pleasure fishing boat by buyer for 32 months before attempting revocation constituted unreasonable delay after discovery of defects and, therefore, revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608 was not available remedy; although seller's assurances and attempted repairs justified some of buyer's delay, delay of 32 months was not reasonable particularly where buyer retained possession of boat after his attempted revocation and continued to use it for fishing trips right up to time of trial. Furthermore, continued use of boat for fishing trips did not indicate that buyer retained boat under UCC § 2-711(3) and § 9-207(1) and (4) for purpose of protecting his security interest pending reimbursement, but rather such use appeared to be “act inconsistent with the seller’s ownership” which, under UCC § 2-606(1)(c), constituted new acceptance. Wadsworth Plumbing & Heating Co. v. Tollycraft Corp., 277 Or. 433, 560 P.2d 1080 (1977).

Buyer’s attempted revocation under UCC § 2-608 of contract for purchase of electrical hearing control system was neither timely nor supported by facts where buyer failed to prove that consoles, as delivered in June and July, 1969, respectively, were defective in any respect, where buyer did not attempt to revoke its acceptance until February, 1970, although consoles were defective from date of their delivery and buyer had ample opportunity to test them in production as early as July, 1969, when they were installed, and where installation of additional equipment in one console in January, 1970, totally altered basic functioning capability of that console. Republic Corp. v. Proceadyne Corp., 401 F. Supp. 1061 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Where conduct of buyer prior to trial did not constitute notice of revocation of acceptance of cot covers for exercising device and notice given to seller in buyer’s post-trial brief was not within reasonable time, buyer was precluded from recovery of purchase price under Missouri UCC. Foam-Tex Indus., Inc. v. Relaxaway Corp., 358 F. Supp. 8 (E.D. Mo. 1973).

Noting seasonal nature of toy business and somewhat faddish demand for certain toys, held that delay until mid-February in giving notice of revocation of acceptance of toys delivered prior to Christmas was unreasonable. Hays Merchandise, Inc. v. Dewey, 78 Wash. 2d 343, 474 P.2d 270 (1970).

28. Pleading.

Pleadings showing that food processor did not discover the alleged breach of warranty until more than six months after delivery, and did not notify the seller of frozen corn until more than four months later, disclosed on their face what appears prima facie to be an unreasonable delay by the fruit processor in discovering a breach of warranty in delivered goods, and a delay in notifying the seller of the breach, and the claim of the fruit processor was subject to demurrer unless it simultaneously therewith explained and justified the delay. General Foods Corp. v. Bittering Co., 31 Pa. D. & C.2d 282 (1963).

(1) A contract for sale imposes an obligation on each party that the other's expectation of receiving due performance will not be impaired. When reasonable grounds for insecurity arise with respect to the performance of either party the other may in writing demand adequate assurance of due performance and until he receives such assurance may if commercially reasonable suspend any performance for which he has not already received the agreed return.

(2) Between merchants the reasonableness of ground for insecurity and the adequacy of any assurance offered shall be determined according to commercial standards.

(3) Acceptance of any improper delivery or payment does not prejudice the aggrieved party's right to demand adequate assurance of future performance.

(4) After receipt of a justified demand failure to provide within a reasonable time not exceeding thirty (30) days such assurance of due performance as is adequate under the circumstances of the particular case is a repudiation of the contract.

1. In general.

UCC § 2-609(1) is designed to obviate necessity of one party's having to guess whether other party intends to perform when former begins to receive signals that cause him concern. Cole v. Melvin. 441 F. Supp. 193 (D.S.D. 1977).

In contractor's action against subcontractor for breach of contract to install flooring in building, defendant could not escape liability on ground that plaintiff's breach of prior contract with defendant constituted reasonable grounds for insecurity under UCC § 2-609 with respect to plaintiff's performance of contract in suit, since UCC Article 2 applies only to transactions in goods and contract in suit was primarily contract for performance of services with sale of goods necessary to perform such services being incidental to the service contract. Test for determining whether mixed contract for sale of goods and services constitutes sale of goods under Uniform Commercial Code is whether contract's predominant purpose is to render services with sale of goods being incidentally involved or to sell goods with rendition of services being incidentally involved. Ranger Constr. Co. v. Dixie Floor Co., 433 F. Supp. 442 (D.C.S.C. 1977).

The Ohio Uniform Commercial Code recognizes that a party to an instalment contract has the right to a continuing sense of reliance and security that the promised performance will be forthcoming when due. Republic-Odin Appliance Corp. v. Consumers Plumbing & Heating Supply Co., 24 Ohio Op. 2d 226, 192 N.E.2d 132 (C.P. 1963).

2. Acceptance of delivery or payment.

Seller of dictating machines was entitled to recover agreed price from buyer who accepted delivery under UCC § 2-607(1); seller's termination of buyer as its exclusive distributing agent could not be asserted as defense where, after buyer learned that it was no longer distributor, it failed to take timely action to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 or to give seller timely notice of election to offset damages under UCC § 2-717; nor could buyer rely on UCC § 2-609 right to demand adequate assurance of performance where buyer had already accepted goods in question. Gutor Int'l AG v. Raymond Packer Co., 493 F.2d 938 (1st Cir. Mass. 1974).

3. Grounds for insecurity; reasonable.

In seller's action for buyer's failure to pay for 10,000 bushels of corn delivered to buyer, where evidence showed (1) that seller had entered into four contracts for sale of corn to buyer, (2) that buyer had paid for corn delivered under first contract only after demand made by plaintiff's attorney, (3) that buyer had also refused to pay for corn delivered under second contract, and (4) that such failure to pay was result of effort by buyer to compel performance of other contracts that buyer had entered into with seller's brother and father, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-609(1), seller, in light of buyer's delay in paying for corn delivered under first contract and its failure to pay for corn delivered under second contract, was justified in not delivering corn under third and fourth contracts, since buyer's conduct constituted reasonable grounds for insecurity on part of seller with respect to buyer's performance under the third and fourth contracts, and (2) that seller was entitled to payment in full for corn delivered under second contract, since buyer's refusal to pay therefor was not legally justified (observing that buyer's action in withholding payment to seller as leverage against seller's brother and father, with respect to their dealings with buyer, established lack of good faith on part of buyer in its dealings with seller). Toppert v. Bunge Corp., 60 Ill. App. 3d 607, 377 N.E.2d 324 (3d Dist. 1978).

Purchaser of cash registers had reasonable grounds for insecurity within meaning of UCC § 2-609 where seller projected delivery of 23 units by first half of 1969 but later rescheduled delivery to January, 1970, where buyer learned in March, 1969, that work had not commenced and pilot unit would not be ready until July, 1969, where seller's own personnel were concerned about design of model and attempted to reduce buyer's order, and where prototype unit furnished buyer performed unsatisfactorily. Written demand for adequate assurance of performance was not necessary where evidence established that buyer and seller had clear understanding that buyer had suspended performance until receipt of adequate assurance of performance from seller and thus seller's failure to give adequate assurance entitled buyer to suspend its performance and cancel order pursuant to UCC § 2-610 and UCC § 2-711. AMF, Inc. v. McDonald's Corp., 536 F.2d 1167 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

4. —Not reasonable.

Buyer of cooling systems to be incorporated into electronic countermeasure (ECM) pods for United States Air Force, after breaching contract by failing to supply seller with source-control drawings for such systems within reasonable time, could not claim that it had ample grounds under UCC § 2-609(1) for feeling insecure and for demanding adequate assurances of due performance by seller, and that it was also entitled under UCC § 2-610(b) to terminate contract for seller's alleged antipicatory breach thereof, where buyer's own breach had so contributed to facts giving rise to buyer's alleged insecurity as to estop it from demanding any adequate assurances of performance. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Garrett Corp., 437 F. Supp. 1301 (D. Md. 1977), aff'd, 601 F.2d 155 (4th Cir. Md. 1979).

In action for breach by seller of contract to repurchase Blonde D'Aquitaine heifers, where contract provided that buyer would buy 16 heifers from seller, that all would be fertile for breeding, that seller would "purchase same heifers" each guaranteed "safe in calf" to purebred Blonde D'Aquitaine bulls, and that contract would be "dissolved" if buyer should resell heifers to another person before July 31, 1974, and where buyer did not resell heifers to another person before such date, but seller refused to repurchase heifers because of drastic drop in their market price, (1) seller's repurchase was not contingent on buyer's providing proof that heifers were pregnant before tender to seller; (2) buyer was not obligated to have all 16 heifers pregnant at end of period for seller's repurchase, and seller was obligated to repurchase all that had become pregnant by that time; (3) buyer's allegation that seller was guilty of anticipatory repudiation of contract was not based on reasonable grounds within meaning of UCC § 2-609(1); (4) although buyer did not make tender at place agreed on, buyer's tender in telephone call of 11 pregnant heifers sufficiently complied with UCC § 2-503(1) in view of buyer's reasonable belief that seller would not accept heifers if buyer would transport them to place agreed on; and (5) on seller's breach of repurchase agreement, buyer's measure of damages was not difference between resale price and contract price under UCC § 2-706(1)-because of buyer's failure to effect commercially reasonable sale within meaning of UCC § 2-706(1)-but was difference between contract price and market price under UCC § 2-708(1), plus incidental damages for sheltering and feeding rejected heifers. Cole v. Melvin, 441 F. Supp. 193 (D.S.D. 1977).

In action by seller of one million gallon water tank against buyer for repudiation of sales contract, in which buyer counter-claimed for breach of contract, water tank constituted goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1) even though tank was not in existence when contract was executed. However, under sales contract which required payment 30 days after completion of tank, knowledge by seller that buyer had not completed loan negotiations was not "reasonable grounds for insecurity" within meaning of UCC § 2-609 justifying seller's demand of buyer for personal guarantee or for escrow of entire purchase price. Pittsburgh-Des Moines Steel Co. v. Brookhaven Manor Water Co., 532 F.2d 572 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

Seller who sold lifting magnets to buyer on open account did not have right to reclaim magnets under UCC § 2-702(2), dealing with buyer's insolvency, or UCC § 2-609(4), dealing with right to adequate assurance of performance, where (1) seller produced no evidence that buyer was insolvent when it received either first or second shipment of magnets, and seller did not assert its right to reclaim within applicable ten day limitation; (2) there was no evidence that seller had reasonable grounds for insecurity with respect to buyer's performance, nor any demand for adequate assurance made in writing. National Ropes, Inc. v. National Diving Serv., Inc., 513 F.2d 53 (5th Cir. Fla. 1975).

No reasonable grounds for insecurity existed under UCC § 2-609 where cabinets for which payment had been withheld had not been installed as provided for by contract. Ellis Mfg. Co. v. Brant, 480 S.W.2d 301 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

The mere fact that payment under one contract is not made when due is not necessarily a reasonable ground for insecurity as to payment under another contract; in instant case, there was no question of defendant's financial ability to pay and plaintiff knew that defendant was withholding payment in order to cover possible losses when it replaced plywood order; even if seller had reason to suppose that buyer might also refuse to make payment for order in issue if it were shipped, cancellation of the order without a prior request for guarantee of payment was not justified. Northwest Lumber Sales, Inc. v. Continental Forest Prods., Inc., 261 Or. 480, 495 P.2d 744 (1972).

5. Demand for assurance.

In buyer's suit for seller's alleged breach of contract to sell two million pounds of polyvinyl chloride plastic in regrind form for use in manufacture of records, (1) where telephone conversations between buyer and seller caused buyer to doubt that seller could deliver sufficient quantity of suitable plastic and buyer therefore gave seller revocable letter of credit instead of irrevocable letter, and (2) where seller then declared that buyer had breached contract and demanded payment of liquidated damages as provided in contract for such breach, district court's granting of summary judgment for defendant seller would be vacated and case remanded for further proceedings because (1) reasonableness of buyer's action in giving seller revocable letter of credit, allegedly to avoid paying for nonconforming goods, was question of fact that could not be resolved on summary judgment; (2) buyer may have been entitled under UCC § 2-609(1) to suspend its performance (by not furnishing seller with irrevocable letter of credit) until seller had complied with buyer's request for assurance of performance by seller; and (3) buyer may also have been entitled under UCC § 2-610(a) and (c) to suspend its performance for seller's possible anticipatory breach of such contract. Diskmakers, Inc. v. DeWitt Equip. Corp., 555 F.2d 1177 (3d Cir. N.J. 1977).

Seller of corn was not entitled, pursuant to UCC § 2-609, to withhold from buyer delivery of corn due on contract for sale of corn, notwithstanding buyer had made deductions for grading and weight discrepancies, where seller was promised reimbursement for grading discounts and was given option of directing future deliveries at another elevator and where seller did not in writing demand adequate assurance of due performance from buyer. Teeman v. Jurek, 312 Minn. 292, 251 N.W.2d 698 (1977).

Notwithstanding sale was on credit and seller's suspicion that buyer was insolvent may have been inaccurate, seller was justified under UCC § 2-609(1) in demanding adequate assurance of due performance by buyer and thus seller's subsequent nondelivery did not constitute breach of contract, after buyer refused to give any assurances and purported to cancel contract, where, inter alia, buyer was in arrears in payment for goods already delivered, buyer's "Fifth Avenue Showroom" was telephone answering service, buyer's factory was someone else's premises to which buyer did not have key, buyer did not lease space on premises, buyer had no employees, payroll, machinery or equipment on premises, another supplier told seller that it had been stuck with an unpaid bill by buyer, and buyer had bad reputation for performance or payment. Turntables, Inc. v. Gestetner, 52 A.D.2d 776 (1st Dep't 1976).

6. Suspension of performance.

In action for breach by buyer of contract to purchase bank-building equipment, where buyer contended that it had properly rejected the entire contract pursuant to UCC § 2-601(a), and seller contended that under UCC § 2-609(1), it had right to refuse to render further performance until buyer had given adequate assurance that it would honor its contractual commitments, evidence amply supported jury's findings that seller, pending appropriate assurance from buyer, had right to refuse full performance of the contract, and that this right did not constitute a breach of contract by the seller. Financial Bldg. Consultants, Inc. v. St. Charles Mfg. Co., 145 Ga. App. 768, 244 S.E.2d 877 (1978).

Purchaser of cash registers had reasonable grounds for insecurity within meaning of UCC § 2-609 where seller projected delivery of 23 units by first half of 1969 but later rescheduled delivery to January, 1970, where buyer learned in March, 1969, that work had not commenced and pilot unit would not be ready until July, 1969, where seller's own personnel were concerned about design of model and attempted to reduce buyer's order, and where prototype unit furnished buyer performed unsatisfactorily. Written demand for adequate assurance of performance was not necessary where evidence established that buyer and seller had clear understanding that buyer had suspended performance until receipt of adequate assurance of performance from seller and thus seller's failure to give adequate assurance entitled buyer to suspend its performance and cancel order pursuant to UCC § 2-610 and UCC § 2-711. AMF, Inc. v. McDonald's Corp., 536 F.2d 1167 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

7. Repudiation.

Where in 1969 United States, through Bureau of Indian Affairs ("BIA") on behalf of Indian tribe entered into timber sale contract with lumber company and, although contract was to have been fully performed before December 31, 1969, not all timber subject to contract was taken during 1969 and written extension of contract to December 31, 1970, was executed by lumber company and tribe with approval of BIA, where additional one-year extension was requested by lumber company in December, 1970, tribe agreed to extension and signed agreement was forwarded by BIA to lumber company on or about January 28, 1971, although extension was never executed by lumber company's surety, and where in December, 1971, lumber company requested additional extension of contract to December 31, 1972, but where no logging took place under contract after September 15, 1969: (1) waiver of performance to December 31, 1970, did not operate as waiver of performance for 1971 and, under UCC § 2-609, letters from BIA to lumber company constituted sufficient notice that strict performance of contract would be required, upon receipt of which, lumber company was obligated to provide adequate assurance of performance; (2) under UCC § 2-609(4), lumber company's failure to perform or give adequate assurance of performance within reasonable time amounted to repudiation of contract. In re Humboldt Fir, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 292 (N.D. Cal. 1977), aff'd, 625 F.2d 330 (9th Cir. 1980).

Where seller of grain notified buyer on January 26, 1973 that seller would not deliver any grain to buyer on any of 14 outstanding contracts between parties until buyer had paid seller all monies due for deliveries previously made, which monies buyer had retained to protect himself against actual or potential loss from seller's failure to make timely delivery of grain under certain contracts, seller was guilty within meaning of UCC § 2-610 of anticipatory repudiation of contracts with last-delivery dates occurring after January 31, 1973 by failing to deliver any grain at all after January 26, 1973 because (1) Uniform Commercial Code does not give party right to refuse performance under one contract between parties simply because other party had breached separate contract between them; (2) measures short of suspending delivery under all contracts could have preserved seller's right to payment for prior grain deliveries; (3) seller did not employ remedy available under UCC § 2-609(1) of requesting assurance of buyer's performance; (4) time was not of the essence under contracts repudiated and at time of such repudiation, there was no indication that buyer's ability to pay was impaired; and (5) seller was first party to breach any of the contracts. National Farmers Org. v. Bartlett & Co., Grain, 560 F.2d 1350 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977).

In action by supplier of plumbing and heating supplies against contractor for materials supplied to contractor under terms of written installment contract, contractor's failure to pay for several deliveries of supplies was breach of contract; fact that supplier brought present action with respect only to past installments did not result in reinstatement of contract where supplier had "reasonable grounds for insecurity," informed contractor that it would deliver balance of material only if payment of entire contract was guaranteed, and contractor's failure to provide adequate assurance of due performance within reasonable time after such request, and after action had been brought, was repudiation of contract, excusing supplier from further performance thereunder. Kunian v. Development Corp. of Am., 165 Conn. 300, 334 A.2d 427 (1973).

When either party repudiates the contract with respect to a performance not yet due the loss of which will substantially impair the value of the contract to the other, the aggrieved party may

(a) for a commercially reasonable time await performance by the repudiating party; or

(b) resort to any remedy for breach (Section 2-703 or Section 2-711) [Sections 75-2-703 or 75-2-711], even though he has notified the repudiating party that he would await the latter's performance and has urged retraction; and

(c) in either case suspend his own performance or proceed in accordance with the provisions of this chapter on the seller's right to identify goods to the contract notwithstanding breach or to salvage unfinished goods (Section 2-704) [Section 75-2-704].

1. In general.

UCC § 2-610(a) and § 2-713(1) should be interpreted in a consistent manner. Thus, since under UCC § 2-610(a), an aggrieved party may, for a commercially reasonable time, await performance, UCC § 2-713(1) should be interpreted to measure damages within a commercially reasonable time after learning of the repudiation. First Nat'l Bank v. Jefferson Mtg. Co., 576 F.2d 479 (3d Cir. N.J. 1978).

Where lessor agreed to lease 144 television sets to lessee for period of 60 months, lessee was given option to purchase goods at expiration of such period for one dollar per set, lease agreement was repudiated by lessee before delivery of goods to lessee, and lessee defended repudiation on ground that, in violation of express provision in lease, lessor had requested lessee to execute certain forms for filing as part of lessor's financing of lease contract, court held (1) that lessor's asking for financing documents did not constitute repudiation of lease and that lessor had unequivocally sought to deliver goods, (2) that lessee was not free to refuse goods simply because of request to prepare financing forms, and (3) that under circumstances of case, lessor was not obligated to make tender of goods, since under UCC § 2-610(c), lessee's repudiation of lease had eliminated lessor's duty of further performance (reinstating trial court's judgment allowing recovery for 35 of the television sets). Tenavision, Inc. v. Neuman, 45 N.Y.2d 145, 379 N.E.2d 1166 (1978).

Repudiation within meaning of UCC § 2-610 occurs when one party declares that he will not perform under the contract or that he will perform only on conditions that go beyond the contract, as where such party declares that he will not perform unless the other party agrees to pay a higher price for the goods than that originally contracted for (holding that finding that defendant had breached or repudiated contract for sale of grain sorghum at specified price per hundred-weight was supported by the evidence). Jon-T Farms, Inc. v. Goodpasture, Inc., 554 S.W.2d 743, 1 A.L.R.4th 512 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 5, 1978).

Where there has been an anticipatory breach of prior agreements, UCC § 2-209 is, by its terms, inapplicable, and UCC § 2-610 becomes applicable to show what alternatives are available to the party aggrieved by an anticipatory breach. Gorge Lumber Co. v. Brazier Lumber Co., 6 Wash. App. 327, 493 P.2d 782 (1972).

2. Impairment of contract.

Under Code § 2-610 repudiation of contract is not actionable unless it "substantially impairs value of contract", and test to determine if substantial value of contract has been impaired is whether "material inconvenience or injustice will result." Fredonia Broadcasting Corp. v. RCA Corp., 481 F.2d 781 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

3. —Effect of retraction.

Where contract between owner of commercial tennis courts and defendant manufacturer and seller of air structures for sale and installation of three such structures to cover owner's tennis courts by November 15, 1975, was entered into on October 7, 1975, and became unconditional obligation on part of defendant on October 28, 1975, when owner obtained financing for such purchase, admission by defendant's employees on October 29, 1975, that defendant could not complete installation on November 15, 1975, as promised, constituted anticipatory repudiation of contract by defendant under UCC § 2-610 and Comment 1, so as to justify owner's purchase of substitute equipment from different manufacturer. Moreover, defendant's failure to deliver and complete installation of air structures by November 15, 1975, constituted breach of contract sued on, so as to justify under UCC § 2-711(1) owner's cancellation of contract on November 20, 1975 (applying Pennsylvania law; also holding that letter from defendant to owner on November 17, 1975, in which defendant offered to complete installation, could not serve under UCC § 2-611(1) as retraction of defendant's earlier repudiation because letter was written two days after defendant's complete performance was due). Tennisland, Inc. v. Precision Tennis Sys., 437 F. Supp. 339 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

4. —Substantial impairment.

Evidence that farmer indicated he wished to deliver soy beans during January as specified by his contract with buyer, but was notified delivery date had been extended into February, and that farmer was told reason for extension was buyer's inability to accept soy beans, was sufficient to support determination that buyer repudiated contract; buyer's repudiation substantially impaired value of contract to farmer under UCC § 2-610 where, although farmer had agreed to deliver 3,000 bushels of soy beans, his soy bean crop came to only 2,000 bushels leaving him 1,000 bushels short, where price of soy beans was increasing daily, and where cost to farmer of making up his 1,000 bushel shortage would have increased materially if he were forced to wait for February delivery date and, thus, pursuant to UCC § 2-703(f), farmer was authorized to cancel agreement. Pillsbury Co. v. Ward, 250 N.W.2d 35 (Iowa 1977).

5. —Not substantial impairment.

Although plaintiff seller requested UCC-1 forms from defendants for secondary financing, the mere asking for these statements would not constitute a repudiation of the agreements, which did not provide for such financing; regardless of how the seller desired to finance the transaction, it unequivocally sought to deliver the television sets to defendants who, therefore, were not at liberty to refuse the goods simply because requests to prepare UCC-1 secondary financing forms had been made and denied. Tenavision, Inc. v. Neuman, 45 N.Y.2d 145, 379 N.E.2d 1166 (1978).

Buyer of cooling systems to be incorporated into electronic countermeasure (ECM) pods for United States Air Force, after breaching contract by failing to supply seller with source-control drawings for such systems within reasonable time, could not claim that it had ample grounds under UCC § 2-609(1) for feeling insecure and for demanding adequate assurances of due performance by seller, and that it was also entitled under UCC § 2-610(b) to terminate contract for seller's alleged anticipatory breach thereof, where buyer's own breach had so contributed to facts giving rise to buyer's alleged insecurity as to estop it from demanding any adequate assurances of performance. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. Garrett Corp., 437 F. Supp.

Shipping instructions issued by buyer calling for delivery of 10,000 tons of fertilizer during first 25 working days of month, freight prepaid, to places other than buyer's plant, did not constitute anticipatory repudiation of contract under which seller agreed to sell and ship, and buyer agreed to buy and receive at its plant, 10,000 tons of fertilizer within eight-month period of time where (1) quantity requested in shipping instructions did not exceed quantity specified in contract; (2) evidence established that prepayment of freight and shipping to place other than buyer's plant were in accord with course of dealing between parties and, even without course of dealing, there was nothing in language of contract repugnant to place or manner of shipment specified in shipping instructions; (3) seller failed to demonstrate that buyer's demanding entire season's supply in one month was commercially unreasonable and not made in good faith as required by UCC § 2-311(1). Neal-Cooper Grain Co. v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., 508 F.2d 283 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

6. Remedies.

Where seller of grain notified buyer on January 26, 1973 that seller would not deliver any grain to buyer on any of 14 outstanding contracts between parties until buyer had paid seller all monies due for deliveries previously made, which monies buyer had retained to protect himself against actual or potential loss from seller's failure to make timely delivery of grain under certain contracts, seller was guilty within meaning of UCC § 2-610 of anticipatory repudiation of contracts with last-delivery dates occurring after January 31, 1973 by failing to deliver any grain at all after January 26, 1973 because (1) Uniform Commercial Code does not give party right to refuse performance under one contract between parties simply because other party had breached separate contract between them; (2) measures short of suspending delivery under all contracts could have preserved seller's right to payment for prior grain deliveries; (3) seller did not employ remedy available under UCC § 2-609(1) of requesting assurance of buyer's performance; (4) time was not of the essence under contracts repudiated and at time of such repudiation, there was no indication that buyer's ability to pay was impaired; and (5) seller was first party to breach any of the contracts. National Farmers Org. v. Bartlett & Co., Grain, 560 F.2d 1350 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977).

UCC § 2-610(b) gives aggrieved party option to "resort to any remedy for breach...even though he has notified the repudiating party that he would await the latter's performance and has urged the retraction," and this negates any requirement that there must be acceptance of anticipatory breach by aggrieved party. William B. Tanner Co. v. WIOO, Inc., 528 F.2d 262 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975).

Where dealer in lighting fixtures agreed to furnish fixtures to electric subcontractor at lump-sum price, subject to additions or reductions as required by subcontractor, subcontractor had option under UCC § 2-610, when dealer repudiated agreement, to "cover" in accord with UCC § 2-712(1). Robert Mfg. Co. v. South Bay Corp., 82 Misc. 2d 250 (1975).

Under UCC buyer can seek damages for anticipatory repudiation of contract and for breach of warranty. Fredonia Broadcasting Corp. v. RCA Corp., 481 F.2d 781 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

Seller of nickel cathodes bargained for and had every right to expect that it would receive valid check, and check which was subject to stop payment order at time of receipt was not valid, so that seller had right under Code to cancel contract, even though it might well not have chosen to do so if price of metal had gone down instead of up. Goldstein v. Stainless Processing Co., 465 F.2d 392 (7th Cir. Ill. 1972).

Claim for additional sum by boat seller was rejection of contractual obligation; absent any evidence that this repudiation was ever retracted or that retraction was made known to buyer, buyer was entitled to rescission. Puget Sound Marina, Inc. v. Jorgensen, 3 Wash. App. 476, 475 P.2d 919 (1970).

7. —Waiting for commercially reasonable time.

In action by bank against mortgage company for breach of contract to sell bank mortgage-backed securities guaranteed by Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA), where evidence showed (1) that such sale was orally arranged by mortgage broker, (2) that mortgage company did not authorize broker to make contract with bank, but contemplated solicitation of offer to buy at specified price, subject to acceptance of proposed written commitment, and (3) that mortgage company repudiated oral contract made by broker on October 1, 1973, long before date fixed for contract's performance, court held (1) that mortgage company was not liable to bank, since it did not authorize broker to make oral contract in suit and did not subsequently ratify it, (2) broker, because of breach of its implied warranty of authority, was liable to bank for all damages resulting from such breach, (3) letter sent by bank to confirm oral contract satisfied statute of frauds provision in UCC § 8-319(c) [Repealed], since it was written promptly, was received by party against whom enforcement was sought (mortgage company), and was not objected to in writing within ten days, (4) securities involved were investment securities within meaning of UCC § 8-102(1)(a), (5) bank did not attempt to "cover" such securities by independent purchases on the market, (6) bank's damages were to be measured by damages that bank could have recovered from nonperforming seller for breach of an authorized contract, (7) under UCC § 2-713(1), such measure of damages was difference between market price of securities at time when bank, as purchaser thereof, learned of breach and contract price of securities, (8) phrase "at the time when the buyer learned of the breach" in UCC § 2-713(1) means, in present suit, "at the time the buyer learned of the repudiation," and (9) UCC § 2-713(1) would be interpreted to measure bank's damages as occurring "within a commercially reasonable time" after bank learned of repudiation of oral contract (applying New Jersey law; holding that because of circumstances in GNMA securities market at time of mortgage company's anticipatory repudiation of oral contract in suit, a commercially reasonable time for bank to await performance, as provided by UCC

§ 2-610(a), did not extend substantially beyond date on which repudiation occurred). First Nat'l Bank v. Jefferson Mtg. Co., 576 F.2d 479 (3d Cir. N.J. 1978).

UCC § 2-610(a) and § 2-713(1) should be interpreted in a consistent manner. Thus, since under UCC § 2-610(a), an aggrieved party may, for a commercially reasonable time, await performance, UCC § 2-713(1) should be interpreted to measure damages within a commercially reasonable time after learning of the repudiation. First Nat'l Bank v. Jefferson Mtg. Co., 576 F.2d 479 (3d Cir. N.J. 1978).

In action for breach of oral contract to sell and deliver by end of 1973 10,000 bushels of corn to plaintiff grain dealer, who in reliance on such contract resold the corn for delivery on or before January 1, 1974, course of performance by parties justified finding that parties had agreed that tender of payment by plaintiff prior to delivery of corn, which would ordinarily be required under UCC § 2-511(1), was not condition precedent to defendant's duty to tender and complete deliveries of corn contracted for. Furthermore, even assuming that plaintiff could have treated defendant's silence, after delivering and receiving payment for 2,700 bushels of corn by March, 1973, as repudiation of contract, plaintiff's waiting until December 28, 1973 before considering contract breached was not unreasonable under UCC § 2-610(a) (noting that earliest date on which plaintiff could have learned of defendant's breach was August 14, 1973, and also holding that under UCC § 2-713(1), use of December 28, 1973 as date for determining, with respect to plaintiff's damages, market value of undelivered corn was proper). Carson v. Mulnix, 263 N.W.2d 701 (Iowa 1978).

In action by wholesaler against purchaser to recover for breach of contract to purchase Christmas trees, there was sufficient evidence to support finding that, after buyer repudiated contract, seller's attempted resale was within commercially reasonable time under circumstances where, inter alia, by time buyer notified seller of his desire to cancel contract, October 2, one-third of time had elapsed between signing of agreement, September 4, and delivery date, December

1, and where there would have been no market for trees after repudiation, since date contract was entered into indicated other wholesalers of trees would have made arrangements at same time. Whewell v. Dobson, 227 N.W.2d 115 (Iowa 1975).

Since farmer's repudiation in June of contract for future delivery of grain was unequivocal and "cover" easily and immediately was available to grain dealer, dealer's commercially reasonable time to await performance by repudiating farmer expired on date repudiation was made, and he should at that time have resorted to remedies provided for in Code § 2-711. Oloffson v. Coomer, 11 Ill. App. 3d 918, 296 N.E.2d 871 (3d Dist. 1973).

8. —Action for breach.

Where in 1969 United States, through Bureau of Indian Affairs ("BIA") on behalf of Indian tribe entered into timber sale contract with lumber company and, although contract was to have been fully performed before December 31, 1969, not all timber subject to contract was taken during 1969 and written extension of contract to December 31, 1970, was executed by lumber company and tribe with approval of BIA, where additional one-year extension was requested by lumber company in December, 1970, tribe agreed to extension and signed agreement was forwarded by BIA to lumber company on or about January 28, 1971, although extension was never executed by lumber company's surety, and where in December, 1971, lumber company requested additional extension of contract to December 31, 1972, but where no logging took place under contract after September 15, 1969, under UCC § 2-610, after waiting for commercially reasonable time, tribe was entitled to treat lumber company's conduct as clear repudiation of contract and to resort to available remedies for breach, and lumber company's request for additional extension to December 31, 1972, was not retraction of repudiation since it was not accompanied by any assurance that performance would be forthcoming. In re Humboldt Fir, Inc., N.D.Cal.1977, 426 F. Supp. 292, affirmed 625 F. 2d 330 In re Humboldt Fir, Inc., 426 F. Supp. 292

(N.D. Cal. 1977), aff'd, 625 F.2d 330 (9th Cir. 1980).

9. —Suspension of performance.

While ordinarily a tender of goods is required, the repudiation of a contract by the buyer eliminates the need for further performance by the seller; such an anticipatory repudiation can be determined to have occurred whenever there is an overt communication of intention not to perform, which announcement of intention should be shown to have been positive and unequivocal. Tenavision, Inc. v. Neuman, 45 N.Y.2d 145, 379 N.E.2d 1166 (1978).

In buyer's suit for seller's alleged breach of contract to sell two million pounds of polyvinyl chloride plastic in regrind form for use in manufacture of records, (1) where telephone conversations between buyer and seller caused buyer to doubt that seller could deliver sufficient quantity of suitable plastic and buyer therefore gave seller revocable letter of credit instead of irrevocable letter, and (2) where seller then declared that buyer had breached contract and demanded payment of liquidated damages as provided in contract for such breach, district court's granting of summary judgment for defendant seller would be vacated and case remanded for further proceedings because (1) reasonableness of buyer's action in giving seller revocable letter of credit, allegedly to avoid paying for nonconforming goods, was question of fact that could not be resolved on summary judgment; (2) buyer may have been entitled under UCC § 2-609(1) to suspend its performance (by not furnishing seller with irrevocable letter of credit) until seller had complied with buyer's request for assurance of performance by seller; and (3) buyer may also have been entitled under UCC § 2-610(a) and (c) to suspend its performance for seller's possible anticipatory breach of such contract. Diskmakers, Inc. v. DeWitt Equip. Corp., 555 F.2d 1177 (3d Cir. N.J. 1977).

Purchaser of cash registers had reasonable grounds for insecurity within meaning of UCC § 2-609 where seller projected delivery of 23 units by first half of 1969 but later rescheduled delivery to January, 1970, where buyer learned in March, 1969, that work had not commenced and pilot unit would not be ready until July, 1969, where seller's own personnel were concerned about design of model and attempted to reduce buyer's order, and where prototype unit furnished buyer performed unsatisfactorily. Written demand for adequate assurance of performance was not necessary where evidence established that buyer and seller had clear understanding that buyer had suspended performance until receipt of adequate assurance of performance from seller and thus seller's failure to give adequate assurance entitled buyer to suspend its performance and cancel order pursuant to UCC § 2-610 and UCC § 2-711. AMF, Inc. v. McDonald's Corp., 536 F.2d 1167 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

Where buyer and seller allegedly entered into two oral contracts for sale of corn, although seller denied existence of second contract, and where, after seller had partially completed delivery under first contract, buyer refused to promise to pay seller for balance of corn that remained to be delivered under first contract and stated he would instead withhold payment as setoff against second contract: (1) buyer wrongfully asserted right of setoff under UCC § 2-717 since there were two separate contracts and (2) seller justifiably withheld delivery under UCC §§ 2-610 and 2-703, having interpreted seller's statement as wrongful refusal to pay on contract and as repudiation thereof. Jurek v. Thompson, 308 Minn. 191, 241 N.W.2d 788 (1976).

UCC § 2-610(c) permitted purchaser of photo-flash lamps, which were to be delivered in four separate shipments, to suspend payment for goods delivered when seller indicated he did not intend to complete delivery as required by contract. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. v. CX Processing Lab., Inc., 523 F.2d 668 (9th Cir. Wash. 1975).

A party to a contract of sale is not obligated to do the vain thing of performing, assuming that he is ready to perform, when the other party has given notice of refusal to accept performance. Swift Canadian Co. v. Banet, 224 F.2d 36 (3d Cir. Pa. 1955).

§ 75-2-611. Retraction of anticipatory repudiation.

(1) Until the repudiating party's next performance is due he can retract his repudiation unless the aggrieved party has since the repudiation cancelled or materially changed his position or otherwise indicated that he considers the repudiation final.

(2) Retraction may be by any method which clearly indicates to the aggrieved party that the repudiating party intends to perform, but must include any assurance justifiably demanded under the provisions of this chapter (Section 2-609) [Section 75-2-609].

(3) Retraction reinstates the repudiating party's rights under the contract with due excuse and allowance to the aggrieved party for any delay occasioned by the repudiation.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In General.

Where contract between owner of commercial tennis courts and defendant manufacturer and seller of air structures for sale and installation of three such structures to cover owner's tennis courts by November 15, 1975, was entered into on October 7, 1975, and became unconditional obligation on part of defendant on October 28, 1975, when owner obtained financing for such purchase, admission by defendant's employees on October 29, 1975, that defendant could not complete installation on November 15, 1975, as promised, constituted anticipatory repudiation of contract by defendant under UCC § 2-610 and Comment 1, so as to justify owner's purchase of substitute equipment from different manufacturer. Moreover, defendant's failure to deliver and complete installation of air structures by November 15, 1975, constituted breach of contract sued on, so as to justify under UCC § 2-711(1) owner's cancellation of contract on November 20, 1975 (applying Pennsylvania law, also holding that letter from defendant to owner on November 17, 1975, in which defendant offered to complete installation, could not serve under UCC § 2-611(1) as retraction of defendant's earlier repudiation because letter was written two days after defendant's complete performance was due).

§ 75-2-612. "Installment contract"; breach.

(1) An "installment contract" is one which requires or authorizes the delivery of goods in separate lots to be separately accepted, even though the contract contains a clause "each delivery is a separate contract" or its equivalent.

(2) The buyer may reject any installment which is nonconforming if the nonconformity substantially impairs the value of that installment and cannot be cured or if the nonconformity is a defect in the required documents; but if the nonconformity does not fall within subsection (3) and the seller gives adequate assurance of its cure the buyer must accept that installment.

(3) Whenever nonconformity or default with respect to one (1) or more installments substantially impairs the value of the whole contract there is a breach of the whole. But the aggrieved party reinstates the contract if he accepts a nonconforming installment without seasonably notifying of cancellation or if he brings an action with respect only to past installments or demands performance as to future installments.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Potato seller's right to cancel contract under UCC § 2-612 because of buyer's breach of 15-day payment provision (even if found to substantially impair value of whole contract), was waived by seller when he continued to make deliveries under contract, or, more correctly, seller's subsequent shipment of potatoes indicated election on his part to continue performance of contract. Dangerfield v. Markel, 252 N.W.2d 184 (N.D. 1977).

Where buyers contracted to purchase several breeds of cattle, where seller was required to breed some cattle which would entail instalment deliveries, and where buyers accepted first delivery of cattle without rejecting or revoking acceptance, pursuant to UCC § 2-612(3), buyer could not reject future instalments because of alleged defect in first shipment of cattle as whole contract was reinstated by acceptance of non-conforming instalment without notification of cancellation. Merwin v. Ziebarth, 252 N.W.2d 193 (N.D. 1977).

Buyer's termination of installment sales contract was improper under UCC § 2-612 (3) where, inter alia, buyer previously had displayed lack of concern over delivery delays and about ability of seller to cure defects generally, where there was repetition of only one significant defect, and where buyer, shortly before cancellation, placed purchase orders with seller for items identical to those in first contract in all significant respects. Holiday Mfg. Co. v. B.A.S.F. Sys., 380 F. Supp. 1096 (D. Neb. 1974).

After buyer's failure to pay for first shipment of instalment contract, in order for seller to relieve itself of its obligation to continue contract, there must be showing by seller that buyer's failure to pay for first instalment "substantially impaired" value of whole contract. Gulf Chem. & Metallurgical Corp. v. Sylvan Chem. Corp., 122 N.J. Super. 499, 300 A.2d 878 (1973), aff'd, 126 N.J. Super. 261, 314 A.2d 73 (1973), certification denied, 64 N.J. 507, 317 A.2d 720 (1974).

In action by supplier of plumbing and heating supplies against contractor for materials supplied to contractor under terms of written installment contract, contractor's failure to pay for several deliveries of supplies was breach of contract; fact that supplier brought present action with respect only to past installments did not result in reinstatement of contract where supplier had "reasonable grounds for insecurity," informed contractor that it would deliver balance of material only if payment of entire contract was guaranteed, and contractor's failure to provide adequate assurance of due performance within reasonable time after such request, and after action had been brought, was repudiation of contract, excusing supplier from further performance thereunder. Kunian v. Development Corp. of Am., 165 Conn. 300, 334 A.2d 427 (1973).

While December 8 was originally last date for sellers' performance of contract for delivery of Christmas trees, this date was later extended to December 16, so that when sellers were notified on December 14 that trees delivered did not conform to contract, sellers' notification of intention to cure non-conforming deliveries was seasonable under Pennsylvania law on December 14, especially since buyer renewed demands for trees of other varieties on same date; and even if non-conforming parts of first two deliveries of trees impaired value of whole contract and gave buyer right to treat such deliveries as breach of whole contract, buyer reinstated contract by demanding delivery in future instalments of yet undelivered varieties of trees on December 14. Traynor v. Walters, 342 F. Supp. 455 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

Assuming without deciding that the nonconforming parts of the first two Christmas tree deliveries impaired the value of the whole contract and gave the buyer the right to treat the earlier non-conforming deliveries as breach of the whole contract, the buyer reinstated the contract by demanding delivery in future installments of yet undelivered trees, under UCC § 2-612(3). Traynor v. Walters, 342 F. Supp. 455 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

Buyer was not entitled to cancel entire contract where deviation from conformity consisted of first carload of plywood which had 9% variance; held, deviation was minor and curable. Continental Forest Prods., Inc. v. White Lumber Sales, Inc., 256 Or. 466, 474 P.2d 1 (1970).

To allow an aggrieved party to cancel instalment contracts, the breach must be of the whole contract, which occurs when a nonconformity of one or more instalments substantially impairs the value of the whole contract and seasonable notification of cancellation is given.

What amounts to a substantial impairment is a question of fact which may turn not only on the quality of the goods but also on such factors as time, quantity, assortment, and must be judged in terms of the normal or specifically known purposes of the contract. Graulich Caterer, Inc. v. Hans Holterbosch, Inc., 101 N.J. Super. 61, 243 A.2d 253 (App. Div. 1968).

§ 75-2-613. Casualty to identified goods.

Where the contract requires for its performance goods identified when the contract is made, and the goods suffer casualty without fault of either party before the risk of loss passes to the buyer, or in a proper case under a "no arrival, no sale" term (Section 2-324) [Section 75-2-324] then

(a) if the loss is total the contract is avoided; and

(b) if the loss is partial or the goods have so deteriorated as no longer to conform to the contract the buyer may nevertheless demand inspection and at his option either treat the contract as avoided or accept the goods with due allowance from the contract price for the deterioration or the deficiency in quantity but without further right against the seller.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

UCC § 2-613 is applicable to a casualty loss that renders the goods nonconformable or defective. However, the statute does not apply where the buyer's claim for relief depends not on the original defects in the goods that caused them to be returned to the seller for repairs, but on defects that existed after the goods were repaired and again delivered to the buyer (where new roof was installed on mobile home after original roof blew off in storm while home was being delivered to buyer). Linscott v. Smith, 3 Kan. App. 2d 1, 587 P.2d 1271 (1978).

Contract of seller of wheat was supplemented under UCC § 2-202(a) by evidence of trade usage that parties to such contracts intend to be bound regardless of success of seller's crop, and seller's failure to deliver all wheat under his contract because of partial crop failure was not excused under either UCC § 2-613 (dealing with casualty to identified goods) or UCC § 2-615(a) (dealing with commercial impracticability), which were, inapplicable to case. Colley v. Bi-State, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 769, 586 P.2d 908 (1978).

UCC § 2-613 applies only where the continuing existence of identified goods is a presupposition to the agreement. USS § 2-615(a) applies only where the parties, by their agreement, have not assumed any greater liability. Thus, in a case involving reliance on these statutes as a defense for failure to perform, the court must analyze the terms of the party's contract before it can decide whether either statute is applicable. Furthermore, under UCC § 2-202(a) and (b), the terms of the contract can be construed or supplemented by evidence of trade usage, course of dealing, course of performance, and consistent additional terms. Colley v. Bi-State, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 769, 586 P.2d 908 (1978).

In action by buyer for seller's breach of contract to deliver 130,000 dowels (round, interchangeable wooden rods or sticks) which seller alleged had been totally destroyed on ship during storm at sea, seller could not avoid liability on contract under UCC § 2-613(a) where dowels had not been shipped, marked, segregated, or otherwise "identified" within meaning of UCC § 2-613(a) at time sale was made. Valley Forge Flag Co. v. New York Dowel & Moulding Import Co., 90 Misc. 2d 414 (1977).

UCC § 2-613 conforms to general contracts rule that if performance of contract depends on existence of specific goods and such goods are destroyed without fault before time contract is to be performed, breach by seller will be excused. However, UCC § 2-613 applies only in limited situations where continued existence of identified goods is a presupposition of the contract. Thus, sale of unique chattel comes within scope of UCC § 2-613, but not sale of chattels any one of which fitting description in the contract may be delivered. With respect to fungible goods, more than mere identification of such goods by kind and amount in sales contract is necessary to bring contract within operation of UCC § 2-613; there must also be meeting of minds of parties as to particular goods designated to be bought and sold. Valley Forge Flag Co. v. New York Dowel & Moulding Import Co., 90 Misc. 2d 414 (1977).

In action by buyer of soybeans for damages resulting from failure of seller to deliver soybeans on either date due or date to which seller had extended delivery, destruction by severe weather conditions of seller's soybean crop did not excuse his performance under UCC § 2-613, where beans were not identified other than by kind and amount and seller, therefore, could have purchased beans elsewhere and delivered them to buyer. Bunge Corp. v. Recker, 519 F.2d 449 (8th Cir. Mo. 1975).

Grower of soybeans who agreed to sell to buyer 75,000 bushels of soybeans for future delivery was not exonerated from liability for failure to deliver soybeans by reason of fact that excessive rainfall destroyed grower's soybean crop where contract between parties made no reference to soybeans grown or to be grown by grower on any identified acreage, nor did it obligate grower to grow beans at all, but merely required grower to deliver soybeans and did not restrict grower as to where beans were grown and grower could have fulfilled its contractual obligation by acquiring beans from any place or source.

§ 75-2-614. Substituted performance.

(1) Where without fault of either party the agreed berthing, loading, or unloading facilities fail or an agreed type of carrier becomes unavailable or the agreed manner of delivery otherwise becomes commercially impracticable but a commercially reasonable substitute is available, such substitute performance must be tendered and accepted.

(2) If the agreed means or manner of payment fails because of domestic or foreign governmental regulation, the seller may withhold or stop delivery unless the buyer provides a means or manner of payment which is commercially a substantial equivalent. If delivery has already been taken, payment by the means or in the manner provided by the regulation discharges the buyer's obligation unless the regulation is discriminatory, oppressive or predatory.

1. In general.

UCC § 2-614(1) obligates seller to use, and buyer to accept, delivery by commercially reasonable means if agreed method of transportation becomes impracticable. However, if the substitute transportation involves extra expense, UCC § 2-614(1) does not answer question as to who should bear such expense (holding in action for breach of contract to sell grain sorghum that extra expense of substitute transportation should be borne by seller who repudiated the contract). Jon-T Farms, Inc. v. Goodpasture, Inc., 554 S.W.2d 743, 1

Where buyer refused on delivery date to accept foreign currency purchased with dollars under futures contract, seller's liquidation of contract by crediting buyer with difference between contract price and market price of foreign currency on delivery date was commercially reasonable substitute under UCC § 2-614(1) for delivery. United Equities Co. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 52 A.D.2d 154 (1st Dep't 1976), aff'd, 41 N.Y.2d 1032, 395 N.Y.S.2d 640, 363 N.E.2d 1385 (1977).

§ 75-2-615. Excuse by failure of presupposed conditions.

Except so far as a seller may have assumed a greater obligation and subject to the preceding section on substituted performance:

(a) Delay in delivery or nondelivery in whole or in part by a seller who complies with paragraphs (b) and (c), or failure to take delivery as provided for under the contract on the part of a buyer who complies with paragraph (d), is not a breach of his duty under a contract for sale if performance as agreed has been made impracticable by the occurrence of a contingency the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption on which the contract was made or by compliance in good faith with any applicable foreign or domestic governmental regulation or order whether or not it later proves to be invalid.

(b) Where the causes mentioned in paragraph (a) affect only a part of the seller's capacity to perform, he must allocate production and deliveries among his customers but may at his option include regular customers not then under contract as well as his own requirements for further manufacture. He may so allocate in any manner which is fair and reasonable.

(c) The seller must notify the buyer seasonably that there will be delay or nondelivery and, when allocation is required under paragraph (b), of the estimated quota thus made available for the buyer.

(d) The buyer must notify the seller seasonably that there will be a delay or total inability to take delivery, and where practicable, state the contingency which has occurred causing such delay or inability.

Where contract to supply fuel for one of plaintiff's two nuclear power plants, which was entered into before effective date of Florida Uniform Commercial Code, bound plaintiff to buy and defendant to sell such fuel, and also granted plaintiff option to purchase fuel for a second nuclear power plant, and where such option was exercised by plaintiff after effective date of Florida Uniform Commercial Code, court held (1) that under Florida UCC §§ 10-101 and 10-102(2), provisions of Florida Uniform Commercial Code applies only to second fuel contract, which arose when plaintiff exercised option to purchase fuel for second power plant, and did not apply to original contract to furnish fuel for plaintiff's first power plant, since plaintiff's exercise of option to purchase fuel for second power plant was not an "event" within meaning of Florida UCC § 10-101; and (2) that as a result, defendant could not rely on Florida UCC § 2-615(a) to excuse nonperformance of its obligations under the original fuel contract, but could rely on such statute with respect to nonperformance of its obligations under the second contract. Florida Power & Light Co. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 579 F.2d 856 (4th Cir. Va. 1978).

UCC § 2-613 applied only where the continuing existence of identified goods is a presupposition to the agreement. USS § 2-615(a) applies only where the parties, by their agreement, have not assumed any greater liability. Thus, in a case involving reliance on these statutes as a defense for failure to perform, the court must analyze the terms of the party's contract before it can decide whether either statute is applicable. Furthermore, under UCC § 2-202(a) and (b), the terms of the contract can be construed or supplemented by evidence of trade usage, course of dealing, course of performance, and consistent additional terms. Colley v. Bi-State, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 769, 586 P.2d 908 (1978).

Contract of seller of wheat was supplemented under UCC § 2-202(a) by evidence of trade usage that parties to such contracts intend to be bound regardless of success of seller's crop, and seller's failure to deliver all wheat under his contract because of partial crop failure was not excused under either UCC § 2-613 (dealing with casualty to identified goods) or UCC § 2-615(a) (dealing with commercial impracticability), which were inapplicable to case. Colley v. Bi-State, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 769, 586 P.2d 908 (1978).

In assumpsit action by buyer of pesticides against manufacturer-seller for latter's failure to deliver all of plaintiff's good-faith contract requirements, where defendant, on motion for summary judgment, contended that it was excused from performance of its obligations under doctrine of commercial impracticability set forth in UCC § 2-615(a) because chemical plant of defendant's supplier had been shut down by fire and supplier, allegedly because defendant was not regular customer, had not included defendant among those to whom supplier had allocated, as required by UCC § 2-615(b), its remaining supplies of chemicals, including chemicals needed to manufacture pesticides required by plaintiff, court on denying defendant's motion for summary judgment ruled that record did not establish, as matter of law, that defendant was excused by UCC § 2-615(a) and (b) from performing its contractual obligations because affidavit of supplier's officer stated that defendant, at time of fire in question, had been regular customer of supplier and that supplier had allocated to it certain quantities of chemicals needed in manufacture of pesticides in suit. Common-

UCC § 2-615(a) and (c), governing excuse of performance, has replaced the common-law requirement of impossibility of performance by a less stringent standard of commercial impracticability. UCC § 2-615(a) and (c) contain four requirements that must be met before a seller's performance can be excused: (1) occurrence of a contingency that has made performance impracticable, (2) fact that nonoccurrence of such contingency was a basic assumption on which the contract was made, (3) no assumption of a greater obligation by the seller, and (4) seasonable notification to buyer by seller that there will be a delay or nondelivery. Barbarossa & Sons v. Iten Chevrolet, Inc., 265 N.W.2d 655 (Minn. 1978).

Where defendant's argument that by its terms the dealer's contract was terminated by plaintiff's repossession of the trucks and, hence, that plaintiff was required to repurchase them and credit defendant with list price was not based on an appropriate answer, Special Term properly ignored it; in any event, repurchase provision was inapplicable since contract contemplated the dealer's having possession of the equipment, whereas by virtue of its default the equipment had been repossessed. Linde Hydraulics Corp. v. Kenco Equip. Co., 59 A.D.2d 1016 (4th Dep't 1977).

Under UCC § 2-615(a), before party is excused from performance of contract, three conditions must be met: (1) a contingency must have occurred; (2) performance of contract must thereby have been made impracticable; and (3) nonoccurrence of such contingency must have been a basic assumption on which contract was made (holding that seller of harvesting combine was excused from performing contract because all three conditions of above test were met). Olson v. Spitzer, 257 N.W.2d 459 (S.D. 1977).

2. Seller's assumption of greater liability.

Supplier who unconditionally warranted delivery of large quantities of natural gas to transmission company, on basis of supplier's expectation that bulk of gas would come from reserves in particular field, was not excused under doctrine of commercial impracticability for failure to deliver gas contracted for when reserves in field relied on proved to be insufficient where supplier failed to show (1) not only that it could only perform at a loss, but also (2) that such loss would be especially severe and unreasonable (citing Comment 4 to UCC § 2-615(a) and holding that supplier's unconditional warranty, by its very nature, precluded any relief on theory of commercial impracticability). Gulf Oil Corp. v. F.P.C., 563 F.2d 588 (3d Cir. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1062, 98 S. Ct. 1235, 55 L. Ed. 2d 762 (1978), reh'g denied, 435 U.S. 981, 98 S. Ct. 1632, 56 L. In action by buyer of soybeans against seller for nondelivery, where some of soybeans had been destroyed by fire and where contracts specified measure of damages generally and further specified measure of damages if seller was unable to deliver solely because of reasons beyond his control, trial court erred in instructing jury that nondelivery was not breach if it was made impractical by occurrence of contingency, the non-occurrence of which was basic assumption on which contract was made, and in refusing to instruct that under UCC § 2-615 seller may assume by contract greater obligation which would have allowed jury to determine whether contract imposed greater obligation upon seller than otherwise provided for by law. Gold Kist, Inc. v. Stokes, 138 Ga. App. 482, 226 S.E.2d 268 (1976).

Doctrine of commercial impracticability under UCC § 2-615 would not be applicable with respect to seller's repudiation of contracts to supply nuclear fuel for electrical power plants, which was based on unforeseen price increases and scarcity of uranium, if parties to contract bargained for greater or lesser liability. TVA v. Westinghouse Elec. Co., 69 F.R.D. 5 (E.D. Tenn. 1975).

Where cotton merchant failed to deliver full amount of cotton called for in contract with textile manufacturer and where contract provided that "if for any reasons...the seller fails to make shipment or delivery..., the buyer may...buy in the open market cotton equal to that contracted for...the market difference to be adjusted between the buyer and seller," merchant was not excused under UCC § 2-615 from performing contract in full on grounds of impracticability, and was liable to manufacturer for damages, notwithstanding merchant's inability to perform was caused by fact that cotton farmer with whom he had contracted to purchase cotton crops refused to perform their contracts due to dramatic increase in price of cotton; by bringing action for damages, manufacturer did no more than merchant agreed could be done pursuant to their contract upon failure of delivery for any reason and manufacturer's suit amounted to no more than attempt "to adjust the difference" between contract and market prices of cotton at time that manufacturer learned of merchant's inability to make delivery. Swift Textiles, Inc. v. Lawson, 135 Ga. App. 799, 219 S.E.2d 167 (1975).

3. Substituted performance.

Grower of soybeans who agreed to sell to buyer 75,000 bushels of soybeans for future delivery was not exonerated from liability for failure to deliver soybeans by reason of fact that excessive rainfall destroyed grower's soybean crop where contract between parties made no reference to soybeans grown or to be grown by grower on any identified acreage, nor did it obligate grower to grow beans at all, but merely required grower to deliver soybeans and did not restrict grower as to where beans were grown and grower could have fulfilled its contractual obligation by acquiring beans from any place or source. Semo Grain Co. v. Oliver Farms, Inc., 530 S.W.2d 256 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

4. Unforeseen contingency as excuse.

Expectation that natural gas market would continue to be strong was not assumption on which gas purchase contract was made within meaning of § 75-2-615, where, although performance has become dramatically more costly than purchasers expected, purchasers have neither alleged nor offered to prove that fulfillment of contract is impossible. Day v. Tenneco, Inc., 696 F. Supp. 233 (S.D. Miss. 1988).

In action by airline against airplane manufacturer for damages resulting from delay in delivery of airplanes purchased, exculpatory clause in contract exempting manufacturer for delays due to specified events and preceded by phrase "included but not limited to", incorporated commercial impracticability doctrine of UCC § 2-615. Eastern Air Lines v. McDonnell Douglas Corp., 532 F.2d 957 (5th Cir. Fla. 1976).

Where buyer entered into contract with seller to purchase seller's output of special type of waste paper, called "printed broke" or "No. 2 broke," and where seller subsequently entered into contracts with other buyers for sale of similar type of waste paper, called "unprinted broke" or "No. 1 broke," at prices lower than than specified in first contract, drop in market prices, even though caused by seller's marketing of "No. 1 broke" waste paper, did not constitute "commercial impracticability" within meaning of UCC § 2-615, and problem of depressed market did not reach level of severity required to excuse performance under § 2-615. Hancock Paper Co. v. Champion Int'l Corp., 424 F. Supp. 285 (E.D. Pa. 1976), aff'd, 565 F.2d 151 (3d Cir. Pa. 1977).

The fact that an electronics manufacturer's failure to deliver a digital computer was the result of unanticipated technical problems does not excuse performance under provisions of this section; for when the manufacturer promoted his device as a revolutionary breakthrough, the reasonable supposition was that the breakthrough had already occurred, and risk of its nonoccurrence falls on the manufacturer. United States v. Wegematic Corp., 360 F.2d 674 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1966).

5. —Price increase.

In action by buyer against seller for breach of contract to deliver potash at 21 cents per unit, performance of contract was not excused by impracticability under UCC § 2-615, notwithstanding seller closed its Utah potash mine, which previously had been its principal source of supply, Canadian mine became seller's principal source of supply and Canadian governmental regulations did not permit seller to sell potash below regulated price of 33.75 cents per unit, where performance by seller was not shown to have been impossible, and where at time seller's agent signed contract, seller was aware that it would turn to Canadian mine for its principal source of supply. Neal-Cooper Grain Co. v. Texas Gulf Sulphur Co., 508 F.2d 283 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

Milk supplier was not entitled to terminate its contract with school district on grounds of "impracticability" as provided by UCC § 2-615 where, even if contingency causing increase of price of raw milk was unexpected, under circumstances, risk of substantial or abnormal price increase would fall on supplier and where, in light of risks assumed by supplier, price increase had not reached point of "impracticability" in commercial sense. Maple Farms, Inc. v. City Sch. Dist., 76 Misc. 2d 1080 (1974).

6. —Failure of source of supply.

In buyer's breach of contract action for seller's failure to deliver truck to be used in buyer's construction business, (1) since possibility that seller would not be able to obtain truck from manufacturer was clearly foreseeable contingency at time seller entered into contract (which contained no escape clause making obligation to deliver truck contingent on seller's obtaining it), manufacturer's cancellation of seller's order for truck was not "a contingency the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption on which the contract [between buyer and seller] was made" within meaning of UCC § 2-615(a), governing excuse of nonperformance; (2) buyer was entitled to "cover" damages under UCC § 2-712(1) and (2) for increase in net purchase price incurred in purchasing replacement truck; (3) buyer did not waive right to incidental and consequential damages by failure to cancel order for truck when seller first notified buyer that delivery would not be made on date buyer needed truck; and (4) buyer's loss of use of truck in buyer's business while buyer's old truck was being repaired, and also buyer's depreciation or trade-in value loss on old truck, were properly recoverable items of incidental and consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(1) and (2), since such damages resulted from seller's breach.

Failure of seller of custom designed air conditioning units to make timely delivery was not excused by failure of presupposed conditions under UCC § 2-615 where, although seller knew of supply difficulties prior to contract for purchase of air conditioning units, seller not only failed to provide exculpatory clause in contract, but consistently assured buyer that its requested delivery date would be met, and where seller delayed orders for component parts for about two months. Heat Exchangers, Inc. v. Map Constr. Corp., 34 Md. App. 679, 368 A.2d 1088 (1977).

In action by franchisee against franchisor, alleging that franchisor committed breach of franchise agreement by failing to furnish white acetate plastic ordered by franchisee, failure of franchisor's supplier to maintain adequate supply of good quality white acetate was not such contingency as would excuse franchisor's duty to perform under UCC § 2-615 and to supply plastic required by franchisee under terms of contract. Center Garment Co. v. United Refrigerator Co., 369 Mass. 633, 341 N.E.2d 669 (1976).

7. —Strike or the like.

In action between general contractor for construction of housing project and subcontractor who had agreed to supply all concrete needed on project arising when labor dispute caused general contractor to purchase balance of concrete requirements elsewhere, under UCC §§ 2-306(1) and 2-309(1) agreement was enforceable requirements contract where duration of contract was sufficiently determined by occurrence of completion of project; depending on circumstances, labor dispute may give rise to defense of impossibility of performance under UCC § 2-615. Mishara Constr. Co. v. Transit-Mixed Concrete Corp., 365 Mass. 122, 310 N.E.2d 363, 70 A.L.R.3d 1259 (1974).

8. —Fire or other casualty.

When there is a mutual rescission of a sales contract following a fire which destroyed the seller's factory, the contract is not revived by the subsequent rebuilding of the factory. Goddard v. Ishikawajima-

Harima Heavy Indus. Co., 29 A.D.2d 754 (1st Dep't 1968), aff'd, 24 N.Y.2d 842, 300 N.Y.S.2d 851, 248 N.E.2d 600 (1969).

9. Compliance with government regulations as excuse.

Sewer system installer, possessed with superior knowledge of requirements of Department of Health than was possessed by subdivision owners and developers for whom sewer system was being installed, had duty to obtain necessary approval of plans from Department of Health; lack of such approval was not unforeseen and unusual contingency within Code § 2-615(a). Security Sewage Equip. Co. v. McFerren, 14 Ohio St. 2d 251, 237 N.E.2d 898 (1968).

10. Allocation.

In action by oil company against distributor for unpaid debt in which distributor filed counterclaim alleging that plaintiff, in violation of UCC § 2-615(b), had wrongfully terminated jobber sales contract with defendant for distribution of plaintiff's products, defendant's contention that UCC § 2-615(b) required plaintiff, when faced with product shortage, to allocate its limited supplies fairly among all of its jobbers, rather than terminate its contract with defendant, could not be sustained because UCC § 2-615(b) does not apply to termination of a contract by either buyer or seller. Instead, the statute applies to a situation in which it becomes impossible or impracticable for seller to perform during existence of contract, and statute grants defense to seller in such circumstances. AMOCO v. Columbia Oil Co., 88 Wash. 2d 835, 567 P.2d 637 (1977).

Allocation provisions of UCC § 2-615(b) did not apply to contract for sale of harvesting combine with specified accessories where contract was to have been performed completely or not at all. Olson v. Spitzer, 257 N.W.2d 459 (S.D. 1977).

In nonperformance case, if allocation of seller's production under UCC § 2-615(b) is not possible, there is no "available quota" of such production that the buyer can accept under UCC § 2-616(1)(b). Olson v. Spitzer, 257 N.W.2d 459 (S.D. 1977).

Where contract provided that seller would sell and deliver to buyer latter's propane gas requirements for 5 year term, seller was permitted to allocate among its customers when gas became in short supply under UCC § 2-615, and parties to contract were bound by rule of allocation absent any affirmative provision in contract that seller would perform contract even though contingencies which permit allocation might occur. Mansfield Propane Gas Co. v. Folger Gas Co., 231 Ga. 868, 204 S.E.2d 625 (1974).

Evidence showed that automobile manufacturer fulfilled its duty under UCC § 2-615(a) and (b) to allocate, during periods of short supply, available production among its dealer-customers on fair and reasonable basis where automobile dealer's own witnesses admitted that during entire period in question manufacturer had furnished it with greater "day's supply" of automobiles than it had generally done with other dealers. Cecil Corley Motor Co. v. GMC, 380 F. Supp. 819 (M.D. Tenn. 1974).

Code section requiring seller to make reasonable allocation of supply among customers was intended to partially excuse performance of existing contract when full performance of those contracts became impossible, but was not intended to prevent party from terminating contract in accordance with its terms. North Penn Oil & Tire Co. v. Phillips Petro. Co., 358 F. Supp. 908 (E.D. Pa. 1973), reargument denied, 371 F. Supp. 676 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

Requirement of Code § 2-615 that where availability of adequate supply is contingency the non-occurrence of which was basic assumption on which contract was made and part of seller's capacity to perform is affected, seller must make reasonable allocation of supply among seller's customers did not prohibit express provision excusing performance in event of specified contingency; further, where customer's receipt of less than its marketing needs under seller's allocation formula was result of customer's lack of sales history in preceding year rather than any arbitrary or discriminatory conduct by seller, and there was no evidence that any other customer also lacking requisite sales history received different allocation, customer failed to establish that allocation program was not fair and reasonable. Intermar, Inc. v. Atlantic Richfield Co., 364 F. Supp. 82 (E.D. Pa. 1973).

11. Notice.

Failure of seller of corn and wheat grown on seller's farms to make complete deliveries to buyer was excusable under UCC § 2-615(a) where jury found (1) that such failure had resulted from unseasonably wet weather contrary to basic assumption on which contracts of sale were made, (2) that seller had seasonably notified buyer of such nondeliveries pursuant to UCC § 2-615(c), and (3) that seller's allocation of corn to seller's own needs was equitable under UCC § 2-615(b). Campbell v. Hostetter Farms, Inc., 251 Pa. Super. 232, 380 A.2d 463 (1977).

Parol evidence rule, UCC § 2-202, did not preclude consideration of understanding between parties to contract for sale and delivery of soybeans as to damages in event of breach where such understanding did not contradict any terms of contract; seller could not rely on defense of impossibility under UCC § 2-615, notwithstanding seller was farmer and was unable to deliver because his soybean crop failed, where buyer did not contemplate that contract would be filled by beans from any particular crop and where seller did not give seasonable notice of his inability to deliver. Bunge Corp. v. Miller, 381 F. Supp. 176 (W.D. Tenn. 1974).

12. Impossibility.

There are no Mississippi cases recognizing the doctrine of impracticability, although the trend with other courts appears to be toward treating the doctrine as similar to the doctrine of impossibility, which Mississippi does recognize; the Mississippi Supreme Court has not recognized frustration of purpose as a defense to a breach of contract action. City of Starkville v. 4-County Elec. Power Ass'n, — So. 2d —, 2002 Miss. LEXIS 1 (Miss. Jan. 10, 2002).

(1) Where the buyer received notification of a material or indefinite delay or an allocation justified under section 75-2-615 he may by written notification to the seller as to any delivery concerned, and where the prospective deficiency substantially impairs the value of the whole contract under the provisions of this chapter relating to breach of installment contracts (Section 2-612) [Section 75-2-612], then also as to the whole.

(a) terminate and thereby discharge any unexecuted portion of the contract; or

(b) modify the contract by agreeing to take his available quota in substitution.

(2) If after receipt of such notification from the seller the buyer fails so to modify the contract within a reasonable time not exceeding thirty (30) days the contract lapses with respect to any deliveries affected.

(3) The provisions of this section may not be negated by agreement except insofar as the seller has assumed a greater obligation under Section 75-2-615.

§ 75-2-617. Force majeure.

Deliveries may be suspended by either party in case of Act of God, war, riots, fire, explosion, flood, strike, lockout, injunction, inability to obtain fuel, power, raw materials, labor, containers, or transportation facilities, accident, breakage of machinery or apparatus, national defense requirements, or any cause beyond the control of such party, preventing the manufacture, shipment, acceptance, or consumption of a shipment of the goods or of a material upon which the manufacture of the goods is dependent. If, because of any such circumstance, seller is unable to supply the total demand for the goods, seller may allocate its available supply among itself and all of its customers, including those not under contract, in an equitable manner. Such deliveries so suspended shall be cancelled without liability, but the contract shall otherwise remain unaffected.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Market collapse and changes in regulation in natural gas industry are not within meaning of force majeure provision of § 75-2-617. Day v. Tenneco, Inc., 696 F. Supp. 233 (S.D. Miss. 1988).

In an action by paving contractor against sand and gravel supplier for breach of contract, there was no basis in Mississippi law for paving contractor's attempted distinction between "production" and "delivery," even assuming, arguendo, that the distinction between "delivery" and "production" avoided the effect of the contractual exculpatory clause in the contract rendering defendant "not responsible for failure to make delivery when prevented by strikes, labor troubles, accident or necessary repairs to machinery...or by reason of any other causes beyond our control", it did not avoid the effect of this statute. Noonan Constr. Co. v. Warren Bros. Co., 632 F.2d 1189 (5th Cir. 1980).

Where the parties contracted for the purchase and sale of the entire soybean crop to be grown on a particular tract of land, and by reason of drought conditions part of the crop failed, nonperformance to the extent of the failure was excused in the absence of an express condition in the contract to the contrary. Paymaster Oil Mill Co. v. Mitchell, 319 So. 2d 652 (Miss. 1975).

In action on contract to deliver 4,000 bushels of soybeans by buyer against farmer who as result of drought was able to deliver less than 2,000 bushels, his entire crop, rejection of buyer's evidence relating to custom and usage of soybean trade was proper under UCC § 1-205(6) where offer of evidence came late in trial and probably would have denied seller opportunity to rebut it absent continuance or other disruption of trial. Paymaster Oil Mill Co. v. Mitchell, 319 So. 2d 652 (Miss. 1975).

(1) Where the seller discovers the buyer to be insolvent he may refuse delivery except for cash including payment for all goods theretofore delivered under the contract, and stop delivery under this chapter (Section 2-705) [Section 75-2-705].

(2) Where the seller discovers that the buyer has received goods on credit while insolvent he may reclaim the goods upon demand made within ten (10) days after the receipt, but if misrepresentation of solvency has been made to the particular seller in writing within three (3) months before delivery the ten-day limitation does not apply. Except as provided in this subsection the seller may not base a right to reclaim goods on the buyer's fraudulent or innocent misrepresentation of solvency or of intent to pay.

(3) The seller's right to reclaim under subsection (2) is subject to the rights of a buyer in ordinary course or other good faith purchaser under this chapter (Section 2-403) [Section 75-2-403]. Successful reclamation of goods excludes all other remedies with respect to them.

1. In general; scope.
2. Demand for return.
3. Written misrepresentation of solvency.
4. Effect of bankruptcy or insolvency; decisions prior to Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978.
5. Priority of seller's claim as against other creditors.
6. Effect of seller's demand that third party withhold delivery.
7. Other matters.

1. In general; scope.

Seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702 was not security interest within purview of Article 9. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co. v. First State Bank, 531 S.W.2d 167 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.re. (Apr. 7, 1976).

Where creditor provided service to debtor of reproducing debtor's master tape into saleable units, i.e. cartridges or cassettes, creditor was not a seller and was thus not entitled to a vendor's lien. North Am. Leisure Corp. v. A & B Dupliators, Ltd., 468 F.2d 695 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

An implicit requirement of Code § 2-702(2) permitting reclamation without regard to the 10-day limitation if a written misrepresentation of solvency is made within 3 months before delivery, is that the particular writing relied on as a misrepresentation of solvency be treated as a misrepresentation by the seller and relied on as such; where the seller had in its file a financial statement of the buyer showing a net worth of about $4000, and nevertheless proceeded to sell the buyer loads of beer in one month to the extent that they claim over $12,000 for three loads, the seller could show no basis for reliance on previous or current checks as representation of solvency. This type of conduct cannot be regarded as the "good faith" required by Code § 1-203, nor was it any indication of "ordinary prudence". Theo. Hamm Brewing Co. v. First Trust & Sav. Bank, 103 Ill. App. 2d 190, 242 N.E.2d 911 (3d Dist. 1968).

The Uniform Commercial Code does not change the rule that a vendor cannot rescind and reclaim the goods as against an attachment or execution on a debt contracted subsequent to the alleged voidable sale. In re Kravitz, 278 F.2d 820 (3d Cir. Pa. 1960).

2. Demand for return.

In action involving seller's petition to reclaim furniture sold to insolvent buyer, where (1) seller sold furniture to buyer which buyer accepted, (2) at time of delivery, seller did not know that buyer was insolvent, (3) two days after learning of buyer's insolvency, seller sent telegram to buyer demanding rescission under UCC § 2-702 and, after receiver was appointed for buyer, filed petition to reclaim goods, (4) bankruptcy court denied petition on ground that bankruptcy trustee was entitled to goods under § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act and that UCC § 2-702 conflicted with §§ 64 and 67(c) of Bankruptcy Act, and (5) district court affirmed bankruptcy court's ruling, court held (1) that issue was whether seller could reclaim under UCC § 2-702(2) when seller's demand followed filing of bankruptcy petition, (2) that under § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act, bankruptcy trustee acquired rights of hypothetical lien creditor, (3) that buyer was insolvent when it received goods from seller, (4) that seller had discovered such fact and made demand for reclamation within ten days after buyer received goods, as required by UCC § 2-702(2), (5) that state law controlled rights of bankruptcy trustee as hypothetical lien creditor, (6) that reference in UCC § 2-702(3) to rights of lien creditors directs that those rights be found exclusively in UCC Article 2 or in articles to which Article 2 refers, (7) that lien creditor was not "purchaser for value" under UCC § 2-403 and that bankruptcy trustee acquired no rights under UCC § 2-403 as against reclaiming seller, (8) that under facts of case, bankruptcy trustee also acquired no rights under UCC §§ 2-326 or 9-301, and no lien creditor could cut off seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702(2), (9) that by same token, § 70(c) of Bankruptcy Act did not give trustee right to cut off seller's right to reclaim, (10) that UCC § 2-702(2) created something other than a security interest, (11) that UCC § 2-702(2) was not an unlawful priority that conflicted with § 64 of Bankruptcy Act, (12) that UCC § 2-702(2) was not lien subject to invalidation as statutory lien under § 67(c) of Bankruptcy Act, and (13) that reclamation under UCC § 2-702(2) in instant case did not constitute invalid preferential transfer under § 60 of Bankruptcy Act. Bassett Furn. Indus., Inc. v. Wear, 583 F.2d 992 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

Seller of cattle did not have superior right to recover unpaid purchase price as against secured creditors of purchaser, where purchaser took immediate possession of cattle and they became part of its inventory, where inventoried cattle and proceeds therefrom were subject to security agreements held by secured creditors, and where seller, who made no attempt to perfect purchase money security interest, failed to make demand for reclamation within ten-day period provided by UCC § 2-702(2). United States v. Wyoming Nat'l Bank, 505 F.2d 1064 (10th Cir. Wyo. 1974).

A financing agency cannot exercise seller's right of reclamation under UCC § 2-702(2) as a means of entirely circumventing filing requirements of Article 9. In re Hardin, 458 F.2d 938 (7th Cir. Wis. 1972).

In a proceeding by sellers to compel the receivers of insolvent buyer to surrender certain lawnmowers, receivers' contention that seller could not prevail since a physical reclamation is required, whereas sellers had only "demanded" a return of the goods, was rejected. The court, however, refused to order a surrender of the goods on other grounds. Metropolitan Distribs. v. Eastern Supply Co., 21 Pa. D. & C.2d 128 (1959).

3. Written misrepresentation of solvency.

Where seller sought to reclaim goods it had shipped to buyer more than ten days before buyer filed petition for bankruptcy, mere fact that buyer gave seller two checks which were returned for insufficient funds (NSF) did not make buyer "insolvent" as defined by UCC § 1-201(23) nor did the two NSF checks constitute a misrepresentation of solvency "in writing" within three months of buyer's receipt of shipment, entitling seller to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-702(2), where there was evidence to show that seller did not rely upon NSF checks as representations of solvency, but relied primarily, if not entirely, upon representation that payment for shipment would be made out of special escrow account. In re Creative Bldgs., Inc., 498 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

Misrepresentation of solvency, under UCC § 2-702(2), must be presented in writing, not dated, within 3-month period. In re Bel Air Carpets, Inc., 452 F.2d 1210 (9th Cir. Cal. 1971).

An implicit requirement of Code § 2-702(2) permitting reclamation without regard to the 10-day limitation if a written misrepresentation of solvency is made within 3 months before delivery, is that the particular writing relied on as a misrepresentation of solvency be treated as a misrepresentation by the seller and relied on as such; where the seller had in its file a financial statement of the buyer showing a net worth of about $4000, and nevertheless proceeded to sell the buyer loads of beer in one month to the extent that they claim over $12,000 for three loads, the seller could show no basis for reliance on previous or current checks as representation of solvency. This type of conduct cannot be regarded as the "good faith" required by Code § 1-203, nor was it any indication of "ordinary prudence". Theo. Hamm Brewing Co. v. First Trust & Sav. Bank, 103 Ill. App. 2d 190, 242 N.E.2d 911 (3d Dist. 1968).

4. Effect of bankruptcy or insolvency; decisions prior to Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1978.

Where seller delivered goods on credit to buyer on August 10, 1972, buyer filed petition in bankruptcy on August 16, 1972, and receiver was appointed on same day; where on August 18, 1972, seller made timely demand under UCC § 2-702(2) for return of goods delivered to buyer; and where it was stipulated that buyer intended to pay for goods at time they were ordered and received, (1) seller under UCC § 2-702(2) had right of reclamation superior to right of insolvent buyer's trustee in bankruptcy, as alleged "lien creditor" under UCC § 2-702(3); (2) rights of trustee in bankruptcy as "lien creditor" could be determined by reference to precode state law, since state's enactment of UCC § 2-702 did not provide express guidance concerning relative priorities of seller under UCC § 2-702(2) and trustee of bankrupt buyer; (3) seller's superior right of reclamation under UCC § 2-702(2) had its antecedents in historical and equitable right of defrauded seller to reclaim goods sold to insolvent buyer and thus did not arise "solely by force of statute" so as to be invalidated by conflict with § 67c(1)(A) of Bankruptcy Act (11 USCS § 107c(1)(A)) and (4) seller's superior right of reclamation as against trustee in bankruptcy also was not invalidated by § 64 of Bankruptcy Act (11 USCS § 104) as being disguised state-created priority that conflicted with § 64 of such act. Federal's, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 553 F.2d 509 (6th Cir. Mich. 1977).

Seller's right of reclamation under UCC § 2-702(2) was not preempted by federal Bankruptcy Act (11 USCS § 64), and thus seller's right to reclaim was superior to trustee's rights as hypothetical lien creditor under 11 USCS § 70c, and UCC

§ 2-702(3). Federal's, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 553 F.2d 509 (6th Cir. Mich. 1977).

Where meat packer's operations were financed by secured creditor who had properly perfected security interest in meat packer's assets, including after-acquired property, where cattle sellers delivered cattle to meat packer on "grade and yield basis," where checks were subsequently issued to sellers, but before checks were paid, secured party, believing itself to be insecure, refused to advance more funds to meat packer for operation of plant, and where meat packer then filed petition in bankruptcy, interest of unpaid seller was subordinate to interest of secured creditor, and seller who did not attempt to reclaim cattle until year after filing petition for bankruptcy, was not entitled to either reclamation of cattle or proceeds from sale of slaughtered meat. Stowers v. Mahon, 526 F.2d 1238 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 834, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

Seller who sold lifting magnets to buyer on open account did not have right to reclaim magnets under UCC § 2-702(2), dealing with buyer's insolvency, or UCC § 2-609(4), dealing with right to adequate assurance of performance, where (1) seller produced no evidence that buyer was insolvent when it received either first or second shipment of magnets, and seller did not assert its right to reclaim within applicable ten day limitation; (2) there was no evidence that seller had reasonable grounds for insecurity with respect to buyer's performance, nor any demand for adequate assurance made in writing. National Ropes, Inc. v. National Diving Serv., Inc., 513 F.2d 53 (5th Cir. Fla. 1975).

UCC § 2-702(2), permitting seller to reclaim goods received by buyer on credit while insolvent, was not invalid as against buyer's trustee in bankruptcy on grounds that it was statutory lien which first became effective upon insolvency of debtor or that it constituted state-created priority. In re Telemart Enters., Inc., 524 F.2d 761, 20 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 1269, 17 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 881 (9th Cir. Cal. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 969, 96 S. Ct. 1466, 47 L. Ed. 2d 736 (1976) and criticized by Federal's, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am.,

Seller's right to reclaim goods delivered to insolvent buyer under UCC § 2-702 was statutory lien within meaning of federal Bankruptcy Act and since lien conflicted with priorities established by Bankruptcy Act it would not be given effect in bankruptcy proceeding. In re Good Deal Supermarkets Inc., 384 F. Supp. 887 (D.N.J. 1974).

Where the sellers of automobiles to a buyer who disposed of them through an auction company later found the checks received by them from the buyer in payment for the cars were dishonored because of the auction company's actions in stopping payments on checks previously delivered to the buyer and by withholding from him the proceeds derived from the sales of the sellers' cars, the sellers had a right of reclamation of their property had it remained in the buyer's hands either under § 2-702 or § 2-507 because the auction company's action had in effect rendered the car buyer insolvent, and although the cars had been resold at auction the sellers' rights survived the resale and, on equitable principles, attached to the proceeds of the sales in the hands of the auction company. Greater Louisville Auto Auction, Inc. v. Ogle Buick, Inc., 387 S.W.2d 17 (Ky. 1965).

Since subdivision (1)(b) of this section which permits a seller of goods, upon learning of the buyer's insolvency, to reclaim its goods within 10 days after receipt of the goods by the purchaser, might possibly be in conflict with the provisions of the federal Bankruptcy Act pertaining to preferences, rights of a seller seeking a return of lawnmowers from the receivers of an insolvent debtor should be determined by the federal District Court before which bankruptcy proceedings were then pending. Metropolitan Distribs. v. Eastern Supply Co., 21 Pa. D. & C.2d 128 (1959).

5. Priority of seller's claim as against other creditors.

Seller's right of reclamation under UCC § 2-702 was superior to trustee's rights as hypothetical lien creditor. Federal's, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 553 F.2d 509 (6th Cir. Mich. 1977).

Where seller, as supplier of goods on credit, demanded return of goods from buyer within ten days upon discovery of buyer's insolvency pursuant to UCC § 2-702 and where bank had prior perfected security interest in all of buyer's inventory, then owned or thereafter acquired, bank, under definition of UCC § 1-201(32,33) qualified as good faith purchaser making it exempt from seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702(3) and bank's perfected security interest had priority over seller as seller failed to perfect its claim by filing as required by UCC § 9-312. House of Stainless, Inc. v. Marshall & Ilsley Bank, 75 Wis. 2d 264, 249 N.W.2d 561 (1977).

Although secured party had perfected security interest in after-acquired property of debtor, there is nothing in UCC § 9-301(3) which includes party with such status within definition of "lien creditor," thus, there was nothing to prevent unpaid seller from reclaiming goods sold to debtor-buyer, despite claim of secured party that it was lien creditor entitled to priority under UCC § 2-702(3). Chastain-Roberts Co. v. Better Brands, Inc., 141 Ga. App. 186, 233 S.E.2d 5 (1977).

As to proceeds from sales of slaughtered meat, cash sellers of cattle who failed to make timely demand for reclamation were subordinate not only to finance agency which had prior perfected security interest in bankrupt meat packer's assets (including after-acquired property), but also to packer's trustee in bankruptcy. Stowers v. Mahon, 526 F.2d 1238 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 834, 97 S. Ct. 98, 50 L. Ed. 2d 99 (1976).

UCC § 2-702(2), permitting seller to reclaim goods received by buyer on credit while insolvent, was not invalid as against buyer's trustee in bankruptcy on grounds that it was statutory lien which first became effective upon insolvency of debtor or that it constituted disguised state priority. In re Telemart Enters., Inc., 524 F.2d 761, 20 Fed. R. Serv. 2d 1269, 17 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 881 (9th Cir. Cal. 1975), cert. denied, 424 U.S. 969, 96 S. Ct. 1466, 47 L. Ed. 2d 736 (1976) and criticized on other grounds by Federal's, Inc. v. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am., 553 F.2d 509, 21 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 689 (6th Cir. Mich. 1977).

Under UCC § 9-301, security interest of cattle seller was subordinate to rights of garnishing lien creditor where debtor purchased cattle from seller and paid for them with check which was subsequently dishonored for insufficient funds, where debtor shipped cattle to livestock auction company for resale and writ of garnishment was served on auction company, where seller and debtor subsequently executed security agreement and financing statement, back-dated, and properly describing cattle in question and where financing statement was filed within ten days after debtor purchased cattle from seller. Seller's right to reclaim under UCC § 2-702 was not security interest within purview of Article 9 on secured transactions and acceptance of check did not change cash sale into credit transaction. Since there was no security agreement between debtor and seller, either oral or written, at time writ of garnishment was served, security interest attached sometime later when security agreement was signed by debtor. Ranchers & Farmers Livestock Auction Co. v. First State Bank, 531 S.W.2d 167 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.re. (Apr. 7, 1976).

In action between lender who held unperfected security interest in automobiles and car dealer who sold collateral to debtor, seller's right to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-702(3), when buyer's check for purchase price was dishonored by bank, did not have priority over lender's unperfected security interest in automobiles which arose when lender, who qualified as "purchaser" under UCC § 1-201, acquired certificates of title; under UCC § 2-403(1), once certificates of title were delivered, debtor acquired voidable title and could convey enforceable right in automobiles to lender as good faith purchaser for value, even though debtor's check to seller of automobiles was later dishonored. Guy Martin Buick, Inc. v. Colorado Springs Nat'l Bank, 184 Colo. 166, 519 P.2d 354 (1974).

Seller of cattle did not have superior right to recover unpaid purchase price as against secured creditors of purchaser, where purchaser took immediate possession of cattle and they became part of its inventory, where inventoried cattle and proceeds therefrom were subject to security agreements held by secured creditors, and where seller, who made no attempt to perfect purchase money security interest, failed to make demand for reclamation within ten-day period provided by UCC § 2-702(2). United States v. Wyoming Nat'l Bank, 505 F.2d 1064 (10th Cir. Wyo. 1974).

In action by creditor of bankrupt arising out of sale of bar equipment which was originally negotiated as cash sale with payment due on delivery, seller waived his right to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-507(2) by failing to reclaim equipment until it had been in buyer's possession for over 4 months; nor did seller become "reclaiming seller" once transaction became credit sale since UCC § 2-702 requirement that demand for return of goods be made within 10 days of their receipt was not satisfied. Thereafter, actual retaking by seller did not, under UCC § 2-703(f), accomplish cancellation of the sale as a remedy and was not effective to prevent the retaking being a preference under Bankruptcy Act. In re Colacci's of Am., Inc., 490 F.2d 1118 (10th Cir. Colo. 1974).

Where persons selling goods to a debtor who thereafter made an assignment for benefit of creditors assert the right to reclaim the goods on the ground that title was not to pass until payment was made, such sellers have the burden of proving the existence of such a condition to the passage of title and that the goods or their identifiable proceeds were held by the assignee and that the sellers had not waived their right by failure to reclaim the goods. In re Central Islip Supermarkets, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 29 (1967, NY Sup).

If the seller makes a cash sale and takes a check in payment but the drawee bank refuses to make payment because a petition in bankruptcy is filed as to the buyer, although there was on deposit sufficient money to pay the check, the seller has the right to reclaim the goods within ten days as against the buyer's trustee in bankruptcy (distinguishing a sale on credit in which the seller would not have a right superior to the trustee in bankruptcy). In re Mort Co., 208 F. Supp. 309 (E.D. Pa. 1962).

The principle that a reclamation seller's interest is subordinate to that of a lien creditor who extended credit subsequent to the sale is not displaced by the particular provisions of § 2-702. In re Kravitz, 278 F.2d 820 (3d Cir. Pa. 1960).

Since, under Pennsylvania law, the seller's right of rescission is not an absolute right but is subject to the right of a lien creditor who extended credit subsequent to the sale, and by virtue of § 70, sub c of the Bankruptcy Act, the trustee in bankruptcy has rights of lien creditor, the trustee in bankruptcy has superior rights to the proceeds from the sale of seller's goods, even if the sale of goods on credit has been induced by positive misrepresentation by the bankrupts, and the seller had attempted to rescind the sale. In re Kravitz, 278 F.2d 820 (3d Cir. Pa. 1960).

Since subdivision (1)(b) of this section which permits a seller of goods, upon learning of the buyer's insolvency, to reclaim its goods within 10 days after receipt of the goods by the purchaser, might possibly be in conflict with the provisions of the federal Bankruptcy Act pertaining to preferences, rights of a seller seeking a return of lawnmowers from the receivers of an insolvent debtor should be determined by the federal District Court before which bankruptcy proceedings were then pending. Metropolitan Distribs. v. Eastern Supply Co., 21 Pa. D. & C.2d 128 (1959).

6. Effect of seller's demand that third party withhold delivery.

In interpleader action by bailee of zinc, where evidence showed (1) that bailor, who had stored 300 tons of zinc with bailee, ordered bailee to release all of it to bailor's purchaser, (2) that bailor's purchaser then sold such zinc to alleged bona-fide subpurchaser and ordered bailee to release zinc to subpurchaser, (3) that after bailee had delivered 40 tons to subpurchaser, bailor learned of original purchaser's insolvency and ordered bailee to stop delivery to original purchaser, and (4) that on the same day, subpurchaser also ordered bailee to deliver remainder of such zinc (260 tons) to it, district court denied bailor's motion for summary judgment on its alleged right under UCC §§ 7-504(4) and § 2-705(1) and (2) to stop delivery of zinc, since (1) bailor failed to show, within meaning of UCC § 2-705(2)(b), that bailee had not acknowledged that it was holding the zinc for the subpurchaser, and (2) bailor also had failed to show, within meaning of UCC § 2-705(2)(d), that there had been no negotiation to subpurchaser of any negotiable document of title covering the zinc (applying Illinois UCC; also holding that subpurchaser's claim of bona-fide purchase was not available to it under UCC § 2-702(3) or § 2-403(1)). Ceres Inc. v. ACLI Metal & Ore Co., 451 F. Supp. 921 (N.D. Ill. 1978).

In absence of bailment relationship contemplated by UCC § 2-702(1) and § 2-705(1), third party to whom seller directly ships goods sold to buyer may not be held liable for disregarding seller's demand to withhold delivery of goods from buyer (holding that since defendant, to whom buyer had directed seller to ship goods, held goods under act of accommodation and not under bailment contract, defendant was not liable to seller for delivering goods to bankrupt buyer in disregard of seller's demand not to do so). H. Lynn White, Inc. v. Leftwich, 2 Kan. App. 2d 341, 579 P.2d 164 (1978).

In action by common carrier of crude oil against bankrupt buyer of crude oil, title to oil revested in oil producing sellers under UCC § 2-401(4) when buyer refused to accept tender of crude oil from pipeline company conditioned upon buyer's payment of common carrier lien; notice given by seller, prior to buyer's refusal of tender, to stop delivery to buyer based on previous dishonor of buyer's checks for insufficient funds was timely exercise of seller's rights of stoppage under UCC §§ 2-702(1), (2) and 2-705(1) and sellers could reclaim oil upon demand and notice as given. Amoco Pipeline Co. v. Admiral Crude Oil Corp., 490 F.2d 114 (10th Cir. N.M. 1974).

7. Other matters.

In action by unpaid credit seller of oil supplies to debtor against bank, which held perfected security interest in debtor's oil inventory, for lack of good faith in disposing of part of such inventory, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-702(3), plaintiff's right to reclaim oil supplies sold to debtor was subject to bank's right to dispose of such supplies, which were collateral for bank's loan to debtor, as good-faith purchaser for value under UCC § 2-403(1); (2) that under UCC § 1-201(44)(b), bank had given value for debtor's oil inventory which bank obtained under after-acquired property clause in debtor's security agreement; (3) that UCC definition of good-faith purchaser did not, expressly or impliedly, include as element of such definition lack of knowledge of third-party claims, since good faith is merely defined in UCC § 1-201(19) as "honesty in fact in transaction concerned"; and (4) that under circumstances of case, bank's knowledge that plaintiff was unpaid credit seller to debtor did not impair bank's good faith in disposing of debtor's oil inventory (collateral) to satisfy debtor's obligation to bank. Shell Oil Co. v. Mills Oil Co., 717 F.2d 208 (5th Cir. 1983).

§ 75-2-703. Seller's remedies in general.

Where the buyer wrongfully rejects or revokes acceptance of goods or fails to make a payment due on or before delivery or repudiates with respect to a part or the whole, then with respect to any goods directly affected and, if the breach is of the whole contract (Section 2-612) [Section 75-2-612], then also with respect to the whole undelivered balance, the aggrieved seller may

- (a) withhold delivery of such goods;
- (b) stop delivery by any bailee as hereafter provided (Section 2-705) [Section 75-2-705];
- (c) proceed under section 75-2-704 respecting goods still unidentified to the contract;
- (d) resell and recover damages as hereafter provided (Section 2-706) [Section 75-2-706];
- (e) recover damages for nonacceptance (Section 2-708) [Section 75-2-708] or in a proper case the price (Section 2-709) [Section 75-2-709];
- (f) cancel.

1. In general.

Seller's remedies of UCC do not apply to vendors of oil and gas leases. Casper v. Neubert, 489 F.2d 543 (10th Cir. Okla. 1973).

In action by seller of upholstery fabrics against buyer for balance due on unpaid invoices, in which buyer admitted ordering fabrics but alleged that seller had overshipped fabrics to buyer, that buyer had revoked acceptance of overshipped goods and returned them to seller, that seller had allowed credit for returned goods, and that buyer had then paid balance of its account, court held (1) that no overshipments had occurred; (2) that seller had agreed that buyer could return fabrics that buyer could not dispose of at reduced price; (3) that seller never notified buyer that credit memorandum for major part of returned fabrics had been erroneously sent to buyer; (4) that since disputed shipments had conformed to oral orders placed by buyer, buyer's revocation of its prior acceptance of goods under UCC § 2-608(1) was wrongful; (5) that seller was thereafter entitled to remedies provided by UCC § 2-703; (6) that seller's postbreach conduct—which consisted of allowing discount on disputed fabrics, accepting great number of pieces returned to seller, and sending buyer memorandum allowing credit for returned fabrics with no qualification as to memorandum's meaning—showed acquiescence in alleged agreement for return of goods and allowance of discount thereon; and (7) that seller, by failing to exercise diligence in enforcing its rights under the contract, had not exercised good faith required by UCC § 1-203, had seriously misled buyer, and thus was estopped to assert its abandoned rights. Castle Fabrics, Inc. v. Fortune Furn. Mfrs., Inc., 459 F. Supp. 409 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Where buyer of natural gas under 19 output contracts with producer-seller, after discovering that charts measuring seller's production and delivery of gas from wells involved in some of such contracts had been altered to show more production and delivery of gas to buyer than was actually the case, stopped payments on all contracts entered into with seller, instead of only those affected by the altered charts, (1) buyer's action constituted under UCC § 2-703 repudiation of whole of each contract that was not affected by altered charts, (2) buyer's action did not constitute repudiation of contracts that were affected by altered charts, and (3) under UCC § 2-103(1)(b), buyer acted in commercially unreasonable manner with regard to all 19 contracts by insisting that it recover all excess payments made to seller, and also all amounts due on unpaid loans made by it to seller, before it would resume paying for seller's deliveries of gas. Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. v. Larry H. Wright, Inc., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 95, 443 F. Supp. 14 (S.D. Ohio 1977).

UCC § 2-703 and Official Comment 1 make it clear that seller's remedies for buyer's breach are cumulative. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

2. Withholding delivery.

Where buyer and seller allegedly entered into two oral contracts for sale of corn, although seller denied existence of second contract, and where, after seller had partially completed delivery under first contract, buyer refused to promise to pay seller for balance of corn that remained to be delivered under first contract and stated he would instead withhold payment as setoff against second contract: (1) buyer wrongfully asserted right of setoff under UCC § 2-717 since there were two separate contracts and (2) seller justifiably withheld delivery under UCC §§ 2-610 and 2-703, having interpreted seller's statement as wrongful refusal to pay on contract and as repudiation thereof. Jurek v. Thompson, 308 Minn. 191, 241 N.W.2d 788 (1976).

Code § 2-703 provides that where buyer wrongfully rejects or revokes acceptance of goods or fails to make payment due on or before delivery or repudiates with respect to part or whole, then with respect to any goods directly affected and, if breach is of whole contract, then also with respect to whole undelivered balance, aggrieved seller may withhold delivery of such goods. Portal Galleries, Inc. v. Tomar Prods., Inc., 60 Misc. 2d 523 (1969).

3. Stopping delivery.

Where seller sold two carloads of fertilizer to buyer, received two checks in payment therefore, and shipped goods by railroad under straight, nonnegotiable bills of lading, where buyer resold goods to plaintiff, and where, after bank notified seller there were insufficient funds to cover buyer's checks, seller issued reconsignment order to railroad instructing it to deliver goods to another consignee, neither seller nor railroad was liable to plaintiff for cost of goods: (1) under UCC § 2-703, upon failure of checks presented by buyer to seller, seller was lawfully entitled to possession of goods; (2) under UCC 7-303, since bills of lading were nonnegotiable, railroad was obligated to deliver goods pursuant to instructions of seller, as consignor. Clock v. Missouri-Kan.-Tex. R.R., 407 F. Supp. 448 (E.D. Mo. 1976), aff'd, 553 F.2d 102 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977).

4. Reselling goods.

Buyer who bought oil-drilling rig and accessory equipment at public auction by sending agent to make purchase and giving agent blank check to make payment, which was signed by buyer individually and not as representative of corporation of which buyer was president and sole owner, was individually liable to auctioneer under UCC § 2-703(d) and § 2-706(1), following dishonor of buyer's check (which agent had completed by filling in amount for which equipment was purchased), for difference between resale price of such equipment and price for which agent had purchased it where (1) under UCC § 2-706(1) and (2), resale was made by auctioneer in good faith, in commercially reasonable manner, and on proper and reasonable notice to defendant buyer, and (2) auctioneer, before originally selling equipment to defendant's agent, had exercised due care and reasonable diligence by verifying agent's authority to purchase it. Miller & Miller Auctioneers, Inc. v. Mersch, 442 F. Supp. 570 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

Where seller bore risk of casualty to subject of contract, cattle, and was required to feed and shelter cattle for one month beyond date contracted for, and no agreement between parties had been reached as to compensation to seller for his cost, buyer's delay of approximately 30 days before his offer to perform was unreasonable; thus, buyer breached contract by failure to accept goods, and aggrieved seller was within his rights in cancelling contract and selling goods to third party. Ziebarth v. Kalenze, 238 N.W.2d 261 (N.D. 1976).

Under UCC § 2-703, seller may retain possession of goods, resell them and recover damages from buyer, where the buyer breaches sales contract by failing to make payment when due on or before delivery and the resale price is less than contract price. Desbien v. Penokee Farmers Union Coop. Ass'n, 220 Kan. 358, 552 P.2d 917 (1976).

The term "commercially reasonable" as used in the statute, while not specifically defined, requires that a resale of securities, after buyer's refusal to accept a tender of securities in accordance with a tender offer, should be made as soon as practicable after the breach of the tender offer and the seller should make every effort to minimize his loss, so that, considering the circumstances of the breach, a 30-day period from the day of the breach would be a commercially reasonable time to resell the securities. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

Buyer of goods at auction failed to pay purchase price; held, auctioneer could resell goods and buyer would be liable for any loss arising from resale and for expenses thereof. French v. Sotheby & Co., 470 P.2d 318 (Okla. 1970).

5. —Notice of resale.

Grain elevator company breached agreement to purchase 4,000 bushels of wheat for March delivery where elevator purchased more grain for cash during contract delivery period than amount involved in contract with seller, but refused to accept delivery of seller's grain during contract period and for 2 months thereafter; thus, seller was entitled to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703(6) and resell wheat at private sale; since seller exercised his right to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703, and since he was not seeking to recover damages, he was not required to give notice of his intent to resell under UCC § 2-706, nor was he required to notify elevator under UCC § 2-309 that he was "terminating" contract. Mott Equity Elevator v. Svihovec, 236 N.W.2d 900 (N.D. 1975).

6. Cancelling contract.

Right to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703(f) and § 2-106(4) differs from right to terminate under UCC § 2-106(3), and does not arise out of any termination provision in the agreement. Thus, where manufacturer of automobile air conditioners cancelled distributorship agreement with distributor because of distributor's chronic overdue balances and failure to pay note, manufacturer did not have to resort to termination procedures in distributorship agreement, and distributor could not claim unlawful termination of such agreement. Frigiking, Inc. v. Century Tire & Sales Co., 452 F. Supp. 935 (N.D. Tex. 1978).

Evidence that farmer indicated he wished to deliver soy beans during January as specified by his contract with buyer, but was notified delivery date had been extended into February, and that farmer was told reason for extension was buyer's inability to accept soy beans, was sufficient to support determination that buyer repudiated contract; buyer's repudiation substantially impaired value of contract to farmer under UCC § 2-610 where, although farmer had agreed to deliver 3,000 bushels of soy beans, his soy bean crop came to only 2,000 bushels leaving him 1,000 bushels short, where price of soy beans was increasing daily, and where cost to farmer of making up his 1,000 bushel shortage would have increased materially if he were forced to wait for February delivery date and, thus, pursuant to UCC § 2-703(f), farmer was authorized to cancel agreement. Pillsbury Co. v. Ward, 250 N.W.2d 35 (Iowa 1977).

Although UCC § 2-309(1) did not apply where contracts for sale of grain contained specified delivery times, in absence of express statement that time was of essence or unless there were special circumstances, time was not necessarily of essence, and reasonable delay in delivery or acceptance of grain did not constitute breach of contract; unreasonable delay, however, constituted breach and justified remedy of cancellation; thus, where grain elevator buyer delayed acceptance of grain for unreasonable period of time, three months following last delivery date set forth in any of grain sales contracts, buyer breached contracts and seller justifiably cancelled contract under UCC § 2-703(f). Farmers Union Grain Term. Ass'n v. Hermanson, 549 F.2d 1177 (8th Cir. N.D. 1977).

In action by creditor of bankrupt arising out of sale of bar equipment which was originally negotiated as cash sale with payment due on delivery, seller waived his right to reclaim goods under UCC § 2-507(2) by failing to reclaim equipment until it had been in buyer's possession for over 4 months; nor did seller become "reclaiming seller" once transaction became credit sale since UCC § 2-702 requirement that demand for return of goods be made within 10 days of their receipt was not satisfied. Thereafter, actual retaking by seller did not, under UCC § 2-703(f), accomplish cancellation of the sale as a remedy and was not effective to prevent the retaking being a preference under

§ 75-2-704. Seller's right to identify goods to the contract notwithstanding breach or to salvage unfinished goods.

(1) An aggrieved seller under the preceding section may

(a) identify to the contract conforming goods not already identified if at the time he learned of the breach they are in his possession or control;

(b) treat as the subject of resale goods which have demonstrably been intended for the particular contract even though those goods are unfinished.

(2) Where the goods are unfinished an aggrieved seller may in the exercise of reasonable commercial judgment for the purposes of avoiding loss and of effective realization either complete the manufacture and wholly identify the goods to the contract or cease manufacture and resell for scrap or salvage value or proceed in any other reasonable manner.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In General.

In action by seller of carpeting against buyer, which had repudiated entire contract of purchase, for damages consisting of difference between resale price and contract price of such goods, court held (1) that conversation and representations as to delivery date of goods, which took place before signing of purchase order, were properly disregarded by trial court, since terms of written agreement cannot be contradicted under UCC § 2-202 by evidence of prior agreement or contemporaneous oral agreement; (2) that trial court properly received evidence under UCC § 2-202(a) that in carpet industry, term "at once" meant "as soon as possible"; (3) that trial court's failure to find that seller had not identified conforming goods to the contract prior to resale thereof, as required by UCC § 2-704(1)(a), was proper and was supported by the evidence; and (4) that damages assessed against buyer under UCC § 2-706(1), dealing with seller's resale of the goods, had been properly calculated, since trial court did not include therein amount of carpeting sold at such resale before seller gave notice to buyer. Action Time Carpets, Inc. v. Midwest Carpet Brokers, Inc., 271 N.W.2d 36 (Minn. 1978).

A prerequisite for invoking the remedy of resale under UCC § 2-706(1) is the seller's identification of "conforming goods" to the contract pursuant to UCC § 2-704(1)(a). Action Time Carpets, Inc. v. Midwest Carpet Brokers, Inc., 271 N.W.2d 36 (Minn. 1978).

§ 75-2-705. Seller's stoppage of delivery in transit or otherwise.

(1) The seller may stop delivery of goods in the possession of a carrier or other bailee when he discovers the buyer to be insolvent (Section 2-702) [Section 75-2-702] and may stop delivery of carload, truckload, planeload or larger shipments of express or freight when the buyer repudiates or fails to make a payment due before delivery or if for any other reason the seller has a right to withhold or reclaim the goods.

(2) As against such buyer the seller may stop delivery until

(a) receipt of the goods by the buyer; or

(b) acknowledgments to the buyer by any bailee of the goods except a carrier that the bailee holds the goods for the buyer; or

(c) such acknowledgment to the buyer by a carrier by reshipment or as warehouseman; or

(d) negotiation to the buyer of any negotiable document of title covering the goods.

(3)(a) To stop delivery the seller must so notify as to enable the bailee by reasonable diligence to prevent delivery of the goods.

(b) After such notification the bailee must hold and deliver the goods according to the directions of the seller but the seller is liable to the bailee for any ensuing charges or damages.

(c) If a negotiable document of title has been issued for goods the bailee is not obliged to obey a notification to stop until surrender of the document.

(d) A carrier who has issued a nonnegotiable bill of lading is not obliged to obey a notification to stop received from a person other than the consignor.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In interpleader action by bailee of zinc, where evidence showed (1) that bailor, who had stored 300 tons of zinc with bailee, ordered bailee to release all of it to bailor's purchaser, (2) that bailor's purchaser then sold such zinc to alleged bonafide subpurchaser and ordered bailee to release zinc to subpurchaser, (3) that after bailee had delivered 40 tons to subpurchaser, bailor learned of original purchaser's insolvency and ordered bailee to stop delivery to original purchaser, and (4) that on the same day, subpurchaser also ordered bailee to deliver remainder of such zinc (260 tons) to it, district court denied bailor's motion for summary judgment on its alleged right under UCC §§ 7-504(4) and § 2-705(1) and (2) to stop delivery of zinc, since (1) bailor failed to show, within meaning of UCC § 2-705(2)(b), that bailee had not acknowledged that it was holding the zinc for the subpurchaser, and (2) bailor also had failed to show, within meaning of UCC § 2-705(2)(d), that there had been no negotiation to subpurchaser of any negotiable document of title covering the zinc (applying Illinois UCC; also holding that subpurchaser's claim of bonafide purchase was not available to it under UCC § 2-702(3) or § 2-403(1)). Ceres Inc. v. ACLI Metal & Ore Co., 451 F. Supp. 921 (N.D. Ill. 1978).

To invoke the stoppage-of-delivery remedy provided by UCC § 2-705(2), the seller must show that none of the four events listed in subsections (a)-(d) of § 2-705(2) have occurred. Ceres Inc. v. ACLI Metal & Ore Co., 451 F. Supp. 921 (N.D. Ill. 1978).

In absence of bailment relationship contemplated by UCC § 2-702(1) and § 2-705(1), third party to whom seller directly ships goods sold to buyer may not be held liable for disregarding seller's demand to withhold delivery of goods from buyer (holding that since defendant, to whom buyer had directed seller to ship goods, held goods under act of accommodation and not under bailment contract, defendant was not liable to seller for delivering goods to bankrupt buyer in disregard of seller's demand not to do so). H. Lynn White, Inc. v. Leftwich, 2 Kan. App. 2d 341, 579 P.2d 164 (1978).

Under UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-705 seller's sale of appliances to buyer on credit empowered buyer to pass good title to third party by delivery of appliances, under UCC §§ 2-312, 2-401 and 2-403 buyer did not breach any implied warranty of title when appliances were delivered to third party, and under UCC §§ 2-401(2) and 2-703 third party had no obligation to pay seller or return appliances although buyer failed to pay seller. Mamber v. Levin, 4 Mass. App. Ct. 157, 344 N.E.2d 192 (1976).

In action between buyer and seller of aluminum sheets, seller was justified in stopping delivery under UCC § 2-705 where buyer had not paid prior obligations to seller and to others; although Code does not create duty to promptly notify buyer of decision to stop delivery, duty was imposed based on reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing. Indussa Corp. v. Reliable Stainless Steel Supply Co., 369 F. Supp. 976 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

In action by common carrier of crude oil against bankrupt buyer of crude oil, title to oil reverted in oil producing sellers under UCC § 2-401(4) when buyer refused to accept tender of crude oil from pipeline company conditioned upon buyer's payment of common carrier lien; notice given by seller, prior to buyer's refusal of tender, to stop delivery to buyer based on previous dishonor of buyer's checks for insufficient funds was timely exercise of seller's rights of stoppage under UCC §§ 2-702(1), (2) and 2-705(1) and sellers could reclaim oil upon demand and notice as given. Amoco Pipeline Co. v. Admiral Crude Oil Corp., 490 F.2d 114 (10th Cir. N.M. 1974).

§ 75-2-706. Seller's resale including contract for resale.

(1) Under the conditions stated in Section 2-703 [Section 75-2-703] on seller's remedies, the seller may resell the goods concerned or the undelivered balance thereof. Where the resale is made in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner the seller may recover the difference between the resale price and the contract price together with any incidental damages allowed under the provisions of this chapter (Section 2-710) [Section 75-2-710], but less expenses saved in consequence of the buyer's breach.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (3) or unless otherwise agreed resale may be at public or private sale including sale by way of one (1) or more contracts to sell or of identification to an existing contract of the seller. Sale may be as a unit or in parcels and at any time and place and on any terms but every aspect of the sale including the method, manner, time, place and terms must be commercially reasonable. The resale must be reasonably identified as referring to the broken contract, but it is not necessary that the goods be in existence or that any or all of them have been identified to the contract before the breach.

(3) Where the resale is at private sale the seller must give the buyer reasonable notification of his intention to resell.

(4) Where the resale is at public sale

(a) only identified goods can be sold except where there is a recognized market for a public sale of futures in goods of the kind; and

(b) it must be made at a usual place or market for public sale if one is reasonably available and except in the case of goods which are perishable or threaten to decline in value speedily the seller must give the buyer reasonable notice of the time and place of the resale; and

(c) if the goods are not to be within the view of those attending the sale the notification of sale must state the place where the goods are located and provide for their reasonable inspection by prospective bidders; and

(d) the seller may buy.

(5) A purchaser who buys in good faith at a resale takes the goods free of any rights of the original buyer even though the seller fails to comply with one (1) or more of the requirements of this section.

(6) The seller is not accountable to the buyer for any profit made on any resale. A person in the position of a seller (Section 2-707) [Section 75-2-707] or a buyer who has rightfully rejected or justifiably revoked acceptance must account for any excess over the amount of his security interest, as hereinafter defined (subsection (3) of Section 2-711) [Section 75-2-711(3)].

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general; scope.
2. Good faith.
3. Damages.
4. —Incidental damages.
5. Notice of resale.
6. Commercial reasonableness of resale.
7. Adequacy of sale price.

1. In general; scope.

Buyer who bought oil-drilling rig and accessory equipment at public auction by sending agent to make purchase and giving agent blank check to make payment, which was signed by buyer individually and not as representative of corporation of which buyer was president and sole owner, was individually liable to auctioneer under UCC § 2-703(d) and § 2-706(1), following dishonor of buyer's check (which agent had completed by filing in amount for which equipment was purchased), for difference between resale price of such equipment and price for which agent had purchased it where (1) under UCC § 2-706(1) and (2), resale was made by auctioneer in good faith, in commercially reasonable manner, and on proper and reasonable notice to defendant buyer, and (2) auctioneer, before originally selling equipment to defendant's agent, had exercised due care and reasonable diligence by verifying agent's authority to purchase it. Miller & Miller Auctioneers, Inc. v. Mersch, 442 F. Supp. 570 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

UCC § 2-709 does not incorporate resale requirements of UCC § 2-706. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

Seller's remedies of UCC do not apply to vendors of oil and gas leases: (1) remedies provided in UCC §§ 2-703 and 2-706 are inapposite to protect seller of oil and gas lease, (2) definition of "goods" in UCC

§ 2-105(1) clearly excludes interests of oil and gas lessee, and (3) UCC § 2-107(1), dealing with goods to be severed from realty, provides that contract for sale of timber, minerals or like is contract for sale of goods within article 2, if they are to be severed by seller, but both Official Comment and Oklahoma Code Comment to § 2-107 recognize that Code applies only if timber, minerals, etc., are to be severed by seller. Casper v. Neubert, 489 F.2d 543 (10th Cir. Okla. 1973).

Where creditor provided service to debtor of reproducing debtor's master tape into saleable units, i.e. cartridges or cassettes, creditor was not a seller and was thus not entitled to a vendor's lien. North Am. Leisure Corp. v. A & B Duplicators, Ltd., 468 F.2d 695 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

Where the purchaser of a conditional sales contract had the right to sell the chattel at either a public or a private sale, and posted a notice stating that the chattel would be sold at auction, but later purchased the chattel for itself at a private sale, after having it appraised by an impartial appraiser and after notice to the vendee of the private sale, the sale was not invalid for failure to comply with the requirements of a public sale. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. Kilgore, 221 So. 2d 363 (Miss. 1969).

2. Good faith.

Resale of lot of instruments as an entity and not on an individual basis, although raising some doubts as to the propriety with which the resale was conducted, did not adequately support claim that resale was not in "good faith". Wurlitzer Co. v. Oliver, 334 F. Supp. 1009 (W.D. Pa. 1971).

3. Damages.

In action by seller of carpeting against buyer, which had repudiated entire contract of purchase, for damages consisting of difference between resale price and contract price of such goods, court held (1) that conversation and representations as to delivery date of goods, which took place before signing of purchase order, were properly disregarded by trial court, since terms of written agreement cannot be contradicted under UCC § 2-202 by evidence of prior agreement or contemporaneous oral agreement; (2) that trial court properly received evidence under UCC § 2-202(a) that in carpet industry, term "at once" meant "as soon as possible"; (3) that trial court's failure to find that seller had not identified conforming goods to the contract prior to resale thereof, as required by UCC § 2-704(1)(a), was proper and was supported by the evidence; and (4) that damages assessed against buyer under UCC § 2-706(1), dealing with seller's resale of the goods, had been properly calculated, since trial court did not include therein amount of carpeting sold at such resale before seller gave notice to buyer. Action Time Carpets, Inc. v. Midwest Carpet Brokers, Inc., 271 N.W.2d 36 (Minn. 1978).

A prerequisite for invoking the remedy of resale under UCC § 2-706(1) is the seller's identification of "conforming goods" to the contract pursuant to UCC § 2-704(1)(a). Action Time Carpets, Inc. v. Midwest Carpet Brokers, Inc., 271 N.W.2d 36 (Minn. 1978).

Resale of goods conforming to requirements of UCC § 2-706 entitles seller to damages measured by resale price. Resale that does not conform to requirements of UCC § 2-706 may relegate seller to measurement of his damages based on market price at time and place of tender. An action for the price arises in this situation only when reasonable resale efforts do not dispose of goods, and such remedy is distinct from action for damages under UCC § 2-706 or UCC § 2-708. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

In action for breach by seller of contract to repurchase Blonde D'Aquitaine heifers, where contract provided that buyer would buy 16 heifers from seller, that all would be fertile for breeding, that seller would "purchase same heifers" each guaranteed "safe in calf" to purebred Blonde D'Aquitaine bulls, and that contract would be "dissolved" if buyer should resell heifers to another person before July 31, 1974, and where buyer did not resell heifers to another person before such date, but seller refused to repurchase heifers because of drastic drop in their market price, (1) seller's repurchase was not contingent on buyer's providing proof that heifers were pregnant before tender to seller; (2) buyer was not obligated to have all 16 heifers pregnant at end of period for seller's repurchase, and seller was obligated to repurchase all that had become pregnant by that time; (3) buyer's allegation that seller was guilty of anticipatory repudiation of contract was not based on reasonable grounds within meaning of UCC § 2-609(1); (4) although buyer did not make tender at place agreed on, buyer's tender in telephone call of 11 pregnant heifers sufficiently complied with UCC § 2-503(1) in view of buyer's reasonable belief that seller would not accept heifers if buyer should transport them to place agreed on; and (5) on seller's breach of repurchase agreement, buyer's measure of damages was not difference between resale price and contract price under UCC § 2-706(1)-because of buyer's failure to effect commercially reasonable sale within meaning of UCC § 2-706(1)-but was difference between contract price and market price under UCC 4 2-708(1), plus incidental damages for sheltering and feeding rejected heifers. Cole v. Melvin, 441 F. Supp. 193 (D.S.D. 1977).

In an action to recover damages for breach of a tender offer to purchase securities subsequently sold to another, the seller could recover the tender price for the securities, but the proper measure of damages was the difference between the resale price and the contract price, assuming that the resale is made in good faith and in a "commercially reasonable" manner. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

Where the purchaser of a conditional sales contract took possession of a chattel on which the vendee owed a balance of over $6,000 and purchased the chattel for itself for $1,500 after having it appraised at approximately that value by an impartial appraiser, it could not be said that the purchase price was so inadequate as to amount to fraud as a matter of law, because while the purchaser of the contract owed the vendee a duty to deal justly with the vendee's equitable rights and to use diligence to obtain the best price possible for the chattel, it was for the jury to determine whether the purchasers of the contract dealt justly with the vendee's rights and, if not, the extent of damage resulting from such failure. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. Kilgore, 221 So. 2d 363 (Miss. 1969).

4. —Incidental damages.

The statute, providing that the seller after breach of an agreement by a buyer, can recover incidental damages, such as any commercially reasonable charges, expenses or commissions incurred in the resale of the goods, applies to actions arising under both § 2-706 and § 2-708 and would permit the seller, after buyer's refusal to accept a tender of securities in accordance with a tender offer, to recover the commissions due him as a result of the breach of the tender offer. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

5. Notice of resale.

A seller's failure to give the buyer of a truck notice of his intent to resell the truck, after the buyer missed several monthly payments, violated the notice requirement of § 75-2-706(3), and therefore the buyer was entitled to a refund of the amount he had previously paid on the truck. Massey v. Moore, 633 So. 2d 1044 (Miss. 1994).

A buyer is liable to a seller in the amount of 12½ cents per yard for nonacceptance of merchandise pursuant to section 2-708 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which provides that damages are to be measured by the difference between the market price at the time and place of tender and the unpaid contract price, since the seller upheld the burden of proof of establishing the market price by testimony as to the resale price of the merchandise and the seller is not required to elect between the remedies of section 2-708, market price, and section 2-706, resale price; therefore, the court properly applied the market price as the measure of damages, and it became of no consequence that the seller did not notify the buyer of the resale as required by section 2-706 of the Uniform Commercial Code. B&R Textile Corp. v. Paul Rothman Indus. Ltd., 101 Misc. 2d 98 (1979).

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where court order submitting matter to arbitration stated that buyer would have right to sell and make deliveries of nonconforming steel rejected by buyer; where buyer, prior to such order, had informed seller that it would sell nonconforming steel for seller's account if seller did not give buyer other instructions within reasonable time; and where seller did not give any other instructions to buyer and buyer resold such steel, (1) seller had sufficient notice under UCC § 2-706 of buyer's intent to resell; (2) such resale under UCC § 2-604 did not constitute acceptance of goods; and (3) arbitrators under UCC § 2-715(1) properly allowed buyer sales commission on such resale as damages resulting from seller's breach. North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

Grain elevator company breached agreement to purchase 4,000 bushels of wheat for March delivery where elevator purchased more grain for cash during contract delivery period than amount involved in contract with seller, but refused to accept delivery of seller's grain during contract period and for 2 months thereafter; thus, seller was entitled to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703(6) and resell wheat at private sale; since seller exercised his right to cancel contract under UCC § 2-703, and since he was not seeking to recover damages, he was not required to give notice of his intent to resell under UCC § 2-706, nor was he required to notify elevator under UCC § 2-309 that he was "terminating" contract. Mott Equity Elevator v. Svihovec, 236 N.W.2d 900 (N.D. 1975).

Sale of laundry and drycleaning business which was nothing more than sale of equipment, furniture, and other movables of business and which did not involve non-goods such as goodwill or real property, was a transaction in goods and came within scope of Article 2 of UCC; thus, where buyer breached contract to purchase laundry and drycleaning business and seller elected to resell business at private sale, but failed to give buyer notice of intention to resell, of time, place and manner of resale or of seller's intention to sue buyer for difference between contract price and amount ultimately realized on resale, seller was not entitled to recover difference between resale price and contract price as provided in UCC § 2-706, but was entitled to measure of damages prescribed by UCC § 2-708(1). Miller v. Belk, 23 N.C. App. 1, 207 S.E.2d 792 (1974).

Resale of securities at time more than 30 days after breach was not sale within commercially reasonable time under UCC § 2-706(2); public sale of securities made on national securities exchange satisfied UCC § 2-706(4) notice of resale requirement, since any prior notification to defendant would not have given it any greater purchase opportunities. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

Unshipped balance of paintings under contract between parties was sold at private sale and seller was under obligation to give buyer reasonable notification of its intention to resell. Portal Galleries, Inc. v. Tomar Prods., Inc., 60 Misc. 2d 523 (1969).

Where the purchaser of a conditional sales contract had the right to sell the chattel at either a public or a private sale, and posted a notice stating that the chattel would be sold at auction, but later purchased the chattel for itself at a private sale, after having it appraised by an impartial appraiser and after notice to the vendee of the private sale, the sale was not invalid for failure to comply with the requirements of a public sale. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. Kilgore, 221 So. 2d 363 (Miss. 1969).

When the seller improperly makes a resale without notice to the buyer, the latter is entitled to recover the full amount of his down payment, so that where a television set was purchased with the understanding that it would be delivered when the buyer's new house was completed, the seller was required to notify the buyer that he was making a resale although the buyer had notified the seller that the completion of the house was delayed and the seller was holding the television set in storage for the buyer. Wood v. Downing, 243 Ark. 120, 418 S.W.2d 800 (1967).

The seller who resells goods must give notice of a private sale and if he fails to do so he cannot recover the difference between the contract price and the resale price, even though the contract expressly states that in case of breach by the buyer damages shall be so determined. Foster v. Colorado Radio Corp., 381 F.2d 222 (10th Cir. N.M. 1967).

Where husband and wife are the buyers of the property a question arises as to whether notice of resale is sufficient when given to the husband only. Meadowbrook Nat'l Bank v. Markos, 3 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 854 (1966, NY Sup).

On making a resale the seller should properly describe the goods since this relates to its exercise of reasonable care and judgment in making the sale. Dadourian Export Corp. v. United States, 291 F.2d 178 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1961).

6. Commercial reasonableness of resale.

In action by seller, who had bought fishing equipment for sale to defendant buyer pursuant to express contract between parties, to recover for equipment that seller, after buyer's breach, was unable to resell, (1) where seller, instead of seeking damages for equipment that he was able to resell, sought under UCC § 2-709 to recover contract price for equipment that he could not resell, and (2) where seller had satisfied requirements of UCC § 2-709 as to bringing action for contract price of such unsold equipment, seller was entitled to recover contract price therefor, even though his earlier resale of some equipment did not comply with all requirements concerning "commercially reasonable resale" under UCC § 2-706, since (1) seller's net proceeds from resold equipment were less than contract price of such equipment and (2) seller was unable, after reasonable efforts, to resell unsold equipment at reasonable price. Moreover, on payment of contract price, buyer was entitled to unsold equipment in seller's possession. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

Sale of property of bankrupt cosmetic manufacturer for purpose of liquidation was commercially reasonable where it was adequately advertised, conducted by experienced auctioneer, and 14 people registered their presence at the auction, despite fact that it resulted in $3,000 bid for property having a much higher cost value. In re Zsa Zsa, Ltd., 352 F. Supp. 665 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 475 F.2d 1393 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1973).

The term "commercially reasonable" as used in the statute, while not specifically defined, requires that a resale of securities, after buyer's refusal to accept a tender of securities in accordance with a tender offer, should be made as soon as practicable after the breach of the tender offer and the seller should make every effort to minimize his loss, so that, considering the circumstances of the breach, a 30-day period from the day of the breach would be a commercially reasonable time to resell the securities. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

The seller making a resale must act in a commercially reasonable manner and must exercise good faith. Meadowbrook Nat'l Bank v. Markos, 3 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 854 (1966, NY Sup).

Trial court's finding that resale of fish at private sale was for a fair and reasonable market price considering the time of day and the fact that fish are a perishable commodity, was in substance a finding that sale was made in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner. Reis v. Ronny & Dannie Corp., 24 Mass. App. Dec. 107 (1962).

7. Adequacy of sale price.

In instructing jury as to what constitutes commercially reasonable resale within UCC § 2-706, court should mention seller's duty to realize as high a price as possible under all the circumstances. Columbia Nitrogen Corp. v. Royster Co., 451 F.2d 3 (4th Cir. Va. 1971).

Where the purchaser of a conditional sales contract took possession of a chattel on which the vendee owed a balance of over $6,000 and purchased the chattel for itself for $1,500 after having it appraised at approximately that value by an impartial appraiser, it could not be said that the purchase price was so inadequate as to amount to fraud as a matter of law, because while the purchaser of the contract owed the vendee a duty to deal justly with the vendee's equitable rights and to use diligence to obtain the best price possible for the chattel, it was for the jury to determine whether the purchasers of the contract dealt justly with the vendee's rights and, if not, the extent of damage resulting from such failure. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. Kilgore, 221 So. 2d 363 (Miss. 1969).

§ 75-2-708. Seller's damages for nonacceptance or repudiation.

(1) Subject to subsection (2) and to the provisions of this chapter with respect to proof of market price (Section 2-723) [Section 75-2-723], the measure of damages for nonacceptance or repudiation by the buyer is the difference between the market price at the time and place for tender and the unpaid contract price together with any incidental damages provided in this chapter (Section 2-710) [Section 75-2-710], but less expenses saved in consequence of the buyer's breach.

(2) If the measure of damages provided in subsection (1) is inadequate to put the seller in as good a position as performance would have done then the measure of damages is the profit (including reasonable overhead) which the seller would have made from full performance by the buyer, together with any incidental damages provided in this chapter (Section 2-710) [Section 75-2-710], due allowance for costs reasonably incurred and due credit for payments or proceeds of resale.

1. In general.

Where (1) seller sold computer system under purchase agreement which provided that seller would retain security interest in goods until balance of purchase price was paid, (2) buyer, after taking possession of goods on January 14, 1975, advised seller on January 30, 1975 to repossess them for seller's protection because buyer was in financial difficulty, and (3) seller, after repossessing goods on February 3, 1975, subsequently returned part of them to seller's new-equipment inventory without separately identifying such goods from goods already in inventory and also, without notifying buyer, resold some of the repossessed goods to third persons, court held (1) that seller was limited to remedy of security-interest holder under UCC § 9-504, which governed seller's right to repossess the goods in suit, dispose of them, and apply their proceeds, and (2) that because seller, on reselling some of the goods after their repossession, had failed to give buyer notice of sale required by UCC § 9-504(3), seller under California construction of UCC § 9-504(3) could not recover deficiency on unpaid purchase price from buyer (applying California law; observing that if buyer had repudiated contract before delivery and acceptance of computer system, seller could have invoked seller's remedies under Uniform Commercial Code and could have sold system and sought damages as provided in UCC § 2-708). Nixdorf Computer, Inc. v. Jet Forwarding, Inc., 579 F.2d 1175 (9th Cir. Cal. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-708(1), the seller's measure of damages for nonacceptance or repudiation is the difference between the contract price and the market price. However, if this relief is inadequate to put the seller in as good a position as if the contract had been fully performed, the measure of damages prescribed by UCC § 2-708(2) then applies and includes the profit, plus reasonable overhead, that the seller would have made from full performance by the buyer. But if the seller's overhead—that is, his fixed expenses—is not affected by the buyer's breach, no deduction should be made in calculating the profit that the seller would have made if the contract had not been breached. Coast Trading Co. v. Parmac, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 896, 587 P.2d 1071 (1978).

Resale of goods conforming to requirements of UCC § 2-706 entitles seller to damages measured by resale price. Resale that does not conform to requirements of UCC § 2-706 may relegate seller to measurement of his damages based on market price at time and place of tender. An action for the price arises in this situation only when reasonable resale efforts do not dispose of goods, and such remedy is distinct from action for damages under UCC § 2-706 or UCC § 2-708. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

A retail dealer, in an action against buyer for nonacceptance of goods, can recover loss of profits and incidental damages upon buyer's repudiation of contract; this is substantial change from pre-Code law whereby damages were ordinarily limited to the difference between the contract price and the current or market price. Neri v. Retail Marine Corp., 30 N.Y.2d 393, 285 N.E.2d 311 (1972).

The UCC allows the seller actual damages where liquidated damages have not been stipulated and there has been a default by the buyer. Procter & Gamble Distrib. Co. v. Lawrence Am. Field Warehousing Corp., 16 N.Y.2d 344, 213 N.E.2d 873, 21 A.L.R.3d 1320 (1965).

2. Difference between market value and contract price as damages.

A buyer is liable to a seller in the amount of 12½ cents per yard for nonacceptance of merchandise pursuant to section 2-708 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which provides that damages are to be measured by the difference between the market price at the time and place of tender and the unpaid contract price, since the seller upheld the burden of proof of establishing the market price by testimony as to the resale price of the merchandise and the seller is not required to elect between the remedies of section 2-708, market price, and section 2-706, resale price; therefore, the court properly applied the market price as the measure of damages, and it became of no consequence that the seller did not notify the buyer of the resale as required by section 2-706 of the Uniform Commercial Code. B&R Textile Corp. v. Paul Rothman Indus. Ltd., 101 Misc. 2d 98 (1979).

Under UCC § 2-708(1), the seller's measure of damages for nonacceptance or repudiation is the difference between the contract price and the market price. However, if this relief is inadequate to put the seller in as good a position as if the contract had been fully performed, the measure of damages prescribed by UCC § 2-708(2) then applies and includes the profit, plus reasonable overhead, that the seller would have made from full performance by the buyer. But if the seller's overhead—that is, his fixed expenses—is not affected by the buyer's breach, no deduction should be made in calculating the profit that the seller would have made if the contract had not been breached. Coast Trading Co. v. Parmac, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 896, 587 P.2d 1071 (1978).

On buyer's anticipatory repudiation of contract to purchase steel after about half of steel ordered had been fabricated and delivered, court held (1) that seller was entitled to resort to any available seller's remedy for such breach, (2) that UCC § 2-708(2) applied to the case, (3) that trial court's instruction, which was based on UCC § 2-708(2) and broadly provided that seller's measure of damages was net profit that it would have made from full performance of the contract if there had been no anticipatory repudiation thereof, was proper, and (4) that seller's proof was sufficient to make a prima facie showing that its net profit from full performance would have been amount alleged by seller. Capital Steel Co. v. Foster & Creighton Co., 264 Ark. 683, 574 S.W.2d 256 (1978).

In action for breach by seller of contract to repurchase Blonde D'Aquitaine heifers, where contract provided that buyer would buy 16 heifers from seller, that all would be fertile for breeding, that seller would "purchase same heifers" each guaranteed "safe in calf" to purebred Blonde D'Aquitaine bulls, and that contract would be "dissolved" if buyer should resell heifers to another person before July 31, 1974, and where buyer did not resell heifers to another person before such date, but seller refused to repurchase heifers because of drastic drop in their market price, (1) seller's repurchase was not contingent on buyer's providing proof that heifers were pregnant before tender to seller; (2) buyer was not obligated to have all 16 heifers pregnant at end of period for seller's repurchase, and seller was obligated to repurchase all that had become pregnant by that time; (3) buyer's allegation that seller was guilty of anticipatory repudiation of contract was not based on reasonable grounds within meaning of UCC § 2-609(1); (4) although buyer did not make tender at place agreed on, buyer's tender in telephone call of 11 pregnant heifers sufficiently complied with UCC § 2-503(1) in view of buyer's reasonable belief that seller would not accept heifers if buyer should transport them to place agreed on; and (5) on seller's breach of repurchase agreement, buyer's measure of damages was not difference between resale price and contract price under UCC § 2-706(1)-because of buyer's failure to effect commercially reasonable sale within meaning of UCC § 2-706(1)-but was difference between contract price and market price under UCC § 2-708(1), plus incidental damages for sheltering and feeding rejected heifers. Cole v. Melvin, 441 F. Supp. 193 (D.S.D. 1977).

In action for damages for anticipatory breach of contract to purchase livestock, UCC § 2-708 did not foreclose use of former measure of damages as difference between contract price and market value at time of breach in instances of anticipatory breach, but supplied additional option to seller to await time for performance by buyer and prove difference as of that time between market price and contract price as measure of damages to which seller was entitled. Harris v. Gunner, 545 S.W.2d 856 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Sale of laundry and drycleaning business which was nothing more than sale of equipment, furniture, and other movables of business and which did not involve non-goods such as goodwill or real property, was a transaction in goods and came within scope of Article 2 of UCC; thus, where buyer breached contract to purchase laundry and drycleaning business and seller elected to resell business at private sale, but failed to give buyer notice of intention to resell, of time, place and manner of resale or of seller's intention to sue buyer for difference between contract price and amount ultimately realized on resale, seller was not entitled to recover difference between resale price and contract price as provided in UCC § 2-706, but was entitled to measure of damages prescribed by UCC § 2-708(1). Miller v. Belk, 23 N.C. App. 1, 207 S.E.2d 792 (1974).

The difference between the agreed price and the market value of the goods in the city where the purchaser conducted his business at the time the goods would have been delivered if a delivery date was specified, or at the time when purchaser refused to issue delivery instructions if no delivery date was specified, is the measure of the seller's damages for purchaser's failure to accept the merchandise. L.W. Foster Sportswear Co. v. Goldblatt Bros., 356 F.2d 906 (7th Cir. Ill. 1966).

3. Lost profit as damages.

On buyer's anticipatory repudiation of contract to purchase steel after about half of steel ordered had been fabricated and delivered, court held (1) that seller was entitled to resort to any available seller's remedy for such breach, (2) that UCC § 2-708(2) applied to the case, (3) that trial court's instruction, which was based on UCC § 2-708(2) and broadly provided that seller's measure of damages was net profit that it would have made from full performance of the contract if there had been no anticipatory repudiation thereof, was proper, and (4) that seller's proof was sufficient to make a prima facie showing that its net profit from full performance would have been amount alleged by seller. Capital Steel Co. v. Foster & Creighton Co., 264 Ark. 683, 574 S.W.2d 256 (1978).

Under Code section providing that loss of profits rather than difference between market price and contract price is proper measure of damages where no market exists for goods in question, "market" means market which, if availed of, would have substantially mitigated seller's damages. Timber Access Indus. Co. v. U.S. Plywood-Champion Papers, Inc., 263 Or. 509, 503 P.2d 482 (1972).

In an action not controlled by the UCC, the court observed that the provisions of subsec. (2) to the effect that if the measure of damages provided in subsec. (1) is inadequate then the measure of damages is the profit (including reasonable overhead) which the seller would have made from full performance was persuasive because it embodied the foremost legal thought concerning commercial transactions. Vitex Mfg. Corp. v. Caribtex Corp., 377 F.2d 795 (3d Cir. V.I. 1967).

Where the difference between the market price, at the time and place for tender, and the unpaid contract price, together with incidental damages, would be inadequate to put a seller in as good a position as performance of the contract would have done, the measure of damages should be the profit (including reasonable overhead) which the seller would have made from full performance by the buyer. Coast Indus., Inc. v. Noonan, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 333, 231 A.2d 663 (1966).

4. —Profit defined.

The phrase "profit (including reasonable overhead)" in § 2-708 of GL c. 106 is intended to mean the equivalent of "gross profit" which includes fixed costs but not costs saved as a result of the breach. Jericho Sash & Door Co. v. Building Erectors, Inc., 362 Mass. 871, 286 N.E.2d 343 (1972).

5. —Particular applications.

Where city repudiated contract for purchase of parking meters, parking meter manufacturer was entitled to recover, in addition to contract price for meters already manufactured, gross profit, including overhead, which it would have made upon each meter sold during contract period. City of Louisville v. Rockwell Mfg. Co., 482 F.2d 159 (6th Cir. Ky. 1973).

Where the defendant repudiated the undelivered balance of an assortment of window sash and the plaintiff presented evidence showing "weighted average sale price per pair" and the "weighted average direct cost per pair" of the delivered sash, it was not error to subtract the cost from the price giving "lost profit and overhead per unit" and multiplying by the number of undelivered units giving "total lost profit and overhead" and in making an award on that account. Jericho Sash & Door Co. v. Building Erectors, Inc., 362 Mass. 871, 286 N.E.2d 343 (1972).

Seller who could not resell returned goods salvaged them and credited buyer with reasonable value of salvaged goods; held, seller was entitled to recover its lost profits together with the expense or cost incurred in salvaging the goods. Chicago Roller Skate Mfg. Co. v. Sokol Mfg. Co., 185 Neb. 515, 177 N.W.2d 25 (1970).

Plaintiff had entered into contract to act as middleman and supply defendant with mirrors and tub and shower enclosures; defendant decided to do business with another firm; held, plaintiff's measure of damages for breach of contract were profit which would have been earned, including reasonable overhead. Distribu-Dor, Inc. v. Karadanis, 11 Cal. App. 3d 463 (3d Dist. 1970).

6. Lost volume sellers.

Since manufacturer of steel strand had capacity to supply both defendant manufacturer of prestressed concrete and third parties usual contract-market damages for breach of contract set forth in UCC § 2-708(1) is inadequate to put plaintiff in as good position as performance would have done and therefore no setoff against lost profits on contract with defendant will be allowed for profits earned by plaintiff through sales to third parties. Nederlandse Draadindustrie NDI B.V. v. Grand Pre-Stressed Corp., 466 F. Supp. 846 (E.D.N.Y. 1979), aff'd, 614 F.2d 1289 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

"Lost-volume status," which entitles seller to measure of damages in UCC § 2-708(2), rather than measure of damages in UCC § 2-708(1), is logically inconsistent with allowing credit to buyer, under "due credit for ...proceeds of resale" provision contained in UCC § 2-708(2), for proceeds of seller's resale of goods wrongfully rejected by buyer, since whole concept of "lost-volume status" is that sale of goods to resale purchaser could have been made with other goods had there been no breach of contract by original buyer. Therefore, where seller of carpeting sued buyer for buyer's wrongful cancellation of agreement, seller was entitled to lost-profits measure of damages rule set forth in UCC § 2-708(2), and seller's damages under such rule would not be reduced by allowing buyer credit for proceeds of seller's resale of carpeting that buyer wrongfully rejected if seller should sustain, on remand of case to trial court, his burden of proving that he was a "lost-volume" seller (observing that "due-credit" provision in UCC § 2-708(2) was intended to affect rights of class of sellers other than "lost-volume" sellers). Snyder v. Herbert Greenbaum & Assocs., 38 Md. App. 144, 380 A.2d 618 (1977).

In action for breach of contract for sale and installation of carpeting, lost-profit rule of UCC § 2-708(2) was proper measure of seller's damages for buyer's cancellation of contract because (1) on remand of case to trial court, seller might be found to be "lost-volume" seller, and (2) regardless of whether seller could qualify as a "lost-volume" seller, he was entitled to recover under lost-profit rule of UCC § 2-708(2) as result of mixed nature of contract sued on, which was for both sale and installation of carpeting in large apartment complex (holding that resale of carpeting by seller and his recovery of contract-market differential under UCC § 2-708(1) would not put seller in same position that he would have occupied if buyer had performed contract). Snyder v. Herbert Greenbaum & Assocs., 38 Md. App. 144, 380 A.2d 618 (1977).

Upon breach by the buyer of a contract for the purchase of a boat, the seller, being a dealer with an inexhaustible supply of such goods, even though later successful in selling the boat to another for the original price agreed upon between buyer and seller, was nevertheless damages by the consummation of only one sale instead of two and was thus entitled, under Uniform Commercial Code § 2-708 which represented a substantial departure from former contract law, to recover the lost profit occasioned by the buyer's breach, together with such incidental expenses as storage, upkeep, finance charges and insurance incurred during the period the boat remained unsold. Neri v. Retail Marine Corp., 30 N.Y.2d 393, 285 N.E.2d 311 (1972).

7. Incidental damages.

The statute, providing that the seller after breach of an agreement by a buyer, can recover incidental damages, such as any commercially reasonable charges, expenses or commissions incurred in the resale of the goods, applies to actions arising under both § 2-706 and § 2-708 and would permit the seller, after buyer's refusal to accept a tender of securities in accordance with a tender offer, to recover the commissions due him as a result of the breach of the tender offer. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

Where there has been nonacceptance under UCC § 2-708, seller's incidental damages under UCC § 2-710 include recovery of commissions due him as a result of defendant's breach of stock tender offer. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

Attorneys' fees incurred in action to recover loss of profits and incidental damages upon buyer's repudiation of contract are not in nature of protective expenses contemplated by Code. Neri v. Retail Marine Corp., 30 N.Y.2d 393, 285 N.E.2d 311 (1972).

Retail dealer was entitled to recover loss of profits and incidental damages, but not attorney's fees, upon buyer's repudiation of contract for purchase and sale of new boat, even though dealer was able to find another buyer for same price as that negotiated with plaintiff buyer. Neri v. Retail Marine Corp., 30 N.Y.2d 393, 285 N.E.2d 311 (1972).

8. Burden of proof as to damages.

Seller cannot benefit from either UCC § 2-708(1) or (2) if he produces no evidence of the market price or profit loss that he seeks. Acuri v. Figliolli, 91 Misc. 2d 831 (1977).

In action for recovery of damages based on UCC § 2-708, seller failed to sustain his burden of proof as to extent of damages to which he was entitled; in using resale price of equipment and land to determine difference between market value at time of breach and unpaid contract price in measurement of seller's loss by reason of buyer's unjustified revocation of acceptance, seller had ultimate burden to show nonlikelihood of change in market value of property involved between date of breach and that of resale, and also that resale was fair and made in good faith. Dehahn v. Innes, 356 A.2d 711 (Me. 1976).

Under UCC § 2-708(2), proof concerning amount of lost profits, including reasonable overhead, need only be reasonably certain to permit recovery thereof. Tech Corp. v. Permutit Co., 321 So. 2d 562 (Fla. App. 1975).

9. Other matters.

In action for breach of contract by city to purchase specified number of refuse-container units, trial court erred in failing to instruct jury on damages that seller can recover for lost profits under UCC § 2-708(2). Vagabond Container, Inc. v. City of Miami Beach, 356 So. 2d 1266 (Fla. App. 1978), cert. denied, 364 So. 2d 882 (Fla. 1978).

Security agreement provided that rights under chattel mortgage with respect to repossession and resale of truck and disposition of proceeds were to include rights under South Dakota UCC § 2-708; held, chattel mortgage could recover on default from chattel mortgagor's insurer for damage to insured truck pay-off price plus interest charges for 5 months until resale was accomplished. White Motor Corp. v. Northland Ins. Co., 315 F. Supp. 689 (D.S.D. 1970).

For a breach of contract for the sale of a personal chattel, yet to be manufactured, the vendor is entitled to recover the difference between the selling price and the market value at the time and place of delivery. Jagger Bros. v. Technical Textile Co., 202 Pa. Super. 639, 198 A.2d 888 (1964).

§ 75-2-709. Action for the price.

(1) When the buyer fails to pay the price as it becomes due the seller may recover, together with any incidental damages under the next section, the price

(a) of goods accepted or of conforming goods lost or damaged within a commercially reasonable time after risk of their loss has passed to the buyer; and

(b) of goods identified to the contract if the seller is unable after reasonable effort to resell them at a reasonable price or the circumstances reasonably indicate that such effort will be unavailing.

(2) Where the seller sues for the price he must hold for the buyer any goods which have been identified to the contract and are still in his control except that if resale becomes possible he may resell them at any time prior to the collection of the judgment. The net proceeds of any such resale must be credited to the buyer and payment of the judgment entitles him to any goods not resold.

(3) After the buyer has wrongfully rejected or revoked acceptance of the goods or has failed to make a payment due or has repudiated (Section 2-610) [Section 75-2-610], a seller who is held not entitled to the price under this section shall nevertheless be awarded damages for nonacceptance under section 75-2-708.

8. Deduction of expense saved by buyer's breach.

1. In general.

In action by seller under UCC § 75-2-709(1) for price of defective lawnmower bags sold to defendant buyer, court held (1) that buyer had accepted bags (a) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(a) by conduct that signified to seller that buyer was accepting bags despite knowledge of their nonconformity, and (b) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(b) by conduct, such as continuing to try to sell bags and destruction of defective bags, that was inconsistent with effective rejection of bags; (2) that buyer did not effectively revoke acceptance of bags under UCC § 75-2-608(1) because (a) its acts of dominion over bags, including continuing efforts to sell them, were inconsistent with its claim of revocation of acceptance, and (b) buyer also did not comply with notice requirement of UCC § 75-2-608(2) for revocation of acceptance; (3) that seller's damages under UCC § 75-2-709(1)(b) for specially manufactured goods included damages for cost of materials, labor and overhead, administrative and sales expenses, and incidental damages; and (4) that although buyer satisfied burden of proof under UCC § 75-2-607(4) with regard to seller's breach of warranty, buyer's breach-of-warranty counterclaim was foreclosed by failure to give seller adequate notice of breach required by UCC § 75-2-607(3)(a) and Official Comment 4. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Where seller sought to recover total amount of purchase price (see UCC § 2-709(1)(a)) of pipe and did not seek recovery on check given by buyer in partial payment as to which payment had been stopped, trial court incorrectly held that buyer's personal liability for purchase price was governed by UCC § 3-403(2)(b), dealing with circumstances under which authorized representative can be held personally liable on commercial paper (ovrld on other grounds Reams v. Tulsa Cable Television, Inc. (Okla) 604 P2d 373; stating, on remand of cause, that issue was not who was legally liable on check, but who was liable on contract to purchase the pipe). Culpepper v. Lloyd, 583 P2d 500 (Okla. 1978), overruled on other grounds, Reams V. Tulsa Cable Television, Inc., 604 P.2d 373 (Okla. 1979).

Where seller of tractor, who did not obtain security interest therein, reclaimed tractor without benefit of judicial process on buyer's default in making payments, returned tractor to firm from which seller had purchased it, and sued buyer for money owing on tractor by reason of buyer's breach of contract, seller was not entitled to recover as damages amount that buyer owed as down payment on tractor, since (1) Uniform Commercial Code contains no provision for reclamation of goods by unsecured seller after buyer's acceptance of goods under contract, and (2) the code also contains no provision allowing unsecured seller to recover damages after reclaiming contract goods that buyer had accepted (holding that plaintiff seller, in repossessing tractor without judicial process, fashioned his own remedy which, when combined with his failure to sue for price of tractor as provided by UCC § 2-709(1)(a), precluded him from recovering damages for any loss sustained as result of buyer's breach). Kelly v. Miller, 575 P.2d 1221 (Alaska 1978).

Where equipment is sold to and accepted by purchaser who then repudiates the sale, seller has no obligation to repossess the equipment and resell it in order to mitigate purchaser's damages. On the contrary, the seller may sue for the price of the equipment under UCC § 2-709(1)(a). Equilease Corp. v. D'Annolfo, 6 Mass. App. Ct. 919, 379 N.E.2d 1130 (1978).

In an action under UCC § 2-709(1) for the price of goods sold, the seller has the burden of proof as to four elements: (1) the acceptance of the goods by the buyer, (2) the price of the goods accepted, (3) the past due date of the price, and (4) the failure of the buyer to pay. Leviton Mfg. Co. v. Butch Mfg. Co., 37 N.C. App. 726, 247 S.E.2d 1 (1978), appeal dismissed, review denied, 295 N.C. 734, 248 S.E.2d 864 (1978).

Prior to the adoption of the Uniform Commercial Code, actual delivery was an essential element of the seller's proof in an action to recover the price of goods shipped to the buyer. At that time, actual delivery determined in whom title to the goods vested. Under the Uniform Commercial Code, however, as is reflected in UCC § 2-606(1) and § 2-709(1)(a), acceptance is the concept that is utilized to determine the rights of the seller in an action for the price of goods. Montana Seeds, Inc. v. Holliday, 178 Mont. 119, 582 P.2d 1223 (1978).

UCC § 2-709 does not incorporate resale requirements of UCC § 2-706. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

Where buyer paid for used automobiles with check which was dishonored after buyer executed "trust receipts" agreement which specified that bank would hold security interest in automobiles as collateral for loan, bank had unperfected security interest in automobiles which was superior to seller's right to reclaim cars, seller's remedy being an action against buyer for price of delivered goods under Code § 2-709. Guy Martin Buick, Inc. v. Colorado Springs Nat'l Bank, 32 Colo. App. 235, 511 P.2d 912 (1973), aff'd, 184 Colo. 166, 519 P.2d 354 (1974).

A buyer is liable for the contract price where he has received the goods and has failed to prove or offered to prove nonacceptance, effective rejection, or revocation of acceptance within a reasonable time. Marble Card Elec. Corp. v. Maxwell Dynamometer Co., 10 Chest. Co. 145 (Pa. 1961).

2. Recovery in absence of resale.

In seller's action for buyer's breach of contract to purchase seller's product line of floor sweepers and also, on "pay-as-used basis," inventory for such product line, (1) seller's oral acceptance by telephone of buyer's written offer, in conjunction with seller's written confirmation of its acceptance and buyer's failure to object in writing to contents of confirmation within ten days after it was received, satisfied exception to statute of frauds contained in UCC § 2-201(2) and rendered contract enforceable, (2) contract was binding, even though both parties expected that it would be reduced to formal writing by their attorneys, (3) seller was entitled to recover contract price under UCC § 2-709(1)(b) because seller, after buyer refused to perform, was unable to resell sweeper line at reasonable price to another person, and (4) buyer's liability for sweeper-line inventory, which buyer had purchased on "pay-as-used basis," was analogous to good-faith liability of a buyer under a requirements contract provided for in UCC § 2-306(1). Lambert Corp. v. Evans, 575 F.2d 132 (7th Cir. Wis. 1978).

In action by seller, who had bought fishing equipment for sale to defendant buyer pursuant to express contract between parties, to recover for equipment that seller, after buyer's breach, was unable to resell, (1) where seller, instead of seeking damages for equipment that he was able to resell, sought under UCC § 2-709 to recover contract price for equipment that he could not resell, and (2) where seller had satisfied requirements of UCC § 2-709 as to bringing action for contract price of such unsold equipment, seller was entitled to recover contract price therefor, even though his earlier resale of some equipment did not comply with all requirements concerning "commercially reasonable resale" under UCC § 2-706, since (1) seller's net proceeds from resold equipment were less than contract price of such equipment and (2) seller was unable, after reasonable efforts, to resell unsold equipment at reasonable price. Moreover, on payment of contract price, buyer was entitled to unsold equipment in seller's possession. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

When the seller abandons manufacture of goods not readily resellable upon repudiation by the buyer, the seller may not recover the purchase price but may recover only damages represented by the difference between the cost of performance and the contract price and shall include losses sustained, such as payments for labor and materials reasonably made in part performance of the contract to the extent that they are wasted if performance is abandoned. E-Z Roll Hdwe. Mfg. Co. v. H. & H. Prods. & Finishing Corp., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1045 (1968, NY Sup.).

Where because of style change the goods can no longer be resold at a reasonable price, the seller is entitled to recover the contract price from the buyer. Jacobson v. Donnkenney, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 850 (1967, NY Sup.).

Where a petite size mink jacket was altered at the purchaser's request and made even smaller, it was not as suitable for sale as before the alterations, and this circumstance indicated that a reasonable effort to resell the jacket at a reasonable price, following the purchaser's refusal to accept and pay for it, would be unavailing; and the seller was entitled to judgment for the purchase price. Ludwig, Inc. v. Tobey, 28 Mass. App. Dec. 6 (1964).

3. Recovery in event of resale.

In action to recover balance of purchase price of machine which was returned to seller several months after installation, if buyer accepted goods under UCC § 2-606(1)(b) and did not revoke acceptance within reasonable time by notifying seller under UCC § 2-608(2) or reject machine under UCC § 2-602(1), seller would be entitled to recover unpaid purchase price under UCC §§ 2-607(1) and 2-709(1)(a); even if transaction was "sale on approval" under UCC § 2-326(1)(a), buyer's failure to seasonably notify seller of election to return goods was acceptance under UCC § 2-327(1)(b) and reservation of title by seller was limited in effect to reservation of security interest under UCC § 2-401(1); UCC § 2-709(2) provision allowing seller to resell goods did not require seller to make resale over objection of original buyer, but if machine were resold, net proceeds would be credited to seller. Akron Brick & Block Co. v. Moniz Eng'g Co., 365 Mass. 92, 310 N.E.2d 128 (1974).

4. Recovery after rejection or repudiation by buyer.

Manufacturer of parking meters was entitled to contract price for meters which were manufactured pursuant to order but delivery of which was declined when contract was repudiated by city; but payment of judgment would entitle city to delivery of meters. City of Louisville v. Rockwell Mfg. Co., 482 F.2d 159 (6th Cir. Ky. 1973).

When the contract gives the buyer the right to make alternative purchases and he repudiates the entire contract, the "contract price" for the purpose of determining the seller's damages will be the lowest price that the buyer could have paid had he adhered to the contract. E-Z Roll Hdwe. Mfg. Co. v. H. & H. Prods. & Finishing Corp., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1045 (1968, NY Sup.).

5. Recovery after nonpayment by buyer.

Where pipe supplier contracted to sell substantial quantity of pipe to public works contractor, where contract called for delivery of pipe in instalments, for invoicing delivered pipe and for payment for delivered pipe by twenty-fifth of each month after invoice, and where contractor failed to pay contract price as it fell due, under UCC § 2-709(1) supplier had right to sue at once not only for past due payments but also for price of all goods then delivered and accepted, notwithstanding contract did not contain acceleration clause. Gantry Constr. Co. v. American Pipe & Constr. Co., 49 Cal. App. 3d 186 (2d Dist. 1975).

6. Recovery of incidental and other damages.

In action by seller under UCC § 75-2-709(1) for price of defective lawnmower bags sold to defendant buyer, court held (1) that buyer had accepted bags (a) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(a) by conduct that signified to seller that buyer was accepting bags despite knowledge of their nonconformity, and (b) under UCC § 75-2-606(1)(b) by conduct, such as continuing to try to sell bags and destruction of defective bags, that was inconsistent with effective rejection of bags; (2) that buyer did not effectively revoke acceptance of bags under UCC § 75-2-608(1) because (a) its acts of dominion over bags, including continuing efforts to sell them, were inconsistent with its claim of revocation of acceptance, and (b) buyer also did not comply with notice requirement of UCC § 75-2-608(2) for revocation of acceptance; (3) that seller's damages under UCC § 75-2-709(1)(b) for specially manufactured goods included damages for cost of materials, labor and overhead, administrative and sales expenses, and incidental damages; and (4) that although buyer satisfied burden of proof under UCC § 75-2-607(4) with regard to seller's breach of warranty, buyer's breach-of-warranty counterclaim was foreclosed by failure to give seller adequate notice of breach required by UCC § 75-2-607(3)(a) and Official Comment 4. C.R. Daniels, Inc. v. Yazoo Mfg. Co., 641 F. Supp. 205 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Under UCC § 2-709, wheat sellers were entitled to recover interest on amount of purchase price from date payment was due to time buyer's check was received, where buyer failed to pay contract price on date payments were due. Desbien v. Penokee Farmers Union Coop. Ass'n, 220 Kan. 358, 552 P.2d 917 (1976).

In action by seller of low sulphur fuel oil, for unpaid balance of purchase price, commercially reasonable variation in contract as to date of payment was not allowed to impair existence of true CIF contract under UCC § 2-320; in addition to action for price under UCC § 2-709, seller was also allowed to recover "incidental damages" under UCC §§ 2-709 and 2-710, but "consequential damages" were not recoverable under Code. Petroleo Brasileiro, S.A., Petrobras v. Ameropan Oil Corp., 372 F. Supp. 503 (E.D.N.Y. 1974).

7. Effect of loss or destruction of goods.

In action by diamond wholesaler against retailer to recover price of goods shipped under "all-risk" memorandum, custom and usage of industry established liability of consignee for full memorandum price of merchandise stolen while in his possession. Lipschutz v. Gordon Jewelry Corp., 373 F. Supp. 375 (S.D. Tex. 1974).

Where approximately 10 days after defendant received diamonds as part of "sale or return" transaction, diamonds were stolen from his jewelry store, plaintiff was entitled to contract price of diamonds, regardless of binding effect of memorandum which accompanied shipment of diamonds and provided that jewels were delivered at defendant's risk from all hazards regardless of negligence. Harold Klein & Co. v. Lopardo, 113 N.H. 400, 308 A.2d 538, 66 A.L.R.3d 187 (1973).

The total destruction of a roadside diner following the passage of title to the buyer under a conditional sales contract did not relieve the buyer of any part of his liability to the seller under the terms of the contract. Conte v. Styli, 26 Mass. App. Dec. 73 (1963).

8. Deduction of expense saved by buyer's breach.

UCC § 2-709 mandates seller's crediting to buyer resale proceeds only of goods still held for buyer at time of seller's bringing action for price of remaining goods; statute does not mandate crediting to buyer resale proceeds of goods amenable to sale by reasonable efforts and for which no action for the price would lie. Wolpert v. Foster, 312 Minn. 526, 254 N.W.2d 348, 90 A.L.R.3d 1132 (1977).

Since finding of acceptance of delivered restaurant equipment was implicit within finding of no effective rejection, damages against buyer for price of specially manufactured equipment could only be assessed in accordance with Code § 2-709 which contains no provision for crediting expenses saved by seller in consequence of buyer's breach; plaintiff-seller's proffered curative tender reasonably precluded application of damage remedy of Code § 2-708 for nonacceptance or repudiation, in absence of any showing that time was of essence of contract. Beco, Inc. v. Minnechaug Golf Course, Inc., 5 Conn. Cir. Ct. 444, 256 A.2d 522 (1968).

Where seller did not dye wool as required by contract because of breach by buyer, the dyeing cost thus saved is to be deducted from the damages to which the seller is entitled. Jacobson v. Donnkenny, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 850 (1967, NY Sup).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

A plaintiff cannot charge attorneys' fees to defendant in the absence of statute or special agreement; accordingly, plaintiff is not entitled to attorneys' fees where the terms regarding such fees were on printed sales slips, said slips being signed by defendant's employees who had authority to do no more than obtain equipment from plaintiff and acknowledge its receipt at defendant's expense, since there was no agreement for the payment of attorneys' fees and section 2-710 of the Uniform Commercial Code is inapplicable inasmuch as the incidental damages referred to in that statute are restricted to commercially reasonable charges and its meaning may not be expanded to include attorneys' fees. Brownie's Army & Navy Store, Inc. v. E.J. Burke, Jr., Inc., 72 A.D.2d 171 (4th Dep't 1980).

In an action to collect money owed on a delinquent account, plaintiff may not require defendant to pay plaintiff's general litigation expenses pursuant to section 2-710 of the Uniform Commercial Code since there is no basis in the statutes for such an award; moreover, defendant offered to pay the principal sum due without interest or attorneys' fees, both being items of damages to which plaintiff was not entitled, and, under such circumstances, most of plaintiff's attorneys' fees were incurred in an effort to collect attorneys' fees for services performed after the tender of payment and, in the absence of a contract or a special statute, a plaintiff may not be allowed attorneys' fees incurred in collecting attorneys' fees. Brownie's Army & Navy Store, Inc. v. E.J. Burke, Jr., Inc., 72 A.D.2d 171 (4th Dep't 1980).

Seller which materially breached contract to sell and install office modules in buyer's building could not, in action for price of such goods, claim benefits of contract and thus was not entitled to either purchase price of goods or incidental damages under UCC § 2-710 for shipping and storage charges on them. S.G. Adams Printing & Stationery Co. v. Central Hdwe. Co., 572 S.W.2d 625 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Seller's incidental damages under UCC § 2-710 include financing charges incurred incidentally to the breach of the contract, as distinguished from consequential damages resulting from relations with third parties (applying New York law; holding that seller was entitled to recover financing charges actually incurred as result of buyer's breach). Intermeat, Inc. v. American Poultry Inc., 575 F.2d 1017 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1978).

In action against issuer of irrevocable letter of credit which was dishonored on presentation, seeking damages including attorneys' fees, where no provision for attorneys' fees was found in letter of credit, UCC §§ 5-115 and 2-710 were not intended to afford vehicle for award of attorneys' fees either as costs or as "commercially reasonable charges, expenses or commissions." Florida Nat'l Bank v. Alfred & Ann Goldstein Found., Inc., 327 So. 2d 110 (Fla. App. 1976).

In action by seller of low sulphur fuel oil, for unpaid balance of purchase price, commercially reasonable variation in contract as to date of payment was not allowed to impair existence of true CIF contract under UCC § 2-320; in addition to action for price under UCC § 2-709, seller was also allowed to recover "incidental damages" under UCC §§ 2-709 and 2-710, but "consequential damages" were not recoverable under Code. Petroleo Brasileiro, S.A., Petrobras v. Ameropan Oil Corp., 372 F. Supp. 503 (E.D.N.Y. 1974).

Retail dealer was entitled to recover loss of profits and incidental damages, but not attorney's fees, upon buyer's repudiation of contract for purchase and sale of new boat, even though dealer was able to find another buyer for same price as that negotiated with plaintiff buyer. Neri v. Retail Marine Corp., 30 N.Y.2d 393, 285 N.E.2d 311 (1972).

The statute, providing that the seller after breach of an agreement by a buyer, can recover incidental damages, such as any commercially reasonable charges, expenses or commissions incurred in the resale of the goods, applies to actions arising under both § 2-706 and § 2-708 and would permit the seller, after buyer's refusal to accept a tender of securities in accordance with a tender offer, to recover the commissions due him as a result of the breach of the tender offer. Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

In an action brought by a stockbroker to recover damages for breach of a tender offer to purchase securities, commissions due to broker are incidental damages within contemplation of UCC § 2-710.

Bache & Co. v. International Controls Corp., 339 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1972), aff'd, 469 F.2d 696 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1972).

A seller cannot recover storage charges unless he has taken steps to minimize the loss under §§ 2-706 and 2-709. E-Z Roll Hdwe. Mfg. Co. v. H. & H. Prods. & Finishing Corp., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1045 (1968, NY Sup).

The UCC allows the seller actual damages where liquidated damages have not been stipulated and there has been a default by the buyer. Procter & Gamble Distrib. Co. v. Lawrence Am. Field Warehousing Corp., 16 N.Y.2d 344, 213 N.E.2d 873, 21 A.L.R.3d 1320 (1965).

§ 75-2-711. Buyer's remedies in general; buyer's security interest in rejected goods.

(1) Where the seller fails to make delivery or repudiates or the buyer rightfully rejects or justifiably revokes acceptance then with respect to any goods involved, and with respect to the whole if the breach goes to the whole contract (Section 2-612) [Section 75-2-612], the buyer may cancel and whether or not he has done so may in addition to recovering so much of the price as has been paid

(a) "cover" and have damages under Section 75-2-712 as to all the goods affected whether or not they have been identified to the contract; or

(b) recover damages for nondelivery as provided in this chapter (Section 2-713) [Section 75-2-713].

(2) Where the seller fails to deliver or repudiates the buyer may also

(a) if the goods have been identified recover them as provided in this chapter (Section 2-502) [Section 75-2-502]; or

(b) in a proper case obtain specific performance or replevy the goods as provided in this chapter (Section 2-716) [Section 75-2-716].

(3) On rightful rejection or justifiable revocation of acceptance a buyer has a security interest in goods in his possession or control for any payments made on their price and any expenses reasonably incurred in their inspection, receipt, transportation, care and custody and may hold such goods and resell them in like manner as an aggrieved seller (Section 2-706) [Section 75-2-706].

The evidence was insufficient to show that purchasers of a used vehicle properly revoked acceptance of the vehicle in a manner sufficient to trigger damage entitlement pursuant to § 75-2-711, where the purchasers turned the vehicle over to the bank to which their financing documents were assigned, rather than returning the vehicle to the dealer from which they purchased it, the bank was not a party to the litigation, and the purchasers neither pled nor proved an agency relationship between the bank and the dealer; the purchasers' actions in declining to make the necessary payments and delivering the vehicle to the bank for sale with application of the sales proceeds to their benefit were contrary to any justifiable revocation of acceptance. Additionally, the purchasers' action in turning the vehicle over to the bank, and its subsequent sale, did not constitute notice of revocation, which is an essential element for recovery under § 75-2-711, since the record did not reflect that the dealer was aware of this transaction. Moreover, this action was inconsistent with the seller's ownership, and therefore could not constitute notice of revocation; such action confirmed acceptance under § 75-2-606(1)(c). Gast v. Rogers-Dingus Chevrolet, 585 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1991).

In most instances, the Uniform Commercial Code has abandoned use of the term "rescission" in favor of such terms as "cancellation" or "termination." However, "rescission" and "revocation of acceptance" (see UCC § 2-608(1)) are generally viewed as amounting to the same thing under the code, especially since "cancellation," under UCC § 2-711(1), is a remedy that is available to a buyer who has established justifiable grounds for "revocation of acceptance." Peckham v. Larsen Chevrolet-Buick-Oldsmobile, Inc., 99 Idaho 675, 587 P.2d 816 (1978).

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell and install at buyer's lumber plant two "super drying kilns" and two lumber-handling systems, where (1) contract contained performance guarantee that super kilns would reduce drying schedules for buyer's lumber by 50 per cent and that if they did not do so, seller would provide adequate production capacity equal to that of four conventional dry kilns at no additional cost to buyer, (2) buyer paid down payment of $24,000, which was accepted by seller, (3) seller repudiated contract because it could not comply with performance guarantee, and (4) buyer thereafter purchased four conventional dry kilns and also a lumber "stacker-unstacker" from another seller, court held (1) that contract's performance guarantee was sufficiently definite and certain, (2) that because contract was breached by seller before installation of super kilns, liquidated damages provision of performance guarantee was inapplicable to measure buyer's damages and district court should have measured such damages under UCC §§ 2-712 and 2-713, (3) that regardless of whether district court, on remand of case, should apply cover provisions of UCC § 2-712 or contract-market price damages rule of UCC § 2-713 to case, court should base either cost of cover or market price of dry kilns on installed cost of conventional dry kilns with holding capacity twice that of the super kilns contracted for, since parties intended, by their performance guarantee, that super kilns' productivity was to be equivalent of conventional dry kilns with twice the holding capacity of such kilns, (4) that under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was entitled to recover its down payment, (5) that since the Uniform Commercial Code did not provide remedy for seller's recovery of value of equipment shipped by seller to buyer before seller's breach of contract, UCC § 1-103 was applicable and seller, under common-law and equitable principles, was entitled to recover value of equipment still in buyer's possession, together with fair value of equipment that buyer had disposed of, and (6) that district court should compute under UCC § 2-713 damages caused by buyer by seller's failure to deliver and install the lumber-handling systems. Mann & Parker Lumber Co. v. Wel-Dri, 579 F.2d 973 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1978).

Notice that a party intends to consider a contract at an end or terminated amounts to a revocation of acceptance, and preserves to the buyer the remedies afforded by this section. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

This section, providing that a buyer may both revoke acceptance and recover damages, changed the former rule that a buyer could not retain some of the benefits under a contract of sale and at the same time rescind the agreement. Hahn v. Andrews, 182 Pa. Super. 338, 126 A.2d 519 (1956).

2. Alternative or concurrent remedies.

Before enactment of Uniform Commercial Code, breach of warranty and rescission were considered alternate remedies. The code, however, which is much more comprehensive and explicit than precode law, generally avoids use of ambiguous term "rescission" and provides in UCC § 2-608 specific remedy that permits buyer, under proper conditions, to force seller to retake nonconforming goods, even though buyer has already accepted them. Under the code, buyer's revocation of acceptance is distinct course of action that is not to be confused with rescission by mutual consent. Nor is revocation of acceptance an alternative remedy for breach of warranty. Under UCC § 2-711(1), when buyer justifiably revokes acceptance, he may cancel and recover as much of purchase price as he has paid. On the other hand, under UCC § 2-714(2), basic measure of damages for breach of warranty is difference between value of goods accepted and value that they would have had if they had been as warranted. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

In cases involving sale of goods, election of remedies doctrine is no bar to pursuit of alternate remedies so long as plaintiff would not have double recovery and defendant is not seriously prejudiced thereby. Thus, judgment of rescission and restitution was proper in action by purchaser of new automobile against dealer, although purchaser's complaint sought damages arising from breach of warranty, where dealer could not have been misled by complaint since prayer for relief requested full purchase price of automobile as damages (i.e., it requested restitution of purchase price of automobile and, a fortiori, rescission), and where, further, there was no evidence indicating defendant was prejudiced by judgment of rescission as opposed to damages. Melby v. Hawkins Pontiac, Inc., 13 Wash. App. 745, 537 P.2d 807 (1975).

In action by purchaser of new car against automobile dealer alleging that dealer's failure to disclose, prior to sale, that automobile had been damaged in transit and repaired constituted misrepresentation and breach of warranty, purchaser had choice of remedies: He could have disaffirmed contract and sought rescission; or he could have affirmed contract and claimed monetary damages based either on (1) difference in value between car he received and "new" car, or (2) cost of repairing alleged defects. However, purchaser was not entitled to recover damages for amounts expended in making repairs on car where purchaser failed to establish necessary causal connection between repairs and alleged fraud or breach of warranty. Witters v. Daniels Motors, Inc., 524 P.2d 632 (Colo. Ct. App. 1974).

Under UCC buyer can seek damages for anticipatory repudiation of contract and for breach of warranty. Fredonia Broadcasting Corp. v. RCA Corp., 481 F.2d 781 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

Remedies of cancellation and damages are available concurrently and not in the alternative. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

3. Conditions justifying revocation of contract by buyer.

Where new car with paint chipped off on front end and improper difference in color between paint on front end and paint on rear end was delivered to buyer in darkness, buyer on observing such defects on the next day demanded either new car or return of purchase price from dealer, dealer in compliance with manufacturer's firm policy refused buyer's demand and attempted to repair paint defects, and car after being stripped down to bare metal and repainted three times still had paint defects that marred its appearance and value for buyer, (1) buyer justifiably revoked acceptance of car under UCC § 2-608(1)(b), (2) such revocation of acceptance was timely under UCC § 2-608(2), and (3) buyer under UCC § 2-711(1) was entitled to rescind contract of sale and be returned purchase price of car, less specified offset for buyer's use of car (stating that buyer is no longer barred from remedy of rescission because of his continued use of substantially impaired goods which are a necessity to him). Pavesi v. Ford Motor Co., 155 N.J. Super. 373, 382 A.2d 954 (Ch. Div. 1978).

In action against seller of rebuilt deisel engine for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, buyer was not entitled to relief under UCC §§ 2-711(1) and 2-715(1), (2)(a), where there was insufficient evidence as to what caused engine to "seize up," rendering it inoperable. Industrial Contract Carriers, Inc. v. Pacific Diesel Power Co., 277 Or. 677, 562 P.2d 164 (1977).

Although Uniform Commercial Code does not specifically provide remedy of rescission of contract, rescission and revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-

608(1) amount to the same thing, particularly since cancellation of contract under UCC § 2-711(1) is remedy that is available to buyer who has established a justifiable revocation of acceptance. Werner v. Montana, 117 N.H. 721, 378 A.2d 1130 (1977).

Where contract between owner of commercial tennis courts and defendant manufacturer and seller of air structures for sale and installation of three such structures to cover owner's tennis courts by November 15, 1975, was entered into on October 7, 1975, and became unconditional obligation on part of defendant on October 28, 1975, when owner obtained financing for such purchase, admission by defendant's employees on October 29, 1975, that defendant could not complete installation on November 15, 1975, as promised, constituted anticipatory repudiation of contract by defendant under UCC § 2-610 and Comment 1, so as to justify owner's purchase of substitute equipment from different manufacturer. Moreover, defendant's failure to deliver and complete installation of air structures by November 15, 1975, constituted breach of contract sued on, so as to justify under UCC § 2-711(1) owner's cancellation of contract on November 20, 1975 (applying Pennsylvania law; also holding that letter from defendant to owner on November 17, 1975, in which defendant offered to complete installation, could not serve under UCC § 2-611(1) as retraction of defendant's earlier repudiation because letter was written two days after defendant's complete performance was due). Tennisland, Inc. v. Precision Tennis Sys., 437 F. Supp. 339 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

Purchaser of cash registers had reasonable grounds for insecurity within meaning of UCC § 2-609 where seller projected delivery of 23 units by first half of 1969 but later rescheduled delivery to January, 1970, where buyer learned in March, 1969, that work had not commenced and pilot unit would not be ready until July, 1969, where seller's own personnel were concerned about design of model and attempted to reduce buyer's order, and where prototype unit furnished buyer performed unsatisfactorily. Written demand for adequate assurance of performance was not necessary where evidence established that buyer and seller had clear understanding that buyer had suspended performance until receipt of adequate assurance of performance from seller and thus seller's failure to give adequate assurance entitled buyer to suspend its performance and cancel order pursuant to UCC § 2-610 and UCC § 2-711. AMF, Inc. v. McDonald's Corp., 536 F.2d 1167 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

Where seller never tendered delivery of automobile under installment sales contract, not only did risk of loss remain on seller under UCC § 2-509(3), but buyer had right to cancel contract. Schleimer v. Gooze, 50 A.D.2d 944 (2d Dep't 1975).

The agent of a seller who is a party to the misrepresentation of a race horse is not jointly and severally liable with his principal in an action for a rescission of the contract and a recovery of the purchase money paid for the horse; however, a different result would have been reached had the purchasers sued to recover damages consequent upon the misrepresentation. Grandi v. LeSage, 74 N.M. 799, 399 P.2d 285 (1965).

4. Conditions justifying revocation of acceptance by buyer.

Buyers of mobile home, who counter-claimed for amount they paid on sales contract when sued in detinue by bank after buyers ceased making payments, did not rightfully "reject" or "justifiably revoke acceptance" of mobile home under UCC § 2-711, where buyers continued to use mobile home after ceasing payments and giving notice, no evidence existed that value was impaired by defects, mobile home was purchased with knowledge of some of the defects, and buyers refused to permit bank's repairman to inspect or repair the mobile home. Gigandet v. Third Nat'l Bank, 333 So. 2d 557 (Ala. 1976).

Right to revoke acceptance of automobile does not arise from every breach of warranty; to revoke acceptance defect must substantially impair value of car to plaintiff, and each case must be carefully examined on its own merits to determine what is substantial impairment of value. Collum v. Fred Tuch Buick, 6 Ill. App. 3d 317, 285 N.E.2d 532 (1st Dist. 1972).

Where a ring did not live up to an express warranty that it would appraise for $30,000, the buyer had a right to revoke her acceptance of the ring under Code §§ 2-711(1) and 2-608(1). However, a perhaps more accurate characterization of the facts in this case involved the right given to all buyers under Code § 2-513(1) to inspect goods before purchase. Inspection in a case involving valuable gems entails an appraisal by an expert. Therefore the court concluded that the sale in this case was made subject to the right of the buyer to have the ring appraised and that if the ring did not live up to expectation she had the right to revoke her acceptance under Code § 2-608(1)(b). Lawner v. Engelbach, 433 Pa. 311, 249 A.2d 295 (1969).

When the seller has made a material breach of an obligation to repair, the buyer may revoke his acceptance, cancel, and sue for a money recovery, it being unnecessary that the buyer seek rescission in equity on the ground of fraud of the seller. Casey v. Philadelphia Auto Sales Co., 428 Pa. 155, 236 A.2d 800 (1968).

5. Notice of rejection or revocation.

Notice by initiation of legal proceedings does not satisfy the notice of revocation requirement under § 75-2-711. Gast v. Rogers-Dingus Chevrolet, 585 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1991).

Where organ was delivered to buyers' home on December 7, 1972, shortly thereafter two bass pedals and two keys on keyboard failed to play, buyer called seller on December 27, 1972, but nothing was done until March 13, 1973, when seller repaired organ, where, following repairs, one key in every octave in both keyboards failed to play, buyer called seller on May 11, 1973, and told seller that she was still having difficulty with organ and that she wanted refund of purchase price, where buyers agreed to permit seller to bring out replacement organ on condition that if it did not work seller would take it back and refund purchase price of first organ, rhythm system on replacement organ began to malfunction, seller was unable to remedy problem and, during last service call serviceman removed rhythm system component from replacement organ following which lower keyboard failed to play, and where some time after June, 1 1973, seller's employees attempted to return original organ, but were prevented from doing so by buyers who insisted on return of purchase price of organ: (1) evidence was sufficient to establish that defects in organ substantially impaired its value to buyers within meaning of UCC § 2-608(1), thus justifying revocation of acceptance and recovery of purchase price; (2) under all circumstances, buyers notified seller within reasonable time after learning of defects in organ that they intended to revoke their acceptance and ask for refund of purchase price. Schumaker v. Ivers, 90 S.D. 75, 238 N.W.2d 284 (1976).

6. Necessity of offer to return goods.

Tender back of defective mobile home was not prerequisite to buyers' action for cancellation of contract, return of purchase price and incidental and consequential damages resulting from seller's breach, where buyers justifiably revoked their acceptance under UCC § 2-711(1) but seller never made request to have mobile home returned; after revocation of acceptance, buyers had security interest in mobile home for purchase price and they had not only right to retain mobile home, but under certain circumstances had right, after having given notice of revocation of acceptance and no response having been received, to hold mobile home with reasonable care and to sell it if necessary in order to acquire money to get back purchase price; thus, buyers by living in home and maintaining it to best of their ability were also preserving it for benefit of seller as well as holding it for their own security. Mobile Home Sales Mgt. Inc. v. Brown, 115 Ariz. 11, 562 P.2d 1378 (Ct. App. 1977).

Where defendants had been fully paid for services in covering plaintiffs' house with artificial stone, a lien arose in plaintiffs' favor entitling them to keep the stone until the purchase price had been refunded, and plaintiffs were not required to offer to return the stone in order to maintain their action to rescind the contract and to be made whole again. Marks v. Lehigh Brickface, Inc., 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 666 (1960).

Under the Uniform Commercial Code, an offer by the buyer to return the goods after notice of rescission is given is no longer necessary. Marks v. Lehigh Brickface, Inc., 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 666 (1960).

7. Recovery of purchase price.

Where jury could reasonably have concluded that buyer's revocation of acceptance of new 1970 Lincoln Continental automobile was timely and justifiable, buyer under UCC § 2-711(1) was entitled to recover amount of purchase price that he had already paid. Moreover, such recovery was not limited by warranty provision, incorporated in sales contract, that buyer was entitled only to repair and replacement of defective parts. The Uniform Commercial Code expressly declares in UCC § 1-102(1) that it is to be liberally construed, and it also recognizes in Official Comment 1 to UCC § 2-719 that the very essence of a sales contract is that minimum adequate remedies at least be available. In present case, however, limited remedy of warranty in sales contract failed to achieve its essential purpose, since even after numerous attempts at repairs, vehicle purchased by buyer did not operate as new automobile should operate. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

Cotton merchant made express warranties of quantity by stating on its 3 invoices number of bales of cotton sold thereby; and when merchant sold nonexistent cotton to broker, it breached both express and implied warranties and thereby rendered itself liable to broker for at least amount he paid therefor. Simon v. Estate of Allen, 497 S.W.2d 800 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e., cert. denied, 419 U.S. 843, 95 S. Ct. 76, 42 L. Ed. 2d 71 (1974).

Where buyer returned auto to seller after seller's refusal to meet warranty of repair and refusal, buyer was entitled to return of purchase price on proof of rightful return of auto; instruction that buyer may recover purchase price only if returned auto was worthless was error. Jacobs v. Metro Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc., 125 Ga. App. 462, 188 S.E.2d 250 (1972).

Upon cancellation of a contract for the purchase of a used airplane the buyer is entitled to recover so much of the purchase price as has been paid, incidental damages for expenses such as the cost of repairs reasonably incurred as a result of the seller's breach, and the cost of the care and custody of the plane. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

When a buyer is entitled to rescind for breach of contract by the seller, the buyer is not required to bring an equitable action for rescission as he has the right to rescind by his unilateral action and sue the seller for the return of the purchase price less credit for any use obtained from the goods. Byrd v. Moore Ford Co., 116 Ga. App. 292, 157 S.E.2d 41 (1967).

8. —Buyer's security interest in rejected goods.

Tender back of defective mobile home was not prerequisite to buyers' action for cancellation of contract, return of purchase price and incidental and consequential damages resulting from seller's breach, where buyers justifiably revoked their acceptance under UCC § 2-711(1) but seller never made request to have mobile home returned; after revocation of acceptance, buyers had security interest in mobile home for purchase price and they had not only right to retain mobile home, but under certain circumstances had right, after having given notice of revocation of acceptance and no response having been received, to hold mobile home with reasonable care and to sell it if necessary in order to acquire money to get back purchase price; thus, buyers by living in home and maintaining it to best of their ability were also preserving it for benefit of seller as well as holding it for their own security. Mobile Home Sales Mgt. Inc. v. Brown, 115 Ariz. 11, 562 P.2d 1378 (Ct. App. 1977).

Purchaser of nonconforming mobile home under installment sales contract rightfully rejected unit and notified seller of rejection within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-602, but purchaser's security interest in goods under UCC § 2-711 did not give him right to continued use of goods until security interest was satisfied; and where purchaser, instead of storing, reshipping, or reselling goods as provided by UCC § 2-604, moved into unit and corrected deficiencies, he accepted goods under UCC § 2-606 and became obligated to pay contract price under UCC § 2-607, retaining only his rights for damages under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715; although exclusion of expressed and implied warranties in dark print which was underlined complied with UCC § 2-316, purchaser could nevertheless recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 should trier of fact conclude that dealer made express warranties that mobile home would conform to sample or model shown purchaser on dealer's lot. Bowen v. Young, 507 S.W.2d 600, 67 A.L.R.3d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

In action between purchaser of nonconforming mobile home and assignee of security agreement, purchaser's revocation of acceptance occurred within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-608 and 1-204(2) where purchaser relied on dealer's promises to make corrections while retaining option of cancellation; under UCC § 2-711(1) and (3) purchaser retained security interest in price paid and was allowed to recover so much of price as had been paid. Frontier Mobile Home Sales, Inc. v. Trigleth, 256 Ark. 101, 505 S.W.2d 516 (1974).

Where buyer of cattle justifiably revoked acceptance of 398 steers, because of buyer's previous partial payment, under UCC § 2-711 buyer acquired security interest in steers in his possession for amount of partial payment and for any expenses he reasonably incurred in care and custody of those steers; under UCC § 2-706, buyer was entitled to resell steers at public or private sale in order to protect security interest. Johnsrud v. Lind, 219 N.W.2d 181 (N.D. 1974).

Buyers of an ice cream freezer and refrigeration compressor unit who failed to assert in seller's replevin action a lien based on their right to rescind the contract and receive the return of the down payment could not, by instituting an action in assumpsit to recover the down payment and their expenses, demand that a judgment by confession obtained by sellers be opened so that the claim on which the judgment was based could be litigated together with their action in assumpsit, especially where assumpsit action was instituted more than two years after sellers obtained possession of the equipment.

9. Cover.

Under UCC § 2-711(1)(a), cover is available to buyer where (1) seller fails to make delivery, (2) seller repudiates, (3) buyer rightfully rejects the goods, or (4) buyer justifiably revokes acceptance. D & H Co. v. Shultz, 579 P.2d 821 (Okla. 1978).

Where seller of cotton represented to buyer that seller would sell and deliver all cotton produced by specified number of growers during particular year at specified price per pound, and where seller failed to obtain one grower's consent to sale of that grower's cotton at price specified in seller's contract with buyer, seller's failure to deliver such cotton constituted breach of contract with buyer which justified buyer, under UCC § 2-711(1)(a) and § 2-712(1), in covering for such cotton by promptly buying the same undelivered cotton directly from the nonconsenting grower at a higher but reasonable price therefor. Moreover, in buyer's action for seller's breach, buyer under UCC § 2-712(2) was entitled to recover as damages difference between cost of cover purchase from the nonconsenting grower and price at which seller had contracted to sell such cotton to buyer. W.B. Dunavant & Co. v. Southmost Growers, Inc., 561 S.W.2d 578 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 26, 1978).

Where buyer and seller entered into contract for sale of wheat on July 31, 1973, and seller thereafter repudiated contract by letter on August 21, 1973, which was received by buyer on August 24, 1973; and where buyer, after seller's anticipatory repudiation on August 24, 1973, continued to urge seller to perform until September 6, 1973, when seller informed buyer that seller would not perform and buyer thereupon cancelled contract, buyer had reasonable time under UCC § 2-713, after seller's anticipatory repudiation on August 24, to "cover" such wheat (make reasonable purchase of substitute wheat), and such reasonable time expired on September 6, when contract was cancelled by buyer. On remand of case, if buyer, who did not "cover" wheat (or sue for specific performance of contract, but instead sought damages for nondelivery under UCC § 2-711 pursuant to measurement of damages rule contained in UCC § 2-713) should present no valid reason for failing to "cover," damages should be based on difference between market price of wheat on date contract was made (July 31) and date on which contract was cancelled by buyer (September 6); but if buyer should present valid reason for not "covering," damages should be based on difference between market price on date contract made (July 31) and last date for its performance (September 30). Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

In action arising out of contract for sale of grain, buyer did not "cover" under UCC §§ 2-711 and 2-712 after seller failed to deliver on schedule, where delivery date was extended and buyer bought grain on open market to meet its own sales commitments without purchasing grain specifically for seller's account under contract. Jamestown Farmers Elevator, Inc. v. General Mills, Inc., 552 F.2d 1285 (8th Cir. N.D. 1977).

In action by buyer to recover damages from seller based upon seller's breach of contract for sale of soybeans, where there was no evidence of "cover," trial court properly submitted issue of damages to jury under UCC § 2-713; furthermore, trial court properly excluded evidence of expenses saved by buyer in consequence of seller's breach where buyer relied solely upon measure of market price and did not attempt to collect any incidental or consequential damages. Ralston Purina Co. v. McFarland, 550 F.2d 967 (4th Cir. N.C. 1977).

Buyer of air structures purchased to cover commercial tennis courts, so that courts could be rented to tennis players during cold weather, was not entitled to damages for cover under UCC § 2-711(1)(a) and UCC § 2-712(2) on defendant seller's repudiation of contract where cost to buyer of substitute air structures purchased from different manufacturer was less than cost of structures purchased from defendant. Tennisland, Inc. v. Precision Tennis Sys., 437 F. Supp. 339 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

Where seller breached contract to deliver corn on June 4, 1973, buyer acted reasonably in making first installment of cover purchase on June 13, 1973, in absence of evidence that cover was immediately available; although remaining purchase on June 26, 1973, may have been unreasonable, in view of lack of evidence why cover could not have been fully effected on earlier date, seller was not prejudiced by additional delay since June 26 purchase was at cost of 5 cents per bushel less than June 13 purchase. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Lyle, 90 S.D. 86, 238 N.W.2d 290 (1976).

Since farmer's repudiation in June of contract for future delivery of grain was unequivocal and "cover" easily and immediately was available to grain dealer, dealer's commercially reasonable time to await performance by repudiating farmer expired on date repudiation was made, and he should at that time have resorted to remedies provided for in Code § 2-711. Oloffson v. Coomer, 11 Ill. App. 3d 918, 296 N.E.2d 871 (3d Dist. 1973).

10. Damages for nondelivery.

Where contract for sale of grain omitted delivery date, such omission did not involve statute of frauds problem as parties orally agreed that seller had option to deliver within 2 months period; where seller refused to deliver corn, buyer's remedy for nondelivery under UCC § 2-711 was for damages, this being difference between contract price for corn and market price at date of breach. Cargill, Inc. v. Pickbohm, 252 N.W.2d 739 (Iowa 1977).

Buyer of automobile was entitled to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 when seller was unable to furnish clear title certificate as required; under UCC §§ 2-711 and 2-713, buyer was entitled to recover purchase price plus difference between purchase price and market value of vehicle with clear title as "non-delivery" damages; fact that automobile was delivered to and used by buyer did not impair buyer's right to revoke acceptance or to recover "non-delivery" damages. Gawlick v. American Bldrs. Supply, Inc., 86 N.M. 77, 519 P.2d 313 (Ct. App. 1974).

11. Resale of goods by buyer.

Although revocation of acceptance could be inferred from the fact that automobile purchaser left car at dealer's lot, removed license plates and surrendered them, where purchaser did not present transfer stub to dealer, nor tender certificate of title, purchaser was relegated to second remedy under UCC § 2-711 after revocation of acceptance he could have sold car, since he retained ownership, and obtained damages amounting to difference between proceeds of sale and purchase price. Curtis v. Fordham Chrysler Plymouth, Inc., 81 Misc. 2d 566 (1975).

In breach of warranty action by crane purchaser who had rightfully revoked acceptance, evidence failed to establish that price received upon sale of crane by purchaser two years after notice of revocation of acceptance had been refused by manufacturer represented fair value of crane at time of revocation of acceptance. Uganski v. Little Giant Crane & Shovel, Inc., 35 Mich. App. 88, 192 N.W.2d 580 (1971).

In Walter E. Heller & Co. v. Hammond Appliance Co. (1959) 29 NJ 589, 151 A2d 537, the court referred to § 2-711(3), although not yet effective, in reaching the conclusion that where the seller had agreed to retake the goods after the buyer's rescission but took no action for more than a year thereafter the buyer was entitled to storage charges on the goods and could resell them in good faith sale. Walter E. Heller & Co. v. Hammond Appliance Co., 29 N.J. 589, 151 A.2d 537 (1959).

12. Recovery of other elements of damages.

Purchaser of conveyor-stacker, on justifiably revoking acceptance of equipment after giving defendant manufacturer-seller ample time to correct problems causing equipment not to function properly, was entitled under UCC § 2-711(1) to recover, as damages for defendant's breach of both express warranty and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, price paid for equipment and also, under UCC § 2-715(1) and (2), incidental and consequential damages resulting from seller's breach, including purchaser's loss of profit in resale of equipment. Barney Mach. Co. v. Continental M.D.M., Inc., 434 F. Supp. 596 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

In action against seller of carpet for rescission of contract and damages, buyer was properly awarded damages for freight, handling and storage charges following discovery of nonconformity, pre-judgment interest on purchase price, and loss of profits under UCC §§ 2-711 to 2-715. La Villa Fair v. Lewis Carpet Mills, Inc., 219 Kan. 395, 548 P.2d 825 (1976).

13. Other matters.

In action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose of trailer that was dangerously unroadworthy, (1) trailer's condition demonstrated that implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 were breached, (2) buyer accepted trailer by offering to pay balance of contract price on assumption that trailer could be repaired, (3) under UCC § 2-608(1)(a), buyer was entitled to revoke acceptance on discovering structural defects in trailer's welding and design that he could not have known about without aid of an expert, (4) buyer's revocation of acceptance was timely under UCC § 2-608(2), and (5) under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was not required to prove that damages were inadequate remedy before obtaining right to rescind contract. McCormick v. Ornstein, 119 Ariz. 352, 580 P.2d 1206 (Ct. App. 1978).

In action by mobile home purchasers against seller and manufacturer for rescission of purchase agreement, although purchasers' revocation of acceptance was effective, their continued occupancy of mobile home as their residence for approximately six months after revocation of acceptances was wrongful and manufacturer and seller were entitled to offset amount of fair and reasonable use value of mobile home for this period. Stroh v. American Recreation & Mobile Home

Corp., 35 Colo. App. 196, 530 P.2d 989 (1975).

In action on contract under which buyer agreed to purchase minimum amount of liquid chemicals per month and seller agreed to make available for purchase maximum amount of such chemicals per month, provision requiring either party to cancel agreement prior to seeking damages for breach was unenforceable under UCC § 2-719(2), on grounds that it failed to serve its essential purpose, and agreement was governed by general remedy provisions of UCC § 2-711(1) where seller breached contract by failing to meet its minimum monthly commitments, where buyer in reliance on agreement had entered into continuing resale obligations with third parties, and where operation of provision would have deprived buyer of substantial value of its bargain, i. e., guaranteed source of product availability. Chemetron Corp. v. McLouth Steel Corp., 381 F. Supp. 245 (N.D. Ill. 1974), aff'd, 522 F.2d 469 (7th Cir. Ill. 1975).

Seller stated quasi-contract cause of action to recover from defaulting buyer the price quantum valebant of one knitting machine delivered under express contract for sale of 2 such machines. Singer Co. v. Alka Knitting Mills, Inc., 41 A.D.2d 856 (2d Dep't 1973).

When the seller makes an unreasonable demand for payment which constitutes a breach of contract, his action so varies the contract that any surety or person secondarily liable is released thereby. *United States ex rel. § 75-2-712. “Cover”; buyer’s procurement of substitute goods.

(1) After a breach within section 75-2-711 the buyer may “cover” by making in good faith and without unreasonable delay any reasonable purchase of or contract to purchase goods in substitution for those due from the seller.

(2) The buyer may recover from the seller as damages the difference between the cost of cover and the contract price together with any incidental or consequential damages as hereinafter defined (Section 2-715) [Section 75-2-715], but less expenses saved in consequence of the seller’s breach.

(3) Failure of the buyer to effect cover within this section does not bar him from any other remedy.

1. In general; scope.

In buyer’s suit for specific performance, where seller, after agreeing to sell all cotton produced by him during 1973 crop year, cancelled contract two months later for buyer’s failure to furnish required performance bond within two-week deadline set by seller and buyer thereafter furnished seller with letter of credit (which would expire before cotton was picked) in amount of such bond before buyer finally sent bond itself, (1) since written contract between parties did not specify time bond was to be furnished, UCC § 2-309(1) applied and required that bond be furnished within reasonable time; (2) in determining what was reasonable time, Comment 6 to UCC § 2-309(1) would be followed; (3) under Comment 6, effective communication of proposed time limit calls for response, and failure to reply constitutes acquiescence in such time limit; (4) although buyer did not acquiesce in seller's proposed time limit which was sufficient for answering, new trial would be necessary on issue as to whether buyer furnished bond within reasonable time because buyer's response communication did not answer such issue; and (5) if at new trial buyer should be found to have furnished bond within reasonable time, buyer's remedy would not be suit for specific performance under UCC § 2-716(1), but would be suit under UCC § 2-712(2) for damages for breach of contract, since buyer could have purchased other cotton on open market as cover for cotton not furnished by seller. Weathersby v. Gore, 556 F.2d 1247 (5th Cir. 1977).

In general construction contractor's action against subcontractor for breach of contract to construct and install grain dryer, correct measure of damages under UCC § 2-712(2) to compensate plaintiff for its loss was reasonable cost of substitute dryer and additional expenses incidental to its installation, less contract price for purchase and installation of dryer. Cooper v. Kruse-Reed, Inc., 554 S.W.2d 45 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

It was not necessary under UCC § 2-712 that buyer establish market price and where buyer complied with requirements of § 2-712, his purchase was presumed proper and burden of proof was on seller to show that "cover" was not properly obtained. Laredo Hides Co. v. H & H Meat Prods. Co., 513 S.W.2d 210 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.re. (Feb. 5, 1975).

2. Buyer's duty to mitigate damages.

In action by subcontractor against supplier of ready-mixed concrete for latter's failure to deliver adequate supplies of concrete at scheduled times, where subcontractor's opportunities for effecting cover, as required by UCC §§ 2-712(1) and 2-715(2)(a), were all subject to drawbacks, subcontractor's decision to continue with its existing supplier, in order to avoid even greater losses that might result from attempting to get concrete from another supplier whose ability to perform was uncertain, was justified since in such circumstances, mitigation of damages might well be best served by continuing existing arrangements. S.J. Groves & Sons Co. v. Warner Co., 576 F.2d 524 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

Generally, when a seller refuses to deliver goods, the buyer, under UCC §§ 2-712(1) and 2-715(2)(a), must attempt to secure similar goods elsewhere as a prerequisite to the recovery of consequential damages. S.J. Groves & Sons Co. v. Warner Co., 576 F.2d 524 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

The requirement of "cover" (see UCC §§ 2-712(1) and 2-715(2)(a)), or mitigation of damages, is not absolute and unyielding, but is subject to the circumstances of the case. The test of proper cover is whether, at the time and place, the buyer acted in good faith and in a reasonable manner, and it is immaterial that hindsight may later prove that the method of cover used was not the cheapest or the most effective. S.J. Groves & Sons Co. v. Warner Co., 576 F.2d 524 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

3. Reasonableness of time of cover.

Where broker, pursuant to customer's order, sold shares of stock for customer's account but customer never delivered stock certificates for transfer to buyers, broker could recover difference between amount it expended to purchase covering stock and amount received for stock that customer ordered to be sold. In such case, however, broker's damages could not be determined without considering, as required by UCC § 2-712(1), reasonableness of time that broker permitted to elapse before making its cover purchase. Reynolds Sec., Inc. v. Underwriters Bank & Trust Co., 44 N.Y.2d 568, 378 N.E.2d 106 (1978).

In action for damages for breach of oral contracts to sell anhydrous ammonia, buyer's contention that it should have been granted directed verdict for higher award of damages than award made by jury was not sustainable where (1) parties disputed both dates on which breaches occurred and whether buyer's delay in making cover purchases of ammonia from other sources was reasonable under UCC

§ 2-712(1), and (2) such factual disputes controlled applicable measure of damages in case, Transammonia Export Corp. v. Conserv, Inc., 554 F.2d 719 (5th Cir. Fla. 1977).

Where seller repudiated contract for sale of grain before time for full performance, buyer failed to establish as matter of law that it elected to pursue contractual remedy by purchasing substitute grain which constituted "cover" within purview of UCC § 2-712 where buyer did not purchase substitute grain on open market but rather purchased company-owned grain, and where it was not shown that cover purchase was perfected within time period agreed upon by parties; mere showing that buyer purchased substitute goods from himself at some price, without more, did not establish good faith. Kiser v. Lemco Indus., Inc., 536 S.W.2d 585 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Where seller breached contract to deliver corn on June 4, 1973, buyer acted reasonably in making first installment of cover purchase on June 13, 1973, in absence of evidence that cover was immediately available; although remaining purchase on June 26, 1973, may have been unreasonable, in view of lack of evidence why cover could not have been fully effected on earlier date, seller was not prejudiced by additional delay since June 26 purchase was at cost of 5 cents per bushel less than June 13 purchase. Farmers Elevator Co. v. Lyle, 90 S.D. 86, 238 N.W.2d 290 (1976).

4. Buyer's cover in particular cases.

Where (1) buyer contracted to buy 30,000 pounds of large pecans from seller at $1.49 per pound, (2) seller, prior to specified delivery date, informed buyer that seller would be unable to fulfill buyer's order, and (3) buyer thereafter purchased 30,000 pounds of large pecans elsewhere at $1.67 per pound, court held (1) that buyer had right to cover his loss and then recover damages from seller for difference between contract price and cover price (see UCC § 2-712(2)) and (2) that jury's verdict for $5,400, which represented difference between contract price and cover price of pecans in suit, was supported by the evidence. Wander, Ltd. v. Krouse & Co., 368 So. 2d 235 (Miss. 1979).

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell and install at buyer's lumber plant two "super drying kilns" and two lumber-handling systems, where (1) contract contained performance guarantee that super kilns would reduce drying schedules for buyer's lumber by 50 per cent, and that if they did not do so, seller would provide adequate production capacity equal to that of four conventional dry kilns at no additional cost to buyer, (2) buyer paid down payment of $24,000, which was accepted by seller, (3) seller repudiated contract because it could not comply with performance guarantee, and (4) buyer thereafter purchased four conventional dry kilns and also a lumber "stacker-unstacker" from another seller, court held (1) that contract's performance guarantee was sufficiently definite and certain, (2) that because contract was breached by seller before installation of super kilns, liquidated damages provision of performance guarantee was inapplicable to measure buyer's damages and district court should have measured such damages under UCC §§ 2-712 and 2-713, (3) that regardless of whether district court, on remand of case, should apply cover provisions of UCC § 2-712 or contract-market price damages rule of UCC § 2-713 to case, court should base either cost of cover or market price of dry kilns on installed cost of conventional dry kilns with holding capacity twice that of the super kilns contracted for, since parties intended, by their performance guarantee, that super kilns' productivity was to be equivalent of conventional dry kilns with twice the holding capacity of such kilns, (4) that under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was entitled to recover its down payment, (5) that since the Uniform Commercial Code did not provide remedy for seller's recovery of value of equipment shipped by seller to buyer before seller's breach of contract, UCC § 1-103 was applicable and seller, under common-law and equitable principles, was entitled to recover value of equipment still in buyer's possession, together with fair value of equipment that buyer had disposed of, and (6) that district court should compute under UCC § 2-713 damages caused buyer by seller's failure to deliver and install the lumber-handling systems. Mann & Parker Lumber Co. v. Wel-Dri, 579 F.2d 973 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1978).

Where seller breached agreement for sale of investment securities, broker was entitled to recover difference between contract price and cover price, plus interest cost incurred for delay in fulfilling broker's contract with ultimate purchaser; fact that broker reaped benefits by trading its interest in securities before breach was of no relevance to measure of damages. G.A. Thompson & Co. v. Wendell J. Miller Mtg. Co., 457 F. Supp. 996 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Where seller of cotton represented to buyer that seller would sell and deliver all cotton produced by specified number of growers during particular year at specified price per pound, and where seller failed to obtain one grower's consent to sale of that grower's cotton at price specified in seller's contract with buyer, seller's failure to deliver such cotton constituted breach of contract with buyer which justified buyer, under UCC § 2-711(1)(a) and § 2-712(1), in covering for such cotton by promptly buying the same undelivered cotton directly from the nonconsenting grower at a higher but reasonable price therefor. Moreover, in buyer's action for seller's breach, buyer under UCC § 2-712(2) was entitled to recover as damages difference between cost of cover purchase from the nonconsenting grower and price at which seller had contracted to sell such cotton to buyer. W.B. Dunavant & Co. v. Southmost Growers, Inc., 561 S.W.2d 578 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 26, 1978).

In buyer's breach of contract action for seller's failure to deliver truck to be used in buyer's construction business, (1) since possibility that seller would not be able to obtain truck from manufacturer was clearly foreseeable contingency at time seller entered into contract (which contained no escape clause making obligation to deliver truck contingent on seller's obtaining it), manufacturer's cancellation of seller's order for truck was not "a contingency the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption on which the contract [between buyer and seller] was made" within meaning of UCC § 2-615(a), governing excuse of nonperformance; (2) buyer was entitled to "cover" damages under UCC § 2-712(1) and (2) for increase in net purchase price incurred in purchasing replacement truck; (3) buyer did not waive right to incidental and consequential damages by failure to cancel order for truck when seller first notified buyer that delivery would not be made on date buyer needed truck; and (4) buyer's loss of use of truck in buyer's business while buyer's old truck was being repaired, and also buyer's depreciation or trade-in value loss on old truck, were properly recoverable items of incidental and consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(1) and (2), since such damages resulted from seller's breach. Barbarossa & Sons v. Iten Chevrolet, Inc., 265 N.W.2d 655 (Minn. 1978).

In action by buyer to recover damages from seller based upon seller's breach of contract for sale of soybeans, where there was no evidence of "cover", trial court properly submitted issue of damages to jury under UCC § 2-713; furthermore, trial court properly excluded evidence of expenses saved by buyer in consequence of seller's breach where buyer relied solely upon measure of market price and did not attempt to collect any incidental or consequential damages. Ralston Purina Co. v. McFarland, 550 F.2d 967 (4th Cir. N.C. 1977).

In buyer's action for seller's breach of contract to sell wheat, where seller failed to deliver 5,138 bushels of total amount of 125,801 bushels contracted for; where buyer resold 125,000 bushels to third-party purchaser and covered for all but 801 bushels that seller did not deliver; and where buyer, instead of seeking damages under cover provision of UCC § 2-712, sought to recover under UCC § 2-713 which allows damages based on difference between market price of goods at date of breach and contract price, (1) since market price of wheat at date of seller's breach was less than cost of covering undelivered wheat, buyer was entitled to damages based on market-price rule in UCC § 2-713 for all wheat that seller did not deliver, and (2) such recovery was not barred by fact that buyer did not cover entire amount of wheat that seller did not deliver. Interior Elevator Co. v. Limmeroth, 278 Or. 589, 565 P.2d 1074 (1977).

In action by cotton broker against cotton handler for breach of contract for sale of cotton to broker, trial court erred in using figure of 40 cents per pound, in absence of evidence of market price of cotton at time of handler's breach, as measure of broker's damages under UCC § 2-712(2) where broker covered cotton which handler failed to deliver and where uncontradicted testimony of witness established that broker paid average price of 78 cents per pound for covered cotton, which more nearly reflected actual damages sustained by broker; specific evidence as to cost of cover were not necessary and near average was adequate. R.N. Kelly Cotton Merchant, Inc. v. Cox, 295 Ala. 94, 323 So. 2d 426 (1976).

Where dealer in lighting fixtures agreed to furnish fixtures to electric subcontractor at lump-sum price, subject to additions or reductions as required by subcontractor, subcontractor had option under UCC § 2-610, when dealer repudiated agreement, to "cover" in accord with UCC § 2-712(1) by purchasing required items from another supplier; hence, subcontractor was entitled to recover from dealer excess of cost of "cover" over contract price as provided in UCC § 2-712(2). Robert Mfg. Co. v. South Bay Corp., 82 Misc. 2d 250 (1975).

5. Purchase of substitute goods which does not amount to cover.

In action arising out of contract for sale of grain, buyer did not "cover" under UCC §§ 2-711 and 2-712 after seller failed to deliver on schedule, where delivery date was extended and buyer bought grain on open market to meet its own sales commitments without purchasing grain specifically for seller's account under contract. Jamestown Farmers Elevator, Inc. v. General Mills, Inc., 552 F.2d 1285 (8th Cir. N.D. 1977).

Buyer of air structures purchased to cover commercial tennis courts, so that courts could be rented to tennis players during cold weather, was not entitled to damages for cover under UCC § 2-711(1)(a) and UCC § 2-712(2) on defendant seller's repudiation of contract where cost to buyer of substitute air structures purchased from different manufacturer was less than cost of structures purchased from defendant. Tennisland, Inc. v. Precision Tennis Sys., 437 F. Supp. 339 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

Plaintiffs were not entitled to recover cost of "cover", where evidence indicated that expenses saved by them in purchasing cords of already cut wood were more than difference between cost of cover and contract price. Melms v. Mitchell, 266 Or. 208, 512 P.2d 1336, 65 A.L.R.3d 376 (1973).

6. Damages.

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell investment securities that buyer had contracted to resell to third person, which breach caused buyer to make "cover" purchase of other securities to effect such resale, court held (1) that although UCC Art 8 contains no provision for buyer's remedies against seller for breach of contract to purchase securities, and although UCC § 2-105(1) expressly excludes investment securities from definition of "goods" for purposes of UCC Art 2, nevertheless, as indicated by Official Comment 1 to UCC § 2-105, buyer's remedies in Art 2 for breach of contract also apply by analogy to investment security transactions; (2) that under UCC § 2-712(2), buyer was entitled to recover as damages difference between cost of cover and contract price of securities in suit, plus incidental and consequential damages; and (3) that benefits that had accrued to buyer as result of its trading of its interest in securities in suit before seller's breach were not relevant to buyer's measure of damages for such breach. G.A. Thompson & Co. v. Wendell J. Miller Mtg. Co., 457 F. Supp. 996 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Evidence which showed that buyer's business was buying and selling petroleum products and that at time buyer learned of seller's breach of contract to sell fuel oil, price of oil was $2.30 per barrel higher than contract price, was legally sufficient under UCC § 2-713(1) (dealing with buyer's damages for seller's repudiation of contract) and § 2-712(3) (providing that buyer's failure to effect cover does not bar him from any other remedy) to support trial court's presumed finding that buyer had sustained damages from seller's repudiation of contract. La Jet, Inc. v.

United Petro. Distribs., Inc., 570 S.W.2d 192 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

In view of Code provision declaring measure of damages for nondelivery or repudiation by seller to be difference between market price at time when buyer learned of breach and contract price, court's instruction that purchaser of color television broadcasting equipment was entitled to damages for repudiation of contract equal to loss of value of buyer's television station business, taking into account loss of value between value of business and its future potential before station ceased operation and value of business after it ceased operation, lost its network affiliation and became insolvent, was improper. Fredonia Broadcasting Corp. v. RCA Corp., 481 F.2d 781 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

7. —Incidental and consequential damages.

The loss by plaintiff, Mississippi corporation operating jewelry counters in department stores throughout southeast, of corollary sales as result of a breach of contract by defendant seller of wrist-watches, was a foreseeable consequence of the breach, inasmuch as very purpose of a "loss leader" promotion, in which plaintiff intended to engage by selling watches provided by the defendant at a sale price, was to increase the amount of corollary sales in plaintiff's establishment on the basis of increased patronage attracted by the sale, and plaintiff showed that defendant knew the watches would be used for this purpose. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

Loss may be determined in any manner which is reasonable under the circumstances, and does not require mathematical precision, therefore a plaintiff who has produced the best evidence available to him should not be denied recovery because the amount cannot be ascertained with the same precision as an ordinary claim for damages. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In action for breach of purchase contract by manufacturer of PVC pipe against supplier of resin used in such pipes, manufacturer was entitled to consequential damages where evidence showed that it had made reasonable attempts to "cover" by seeking to purchase substitute resin elsewhere. H & W Indus., Inc. v. Occidental Chem. Corp., 911 F.2d 1118 (5th Cir. 1990).

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell investment securities that buyer had contracted to resell to third person which breach caused buyer to make "cover" purchase of other securities to effect such resale, court held (1) that although UCC Art 8 contains no provision for buyer's remedies against seller for breach of contract to purchase securities, and although UCC § 2-105(1) expressly excludes investment securities from definition of "goods" for purposes of UCC Art 2, nevertheless, as indicated by Official Comment 1 to UCC § 2-105, buyer's remedies in Art 2 for breach of contract also apply by analogy to investment security transactions; (2) that under UCC § 2-712(2), buyer was entitled to recover as damages difference between cost of cover and contract price of securities in suit, plus incidental and consequential damages; and (3) that benefits that had accrued to buyer as result of its trading of its interest in securities in suit before seller's breach were not relevant to buyer's measure of damages for such breach. G.A. Thompson & Co. v. Wendell J. Miller Mtg. Co., 457 F. Supp. 996 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

In action by buyer, a manufacturer of cup boosters, against seller of aluminum blanks used in manufacture of cup boosters for breach of option authorizing buyer to increase original order by 100 per cent, buyer was entitled to consequential damages pursuant to UCC § 2-715 for costs attributable to extra freight for blanks obtained from substitute supplier, and loss of profits in connection with contract for sale of finished cup boosters to United States which resulted from change in delivery schedule caused by seller's breach; however, buyer could not recover under UCC § 2-715 for transportation of its agent in seeking substitute blanks, and for down time of machinery due to seller's breach, where those damages were not satisfactorily proved. R.L. Pohlman Co. v. Keystone Consol. Indus., Inc., 399 F. Supp. 330 (E.D. Mo. 1975).

Buyer's failure to effect cover under UCC § 2-712 does not bar buyer's recover for incidental and consequential damages under UCC § 2-715. Traynor v. Walters, 342 F. Supp. 455 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

8. Availability of other remedies.

On breach by seller, buyer under UCC § 2-712(3) is not required to cover as means of minimizing damages, and his failure to cover will not bar him from any other remedy. Thus on seller's breach, buyer is free to choose between damages based on difference between contract price and cost of cover under UCC § 2-712(2) and damages for nondelivery based on difference between market price at time when buyer learned of breach and contract price under UCC § 2-713(1) (citing annotation; holding that in action for damages for breach of contract to sell grain sorghum, buyer pleaded and proved measure of damages for nondelivery under UCC § 2-713(1)). Jon-T Farms, Inc. v. Goodpasture, Inc., 554 S.W.2d 743, 1 A.L.R.4th 512 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 5, 1978).

§ 75-2-713. Buyer's damages for nondelivery or repudiation.

(1) Subject to the provisions of this chapter with respect to proof of market price (Section 2-723) [Section 75-2-723], the measure of damages for nondelivery or repudiation by the seller is the difference between the market price at the time when the buyer learned of the breach and the contract price together with any incidental and consequential damages provided in this chapter (Section 2-715) [Section 75-2-715], but less expenses saved in consequence of the seller's breach.

(2) Market price is to be determined as of the place for tender or, in cases of rejection after arrival or revocation of acceptance, as of the place of arrival.

3. Evidence of market value.
4. Particular applications.
5. Joint and several liability.
6. Disclaimer or exclusion.

1. In general.

In action for breach of purchase contract by manufacturer of PVC pipe against supplier of resin used in such pipes, manufacturer was entitled to consequential damages where evidence showed that it had made reasonable attempts to "cover" by seeking to purchase substitute resin elsewhere. H & W Indus., Inc. v. Occidental Chem. Corp., 911 F.2d 1118 (5th Cir. 1990).

In buyer's action for damages for seller's breach of contract to sell unique porcelain animal figures and also specific performance of such contract under UCC § 2-716(1), district court ruled, on denying buyer's motion for preliminary injunction to restrain seller from disposing of figures remaining in its possession, (1) that since seller had distributed all but 50 figures to other buyers, plaintiff had already sustained major part of its business injury, (2) that plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance, since it had not demonstrated existence of any special circumstances that would justify penalizing other good-faith purchasers of such figures in order to grant specific performance to plaintiff, (3) that plaintiff's lost profits from seller's breach were susceptible of ascertainment for purpose of computing damages for nondelivery under UCC § 2-713(1) and incidental and consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(1) and (2), and (4) that plaintiff's total damage claim of nearly nine million dollars was an adequate remedy at law. Joneil Fifth Ave. Ltd. v. Ebeling & Reuss Co., 458 F. Supp. 1197 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

In action by grain dealer to recover damages for defendant's breach of contract to sell and deliver wheat, jury should have been fully instructed on provisions of UCC §§ 2-713 and 2-723 where there was evidence of expenses incurred by seller for handling grain in and out of warehouse and possibly for taxes. Pendleton Grain Growers v. Pedro, 271 Or. 24, 530 P.2d 85 (1975).

Section 2-713 has been cited as authority for the proper measure of damages in a case involving the liability of a subcontractor for damages for breach of its subcontract to manufacture and install equipment. Seifert & Son v. Bernheim, 75 York Leg. Rec. 138 (Pa. 1961).

2. Date on which market value is determined.

UCC § 2-610(a) and § 2-713(1) should be interpreted in a consistent manner. Thus, since under UCC § 2-610(a), an aggrieved party may, for a commercially reasonable time, await performance, UCC § 2-713(1) should be interpreted to measure damages within a commercially reasonable time after learning of the repudiation. First Nat'l Bank v. Jefferson Mtg. Co., 576 F.2d 479 (3d Cir. N.J. 1978).

In action by bank against mortgage company for breach of contract to sell bank mortgage-backed securities guaranteed by Government National Mortgage Association (GNMA), where evidence showed (1) that such sale was orally arranged by mortgage broker, (2) that mortgage company did not authorize broker to make contract with bank, but contemplated solicitation of offer to buy at specified price, subject to acceptance of proposed written commitment, and (3) that mortgage company repudiated oral contract made by broker on October 1, 1973, long before date fixed for contract's performance, court held (1) that mortgage company was not liable to bank, since it did not authorize broker to make oral contract in suit and did not subsequently ratify it, (2) broker, because of breach of its implied warranty of authority, was liable to bank for all damages resulting from such breach, (3) letter sent by bank to confirm oral contract satisfied statute of frauds provision in UCC § 8-319(c), since it was written promptly, was received by party against whom enforcement was sought (mortgage company), and was not objected to in writing within ten days, (4) securities involved were investment securities within meaning of UCC § 8-102(1)(a), (5) bank did not attempt to “cover” such securities by independent purchases on the market, (6) bank’s damages were to be measured by damages that bank could have recovered from nonperforming seller for breach of an authorized contract, (7) under UCC § 2-713(1), such measure of damages was difference between market price of securities at time when bank, as purchaser thereof, learned of breach and contract price of securities, (8) phrase “at the time when the buyer learned of the breach” in UCC § 2-713(1) means, in present suit, “at the time the buyer learned of the repudiation,” and (9) UCC § 2-713(1) would be interpreted to measure bank’s damages as occurring “within a commercially reasonable time” after bank learned of repudiation of oral contract (applying New Jersey law; holding that because of circumstances in GNMA securities market at time of mortgage company’s anticipatory repudiation of oral contract in suit a commercially reasonable time for bank to await performance, as provided by UCC § 2-610(a), did not extend substantially beyond date on which repudiation occurred). First Nat’l Bank v. Jefferson Mtg. Co., 576 F.2d 479 (3d Cir. N.J. 1978).

In action for breach of oral contract to sell and deliver by end of 1973 10,000 bushels of corn to plaintiff grain dealer, who in reliance on such contract resold the corn for delivery on or before January 1, 1974, course of performance by parties justified finding that parties had agreed that tender of payment by plaintiff prior to delivery of corn, which would ordinarily be required under UCC § 2-511(1), was not condition precedent to defendant’s duty to tender and complete deliveries of corn contracted for. Furthermore, even assuming that plaintiff could have treated defendant’s silence, after delivering and receiving payment for 2,700 bushels of corn by March, 1973, as repudiation of contract, plaintiff’s waiting until December 28, 1973 before considering contract breached was not unreasonable under UCC § 2-610(a) (noting that earliest date on which plaintiff could have learned of defendant’s breach was August 14, 1973, and also holding that under UCC § 2-713(1), use of December 28, 1973 as date for determining, with respect to plaintiff’s damages, market value of undelivered corn was proper). Carson v. Mulnix, 263 N.W.2d 701 (Iowa 1978).

Under UCC § 2-713, buyer may urge continued performance of contract for reasonable time. At end of reasonable time, he should “cover” goods covered by contract if substitute goods are readily available. If substitute goods are readily available, but buyer does not cover within reasonable time, buyer’s damages should be based on market price of goods at end of such reasonable time, rather than on market price when performance of contract is due. But if valid reason exists for buyer’s failure or refusal to cover, buyer’s damages may be calculated from time performance of contract is due. Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

Where buyer and seller entered into contract for sale of wheat on July 31, 1973, and seller thereafter repudiated contract by letter on August 21, 1973, which was received by buyer on August 24, 1973; and where buyer, after seller’s anticipatory repudiation on August 24, 1973, continued to urge seller to perform until September 6, 1973, when seller informed buyer that seller would not perform and buyer thereupon cancelled contract, buyer had reasonable time under UCC § 2-713, after seller’s anticipatory repudiation on August 24, to “cover” such wheat (make reasonable purchase of substitute wheat), and such reasonable time expired on September 6, when contract was cancelled by buyer. On remand of case, if buyer, who did not “cover” wheat (or sue for specific performance of contract, but instead sought damages for nondelivery under UCC § 2-711 pursuant to measurement of damages rule contained in UCC § 2-713), should present no valid reason for failing to “cover,” damages should be based on difference between market price of wheat on date contract was made (July 31) and date on which contract was cancelled by buyer (September 6); but if buyer should present valid reason for not “covering,” damages should be based on difference between market price on date contract made (July 31) and last date for its performance (September 30). Cargill, Inc. v. Stafford, 553 F.2d 1222 (10th Cir. Colo. 1977).

In buyer's action for damages for seller's failure to deliver towable sprinkler, where evidence showed (1) that parties had contracted for sale and delivery of three towable sprinklers to buyer, (2) that after two sprinklers had been delivered, parties extended time for delivery of third sprinkler, and (3) that on new date fixed for delivery of third sprinkler, seller refused to make delivery at contract price because of intervening increase in cost of such sprinklers, seller's repudiation of contract occurred when it refused to deliver a third sprinkler on new date for its delivery, and buyer under UCC § 2-713(1) was entitled to difference between contract price of sprinkler and market price thereof on such new date of delivery, plus interest. Wilson v. Gifford-Hill & Co., 570 P.2d 624 (Okla. Ct. App. 1977).

In buyer's action for seller's breach of contract to sell wheat, where seller failed to deliver 5,138 bushels of total amount of 125,801 bushels contracted for; where buyer resold 125,000 bushels to third-party purchaser and covered for all but 801 bushels that seller did not deliver; and where buyer, instead of seeking damages under cover provision of UCC § 2-712, sought to recover under UCC § 2-713 which allows damages based on difference between market price of goods at date of breach and contract price, (1) since market price of wheat at date of seller's breach was less than cost of covering undelivered wheat, buyer was entitled to damages based on market-price rule in UCC § 2-713 for all wheat that seller did not deliver, and (2) such recovery was not barred by fact that buyer did not cover entire amount of wheat that seller did not deliver. Interior Elevator Co. v. Limmeroth, 278 Or. 589, 565 P.2d 1074 (1977).

UCC § 2-713 does not affect rule that measure of damages for breach of contract for sale of goods, when delivery is extended to indefinite time, is difference between contract price and market price at reasonable time after performance is demanded. Olsen v. Scholl, 38 Ill. App. 3d 340, 347 N.E.2d 195 (2d Dist. 1976).

3. Evidence of market value.

The time when the buyer learned of the breach of contract for purposes of the measure of damages based on market value under § 75-2-713(1) was the last possible date for timely performance of the contract rather than the date of the buyer's letter requesting performance. Gooch v. Farmers Mktg. Ass'n, 519 So. 2d 1214 (Miss. 1988).

In action for dealer's breach of contract to deliver new car to plaintiff in exchange for plaintiff's old car plus $3,100, plaintiff's damages were governed by UCC § 2-713(1), and plaintiff was required, in order to obtain any damages at all, to show that in the open market he would have been required to pay, for a comparable new car at the same time, his old car and a sum of money in excess of $3,100. Greenberg v. Beckwith Motors, Inc., 136 Vt. 285, 388 A.2d 426 (1978).

In action by buyer to recover damages from seller based upon seller's breach of contract for sale of soybeans, where there was no evidence of "cover", trial court properly submitted issue of damages to jury under UCC § 2-713; furthermore, trial court properly excluded evidence of expenses saved by buyer in consequence of seller's breach where buyer relied solely upon measure of market price and did not attempt to collect any incidental or consequential damages. Ralston Purina Co. v. McFarland, 550 F.2d 967 (4th Cir. N.C. 1977).

Where buyers entered into contract to purchase three combines on November 30, 1973, for price of $2,200, but where on February 20, 1974, buyers had not taken delivery, seller notified buyers that their down payment was being returned, and on same day sold three combines, plus haybailer, to third party for total price of $3,400, buyers did not prove their damages in accordance with standard contained in UCC § 2-713 since there was no competent opinion evidence offered to show particular condition of these combines and what market price would have been at place of delivery when buyers learned of breach. Burgess v. Curly Olney's, Inc., 198 Neb. 153, 251 N.W.2d 888 (1977).

buyer, seller's testimony as to price received for cotton was sufficient to establish market price as of date of breach for purpose of determining buyer's measure of recovery, i.e., difference between contract price and market price, pursuant to UCC § 2-713. Tennell v. Esteve Cotton Co., 546 S.W.2d 346 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.r.e. (June 1, 1977).

In action by buyer of soybeans at specified price against seller for alleged repudiation of agreement and failure to deliver, appropriate measure of damages was as specified by UCC § 2-713(1); thus, evidence of price of soybeans on January 2, 1973, was admissible where evidence was conflicting as to whether buyer learned of breach on January 2, 1973, or another date. Anderson v. Gold Kist, Inc., 138 Ga. App. 19, 225 S.E.2d 487 (1976).

In action by buyer against seller for repudiation of contract for sale of fill and other earth materials, buyer failed to prove damages claimed under UCC § 2-713 where buyer failed to prove market price of fill material at place of tender as of time when buyer learned of breach of contract. Willametz v. Goldfeld, 171 Conn. 622, 370 A.2d 1089 (1976).

4. Particular applications.

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell 525,000 board feet of lumber, where (1) superseding confirmation of sale dated January 29, 1973 provided for price of lumber and stated that delivery would be made between January and June, 1973, (2) buyer received one shipment of 15,000 board feet in May, 1973, (3) parties renegotiated contract in June, 1973 to provide for still higher price and for complete delivery by December, 1973, subject to availability of vessels for shipping purposes, (4) buyer received only one more shipment of 46,000 board feet in November, 1973, leaving approximately 463,000 board feet undelivered, and (5) seller cancelled contract in December, 1973 because of its alleged inability to complete delivery before end of December, 1973, court held (1) that evidence showing that seller had another shipping company that could have provided cargo space to ship lumber in suit, although at a higher price, justified jury in rejecting seller's defense of commercial impracticability, (2) that proper measure of damages was contract price-market price difference prescribed by UCC § 2-713(1), and (3) that June, 1973 renegotiated contract, instead of original January, 1973 contract (as held by district court), should be basis of buyer's damages award. Fratelli Gardino, S.p.A. v. Caribbean Lumber Co., 587 F.2d 204 (5th Cir. Ga. 1979), reh'g denied, 590 F.2d 333 (5th Cir. Ga. 1979).

In action for seller's breach of contract to sell and install at buyer's lumber plant two "super drying kilns" and two lumber-handling systems, where (1) contract contained performance guarantee that super kilns would reduce drying schedules for buyer's lumber by 50 per cent and that if they did not do so, seller would provide adequate production capacity equal to that of four conventional dry kilns at no additional cost to buyer, (2) buyer paid down payment of $24,000, which was accepted by seller, (3) seller repudiated contract because it could not comply with performance guarantee, and (4) buyer thereafter purchased four conventional dry kilns and also a lumber "stacker-unstacker" from another seller, court held (1) that contract's performance guarantee was sufficiently definite and certain, (2) that because contract was breached by seller before installation of super kilns, liquidated damages provision of performance guarantee was inapplicable to measure buyer's damages and district court should have measured such damages under UCC §§ 2-712 and 2-713, (3) that regardless of whether district court, on remand of case, should apply cover provisions of UCC § 2-712 or contract-market price damages rule of UCC § 2-713 to case, court should base either cost of cover or market price of dry kilns on installed cost of conventional dry kilns with holding capacity twice that of the super kilns contracted for, since parties intended, by their performance guarantee, that super kilns' productivity was to be equivalent of conventional dry kilns with twice the holding capacity of such kilns, (4) that under UCC § 2-711(1), buyer was entitled to recover its down payment, (5) that since the Uniform Commercial Code did not provide remedy for seller's recovery of value of equipment shipped by seller to buyer before seller's breach of contract, UCC § 1-103 was applicable and seller, under common-law and equitable principles, was entitled to recover value of equipment still in buyer's possession, together with fair value of equipment that buyer had disposed of, and (6) that district court should compute under UCC § 2-713 damages caused buyer by seller's failure to deliver and install the lumber-handling systems. Mann & Parker Lumber Co. v. Wel-Dri, 579 F.2d 973 (6th Cir. Tenn. 1978).

Evidence which showed that buyer's business was buying and selling petroleum products and that at time buyer learned of seller's breach of contract to sell fuel oil, price of oil was $2.30 per barrel higher than contract price, was legally sufficient under UCC § 2-713(1) (dealing with buyer's damages for seller's repudiation of contract) and § 2-712(3) (providing that buyer's failure to effect cover does not bar him from any other remedy) to support trial court's presumed finding that buyer had sustained damages from seller's repudiation of contract. La Jet, Inc. v. United Petro. Distribs., Inc., 570 S.W.2d 192 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-713, buyer's measure of damages for seller's repudiation of contract for sale of popcorn was difference between contract price and market price at time buyer learned of seller's nondelivery and repudiation. Baker v. Ratzlaff, 1 Kan. App. 2d 285, 564 P.2d 153 (1977).

On breach by seller, buyer under UCC § 2-712(3) is not required to cover as means of minimizing damages, and his failure to cover will not bar him from any other remedy. Thus on seller's breach, buyer is free to choose between damages based on difference between contract price and cost of cover under UCC § 2-712(2) and damages for nondelivery based on difference between market price at time when buyer learned of breach and contract price under UCC § 2-713(1) (citing annotation; holding that in action for damages for breach of contract to sell grain sorghum, buyer pleaded and proved measure of damages for nondelivery under UCC § 2-713(1)). Jon-T Farms, Inc. v. Goodpasture, Inc., 554 S.W.2d 743, 1 A.L.R.4th 512 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 5, 1978).

Buyer of automobile was entitled to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 when seller was unable to furnish clear title certificate as required; under UCC §§ 2-711 and 2-713, buyer was entitled to recover purchase price plus difference between purchase price and market value of vehicle with clear title as "non-delivery" damages; fact that automobile was delivered to and used by buyer did not impair buyer's right to revoke acceptance or to recover "non-delivery" damages. Gawlick v. American Bldrs. Supply, Inc., 86 N.M. 77, 519 P.2d 313 (Ct. App. 1974).

5. Joint and several liability.

The agent or a seller who is a party to the misrepresentation of a race horse is not jointly and severally liable with his principal in an action for a rescission or the contract and recovery of the purchase money paid for the horse; however, a different result would have been reached had the purchasers sued to recover damages consequent upon the misrepresentation. Grandi v. LeSage, 74 N.M. 799, 399 P.2d 285 (1965).

6. Disclaimer or exclusion.

Buyer of turbine generator was not entitled to recover consequential damages allegedly resulting from failure and breakage of turbine blades based on breach of implied warranties where, as authorized by UCC § 2-316(2), contract expressly excluded implied warranty claims, including specifically warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, where, as authorized by UCC § 2-316(4), contract expressly limited remedy for breach of warranty to repair or replacement of nonconforming parts and where, as authorized by UCC § 2-713(3), contract expressly excluded liability for consequential damages. Avenell v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 41 Ohio App. 2d 150, 324 N.E.2d 583 (1974).

§ 75-2-714. Buyer's damages for breach in regard to accepted goods.

(1) Where the buyer has accepted goods and given notification (subsection (3) of Section 2-607) [Section 75-2-607] he may recover as damages for any nonconformity of tender the loss resulting in the ordinary course of events from the seller's breach as determined in any manner which is reasonable.

(2) The measure of damages for breach of warranty is the difference at the time and place of acceptance between the value of the goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted, unless special circumstances show proximate damages of a different amount.

(3) In a proper case any incidental and consequential damages under Section 75-2-715 may also be recovered.

1. In general; scope.

Under § 75-2-714, the measure of damages for a breach of warranty is the difference between the value of the goods at the time they were accepted and the value of the goods if there had been no breach. Puckett Mach. Co. v. Edwards, 641 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 1994).

Plaintiff who successfully proves fraud is entitled to traditional remedies under tort law, to rescind contract and be put in status quo by recovery of purchase price, and may also invoke provisions of UCC. Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

Buyer's demand for the replacement cost of a defective heat pump exceeded the damages they were entitled to recover from the heat pump manufacturer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

Nowhere in UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 is there indication that punitive damages are element of recovery in breach of warranty cases. Novosel v. Northway Motor Car Corp., 460 F. Supp. 541 (N.D.N.Y. 1978).

Since UCC §§ 2-714(2) and 2-715(1) and (2), dealing with buyer's damages for breach of warranty and his recovery of incidental and consequential damages, nowhere contain any indication that punitive damages are an element of recovery in breach-of-warranty cases, the absence of any such provision reflects the established rule that punitive damages are generally not recoverable in contract actions. Novosel v. Northway Motor Car Corp., 460 F. Supp. 541 (N.D.N.Y. 1978).

Where manufacturer breached express warranty attaching to sale of truck by failing to repair within reasonable time recurring problems in truck steering, transmission, and air-conditioning systems, and also did not remedy truck's overheating problem and loss of engine power, express limitation of manufacturer's warranty remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts failed in its essential purpose, and under UCC § 2-719(2), all other contractual remedies were available to buyer (holding, however, that difference-in-value rule of damages in UCC § 2-714(2) was inappropriate to case, since buyer no longer had truck (which had been sold) and all claims for deficiency judgment on balance due had been forgiven; that buyer had not presented evidence of consequential damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(2)(a); and that buyer had only proved $200 in incidental damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(1). Givan v. Mack Truck, Inc., 569 S.W.2d 243, 2 A.L.R.4th 567 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

The Uniform Commercial Code is ambiguous with respect to the effect that the failure of a limited remedy under UCC § 2-719(2) has on other contractual provisions. UCC § 2-719(2) provides that if a remedy fails of its essential purpose, "remedy may be had as provided in this act." The Official Comment to this section states that if a remedy fails of its purpose, "it must give way to the general remedy provisions" of Article 2. The general remedy provisions of Article 2 provide not only for the recovery of consequential damages (see UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2)), but also for their exclusion where this is not unconscionable (see UCC § 2-719(3)). In cases involving the failure of an exclusive remedy in a warranty provision that also excludes liability for consequential damages, the provisions that limit liability also fail, and the plaintiff is entitled to the full array of remedies provided by the Uniform Commercial Code, including the recovery of consequential and incidental damages (see UCC § 2-715(1) and (2)) (where seller's "New Equipment Warranty," given on sale of tractor to buyer, stated that warranty was in lieu of all warranties, including liability for incidental and consequential damages, and court stated that if buyer was able to prove existence of defect in tractor and also that limited remedy contained in seller's new equipment warranty had failed in its essential purpose, buyer would be entitled to full array of remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, including recovery of consequential and incidental damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(1) and (2)). Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

In action by buyer of new pickup truck for damages for breach of express warranty against dealer, manufacturer, and credit company to which buyer's installment-purchase contract was assigned, evidence supported trial court's finding that express warranty extended to buyer by dealer and manufacturer had been breached and on remand of case, applicable measure of damages set forth in UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty should be applied. Arnold v. Ford Motor Co., 90 N.M. 549, 566 P.2d 98 (1977).

Where buyer rescinded or abandoned contract to purchase housemoving business, equipment and public service commission certificate of authority, buyer could not recover for breach of warranty under contract. Allen Housemovers, Inc. v. Allen, 135 Ga. App. 837, 219 S.E.2d 489 (1975).

Buyer of combine that was repossessed by seller and sold at public sale after buyer defaulted on payments was not precluded from recovering damages for breach of warranty from seller notwithstanding buyer did not revoke his acceptance (ovrlg Hudspeth Motors, Inc. v. Wilkinson, 238 Ark 410, 382 SW2d 191, 2 UCCRS 273, to extent it holds that buyer was precluded from recovering damages for breach of warranty where there was no rejection or revocation by buyer). Stimson Tractor Co. v. Heflin, 257 Ark. 263, 516 S.W.2d 379 (1974).

This section does not apply to a contract for the sale of the capital stock of a corporation and its subsidiaries which provided as a condition precedent to acceptance of the contract that the financial condition of such corporations at the time of closing should not be less favorable than the statements as of a given prior date, so as to permit the buyer, after acceptance, to recover damages by reason of the diminution in net worth of the corporations. In re Carter, 390 Pa. 365, 134 A.2d 908 (1957).

2. Tort actions compared.

Damages for economic losses can be recovered in an action for breach of warranty, but not in an action based on strict liability in tort (stating that Uniform Commercial Code contains comprehensive mechanism for dealing with right of parties to sales transaction to recover damages for economic losses). Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

In action against manufacturer of poultry meal for damages resulting from injury to poultry producer's chickens in that chickens fed with feed that included meal manufactured by defendant failed to achieve normal growth, gravamen of cause of action was breach of warranty of sale under UCC §§ 2-313 and 2-314 and damages sought were permissible under and governed by UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, even though tortious breach on part of defendants was alleged. Mid-South Milling Co. v. Loret Farms, Inc., 521 S.W.2d 586 (Tenn. 1975).

In action for breach of express warranty by purchaser of drive-in business for damage caused by collapse of canopy, method of computing damages which granted plaintiff value of used canopy was reasonable under circumstances. Rose v. Helm, 501 P.2d 753 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

3. Notice of breach.

Failure of buyer of car with defective engine to reject vehicle within reasonable time was not bar to buyer's claim under UCC § 2-714(1) for damages for breach of warranty where buyer promptly asserted claim for breach of warranty (holding that Uniform Commercial Code does not require written notice of claim for breach of warranty). Smart Chevrolet Co. v. Davis, 262 Ark. 500, 558 S.W.2d 147 (1977).

The institution of proceedings before an alderman for breach of warranty did not constitute sufficient notice to the seller of the breach, since by beginning the action the buyers were exercising a remedy rather than giving notice, and hence a complaint not alleging notice of the breach and the time of such notice was demurrable. Solomon & Son v. Thomas, 45 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 269 (Pa. 1955).

4. —Continued use of goods or failure to revoke acceptance.

use of goods until security interest was satisfied; and where purchaser, instead of storing, reshipping, or reselling goods as provided by UCC § 2-604, moved into unit and corrected deficiencies, he accepted goods under UCC § 2-606 and became obligated to pay contract price under UCC § 2-607 retaining only his rights for damages under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715; although exclusion of expressed and implied warranties in dark print which was underlined complied with UCC § 2-316, purchaser could nevertheless recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 should trier of fact conclude that dealer made express warranties that mobile home would conform to sample or model shown purchaser on dealer's lot. Bowen v. Young, 507 S.W.2d 600, 67 A.L.R.3d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

When a plaintiff retains possession of and uses the goods in spite of the breach of warranty he thereby is limited to the remedy of recovering damages, as measured by the difference in the value of the goods accepted, at the time and place of acceptance, and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted. Walters v. Garson, 24 Fayette Legal J. 99 (Pa. 1942).

5. —Acceptance of performance in violation of contract terms.

The provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, with respect to the buyer's remedies when he accepts goods and does not revoke his acceptance but sues for damages because the goods are not as warranted, are codified in UCC § 2-714(1) and (2), and also, under appropriate circumstances, in UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(1) and (2). The statutory scheme, as apparent from all of these provisions which should be read as a whole, is as follows: (1) where the buyer has accepted the goods and given notification, he may recover damages which can be determined in any way that is reasonable; (2) the measure of damages is the difference, at the time and place of acceptance, between the value of the goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted, unless special circumstances show proximate damages in a different amount; and (3) in a proper case, incidental and consequential damages also may be recovered. Carlson v. Rysavy, 262 N.W.2d 27 (S.D. 1978).

Buyer's acceptance of nonconforming earth-mover tires did not foreclose its ultimate recourse to remedies otherwise available under Uniform Commercial Code where appropriate notice of breach was given to seller in compliance with UCC § 2-714(1). Edwards-Warren Tire Co. v. J.J. Blazer Constr. Co., 565 F.2d 401 (6th Cir. Ohio 1977).

Inspection clause contained in contract for manufacture, sale and delivery of railroad hopper cars did not bar manufacturer's liability for delivery of defective cars where clause provided that waiver of inspection by purchaser entitled manufacturer to perform its own inspection and such inspection would have constituted acceptance of railcars, where, in any event, provisions of contract neither expressly provided nor even implied that failure to exercise right of inspection constituted waiver of any other contractual remedy, and where purchaser notified manufacturer of faults or defects when they were first discovered and afforded manufacturer opportunity to verify and repair or replace faults or defects; under UCC §§ 2-607(2), when right to inspect arises after creation of contract, acceptance of goods, even with knowledge that they do not conform to contract, may preclude rejection but it does not impair any other remedy and, under UCC §§ 2-714(1), buyer's right to recover damages for goods that have been accepted but do not conform to contract was expressly reserved. Soo Line R.R. v. Fruehauf Corp., 547 F.2d 1365 (8th Cir. Minn. 1977).

Acceptance of additional nonconforming hog fence panels did not in itself bar buyer's right to counterclaim, in action by seller for price of additional panels, for damages resulting from nonconformity either or panels initially received by him or of additional panels. Jones v. Atkins, 254 Ark. 472, 494 S.W.2d 448 (1973).

Lessee of television broadcasting equipment which used equipment for more than one year before entering novation contract and making substantial payments on revised lease lost any express or implied warranty rights it might have possessed by accepting goods and by failing to give lessor notification of breach of warranty within reasonable time. KLPR TV, Inc. v. Visual Elecs. Corp., 465 F.2d 1382 (8th Cir. Ark. 1972).

Buyer may accept late deliveries, without waiving its right to damages. Beacon Plastic & Metal Prods., Inc. v. Corn Prods. Co., 57 Misc. 2d 634 (1968).

6. Difference in value between goods as warranted and goods received as measure of damages.

Heat pump manufacturer's liability for breach of implied warranty of merchantability was the difference in actual value of the heat pump at the time it was accepted by the buyers and its value had there been no breach of warranty. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

In breach-of-warranty action by buyer against manufacturer of defective heat pump that was installed by defendant's dealer in plaintiff's new house, court held (1) that case involved breach of binding compromise settlement between plaintiff and defendant; (2) that defendant's attempt in its limited express warranty to limit its liability respecting any implied warranties was invalid under both Mississippi statute abolishing privity requirement between buyer and manufacturer and also Mississippi UCC § 2-719(4); (3) that defendant was "seller" within meaning of Mississippi privity statute; (4) that because of defendant's breach of implied warranty of merchantability that attached to heat pump under Mississippi UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), plaintiff was entitled to recover (a) damages under Mississippi UCC § 2-714(2) for difference between actual value of heat pump at time plaintiff accepted it and its value in absence of defendant's breach of warranty, and (b) consequential damages under Mississippi UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for additional expenses incurred in purchasing one wood heater and two kerosene heaters; and (5) that case did not justify award of punitive damages for defendant's breach. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

In buyer's action for damages for breach of warranty in sale of three-year-old used car, court held (1) that used-car warranty under Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, which applied to cars not more than four years old, was not plaintiff's exclusive remedy simply because such act was enacted after Illinois Uniform Commercial Code; (2) that both Illinois Consumer Fraud Act and Uniform Commercial Code applied to sale of used automobiles, and that used-car warranties under the former act supplemented remedies afforded to consumers under the Uniform Commercial Code; (3) that implied warranty of merchantability under Illinois UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) applied to case; (4) that jury was entitled to believe plaintiff's testimony that defects in her car had substantially impaired its value; (5) that seller had not excluded or modified its implied warranty of merchantability in sales contract because seller had failed to include therein the word "merchantability," as required by Illinois UCC § 2-316(2); (6) that jury believed that plaintiff had properly revoked her acceptance of car; and (7) that trial court by adjusting plaintiff's damages to reflect difference, at time and place of her acceptance of car, between car's value as warranted and its actual worth had applied measure of damages prescribed by Illinois UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty. Jackson v. H. Frank Olds, Inc., 65 Ill. App. 3d 571, 382 N.E.2d 550 (1st Dist. 1978).

Proper measure of damages under UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty is difference, at time and place of acceptance, between value of goods accepted and value such goods would have had if they had been as warranted. Such measure of damages depends on date of acceptance of the nonconforming goods and not on the date of the trial. Alliance Tractor & Implement Co. v. Lukens Tool & Die Co., 199 Neb. 489, 260 N.W.2d 193 (1977).

Before enactment of Uniform Commercial Code, breach of warranty and rescission were considered alternate remedies. The code, however, which is much more comprehensive and explicit than precode law, generally avoids use of ambiguous term "rescission" and provides in UCC § 2-608 specific remedy that permits buyer, under proper conditions, to force seller to retake nonconforming goods, even though buyer has already accepted them. Under the code, buyer's revocation of acceptance is distinct course of action that is not to be confused with rescission by mutual consent. Nor is revocation of acceptance an alternative remedy for breach of warranty. Under UCC § 2-711(1), when buyer justifiably revokes acceptance, he may cancel and recover as much of purchase price as he has paid. On the other hand, under UCC § 2-714(2), basic measure of damages for breach of warranty is difference between value of goods accepted and value that they would have had if they had been as warranted. Conte v. Dwan Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 172 Conn. 112, 374 A.2d 144 (1976).

In action for breach of warranty, purchaser was entitled to recover purchase price of defective insecticide where insecticide would apparently have been worth purchase price if it had been as warranted, and where, in its defective condition, it cost purchaser a considerable sum in crop damage and must for practical purposes have been worth nothing. Swenson v. Chevron Chem. Co., 89 S.D. 497, 234 N.W.2d 38 (1975).

In third-party action by lessees of printing equipment against manufacturer of equipment for breach of warranty, after lessee had refused to make further payments on lease and lessor repossessed equipment, sold it and brought action against lessees for balance due on lease under their separate guarantee of lease: (1) although privity of contract was requisite to action for breach of warranty, not involving personal injury, manufacturer was estopped from denying lessees benefits of express warranty in present case where equipment was delivered to lessees and was serviced by manufacturer, manufacturer's machine warranty was delivered to lessee, and numerous service calls were made without charge as result of manufacturer's having voluntarily extended 30-day guarantee period because machinery would not stay in adjustment; (2) measure of damages provided in UCC § 2-714(2) was not only recovery possible, lessees were entitled to keep goods and seek incidental and consequential damages as well, provided manufacturer was given, as it was, reasonable notice of defect as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and, hence, lessees were entitled to recover pursuant to UCC § 2-715, as consequential damage, amount they were forced to pay lessor under guaranty. Addressograph-Multigraph Corp. v. Zink, 273 Md. 277, 329 A.2d 28 (1974).

In action by purchasers of mobile home against manufacturer for breach of warranty, under UCC § 2-714(b), proper measure of damages was difference between actual cash market value of mobile home as it existed when purchased, $2,000, and reasonable cash market value of same mobile home free from defects, $6,000, and not difference between actual cash market value and contract price of $5,300. Melody Home Mfg. Co. v. Morrison, 502 S.W.2d 196 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e. (Mar. 20, 1974).

A complaint alleging that the value of wire as accepted was $12.30, and that the value it would have had if it had been as warranted would have been $103, was sufficient in its allegations of damages under subsection (2) of this section. Solomon & Son v. Thomas, 45 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 269 (Pa. 1955).

When there has been a breach of warranty the plaintiff has two available remedies: (1) he may rescind the contract and demand the return of the money paid on account of the purchase price, together with such incidental damages as come within the meaning of the Code, meanwhile asserting a security interest in the goods until paid; or (2) retain the goods and recover as damages the difference between the value of the goods accepted, at the time and place of acceptance, and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted. Walters v. Garson, 24 Fayette Legal J. 99 (Pa. 1942).

In buyer's action for breach of warranty attaching to a laser that did not operate at warranted power output, court held (1) that evidence supported district court's determination that seller had breached its express warranty and that buyer's remedy of repair or replacement of defective parts had failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); (2) that seller had been given adequate notice of its breach under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (3) that since laser was merely component of printer project that buyer was working on and intent of parties, as evidenced by their contract and circumstances of case, was that buyer should bear risk of such project, buyer could recover only breach-of-warranty damages under UCC § 2-714(2) and incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1), but not consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for salaries of buyer's employees who were working on the printer project, since such damages were not contemplated by parties. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

In buyer's action for damages for breach of warranty in sale of three-year-old used car, court held (1) that used-car warranty under Illinois Consumer Fraud Act, which applied to cars not more than four years old, was not plaintiff's exclusive remedy simply because such act was enacted after Illinois Uniform Commercial Code; (2) that both Illinois Consumer Fraud Act and Uniform Commercial Code applied to sale of used automobiles, and that used-car warranties under the former act supplemented remedies afforded to consumers under the Uniform Commercial Code; (3) that implied warranty of merchantability under Illinois UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c) applied to case; (4) that jury was entitled to believe plaintiff's testimony that defects in her car had substantially impaired its value; (5) that seller had not excluded or modified its implied warranty of merchantability in sales contract because seller had failed to include therein the word "merchantability," as required by Illinois UCC § 2-316(2); (6) that jury believed that plaintiff had properly revoked her acceptance of car; and (7) that trial court by adjusting plaintiff's damages to reflect difference, at time and place of her acceptance of car, between car's value as warranted and its actual worth had applied measure of damages prescribed by Illinois UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty. Jackson v. H. Frank Olds, Inc., 65 Ill. App. 3d 571, 382 N.E.2d 550 (1st Dist. 1978).

In action for seller's breach of warranty of good title to motor home purchased by plaintiff, where (1) original owner of home rented it for 13 days to thief who "drove off into the sunset" and was never again seen by owner, (2) thief thereafter obtained Alabama registration for home, and also Nebraska and Indiana certificates of title therefor, before trading it in to defendant dealer in Indiana as part payment for truck and trailer, (3) plaintiff purchased home from defendants, who gave plaintiff certificate of title thereto, (4) Indiana state police seized home from plaintiff and surrendered it to original owner's insurer, (5) home's serial number proved to have been stolen, and (6) such false identification number appeared on all documents respecting home that thief had obtained in Alabama, Nebraska, and Indiana, court held (1) that rental transaction between original owner and thief constituted a "purchase" under UCC §§ 2-403(1) and § 1-201(32), since thief had acquired possessory interest in home by renting it, (2) thief did not transfer good title to defendant, as good-faith purchaser for value, since thief's title to home was void and not voidable under UCC § 2-403(1), (4) since defendant had no good title to convey to plaintiff, defendant breached its warranty of title under UCC § 2-312(1), and (5) evidence supported damages awarded plaintiff under UCC § 2-714(2) and (3). McDonald's Chevrolet, Inc. v. Johnson, 176 Ind. App. 399, 376 N.E.2d 106 (1978).

In action against manufacturer for breach of warranty in sale of modular home wherein buyer gave manufacturer more than adequate notice of home's defects, buyer's measure of damages under UCC § 2-714(2) was difference between value of defective home actually received and value of such home as warranted. In such case, however, cost of repairing home could not be used as proper yardstick for measuring difference between value of home actually received and value of home as warranted, since many of the home's defects could not be adequately repaired so as to place buyer in as good a position as if defendant had fully performed its contractual obligations. Carlson v. Rysavy, 262 N.W.2d 27 (S.D. 1978).

In suit arising out of sale and repossession of two coal trucks, where seller and manufacturer breached express warranty concerning such trucks, which were defective on delivery to buyer, but buyer did not reject trucks or revoke his acceptance thereof, proper measure of damages under UCC § 2-714(2) was difference between reasonable market value of trucks at time of acceptance by buyer and their contract price. Galigher Trucks, Inc. v. McKenzie, 553 S.W.2d 294 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

Since measure of damages under UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty of goods sold is difference at time and place of acceptance between value of goods accepted and value goods would have possessed if they had been as warranted, buyer's claim in action for damages for breach of warranties of fitness and merchantability of swim caps that damages should be ascertained from actual sales price of swim caps months after their delivery and acceptance was without legal basis. Such claim also did not come within scope of provision in UCC § 2-714(2) that rule of damages set forth in UCC § 2-714(2) applies unless special circumstances show proximate damages of different amount. Noreli Indus., Inc. v. Kleinert's, Inc., 57 A.D.2d 792 (1st Dep't 1977).

In action by buyer of printing press against seller to recover damages for breach of warranty, evidence supported trial court's award of damages in sum of $10,435 where under UCC § 2-714(2), evidence that cost of press to buyer, including finance charges, was $7,006 and that actual value of defective press at time of acceptance 60 days later was one sixth of its purchase price or sum of $1,167 was sufficient to establish the figure of $5,833 as first element of damages to be awarded to buyer. Burrus v. Itek Corp., 46 Ill. App. 3d 350, 360 N.E.2d 1168 (3d Dist. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-714(2), correct measure of damages for breach of warranty with respect to car with defective engine is difference between actual value of car and value it would have had if it had been as warranted (holding erroneous instruction that measure of damages in such case was amount of buyer's down payment and monthly installment payments). Smart Chevrolet Co. v. Davis, 262 Ark. 500, 558 S.W.2d 147 (1977).

Buyer's damages for seller's breach of express and implied warranties in sale of antifreeze to be used in internal-combustion engines of buyer's construction equipment included (1) recovery under UCC § 2-714(2) of purchase price of such antifreeze, where antifreeze as delivered was worthless, and (2) consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for reasonable cost of labor and parts necessary to repair buyer's damaged equipment, and buyer's loss of income during period of repairs. R. Clinton Constr. Co. v. Bryant & Reaves, Inc., 442 F. Supp. 838 (N.D. Miss. 1977).

In in rem action in admiralty involving counterclaims by seller and buyer arising from breaches of contract to sell flour, (1) seller breached implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), and also federal adulterated-food statute, as to one cargo of flour which was infested with insects when it arrived at warehouse prior to being loaded on ship, (2) buyer had right under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject all of such cargo and therefore was not liable for its purchase price or any consequential damages, (3) seller also breached implied warranty of merchantability with respect to two other cargoes of flour, and since buyer had paid for such flour and had ultimately accepted it, buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-606(1)(a), (4) buyer was not barred from claiming damages for such nonconforming cargoes by failure to give notice of nonconformity by registered mail, since buyer's warning to seller of buyer's dissatisfaction with cargoes constituted adequate notice under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and (5) under UCC § 2-714(2), although there was no evidence as to value of such cargoes at time and place of their acceptance (Mobile, Alabama), buyer was entitled to damages for difference between prices for good and infested flour in Bolivia, South America, plus damages for expenses incurred because of flour's infestation, since buyer had accepted such flour after it had been loaded on ships that transported it to Bolivia and had had no reasonable opportunity to inspect it before it was loaded. T.J. Stevenson & Co. v. 81,193 Bags of Flour, 449 F. Supp. 84 (S.D. Ala. 1976), rev'd on other grounds, 629 F.2d 338 (5th Cir. Ala. 1980), reh'g denied, 651 F.2d 779 (5th Cir. Ala. 1981).

In action for breach of automobile warranty, trial court erred in awarding damages based entirely on "special circumstances" and correct measure of damages was limited under UCC § 2-714 to difference, at time and place of acceptance, between value of automobile accepted and value it would have had if it had been as warranted, where, inter alia, automobile was solely used for pleasure, buyer lost no profits, buyer did not communicate to seller at time of sale sufficient facts to make it apparent that damages such as lost profits were within reasonable contemplation of parties, and direct expenses or monetary losses did not result from breach. Eckstein v. Cummins, 46 Ohio App. 2d 192, 347 N.E.2d 549 (1975).

Buyer of animal offal chilling equipment that did not operate as warranted was entitled to recover difference between value of equipment as warranted and as accepted; since chillers were of no use to buyer, except for scrap, entire value (i. e., purchase price), could be recovered from seller, although buyer should tender chillers to seller so that seller might reclaim any salvage value. Buyer was also entitled to consequential damages where, in effort to overcome chiller's deficiencies, buyer purchased stainless steel offal handling trucks and hooks. Puritan Mfg., Inc. v. I. Klayman & Co., 379 F. Supp. 1306 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

In action by purchaser of new car against automobile dealer alleging that dealer's failure to disclose, prior to sale, that automobile had been damaged in transit and repaired constituted misrepresentation and breach of warranty, purchaser had choice of remedies: He could have disaffirmed contract and sought rescission; or he could have affirmed contract and claimed monetary damages based either on (1) difference in value between car he received and "new" car, or (2) cost of repairing alleged defects. However, purchaser was not entitled to recover damages for amounts expended in making repairs on car where purchaser failed to establish necessary causal connection between repairs and alleged fraud or breach of warranty. Witters v. Daniels Motors, Inc., 524 P.2d 632 (Colo. Ct. App. 1974).

In action brought by buyer against seller of aircraft, if buyer's contention that 1968 aircraft was represented as 1969 aircraft were true, such would create express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and measure of damages would be calculated under UCC § 2-714(2), i.e., would be difference between value of new 1968 aircraft and value of new 1969 aircraft, less depreciation for use up to time of discovery of misrepresentation. Crane v. Wood Motors, Inc., 53 Mich. App. 17, 218 N.W.2d 420 (1974).

Where evidence failed to disclose any difference in value between exercising device cot covers which had plastic binding and cot covers which had cloth binding, and rates of failure of 2 types of cot covers were equal, buyer of covers would not be entitled to any damages on its counterclaim for breach of warranty. Foam-Tex Indus., Inc. v. Relaxaway Corp., 358 F. Supp. 8 (E.D. Mo. 1973).

Proper measure of damages for breach of warranty of title of automobile subsequently found to have been stolen was not purchase price of automobile, but value of vehicle at time buyer was required to turn it over to police. Itoh v. Kimi Sales, Ltd., 74 Misc. 2d 402 (1973).

"Purchase price" of automobile included finance charge and was admissible as going to value of automobile at time and place of purchase, for purposes of determining damages arising out of breach of warranty. Thompson Chrysler-Plymouth, Inc. v. Myers, 48 Ala. App. 350, 264 So. 2d 893 (Civ. App. 1972).

Damages for breach of warranty could not include damages when buyer knew pipe to be defective and could not include "cover" purchase of other pipe nearly a year later, but could include value difference between pipe as warranted and as accepted as to that portion of pipe which buyer did not know was nonconforming, as well as incidental and consequential damages. Fred J. Miller, Inc. v. Raymond Metal Prods. Co., 265 Md. 523, 290 A.2d 527 (1972).

Where buyer was sold an automobile represented to be a demonstrator almost as good as new, when as a matter of fact it had been wrecked and repaired, his measure of damages was the difference in the market value of the car as warranted, and its value as a wrecked car. Union Motors, Inc. v. Phillips, 241 Ark. 857, 410 S.W.2d 747 (1967).

8. Cost of repair as measure of damages.

If a heat pump could have been repaired so as to properly function, the heat pump manufacturer's liability for breach of implied warranty of merchantability would have been the cost of repairs. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

Where evidence in support of counterclaim for damages for breach of implied warranty of fitness of concrete-mixing trucks showed that although such trucks broke down often enough to belie their fitness for the particular purpose for which they were designed, buyer's "down-time" (time lost when trucks were not in use) was still less than ten hours per year per truck, which was equivalent to only normal wear-and-tear usage, (1) buyer's claim under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2)(a) for lost profits during period trucks were not in use would not lie; (2) buyer's claim that $15,000 per truck was required to keep trucks from falling into state of disrepair also failed because of trucks' surprisingly small "down-time"; (3) buyer's claims for impairment of reputation and punitive damages for willful breach were, under UCC § 2-714(1), outside loss resulting in ordinary course of events from seller's breach; and (4) value formula in UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty was satisfied by award of $7,000 damages for repairs to trucks. Nassau Suffolk White Trucks, Inc. v. Twin County Transit Mix Corp., 62 A.D.2d 982 (2d Dep't 1978).

In action for breach of warranty in sale of tractor, buyer was entitled to recover cost of repairing tractor, since cost of repairs is proper measure, under UCC § 2-714(2), of difference between value of goods as warranted by seller and value as accepted by buyer. Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of merchantability of houseboat built for plaintiff buyer by defendant seller, where cost of repairing defects that existed in houseboat at time of its delivery to plaintiff was $37,000, and where court concluded that there was no sufficient basis for plaintiff's opinion that houseboat, as delivered, was worth $80,000, but that it would have been worth $160,000 if it had been delivered as warranted, proper measure of damages under UCC § 2-714(2) for defendant's breach of warranty, was cost of repairs ($37,000). Moreover, under UCC § 2-715(1), plaintiff was also entitled to recover incidental damages for replacement of defective parts and materials, labor in inspecting and servicing defective mechanical components, and docking fees incurred while such services were being performed. Tarter v. MonArk Boat Co., 430 F. Supp. 1290 (E.D. Mo. 1977), aff'd, 574 F.2d 984 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

Under UCC §§ 2-714(2), buyer seeking damages for breach of contract to manufacture, sell and deliver railroad hopper cars, based on serious structural defects in railcars, was not limited to repair costs where repair did not completely restore goods to value which they would have had if built in conformity with contract, and remaining diminution in value could also be recovered. Soo Line R.R. v. Fruehauf Corp., 547 F.2d 1365 (8th Cir. Minn. 1977).

In action for breach of warranty of used truck scale, awarding cost of new scale as damages for failure to repair old scale which was purchased resulted in greater recovery of damages than the purchase price of scale and was error. Neuman v. Spector Wrecking & Salvage Co., 490 S.W.2d 875 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Although damages in cases of breach of warranty are ordinarily measured by difference between actual value of article sold and its value if it were as warranted, Code § 2-714(2) is not exclusive of buyer's remedies where property is not totally destroyed; and if by reasonable expenditure goods may be made to conform to warranty, amount of such expenditure may be measure of such damages. Downs v. Shouse, 18 Ariz. App. 225, 501 P.2d 401 (1972).

Buyer is entitled to recover cost of making repairs to cure defects in nonconforming goods supplied by seller. Southern Concrete Prods. Co. v. Martin, 126 Ga. App. 534, 191 S.E.2d 314 (1972).

9. Special circumstances requiring different measure of damages.

In an action for the breach of an implied warranty, the buyer cannot recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(b) to the extent that his own negligence was a concurring proximate cause of such damages. However, to the extent that the product was unsuitable and proximately caused the damages, the buyer can recover consequential damages for the breach of warranty. Where both the unsuitable product and the buyer's negligence are found to be proximate causes of the damages, the trier of facts must also determine the respective percentages (totaling 100 percent) by which the concurring causes contributed to the consequential damages. Signal Oil & Gas Co. v. Universal Oil Prods., 572 S.W.2d 320 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-714(2), the cash price paid for the goods is prima facie their value "as warranted," rather than the "credit price" of the goods. Long v. Quality Mobile Home Brokers, Inc., 271 S.C. 482, 248 S.E.2d 311 (1978).

In seller's action for balance due on sale of concrete building blocks, buyer under counterclaim for damages resulting both directly and consequentially from seller's failure to supply blocks conforming to express and implied warranties could recover consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2) without first establishing existence of "special circumstances" mentioned in UCC § 2-714(2), since UCC § 2-714(2) is concerned with value-of-goods damages and not with incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1) or consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2). R.I. Lampus Co. v. Neville Cement Prods. Corp., 474 Pa. 199, 378 A.2d 288, 96 A.L.R.3d 290 (1977).

"Special-circumstances" requirement of UCC § 2-714(2) is unrelated to recovery of consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2). R.I. Lampus Co. v. Neville Cement Prods. Corp., 474 Pa. 199, 378 A.2d 288, 96 A.L.R.3d 290 (1977).

In action by buyer of tube mill against seller for breach of warranty, notwithstanding facts that when resale price of machine was coupled with award of damages, buyer would receive more than purchase price of machine, damage award was not improper. Bosway Tube & Steel Corp. v. McKay Mach. Co., 65 Mich. App. 426, 237 N.W.2d 488 (1975).

Party aggrieved by breach of contract is entitled to be put in as good position as if other party had fully performed, and this includes right to recover for loss of prospective profits resulting from breach, which profits may be determined on basis of combination of past earnings records and expert testimony of president of aggrieved party. Matsushita Elec. Corp. of Am. v. Sonus Corp., 362 Mass. 246, 284 N.E.2d 880 (1972).

10. —Particular applications.

Measure of damages in case of sale of stolen car is equal to amount paid for vehicle. Crook Motor Co. v. Goolsby, 703 F. Supp. 511 (N.D. Miss. 1988).

If a heat pump could not be repaired and was worthless, the buyers would have been entitled to a refund of the purchase price from the heat pump manufacturer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

The purchaser of defective farm equipment machinery was entitled to recover the down payment he had invested in a grain drill and combine where the seller and the financing corporation were deemed to be one and the same because of their interlocking directorates. The purchaser was also entitled to consequential damages to his soybean crop where the seller should reasonably have known that the delivery of the defective equipment and the unsuccessful repairs would cause such delay in the planting of the purchaser's crop. Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Evans, 406 So. 2d 15 (Miss. 1981).

In an action for damages arising out of the breach of an express warranty to repair a used automobile purchased by the plaintiff, the defendant could not limit its liability to the costs of repairs and replacement of parts under the warranty as authorized by § 75-2-719 where it wrongfully failed to carry out its obligations under the warranty; the plaintiff had no incidental or consequential damages as contemplated by § 75-2-715 where he had purchased another second-hand car and had failed to take any reasonable action to minimize the defendant's breach of the warranty but had simply abandoned the car at the dealer's. Where the car had been driven for over two years and 26,649 miles before the plaintiff had experienced any difficulty with it, the reasonable measure of damages under § 75-2-714 would be the fair market value the car would have had with that age and number of miles with no mechanical difficulty as experienced by the plaintiff, and the value it had had in its defective condition, and for which the defendant had refused to make repairs. Ford Motor Co. v. Fairley, 398 So. 2d 216 (Miss. 1981).

In action against manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties in sale of heavy-duty farm equipment purchased to prepare land to grow crops, consequential damages for buyer's loss of crops were recoverable under "special-circumstances" provision of UCC § 2-714(2) and consequential-damages provisions of UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(2)(a), where buyer's act of planting crops was foreseeable by seller and buyer, although aware of defects in purchased equipment at time of planting crops, was put by equipment's defects into position of having to choose between using defective equipment and suffering damaged crops or else having no crops at all (holding that trial court did not err in refusing to limit buyer's damages to impaired value of equipment purchased). Prutch v. Ford Motor Co., 40 Colo. App. 129, 574 P.2d 102 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 618 P.2d 657 (Colo. 1980).

Under UCC § 2-714(2), measure of damages for breach of warranty arising from failure of television and radio broadcasting tower, which collapsed during a blizzard, to have been constructed in accordance with specifications contained in contract of sale was, under special circumstances of case, replacement cost of tower less reasonable depreciation for its use by plaintiff before its collapse (applying South Dakota law, and also holding that plaintiff could recover consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)). Community Television Servs., Inc. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 435 F. Supp. 214 (D.S.D. 1977), aff'd, 586 F.2d 637 (8th Cir. S.D. 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 932, 99 S. Ct. 2052, 60 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1979).

In buyer's action for breach of warranty attaching to laser that did not operate at warranted power output, court held (1) that evidence supported district court's determination that seller had breached its express warranty and that buyer's remedy of repair or replacement of defective parts had failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); (2) that seller had been given adequate notice of its breach under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (3) that since laser was merely component of printer project that buyer was working on and intent of parties, as evidenced by their contract and circumstances of case, was that buyer should bear risk of such project, buyer could recover only breach-of-warranty damages under UCC § 2-714(2) and incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1), but not consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for salaries of buyer's employees who were working on the printer project, since such damages were not contemplated by parties. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

Where asphalt supplier knew exact needs of paving contractor at time of supplying asphalt and, thus, supplier could have reasonably foreseen that if asphalt proved defective and failed, entire paving job would have to be taken up and completely redone, and where asphalt was in fact defective, ordinary measure of damages for breach of warranty stated in UCC § 2-714(2) was not applicable, due to special circumstances showing proximate damages of different amounts, consisting of incidental and consequential damages as provided by UCC § 2-715. Lanphier Constr. Co. v. Fowco Constr. Co., 523 S.W.2d 29 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e. (July 23, 1975).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of title, brought by buyer of stolen automobile against seller wherein buyer had undisturbed possession of automobile for period of approximately nine months, value of automobile at time buyer's possession was disturbed so that he lost use of automobile was proper measure of damages. Ricklefs v. Clemens, 216 Kan. 128, 531 P.2d 94, 94 A.L.R.3d 572 (1975).

In action by purchaser of bookkeeping machine against seller for breach of warranty where buyer financed purchase of machine through lease agreement with leasing corporation, but because of difficulties with machine, buyer terminated payments to leasing corporation, leasing corporation repossessed machine, sold it and recovered balance due on lease from purchaser, purchaser was entitled to recover as damages for breach of warranty amount of deficiency judgment obtained by leasing corporation against purchaser. Acme Pump Co. v. National Cash Register Co., 32 Conn. Supp. 69, 337 A.2d 672 (1974).

In action for breach of warranty relating to greenhouse roofing materials, ordinary measure of damages for breach of warranty was not applicable because of special circumstances showing proximate damages consisting of diminution in market value of greenhouse and loss of profits from sales of flowers. General Supply & Equip. Co. v. Phillips, 490 S.W.2d 913 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 13, 1973).

Where seller represented to buyer that he (seller) was owner of auto in question, where buyer had purchased auto from seller for $1,650, and where auto was ultimately impounded as stolen vehicle, substantial evidence established, as a matter of law, a right on the part of the buyer to rescind his auto purchase transaction and to recover the purchase price which he had paid to the seller. Sarad v. Tatum, 492 P.2d 882 (Colo. Ct. App. 1971).

Buyer of cattle food can recover for diminution in value of cattle if he can establish that diminution proximately resulted from breach of implied warranty of food manufacturer; irrelevant whether cattle actually lost value or whether sale value was impaired. Kassab v. Central Soya, 432 Pa. 217, 246 A.2d 848 (1968).

11. Incidental and consequential damages.

The Uniform Commercial Code makes no provision for exemplary or punitive damages for breaches of warranty. Instead, the code provides, in UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(1) and (2)(b), only for recovery of incidental and consequential damages. Sims v. Ryland Group, Inc., 37 Md. App. 470, 378 A.2d 1 (1977).

Consequential damages are recoverable for breach of contract if they are direct, immediate and probable result of breach, and issues of foreseeability and proximate-ness of consequential damages sustained as result of breach of implied warranty are for determination by jury. Jerry Alderman Ford Sales, Inc. v. Bailey, 154 Ind. App. 632, 291 N.E.2d 92 (1972).

12. —Particular applications.

Buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-714(2), and to incidental damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(1), for seller's breach of express and implied warranties of fitness for particular purpose, and also express warranty by sample attaching to wrap coats purchased by buyer, where (1) samples of such coats were made part of basis of bargain and created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) that all goods would conform to such samples, (2) seller knew that buyer was relying on seller to furnish goods that would be fit for buyer's particular purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-315, and (3) seller delivered over 3,700 nonconforming coats that were not fit for buyer's resale purposes. Alafoss v. Premium Corp. of Am., Inc., 448 F. Supp. 95 (D. Minn. 1978), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 599 F.2d 232 (8th Cir. Minn. 1979).

Buyer who was entitled to rescission of contract for purchase of vinyl-laminating machine, and to return of all money paid under such contract, was not entitled to damages under UCC § 2-714(1) for interest charges on money that buyer had borrowed from bank to purchase machine where seller was unaware that buyer had had to borrow money to make purchase. Distco Laminating, Inc. v. Union Tool Corp., 81 Mich. App. 612, 265 N.W.2d 768 (1978), appeal denied, 403 Mich. 848 (1978).

In buyer's action for breach of implied warranty of fitness of machine for boring tunnel in coal mine, where (1) seller warranted that machine would be free from defects in materials and workmanship, (2) such warranty was accompanied by disclaimer of all other warranties, express or implied, not set forth in writing signed by authorized representative of seller, (3) seller limited its liability for breach of warranty to repair or replacement of defective parts and also excluded all liability for consequential damages, (4) seller agreed to furnish a specialist to supervise installation and initial operation of machine, and (5) seller's offer to sell machine was accompanied by letter signed by seller's employee, who had no authority to make binding representations about machine, which stated that machine would bore at approximate rate of 2.5 feet per hour through hardest materials that buyer might expect to encounter in its mine, court held (1) that buyer accepted seller's offer by mailing purchase order to seller, (2) that by accepting such offer, buyer agreed to seller's terms on liability for breach of warranty, (3) that district court properly found that representation about machine's boring rate, which was contained in letter signed by employee of seller who was not authorized to make such representation, was not part of parties' agreement, since it was not set forth in document that parties intended to be final expression of their agreement within meaning of UCC § 2-202, (4) that as a result, there was no undertaking by seller that machine would bore at rate of 2.5 feet per hour, (5) that seller also had made no express undertaking to assemble machine properly on buyer's premises, since provision in contract which stated that seller would furnish specialist to supervise machine's initial assembly and operation was only intended to prevent wrongful assembly or operation by buyer's employees when not under control of seller's specialist, (6) that such undertaking also did not exist as an independent and separate obligation of seller because assembly of machine, whether at seller's plant or on buyer's premises, came under seller's workmanship warranty, (7) that seller's inability to repair defects in machine caused buyer's limited repair remedy to fail in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), (8) that although failure of its limited remedy to achieve its essential purpose made available to buyer all remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, this did not mean that consequential damages, which buyer stipulated were its only damages, could be recovered by buyer under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(a), and (9) that since contract had been made by parties of relatively equal bargaining power and liability for consequential damages had been assumed by buyer, mere fact that seller's efforts to repair machine had failed was not enough to require that seller absorb consequential-damage losses that buyer had plainly agreed to bear. S.M. Wilson & Co. v. Smith Int'l, Inc., 587 F.2d 1363 (9th Cir. Cal. 1978).

In buyer's action for breach of warranty attaching to laser that did not operate at warranted power output, court held (1) that evidence supported district court's determination that seller had breached its express warranty and that buyer's remedy of repair or replacement of defective parts had failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); (2) that seller had been given adequate notice of its breach under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (3) that since laser was merely component of printer project that buyer was working on and intent of parties, as evidenced by their contract and circumstances of case, was that buyer should bear risk of such project, buyer could recover only breach-of-warranty damages under UCC § 2-714(2) and incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1), but not consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for salaries of buyer's employees who were working on the printer project, since such damages were not contemplated by parties. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

In an action for the breach of an implied warranty, the buyer cannot recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(b) to the extent that his own negligence was a concurring proximate cause of such damages. However, to the extent that the product was unsuitable and proximately caused the damages, the buyer can recover consequential damages for the breach of warranty. Where both the unsuitable product and the buyer's negligence are found to be proximate causes of the damages, the trier of facts on and intent of parties, as evidenced by their contract and circumstances of case, was that buyer should bear risk of such project, buyer could recover only breach-of-warranty damages under UCC § 2-

714(2) and incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1), but not consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for salaries of buyer's employees who were working on the printer project, since such damages were not contemplated by parties. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(2)(b), consequential damages are properly awarded for manufacturer's breach of express warranty in sale of casket, which on disinterment of decedent three months after his burial was found to contain water as against manufacturer's express warranty that casket would not leak, since no violence is done in such case to word "person" in UCC § 2-715(2)(b) to hold that that which brings on grief does damage to the person. Furthermore, under UCC § 2-318, consequential damages are properly awarded for such breach of warranty to members of decedent's family other than member who purchased casket from defendant. Hirst v. Elgin Metal Casket Co., 438 F. Supp. 906 (D. Mont. 1977).

Under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2), measure of damages in buyer's action for breach of warranty in sale of defective airplane, where plane was accepted by buyer, included expense of transporting plane for repairs, expense of overhauling plane, and damages for loss of plane's use while repairs were being made, since such expenses were proximately caused by seller's breach. Miles v. Kavanaugh, 350 So. 2d 1090 (Fla. App. 1977).

In action by buyer of four oil tankers against shipbuilder-seller for consequential damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2) for losses incurred when tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures, in which shipbuilder filed third-party complaint against manufacturer of defective cargo pumps and manufacturer of pumps filed fourth-party complaint against manufacturer of defective expansion joints, (1) shipbuilder-seller breached express warranty to buyer under UCC § 2-313(1) that tankers would be built to operate efficiently and also implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 of merchantability and fitness of tankers for particular purpose (transportation of aviation fuels); (2) buyer of tankers was entitled only to consequential damages caused by defects in design and was not entitled to damages caused by defects in materials or workmanship; (3) shipbuilder-seller's foreseeable liability to buyer was $500,000, which was amount of adjusted revenues lost by buyer when two of its tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures due to defective design; (4) manufacturer of defective cargo pumps breached its express and implied warranties to shipbuilder and was liable, in amount of $2,000,000, for losses sustained by shipbuilder as result of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures in tankers sold to buyer (including shipbuilder's liability to buyer for lost revenues during period tankers were inoperative), but was not liable to shipbuilder for cost of installing separate stripping on each tanker; and (5) manufacturer of defective expansion joints, which were used in connection with cargo pumps, breached its express and implied warranties concerning such joints and was liable to manufacturer of pumps for costs of replacing all defective joints. Falcon Tankers, Inc. v. Litton Sys., 380 A.2d 569 (Del. Super. 1977).

Buyer of air conditioning equipment was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC § 2-714 or UCC § 2-715, even though buyer lost subsequent job opportunities upon seller's breach of contract, where relationship of buyer and seller was on ad hoc basis and where seller had no reason to know of any subsequent job opportunities of buyer. Chrysler Corp. v. E. Shavitz & Sons, 536 F.2d 743 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

Where buyer contracted to purchase 90,000 bushels of corn but seller delivered less than 2,000 bushels, where buyer proved that seller had reason to know at time of contracting that buyer expected to resell corn in area where market existed, and where buyer made attempt to cover, but was unsuccessful, buyer was entitled to recover lost profits as consequential damages under UCC § 2-714. National Farmers Org., Inc. v. McCook Feed & Supply Co., 196 Neb. 424, 243 N.W.2d 335 (1976).

Purchaser of concrete blocks which were assembled to form planks and then fitted together to form floor and ceiling systems in various kinds of structures was entitled under UCC §§ 2-714(2) and (3) and 2-715(2)(a) to recover consequential damages for (1) blocks rejected after production, i.e., finished floor systems that could not be delivered to purchaser's customers, (2) cost of disposing of defective blocks and floor systems, (3) cost of hiring additional personnel to inspect and handle broken and rejected blocks, (4) costs incurred because purchaser's customers rejected floor systems, not including delivery costs or lost profits, where seller knew exactly what end use would be made of blocks it manufactured and where, furthermore, damages claimed by purchaser at trial were virtually identical to those claimed in earlier letter to seller. However, purchaser was not entitled to recover (5) costs incurred to place special covers on defective ceilings and (6) costs incurred to point and caulk defective ceilings, since these expenses could have been totally avoided had purchaser rejected planks at some point prior to their installation and, thus, they were losses which could have been prevented within meaning of UCC § 2-715(2)(a). R.I. Lampus Co. v. Neville Cement Prods. Corp., 232 Pa. Super. 242, 336 A.2d 397 (1975), aff'd, 474 Pa. 199, 378 A.2d 288, 96 A.L.R.3d 290 (1977).

In action by hog producer against feed manufacturer for breach of warranty in connection with defective feed supplied by manufacturer, hog producer's losses on account of lost profits and diminished value as producing business were recoverable under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 where feed manufacturer had close working relationship with hog producer during time when defective feed was being fed and where there was ample evidence showing loss of goodwill and business reputation. R.E.B., Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 525 F.2d 749 (10th Cir. Wyo. 1975).

In action by dairy farmer to recover damages from feed manufacturer for loss of milk production and injury to dairy cows allegedly caused by use of feed supplement, evidence was sufficient to establish breach of both express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where there was express representation that use of feed supplement would increase milk production and where there was decrease in milk production resulting from wrong instructions about proper way to use feed supplement. However, farmer was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2): (1) considering that there were many factors which could affect production of milk, to permit use of difference between total milk production figures for whole of year during which feed supplement was used for approximately 2 months, and total production figures for whole of preceding year, as measure of damages, would constitute rankest form of speculation and conjecture; (2) with respect to damages for decrease in market value of cows affected by feed, it could not reasonably be determined how much of decline in valuation of cattle between date of injury and day on which they were sold was attributable to injury and how much to changes, if any, in market value between those dates. Shotkoski v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 195 Neb. 22, 237 N.W.2d 92 (1975).

Seller of fabric was liable to buyer for breach of express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, where buyer's purchase order stated that fabric was to be used for swimwear and that all "colors, prints and bonding processes must meet swimwear specifications," and where fabric supplied and subsequently manufactured into swimsuits was defective and failed to meet minimum performance standards for colorfastness; buyer, having given reasonable notice to seller under UCC § 2-607, was entitled to damages for credits issued to customers (including profits lost and costs of production for returns and allowances) plus cost of productions of unsaleable swimsuits under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, and to deduct such damages from purchase price under UCC § 2-717. Rite Fabrics, Inc. v. Stafford-Higgins Co., 366 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

Special items, such as cost of feeding livestock that die or are diseased, and therefore are marketed late, are recoverable on claim for breach of implied warranty of fitness in pig sale. W & W Live-stock Enters., Inc. v. Dennler, 179 N.W.2d 484 (Iowa 1970) but see William C. Mitchell, Ltd. v. Brown, 576 N.W.2d 342 (Iowa 1998).

13. Pleading.

In action by buyer to recover damages allegedly resulting from operational failure of ice maker purchased from defendant, buyer was not entitled to recover purchase price but was limited to damages in amount of difference at time of place of acceptance between value of ice maker if it had been as warranted and its actual value where complaint alleged notice to seller of breach of warranty as required by UCC § 2-607 but failed to allege notice to seller of rejection of goods as required by UCC § 2-602 or notice of revocation of acceptance as required by UCC § 2-608 and where no special circumstances were alleged as would allow incidental or consequential damages under UCC § 2-715. Kohlenberger, Inc. v. Tyson's Foods, Inc., 256 Ark. 584, 510 S.W.2d 555 (1974).

Consideration of large claim for consequential damages should be supported by appropriate pleadings setting out basis of claim; and award of consequential damages, apparently based in part on delay in furnishing television equipment in time to permit television station to open prior to 1968 election and thus obtain political advertising, was not supported by evidence, in absence of finding that lessor of equipment warranted or guaranteed that it would be in operating order prior to election. KLPR TV, Inc. v. Visual Elecs. Corp., 465 F.2d 1382 (8th Cir. Ark. 1972).

In absence of allegation of facts that would put the dealer on guard to the fact that the contract carrier would hold the dealer responsible for any loss of profits arising from the inability to use engine in question, a dealer who sold to a contract carrier a diesel engine which was subsequently installed in a tractor was not liable for the loss of profits which the carrier claimed to sustain because of breach of implied warranty of merchantability in that the carrier was unable to use the tractor for stated periods due to breakdowns of the engine furnished by the dealer. Keystone Diesel Engine Co. v.

Irwin, 411 Pa. 222, 191 A.2d 376 (1963), but see, R.I. Lampus Co. v. Neville Cement Prods. Corp., 474 Pa. 199, 378 A.2d 288 (1977).

The institution of proceedings before an alderman for breach of warranty did not constitute sufficient notice to the seller of the breach, since by beginning the action the buyers were exercising a remedy rather than giving notice, and hence a complaint not alleging notice of the breach and the time of such notice was demurrable. Solomon & Son v. Thomas, 45 Luz. Legal Reg. Rep. 269 (Pa. 1955).

14. Evidence of value or damage.

The evidence was insufficient to support an award of damages under § 75-2-714 in an action brought by purchasers of a used vehicle, where the purchasers offered no evidence to show either the amount received from sale of the vehicle or the value of the vehicle at the time of its sale; the burden of proving damages sustained from a breach of warranty by a seller cannot be met by mere conjecture or inferences unsupported by adequate evidence. Gast v. Rogers-Dingus Chevrolet, 585 So. 2d 725 (Miss. 1991).

In action for breach of warranty in sale of used dry-cleaning equipment, where (1) no evidence was introduced to show market value of equipment, or its market value if it had been conforming, or cost of any repairs made to equipment, but (2) evidence was introduced to show consequential damages arising from alleged breach, such consequential damages were recoverable under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2). D & H Co. v. Shultz, 579 P.2d 821 (Okla. 1978).

In action for seller's breach of warranty of good title to motor home purchased by plaintiff, where (1) original owner of home rented it for 13 days to thief who "drove off into the sunset" and was never again seen by owner, (2) thief thereafter obtained Alabama registration for home, and also Nebraska and Indiana certificates of title therefor, before trading it in to defendant dealer in Indiana as part payment for truck and trailer, (3) plaintiff purchased home from defendants, who gave plaintiff certificate of title thereto, (4) Indiana state police seized home from plaintiff and surrendered it to original owner's insurer,

(5) home's serial number proved to have been stolen, and (6) such false identification number appeared on all documents respecting home that thief had obtained in Alabama, Nebraska, and Indiana, court held (1) that rental transaction between original owner and thief constituted a "purchase" under UCC §§ 2-403(1) and § 1-201(32), since thief had acquired possessory interest in home by renting it, (2) thief did not transfer good title to defendant, as good-faith purchaser for value, since thief's title to home was void and not voidable under UCC § 2-403(1), (4) since defendant had no good title to convey to plaintiff, defendant breached its warranty of title under UCC § 2-312(1), and (5) evidence supported damages awarded plaintiff under UCC § 2-714(2) and (3). McDonald's Chevrolet, Inc. v. Johnson, 176 Ind. App. 399, 376 N.E.2d 106 (1978).

In action for damages for breach of warranty in sale of swimming pool, where buyer informed seller of defects in pool after its installation, seller sent workmen to make repairs, buyer sent workmen away because of disagreement over manner of making repairs while pool was still partly disassembled, and windstorm subsequently destroyed pool, formula under UCC § 2-714(2) that measure of damages for breach of warranty is difference between actual value of goods and value that they would have had if they had been as warranted could not be applied where there was no evidence as to value of pool (1) at time defects in pool were noticed by buyer, (2) at time buyer ordered workmen to go away, and (3) before windstorm destroyed pool-in short, where there was no evidence whatever of pool's actual value or anything that could be used to estimate cost of repairing it. Griese v. Cory Pools, Ltd., 58 Ill. App. 3d 256, 373 N.E.2d 1383 (2d Dist. 1978).

In breach of warranty action for defects in well-drilling machine, trial court did not err in directing verdict against plaintiff, even though plaintiff introduced evidence indicating that machine had defects and that such defects constituted a breach of warranty, since plaintiff failed to produce evidence of damages in accordance with UCC § 2-714. Shuniak v. AAA Well Drilling & Boring Co., 146 Ga. App. 785, 247 S.E.2d 601 (1978).

In action for breach of warranty arising out of purchase of new automobile, award of damages in amount of $7,314.60, exact purchase price of automobile, was proper under UCC § 2-714(2)(3), notwithstanding there was no express evidence as to value of automobile at time and place of acceptance if it had been as warranted, where there was evidence, inter alia, that automobile had been continually returned for repairs over two-year period; buyer was not required to minutely detail each element of damage and trier of fact could assess damages for inconvenience, aggravation and loss of use, notwithstanding want of mathematical specifics, so long as such assessment was reasonable and not punitive; award based on bona fide effort to compensate for consequences of defects that establish breach of warranty was remedy that UCC seeks to afford. McGrady v. Chrysler Motors Corp., 46 Ill. App. 3d 136, 360 N.E.2d 818 (4th Dist. 1977).

In action for damages for breach of implied warranty of merchantability of mobile home, fair-market value of home within meaning of UCC § 2-714(2), which value was standard for measuring buyer's damages, was not established by testimony of plaintiff's witnesses on value where one witness testified that he did not know home's fair-market value and other witness's testimony was only to effect that home had wholesale value of $6,000.00. Fredrick v. Dreyer, 257 N.W.2d 835 (S.D. 1977).

Where seller of truck misrepresented age of vehicle to buyer, evidence submitted by buyer that truck drew a bid of $5,600 at forced sale did not preclude inference that amount received approximated fair value in suit to recover damages for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-714; buyer should have been allowed to offer proof of consequential damages pursuant to UCC § 2-715(2). Bergenstock v. Lemay's G.M.C., Inc., 118 R.I. 75, 372 A.2d 69 (1977).

In action by dairy farmer to recover damages from feed manufacturer for loss of milk production and injury to dairy cows allegedly caused by use of feed supplement, evidence was sufficient to establish breach of both express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where there was express representation that use of feed supplement would increase milk production and where there was decrease in milk production resulting from wrong instructions about proper way to use feed supplement. However, farmer was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2): (1) Considering that there were many factors which could affect production of milk, to permit use of difference between total milk production figures for whole of year during which feed supplement was used for approximately 2 months, and total production figures for whole of preceding year, as measure of damages, would constitute rankest form of speculation and conjecture; (2) with respect to damages for decrease in market value of cows affected by feed, it could not reasonably be determined how much of decline in valuation of cattle between date of injury and day on which they were sold was attributable to injury and how much to changes, if any, in market value between those dates. Shotkoski v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 195 Neb. 22, 237 N.W.2d 92 (1975).

In action by hog producer against feed manufacturer for breach of warranty in connection with defective feed supplied by manufacturer, hog producer's losses on account of lost profits and diminished value as producing business were recoverable under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 where feed manufacturer had close working relationship with hog producer during time when defective feed was being fed and where there was ample evidence showing loss of goodwill and business reputation. R.E.B., Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 525 F.2d 749 (10th Cir. Wyo. 1975).

In action to recover damages for breach of warranty in connection with defective record albums manufactured by defendant, plaintiff corporation having entered into contract with defendant for production of records, under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages for loss of underwriting of its corporate stock where there was insufficient proof that defect was cause of loss of underwriting, nor for loss of costs in laying groundwork for production, including advertising and promotion and cost of keeping corporation going during period of delay caused by defect, where no appreciable market existed for record at time of breach; however, plaintiff was entitled to recover expenses reasonably incurred in its efforts to rehabilitate record following breach. Great Am. Music Mach., Inc. v. Mid-South Record Pressing Co., 393 F. Supp. 877 (M.D. Tenn. 1975).

In action by heating contractor against furnace manufacturer to recover damages for breach of warranty and consequential damages arising out of contractor's purchase of burners from manufacturer, jury and trial court could properly find that burners had no value for purposes intended at time of delivery notwithstanding they were still in use at time of trial; although continued use of burners was some evidence they had value, it was not conclusive on fact finders where there was both expert testimony and testimony by contractor's employees, as well as by those familiar with problem, that equipment was of no value, where manufacturer refused to accept back defective burners, and where, more importantly, manufacturer offered no evidence whatever of value of equipment at time of its delivery to rebut testimony of contractor's witnesses. Louis DeGidio Oil & Gas Burner Sales & Serv., Inc. v. Ace Eng'g Co., 302 Minn. 19, 225 N.W.2d 217 (1974).

In action by buyer of truck trailers for breach of warranty, measure of damages was difference at time and place of acceptance between value of goods accepted and value they would have had if they had been as warranted, proper time for determination of value was period of time during which delivery and acceptance occurred, and, thus, evidence of trade-in value of trailers some six years after delivery and acceptance was too remote in time to be competent and was properly excluded; on other hand, evidence of hardness test made on top rails of trailers some six years after their manufacture was improperly excluded, notwithstanding lapse of time, since hardness of metal was such constant, immutable characteristic that lapse of time was greatly diminished in significance. Tennessee-Carolina Transp., Inc. v. Strick Corp., 286 N.C. 235, 210 S.E.2d 181 (1974).

In breach of warranty action for damage to truck trailers, proper time for determination of value of trailers under Code provision relating to measure of damages when buyer retains goods and sues for loss of bargain occasioned by breach of warranty was time during which delivery and acceptance of trailers occurred; and admission of opinion evidence of value of trailers some years after time of acceptance was error. Tennessee Carolina Transp., Inc. v. Strick Corp., 283 N.C. 423, 196 S.E.2d 711, 83 A.L.R.3d 636 (1973).

As to claim that failure to tractor retailer to deliver three-point hitch which was to be used on tractor in planting soybean crop resulting in decrease and loss in soybean production, proof was insufficient to take question of anticipated profits or consequential damages out of realm of speculation and conjecture and would present to jury incomplete set of figures as to anticipated profits; and recovery of such damages was properly denied. Traylor v. Huntsman, 253 Ark. 704, 488 S.W.2d 30 (1972).

Where the buyer rescinds the contract of sale and returns the goods promptly upon discovery of the defect there is no need for the buyer to prove the value of the goods at the time of the purchase. Leveridge v. Notaras, 433 P.2d 935 (Okla. 1967).

Where the egg production of an experimental flock of chickens was warranted to average "as good or better" than the control flock, evidence as to the loss in production and market value of the difference is the correct measure of damages, and where evidence was introduced to the effect that it was necessary for the poultry farmer to purchase eggs in order to supply his larger customers and thereby retain their patronage he, in effect, showed the amount of his loss, the value thereof and that he could have sold the eggs if the experimental chickens had produced as warranted. Babcock Poultry Farm, Inc. v. Shook, 204 Pa. Super. 141, 203 A.2d 399 (1964).

15. Burden of proof.

In action arising out of repossession of allegedly defective truck purchased by plaintiff, plaintiff was not entitled to damages for breach of warranty under UCC

§ 2-714(2) where plaintiff presented no proof as to difference in value of truck at time and place of acceptance and value it would have had if it had been as warranted. Plaintiff also was not entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(b) because of repossession of truck where evidence did not establish that repossession had proximately resulted from defendant's alleged breach of warranty (observing that repossession of truck had resulted from plaintiff's failure to make payments). Chaney v. GMAC, 349 So. 2d 519 (Miss. 1977).

Damages for breach of warranty were proven in "reasonable" manner under UCC § 2-714 without necessity of proving reasonableness of each of hundreds of items listed in exhibit. Aluminum Co. of Am. v. Electro Flo Corp., 451 F.2d 1115 (10th Cir. Utah 1971).

Correct measure of damages under Code § 2-714 is difference in value between goods accepted and value goods would have had if they had been as warranted; jury could not award such damages where neither pleadings nor evidence revealed any difference in value between substituted and ordered goods, burden being on buyer to prove amount of alleged damage with respect to accepted goods under Code § 2-607(4). State ex rel. Hawkins-Hawkins Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co., 250 Or. 356, 442 P.2d 612 (1968).

16. Instructions to jury.

In a breach of warranty action arising from the purchase of a tree harvester, the trial court erred by instructing the jury on "difference in value" damages where the buyer never made a payment on the equipment and was credited for his down payment. Puckett Mach. Co. v. Edwards, 641 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 1994).

In a breach of warranty action arising from the purchase of a tree harvester, the trial court erred by instructing the jury on "difference in value" damages, since the buyer did not provide an adequate measure of damages where the value assigned to the equipment at trial was the value ascertained at the time of trial by the buyer's expert witness, not at the time of acceptance 4 years earlier. Puckett Mach. Co. v. Edwards, 641 So. 2d 29 (Miss. 1994).

In action by purchaser of new automobile against manufacturer for breach of express warranty, under which manufacturer was obligated to repair or replace defective parts, measure of damages applicable to manufacturer's breach was that set out in UCC § 2-714(2) and, therefore, trial court properly charged jury to effect that if they found that manufacturer breached its warranty, then purchaser would be entitled to recover difference, at time and place of acceptance, between value of automobile accepted and value it would have had if it had been as warranted. Courtesy Ford Sales, Inc. v. Farrior, 53 Ala. App. 94, 298 So. 2d 26 (Civ. App. 1974), cert. denied, 292 Ala. 718, 298 So. 2d 34 (1974).

In action for damages for breach of warranties contained in contract to manufacture, sell, and deliver machine for manufacturing hayrake teeth, seller's motion for new trial was properly granted where, although buyer had accepted machine despite its nonconformity, jury was not instructed (1) to determine any date or fact as to acceptance of nonconforming goods, (2) on proper measure of damages under UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty, or (3) on proper measure of damages for rental value of building space set aside for installation and operation of machine. Alliance Tractor & Implement Co. v. Lukens Tool & Die Co., 199 Neb. 489, 260 N.W.2d 193 (1977).

Trial court's instructions as to measure of damages was not substantially different from the statutory language contained in subsection (2) where it charged jury that the damages recoverable by the buyer were those which were a natural and proximate result of the claimed breach of warranty, and that the particular damages which might have resulted need not to have been contemplated or foreseeable by the seller, and further that the rule as to measure of damages followed is sometimes referred to as "out-of-pocket" rule of damages, which was the difference in value of what the buyer was induced to part with and the value of what the buyer got in the transaction. Boeing Airplane Co. v. O'Malley, 329 F.2d 585 (8th Cir. Minn. 1964).

§ 75-2-715. Buyer's incidental and consequential damages.

(1) Incidental damages resulting from the seller's breach include expenses reasonably incurred in inspection, receipt, transportation and care and custody of goods rightfully rejected, any commercially reasonable charges, expenses or commissions in connection with effecting cover and any other reasonable expense incident to the delay or other breach.

(2) Except as otherwise provided in House Bill No. 1270 [Laws, 1993, ch. 302], consequential damages resulting from the seller's breach include:

(a) Any loss resulting from general or particular requirements and needs of which the seller at the time of contracting had reason to know and which could not reasonably be prevented by cover or otherwise; and

(b) Injury to person or property proximately resulting from any breach of warranty.

1. In general.

Plaintiff who successfully proves fraud is entitled to traditional remedies under tort law, to rescind contract and be put in status quo by recovery of purchase price, and may also invoke provisions of UCC. Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

In buyer's action for breach of implied warranty of fitness of machine for boring tunnel in coal mine, where (1) seller warranted that machine would be free from defects in materials and workmanship, (2) such warranty was accompanied by disclaimer of all other warranties, express or implied, not set forth in writing signed by authorized representative of seller, (3) seller limited its liability for breach of warranty to repair or replacement of defective parts and also excluded all liability for consequential damages, (4) seller agreed to furnish to specialist to supervise installation and initial operation of machine, and (5) seller's offer to sell machine was accompanied by letter signed by seller's employee, who had no authority to make binding representations about machine, which stated that machine would bore at approximate rate of 2.5 feet per hour through hardest materials that buyer might expect to encounter in its mine, court held (1) that buyer accepted seller's offer by mailing purchase order to seller, (2) that by accepting such offer, buyer agreed to seller's terms on liability for breach of warranty, (3) that district court properly found that representation about machine's boring rate, which was contained in letter signed by employee of seller who was not authorized to make such representation, was not part of parties' agreement, since it was not set forth in document that parties intended to be final expression of their agreement within meaning of UCC § 2-202, (4) that as a result, there was no undertaking by seller that machine would bore at rate of 2.5 feet per hour, (5) that seller also had made no express undertaking to assemble machine properly on buyer's premises, since provision in contract which stated that seller would furnish specialist to supervise machine's initial assembly and operation was only intended to prevent wrongful assembly or operation by buyer's employees when not under control of seller's specialist, (6) that such undertaking also did not exist as an independent and separate obligation of seller because assembly of machine, whether at seller's plant or on buyer's premises, came under seller's workmanship warranty, (7) that seller's inability to repair defects in machine caused buyer's limited repair remedy to fail in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), (8) that although failure of its limited remedy to achieve its essential purpose made available to buyer all remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, this did not mean that consequential damages, which buyer stipulated were its only damages, could be recovered by buyer under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(a), and (9) that since contract had been made by parties of relatively equal bargaining power and liability for consequential damages had been assumed by buyer, mere fact that seller's efforts to repair machine had failed was not enough to require that seller absorb consequential-damage losses that buyer had plainly agreed to bear. S.M. Wilson & Co. v. Smith Int'l, Inc., 587 F.2d 1363 (9th Cir. Cal. 1978).

Consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) include any loss resulting from the general or particular requirements of the buyer as to which the seller had reason to know at the time of contracting and which could not reasonably be prevented by cover or otherwise. Consequential damages can be determined in any reasonable manner, and mathematical proof is not required. However, such damages must not be speculative. English Whipple Sailyard, Ltd. v. The Yawl Ardent, 459 F. Supp. 866 (W.D. Pa. 1978).

In general, UCC § 2-715 continues the prior law as to what consequential damages are recoverable for breach of warranty. A. Ertag, Inc. v. Lehigh Valley Mills, Inc., 29 Lehigh L.J. 487 (Pa. 1962).

2. Construction with other law.

The provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code, with respect to the buyer's remedies when he accepts goods and does not revoke his acceptance but sues for damages because the goods are not as warranted, are codified in UCC § 2-714(1) and (2), and also, under appropriate circumstances, in UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(1) and (2). The statutory scheme, as apparent from all of these provisions which should be read as a whole, is as follows: (1) where the buyer has accepted the goods and given notification, he may recover damages which can be determined in any way that is reasonable; (2) the measure of damages is the difference, at the time and place of acceptance, between the value of the goods accepted and the value they would have had if they had been as warranted, unless special circumstances show proximate damages in a different amount; and (3) in a proper case, incidental and consequential damages also may be recovered. Carlson v. Rysavy, 262 N.W.2d 27 (S.D. 1978).

The Uniform Commercial Code is ambiguous with respect to the effect that the failure of a limited remedy under UCC § 2-719(2) has on other contractual provisions. UCC § 2-719(2) provides that if a remedy fails of its essential purpose, "remedy may be had as provided in this act." The Official Comment to this section states that if a remedy fails of its purpose, "it must give way to the general remedy provisions" of Article 2. The general remedy provisions of Article 2 provide not only for the recovery of consequential damages (see UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2)), but also for their exclusion where this is not unconscionable (see UCC § 2-719(3)). In cases involving the failure of an exclusive remedy in a warranty provision that also excludes liability for consequential damages, the provisions that limit liability also fail, and the plaintiff is entitled to the full array of remedies provided by the Uniform Commercial Code, including the recovery of consequential and incidental damages (see UCC § 2-715(1) and (2)) (where seller's "New Equipment Warranty," given on sale of tractor to buyer, stated that warranty was in lieu of all warranties, including liability for incidental and consequential damages, and court stated that if buyer was able to prove existence of defect in tractor and also that limited remedy contained in seller's new equipment warranty had failed in its essential purpose, buyer would be entitled to full array of remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, including recovery of consequential and incidental damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(1) and (2)). Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

3. —Special circumstances.

In seller's action for balance due on sale of concrete building blocks, buyer under counterclaim for damages resulting both directly and consequentially from seller's failure to supply blocks conforming to express and implied warranties could recover consequential damages under UCC

§ 2-715(2) without first establishing existence of “special circumstances” mentioned in UCC § 2-714(2), since UCC § 2-714(2) is concerned with value-of-goods damages and not with incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1) or consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2). R.I. Lampus Co. v. Neville Cement Prods. Corp., 474 Pa. 199, 378 A.2d 288, 96 A.L.R.3d 290 (1977).

4. —Tort action compared.

In action against manufacturer of poultry meal for damages resulting from injury to poultry producer’s chickens in that chickens fed with feed that included meal manufactured by defendant failed to achieve normal growth, gravamen of cause of action was breach of warranty of sale under UCC §§ 2-313 and 2-314 and damages sought were permissible under and governed by UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, even though tortious breach on part of defendants was alleged. Mid-South Milling Co. v. Loret Farms, Inc., 521 S.W.2d 586 (Tenn. 1975).

Where buyer of used automobile sued seller for fraud, loss of use of personal vehicle was compensable; although UCC § 2-715(2) describes consequential damages in contract terminology (“reason to know”) rather than in tort terminology (“natural and ordinary result”), Code does not require that “reason to know” formulation be applied in fraud suits to exclusion of other remedies, and right to consequential damages was presumably “remedy” within meaning of UCC § 2-721. Wagner v. Dan Unfug Motors, Inc., 35 Colo. App. 102, 529 P.2d 656 (1974).

Buyer’s failure to effect cover under UCC § 2-712 does not bar buyer’s recovery for incidental and consequential damages under UCC § 2-715. Traynor v. Walters, 342 F. Supp. 455 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

5. Buyer’s obligation to cover or mitigate damages.

In an action for damages arising out of the breach of an express warranty to repair a used automobile purchased by the plaintiff, the defendant could not limit its liability to the costs of repairs and replacement of parts under the warranty as authorized by § 75-2-719 where it wrongfully failed to carry out its obligations under the warranty; the plaintiff had no incidental or consequential damages as contemplated by § 75-2-715 where he had purchased another second-hand car and had failed to take any reasonable action to minimize the defendant’s breach of the warranty but had simply abandoned the car at the dealer’s. Where the car had been driven for over two years and 26,649 miles before the plaintiff had experienced any difficulty with it, the reasonable measure of damages under § 75-2-714 would be the fair market value the car would have had with that age and number of miles with no mechanical difficulty as experienced by the plaintiff, and the value it had had in its defective condition, and for which the defendant had refused to make repairs. Ford Motor Co. v. Fairley, 398 So. 2d 216 (Miss. 1981).

The requirement of “cover” (see UCC §§ 2-712(1) and 2-715(2)(a)), or mitigation of damages, is not absolute and unyielding, but is subject to the circumstances of the case. The test of proper cover is whether, at the time and place, the buyer acted in good faith and in a reasonable manner, and it is immaterial that hindsight may later prove that the method of cover used was not the cheapest or the most effective. S.J. Groves & Sons Co. v. Warner Co., 576 F.2d 524 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

Generally, when a seller refuses to deliver goods, the buyer, under UCC §§ 2-712(1) and 2-715(2)(a), must attempt to secure similar goods elsewhere as a prerequisite to the recovery of consequential damages. S.J. Groves & Sons Co. v.

Warner Co., 576 F.2d 524 (3d Cir. Pa. 1978).

In action by buyer of defective log-loading machine, as to which buyer has revoked acceptance, for damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for lost profits caused by seller's breach, buyer's evidence provided sufficient basis for estimating amount of claimed profits with reasonable certainty, and conflict in evidence as to whether buyer had failed to mitigate his damages, as required by UCC § 2-715(2)(a), by not obtaining cover was properly submitted to jury for determination. However, buyer could not recover attorney fees as part of his consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a). Hardwick v. Dravo Equip. Co., 279 Or. 619, 569 P.2d 588 (1977).

Purchaser of nonconforming mobile home under installment sales contract rightfully rejected unit and notified seller of rejection within reasonable time under UCC §§ 2-601 and 2-602, but purchaser's security interest in goods under UCC § 2-711 did not give him right to continued use of goods until security interest was satisfied; and where purchaser, instead of storing, reshipping, or reselling goods as provided by UCC § 2-604, moved into unit and corrected deficiencies, he accepted goods under UCC § 2-606 and became obligated to pay contract price under UCC § 2-607, retaining only his rights for damages under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715; although exclusion of expressed and implied warranties in dark print which was underlined complied with UCC § 2-316, purchaser could nevertheless recover for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 should trier of fact conclude that dealer made express warranties that mobile home would conform to sample or model shown purchaser on dealer's lot. Bowen v. Young, 507 S.W.2d 600, 67 A.L.R.3d 354 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Damages for breach of warranty could not include damages when buyer knew pipe to be defective and could not include "cover" purchase of other pipe nearly a year later, but could include value difference between pipe as warranted and as accepted as to that portion of pipe which buyer did not know was nonconforming, as well as incidental and consequential damages. Fred J. Miller, Inc. v. Raymond Metal Prods. Co., 265 Md. 523, 290 A.2d 527 (1972).

6. Extent of liability; foreseeability.

Seller of truck which turned out to be stolen knew he was selling to dealer in used trucks, and so is liable for buyer's reasonable repairs and other expenses of putting truck into condition for resale, and buyer's lost profits on resale of vehicle. Crook Motor Co. v. Goolsby, 703 F. Supp. 511 (N.D. Miss. 1988).

In buyer's action for breach of implied warranty of fitness of machine for boring tunnel in coal mine, where (1) seller warranted that machine would be free from defects in materials and workmanship, (2) such warranty was accompanied by disclaimer of all other warranties, express or implied, not set forth in writing signed by authorized representative of seller, (3) seller limited its liability for breach of warranty to repair or replacement of defective parts and also excluded all liability for consequential damages, (4) seller agreed to furnish to specialist to supervise installation and initial operation of machine, and (5) seller's offer to sell machine was accompanied by letter signed by seller's employee, who had no authority to make binding representations about machine, which stated that machine would bore at approximate rate of 2.5 feet per hour through hardest materials that buyer might expect to encounter in its mine, court held (1) that buyer accepted seller's offer by mailing purchase order to seller, (2) that by accepting such offer, buyer agreed to seller's terms on liability for breach of warranty, (3) that district court properly found that representation about machine's boring rate, which was contained in letter signed by employee of seller who was not authorized to make such representation, was not part of parties' agreement, since it was not set forth in document that parties intended to be final expression of their agreement within meaning of UCC § 2-202, (4) that as a result, there was no undertaking by seller that machine would bore at rate of 2.5 feet per hour, (5) that seller also had made no express undertaking to assemble machine properly on buyer's premises, since provision in contract which stated that seller would furnish specialist to supervise machine's initial assembly and operation was only intended to prevent wrongful assembly or operation by buyer's employees when not under control of seller's specialist, (6) that such undertaking also did not exist as an independent and separate obligation of seller because assembly of machine, whether at seller's plant or on buyer's premises, came under seller's workmanship warranty, (7) that seller's inability to repair defects in machine caused buyer's limited repair remedy to fail in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), (8) that although failure of its limited remedy to achieve its essential purpose made available to buyer all remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, this did not mean that consequential damages, which buyer stipulated were its only damages, could be recovered by buyer under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(a), and (9) that since contract had been made by parties of relatively equal bargaining power and liability for consequential damages had been assumed by buyer, mere fact that seller's efforts to repair machine had failed was not enough to require that seller absorb consequential-damage losses that buyer had plainly agreed to bear. S.M. Wilson & Co. v. Smith Int'l, Inc., 587 F.2d 1363 (9th Cir. Cal. 1978).

In buyer's action for breach of warranty attaching to a laser that did not operate at warranted power output, court held (1) that evidence supported district court's determination that seller had breached its express warranty and that buyer's remedy of repair or replacement of defective parts had failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); (2) that seller had been given adequate notice of its breach under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (3) that since laser was merely component of printer project that buyer was working on and intent of parties, as evidenced by their contract and circumstances of case, was that buyer should bear risk of such project, buyer could recover only breach-of-warranty damages under UCC § 2-714(2) and incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1), but not consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for salaries of buyer's employees who were working on the printer project, since such damages were not contemplated by parties. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

Buyer of boat, under counterclaim in admiralty action for damages for breach of contract and repairs caused by sinking of boat while work on it was in progress, was entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for (1) cost of repairs, including repairs made by buyer himself, (2) diminished value of boat after its sinking, (3) docking expenses, and (4) other sums spent by buyer in anticipation of sailing boat during following season. However, buyer was not entitled to consequential damages for loss of income from chartering boat, since such loss was not reasonably foreseeable by seller at time of entering into contract. English Whipple Sailyard, Ltd. v. The Yawl Ardent, 459 F. Supp. 866 (W.D. Pa. 1978).

Where (1) buyer offered to pay $4,225 for used car, instead of car's list price of $4,995, (2) salesman, on filling out purchase proposal, listed car's price as $4,225, buyer signed such proposal, and sales manager initialed it, (3) salesman then informed buyer that purchase order for car had to be filled out, and buyer signed purchase order and gave salesman check for $100 as down payment, (4) sales manager thereafter informed buyer that car could not be sold for $4,225, and (5) buyer, in action for damages for breach of contract, sought writ of possession for car and consequential and punitive damages for fraud, court held (1) that action was breach of contract case that did not involve fraud, thus precluding award of punitive damages, (2) that although salesman had made mistake to buyer's injury, in that buyer was unable to purchase car with list price of $4,995 for $4,225, trial court had properly allowed buyer damages for breach of contract, and (3) that although UCC § 2-715(2)(a) provides that consequential damages include any loss that results from a buyer's general or particular requirements which seller, at time of contracting, had reason to know and which could not reasonably have been prevented by cover or otherwise, the items of consequential damages sought by buyer in present case were not reasonably known to seller at time contract was entered into. Wahba v. Don Corlett Motors, Inc., 573 S.W.2d 357 (Ky. Ct. App. 1978).

In an action for the breach of an implied warranty, the buyer cannot recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(b) to the extent that his own negligence was a concurring proximate cause of such damages. However, to the extent that the product was unsuitable and proximately caused the damages, the buyer can recover consequential damages for the breach of warranty. Where both the unsuitable product and the buyer's negligence are found to be proximate causes of the damages, the trier of facts must also determine the respective percentages (totaling 100 percent) by which the concurring causes contributed to the consequential damages (action for breach of implied warranty of fitness of isomax reactor charge heater). Signal Oil & Gas Co. v. Universal Oil Prods., 572 S.W.2d 320 (1978).

In action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability attaching to sale of mobile home, buyer's items of consequential damage under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) properly included (1) fact that seller could have foreseen that if it delivered home one week late, buyer might have to spend $280 to rent other accommodations, and (2) fact that seller could also have foreseen that home's defects might involve a $45 repair bill (also holding that finance charges involved in home's sale were not recoverable as consequential damages). Long v. Quality Mobile Home Brokers, Inc., 271 S.C. 482, 248 S.E.2d 311 (1978).

Under UCC § 2-715(2)(a), consequential damages may be recovered by buyer whenever they were reasonably foreseeable by seller when he entered into the contract. Prutch v. Ford Motor Co., 40 Colo. App. 129, 574 P.2d 102 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 618 P.2d 657 (Colo. 1980).

Under UCC § 2-715(2), buyer of concrete building blocks was entitled to any consequential damages resulting from its general or particular requirements which seller had reason to know about and which could not reasonably have been prevented by cover or otherwise. The

"had-reason-to-know" test does not require buyer to show that seller had contemplated or tacitly agreed to certain consequential damages. If seller knew of buyer's general or particular requirements, seller is liable for resulting consequential damages, regardless of whether seller contemplated or agreed to such damages. R.I. Lampus Co. v. Neville Cement Prods. Corp., 474 Pa. 199, 378 A.2d 288, 96 A.L.R.3d 290 (1977).

Consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2) are only granted where breach was proximate cause of loss and damages were reasonably foreseeable at time of contracting; therefore, where it was clearly foreseeable that buyer would need to replace defective parts, but was not foreseeable that replacement parts would themselves be defective, buyer was not entitled to recover consequential damages for losses resulting from failure of such replacement parts. Falcon Tankers, Inc. v. Litton Sys., 355 A.2d 898 (Del. Super. 1976).

Reasonably foreseeable operating losses caused by defective machinery were recoverable as element of damages. Gurney Indus., Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co., 467 F.2d 588 (4th Cir. N.C. 1972).

7. —Indemnity and indemnification.

In buyer's suit for seller's breach of warranties respecting new mobile home sold to buyer, trial court in rendering judgment for buyer was authorized by UCC § 2-715(2)(a) to order seller to execute indemnity agreement holding buyer harmless and indemnifying buyer in event finance company, which was holder in due course of commercial paper involved in sale, or Federal Housing Administration should sue buyer for balance due on purchase price, since buyer's default in payment was direct result of seller's breach. Lycos v. Gray Mobile Home Sales, Inc., 76 Mich. App. 165, 256 N.W.2d 63 (1977).

UCC § 2-715(2)(a)(b), does not displace principles of law and equity concerning contribution and indemnity; therefore, under UCC § 1-103, general law on contribution and indemnity continues to supplement provisions of UCC and were applicable in truck owner's action for breach of warranty against dealer and manufacturer of truck to recover amount paid out in settlement of lawsuits arising out of collision between automobile and truck. Dodge Trucks, Inc. v. Wilson, 140 Ga. App. 743, 231 S.E.2d 818 (1976), aff'd, 238 Ga. 636, 235 S.E.2d 142 (1977).

In action by purchaser of bookkeeping machine against seller for breach of warranty where buyer financed purchase of machine through lease agreement with leasing corporation, but because of difficulties with machine, buyer terminated payments to leasing corporation, leasing corporation repossessed machine, sold it and recovered balance due on lease from purchaser, purchaser was entitled to recover as damages for breach of warranty amount of deficiency judgment obtained by leasing corporation against purchaser. Acme Pump Co. v. National Cash Register Co., 32 Conn. Supp. 69, 337 A.2d 672 (1974).

Where retailer and wholesaler of child's toy each paid $10,000 to consumer in settlement of products liability action, and where retailer made out prima facie case for breach of warranty of merchantability by wholesaler, retailer was entitled to recover from wholesaler as consequential damages amount it was required to pay in settlement. Kelly v. Hanscom Bros., 231 Pa. Super. 357, 331 A.2d 737 (1974).

In third-party action by lessees of printing equipment against manufacturer of equipment for breach of warranty, after lessee had refused to make further payments on lease and lessor repossessed equipment, sold it and brought action against lessees for balance due on lease under their separate guarantee of lease: (1) although privity of contract was requisite to action for breach of warranty, not involving personal injury, manufacturer was estopped from denying lessees benefits of express warranty in present case where equipment was delivered to lessees and was serviced by manufacturer, manufacturer's machine warranty was delivered to lessee, and numerous service calls were made without charge as result of manufacturer's having voluntarily extended 30-day guarantee period because machinery would not stay in adjustment; (2) measure of damages provided in UCC § 2-714(2) was not only recovery possible, lessees were entitled to keep goods and seek incidental and consequential damages as well, provided manufacturer was given, as it was, reasonable notice of defect as required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), and, hence, lessees were entitled to recover pursuant to UCC § 2-715, as consequential damage, amount they were forced to pay lessor under guaranty. Addressograph-Multigraph Corp. v. Zink, 273 Md. 277, 329 A.2d 28 (1974).

8. —Joint and several liability.

Comparative negligence rule applied, in action under UCC § 2-314, to bar buyer's recovery of so much of consequential property damages as were proximately caused by buyer's failure to heed seller's warnings concerning continued unsafe operation of defectively-installed oil refinery equipment. Signal Oil & Gas Co. v. Universal Oil Prods., 572 S.W.2d 320 (1978).

The agent of a seller who is a party to the misrepresentation of a race horse is not jointly and severally liable with his principal in an action for a rescission of the contract and a recovery of the purchase money paid for the horse; however, a different result would have been reached had the purchasers sued to recover damages consequent upon the misrepresentation. Grandi v. LeSage, 74 N.M. 799, 399 P.2d 285 (1965).

9. —Punitive damages.

Nowhere in UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 is there indication that punitive damages are element of recovery in breach of warranty cases. Novosel v. Northway Motor Car Corp., 460 F. Supp. 541 (N.D.N.Y. 1978).

The Uniform Commercial Code makes no provision for exemplary or punitive damages for breaches of warranty. Instead, the code provides, in UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(1) and (2)(b), only for recovery of incidental and consequential damages. Sims v. Ryland Group, Inc., 37 Md. App. 470, 378 A.2d 1 (1977).

10. Particular items and elements.

and defendant; (2) that defendant's attempt in its limited express warranty to limit its liability respecting any implied warranties was invalid under both Mississippi statute abolishing privity requirement between buyer and manufacturer and also Mississippi UCC § 2-719(4); (3) that defendant was "seller" within meaning of Mississippi privity statute; (4) that because of defendant's breach of implied warranty of merchantability that attached to heat pump under Mississippi UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), plaintiff was entitled to recover (a) damages under Mississippi UCC § 2-714(2) for difference between actual value of heat pump at time plaintiff accepted it and its value in absence of defendant's breach of warranty, and (b) consequential damages under Mississippi UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for additional expenses incurred in purchasing one wood heater and two kerosene heaters; and (5) that case did not justify award of punitive damages for defendant's breach. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

In buyer's action for breach of warranty attaching to a laser that did not operate at warranted power output, court held (1) that evidence supported district court's determination that seller had breached its express warranty and that buyer's remedy of repair or replacement of defective parts had failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); (2) that seller had been given adequate notice of its breach under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (3) that since laser was merely component of printer project that buyer was working on and intent of parties, as evidenced by their contract and circumstances of case, was that buyer should bear risk of such project, buyer could recover only breach-of-warranty damages under UCC § 2-714(2) and incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1), but not consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for salaries of buyer's employees who were working on the printer project, since such damages were not contemplated by parties. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

In action by contractor against supplier of concrete based on supplier's furnishing of substandard strength concrete, contractor was entitled to recover, inter alia, cost of tests performed to determine if slab containing substandard concrete could still be used as floor of building, even though buyer accepted concrete within meaning of UCC § 2-607, where, after performing customary cylinder tests to determine general quality, buyer had no reasonable way to discover insufficiency of compression strengths and cost of tests to determine whether concrete could still be used was reasonable incidental expense within meaning of UCC § 2-715. S.M. Wilson & Co. v. Reeves Red-E-Mix Concrete, Inc., 39 Ill. App. 3d 353, 350 N.E.2d 321 (5th Dist. 1976).

In action for breach of express warranty by purchaser of drive-in business for damage caused by collapse of canopy, method of computing damages which granted plaintiff value of used canopy was reasonable under circumstances. Rose v. Helm, 501 P.2d 753 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Loss due to insolvency of buyer's customer was too remote and speculative to be considered consequential damages recoverable by buyer after seller's alleged breach of contract by reason of late delivery of goods. Buffalo Tank Div., Bethlehem Steel Corp. v. Acme Process Equip. Co., 54 Pa. D. & C.2d 328 (1972), aff'd, 222 Pa. Super. 712, 294 A.2d 773 (1972).

Items of damages not expressly recognized as consequential may not be recovered. A. & H. Paint Co. v. Michaels, 21 Lawr. L.J. 153 (Pa. 1962).

11. —Attorneys' fees.

Attorney's fees, in the absence of express statutory or contractual provision therefor, are not recoverable by buyer under UCC § 2-715(2) as consequential damages for seller's breach. Murray v. Holiday Rambler, Inc., 83 Wis. 2d 406, 265 N.W.2d 513 (1978).

Rule that buyer may collect as consequential damages his expenses including attorney's fees in defending title after having given notice to his seller that third party is claiming adversely was especially compelling where auction company should have known that potential loss to automobile dealer bidding at auction included costs which might be incurred in defending suits by subvendees, as well as lost profit of resale and incidental expense, if title received by dealer turned out to be bad. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 493 S.W.2d 385 (Mo. Ct. 1973).

Attorney's fees, in the absence of statute, are not recoverable as consequential damages. Therefore a buyer who sues his seller because of the buyer's liability to his purchasers cannot recover from the original seller the buyer's attorney's fees in defending the suits brought by his purchasers or for representing the buyer in the suit with the seller. A. Ertag, Inc. v. Lehigh Valley Mills, Inc., 29 Lehigh L.J. 487 (Pa. 1962).

12. —Loss of crops or livestock in production.

The purchaser of defective farm equipment machinery was entitled to recover the down payment he had invested in a grain drill and combine where the seller and the financing corporation were deemed to be one and the same because of their interlocking directorates. The purchaser was also entitled to consequential damages to his soybean crop where the seller should reasonably have known that the delivery of the defective equipment and the unsuccessful repairs would cause such delay in the planting of the purchaser's crop. Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Evans, 406 So. 2d 15 (Miss. 1981).

In action against manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties in sale of heavy-duty farm equipment purchased to prepare land to grow crops, consequential damages for buyer's loss of crops were recoverable under "special-circumstances" provision of UCC § 2-714(2) and consequential-damages provisions of UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(2)(a), where buyer's act of planting crops was foreseeable by seller and buyer, although aware of defects in purchased equipment at time of planting crops, was put by equipment's defects into position of having to choose between using defective equipment and suffering damaged crops or else having no crops at all (holding that trial court did not err in refusing to limit buyer's damages to impaired value of equipment purchased). Prutch v. Ford Motor Co., 40 Colo. App. 129, 574 P.2d 102

In action by dairy farmer to recover damages from feed manufacturer for loss of milk production and injury to dairy cows allegedly caused by use of feed supplement, evidence was sufficient to establish breach of both express warranty under UCC § 2-313 and implied warranty of fitness under UCC § 2-315 where there was express representation that use of feed supplement would increase milk production and where there was decrease in milk production resulting from wrong instructions about proper way to use feed supplement. However, farmer was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2): (1) considering that there were many factors which could affect production of milk, to permit use of difference between total milk production figures for whole of year during which feed supplement was used for approximately 2 months, and total production figures for whole of preceding year, as measure of damages, would constitute rankest form of speculation and conjecture; (2) with respect to damages for decrease in market value of cows affected by feed, it could not reasonably be determined how much of decline in valuation of cattle between date of injury and day on which they were sold was attributable to injury and how much to changes, if any, in market value between those dates. Shotkoski v. Standard Chem. Mfg. Co., 195 Neb. 22, 237 N.W.2d 92 (1975).

Under UCC § 2-715 damages for breach of implied warranty in sale of bull semen were limited to calf crop that might have been expected from 1971 breeding but did not extend to loss of second calf crop. Baden v. Curtiss Breeding Serv., 380 F. Supp. 243 (D. Mont. 1974).

Where equipment seller was aware of buyer's silage crops and the need for their expeditious harvesting, that the equipment was specially adapted to that purpose, that there was no other such equipment available in the area for lease or purchase in time to complete the harvest, where the fair net value of the crop was $10 per ton and 1,425 tons were ready for harvest, and where the jury found that the seller had repudiated the sales contract, buyer's consequential damages under UCC § 2-715 would crop loss. Lake Village Implement Co. v. Cox, 252 Ark. 224, 478 S.W.2d 36 (1972).

Consequential damages could be recovered from seller who failed to deliver harvesting equipment where crop was virtually ready for harvest at time of purchase, and a lack of sufficient funds would excuse failure to make redelivery bond. Lake Village Implement Co. v. Cox, 252 Ark. 224, 478 S.W.2d 36 (1972).

13. —Loss of good will.

In action by hog producer against feed manufacturer for breach of warranty in connection with defective feed supplied by manufacturer, hog producer's losses on account of lost profits and diminished value as producing business were recoverable under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 where feed manufacturer had close working relationship with hog producer time when defective feed was being fed and where there was ample evidence showing loss of goodwill and business reputation. R.E.B., Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 525 F.2d 749 (10th Cir. Wyo. 1975).

In action for breach of contract to deliver "top quality" Christmas trees, damages for loss of future profits resulting from loss of goodwill occasioned by buyer's inability to perform his contracts with florists whom he was to have supplied during Christmas season were entirely too speculative for reasonable calculation and could not be recovered under Pennsylvania law. Traynor v. Walters, 342 F. Supp. 455 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

Loss of customers represents too speculative an item to permit recovery therefore on breach of warranty. A. & H. Paint Co. v. Michaels, 21 Lawr. L.J. 153 (Pa. 1962).

In excluding recovery for loss of good will for breach of warranty the code continues the prior law. A. & H. Paint Co. v. Michaels, 21 Lawr. L.J. 153 (Pa. 1962).

The Uniform Commercial Code did not enlarge the scope of a buyer's damages to include a loss of good will. Harry Rubin & Sons v. Consolidated Pipe Co. of Am., 396 Pa. 506, 153 A.2d 472 (1959).

14. —Loss of resale value.

Buyer was entitled to damages under UCC § 2-714(2), and to incidental damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(1), for seller's breach of express and implied warranties of fitness for particular purpose, and also express warranty by sample attaching to wrap coats purchased by buyer, where (1) samples of such coats were made part of basis of bargain and created express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1)(c) that all goods would conform to such samples, (2) seller knew that buyer was relying on seller to furnish goods that would be fit for buyer's particular purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-315, and (3) seller delivered over 3,700 nonconforming coats that were not fit for buyer's resale purposes. Alafoss v. Premium Corp. of Am., Inc., 448 F. Supp. 95 (D. Minn. 1978), aff'd in part, rev'd on other grounds, 599 F.2d 232 (8th Cir. Minn. 1979).

Purchaser of conveyor-stacker, on justifiably revoking acceptance of equipment after giving defendant manufacturer-seller ample time to correct problems causing equipment not to function properly, was entitled under UCC § 2-711(1) to recover, as damages for defendant's breach of both express warranty and implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, price paid for equipment and also, under UCC § 2-715(1) and (2), incidental and consequential damages resulting from seller's breach, including purchaser's loss of profit in resale of equipment. Barney Mach. Co. v. Continental M.D.M., Inc., 434 F. Supp. 596 (W.D. Pa. 1977).

15. —Lost profits; measure and evidence.

Loss may be determined in any manner which is reasonable under the circumstances, and does not require mathematical precision, therefore a plaintiff who has produced the best evidence available to him should not be denied recovery because the amount cannot be ascertained with the same precision as an ordinary claim for damages. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In action by buyer of pizza oven against manufacture-seller for consequential damages for lost profits under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) arising from breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness of oven for particular purpose, (1) evidence was sufficient to allow jury to conclude with reasonable certainty that buyer had suffered lost profits, at least to extent of $8,000, because of increased labor costs that were attributable to defective oven, but (2) evidence was not sufficient to establish with reasonable certainty amount claimed by buyer as lost profits caused by alleged decrease in sales during period oven was used in buyer's business, since oven was not sole cause of such decrease in sales. El Fredo Pizza, Inc. v. Roto-Flex Oven Co., 199 Neb. 697, 261 N.W.2d 358 (1978).

In action by buyer of four oil tankers against shipbuilder-seller for consequential damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2) for losses incurred when tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures, in which shipbuilder filed third-party complaint against manufacturer of defective cargo pumps and manufacturer of pumps filed fourth-party complaint against manufacturer of defective expansion joints, (1) shipbuilder-seller breached express warranty to buyer under UCC § 2-313(1) that tankers would be built to operate efficiently and also implied warranties under UCC § 2-314(1) and § 2-315 of merchantability and fitness of tankers for particular purpose (transportation of aviation fuels); (2) buyer of tankers was entitled only to consequential damages caused by defects in design and was not entitled to damages caused by defects in materials or workmanship; (3) shipbuilder-seller's foreseeable liability to buyer was $500,000, which was amount of adjusted revenues lost by buyer when two of its tankers were inoperative because of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures due to defective design; (4) manufacturer of defective cargo pumps breached its express and implied warranties to shipbuilder and was liable, in amount of $2,000,000, for losses sustained by shipbuilder as result of cargo-pump and expansion-joint failures in tankers sold to buyer (including shipbuilder's liability to buyer for lost revenues during period tankers were inoperative), but was not liable to shipbuilder for cost of installing separate stripping on each tanker; and (5) manufacturer of defective expansion joints, which were used in connection with cargo pumps, breached its express and implied warranties concerning such joints and was liable to manufacturer of pumps for costs of replacing all defective joints. Falcon Tankers, Inc. v. Litton Sys., 380 A.2d 569 (Del. Super. 1977).

Seller of fabric was liable to buyer for breach of express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, where buyer's purchase order stated that fabric was to be used for swimwear and that all "colors, prints and bonding processes must meet swimwear specifications," and where fabric supplied and subsequently manufactured into swimsuits was defective and failed to meet minimum performance standards for colorfastness; buyer, having given reasonable notice to seller under UCC § 2-607, was entitled to damages for credits issued to customers (including profits lost and costs of production for returns and allowances) plus cost of production of unsaleable swimsuits under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, and to deduct such damages from purchase price under UCC § 2-717. Rite Fabrics, Inc. v. Stafford-Higgins Co., 366 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

In action for breach of warranty related to greenhouse roofing panels, proper measure of damages for lost profits would be difference between reasonable value of each crop of chrysanthemums as actually raised and sold and reasonable market value of crop which would have been produced and sold had paneling been as warranted. General Supply & Equip. Co. v. Phillips, 490 S.W.2d 913 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 13, 1973).

In action against seller and manufacturer of truck for breach of warranty, buyer should have been permitted on issue of consequential damages in nature of loss of commercial profits to testify that he purchased truck for particular purpose and attempted to minimize damages by asking seller for substitute truck; that he always had commercial loads available and had lease contract during time truck was "down" or disabled due to alleged malfunctioning or non-conformity; and that his business records might serve as guide to establish lost profits. Gramling v. Baltz, 253 Ark. 352, 485 S.W.2d 183 (1972).

16. —Lost profits; allowed.

The loss by plaintiff, Mississippi corporation operating jewelry counters in department stores throughout southeast, of corollary sales as result of a breach of contract by defendant seller of wrist-watches, was a foreseeable consequence of the breach, inasmuch as very purpose of a "loss leader" promotion, in which plaintiff intended to engage by selling watches provided by the defendant at a sale price, was to increase the amount of corollary sales in plaintiff's establishment on the basis of increased patronage attracted by the sale, and plaintiff showed that defendant knew the watches would be used for this purpose. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In buyer's action for damages for seller's breach of contract to sell unique porcelain animal figures and also specific performance of such contract under UCC § 2-716(1), district court ruled, on denying buyer's motion for preliminary injunction to restrain seller from disposing of figures remaining in its possession, (1) that since seller had distributed all but 50 figures to other buyers, plaintiff had already sustained major part of its business injury, (2) that plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance, since it had not demonstrated existence of any special circumstances that would justify penalizing other good-faith purchasers of such figures in order to grant specific performance to plaintiff, (3) that plaintiff's lost profits from seller's breach were susceptible of ascertainment for purpose of computing damages for nondelivery under UCC § 2-713(1) and incidental and consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(1) and (2), and (4) that plaintiff's total damage claim of nearly nine million dollars was an adequate remedy at law. Joneil Fifth Ave. Ltd. v. Ebeling & Reuss Co., 458 F. Supp. 1197 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

In action by buyer of printing press against seller to recover damages for breach of warranty, evidence supported trial court's award of damages in sum of $10,435 as buyer was entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a), even though buyer continued to use press in spite of many problems in effort to maintain his business, and evidence that buyer spent 1000 hours trying to get machine to work properly, that press "jam ups" caused great loss of paper, and that buyer suffered loss of profits was sufficient to establish award of consequential damages. Burrus v. Itek Corp., 46 Ill. App. 3d 350, 360 N.E.2d 1168 (3d Dist. 1977).

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where court order submitting matter to arbitration stated that buyer would have right to sell and make deliveries of nonconforming steel rejected by buyer; where buyer, prior to such order, had informed seller that it would sell nonconforming steel for seller's account if seller did not give buyer other instructions within reasonable time; and where seller did not give any other instructions to buyer and buyer resold such steel, (1) seller had sufficient notice under UCC § 2-706 of buyer's intent to resell; (2) such resale under UCC § 2-604 did not constitute acceptance of goods; and (3) arbitrators under UCC § 2-715(1) properly allowed buyer sales commission on such resale as damages resulting from seller's breach. North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

In action by hog producer against feed manufacturer for breach of warranty in connection with defective feed supplied by manufacturer, hog producer's losses on account of lost profits and diminished value as producing business were recoverable under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 where feed manufacturer had close working relationship with hog producer during time when defective feed was being fed and where there was ample evidence showing loss of goodwill and business reputation. R.E.B., Inc. v. Ralston Purina Co., 525 F.2d 749 (10th Cir. Wyo. 1975).

If seller of cupric oxide had reason to know that buyer would resell material contracted for and if buyer did, in fact, enter resale contract, buyer would be entitled to any consequential damages, including loss of profits, which it could prove were result of seller's non-delivery. Gulf Chem. & Metallurgical Corp. v. Sylvan

Chem. Corp., 122 N.J. Super. 499, 300 A.2d 878 (1973), aff'd, 126 N.J. Super. 261, 314 A.2d 73 (1973), certification denied, 64 N.J. 507, 317 A.2d 720 (1974).

17. —Lost profits; denied.

In an action for negligence and breach of warranty arising from the defendant's sale of a combine to the plaintiff, evidence of lost profits was speculative and insufficient where (1) the plaintiff testified that his losses for 1994, 1995, and 1996 were the result of the defective combine, but he did not produce any other evidence — contracts, witness testimony, financial records — to establish his claims of lost acreage, and (2) he listed five farmers for whom he could have engaged in custom cutting, yet not one of these farmers was called to verify that they had the acreage available to cut and that they made other arrangements only because the plaintiff was not able to cut their crops. Parker Tractor & Implement Co. v. Johnson, — So. 2d —, 1999 Miss. LEXIS 346 (Miss. Nov. 4, 1999).

Buyer of boat, under counterclaim in admiralty action for damages for breach of contract and repairs caused by sinking of boat while work on it was in progress, was entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for (1) cost of repairs, including repairs made by buyer himself, (2) diminished value of boat after its sinking, (3) docking expenses, and (4) other sums spent by buyer in anticipation of sailing boat during following season. However, buyer was not entitled to consequential damages for loss of income from chartering boat, since such loss was not reasonably foreseeable by seller at time of entering into contract. English Whipple Sailyard, Ltd. v. The Yawl Ardent, 459 F. Supp. 866 (W.D. Pa. 1978).

Where evidence in support of counterclaim for damages for breach of implied warranty of fitness of concrete-mixing trucks showed that although such trucks broke down often enough to belie their fitness for the particular purpose for which they were designed, buyer's "down-time" (time lost when trucks were not in use) was still less than ten hours per year per truck, which was equivalent to only normal wear-and-tear usage, (1) buyer's claim under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-

715(2)(a) for lost profits during period trucks were not in use would not lie; (2) buyer's claim that $15,000 per truck was required to keep trucks from falling into state of disrepair also failed because of trucks' surprisingly small "down-time"; (3) buyer's claims for impairment of reputation and punitive damages for willful breach were, under UCC § 2-714(1), outside loss resulting in ordinary course of events from seller's breach; and (4) value formula in UCC § 2-714(2) for breach of warranty was satisfied by award of $7,000 damages for repairs to trucks. Nassau Suffolk White Trucks, Inc. v. Twin County Transit Mix Corp., 62 A.D.2d 982 (2d Dep't 1978).

Buyer of air conditioning equipment was not entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC § 2-714 or UCC § 2-715, even though buyer lost subsequent job opportunities upon seller's breach of contract, where relationship of buyer and seller was on ad hoc basis and where seller had no reason to know of any subsequent job opportunities of buyer. Chrysler Corp. v. E. Shavitz & Sons, 536 F.2d 743 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

Although buyer knew there was some "pan scale" in some of the 732 bags of sugar retained by buyer out of 800 bags delivered in two shipments, fact that seller accepted return of 68 bags of defective sugar was insufficient evidence that buyer had not accepted sugar prior to inspection and, thus, was insufficient to support exclusion of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-316. However, buyer's knowledge of defect (pan scale) gained through inspection of sugar that was used to process frozen food prevented buyer from recovering lost profits as consequential damage under UCC § 2-715. Furthermore, although buyer notified seller in November, 1969, of 68 defective bags, notice in May, 1971, that other sugar was defective was not made within commercially reasonable time under UCC § 2-607 where buyer used sugar promptly after delivery in November of 1969. Michigan Sugar Co. v. Jebavy Sorenson Orchard Co., 66 Mich. App. 642, 239 N.W.2d 693, 93 A.L.R.3d 357 (1976).

In action on account for lease-purchase of front-end loader, lessee-buyer was not entitled to recover damages for loss of anticipated profits on grading contract, as alleged in counterclaim based on failure of consideration, fraud and breach of warranty, where contract, if it existed, was merely to furnish equipment and labor at hourly rate for unspecified sum and amount of time, making such damages too remote and speculative to be recoverable, and where lessee-buyer had covered his loss by obtaining suitable substitute tractor from another company. Trawick v. Trax, Inc., 136 Ga. App. 62, 220 S.E.2d 70 (1975).

In action for rescission of contract for sale of cordwood business, record was insufficient to support award for loss of anticipated profits, in view of plaintiffs' inexperience in type of business involved and lack of detailed evidence on cost and profit factors. Melms v. Mitchell, 266 Or. 208, 512 P.2d 1336, 65 A.L.R.3d 376 (1973).

As to claim that failure of tractor retailer to deliver three-point hitch which was to be used on tractor in planting soybean crop resulted in decrease and loss in soybean production, proof was insufficient to take question of anticipated profits or consequential damages out of realm of speculation and conjecture and would present to jury incomplete set of figures as to anticipated profits; and recovery of such damages was properly denied. Traylor v. Huntsman, 253 Ark. 704, 488 S.W.2d 30 (1972).

Loss of profit is too speculative an item to permit recovery under breach of warranty. A. & H. Paint Co. v. Michaels, 21 Lawr. L.J. 153 (Pa. 1962).

18. —Lost profits; disclaimer.

In action by soybean processor against installer of processing equipment for damages resulting from explosion at processor's plant: (1) lost profits sought by processor clearly fell within purview of contract provision purporting to bar recovery of consequential damages; (2) contractual exclusion of consequential damages would not be stricken as unconscionable where contract was entered into in commercial setting by parties of equal bargaining power, there was total lack of type of oppression or unfair surprise which typified findings of unconscionability in consumer sphere, where parties had been engaged in business endeavors for over 20 years, and where exclusion of liability often had been part of prior agreements; (3) and thus, provision was enforceable limitation on remedies available to processor under its contract theories. Boone Valley Coop. Processing Ass'n v. French Oil Mill Mach. Co., 383 F. Supp. 606 (N.D. Iowa 1974).

In seller's third-party action against manufacturer of allegedly defective boiler for indemnification of any sum which might be assessed against it in action by buyer, seller's lost profits were element of consequential damages which were excluded by manufacturer's written warranty. Council Bros. v. Ray Burner Co., 473 F.2d 400 (5th Cir. Fla. 1973).

19. —Loss of use.

In action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability attaching to sale of mobile home, buyer's items of consequential damage under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) properly included (1) fact that seller could have foreseen that if it delivered home one week late, buyer might have to spend $280 to rent other accommodations, and (2) fact that seller could also have foreseen that home's defects might involve a $45 repair bill (also holding that finance charges involved in home's sale were not recoverable as consequential damages). Long v. Quality Mobile Home Brokers, Inc., 271 S.C. 482, 248 S.E.2d 311 (1978).

In buyers' action to revoke acceptance of motor home, (1) buyers' signing of document entitled "Pre-Delivery Inspection and Acceptance Declaration" by means of which seller had attempted both to disclaim all express and implied warranties and to limit remedies available to buyers, in event of a breach, to repair and replacement of defective parts—did not deprive buyers of right to seek revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608, since seller's failure after reasonable time to repair numerous defects in home resulted in failure of buyer's limited repair-and-replacement-of-parts remedy in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), thus enabling buyers to invoke any remedies available under Uniform Commercial Code; (2) buyers were entitled to revoke acceptance of home under UCC § 2-

608(1) and (2), since jury found on sufficient evidence that its defects had substantially impaired its value and that buyers' formal revocation of acceptance had immediately followed several months of nearly continuous efforts to have home repaired; and (3) buyers were entitled to only $500 as consequential damages allowable under UCC § 2-715(2)(b) for loss of home's use, since there was no evidence of extent to which home would have been used by buyers if it had not been defective. Murray v. Holiday Rambler, Inc., 83 Wis. 2d 406, 265 N.W.2d 513 (1978).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of title, brought by buyer of stolen automobile against seller wherein buyer had undisturbed possession of automobile for period of approximately nine months, value of automobile at time buyer's possession was disturbed so that he lost use of automobile was proper measure of damages. Ricklefs v. Clemens, 216 Kan. 128, 531 P.2d 94, 94 A.L.R.3d 572 (1975).

20. —Maintenance and storage costs.

Buyer of boat, under counterclaim in admiralty action for damages for breach of contract and repairs caused by sinking of boat while work on it was in progress, was entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for (1) cost of repairs, including repairs made by buyer himself, (2) diminished value of boat after its sinking, (3) docking expenses, and (4) other sums spent by buyer in anticipation of sailing boat during following season. However, buyer was not entitled to consequential damages for loss of income from chartering boat, since such loss was not reasonably foreseeable by seller at time of entering into contract. English Whipple Sailyard, Ltd. v. The Yawl Ardent, 459 F. Supp. 866 (W.D. Pa. 1978).

Although furniture was returned and accepted by seller upon seller's breach of sales contract and although no payment was made by buyer, under UCC § 2-715(1) buyer suffered incidental damages of $150 for care and custody of goods and for handling and securing return subsequent to seller's breach. Rodrigues v. R.H. Macy & Co., 88 Misc. 2d 985 (1977).

Where new car after its purchase exhibited numerous minor defects and one major defect (frequent stalling of engine), and where seller, despite frequent attempts, failed seasonably to repair such defects, (1) buyer was entitled under UCC § 2-608(1)(a) to revoke acceptance of car, since its defects collectively constituted substantial impairment of its value to buyer; (2) seller did not have unlimited time to repair car's defects; (3) provision in owner's manual limiting buyer's remedies to repair or replacement of defective parts failed as exclusive remedy under UCC § 2-719(2), thus justifying buyer's cancellation of contract and recovery of purchase price; (4) buyer, although failing to prove consequential damages, was entitled to recover incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1) for repair and maintenance costs incurred in caring for car; and (5) lack of privity between buyer and United States distributor of type of car in suit did not relieve distributor of liability to buyer, since distributor was unable to assure court of continued existence of corporate dealer from which buyer had purchased car. Durfee v. Rod Baxter Imports, Inc., 262 N.W.2d 349, 98 A.L.R.3d 1170 (Minn. 1977).

In action by buyer who successfully revoked sale of mare which was erroneously described in sales catalog, buyer was entitled to recover under UCC § 2-715 expenses of insuring, care, custody, and preservation of the mare, but was not entitled to damages for fraud under UCC § 2-721, since fraud was not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

In action against seller of carpet for rescission of contract and damages, buyer was properly awarded damages for freight, handling and storage charges following discovery of nonconformity, pre-judgment interest on purchase price, and loss of profits under UCC §§ 2-711 to 2-715. La Villa Fair v. Lewis Carpet Mills, Inc., 219 Kan. 395, 548 P.2d 825 (1976).

Purchaser of concrete blocks which were assembled to form planks and then fitted together to form floor and ceiling systems in various kinds of structures was entitled under UCC §§ 2-714(2) and (3) and 2-715(2)(a) to recover consequential damages for (1) blocks rejected after production, i.e., finished floor systems that could not be delivered to purchaser's customers, (2) cost of disposing of defective blocks and floor systems, (3) cost of hiring additional personnel to inspect and handle broken and rejected blocks, (4) costs incurred because purchaser's customers rejected floor systems, not including delivery costs or lost profits, where seller knew exactly what end use would be made of blocks it manufactured and where, furthermore, damages claimed by purchaser at trial were virtually identical to those claimed in earlier letter to seller. However, purchaser was not entitled to recover (5) costs incurred to place special covers on defective ceilings and (6) costs incurred to point and caulk defective ceilings since these expenses could have been totally avoided had purchaser rejected planks at some point prior to their installation and, thus, they were losses which could have been prevented within meaning of UCC § 2-715(2)(a). R.I. Lampus Co. v. Neville Cement Prods. Corp., 232 Pa. Super. 242, 336 A.2d 397 (1975), aff'd, 474 Pa. 199, 378 A.2d 288, 96 A.L.R.3d 290 (1977).

Upon cancellation of a contract for the purchase of a used airplane the buyer is entitled to recover so much of the purchase price as has been paid, incidental damages for expenses such as the cost of repairs reasonably incurred as a result of the seller's breach, and the cost of the care and custody of the plane. Lanners v. Whitney, 247 Or. 223, 428 P.2d 398 (1967).

21. —Personal injury.

Action for breach of contract of sale, to which four-year period of limitations prescribed by New York UCC § 2-725(1) applies, includes action for personal injuries arising from breach of warranty in view of provisions of (1) New York UCC § 2-318, which explicitly states that seller's warranty, whether express or implied, extends to any natural person who is injured in person by breach of the warranty, (2) New York UCC § 2-715(2)(b), which states that consequential damages resulting from seller's breach include injury to person or property proximately resulting from any breach of warranty, and (3) New York UCC § 2-719(3), which makes a limitation of consequential damages for injury to the person caused by consumer goods prima facie unconscionable. McCarthy v.

Bristol Labs., 61 A.D.2d 196 (2d Dep't 1978).

Airplane passenger could maintain action for personal injuries against airplane manufacturer, based on breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-715, notwithstanding passenger was not in privity with manufacturer, and thus plaintiff could avail herself of 4-year statute of limitations provided in UCC § 2-725 which commenced to run from date of injury. Roberts v. General Dynamics, Convair Corp., 425 F. Supp. 688 (S.D. Tex. 1977).

In action by buyers of mobile home against seller for breach of warranty, buyers were entitled to recover consequential damages under UCC § 2-715 for "injury to persons" where buyers testified concerning physical discomforts and illnesses suffered as result of lack of air-conditioning, heating and other defective conditions which existed in mobile home. Mobile Home Sales Mgt. Inc. v. Brown, 115 Ariz. 11, 562 P.2d 1378 (Ct. App. 1977).

A buyer's personal injuries resulting from a seller's breach of warranty clearly give rise to a cause of action for damages under this section. Gardiner v. Philadelphia Gas Works, 413 Pa. 415, 197 A.2d 612 (1964).

While consequential damages might be recovered for breach of implied warranty of fitness for consumption in an action by the purchaser of a chicken pie against the manufacturer to recover for injuries resulting from a chicken bone lodging in the purchaser's throat as he was eating the pie, such damages would include only such personal injuries as "proximately" resulted from the breach. DeGraff v. Myers Foods, Inc., 19 Pa. D. & C.2d 19 (1958).

22. —Personal injury; mental distress.

Under UCC § 2-714(3) and UCC § 2-715(2)(b), consequential damages are properly awarded for manufacturer's breach of express warranty in sale of casket, which on disinterment of decedent three months after his burial was found to contain water as against manufacturer's express warranty that casket would not leak, since no violence is done in such case to word "person" in UCC § 2-715(2)(b) to hold that that which brings on grief does damage to the person. Furthermore, under UCC § 2-318, consequential damages are properly awarded for such breach of warranty to members of decedent's family other than member who purchased casket from defendant. Hirst v. Elgin Metal Casket Co., 438 F. Supp. 906 (D. Mont. 1977).

Where parents purchased vault for casket of son, relying on funeral home's judgment to furnish suitable goods, and where vault was too small and parents had to return next day for another service and burial, parents were not barred from bringing action for breach of contract; implied warranty of fitness of UCC § 2-315 was neither excluded nor modified in any way by funeral home and parents would be entitled to incidental and consequential damages resulting from breach pursuant to UCC § 2-715. Caldwell v. Brown Serv. Funeral Home, 345 So. 2d 1341 (Ala. 1977).

Alleged lost sentimental value of wedding pictures is so highly speculative that it is not a proper element of damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715 for consideration by a jury. Carpel v. Saget Studios, Inc., 326 F. Supp. 1331 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

23. —Property damage.

Buyer's damages for seller's breach of express and implied warranties in sale of antifreeze to be used in internal-combustion engines of buyer's construction equipment included (1) recovery under UCC § 2-714(2) of purchase price of such antifreeze, where antifreeze as delivered was worthless, and (2) consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for reasonable cost of labor and parts necessary to repair buyer's damaged equipment, and buyer's loss of income during period of repairs. R. Clinton Constr. Co. v. Bryant & Reaves, Inc., 442 F. Supp. 838 (N.D. Miss. 1977).

In action by homeowner against seller of bricks to recover damages for breach of warranty, (1) implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose attached to sale of bricks under UCC § 2-315, where intended purpose for which they were to be utilized was expressly made known to defendant's salesmen, where plaintiff and his brick layer agent relied on judgment of defendant's salesmen in selecting suitable brick for stated purposes, and where salesman had reason to know that there was such reliance, (2) warranty was not excluded by usage of trade under UCC § 2-316(3)(c), and (3) since bricks clearly were not fit for use to which they were put and since plaintiff's loss was proximate result thereof, he was clearly entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(b). Cohen v. Bratt & Doxey Supply Co., 51 A.D.2d 719 (2d Dep't 1976), appeal denied, 39 N.Y.2d 706 (1976).

Manufacturer or rear-axle assemblies used in trucks was liable to purchaser of trucks for damage to purchaser's property, notwithstanding lack of privity, where rear-axle assemblies were defective and caused serious physical harm not only to themselves but also to other drive train components; i.e., vibrations along drive train caused by defective rear-axle assemblies and truck manufacturers deficient design caused cracking of transmission casings, loosening of drive train components and serious premature wear to whole assembly, which damage, proximately resulting from nonmerchantability of rear-axle assemblies, was recoverable under UCC § 2-715(2)(b). Walker Truck Contractors v. Crane Carrier Co., 405 F. Supp. 911 (E.D. Tenn. 1975).

24. —Repair costs.

Buyer of boat, under counterclaim in admiralty action for damages for breach of contract and repairs caused by sinking of boat while work on it was in progress, was entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(a) for (1) cost of repairs, including repairs made by buyer himself, (2) diminished value of boat after its sinking, (3) docking expenses, and (4) other sums spent by buyer in anticipation of sailing boat during following season. However, buyer was not entitled to consequential damages for loss of income from chartering boat, since such loss was not reasonably foreseeable by seller at time of entering into contract. English Whipple Sailyard, Ltd. v. The Yawl Ardent, 459 F. Supp. 866 (W.D. Pa. 1978).

In action for damages for breach of warranty of merchantability of houseboat built for plaintiff buyer by defendant seller, where cost of repairing defects that existed in houseboat at time of its delivery to plaintiff was $37,000, and where court concluded that there was no sufficient basis for plaintiff's opinion that houseboat, as delivered, was worth $80,000, but that it would have been worth $160,000 if it had been delivered as warranted, proper measure of damages under UCC § 2-714(2) for defendant's breach of warranty was cost of repairs ($37,000). Moreover, under UCC § 2-715(1), plaintiff was also entitled to recover incidental damages for replacement of defective parts and materials, labor in inspecting and servicing defective mechanical components, and docking fees incurred while such services were being performed. Tarter v. MonArk Boat Co., 430 F. Supp. 1290 (E.D. Mo. 1977), aff'd, 574 F.2d 984 (8th Cir. Mo. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2), measure of damages in buyer's action for breach of warranty in sale of defective airplane, where plane was accepted by buyer, included expense of transporting plane for repairs, expense of overhauling plane, and damages for loss of plane's use while repairs were being made, since such expenses were proximately caused by seller's breach. Miles v. Kavanaugh, 350 So. 2d 1090 (Fla. App. 1977).

In action to recover damages for breach of warranty in connection with defective record albums manufactured by defendant, plaintiff corporation having entered into contract with defendant for production of records, under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715 plaintiff was not entitled to recover damages for loss of underwriting of its corporate stock where there was insufficient proof that defect was cause of loss of underwriting, nor for loss of costs in laying groundwork for production, including advertising and promotion and cost of keeping corporation going during period of delay caused by defect, where no appreciable market existed for record at time of breach; however, plaintiff was entitled to recover expenses reasonably incurred in its efforts to rehabilitate record following breach. Great Am. Music Mach., Inc. v. Mid-South Record Pressing Co., 393 F. Supp. 877 (M.D. Tenn. 1975).

In action against seller of house for damages arising out of defective construction: (1) by analogy to UCC § 2-314(1), seller of house, who was in business of selling houses and who caused house to be built expressly for resale, made implied warranty against structural defects; and (2) by analogy to UCC § 2-715(1), measure of damages for breach of implied warranty of structural defects was reasonable cost of repairs. Bolkum v. Staab, 133 Vt. 467, 346 A.2d 210 (1975).

In seller's third-party action against manufacturer of allegedly defective boiler for indemnification of any sum which might be assessed against it in favor of buyer, incidental damages included, first, whatever amount might reasonably compensate seller for sums expended in adding to, shipping, and start-up services in boiler, diminished by salvage value of aperturances which seller had installed on bare pressure vessel; second, payments by buyer for repairs on boiler; and third, expenditures for labor incurred in attempt to make boiler functional. Council Bros. v. Ray Burner Co., 473 F.2d 400 (5th Cir. Fla. 1973).

25. —Replacement costs.

In buyer's breach of contract action for seller's failure to deliver truck to be used in buyer's construction business, (1) since possibility that seller would not be able to obtain truck from manufacturer was clearly foreseeable contingency at time seller entered into contract (which contained no escape clause making obligation to deliver truck contingent on seller's obtaining it), manufacturer's cancellation of seller's order for truck was not "a contingency the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption on which the contract [between buyer and seller] was made" within meaning of UCC § 2-615(a), governing excuse of nonperformance; (2) buyer was entitled to "cover" damages under UCC § 2-712(1) and (2) for increase in net purchase price incurred in purchasing replacement truck; (3) buyer did not waive right to incidental and consequential damages by failure to cancel order for truck when seller first notified buyer that delivery would not be made on date buyer needed truck; and (4) buyer's loss of use of truck in buyer's business while buyer's old truck was being repaired, and also buyer's depreciation or trade-in value loss on old truck, were properly recoverable items of incidental and consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(1) and (2), since such damages resulted from seller's breach. Barbarossa & Sons v. Iten Chevrolet, Inc., 265 N.W.2d 655 (Minn. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-714(2), measure of damages for breach of warranty arising from failure of television and radio broadcasting tower, which collapsed during a blizzard, to have been constructed in accordance with specifications contained in contract of sale was, under special circumstances of case, replacement cost of tower less reasonable depreciation for its use by plaintiff before its collapse (applying South Dakota law, and also holding that plaintiff could recover consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)). Community Television Servs., Inc. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 435 F. Supp. 214 (D.S.D. 1977), aff'd, 586 F.2d 637 (8th Cir. S.D. 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 932, 99 S. Ct. 2052, 60 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1979).

In action by buyer, a manufacturer of cup boosters, against seller of aluminum blanks used in manufacture of cup boosters for breach of option authorizing buyer to increase original order by 100 per cent, buyer was entitled to consequential damages pursuant to UCC § 2-715 for costs attributable to extra freight for blanks obtained from substitute supplier, and loss of profits in connection with contract for sale of finished cup boosters to United States which resulted from change in delivery schedule caused by seller's breach, however, buyer could not recover under UCC § 2-715 for transportation of its agent in seeking substitute blanks, and for down time of machinery due to seller's breach, where those damages were not satisfactorily proved. R.L. Pohlman Co. v. Keystone Consol. Indus., Inc., 399 F. Supp. 330 (E.D. Mo. 1975).

Where asphalt supplier knew exact needs of paving contractor at time of supplying asphalt and, thus, supplier could have reasonably foreseen that if asphalt proved defective and failed, entire paving job would have to be taken up and completely redone, and where asphalt was in fact defective, ordinary measure of damages for breach of warranty stated in UCC § 2-714(2) was not applicable, due to special circumstances showing proximate damages of different amounts, consisting of incidental and consequential damages as provided by UCC § 2-715. Lanphier Constr. Co. v. Fowco Constr. Co., 523 S.W.2d 29 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e. (July 23, 1975).

Supplier of roofing materials was liable to roofing contractor under UCC § 2-715 for amount of interest contractor was required to pay when he borrowed money to replace defective roof, as result of defective roofing materials supplied by supplier, where necessity of borrowing money to correct error was foreseeable incident of supplier's breach of warranty. Certain-Teed Prods. Corp. v. Goslee Roofing & Sheet Metal, Inc., 26 Md. App. 452, 339 A.2d 302 (1975).

Buyer of animal offal chilling equipment that did not operate as warranted was entitled to recover difference between value of equipment as warranted and as accepted; since chillers were of no use to buyer, except for scrap, entire value (i. e., purchase price), could be recovered from seller, although buyer should tender chillers to seller so that seller might reclaim any salvage value. Buyer was also entitled to consequential damages where, in effort to overcome chiller's deficiencies, buyer purchased stainless steel offal handling trucks and hooks. Puritan Mfg., Inc. v. I. Klayman & Co., 379 F. Supp. 1306 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

Where defendant seller contracted with plaintiff buyer to supply sleeve bearings impregnated with specified oil in accord with government specifications for use in manufacture of bomb fuses, but instead supplied bearings coated with non-conforming oil, and where, although bearings coated with non-conforming oil were visibly different from conforming bearings, buyer used non-conforming bearings to manufacture two lots of bomb fuses which were discovered to be defective as result of use of such bearings, buyer was not entitled to recover cost of remanufacturing defective lots of fuses as consequential damages under UCC § 2-715 since such damages were not proximately caused by seller's breach of warranty but by buyer's unreasonable failure to discover patent defect in bearings. General Instrument

Corp., F.W. Sickles Div. v. Pennsylvania Pressed Metals, Inc., 366 F. Supp. 139 (M.D. Pa. 1973), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1051 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 506 F.2d 1052 (3d Cir. Pa. 1974).

26. Evidence and burden of proof.

Loss may be determined in any manner which is reasonable under the circumstances, and does not require mathematical precision, therefore a plaintiff who has produced the best evidence available to him should not be denied recovery because the amount cannot be ascertained with the same precision as an ordinary claim for damages. Migerobe, Inc. v. Certina USA, Inc., 924 F.2d 1330 (5th Cir. 1991).

In action for breach of warranty in sale of used dry-cleaning equipment, where (1) no evidence was introduced to show market value of equipment, or its market value if it had been conforming, or cost of any repairs made to equipment, but (2) evidence was introduced to show consequential damages arising from alleged breach, such consequential damages were recoverable under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2). D & H Co. v. Shultz, 579 P.2d 821 (Okla. 1978).

Where manufacturer breached express warranty attaching to sale of truck by failing to repair within reasonable time recurring problems in truck's steering, transmission, and air-conditioning systems, and also did not remedy truck's overheating problem and loss of engine power, express limitation of manufacturer's warranty remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts failed in its essential purpose, and under UCC § 2-719(2), all other contractual remedies were available to buyer (holding, however, that difference-in-value rule of damages in UCC § 2-714(2) was inappropriate to case, since buyer no longer had truck (which had been sold) and all claims for deficiency judgment on balance due had been forgiven; that buyer had not presented evidence of consequential damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(2)(a); and that buyer had only proved $200 in incidental damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(1)). Givan v. Mack Truck, Inc., 569 S.W.2d 243, 2 A.L.R.4th 567 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Consequential damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(2) for seller's breach of implied warranty need not be proved with mathematical certainty, but evidence must be sufficient to enable trier of fact to estimate actual damages with reasonable degree of certainty. El Fredo Pizza, Inc. v. Roto-Flex Oven Co., 199 Neb. 697, 261 N.W.2d 358 (1978).

In action arising out of repossession of allegedly defective truck purchased by plaintiff, plaintiff was not entitled to damages for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-714(2) where plaintiff presented no proof as to difference in value of truck at time and place of acceptance and value it would have had it if had been as warranted. Plaintiff also was not entitled to consequential damages under UCC § 2-715(2)(b) because of repossession of truck where evidence did not establish that repossession had proximately resulted from defendant's alleged breach of warranty (observing that repossession of truck had resulted from plaintiff's failure to make payments). Chaney v. GMAC, 349 So. 2d 519 (Miss. 1977).

Although seller was liable under UCC § 2-313 for breach of express warranty that cows had been vaccinated for shipping fever when in fact cattle had not been vaccinated within time period needed to develop adequate immunity, and shipping fever epidemic spread throughout newly purchased herd and some of buyer's cows in old herd, buyer did not sustain burden of proving additional consequential damages as allowed under UCC § 2-715, for lost calf crop and cost of feeding and maintaining nonproductive heifers where (1) spread of shipping fever could have been significantly reduced by separating sick animals from healthy ones, (2) buyer, an experienced rancher, knew of this precautionary measure but only wooden fence separated two herds, and (3) there was conflicting expert testimony as to whether heifers could have been successfully bred at an earlier period. State v. Weekes, 312 Minn. 1, 250 N.W.2d 590 (1977).

In action against seller of rebuilt diesel engine for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose, buyer was not entitled to relief under UCC §§ 2-711(1) and 2-715(1), (2)(a), where there was insufficient evidence as to what caused engine to "seize up," rendering it inoperable. Industrial Contract Carriers, Inc. v. Pacific Diesel Power Co., 277 Or. 677, 562 P.2d 164 (1977).

Lost profits may be recovered under UCC § 2-715(2), which allows consequential damages arising from seller's breach. The burden of proof in establishing damages for lost profits is on the buyer, but mathematical certainty is not required. Loss of profits can be recovered if the evidence shows with reasonable certainty both their occurrence and their extent (allowing buyer damages for loss of profits resulting from purchase of defective printing press). Drier v. Perfection, Inc., 259 N.W.2d 496 (S.D. 1977).

Where seller of truck misrepresented age of vehicle to buyer, evidence submitted by buyer that truck drew a bid of $5,600 at forced sale did not preclude inference that amount received approximated fair value in suit to recover damages for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-714; buyer should have been allowed to offer proof of consequential damages pursuant to UCC § 2-715(2). Bergenstock v. Lemay's G.M.C., Inc., 118 R.I. 75, 372 A.2d 69 (1977).

In action by buyer of wheat storage building to recover for breach of warranty, resulting in damage to wheat stored in building, where buyer testified that, because of damaged condition of wheat due to moisture and buyer's inability to treat it successfully, he was forced to sell wheat during May at price of $2.03 per bushel, but that he usually sold wheat in December or January at which time price of wheat was $4.50 to $5.00 per bushel, and where such testimony was not supported or corroborated by other evidence, buyer failed to establish such damage as consequential damages with reasonable certainty. Karlen v. Butler Mfg. Co., 526 F.2d 1373 (8th Cir. S.D. 1975).

In action by buyer to recover damages allegedly resulting from operational failure of ice maker purchased from defendant, UCC § 2-715(2) did not impose on buyer burden of proving that consequential damages could not reasonably have been prevented by cover or otherwise.

Kohlenberger, Inc. v. Tyson's Foods, Inc., 256 Ark. 584, 510 S.W.2d 555 (1974).

Consideration of large claim for consequential damages should be supported by appropriate pleadings setting out basis of claim; and award of consequential damages, apparently based in part on delay in furnishing television equipment in time to permit television station to open prior to 1968 election and thus obtain political advertising, was not supported by evidence, in absence of finding that lessor of equipment warranted or guaranteed that it would be in operating order prior to election. KLPR TV, Inc. v. Visual Elecs. Corp., 465 F.2d 1382 (8th Cir. Ark. 1972).

27. Jury instructions.

In action by buyer against paint manufacturer for damages for breach of warranty in sale of red barn paint, where evidence showed (1) that plaintiff was professional barn painter, (2) that he had not followed defendant's instructions when adding linseed oil to paint purchased, (3) that paint on customers' barns painted by plaintiff had faded within one to four months after its application, (4) that plaintiff had had many complaints, and (5) that defendant had admitted that a "fade problem" existed with respect to paint purchased by plaintiff, which was of "bottom-of-the-line" quality, court held, on affirming judgment for plaintiff, (1) that although plaintiff's proof of causation was not direct, jury could still infer from fact that fading of paint was quite uniform that presence or absence of linseed oil had had no effect on paint's fading; (2) that since defendant had admitted that paint had a "fade problem" which was to be expected with that brand of paint, jury could therefore infer that paint was not "good barn paint" and that it violated defendant's express warranty made under UCC § 2-313(1)(a); (3) that jury could also infer that paint was not of merchantable quality in violation of implied warranty of merchantability created by UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c); (4) that, moreover, it was not fit for plaintiff's particular purpose in violation of implied warranty of fitness contained in UCC § 2-315; and (5) that trial court correctly instructed jury that it could consider whether plaintiff had complied with defendant's directions in determining whether plaintiff had been negligent, and whether such negligence had been a cause of his consequential damages (declining, since issue was first presented on appeal, to consider whether plaintiff's consequential damages should have reduced by 15 per cent to reflect proportion of fault that jury attributed to plaintiff's negligence, and stating that Minnesota courts had not determined whether comparative-fault principle should be applied in breach-of-warranty actions, although its application seemed equitable and appropriate under UCC § 2-715(2)(b)). Chatfield v. Sherwin-Williams Co., 266 N.W.2d 171 (Minn. 1978).

In action by cattle buyer against seller for breach of express and implied warranties as to age and pregnancy condition of cattle, trial court's failure to instruct jury on incidental damages under UCC § 2-715 was not prejudicial to defendant seller. Dold v. Sherow, 220 Kan. 350, 552 P.2d 945 (1976).

§ 75-2-716. Buyer's right to specific performance or replevin.

(1) Specific performance may be decreed where the goods are unique or in other proper circumstances.

(2) The decree for specific performance may include such terms and conditions as to payment of the price, damages, or other relief as the court may deem just.

(3) The buyer has a right of replevin for goods identified to the contract if after reasonable effort he is unable to effect cover for such goods or the circumstances reasonably indicate that such effort will be unavailing or if the goods have been shipped under reservation and satisfaction of the security interest in them has been made or tendered. In the case of goods bought for personal, family, or household purposes, the buyer's right of replevin vests upon acquisition of a special property, even if the seller had not then repudiated or failed to deliver.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In determining whether specific performance is an appropriate remedy for breach of contract, one consideration is the adequacy of damages to protect the expectation interest of the injured party. The traditional legal remedy, a judgment for the purchase price less what the seller with reasonable diligence could obtain from another buyer, is often attended by difficult measurement problems, the presence of which suggests an equitable remedy. Another important consideration is the level of transaction costs between the parties, and unless those costs are so high that no voluntary exchange can take place, the court should order specific performance. Osborne v. Bullins, 549 So. 2d 1337 (Miss. 1989).

Since specific enforcement will not be decreed if performance sought is impossible or in violation of rights of third person superior to those of plaintiff, court would not grant specific performance of contract for sale of 600 limited edition porcelain figures, where defendant had in its possession only 50 such figures and could not obtain more without violating rights of good-faith purchasers. Joneil Fifth Ave. Ltd. v. Ebeling & Reuss Co., 458 F. Supp. 1197 (S.D.N.Y. 1978).

Where uncontradicted testimony showed that some components of plaintiff's stereo system, allegedly worth $10,000, were irreplaceable, that other components were replaceable with great difficulty, that system had been assembled over 15-year period, and that plaintiff had personally designed and built parts of it to match that type of system, system had unique value within meaning of UCC § 2-716(1) and fell into category of property that was not readily obtainable because of scarcity (action for specific performance of contract to repurchase stereo system in which court held that chancellor had erred in not finding that system was sufficiently unique to justify equitable jurisdiction of chancery court). Cumbest v. Harris, 363 So. 2d 294 (Miss. 1978).

In buyer's action for damages and specific performance of contract to sell two "Reddies" machines for processing butter and margarine into table-service pats, where court found that seller had breached contract, that machines were unique within meaning of UCC § 2-716(1), and that sale would not violate contract provision which provided that such sale could be made if it did not jeopardize seller's business, seller would be ordered to specifically perform contract. However, buyer's claim for damages, although not precluded by UCC § 2-716(2), would be denied because damages sought were speculative, even when measured by rule that loss of value of use of property, rather than loss of profits, is proper measure of damages for breach of contract to deliver property. Dexter Bishop Co. v. B. Redmond & Son, 58

In buyer's suit for specific performance, where seller, after agreeing to sell all cotton produced by him during 1973 crop year, cancelled contract two months later for buyer's failure to furnish required performance bond within two-week deadline set by seller and buyer thereafter furnished seller with letter of credit (which would expire before cotton was picked) in amount of such bond before buyer finally sent bond itself, (1) since written contract between parties did not specify time bond was to be furnished, UCC § 2-309(1) applied and required that bond be furnished within reasonable time; (2) in determining what was reasonable time, Comment 6 to UCC § 2-309(1) would be followed; (3) under Comment 6, effective communication of proposed time limit calls for response, and failure to reply constitutes acquiescence in such time limit; (4) although buyer did not acquiesce in seller's proposed time limit which was sufficient for answering, new trial would be necessary on issue as to whether buyer furnished bond within reasonable time because buyer's response communication did not answer such issue; and (5) if at new trial buyer should be found to have furnished bond within reasonable time, buyer's remedy would not be suit for specific performance under UCC § 2-716(1), but would be suit under UCC § 2-712(2) for damages for breach of contract, since buyer could have purchased other cotton on open market as cover for cotton not furnished by seller. Weathersby v. Gore, 556 F.2d 1247 (5th Cir. 1977).

In replevin action by buyer against seller to obtain possession of supposedly used Ferrari sports car of limited availability that seller ordered for buyer from another dealer, where car on seller's receipt thereof proved to be virtually new racing vehicle, not intended for highway use, that seller wished to retain for himself, and where parties were shown to have modified in writing prior oral agreement under which buyer was to be sold "used" car in suit, seller's conduct in claiming that since such car was "new" it was not what buyer had ordered did not meet standards of good faith imposed by UCC § 1-201(19) and UCC § 2-103(1)(b); and when car was identified to contract buyer had right to replevin under UCC § 2-716(3), since he was unable to effect cover and there was no other way for him to protect himself against loss of such deposit on car. Tatum v. Richter, 280 Md. 332, 373 A.2d 923 (1977).

Under UCC § 2-716, remedy of specific performance may be applicable to contracts for sale of grain if there are proper circumstances; however, in absence of findings of uniqueness or other proper circumstances, remedy of specific performance was not available to enforce contract for sale of grain. Tower City Grain Co. v. Richman, 232 N.W.2d 61 (N.D. 1975).

In action by group of gasoline service station operators seeking mandatory injunction directing oil company to fill all orders for gasoline with reasonable promptness, court would make fair and reasonable allocation within meaning of federal regulations. G.W.S. Serv. Stations,

Inc. v. Amoco Oil Co., 75 Misc. 2d 40 (1973).

Acceptance of additional nonconforming hog fence panels did not in itself bar buyer's right to counterclaim, in action by seller for price of additional panels, for damages resulting from nonconformity either of panels initially received by him or of additional panels. Jones v. Atkins, 254 Ark. 472, 494 S.W.2d 448 (1973).

Certificates of public convenience issued to a trucker by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission are unique, within the meaning of subsection (1) of this section, and therefore a contract for the sale of a trucking business, its good will, a piece of real estate, and the transfer of ICC and PUC certificates owned by the sellers was a proper subject for a decree of specific performance. McCormick Dray Line, Inc. v. Lovell, 13 Pa. D. & C.2d 464 (1958).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

A television supplier's failure to properly install television equipment was a material breach of a lease/purchase agreement for television sets to be installed in a motel, which gave the motel owner the right to withhold payment pursuant to § 75-2-717. Patel v. Telerent Leasing Corp., 574 So. 2d 3 (Miss. 1990).

Under UCC § 2-717, buyer may not withhold payment due seller under some contracts in order to cover losses under other contracts between parties. National Farmers Org. v. Bartlett & Co., Grain, 560 F.2d 1350 (8th Cir. Mo. 1977).

Evidence by buyer of natural gas under output contracts with producer-seller which showed that charts measuring seller's production had been altered to indicate that more gas had been produced and delivered to buyer than was actually the case, but which failed to show who had altered such charts, did not support finding that seller was guilty of breach of contract with regard to gas supplied to buyer and that buyer, as a result, had right under UCC § 2-717 to deduct damages for such breach from unpaid contract price (applying Ohio law; stating that UCC § 2-717 is not general set-off provision that permits buyer of goods to adjust its contract obligations according to equities perceived by buyer, and that buyer must first incur damages resulting from seller's breach before it can deduct anything from contract price under UCC § 2-717). Columbia Gas Transmission Corp. v. Larry H. Wright, Inc., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 95, 443 F. Supp. 14 (S.D. Ohio 1977).

Where buyer of new pickup truck sued dealer, manufacturer, and credit company to which buyer's installment-purchase contract had been assigned for damages for breach of warranty and credit company counterclaimed for balance due on purchase price, rights of credit company were subject under UCC § 9-318 to all terms of contract between buyer and dealer, including any defenses arising from such contract, since buyer had not agreed pursuant to UCC § 9-206 not to assert any claims or defenses against credit company and language of contract did not prevent buyer from asserting defense of breach of express warranty. However, although evidence sustained defense of breach of express warranty, such defense was not complete bar to credit company's counterclaim for balance due on purchase price but could only be used under UCC § 2-717 as setoff against balance due, since buyer at time of suit had driven vehicle approximately 49,000 miles and had not rejected acceptance of vehicle or properly revoked acceptance thereof under the Uniform Commercial Code. Arnold v. Ford Motor Co., 90 N.M. 549, 566 P.2d 98 (1977).

Where plaintiff buyer acknowledged that it owed open-account claim set forth in defendant seller's counterclaim, defendant was entitled to prejudgment interest on amount of such claim, and plaintiff was not excused from liability for such interest by UCC § 2-717, since UCC § 2-717 relates to offsetting rights from same contract and defendant's counterclaim had no relation to contract or subject matter of plaintiff's complaint. Frigiquip Corp. v. Parker-Hannifin Corp., 75 F.R.D. 605 (W.D. Okla. 1976).

Where buyer and seller allegedly entered into two oral contracts for sale of corn, although seller denied existence of second contract, and where, after seller had partially completed delivery under first contract, buyer refused to promise to pay seller for balance of corn that remained to be delivered under first contract and stated he would instead withhold payment as setoff against second contract: (1) buyer wrongfully asserted right of setoff under UCC § 2-717 since there were two separate contracts and (2) seller justifiably withheld delivery under UCC §§ 2-610 and 2-703, having interpreted seller's statement as wrongful refusal to pay on contract and as repudiation thereof. Jurek v. Thompson, 308 Minn. 191, 241 N.W.2d 788 (1976).

Seller of dictating machines was entitled to recover agreed price from buyer who accepted delivery under UCC § 2-607(1); seller's termination of buyer as its exclusive distributing agent could not be asserted as defense where, after buyer learned that it was no longer distributor, it failed to take timely action to revoke acceptance under UCC § 2-608 or to give seller timely notice of election to offset damages under UCC § 2-717; nor could buyer rely on UCC § 2-609 right to demand adequate assurance of performance where buyer had already accepted goods in question. Gutor Int'l AG v. Raymond Packer Co., 493 F.2d 938 (1st Cir. Mass. 1974).

Seller of fabric was liable to buyer for breach of express warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, where buyer's purchase order stated that fabric was to be used for swimwear and that all "colors, prints and bonding processes must meet swimwear specifications," and where fabric supplied and subsequently manufactured into swimsuits was defective and failed to meet minimum performance standards for colorfastness; buyer, having given reasonable notice to seller under UCC § 2-607, was entitled to damages for credits issued to customers (including profits lost and costs of production for returns and allowances) plus cost of production of unsaleable swimsuits under UCC §§ 2-714 and 2-715, and to deduct such damages from purchase price under UCC § 2-717. Rite Fabrics, Inc. v. Stafford-Higgins Co., 366 F. Supp. 1 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

In a contract action for goods sold and delivered, the defendant's request for a ruling that the defendant was entitled to deduct its damages resulting from the plaintiff's breach of warranty by reason of late delivery from any balance of the price still due the plaintiff, was properly granted. Butane Prods. Corp. v. Empire Adv. Serv., Inc., 39 Mass. App. Dec. 92 (1967).

This section does not apply to a contract for the sale of the capital stock of a corporation and its subsidiaries which provides as a condition precedent to acceptance of the contract that the financial condition of such corporations at the time of closing should not be less favorable than the statements as of a given prior date, so as to permit the buyer, after acceptance, to recover damages by reason of the diminution in net worth of the corporations. In re Carter, 390 Pa. 365, 134 A.2d 908 (1957).

§ 75-2-718. Liquidation or limitation of damages; deposits.

(1) Damages for breach by either party may be liquidated in the agreement but only at an amount which is reasonable in the light of the anticipated or actual harm caused by the breach, the difficulties of proof of loss, and the inconvenience or nonfeasibility of otherwise obtaining an adequate remedy. A term fixing unreasonably large liquidated damages is void as a penalty.

(2) Where the seller justifiably withholds delivery of goods because of the buyer's breach, the buyer is entitled to restitution of any amount by which the sum of his payments exceed

(a) the amount to which the seller entitled by virtue of terms liquidating the seller's damages in accordance with subsection (1), or

(b) in the absence of such terms, twenty per cent (20%) of the value of the total performance for which the buyer is obligated under the contract or five hundred dollars ($500.00), whichever is smaller.

(3) The buyer's right to restitution under subsection (2) is subject to offset to the extent that the seller establishes

(a) a right to recover damages under the provisions of this chapter other than subsection (1), and

(b) the amount of value of any benefits received by the buyer directly or indirectly by reason of the contract.

(4) Where a seller has received payment in goods their reasonable value or the proceeds of their resale shall be treated as payments for the purposes of subsection (2); but if the seller has notice of the buyer's breach before reselling goods received in part performance, his resale is subject to the conditions laid down in this chapter on resale by an aggrieved seller (Section 2-706) [§ 75-2-706].

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.
2. Liquidated damages.
3. Recovery of payment by buyer.
4. Punitive damages.

1. In general.

Parties to a contract are given broad latitude within which to fashion their own remedies for breach of contract. Wilson Trading Corp. v. David Ferguson, Ltd., 23 N.Y.2d 398, 244 N.E.2d 685 (1968).

Buyer of vegetable oils, bailed with an independent warehouse by seller in order to keep it out of the possession of the buyer until payment was made, had no right to assert a lien against it. Procter & Gamble Distrib. Co. v. Lawrence Am. Field Warehousing Corp., 16 N.Y.2d 344, 213 N.E.2d 873, 21 A.L.R.3d 1320 (1965).

2. Liquidated damages.

Liquidated damages of $75,000 paid as earnest money on a house and real property improperly operated as a forfeiture of the entire down payment upon breach of the contract, without regard to whether the vendor had actually suffered that amount of damage, since it would be inequitable to award the vendor any amount in excess of a sum reasonably necessary to cover actual damages; under this section, which is applicable to goods and not land sales contracts, but which was persuasive under these facts, a term fixing unreasonably large liquidated damages is void as a penalty. Maxey v. Glindmeyer, 379 So. 2d 297 (Miss. 1980).

Test for deciding whether commercial sales contract provision for attorney's fees liquidated at 30 per cent of recovered amount was proper under UCC § 2-718(1) was (1) whether stipulated fee reasonably related to normal fee attorney would charge for collection of contract claim or, alternatively, (2) whether stipulated fee was commensurate with fee actually agreed to by plaintiff and his attorney; however, even if stipulated fee corresponded to actual arrangement, but would nevertheless be unreasonably large, then it would be void as penalty. Equitable Lumber Corp. v. IPA Land Dev. Corp., 38 N.Y.2d 516, 344 N.E.2d 391, 98 A.L.R.3d 577 (1976).

Where sellers entered into three grain contracts calling for delivery of wheat and durum to elevator company on or before April 30 and May 15, 1973, where each contract provided in part that in case of default in delivery of grain, sellers agreed to pay elevator company "as liquidated damages" difference between contract price and market price on specified date (i.e., April 30, May 15, and May 30, respectively), where, pursuant to contract, deliveries of part of grain called for were made and accepted periodically from January through July 11, 1973, but where on July 12 sellers notified elevator company they would make no further deliveries pursuant to contracts, elevator company was bound by liquidated damages clause in contract: (1) liquidated damage clause, without evidence to contrary, was so inconsistent with any other damage remedy as to require conclusion that it contemplated exclusiveness within meaning of UCC § 2-719(1)(b); (2), furthermore, clause would not be held unconscionable particularly where contract was one of "adhesion" and challenger was drafter of contract. Ray Farmers Union Elevator Co. v. Weyrauch, 238 N.W.2d 47 (N.D. 1975).

So-called liquidated damages clause in health spa contract which provided for full payment whether or not purchaser used the spa's facilities was in the nature of a penalty under UCC § 2-718, subd 1, and thus unenforceable against purchaser who attempted to cancel said contract shortly after its execution without ever participating in any reducing sessions or otherwise using seller's facilities. Nu Dimensions Figure Salons v. Becerra, 73 Misc. 2d 140 (1973).

This section was referred to for comparison purposes in Security Safety Corp. v. Kuznicki (1966) 350 Mass 157, 213 NE2d 866, where it was determined that a provision for liquidated damages in a contract for the installation of a fire detection system constituted a penalty and, as such, was void. Security Safety Corp. v. Kuznicki, 350 Mass. 157, 213 N.E.2d 866 (1966).

The Uniform Commercial Code allows the seller actual damages where liquidated damages have not been stipulated. Procter & Gamble Distrib. Co. v. Lawrence Am. Field Warehousing Corp., 16 N.Y.2d 344, 213 N.E.2d 873, 21 A.L.R.3d 1320 (1965).

In deciding a case to which earlier law was applicable, the court noted with approval language of this section favoring upholding and enforcing provisions for liquidated damages provided in the case of delays involving contract performance even in the absence of proof or actual damages resulting from the delay, where it was reasonable at the time of making the contract to so contract. Bethlehem

Steel Co. v. City of Chicago, 234 F. Supp. 726 (N.D. Ill. 1964), aff'd, 350 F.2d 649 (7th Cir. Ill. 1965).

A provision in a contract for sale of refrigerated cases and equipment for a food market, giving the seller authority to enter judgment for the full amount of the unpaid purchase price plus interest and costs, with 15 per cent added for attorney's fees, was unconscionable and void as providing for "unreasonably large liquidated damages," and where the seller entered judgment for the full amount of the purchase price without showing what goods had been identified in the contract, what goods were standard items and readily salable, what goods had actually been specially manufactured prior to cancellation of the contract by the buyers, and what goods had been or would be readily resold, the default judgment would be opened. Denkin v. Sterner, 10 Pa. D. & C.2d 203 (1956).

3. Recovery of payment by buyer.

Under New Jersey law, subd (2) ¶ (b) of this section destroys the old rule that the buyer forfeits his downpayment by breaching the contract of purchase, and provides that where the seller justifiably withholds delivery of goods because of the buyer's breach, the buyer is entitled to restitution of any amount by which the sum of his payments exceeds reasonable liquidated damages specified in the agreement, or in the absence of such terms, 20 percent of the value of the total performance. Procter & Gamble Distrib. Co. v. Lawrence Am. Field Warehousing Corp., 16 N.Y.2d 344, 213 N.E.2d 873, 21 A.L.R.3d 1320 (1965).

These sections destroy the old rule that the buyer forfeits his down payment by breaching the contract, by providing that where the seller justifiably withholds delivery of the goods because of the buyer's breach, the buyer is entitled to restitution of any amount by which the sum of his payment exceeds reasonable liquidated damages specified in the agreement, or "in the absence of such terms, 20 percent of the value of the total performance for which the buyer is obligated under the contract or $500, whichever is smaller." Procter & Gamble Distrib. Co. v. Lawrence Am. Field Warehousing Corp.,

4. Punitive damages.

Where (1) contract for sale of specially constructed grain-storage tanks provided that minimum cancellation charge of 15 percent would be imposed if contract were cancelled, (2) contract was cancelled by buyer, and (3) seller showed actual damages substantially in excess of 15 percent of contract price, cancellation provision was not invalid under UCC § 2-718(1), dealing with liquidated damages, on alleged ground that it called for imposition of penalty instead of liquidated damages. Coast Trading Co. v. Parmac, Inc., 21 Wash. App. 896, 587 P.2d 1071 (1978).

The manufacturer of a truck will not be held liable for punitive damages where its conduct was merely negligence or stubbornness in failing to issue proper warning and to withdraw the product sooner from the market, since punitive damages may only be awarded where there is an intention to cause harm or reckless indifference or wantonness short of criminality, and such conduct must be clearly shown, any doubts to be resolved against liability where many suits will or may be brought against the manufacturer and the total possible claims could aggregate millions of dollars. Roginsky v. Richardson-Merrell, Inc., 378 F.2d 832 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1967).

§ 75-2-719. Contractual modification or limitation of remedy.

(1) Subject to the provisions of subsections (2), (3), and (4) of this section and of Section 75-2-718 on liquidation and limitation of damages,

(a) The agreement may provide for remedies in addition to or in substitution for those provided in this chapter and may limit or alter the measure of damages recoverable under this chapter, as by limiting the buyer's remedies to return of the goods and repayment of the price or to repair and replacement of nonconforming goods or parts; and

(b) Resort to a remedy as provided is optional unless the remedy is expressly agreed to be exclusive, in which case it is the sole remedy.

(2) Where circumstances cause an exclusive or limited remedy to fail of its essential purpose, remedy may be had as provided in this Code.

(3) Consequential damages may be limited or excluded unless the limitation or exclusion is unconscionable. Limitation of consequential damages for injury to the person in the case of consumer goods is prima facie unconscionable but limitation of damages where the loss is commercial is not.

(4) Any limitation of remedies which would deprive the buyer of a remedy to which he may be entitled for breach of an implied warranty of merchantability or fitness for a particular purpose shall be prohibited. The provisions of this subsection do not apply to computer hardware, computer software, and services performed on computer hardware and computer software, which are sold between merchants.

1. In general.

In breach-of-warranty action by buyer against manufacturer of defective heat pump that was installed by defendant's dealer in plaintiff's new house, court held (1) that case involved breach of binding compromise settlement between plaintiff and defendant; (2) that defendant's attempt in its limited express warranty to limit its liability respecting any implied warranties was invalid under both Mississippi statute abolishing privity requirement between buyer and manufacturer and also Mississippi UCC § 75-2-719(4); (3) that defendant was "seller" within meaning of Mississippi privity statute; (4) that because of defendant's breach of implied warranty of merchantability that attached to heat pump under Mississippi UCC § 75-2-314(1) and (2)(c), plaintiff was entitled to recover (a) damages under Mississippi UCC § 75-2-714(2) for difference between actual value of heat pump at time plaintiff accepted it and its value in absence of defendant's breach of warranty, and (b) consequential damages under Mississippi UCC § 75-2-715(2)(a) for additional expenses incurred in purchasing one wood heater and two kerosene heaters; and (5) that case did not justify award of punitive damages for defendant's breach. Fedders Corp. v. Boatright, 493 So. 2d 301 (Miss. 1986).

Under UCC § 2-316, a seller may disclaim all warranties if certain specific requirements are met, and such a provision is called a "disclaimer." On the other hand, a guarantee that recognizes the existence of warranties but limits the seller's liability to a particular remedy is a limitation of remedy, rather than a disclaimer, and is controlled by UCC § 2-719. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

Although it may appear illogical that the Uniform Commercial Code permits a disclaimer of warranties altogether if the requirements of UCC § 2-316 are met but makes it very difficult to create a warranty and then limit the remedy (see UCC § 2-719(3)), this inconsistency can be clarified on the basis of public policy concerning consumer protection. In the case of consumer goods, to give what looks like relief in the form of an express warranty, but actually is not, is unconscionable as a surprise limitation and thus is against public policy. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

UCC § 2-719 is an expansion of § 71 of the Uniform Sales Act. Bafle v. Remchow & Ford Motor Co., 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 108 (Pa. 1962).

The parties are left free to shape their remedies to their particular requirements, and reasonable agreements limiting or modifying remedies are to be given effect. Bafle v. Remchow & Ford Motor Co., 58 Schuyl. L. Rec. 108 (Pa. 1962).

2. Scope.

Defendant auto dealer, which improperly applied a manufacturer's rustproofing material to plaintiff's automobile resulting in rust damage, is liable to the plaintiff for consequential damages, i.e., the cost of repairing his car, since the application of the rustproofing material was a contract between the plaintiff and defendant which the defendant breached by improper application and inadequate inspection and the defendant cannot claim as a defense the terms of section 2-719 of the Uniform Commercial Code that limits a buyer's remedies to the return of the goods and repayment of the price since the contract is for services and not a sales contract and for the same reason the four-year Statute of Limitations under section

2-725 of the Uniform Commercial Code is not applicable but rather the six-year Statute of Limitations under CPLR 213. Perlmutter v. Don's Ford, Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 719 (1978).

Limitation-of-liability provision in contract to design and construct new recovery system in pulp mill relieved defendant engineering and construction company from liability for consequential damages, including loss of profits and products, arising from breach of contract or breach of warranty, even if defendant had breached its contractual obligation to repair or replace defective equipment, because (1) contract in suit, not being transaction in goods, was not governed by UCC Art 2, and (2) even if UCC Art 2 should be deemed to apply to such contract, defendant's obligation to repair or replace defective equipment was not exclusive or limited remedy under UCC § 2-719(2) that failed in its essential purpose, so as to cause limitation-of-liability provision in contract to be ineffective, since plaintiff had recourse to substantial damages under contract's terms and defendant's failure to repair or replace defective equipment would not leave plaintiff without minimum adequate remedies. Lincoln Pulp & Paper Co. v. Dravo Corp., 436 F. Supp. 262 (D. Me. 1977).

3. Exclusivity of remedy.

In action by buyer for damages for breach of warranty attaching to television tower that collapsed during winter blizzard, where (1) seller expressly warranted in sale contract that tower would withstand uniform wind load of 60 pounds per square foot on flat surfaces of tower, (2) seller's advertising literature contained affirmation of fact that tower would safely withstand maximum wind velocities and ice loads to which it would normally be subjected, and (3) sale contract contained limitation-of-liability clause that limited buyer's remedies for breach of express warranty in sale contract to repair and replacement of defective parts and provided such limited warranty was in place of all other warranties, court held (1) that under UCC § 2-719(2), seller's limitation-of-liability clause applied only to limited and exclusive warranty set forth in sale contract, (2) that it did not apply to broader warranty created by affirmation of fact in seller's advertising literature, (3) that such affirmation created express promise that tower's durability would be greater than that stated in technical specifications in sale contract concerning wind load, (4) that seller's general disclaimer of all warranties, other than limited one set forth in sale contract, did not restrict buyer's right to recovery for breach of warranty, since UCC § 2-316(1) provides that language which limits or negates an express warranty is inoperative if it cannot reasonably be construed consistently with language that creates such warranty, and (5) that sufficient evidence supported finding that seller had breached its express warranty in affirmation in its advertising literature that tower would withstand wind and ice loads to which it would normally be subjected. Community Television Servs., Inc. v. Dresser Indus., Inc., 586 F.2d 637 (8th Cir. S.D. 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 932, 99 S. Ct. 2052, 60 L. Ed. 2d 660 (1979).

In action for damages by buyer of meat containing excess fat content, settlement formula in purchase contract was exclusive remedy of buyer within meaning of UCC § 2-719(1), even though word "exclusive" was not used, where parties had numerous previous transaction and on one such occasion had utilized the settlement formula as the measure of damages and where the formula was not unconscionable within meaning of UCC § 2-302(1) in light of parties prior dealings and status as professional traders. J.D. Pavlak, Ltd. v. William Davies Co., 40 Ill. App. 3d 1, 351 N.E.2d 243 (1st Dist. 1976).

Where sellers entered into three grain contracts calling for delivery of wheat and durum to elevator company on or before April 30 and May 15, 1973, where each contract provided in part that in case of default in delivery of grain, sellers agreed to pay elevator company "as liquidated damages" difference between contract price and market price on specified date (i.e., April 30, May 15, and May 30, respectively), where, pursuant to contract, deliveries of part of grain called for were made and accepted periodically from January through July 11, 1973, but where on July 12 sellers notified elevator company they would make no further deliveries pursuant to contracts, elevator company was bound by liquidated damages clause in contract: (1) liquidated damage clause, without evidence to contrary, was so inconsistent with any other damage remedy as to require conclusion that it contemplated exclusiveness within meaning of UCC § 2-719(1)(b); (2), furthermore, clause would not be held unconscionable particularly where contract was one of "adhesion" and challenger was drafter of contract. Ray Farmers Union Elevator Co. v. Weyrauch, 238 N.W.2d 47 (N.D. 1975).

Clause in which airplane manufacturer stated that it "shall not be liable for failure or delay in making delivery for any cause whatsoever" and allowing buyer to cancel order with full deposit refunded, although speaking in terms of liability rather than remedies, was used to express intent that return of deposit was to be sole remedy. Dow Corning Corp. v. Capitol Aviation, Inc., 411 F.2d 622 (7th Cir. Ill. 1969).

A warranty of a new motor truck and chassis to be free from defects in material and workmanship, and expressly made in lieu of all other warranties, express or implied, validly excluded all warranties other than the one stated. Cox Motor Car Co. v. Castle, 402 S.W.2d 429 (Ky. 1966).

4. —Cumulative or optional remedy.

UCC § 2-719(1)(b) creates a presumption that clauses prescribing remedies are cumulative, rather than exclusive, and intent to create a sole remedy must be clearly expressed in the contract. Calloway v. Manion, 572 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-719(1)(a), a seller and buyer may limit the buyer's remedies to the repair and replacement of nonconforming goods. However, UCC § 2-719(1)(b) creates a presumption that contractual clauses prescribing remedies are cumulative to other available remedies. Consequently, if the parties intend that the stated, or limited, remedy is to be the sole and exclusive remedy, that intent must be clearly expressed. Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

Where contract forms did not clearly express intent to limit buyer's remedy to repair or replacement, contract clauses prescribed cumulative rather than exclusive remedies. Nitrin, Inc. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp., 35 Ill. App. 3d 596, 342 N.E.2d 79 (1st Dist. 1976).

5. —Cumulative or optional remedy; election.

Where buyer refused to perform contract for sale of yacht, seller's resort to contractual remedy which allowed it to retain buyer's cash deposit as liquidated damages, precluded it from obtaining specific performance. Miller Yacht Sales, Inc. v. Scott, 311 So. 2d 762 (Fla. App. 1975), cert. denied, 328 So. 2d 843 (Fla. 1976).

In action arising out of breach of "forward contract" for sale of cotton, wherein contractual provision as to liquidated damages did not indicate that it was exclusive remedy in event of breach, under UCC § 2-719, resort to that remedy was optional and grower could not elect to breach contract and pay liquidated damages. Carolinas Cotton Growers Ass'n v. Arnette, 371 F. Supp. 65 (D.C.S.C. 1974).

Decision by buyer of color television broadcasting equipment to affirm sales contract and sue for its breach precluded subsequent claim by buyer that contractual limitation of seller's liability to repair or replacement of defective items could not apply because contract was induced by fraud. Fredonia Broadcasting Corp. v. RCA Corp., 481 F.2d 781 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

6. —Repair or replacement.

In action by general contractor, which had been employed by defendant utility to construct power plant, for retained funds that utility refused to disburse, which action was ultimately settled with regard to all parties except for utility's counterclaim against subcontractor that supplied turbine generator and turbines for project, district court held, with respect to utility's claims against subcontractor for (a) breach of implied warranties by furnishing defective equipment, (b) cost of replacement power, and (c) lost profits, (1) that general contractor had express and implied authority from utility to execute limitation-of-liability agreement as to subcontractor's warranties and general contractor's remedies thereon, (2) that such limitation-of-liability agreement was valid and insulated subcontractor from utility's claims for cost of replacement power, lost profits, and breach of implied warranties, (3) that utility did not obtain contract rights under UCC § 2-207 by virtue of subcontractor's price quotation, utility's purchase order, and events subsequent to execution of such documents, (4) that under UCC § 2-719(1)(a), general contractor's standard contract terms, when construed in light of both its course of dealing with subcontractor and usage of the trade, also limited utility's recovery to cost of replacement and repair of defective parts, and did not permit recovery under any legal theory for cost of replacement power, and (5) that cost of replacement power was consequential damage for breach of warranty attaching to power-generating equipment involved in suit. Ebasco Servs., Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 460 F. Supp. 163 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

Liability of seller for damages arising from allegedly defective photographic paper would be limited under UCC § 2-719 to replacement of paper pursuant to seller's statement of limited liability, notwithstanding no evidence existed that limitation of liability was negotiated, where buyer ordered seller's paper knowing that seller had stated in its instructions for use of paper and on each package delivered to buyer that seller's liability would be limited to replacement of defective paper. D.O.V. Graphics, Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 46 Ohio Misc. 37, 347 N.E.2d 561 (1976).

Damages recoverable from supplier of valve for breach of implied warranties were validly limited under UCC § 2-719 by supplier's express warranty providing, inter alia, that supplier's obligation was limited to repairing or furnishing, without charge, replacement part, that supplier's liability, whether based on warranty, contract or negligence, would not in any case exceed cost of correcting defect in equipment, and that, in any event, supplier could not be held liable for any special, indirect or consequential damages. Beaunit Corp. v. Volunteer Natural Gas Co., 402 F. Supp. 1222 (E.D. Tenn. 1975).

Warranty of boiler, which provided for repair or replacement of defective parts or for refund of purchase price, did not clearly specify that remedy or remedies provided thereby were to be exclusive of any other remedy under various provisions of Florida UCC, so that these remedies provided for were cumulative rather than exclusive. (But further warranty providing that "No claim for cost of removing, returning, or replacing defective parts or for other consequential damages will be allowed" clearly expressed exclusive limitation on measure of damages. Council Bros. v. Ray Burner Co., 473 F.2d 400 (5th Cir. Fla. 1973).

Warranty provided that repair and replacement of defective parts constituted fulfillment of all manufacturer's liabilities to turbine purchaser; held, this was adequate to limit liabilities under UCC § 2-719(1)(a). Southwest Forest Indus., Inc. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 422 F.2d 1013 (9th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 902, 91 S. Ct. 138, 27 L. Ed. 2d 138 (1970).

In construction contract wherein contractor guaranteed the materials to be free from defects and warranted that installation would be in good and workmanlike manner, limitation of contractor's liability to replacement or correction of defective materials and/or installation was valid and enforceable. Magar v. Lifetime, Inc., 187 Pa. Super. 143, 144 A.2d 747 (1958).

7. —Repair or replacement; motor vehicles.

In action by buyer against seller and manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties attaching to tire that blew out and injured plaintiff, where plaintiff, who lacked sufficient evidence of tire's defect, contended that manufacturer's attempt in its written guaranty to avoid liability for personal injuries was unconscionable under UCC 2-719(3), that such part of the guaranty should have been excised from the warranty agreement, and that the warranty agreement as thus excised should have been submitted to the jury, court, on agreeing with plaintiff's contention, held that nothing in record overcame clear unconscionability of limiting plaintiff's remedy, as defendant's warranty had attempted to do, to repair or replacement of tire in suit, and that on new trial of case, plaintiff should proceed only on theory of breach of express warranty. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

Where manufacturer breached express warranty attaching to sale of truck by failing to repair within reasonable time recurring problems in truck's steering, transmission, and air-conditioning systems, and also did not remedy truck's overheating problem and loss of engine power, express limitation of manufacturer's warranty remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts failed in its essential purpose, and under UCC § 2-719(2), all the contractual remedies were available to buyer (holding, however, that difference-in-value rule of damages in UCC § 2-714(2) was inappropriate to case, since buyer no longer had truck (which had been sold) and all claims for deficiency judgment on balance due had been forgiven; that buyer had not presented evidence of consequential damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(2)(a); and that buyer had only proved $200 in incidental damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(1). Givan v. Mack Truck, Inc., 569 S.W.2d 243, 2 A.L.R.4th 567 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Where all defects complained of by buyer of new automobile were completely remedied within four months of purchase and where "as is" language of sales agreement effectively excluded implied warranties under UCC § 2-316, seller and manufacturer did not breach limited warranty that seller would repair or replace any part found to be defective in factory materials or workmanship within 12 months from date of original retail sale and delivery pursuant to UCC § 2-719. Henderson v. Ford Motor Co., 547 S.W.2d 663 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Provisions of written warranty, accompanying sale of new truck, by which manufacturer's and seller's liability was limited to repair and replacement of defective parts, and excluding any further liability, would be valid under UCC § 2-719. K-Lines, Inc. v. Roberts Motor Co., 273 Or. 242, 541 P.2d 1378 (1975).

8. —Return and repayment.

In action for breach of express and implied warranties attaching to contract to trade horses at agreed values, (1) although all elements of express warranty under UCC § 2-313(1) were established, plaintiff's sole remedy, under contract provision permitted by UCC § 2-719(1)(b), was to return his horse in exchange for specified monetary credit on another, and higher-priced, horse, and (2) under UCC § 2-316(3)(b), plaintiff's refusal to examine horse traded to him precluded any recovery for breach of implied warranty of merchantability. Calloway v. Manion, 572 F.2d 1033 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

9. Failure of essential purpose.

It is the essence of a sales contract that at least minimum adequate remedies be available. Therefore, under UCC § 2-719(2) and Official Comment 1, if an apparently fair and reasonable clause, because of circumstances, fails in its purpose or operates to deprive either party of the substantial value of his bargain, that party is entitled to utilize the general remedy provisions of the code. Envirex, Inc. v. Ecological Recovery Assocs., 454 F. Supp. 1329 (M.D. Pa. 1978), aff'd, 601 F.2d 574 (3d Cir. Pa. 1979).

In buyer's action for breach of warranty attaching to laser that did not operate at warranted power output, court held (1) that evidence supported district court's determination that seller had breached its express warranty and that buyer's remedy of repair or replacement of defective parts had failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); (2) that seller had been given adequate notice of its breach under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (3) that since laser was merely component of printer project that buyer was working value of the bargain, it must give way to the general remedy provisions of Article 2. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

Where manufacturer breached express warranty attaching to sale of truck by failing to repair within reasonable time recurring problems in truck's steering, transmission, and air-conditioning systems, and also did not remedy truck's overheating problem and loss of engine power, express limitation of manufacturer's warranty remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts failed in its essential purpose, and under UCC § 2-719(2), all the contractual remedies were available to buyer (holding, however, that difference-in-value rule of damages in UCC § 2-714(2) was inappropriate to case, since buyer no longer had truck (which had been sold) and all claims for deficiency judgment on balance due had been forgiven; that buyer had not presented evidence of consequential damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(2)(a); and that buyer had only proved $200 in incidental damages recoverable under UCC § 2-715(1). Givan v. Mack Truck, Inc., 569 S.W.2d 243, 2 A.L.R.4th 567 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

If buyer's limited remedy fails in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), buyer is thereupon entitled to resort to any remedies that are available under the Uniform Commercial Code. Murray v. Holiday Rambler, Inc., 83 Wis. 2d 406, 265 N.W.2d 513 (1978).

Uniform Commercial Code is ambiguous with respect to effect that failure of limited remedy under UCC § 2-719(2) has on other contractual provisions. UCC § 2-719(2) provides that if remedy fails of its essential purpose, "remedy may be had as provided in this act." The Official Comment to this section states that if a remedy fails of its purpose, "it must give way to the general remedy provisions" of Article 2. The general remedy provisions of Article 2 provide not only for the recovery of consequential damages (see UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(2)), but also for their exclusion where this is not unconscionable (see UCC § 2-719(3)). In cases involving the failure of an exclusive remedy in a warranty provision that also excludes liability for consequential damages, the provisions that limit liability also fail, and the plaintiff is entitled to the full array of remedies provided by the Uniform Commercial Code, including the recovery of consequential and incidental damages (see UCC § 2-715(1) and (2)) (where seller's "New Equipment Warranty," given on sale of tractor to buyer, stated that warranty was in lieu of all warranties, including liability for incidental and consequential damages, and court stated that if buyer was able to prove existence of defect in tractor and also that limited remedy contained in seller's new equipment warranty had failed in its essential purpose, buyer would be entitled to full array of remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, including recovery of consequential and incidental damages under UCC § 2-714(3) and § 2-715(1) and (2)). Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

Contracts are entered into based on premise that each party will in good faith make reasonable effort to meet its obligations under the contract; if liability limitation provision is relied upon to protect party from results of its violation of this premise, provision may not pass test of reasonableness and there may be failure of essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); in making this determination it may be appropriate that contract negotiations be considered to determine whether they placed contractual relationship of parties upon different basis. J.A. Jones Constr. Co. v. City of Dover, 372 A.2d 540 (Del. Super. 1977), appeal dismissed, 377 A.2d 1 (Del. Supr. 1977).

Where buyer of new car justifiably revoked acceptance of car, UCC § 2-719(2), dealing with effect of failure of exclusive or limited remedy, precluded invocation of clause in purchase contract which limited seller's liability for incidental damages resulting from car's defects. Durfee v. Rod Baxter Imports, Inc., 262 N.W.2d 349, 98 A.L.R.3d 1170 (Minn. 1977).

In proceeding based on seller's alleged breach of contract to sell buyer 4,150 tons of Class I steel, which matter was ordered submitted to arbitration governed by Uniform Commercial Code, where arbitrators found that steel contracted for was nonconforming, that price adjustment for delivery of nonconforming steel was accepted trade usage, and that such remedy had failed because of seller's refusal to grant adjustment, declining price of Class II steel, and limited market for Class II steel, (1) trade usage of price adjustment was part of contract of sale and acted as limitation on buyer's rejection remedy under UCC § 2-601(a); but (2) since limited remedy of trade-usage price adjustment had failed in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), buyer was entitled under UCC § 2-601(a) to reject entire shipment of steel. North Am. Steel Corp. v. Siderius, Inc., 75 Mich. App. 391, 254 N.W.2d 899 (1977).

In action on contract under which buyer agreed to purchase minimum amount of liquid chemicals per month and seller agreed to make available for purchase maximum amount of such chemicals per month, provision requiring either party to cancel agreement prior to seeking damages for breach was unenforceable under UCC § 2-719(2), on grounds that it failed to serve its essential purpose, and agreement was governed by general remedy provisions of UCC § 2-711(1) where seller breached contract by failing to meet its minimum monthly commitments, buyer in reliance on agreement had entered into continuing resale obligations with third parties, and operation of provision would have deprived buyer of substantial value of its bargain, i.e., guaranteed source of product availability. Chemetron Corp. v. McLouth Steel Corp., 381 F. Supp. 245 (N.D. Ill. 1974), aff'd, 522 F.2d 469 (7th Cir. Ill. 1975).

Where truck warranty specifically excluded coverage for "Loss of time, inconvenience, loss of use of the vehicle or other consequential damages," buyer was not entitled to recover damages for loss of use of his truck as result of alleged breach of express warranty, since he had previously relied upon that warranty to have his truck repaired, and could not now repudiate it; but loss of use of vehicle might be subject of damage when it was alleged and proved that limited warranty had failed in its essential purpose. Orr Chevrolet, Inc. v. Courtney, 488 S.W.2d 883 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

10. —Failure to repair.

In an action for damages arising out of the breach of an express warranty to repair a used automobile purchased by the plaintiff, the defendant could not limit its liability to the costs of repairs and replacement of parts under the warranty as authorized by § 75-2-719 where it wrongfully failed to carry out its obligations under the warranty; the plaintiff had no incidental or consequential damages as contemplated by § 75-2-715 where he had purchased another second-hand car and had failed to take any reasonable action to minimize the defendant's breach of the warranty but had simply abandoned the car at the dealer's. Where the car had been driven for over two years and 26,649 miles before the plaintiff had experienced any difficulty with it, the reasonable measure of damages under § 75-2-714 would be the fair market value the car would have had with that age and number of miles with no mechanical difficulty as experienced by the plaintiff, and the value it had had in its defective condition, and for which the defendant had refused to make repairs. Ford Motor Co. v. Fairley, 398 So. 2d 216 (Miss. 1981).

When a manufacturer limits its obligation to repair and replacement of defective parts and repeatedly fails to correct a defect within a reasonable time, it is liable for the breach of that promise as a breach of warranty. The fact that the manufacturer in good faith attempts to repair the defect whenever requested to do so is not a fulfillment of the warranty; he must demonstrate that the defect is permanently remedied, as promised in the express warranty. He can be held liable for failure to fulfill the warranty obligation even though his failure to repair is neither wilful nor negligent. Furthermore, the buyer is not bound to permit the warrantor to tinker with the article indefinitely in the hope that it ultimately may be made to comply with the warranty. The limited exclusive remedy fails in its purpose, and thus is avoided under UCC § 2-719(2), whenever the warrantor fails to correct the defect within a reasonable period. When this occurs, all contractual remedies are available to the buyer. Givan v. Mack Truck, Inc., 569 S.W.2d 243, 2 A.L.R.4th 567 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Where a party under UCC § 2-719(1)(a) limits its warranty obligation to the repair and replacement of defective parts, failure to fulfill that obligation, if it operates to deprive the other party of the substantial value of the bargain, causes the limited remedy "to fail of its essential purpose" within the meaning of UCC § 2-719(2) and entitles the injured party to pursue the remedies that are otherwise available under the Uniform Commercial Code. Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

In buyer's action for breach of warranty attaching to laser that did not operate at warranted power output, court held (1) that evidence supported district court's determination that seller had breached its express warranty and that buyer's remedy of repair or replacement of defective parts had failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); (2) that seller had been given adequate notice of its breach under UCC § 2-607(3)(a); and (3) that since laser was merely component of printer project that buyer was working value of the bargain, it must give way to the general remedy provisions of Article 2. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

If after repeated efforts by a seller to place a product into warranted condition, the seller cannot or will not do so, the remedy of repair or replacement may be deemed to have failed in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2), and other remedies under the Uniform Commercial Code may be resorted to. AES Technology Sys., Inc. v. Coherent Radiation, 583 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Ill. 1978).

In action by buyer of used car to recover purchase price from seller for seller's breach of express and implied warranties, where engine in vehicle at time of sale and also replacement engine subsequently installed were both defective, so as to cause breach of seller's express engine warranty and also breach of vehicle's implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314(1) and (2)(c), remedy of recovery of purchase price was available to buyer because (1) language in seller's express warranty did not expressly limit buyer's remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts; (2) even if seller's express warranty could be construed as limiting buyer's remedy to repair and replacement of defective parts, such exclusive remedy failed in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2); and (3) buyer's remedies were not limited by any exclusion or modification by seller, under UCC § 2-316(2), of vehicle's implied warranty of merchantability. Furthermore, since buyer under UCC § 2-608(2) had sufficiently revoked her acceptance of vehicle she was entitled to recover its purchase price. Stream v. Sportscar Salon, Ltd., 91 Misc. 2d 99 (1977).

Where new car after its purchase exhibited numerous minor defects and one major defect (frequent stalling of engine), and where seller, despite frequent attempts, failed seasonably to repair such defects, (1) buyer was entitled under UCC § 2-608(1)(a) to revoke acceptance of car, since its defects collectively constituted substantial impairment of its value to buyer; (2) seller did not have unlimited time to repair car's defects; (3) provision in owner's manual limiting buyer's remedies to repair or replacement of defective parts failed as exclusive remedy under UCC § 2-719(2), thus justifying buyer's cancellation of contract and recovery of purchase price; (4) buyer, although failing to prove consequential damages, was entitled to recover incidental damages under UCC § 2-715(1) for repair and maintenance costs incurred in caring for car; and (5) lack of privity between buyer and United States distributor of type of car in suit did not relieve distributor of liability to buyer, since distributor was unable to assure court of continued existence of corporate dealer from which buyer had purchased car (citing annotation as to time for revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608). Durfee v. Rod Baxter Imports, Inc., 262 N.W.2d 349, 98 A.L.R.3d 1170 (Minn. 1977).

Where jury could reasonably have concluded that buyer's revocation of acceptance of new 1970 Lincoln Continental automobile was timely and justifiable, buyer under UCC § 2-711(1) was entitled to recover amount of purchase price that he had already paid. Moreover, such recovery was not limited by warranty provision, incorporated in sales contract, that buyer was entitled only to repair and replacement of defective parts. The Uniform Commercial Code expressly declares in UCC § 1-102(1) that it is to be liberally construed, and it also recognizes in Official Comment 1 to UCC § 2-719 that the very essence of a sales contract is that minimum adequate remedies at least be available. In present case, however, limited remedy of warranty in sales contract failed to achieve its essential purpose, since even after numerous attempts at repairs, vehicle purchased by buyer did not operate as new automobile should

In action by seller of sectional steel plate against buyer for balance due under contract of sale, in which contract contained provision limiting seller's warranty liability for defective material to replacement or refund of purchase price at seller's option, factual issue was presented on question of whether limitation of liability provision failed of its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), where buyer alleged that plates delivered by seller did not conform to contractual respecifications in major respects, that defects could not be detected until construction had actually commenced, that seller failed to render adequate assistance when requested in that defective plates sent back to seller for corrective repairs were returned to buyer uncorrected, and that under these and totality of circumstances, refund of purchase price would have been totally inadequate remedy. Earl M. Jorgensen Co. v. Mark Constr., Inc., 56 Haw. 466, 540 P.2d 978 (1975).

Where strict language of express warranty and disclaimer placed purchaser of automobile in position such that his defective vehicle was incapable of repair pursuant to such express warranty and disclaimer because he could not identify any part, replacement of which would remedy defect, such result made disclaimer unconscionable and void within meaning of UCC § 2-302. Furthermore, where seller was unable to cure defect in purchaser's automobile, express warranty and its disclaimer which provided for contractual modification and limitation of rights and remedies of purchaser, failed of its essential purpose and, thus, "circumstances caused an exclusive or limited remedy to fail of its essential purpose" within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), and could not be deemed exclusive remedy. Eckstein v. Cummins, 41 Ohio App. 2d 1, 321 N.E.2d 897 (1974).

Even though seller effectively disclaimed implied warranties under UCC § 2-316 and warranted only that products were in accordance with published specifications and that obligation under such warranties was limited to repairing or replacing nonconforming products, buyer was not precluded from consequential damages under UCC §§ 2-719 where seller allegedly failed to repair or replace as provided in contract; but conduct of seller was not such as would render disclaimer of warranties unconscionable under UCC § 2-302. Koehring Co. v. A.P.I., Inc., 369 F. Supp. 882 (E.D. Mich. 1974).

11. —Failure to repair; timeliness.

In action for buyer's allegedly wrongful cancellation of contracts to purchase corn of specified grade, trial court erred in granting summary final judgment for seller where record revealed that issue of material fact existed as to whether seller's failure to furnish grade of corn agreed on had caused exclusive remedy adopted by parties for breach of contract to fail in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2). Tampa Farm Serv., Inc. v. Cargill, Inc., 356 So. 2d 347 (Fla. App. 1978).

When a manufacturer limits its obligation to repair and replacement of defective parts and repeatedly fails to correct a defect within a reasonable time, it is liable for the breach of that promise as a breach of warranty. The fact that the manufacturer in good faith attempts to repair the defect whenever requested to do so is not a fulfillment of the warranty; he must demonstrate that the defect is permanently remedied, as promised in the express warranty. He can be held liable for failure to fulfill the warranty obligation even though his failure to repair is neither willful nor negligent. Furthermore, the buyer is not bound to permit the warrantor to tinker with the article indefinitely in the hope that it ultimately may be made to comply with the warranty. The limited exclusive remedy fails in its purpose, and thus is avoided under UCC § 2-719(2), whenever the warrantor fails to correct the defect within a reasonable period. When this occurs, all contractual remedies are available to the buyer. Givan v. Mack Truck, Inc., 569 S.W.2d 243, 2 A.L.R.4th 567 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

In buyers' action to revoke acceptance of motor home, (1) buyers' signing of document entitled "Pre-Delivery Inspection and Acceptance Declaration"-by means of which seller had attempted both to disclaim all express and implied warranties and to limit remedies available to buyers, in event of a breach, to repair and replacement of defective parts-did not deprive buyers of right to seek revocation of acceptance under UCC § 2-608, since seller's failure after reasonable time to repair numerous defects in home resulted in failure of buyer's limited repair-and-replacement-of-parts remedy in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), thus enabling buyers to invoke any remedies available under Uniform Commercial Code; (2) buyers were entitled to revoke acceptance of home under UCC § 2-608(1) and (2), since jury found on sufficient evidence that its defects had substantially impaired its value and that buyers' formal revocation of acceptance had immediately followed several months of nearly continuous efforts to have home repaired; and (3) buyers were entitled to only $500 as consequential damages allowable under UCC § 2-715(2)(b) for loss of home's use, since there was no evidence of extent to which home would have been used by buyers if it had not been defective. Murray v. Holiday Rambler, Inc., 83 Wis. 2d 406, 265 N.W.2d 513 (1978).

A limited remedy fails in its essential purpose, within the meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), whenever the seller fails to repair the goods within a reasonable time. Good faith attempts to repair may be relevant to the issue of what constitutes a reasonable time. However, since UCC § 2-719(2) operates whenever a party is deprived of his contractual remedy, there is no need for the plaintiff to prove that the failure to repair was willful or negligent. Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

Where (1) seller and manufacturer, in their "New Equipment Warranty," expressly warranted that buyer of tractor would receive machine "free from defects in material and workmanship under normal use and service," but limited their liability, under UCC § 2-719(1)(a), for breach of such warranty to repair or replacement of parts shown to be defective within specified period, and (2) where defendants' warranty did not state time for performance of their repair-or-replacement obligation, court held that defendants, under UCC § 2-309(1), were obligated to repair or replace defective parts within reasonable time in order to prevent limited remedy from failing in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2). Clark v. International Harvester Co., 99 Idaho 326, 581 P.2d 784 (1978).

Where disclaimer contained in new car's warranty limited manufacturer's obligation to repair and replacement, but where, by delaying for unreasonable length of time repair of purchaser's vehicle, manufacturer deprived purchaser of "substantial value of the bargain," manufacturer's warranty was breached causing available remedy "to fail of its essential purpose" and, thus, purchaser was entitled to recover incidental and consequential damages from manufacturer's breach. Ehlers v. Chrysler Motor Corp., 88 S.D. 612, 226 N.W.2d 157 (1975).

Limited, exclusive remedy of replacement or repair of defective parts fails of its purpose and is thus avoided under Code § 2-719(2), whenever warrantor fails to correct defeat within reasonable period; and upon such failure recourse may be had to all remedial provisions of Code. Beal v. GMC, 354 F. Supp. 423 (D. Del. 1973).

12. —Defect not amenable to repair.

In buyer's action for breach of implied warranty of fitness of machine for boring tunnel in coal mine, where (1) seller warranted that machine would be free from defects in materials and workmanship, (2) such warranty was accompanied by disclaimer of all other warranties, express or implied, not set forth in writing signed by authorized representative of seller, (3) seller limited its liability for breach of warranty to repair or replacement of defective parts and also excluded all liability for consequential damages, (4) seller agreed to furnish a specialist to supervise installation and initial operation of machine, and (5) seller's offer to sell machine was accompanied by letter signed by seller's employee, who had no authority to make binding representations about machine, which stated that machine would bore at approximate rate of 2.5 feet per hour through hardest materials that buyer might expect to encounter in its mine, court held (1) that buyer accepted seller's offer by mailing purchase order to seller, (2) that by accepting such offer, buyer agreed to seller's terms on liability for breach of warranty, (3) that district court properly found that representation about machine's boring rate, which was contained in letter signed by employee of seller who was not authorized to make such representation, was not part of parties' agreement, since it was not set forth in document that parties intended to be final expression of their agreement within meaning of UCC § 2-202, (4) that as a result, there was no undertaking by seller that machine would bore at rate of 2.5 feet per hour, (5) that seller also had made no express undertaking to assemble machine properly on buyer's premises, since provision in contract which stated that seller would furnish specialist to supervise machine's initial assembly and operation was only intended to prevent wrongful assembly or operation by buyer's employees when not under control of seller's specialist, (6) that such undertaking also did not exist as an independent and separate obligation of seller because assembly of machine, whether at seller's plant or on buyer's premises, came under seller's workmanship warranty, (7) that seller's inability to repair defects in machine caused buyer's limited repair remedy to fail in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), (8) that although failure of its limited remedy to achieve its essential purpose made available to buyer all remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, this did not mean that consequential damages, which buyer stipulated were its only damages, could be recovered by buyer under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(a), and (9) that since contract had been made by parties of relatively equal bargaining power and liability for consequential damages had been assumed by buyer, mere fact that seller's efforts to repair machine had failed was not enough to require that seller absorb consequential-damage losses that buyer had plainly agreed to bear. S.M. Wilson & Co. v. Smith Int'l, Inc., 587 F.2d 1363 (9th Cir. Cal. 1978).

Remedial limitation clause contained within contract for manufacture, sale and delivery of railroad hopper cars, limiting manufacturer's liability to repair or replacement of defective parts, failed of its essential purpose and was therefore unenforceable where railroad cars were defective with respect to their structure and welding of certain crucial joints which precipitated serious cracking in underframe of cars, where manufacturer did not meet its obligation to repair or replace defective parts on railcars, and where railroad-buyer promptly notified manufacturer, pursuant to contract, of defects and afforded manufacturer opportunity to verify defects. Soo Line R.R. v. Fruehauf Corp., 547 F.2d 1365 (8th Cir. Minn. 1977).

In action by buyer of tube mill against seller for breach of warranty: (1) where seller's offer and buyer's acceptance contained conflicting provisions as to warranties, neither provision became part of contract, and UCC implied warranty of merchantability, § 2-314, was in effect; (2) as to limitation of damages clause in seller's offer, since there was no question that tube mill was grossly defective on delivery, not only did limitation of remedies provision fail of its essential purpose, but is application would be unconscionable; (3) notwithstanding facts that when resale price of machine was coupled with award of damages, buyer would receive more than purchase price of machine, damage award was not improper; (4) warranty of merchantability was breached by seller since tube mill was not fit for ordinary purpose of producing quality salable square tubing. Bosway Tube & Steel Corp. v. McKay Mach. Co., 65 Mich. App. 426, 237 N.W.2d 488 (1975).

In action between purchaser of outdoor signs and seller, seller's attempt to limit purchaser's remedy to replacement was ineffective since there was no agreement that such would be exclusive remedy and, additionally, any limited remedy failed of its essential purpose. Benco Plastics, Inc. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 387 F. Supp. 772 (E.D. Tenn. 1974).

13. —No failure of essential purpose.

In action by supplier of materials to recover payment therefor from contractor, limitation on contractor's remedies for breach of warranty—namely, that supplier would repair or replace defective parts and allow charges for repairs if they were authorized in writing by supplier—did not fail in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), on alleged ground that supplier had not given written authorization for certain repairs that contractor performed at job site, where jury by special verdict found that supplier had not wrongfully refused to authorize contractor to make repairs on any items of equipment that did not conform to contract description. Envirex, Inc. v. Ecological Recovery Assocs., 454 F. Supp. 1329 (M.D. Pa. 1978), aff'd, 601 F.2d 574 (3d Cir. Pa. 1979).

In buyer's suit against seller of refrigeration system installed on buyer's fishing boat for breach of warranty that system would be mechanically free of defects in materials and workmanship, where contract provided that seller's liability for breach of such warranty was limited to replacement of defective parts and that if seller did not replace defective parts within reasonable time, buyer's only remedy would be to rescind contract and to obtain refund of any part of purchase price that buyer had already paid, limited remedy afforded buyer under contract did not fail in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2), so as to make available to buyer general remedy provisions of Uniform Commercial Code, because system's defects were immediately apparent and not latent, and buyer could obtain refund of any part of purchase price already paid if seller did not replace defective parts within reasonable time. Marr Enters., Inc. v. Lewis Refrigeration Co., 556 F.2d 951 (9th Cir. Wash. 1977).

Claim by buyer of color television broadcasting equipment that contractual limitation of seller's liability to repair or replacement of defective equipment could not apply because limited remedy failed of its essential purpose was not supported by facts clearly showing that seller obeyed limitation by repairing and replacing items which buyer claimed were defective. Fredonia Broadcasting Corp. v. RCA Corp., 481 F.2d 781 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

There was no failure of essential purpose within UCC § 2-719(2) which would permit court to award plaintiff cost of car rental which was expressly excluded by terms of auto seller's written warranty.

Russo v. Hilltop Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 479 S.W.2d 211 (Mo. Ct. App. 1972).

Limited express warranty did not fail in its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2), where plaintiff admitted that on each and every occasion that a defect occurred, the same had been repaired; in absence of any evidence of willful failure or refusal to make repairs needed nor any allegation of dilatory, careless or negligent compliance with terms of limited express warranty, the limited warranty, as a matter of law, did not fail in its essential purpose. Lankford v. Rogers Ford Sales, 478 S.W.2d 248 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), ref. n.r.e. (July 26, 1972).

Warranty limitation to replacement or repair of defective parts was not unconscionable within UCC § 2-719(3), nor did it fail of its essential purpose within UCC § 2-719(2) so as to preclude its assertion by auto manufacturer or dealer where, during first 18 months of purchase of new automobile, it was in repair shop for 45 days for about 50 different defects. Lankford v. Rogers Ford Sales, 478 S.W.2d 248 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), ref. n.r.e. (July 26, 1972).

14. Limitation or exclusion of consequential damages.

Implied warranty of merchantability may not be waived or disclaimed in Mississippi as result of §§ 11-7-18 and 75-2-719(4). Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

A seller of farm machinery breached its new equipment warranty and the implied warranty of merchantability found in § 75-2-314(2)(c) where neither a new grain drill nor a used combine sold to the purchaser were fit for the ordinary purposes for which such goods were to be used; the seller also breached the implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose found in § 75-2-315 where the evidence established that the purchaser relied upon the skill of the seller's salesman who had explained to the purchaser all that he knew about farming and had assisted the purchaser in selecting the equipment that he would need in his initial farming operation. A new agricultural equipment warranty which warrants new agricultural equipment to be free of defects in material and workmanship at the time of delivery to the first retail purchaser encompasses the proposition that the equipment will be in "field ready" condition; "field ready" condition simply means that the equipment is ready to be used in the field and is consistent with the warranty that the machinery is free of defects in material and workmanship at the time of delivery. The seller's attempt to avoid any warranty, express or implied, in relation to used equipment sold to the purchaser was prohibited by § 75-2-719(14). Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Evans, 406 So. 2d 15 (Miss. 1981).

Language contained in contract between buyer and seller of accounting machine that seller's "obligation if the equipment does not meet these warranties is limited solely to correcting the defect or failure, without charge," did not apply to implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose; but even if it did, buyer's remedy of revocation was saved, since nothing short of effective right of revocation would satisfy essential purpose of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose where particular accounting machine delivered and installed by seller did not, and could not, solve buyer's problem of getting accurate payroll out on time, which was purpose for which it was purchased. NCR v. Adell Indus., Inc., 57 Mich. App. 413, 225 N.W.2d 785 (1975).

In action by buyer to recover for breach of contract for sale of computer core memories, limitation on consequential damages found in contract was valid, absent any evidence of unconscionability, under UCC § 2-714 and precluded recovery of damages for lost profits by buyer. Three-Seventy Leasing Corp. v. Ampex Corp., 528 F.2d 993 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976).

In connection with sale of electric power generating equipment, contract provisions governing warranties and remedies to effect that contract warranty was exclusive and in lieu of all other warranties whether written, oral or implied, including any warranty of merchantability or purpose, and that in no event, whether as result of breach of contract, alleged negligence, or otherwise, would seller be liable for damages for, inter alia, loss of profits, for cost of purchased or replacement power or for damages for loss of use of power system, was sufficient to insulate seller under UCC § 2-719(1)(a) and (3) from liability for claim for cost of replacement power and lost profits and from claims predicated upon breach of implied warranty. Ebasco Servs., Inc. v. Pennsylvania Power & Light Co., 402 F. Supp. 421 (E.D. Pa. 1975).

Clause in contract of sale for large electrical motor which provided that manufacturer of motor and its distributor would not be liable for indirect, special, consequential or liquidated damages or penalties whether in contract or in tort arising out of warranties, representations, instructions or defects from any cause in connection with sale of motor was effective express limitation on damages under UCC § 2-719 and, thus, barred purchaser of motor from recovering consequential damages against manufacturer or its distributor. Cyclops Corp. v. Home Ins. Co., 75 Ohio Op. 2d 269, 389 F. Supp. 476 (W.D. Pa. 1975), aff'd, 523 F.2d 1050 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975).

15. —Conscionability.

Although all limitations of remedies are not per se unconscionable under UCC 2-719(3), the seller has the burden of establishing the validity of any limitation. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

UCC § 2-719 generally leaves the seller free to limit remedies available for breach of warranty. However, the Uniform Commercial Code is stricter in allowing a limitation of remedies than it is in allowing an exclusion of warranties. Thus, UCC § 2-719(3) recognizes the validity of agreements that limit consequential damages, but any remedy limitations must be tested in terms of "unconscionability." Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

UCC § 2-719(3), by its use of word "unconscionable," incorporates standards set forth in UCC § 2-302(1) and (2), and finding of unconscionability was matter of law to be determined by court, without jury, although there might be taking of evidence under UCC § 2-302(2) as to contract's commercial setting, purpose, and effect. Monsanto Co. v. Alden Leeds, Inc., 130 N.J. Super. 245, 326 A.2d 90 (1974).

In action to recover balance due on contract for manufacture and delivery of cartons and carton sealing machine, contract term limiting buyer's remedies in event of seller's breach was upheld against claims of unconscionability under UCC § 2-302 and buyer's counter claim for consequential damages under UCC § 2-719(3) was denied where affirmative defense of unconscionability had not been pleaded. Rossotti Lithograph Corp. v. Townsend, 50 Pa. D. & C.2d 451 (1970).

16. —Conscionability; bargaining position.

In buyer's action for breach of implied warranty of fitness of machine for boring tunnel in coal mine, where (1) seller warranted that machine would be free from defects in materials and workmanship, (2) such warranty was accompanied by disclaimer of all other warranties, express or implied, not set forth in writing signed by authorized representative of seller, (3) seller limited its liability for breach of warranty to repair or replacement of defective parts and also excluded all liability for consequential damages, (4) seller agreed to furnish a specialist to supervise installation and initial operation of machine, and (5) seller's offer to sell machine was accompanied by letter signed by seller's employee, who had no authority to make binding representations about machine, which stated that machine would bore at approximate rate of 2.5 feet per hour through hardest materials that buyer might expect to encounter in its mine, court held (1) that buyer accepted seller's offer by mailing purchase order to seller, (2) that by accepting such offer, buyer agreed to seller's terms on liability for breach of warranty, (3) that district court properly found that representation about machine's boring rate, which was contained in letter signed by employee of seller who was not authorized to make such representation, was not part of parties' agreement, since it was not set forth in document that parties intended to be final expression of their agreement within meaning of UCC § 2-202, (4) that as a result, there was no undertaking by seller that machine would bore at rate of 2.5 feet per hour, (5) that seller also had made no express undertaking to assemble machine properly on buyer's premises, since provision in contract which stated that seller would furnish specialist to supervise machine's initial assembly and operation was only intended to prevent wrongful assembly or operation by buyer's employees when not under control of seller's specialist, (6) that such undertaking also did not exist as an independent and separate obligation of seller because assembly of machine, whether at seller's plant or on buyer's premises, came under seller's workmanship warranty, (7) that seller's inability to repair defects in machine caused buyer's limited repair remedy to fail in its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), (8) that although failure of its limited remedy to achieve its essential purpose made available to buyer all remedies provided by Uniform Commercial Code, this did not mean that consequential damages, which buyer stipulated were its only damages, could be recovered by buyer under UCC §§ 2-714(3) and 2-715(2)(a), and (9) that since contract had been made by parties of relatively equal bargaining power and liability for consequential damages had been assumed by buyer, mere fact that seller's efforts to repair machine had failed was not enough to require that seller absorb consequential-damage losses that buyer had plainly agreed to bear. S.M. Wilson & Co. v. Smith Int'l, Inc., 587 F.2d 1363 (9th Cir. Cal. 1978).

In action between contractor, as purchaser of structural steel, and manufacturer of steel, contract clause barring claims for damages for late delivery of steel unless delay was not excusable under contractor's prime contract or was not of type for which extension of time could be granted under that contract, and barring damages in either case unless delay in delivering steel was sole cause of delay for which contractor was assessed and paid damages under prime contract, was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-719(3) where essentially same provision had been included in prior contractual arrangements between parties, both parties were financially mature and knowledgeable, and contract was negotiated at arms length by parties standing on equal footing. Kansas City Structural Steel Co. v.

In action by seller of sectional steel plate against buyer for balance due under contract of sale, in which contract contained provision limiting seller's warranty liability for defective material to replacement or refund of purchase price at seller's option: (1) limitation of liability clause was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302, where contract was not made under circumstances involving oppression and unfair surprise, there was no great disparity of bargaining power between parties, and buyer was aware of at least one other company capable of supplying it with required plates; and (2) factual issue was presented on question of whether limitation of liability provision failed of its essential purpose within meaning of UCC § 2-719(2), where buyer alleged that plates delivered by seller did not conform to contractual respecifications in major respects, that defects could not be detected until construction had actually commenced, that seller failed to render adequate assistance when requested in that defective plates sent back to seller for corrective repairs were returned to buyer uncorrected, and that under these and totality of circumstances, refund of purchase price would have been totally inadequate remedy. Earl M. Jorgensen Co. v. Mark Constr., Inc., 56 Haw. 466, 540 P.2d 978 (1975).

In action arising when nitrogen liquefaction plant furnished by defendant was unable to perform satisfactorily and required numerous costly repairs, plaintiff was unable to recover its lost profits where contractual provision barring recovery of lost profits and located in warranty paragraph of contract was neither misleading, unclear, nor unconscionable under UCC § 2-719, particularly in view of expertise of negotiators and complete absence of any evidence of disparity of bargaining power. Cryogenic Equip., Inc. v. Southern Nitrogen, Inc., 490 F.2d 696 (8th Cir. Ark. 1974).

In action by soybean processor against installer of processing equipment for damages resulting from explosion at processor's plant: (1) lost profits sought by processor clearly fell within purview of contract provision purporting to bar recovery of consequential damages; (2) contractual exclusion of consequential damages would not be stricken as unconscionable where contract was entered into in commercial setting by parties of equal bargaining power, where there was total lack of type of oppression or unfair surprise which typified findings of unconscionability in consumer sphere, where parties had been engaged in business endeavors for over 20 years, and where exclusion of liability often had been part of prior agreements; (3) and thus, provision was enforceable limitation on remedies available to processor under its contract theories. Boone Valley Coop. Processing Ass'n v. French Oil Mill Mach. Co., 383 F. Supp. 606 (N.D. Iowa 1974).

Owners of corporate buyer were experienced attorney and businessman; held, provision of agreement for sale of dry cleaning machines which excluded liability of seller and manufacturer for consequential or special damages was not unconscionable. K & C, Inc. v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 437 Pa. 303, 263 A.2d 390 (1970).

17. —Conscionability; form of disclaimer.

Limitation of damages for breach of implied warranty of merchantability contained in sales agreement for purchase of equipment was not modification of warranty and could be effected without specific reference to merchantability. Orrox Corp. v. Rexnord, Inc., 389 F. Supp. 441 (M.D. Ala. 1975).

In action by purchaser of truck against seller for damages resulting from seller's failure to properly effectuate repairs in accordance with its warranty, where there was exclusionary clause contained in warranty, which stated in normal size print that seller was not liable for special or consequential damages, but where there were no discussions nor explicit negotiations between seller and buyer regarding limitations or disclaimers of liability and where clause was not conspicuous: (1) by its use of word "unconscionable," UCC § 2-719(3) conditions validity of exclusionary clause on one factor, the standards set forth in UCC § 2-302, and clause would be conscionable, in spite of lack of "negotiations" or its "inconspicuousness," if buyer and seller, through prior contracts had established consistently adhered to policy of excluding consequential damages, or if it was recognized practice within trade to exclude consequential damages; (2) issue of unconscionability presented question of law for court, not issue of fact for jury, and since exclusionary clauses in clearly commercial transactions were prima facie conscionable, burden of establishing that clause was unconscionable was upon seller. Schroeder v. Fageol Motors, Inc., 86 Wash. 2d 256, 544 P.2d 20 (1975).

Language contained in manufacturer's warranty providing that manufacturer disclaimed any obligation other than replacement of defective parts within period of 6 months was not effective under UCC § 2-719 to limit manufacturer's liability for negligent manufacturer of airplane sold to buyer where language relied on by manufacturer appeared in its own standard warranty provision, which was not signed by either party, appearing on unnumbered page after index in aircraft owner's manual, and which buyer may or may not have had copy of at time agreement was signed. Omni Flying Club, Inc. v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 366 Mass. 154, 315 N.E.2d 885 (1974).

To be effective, clause limiting remedies pursuant to UCC § 2-719 must be "by a writing and conspicuous," however, language in contract between buyer and seller of turbine generator was sufficiently conspicuous to bind buyer (and to exclude implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for purpose) where (1) limiting language was located on first page of contractual document titled "General Conditions"; (2) all of the type indicating such contractual conditions was large and readable (there was no fine print); (3) limiting language was simple, direct, and easily understood; (4) there was printed heading in capital letters which read: "Limitation of Liability"; (5) "person" against whom limiting language was to operate was prominent, sophisticated corporate entity. Avenell v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp., 41 Ohio App. 2d 150, 324 N.E.2d 583 (1974).

Exclusionary language of truck warranty prohibiting recovery of commercial losses was inconspicuous and unenforceable as matter of law. Gramling v. Baltz, 253 Ark. 352, 485 S.W.2d 183 (1972).

18. Conscionability; commercial loss.

In action for damages for sale of negligently manufactured film, (1) evidence was sufficient to support jury finding that at time of sale of film to plaintiff, trade usage existed, within meaning of UCC § 1-205(2), which limited commercial buyer's remedy to replacement of negligently manufactured film; (2) evidence also was sufficient to support finding that replacement of negligently manufactured film constituted plaintiff's sole remedy under UCC § 2-719(1)(b); (3) such limited remedy did not fail of its essential purpose under UCC § 2-719(2); and (4) such limited remedy also did not operate in unconscionable manner within meaning of UCC § 2-719(3) because it was reasonably adapted to general commercial background and needs of film industry. Posttape Assocs. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 450 F. Supp. 407 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

Limitation of consequential damages in commercial transaction wherein the purchase of semiconductors was involved and such limitation was long standing practice in the industry was not unconscionable. Architectural Aluminum Corp. v. Macarr, Inc., 70 Misc. 2d 495 (1972).

In commercial context, parties to contract of sale may agree to exclude liability for special or consequential damages; under such agreement, plaintiff-buyers were limited on breach of warranty claim to difference between purchase and resale prices. K. & C., Inc. v. Ald, Inc., 117 Pitts. Legal J. 396 (Pa. 1969).

19. —Conscionability; personal injury.

In action by buyer against seller and manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties attaching to tire that blew out and injured plaintiff, where plaintiff, who lacked sufficient evidence of tire's defect, contended that manufacturer's attempt in it as written guaranty to avoid liability for personal injuries was unconscionable under UCC 2-719(3), that such part of the guaranty should have been excised from the warranty agreement, and that the warranty agreement as thus excised should have been submitted to the jury, court, on agreeing with plaintiff's contention, held that nothing in record overcame clear unconscionability of limiting plaintiff's remedy, as defendant's warranty had attempted to do, to repair or replacement of tire in suit, and that on new trial of case, plaintiff should proceed only on theory of breach of express warranty. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-719(3), which provides that a limitation of consequential damages for an injury to the person in the case of consumer goods is prima facie unconscionable, the presumption of unconscionability arises from the simultaneous presence of three things: (1) a contract clause excluding consequential damages, (2) an accident caused by a consumer product, and (3) resulting personal injuries. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

The presumption of unconscionability created by UCC § 2-719(3) is not rebutted by a showing that there was no defect in the goods, since the absence of such a defect is irrelevant to the question of liability in an action for breach of warranty. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

Action for breach of contract of sale, to which four-year period of limitations prescribed by New York UCC § 2-725(1) applies, includes action for personal injuries arising from breach of warranty in view of provisions of (1) New York UCC § 2-318, which explicitly states that seller's warranty, whether express or implied, extends to any natural person who is injured in person by breach of the warranty, (2) New York UCC § 2-715(2)(b), which states that consequential damages resulting from seller's breach include injury to person or property proximately resulting from any breach of warranty, and (3) New York UCC § 2-719(3), which makes a limitation of consequential damages for injury to the person caused by consumer goods prima facie unconscionable. McCarthy v. Bristol Labs., 61 A.D.2d 196 (2d Dep't 1978).

Although contractual disclaimers limiting liability for personal injuries in sales of consumer goods are prima facie unconscionable under Texas UCC § 2-719(3), Texas has no similar rule with regard to sale of land (construing Texas law; action under Federal Tort Claims Act by purchaser of used home from federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) for injuries caused by clogged ventilation pipe in home's heating system). Graham v. United States, 441 F. Supp. 741 (N.D. Tex. 1977).

In action by buyers of automobile tires against seller and manufacturer for personal injuries allegedly resulting from blowout of tire, clause purporting to limit buyers' remedy solely to replacement tire and purporting to exclude liability for both personal injury and property damage was unconscionable under UCC § 2-719(3), in absence of any evidence to contrary, and was ineffective. McCarty v. E.J. Korvette, Inc., 28 Md. App. 421, 347 A.2d 253 (1975).

Where both manufacturer of new car and dealer had disclaimer clauses in their contracts with purchaser, which purportedly disclaimed all implied warranties, such disclaimer clauses did not violate provisions of UCC § 2-719(3), providing that limitation of consequential damages for injury to person in case of consumer goods is prima facie unconscionable. Ford Motor Co. v. Moulton, 511 S.W.2d 690 (Tenn. 1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 870, 95 S. Ct. 129, 42 L. Ed. 2d 109 (1974).

In action against tire manufacturer for breach of express warranty under UCC § 2-313 arising when tire failed and caused car to go out of control, contractual limitation of consequential damages to repair or replacement of tire was prima facie unconscionable under UCC § 2-719(3), notwithstanding fact that plaintiff suffered adverse verdict on strict liability theory. Collins v. Uniroyal, Inc., 126 N.J. Super. 401, 315 A.2d 30 (1973), aff'd, 64 N.J. 260, 315 A.2d 16 (1974).

If pleaded defense of disclaimer and/or limitation of warranty is intended to exclude plaintiff from recovering damages for personal injuries sustained when auto went out of control on day of purchase, such disclaimer and/or limitation is prima facie unconscionable in absence of factual evidence indicating that disclaimer and/or limitation is commercially reasonable and fair rather than oppressive and surprising, pleaded defense must be stricken as matter of law. Walsh v. Ford Motor Co., 59 Misc. 2d 241 (1969).

20. —Course of dealing or trade usage.

Disclaimer of consequential damages under truck warranty, although arguably inconspicuous in that it was buried in fine print in "owner book", and although it had not been a subject of negotiation, could have been held conscionable if either (1) seller had adhered to a consistent policy of excluding consequential damages, or (2) it was recognized trade practice to exclude such damages from warranties. Schroeder v. Fageol Motors, Inc., 86 Wash. 2d 256, 544 P.2d 20 (1975).

Provision on face of one page contract for sale of cabbage seed disclaiming warranties, express or implied, of merchantability and fitness for purpose and limiting seller's liability for breach of warranty or contract to purchase price of seeds, which was set off from other provisions on form and appeared in boldface print, was conspicuous within meaning of UCC § 1-201(10) and was effective to disclaim implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-316(2); given inherent element of risk present in all agricultural enterprises, clause limiting liability to purchase price of seeds was valid under UCC § 2-719 and was not unconscionable under UCC § 2-302; inasmuch as buyer was commercial farmer, he was subject to standards of marketplace wherein he sought to operate and would be bound by order form which he signed notwithstanding claim that he was illiterate. Billings v. Joseph Harris Co., 27 N.C. App. 689, 220 S.E.2d 361 (1975), review allowed, 289 N.C. 296, 222 S.E.2d 695 (1976), aff'd, 290 N.C. 502, 226 S.E.2d 321 (1976).

Cooperative marketing association that prepared grain purchase contracts was bound by provision therein to effect that damages, in case of default, would be determined by difference between contract price and market price of grain on March 30, notwithstanding price of grain had risen substantially by June 13, when farmer breached contracts; although contracts did not specifically provide that such damage provision was exclusive, provision would be interpreted as exclusive remedy in accord with UCC § 2-719(1)(b) since clause was designed to provide agreed method of computing loss in event of breach, in context it appeared clearly intended to be exclusive means of computing loss, and, in action against farmer, clause should be construed against its author, the marketing association; neither could it be said that contract provision had failed "of its essential purpose," and was therefore ineffective under UCC § 2-719(2), merely because it had become more onerous to one of the parties. Farmers Union Grain Term. Ass'n v. Nelson, 223 N.W.2d 494 (N.D. 1974).

Defaulting buyer's counterclaim for consequential damages flowing from seller's non-delivery of second knitting machine under contract for sale of 2 such machines should have been dismissed absolutely for failure to state a cause of action where express terms of contract, which buyer at all times affirmed by asserting seller's breach, absolved seller of any liability for consequential damages. Singer Co. v. Alka Knitting Mills, Inc., 41 A.D.2d 856 (2d Dep't 1973).

Provision in contract for sale of electronic accounting computer equipment which precluded buyer from recovering any incidental or consequential damages was not unusual limitation of damages, was common in this type of commercial agreement, and was not unconscionable. Bakal v. Burroughs Corp., 74 Misc. 2d 202 (1972).

21. —Fraud.

In action for breach of warranty and fraud on part of sellers in sale of bull, buyer's remedies were not limited under UCC § 719(1)(b) by paragraph in sales agreement which provided for buyers' remedy in event bull died, since (1) there was no provision that paragraph provided exclusive remedy and (2) contract clause limiting liability would not be applied in fraud action. Lamb v. Bangart, 525 P.2d 602 (Utah 1974).

Absent demonstration of bad faith, fraud, or wilful or wanton conduct by telephone company, contractual limitation of liability for errors and omissions in its "yellow pages" advertising to pro rata abatement of charge paid for such advertisement was reasonable and not against public policy; and it was within power of company and subscribers to its directory to make such contracts which become valid and binding limitations notwithstanding monopolistic quality of telephone utility company. State ex rel. Mt. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. District Court ex rel. Silver Bow, 160 Mont. 443, 503 P.2d 526 (1972).

22. —Latent defects.

Limitations of remedy to return of purchase price of soybean inoculant, contained in manufacturer's promotional brochure and stamped on inoculant packages, and provisions of manufacturer's contract with retailer limiting damages to return of purchase price of inoculant and requiring any claim to be filed with manufacturer within 120 days after receipt of allegedly defective innoculant were unconscionable, both as to buyer of product and as between retailer and manufacturer, within meaning of UCC §§ 2-719(3) and 2-302, where alleged defect was latent, manufacturer knew that effectiveness of product was questionable, and exclusion would have had effect of foreclosing any recovery by buyer, a farmer, for large and foreseeable consequential damages for crop failure. Majors v. Kalo Lab., Inc., 407 F. Supp. 20 (M.D. Ala. 1975).

When defect is not ordinarily discoverable until material has been processed, furnished to manufacturers, processed into materials, then manufactured into consumer goods, passed through the wholesale and retail trade into the hands of consumers, a clause within a sales agreement form limiting damage claims to the purchase price of the material is a remedy far below a bare minimum in quantum, and ineffective under Code § 2-719(2). Neville Chem. Co. v. Union Carbide Corp., 294 F. Supp. 649 (W.D. Pa. 1968), vacated on other grounds, 422 F.2d 1205 (3d Cir. Pa. 1970), cert. denied, 400 U.S. 826, 91 S. Ct. 51, 27 L. Ed. 2d 55 (1970).

Where a sales contract expressly creates an unlimited express warranty of merchantability which in a separate clause purports to indirectly modify the warranty without expressly mentioning the word merchantability, the language creating the unlimited express warranty must prevail over the time limitation insofar as the latter modifies the warranty, and the express warranty of merchantability includes latent shading defects and defendants may claim for such defects not reasonably discoverable within the time limits established by the contract if plaintiff was notified of these defects within a reasonable time after they were or should have been discovered. Wilson Trading Corp. v. David Ferguson, Ltd., 23 N.Y.2d 398, 244 N.E.2d 685 (1968).

23. —Negligence.

Use of words "consequential damages," in clause purporting to limit seller's liability for damages, referred to contract rather than tort damages and, thus, did not impose limitations on its liability for negligence. Berwind Corp. v. Litton Indus., Inc., 532 F.2d 1 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976).

There is no reason to read negligence exception into plain language of UCC § 2-719(3). Gates Rubber Co. v. USM Corp., 508 F.2d 603 (7th Cir. Ill. 1975).

24. Pleading.

In action to recover balance due on contract for manufacture and delivery of cartons and carton sealing machine, contract term limiting buyer's remedies in event of seller's breach was upheld against claims of unconscionability under UCC § 2-302 and buyer's counter claim for consequential damages under UCC § 2-719(3) was denied where affirmative defense of unconscionability had not been pleaded. Rossotti Lithograph Corp. v. Townsend, 50 Pa. D. & C.2d 451 (1970).

25. Evidence and burden of proof.

Although all limitations of remedies are not per se unconscionable under UCC 2-719(3), the seller has the burden of establishing the validity of any limitation. Tuttle v. Kelly-Springfield Tire Co., 585 P.2d 1116 (Okla. 1978).

In action by seller against buyer to recover purchase price of plastic parts, trial court did not err in granting partial summary judgment in favor of seller on buyer's cross action for recovery of "actual, incidental, and consequential damages," where contract provided that seller should not be liable for special or consequential damages; under UCC § 2-719 seller was entitled to summary judgment when it properly proved limitation provision of contract and buyer was under duty to come forward with some evidence raising fact issue on its unconscionability defense to enforcement of provision. Ganda, Inc. v. All Plastics Molding, Inc., 521 S.W.2d 940 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 24, 1975).

In action by buyer to recover damages allegedly resulting from operational failure of ice maker purchased from defendant, contract provisions limiting measure of damages recoverable by limiting buyer's remedies to return of goods and repayment of price or to repair and replacement of nonconforming goods or parts, permissible under UCC § 2-719, were admissible in evidence, not in bar of any recovery, or as defense to action, but to be considered in determining whether buyer was entitled to recover more than nominal damages. Kohlenberger, Inc. v. Tyson's Foods, Inc., 256 Ark. 584, 510 S.W.2d 555 (1974).

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

The Mississippi Department of Information Technology Services deals in computer hardware, software, and computer services and has knowledge or skill peculiar to such transactions and so is clearly a "merchant" within the meaning of the statute. Litchlitter, May 29, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0288.

Merchants can limit or disclaim implied warranties in offering computer hardware and computer software to the Mississippi Department of Information Technology Services (ITS) or other state agencies through ITS; however, ITS can make it a condition of any bid process or request for proposals or other offer to purchase that the computer hardware and software solicited carry the implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose or, indeed, any other standard it deems necessary and advisable. Litchlitter, May 29, 1998, A.G. Op. #98-0288.

§ 75-2-720. Effect of “cancellation” or “rescission” on claims for antecedent breach.

Unless the contrary intention clearly appears, expressions of “cancellation” or “rescission” of the contract or the like shall not be construed as a renunciation or discharge of any claim in damages for an antecedent breach.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

In action for breach of contract to construct mechanical loading platforms for use in distribution center building, letter sent to defendant after it became clear that defendant would not perform which cancelled contract “without charge” could not as matter of law amount to waiver or renunciation of claim arising out of breach under UCC §§ 1-107 and 2-720; under UCC § 1-205, meaning to be given phrase “without charge” would require consideration of any course of dealing between parties and any applicable trade usage. NCR v. UNARCO Indus., Inc., 490 F.2d 285 (7th Cir. Ill. 1974).

Plaintiff's acceptance of machines and continued use thereof after purported rejection of them as unsatisfactory did not under the particular circumstance that alternate equipment was not available bar claims for damages for alleged breach of warranty, and likewise did not bar claims for alleged fraudulent misrepresentation. However, where the only proof of fraud was contained in plaintiff's pleadings, and was rebutted by defendant's uncontradicted affidavits, the trial judge correctly granted summary judgment in favor of defendant on the fraud claims. Fablok Mills, Inc. v. Cocker Mach. & Foundry Co., 125 N.J. Super. 251, 310 A.2d 491 (App. Div. 1973), certification denied, 64 N.J. 317, 315 A.2d 405 (1973).

This section does not apply to a contract for the sale of the capital stock of a corporation and its subsidiaries which provided as a condition precedent to acceptance of the contract that the financial condition of such corporations at the time of closing should not be less favorable than the statements as of a given prior date, so as to permit the buyer, after acceptance, to recover damages by reason of the diminution in net worth of the corporations. In re Carter, 390 Pa. 365, 134 A.2d 908 (1957).

§ 75-2-721. Remedies for fraud.

Remedies for material misrepresentation or fraud include all remedies available under this chapter for nonfraudulent breach. Neither rescission or a claim for rescission of the contract for sale nor rejection or return of the goods shall bar or be deemed inconsistent with a claim for damages or other remedy.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

"Benefit of bargain" rule aids defrauded person by calculating damages not from contract price, although that is often used to estimate value in absence of other evidence, but from value of goods as represented. Crook Motor Co. v. Goolsby, 703 F. Supp. 511 (N.D. Miss. 1988).

Plaintiff who successfully proves fraud is entitled to traditional remedies under tort law, to rescind contract and be put in status quo by recovery of purchase price, and may also invoke provisions of UCC. Beck Enters., Inc. v. Hester, 512 So. 2d 672 (Miss. 1987).

UCC § 2-721, providing that remedies for material misrepresentation or fraud include all remedies available under Art 2 for nonfraudulent breach, permits full "benefit-of-the-bargain" recovery to a defrauded person who is subject to the statute's provisions. Stout v. Turney, 22 Cal. 3d 718, 586 P.2d 1228 (1978).

In action by buyer who successfully revoked sale of mare which was erroneously described in sales catalog, buyer was entitled to recover under UCC § 2-715 expenses of insuring, care, custody, and preservation of the mare, but was not entitled to damages for fraud under UCC § 2-721, since fraud was not proved by clear and convincing evidence. Keck v. Wacker, 413 F. Supp. 1377 (E.D. Ky. 1976).

Under UCC § 2-721 buyers of automobile were entitled to bring action both to rescind contract and to recover damages for fraud based on tortious conduct of seller in falsely representing car to be new one, thereby inducing buyer to enter into contract; although UCC makes no provision as to measure of damages, punitive damages could be recovered where breach was accompanied by fraudulent acts which were wanton, malicious and intentional. Z.D. Howard Co. v. Cartwright, 537 P.2d 345 (Okla. 1975).

Where buyer of used automobile sued seller for fraud, loss of use of personal vehicle was compensable; although UCC § 2-715(2) describes consequential damages in contract terminology ("reason to know") rather than in tort terminology ("natural and ordinary result"), Code does not require that "reason to know" formulation be applied in fraud suits to exclusion of other remedies, and right to consequential damages was presumably "remedy" within meaning of UCC § 2-721. Wagner v. Dan Unfug Motors, Inc., 35 Colo. App. 102, 529 P.2d 656 (1974).

In action for breach of warranty and fraud on part of sellers in sale of bull, buyer's remedies were not limited under UCC § 719(1)(b) by paragraph in sales agreement which provided for buyers' remedy in event bull died, since (1) there was no provision that paragraph provided exclusive remedy and (2) contract clause limiting liability would not be applied in fraud action. Lamb v. Bangart, 525 P.2d 602 (Utah 1974).

Under UCC § 2-721, recovery of damages for fraudulent misrepresentation in sale of horse was not barred where plaintiff also sought to rescind purchase contract, since two theories were no longer inconsistent. Toney v. Lambarth, 514 S.W.2d 106 (Mo. Ct. App. 1974).

In action in tort by buyer of used car against seller for alleged fraudulent misrepresentation, buyer claiming that he purchased automobile with understanding that it had never been wrecked when in fact it had, language of clause in sales agreement that "no other agreement, promise, or understanding of any kind pertaining to this purchase will be recognized" did not prevent buyer from claiming that he relied on seller's misrepresentation; although UCC § 2-202 was intended to allow sellers to prevent buyers from making false claims of oral warranties in contract actions, parol evidence of alleged misrepresentation was admissible on question of fraud and deceit since UCC does not preclude action in tort based upon fraudulent misrepresentation and such action could not be controlled by

Plaintiff was entitled to recover exemplary damages in action on contract for home improvements which was allegedly procured by fraud and deceit based on false representations. F.N. Roberts Pest Control Co. v. McDonald, 132 Ga. App. 257, 208 S.E.2d 13 (1974).

Plaintiff's acceptance of machines and continued use thereof after purported rejection of them as unsatisfactory did not under the particular circumstance that alternate equipment was not available bar claims for damages for alleged breach of warranty, and likewise did not bar claims for alleged fraudulent misrepresentation. However, where the only proof of fraud was contained in plaintiff's pleadings, and was rebutted by defendant's uncontradicted affidavits, the trial judge correctly granted summary judgment in favor of defendant on the fraud claims. Fablok Mills, Inc. v. Cocker Mach. & Foundry Co., 125 N.J. Super. 251, 310 A.2d 491 (App. Div. 1973), certification denied, 64 N.J. 317, 315 A.2d 405 (1973).

By making damages available in an action for rescission of contract this section does not otherwise change the traditional theory of election of remedies. Associated Hdwe. Supply Co. v. Big Wheel Distrib. Co., 355 F.2d 114, 17 A.L.R.3d 998 (3d Cir. Pa. 1965).

The court was not called upon to interpret this section where, under the evidence, failure of plaintiffs who had purchased bus line to achieve anticipated profits could be attributed to causes other than the defendants' misrepresentations as to the number of fares the buses would carry daily, and the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover for alleged loss of profits upon rescission of the sales contract. Myers v. Rubin, 399 Pa. 363, 160 A.2d 559 (1960).

§ 75-2-722. Who can sue third parties for injury to goods.

Where a third party so deals with goods which have been identified to a contract for sale as to cause actionable injury to a party to that contract

(a) a right of action against the third party is in either party to the contract for sale who has title to or a security interest or a special property or an insurable interest in the goods; and if the goods have been destroyed or converted a right of action is also in the party who either bore the risk of loss under the contract for sale or has since the injury assumed that risk as against the other;

(b) if at the time of the injury the party plaintiff did not bear the risk of loss as against the other party to the contract for sale and there is no arrangement between them for disposition of the recovery, his suit or settlement is, subject to his own interest, as a fiduciary for the other party to the contract;

(c) either party may with the consent of the other sue for the benefit of whom it may concern.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Plaintiff, buyer of beef from defendant packing company, was not entitled to recover from packer for breach of implied warranty of merchantability under UCC § 2-314, following buyer's receipt of partially spoiled beef, where plaintiff prosecuted claim against carrier and breached its fiduciary duty under UCC § 2-722 by settling claim against carrier without consulting seller, where plaintiff failed to make sufficient proof of seller's fault in defective shipment, and where, even if seller had been at fault, plaintiff failed to apportion fault between carrier and seller with sufficient certainty to support judgment against seller. Greisler Bros. v. Packerland Packing Co., 392 F. Supp. 206 (E.D. Wis. 1975).

One who obtained special property and insurable interest in compressor by bill of sale is authorized to bring suit for injury to compressor predicated on negligent fire destruction by third party. National Compressor Corp. v. Carrow, 417 F.2d 97 (8th Cir. Mo. 1969).

Seller was not precluded from recovering price of lost shipment from buyer because seller has pressed damage claim against carrier; any recovery by seller from carrier would be held by it subject to its own interest as fiduciary for buyer.

Ninth St. E., Ltd. v. Harrison, 5 Conn. Cir. Ct. 597, 259 A.2d 772 (1968).

Buyer has special property interest in tractor within Code § 2-501, where he was shown tractor on seller's store premises and told that it was buyers, even though, at that time, tractor did not conform to sales contract provision for cab; where such property interest was free and clear of security interest of seller's reposessor, action for damages may be maintained by buyer against reposessor under Code § 2-722. Draper v. Minneapolis-Moline, Inc., 100 Ill. App. 2d 324, 241 N.E.2d 342 (3d Dist. 1968).

The fact that the risk of loss has passed to the buyer does not prevent suit by the seller against a third person causing the damage to the goods to which the contract relates. Leist v. Schattie, 197 Pa. Super. 456, 179 A.2d 277 (1962).

§ 75-2-723. Proof of market price; time and place.

(1) If an action based on anticipatory repudiation comes to trial before the time for performance with respect to some or all of the goods, any damages based on market price (Section 2-708 or Section 2-713) [Sections 75-2-708 or 75-2-713] shall be determined according to the price of such goods prevailing at the time when the aggrieved party learned of the repudiation.

(2) If evidence of a price prevailing at the times or places described in this chapter is not readily available the price prevailing within any reasonable time before or after the time described or at any other place which in commercial judgment or under usage of trade would serve as a reasonable substitute for the one described may be used, making any proper allowance for the cost of transporting the goods to or from such other place.

(3) Evidence of a relevant price prevailing at a time or place other than the one described in this chapter offered by one party is not admissible unless and until he has given the other party such notice as the court finds sufficient to prevent unfair surprise.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

1. In general.

Seller's assignee, in suit for deficiency judgment following sale of repossessed collateral, was properly denied recovery where evidence showed (1) that assignee did not sell collateral in commercially reasonable manner required by UCC § 9-504(3), (2) that debtor was not notified of sale, and (3) that assignee's sole witness did not know how sale had been conducted, or whether numerous bids had been solicited in order to get best price obtainable for collateral, or what market value of collateral was at time of sale. In such case, which was tried without a jury, since trial court was deprived of knowledge of amount that assignee should have realized from commercially reasonable sale and no evidence was introduced as to collateral's market value, trial court under UCC § 2-723(2) could look to market value of collateral on date of its purchase by debtor and reasonably view such value as continuing until sale of collateral, with result that no deficiency was owed by debtor to assignee. Aetna Fin. Co. v. Ables, 559 S.W.2d 139 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

and, thus, testimony of employee as to value of used car based on "Red Book" valuation was not admissible under UCC § 2-724. Rowe Auto & Trailer Sales, Inc. v. King, 257 Ark. 484, 517 S.W.2d 946 (1975).

§ 75-2-725. Statute of limitations in contracts for sale.

(1) An action for breach of any contract for sale must be commenced within six (6) years after the cause of action has accrued.

(2) A cause of action accrues when the breach occurs, regardless of the aggrieved party's lack of knowledge of the breach. A breach of warranty occurs when tender of delivery is made, except that where a warranty explicitly extends to future performance of the goods and discovery of the breach must await the time of such performance the cause of action accrues when the breach is or should have been discovered.

(3) Where an action commenced within the time limited by subsection (1) is so terminated as to leave available a remedy by another action for the same breach such other action may be commenced after the expiration of the time limited and within six (6) months after the termination of the first action unless the termination resulted from voluntary discontinuance or from dismissal for failure or neglect to prosecute.

(4) This section does not alter the law on tolling of the statute of limitations nor does it apply to causes of action which have accrued before this code becomes effective.

1. In general.

In breach of warranty action to recover damages for defects in roof of plaintiff's new steel plant, where evidence showed (1) that defendant had manufactured and sold insulation and components of roof membrane to plaintiff, and (2) that defendant had also recommended specifications for, and design of, roof and had performed certain inspection services, court held (1) that statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) was inapplicable because action involved dispute over construction contract instead of contract that provided only for sale of raw materials for roof, (2) that even if UCC § 2-725(1) did apply to action, its four-year limitation period would bar plaintiff's breach of warranty claim, since language in defendant's advertising literature concerning built-up roofs did not amount to warranty that explicitly extended to future performance within meaning of future-warranty exception contained in UCC § 2-725(2), on which plaintiff relied, and (3) that defendant knew of plaintiff's expectations concerning roof and also that plaintiff might have relied on defendant's design expertise did not transform representations in defendant's advertising literature, which discussed present characteristics of its roofing materials and their successful use in other roofs, into explicit warranties of future performance (applying Illinois law; holding that plaintiff was relegated to its common-law remedies for breach of contract). Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 453 F. Supp. 527 (W.D. Pa. 1978), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 626 F.2d 280 (3d Cir. Pa. 1980).

In action by buyer of computer system for damages for system's failure to function properly, court held (1) that parties' designation under UCC § 1-105(1) of Massachusetts law to govern their sales contract was immaterial, since buyer's breach-of-contract claims were governed by limitation period contained in UCC § 2-725(1), which had been adopted by both New York and Massachusetts; (2) that contract in suit was not one for performance of services, as alleged by buyer, but was one for purchase of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); (3) that action was not timely commenced by buyer, since breach had occurred in January, 1971 and buyer did not commence suit until August 14, 1975, which was more than four years after cause of action accrued; (4) that UCC § 2-725(2), which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance and provides that discovery of breach must await such performance, did not apply, since warranty under UCC § 2-725(2) must expressly refer to the future and implied warranty alleged by buyer, by its very nature, did not do so; and (5) that seller's attempts to repair computer system did not toll running of statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1), providing that action for breach of contract of sale must be commenced within six years after cause of action accrued, applies to cause of action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose attaching to color television set. Maly v. Magnavox Co., 460 F. Supp. 47 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Four-year limitation period in District of Columbia UCC § 2-725(1) applies to actions involving sales contracts which are brought by the United States under District of Columbia UCC law. United States v. Framen Steel Supply Co., 435 F. Supp. 681 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

This section, as enacted in Pennsylvania, makes no distinction between sealed and unsealed instruments, and provides a four-year statute of limitations for "any contract for sale." Associates Disct. Corp. v. Palmer, 47 N.J. 183, 219 A.2d 858 (1966).

2. Substantive or procedural nature of provision.

Limitations statute for breach of contracts for sale under this section as enacted in Pennsylvania is procedural and not substantive. Natale v. Upjohn Co., 356 F.2d 590 (3d Cir. Del. 1966).

An action for breach of warranty, express or implied, existed in Pennsylvania long before the adoption of the Uniform Commercial Code, and the Code did not create a new cause of action for the statute of limitations contained in the Code as adopted in that state is not a part of a substantive right. Lewis v. Food Mach. & Chem. Corp., John Bean Div., 245 F. Supp. 195 (W.D. Mich. 1965).

3. Distinction between oral and written contract.

Action for price of goods, wares and merchandise sold and delivered to buyer on open account was not time barred by the general statute of limitations of three years for oral contracts even though the purchases were incurred more than three but less than five years prior to filing of action, since, under UCC § 10-102 and 2-102, the five-year period of limitations of UCC § 2-725 superseded the pre-existing general statute and abrogated distinctions between oral and written sales contracts for purposes of statutes of limitations. Sesow v. Swearingen, 552 P.2d 705 (Okla. 1976).

In action to recover for gasoline purchased under retail dealer's contract, trial court erred in entering summary judgment for buyers on ground that action was barred by two-year statute of limitations relating to actions on contracts, obligations or liabilities not founded on instrument in writing; action, being one for price due seller, was governed by provisions of UCC § 2-725(1), even if sales contract was oral. Hachten v. Stewart, 42 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 1 (App. Dep't Super. 1974).

4. Applicability to particular types of actions.

Action for wrongful death arising out of crash of helicopter manufactured by defendant based on breach of express and implied warranties was governed by 4-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725. Quadrini v. Sikorsky Aircraft Div., United Aircraft Corp., 425 F. Supp. 81 (D. Conn. 1977), on reconsideration, 505 F. Supp. 1049 (D. Conn. 1981).

Count of complaint which asserted that plaintiff relied to its ultimate damage on defendant's fraudulent representations as to capabilities of computer system which plaintiff purchased to replace existing system clearly alleged fraud in the inducement, a cause of action governed by 6-year limitation period; counts alleging misrepresentations and concealments made after execution of the contract did not state claims separate from the breach of contract cause of action, and were governed by the 4-year limitation period applicable to contract actions. Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In personal injury action based on breach of warranty attaching to boiler manufactured by defendant which, after having been sold by defendant to third person in 1962 and resold by such person in 1964 to plaintiff's employer, exploded and injured plaintiff in May, 1967, two-year statute of limitations for personal injuries, instead of four-year statute prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) for breach of contract, applied and barred plaintiff's claim, since UCC § 2-725(1) does not, under any construction, apply to third-party personal injuries caused by defective product. Salvador v. Atlantic Steel Boiler Co., 256 Pa. Super. 330, 389 A.2d 1148 (1978).

In action for personal injuries sustained from breach of implied warranty in sale of intrauterine device, applicable statute of limitations was four-year statute prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) for breach of contract of sale and not the non-UCC, two-year statute of limitations prescribed for personal injuries generally. Branden v. Gerbie, 62 Ill. App. 3d 138, 379 N.E.2d 7 (1st Dist. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-802(1)(b), the holder of a note taken for an underlying contract has a choice of remedies: he can sue on the note itself or on the underlying contract (action on note in which court held that since UCC Article 3 has no statute of limitations, six-year period of limitations applicable to actions on an express or implied obligation applied, instead of four-year statute contained in UCC § 2-725(1)). O'Neill v. Steppat, 270 N.W.2d 375 (S.D. 1978).

Contract for sale of trucks was not contract for sale of goods and, thus, was not governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1) where contract was executed simultaneously with contract for sale of truck manufacturing plant and where contract for sale of trucks was merely incidental and collateral to main object of effecting transfer of truck manufacturing plant. Dynamics Corp. of Am. v. International Harvester Co., 429 F. Supp. 341 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

Non-UCC statute of limitations applicable to actions for injuries arising from construction of any improvement to real property, and not statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1), applied to action for breach of implied warranty that house built by defendant was constructed in reasonably workmanlike manner and was fit for habitation, since house was not personalty but was improvement to real property within meaning of non-UCC statute of limitations. Sponseller v. Meltebeke, 280 Or. 361, 570 P.2d 974 (1977).

Plaintiff who contracted to compile, edit and publish pamphlets and other printed materials for defendants was entitled to benefit of four year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725, since printed pamphlets and related materials were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1) and since UCC statute of limitations prevailed over general statute of limitations in action based on contract for sale of goods. Lake Wales Publishing Co. v. Florida Visitor, Inc., 335 So. 2d 335 (Fla. App. 1976).

Action by purchaser of floor tiles for breach of implied warranties was governed not by UCC § 7-725, but by state's 3-year limitation period applicable to actions for injury to property; action accrued when purchaser discovered or reasonably should have had knowledge of defect. Southgate Community Sch. Dist. v. West Side Constr. Co., 399 Mich. 72, 247 N.W.2d 884 (1976).

Action by Michigan buyer against Ohio seller for breach of express and implied warranties, arising out of sale of diseased fish, seeking damages for loss of income and loss of business reputation, was governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725. Roundhouse v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 405 F. Supp. 868 (W.D. Mich. 1975).

Six-year limitation period relating to contracts in general, rather than more restrictive four-year statute of limitations specified in UCC, applied to action for breach of implied warranties or merchantability and fitness for use in connection with rental of scaffold. Owens v. Patent Scaffolding Co., 50 A.D.2d 866 (2d Dep't 1975).

In action by purchasers of new homes against contractor who built homes and seller of bricks used therein for damages resulting from defective brick: (1) contracts between purchasers and contractor did not provide for "sale" as that term is used in UCC Article 2 and, thus, were not governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in § 2-725, but rather by general six-year limitations for breach of contract; (2) conversely, only relationship between purchasers and seller of bricks was that of buyers and seller, which was governed by UCC Article 2, and, since more than four years passed between respective purchases from seller and alleged breach of warranty, action was barred. DeMatteo v. White, 233 Pa. Super. 339, 336 A.2d 355 (1975).

In action by seller to recover purchase price of goods under contract which provided, among other things, that payment would be evidenced by trade acceptances executed by buyer and, further, that defendant guaranteed buyer's full performance, where buyer, upon receipt of goods, executed trade acceptances to which defendant was not a party, and where buyer defaulted on trade acceptances and goods were never paid for, defendant's liability under contract was limited to 4 years under UCC § 2-725(1) rather than by 6 year limitation applicable to trade acceptances. American Trading Co. v. Fish, 78 Misc. 2d 210 (1974), aff'd, 50 A.D.2d 764, 376 N.Y.S.2d 1014 (1975), leave to appeal granted in part, dismissed in part, 39 N.Y.2d 987, 387 N.Y.S.2d 234, 355 N.E.2d 289 (1976), rev'd, 42 N.Y.2d 20, 396 N.Y.S.2d 617, 364 N.E.2d 1309 (1977).

Four-year limitation provision of UCC § 2-725 was applicable to action brought by seller of three air conditioner compressors against purchaser for unpaid balance due. Big D Serv. Co. v. Climatrol Indus., Inc., 514 S.W.2d 148 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ refused, 523 S.W.2d 236 (Tex. 1975).

In action against manufacturer of birth control pills and association from whom pills were purchased arising when plaintiff suffered stroke, lack of privity between plaintiff and manufacturer under UCC § 2-318 was of no consequence and 4 year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725 governed; birth control association which gave advice and dispensed birth control pills was engaged in sale of goods as required by Code and plaintiff's failure to allege that pills did not prevent contraception would not bar recovery on theory of breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose under UCC § 2-315; however, under UCC § 2-607(3)(a), plaintiff was required to notify association of alleged breach of implied warranty. Berry v. G.D. Searle & Co., 56 Ill. 2d 548, 309 N.E.2d 550, 70 A.L.R.3d 304 (1974).

Action for breach of warranty of good title relative to contract for sale of ball bearings and other automotive equipment was within 4-year limitation provision of UCC, but fraud action arising out of alleged false representations in regard to title was governed by 5-year limit of Limitations Act. Best Bearings, Inc. v. Challenger Parts Rebuilders, Inc., 10 Ill. App. 3d 404, 294 N.E.2d 118 (2d Dist. 1973).

Action for breach of implied warranty in sale of goods by written contract is governed by 4-year statute of limitations since this statute relates to specific subject matter of sales, unlike general statutes of limitations dealing with actions for injuries to person or property. Val Decker Packing Co. v. Corn Prods. Sales Co., 23 Ohio Misc. 162, 411 F.2d 850 (6th Cir. Ohio 1969).

The Pennsylvania Motor Vehicles Sales Financing Act contains no statute of limitations which might conflict with this section as enacted in that state, and Pennsylvania courts have applied the provisions of both laws together when deciding cases involving motor vehicle sales. Associates Dist. Corp. v. Palmer, 47 N.J. 183, 219 A.2d 858 (1966).

5. —Actions against manufacturer who is not seller.

Plaintiff, the subpurchaser of a defective used crane, may not recover its economic loss resulting from the inability to make use of the defective crane from defendant, the manufacturer of the crane, under the theory of breach of warranty since there is no contractual relationship between the parties and therefore no warranty either express or implied under the Uniform Commercial Code; the extended protection of warranty to persons who may reasonably be expected to use, consume or be affected by goods, is afforded only to natural persons who suffer personal injuries (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-318) or to subpurchasers who justifiably relied upon representations made by the manufacturer to the public through advertising and in labels tagged to the goods themselves (see Randy Knitwear v. American Cyanamid Co., 11 NY2d 5) a plaintiff, which purchased the crane "as is", assumed risks based on the prior use of the crane and cannot show justifiable reliance and, in any event, since the crane was delivered to the initial purchaser in 1970, the action based on breach of warranty is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Steckmar Nat'l Realty & Inv. Corp. v. JI Case Co., 99 Misc. 2d 212 (1979).

In action commenced more than three years from date of accident by purchasers of new automobile against vehicle's manufacturer, manufacturer of tires with which vehicle was equipped, and seller of vehicle for injuries sustained from blowout of front tire, two-year statute of limitations governing suits for personal injuries applied (instead of four-year statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725 for breach of contract of sale) and barred maintenance of such action against defendant vehicle manufacturer and defendant tire manufacturer, since UCC § 2-725 applies only to situations involving buyer-seller relationship (as distinguished from noncontractual warranty actions against manufacturers) and no buyer-seller relationship existed between plaintiffs and defendant manufacturers. Plouffe v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 118 R.I. 288, 373 A.2d 492 (1977).

UCC § 2-725 does not govern action for breach of manufacturer's obligations to third-party beneficiary where manufacturer was not seller of allegedly defective product causing injury. Kelly v. Ford Motor Co., 110 R.I. 83, 290 A.2d 607 (1972).

6. —Actions involving personal services.

Four-year limitation period in UCC § 2-725(1) applies to contracts for sale of goods and not to contracts for furnishing of services. Shead v. Grissett, 566 S.W.2d 318 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

Defendant auto dealer, which improperly applied a manufacturer's rustproofing material to plaintiff's automobile resulting in rust damage, is liable to the plaintiff for consequential damages, i.e., the cost of repairing his car, since the application of the rustproofing material was a contract between the plaintiff and defendant which the defendant breached by improper application and inadequate inspection and the defendant cannot claim as a defense the terms of section 2-719 of the Uniform Commercial Code that limits a buyer's remedies to the return of the goods and repayment of the price since the contract is for services and not a sales contract and for the same reason the four-year Statute of Limitations under section 2-725 of the Uniform Commercial Code is not applicable but rather the six-year Statute of Limitations under CPLR 213. Perlmutter v. Don's Ford, Inc., 96 Misc. 2d 719 (1978).

In hospital's suit against decedent's heirs for disposing of property inherited from decedent without first paying hospital's bill for services rendered to decedent before her death, two-year period of limitations, instead of four-year period prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1), applied since essence of plaintiff's claim was furnishing of healing services and not sale of medicines. Potts v. W.Q. Richards Mem. Hosp., 558 S.W.2d 939 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Where contract for purchase and installation of prefabricated overhead doors charged lump sum for equipment and installation making it a nondivisible mixed contract, contract was for sale of goods as defined in UCC § 2-105 as service element did not dominate subject matter even though overhead doors were useless without performance of installation services; thus UCC statute of limitations governed. Meyers v. Henderson Constr. Co., 147 N.J. Super. 77, 370 A.2d 547 (L. Div. 1977).

Sod, trees and shrubs sold by nurseryman were goods within meaning of UCC § 2-105(1); thus, contract for sale and installation of trees and shrubs and sale and placing of substantial amount of sod was contract for sale of goods governed by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1), notwithstanding contract in question also involved rendering of substantial amount of services. Burton v. Artery Co., 279 Md. 94, 367 A.2d 935 (1977).

Where design services which steel supplier provided under contract were incidental to basic purpose of contract, which was provision of structural steel to be used in construction of container handling facility, essence of transaction was sale of goods and supplier's action for breach of contract was barred by 4-year statute of limitations of UCC § 2-725; fact that specially designed product to fulfill needs of project was required did not negate characterization of transaction as sale of goods. Belmont Indus., Inc. v. Bechtel Corp., 425 F. Supp. 524 (E.D. Pa. 1976).

Action by funeral parlor to recover payment for funeral was not barred by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725; essence of contractual relationship between plaintiff and defendant was one in which service predominated, furnishing of casket was but incidental feature of transaction, and, thus, transaction was not "sale" within ambit of UCC, but one for services. Joseph P. Suchy, Inc. v. Stuerzel, 82 Misc. 2d 40 (1975).

UCC four year statute of limitations for sale of goods bars action brought by former franchise holder alleging automobile manufacturer's alleged breach of contractual obligation to repurchase unused and undamaged parts held by plaintiff at termination of franchise; six year statute of limitations for personal service contract, inapplicable. Campana Pontiac, Inc. v. GMC, 46 Pa. D. & C.2d 486 (1969).

7. —Action on open account.

Action on open account against buyers of health foods purchased for resale was subject to six-year period of limitations prescribed by Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1), instead of three-year period fixed by non-UCC statute for actions on open account or account stated (holding that buyers were neither farmers nor consumers of health foods purchased, so as to be exempt from six-year limitation period prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1)). Hughes v. Collegedale Distribs., 355 So. 2d 79 (Miss. 1978).

Action by wholesale grocer against customer to recover for groceries purchased on open account was governed by four-year statute of limitations, UCC § 2-725. Kinsey v. Hubby-Reese Co., 530 S.W.2d 846 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Four-year limitation period provided for by Code § 2-725 is applicable to suit arising out of sales on open account. Ideal Bldrs. Hdwe. Co. v. Cross Constr. Co., 491 S.W.2d 228 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

8. —Causes of action which predate adoption of UCC.

UCC's four year limitations statute does not apply to breach of warranty action where sale occurred prior to Code's effective date. Mendel v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 25 N.Y.2d 340, 253 N.E.2d 207 (1969), reargument denied, 26 N.Y.2d 751 (1970), but see, Victorson v. Bock Laundry Mach. Co., 37 N.Y.2d 395, 373 N.Y.S.2d 39, 335 N.E.2d 275 (1975).

Code § 2-725 which sets forth limitations for commencement of actions for breach of contracts for sales governed by UCC was not applicable to action for injuries resulting when drive shaft of construction elevator broke and caused elevator to fall, because Code became effective after sale of elevator in question. Hager v. Brewer Equip. Co., 17 N.C. App. 489, 195 S.E.2d 54, 57 A.L.R.3d 861 (1973).

Breach of warranty action accrued at time defendant sold allegedly defective soy beans to plaintiffs, which was prior to effective date of UCC, so that 4 year statute of limitations provided for in § 2-725 was not applicable. Hall v. Gurley Milling Co., 347 F. Supp. 13 (E.D.N.C. 1972).

It was within the discretion of the Ohio legislature to reduce the limitation period for the bringing of an action for breach of warranty on a contract executed prior to July 1, 1962 as to which the breach occurred after July 1, 1962 from fifteen to four years. Ohio Brass Co. v. Allied Prods. Corp., 64 Ohio Op. 2d 303, 339 F. Supp. 417 (N.D. Ohio 1972).

Cause of action for breach of warranty was governed by UCC even though contract for sale was entered into prior to effective date of UCC, where delivery occurred subsequent to effective date, and accrual of cause of action was a time no earlier than commencement of delivery and no later than conclusion of delivery. Ohio Brass Co. v. Allied Prods. Corp., 64 Ohio Op. 2d 303, 339 F. Supp. 417 (N.D. Ohio 1972).

Third-party action which automobile dealer brought against manufacturer on theories of strict liability in tort and implied warranty for judgment recovered against it in main action arising out of accident allegedly caused by defect in automobile were subject to the six year statute of limitations from the date of the original sale of the automobile unless the evidence showed that the sale was made on or after September 26, 1964, in which event the four year statute of limitations would apply. Ibach v. Grant Donaldson Serv., Inc., 38 A.D.2d 39 (4th Dep't 1971).

The limitation period contained in this section is inapplicable to transaction occurring prior to the date upon which the Uniform Commercial Code took effect. Mendel v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 57 Misc. 2d 45 (1967), aff'd, 29 A.D.2d 918, 290 N.Y.S.2d 186 (4 Dep't 1968), aff'd, 25 N.Y.2d 340, 305 N.Y.S.2d 490, 253 N.E.2d 207 (1969), reargument denied, 26 N.Y.2d 751, 309 N.Y.S.2d 1031 (1970).

The statute of limitations of the Code does not apply to events occurring before the effective date of the Code. Konar v. Monro Muffler Shops, Inc., 28 A.D.2d 642 (4th Dep't 1967).

Code statute of limitations is inapplicable to complaint alleging injury prior to effective date of Code. Raskin v. Shulton, Inc., 92 N.J. Super. 315, 223 A.2d 284 (App. Div. 1966).

9. —Charge card transactions.

Action by credit card issuer against card holder to recover balance due on holder's account was governed by 10 year limitation applicable to written contracts, including promises to pay money, and was not barred by UCC § 2-725, the 4-year statute of limitations governing contracts for sale of goods. Harris Trust & Sav. Bank v. McCray, 21 Ill. App. 3d 605, 316 N.E.2d 209, 2 A.L.R.4th 671 (1st Dist. 1974).

UCC four year statute of limitations for sale of goods applies to bar action brought by store for price of items purchased by customer on charge account; six year statute of limitations on action to collect debt, inapplicable. Gimbel Bros. v. Cohen, 46 Pa. D. & C.2d 747 (1969).

10. —Personal injury actions based on breach of warranty.

Prescriptive periods applicable to claims brought by statutory heirs arising from alleged wrongful death of decedent were not tolled during pendency of prior wrongful death actions, inasmuch as wrongful death statute did not operate to bar any other action unless matter was decided on its merits, and in further view of fact that plaintiffs were active in state court litigation involving same subject matter before the court; plaintiffs' active involvement in state court action and their filing of prior lawsuit in federal court absolutely destroyed their argument that they were prohibited by law from bringing suit, furthermore, their participation in such earlier lawsuits negated any suspension of limitation period applicable under state law. Brown v. Dow Chem. Co., 777 F. Supp. 504 (S.D. Miss. 1989).

An action for breach of a contract of sale, as provided for in section 2-725 of the Uniform Commercial Code, includes an action for personal injury arising from a breach of warranty. McCarthy v. Bristol Labs., 61 A.D.2d 196 (2d Dep't 1978).

The special Statute of Limitations of four years in section 2-725 of the Uniform Commercial Code governing actions for breach of a contract of sale, where applicable, supplants the general Statute of Limitations of three years for personal injury actions in CPLR 214 (subd 5). McCarthy v. Bristol Labs., 61 A.D.2d 196 (2d Dep't 1978).

Action for breach of contract of sale, to which four-year period of limitations prescribed by New York UCC § 2-725(1) applies, includes action for personal injuries arising from breach of warranty in view of provisions of (1) New York UCC § 2-318, which explicitly states that seller's warranty, whether express or implied, extends to any natural person who is injured in person by breach of the warranty, (2) New York UCC § 2-715(2)(b), which states that consequential damages resulting from seller's breach include injury to person or property proximately resulting from any breach of warranty, and (3) New York UCC § 2-719(3), which makes a limitation of consequential damages for injury to the person caused by consumer goods prima facie unconscionable. McCarthy v. Bristol Labs., 61 A.D.2d 196 (2d Dep't 1978).

UCC § 2-725 is applicable to a personal injury action based upon breach of warranty. Holdridge v. Heyer-Schulte Corp., 440 F. Supp. 1088 (N.D.N.Y. 1977).

Under Indiana law, 4-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725 was applicable to cause of action for breach of warranty sounding in tort, rather than 2-year limitation period applicable to actions for injuries to persons or property. Waldron v. Armstrong Rubber Co., 64 Mich. App. 626, 236 N.W.2d 722 (1975).

In action seeking damages for personal injuries resulting from automobile accident which plaintiff alleged was caused by manufacturing defect, UCC § 2-725, providing a four-year limitation period for action for breach of contract of sale, was inapplicable, even though plaintiff couched action in terms of breach of warranty. Becker v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 52 Cal. App. 3d 794 (1st Dist. 1975).

Personal injury claim based upon breach of warranty is distinct from personal injury claim based on negligence and under Code can be commenced within 4 years after cause of action has occurred. Salvador v. I.H. English of Phila., Inc., 224 Pa. Super. 377, 307 A.2d 398 (1973), aff'd, 457 Pa. 24, 319 A.2d 903 (1974).

A personal injury action based on breach of warranty, even though arising out of the consequences of a sale, is not subject to UCC § 2-725 limitations statute. Heavner v. Uniroyal, Inc., 118 N.J. Super. 116, 286 A.2d 718 (App. Div. 1972), aff'd, 63 N.J. 130, 305 A.2d 412 (1973).

Four year statute of limitations governing personal injury actions based upon breach of warranty is calculated from date of breach of warranty, and not from date of accident giving rise to injuries. Hoffman v. A. B. Chance Co., 339 F. Supp. 1385 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

Four-year limitations period for personal injury actions based upon breach of warranty is calculated, under UCC § 2-725(2), from date of breach of warranty, i.e. tender of delivery, and not from date of accident giving rise to injuries. Hoffman v. A. B. Chance Co., 339 F. Supp. 1385 (M.D. Pa. 1972).

Where an action is correctly brought within the framework of the UCC, here an action for breach of warranty, the applicable statute of limitations is that of the UCC, here UCC § 2-725, although the damages sought are for personal injuries. Sinka v. Northern Com. Co., 491 P.2d 116 (Alaska 1971).

Four-year statute of limitations under Code § 2-725 is applicable to personal injury actions based upon breach of warranty. Hoeflich v. William S. Merrell Co., 288 F. Supp. 659 (E.D. Pa. 1968).

The four-year period of limitations provided in subsection (1) controlled an action in assumpsit charging breaches of express and implied warranties on the part of a gas company safely to deliver that commodity to the plaintiffs' home and that the breach of such warranties resulted in personal injuries, and an earlier two-year statute no longer applied. Gardiner v. Philadelphia Gas Works, 413 Pa. 415, 197 A.2d 612 (1964).

11. —Personal injury actions based on breach of warranty; illustrative cases.

In suit by hospital cashier who was injured while operating cash register manufactured by defendant manufacturer-seller after it had been delivered by buyer to hospital, court held, with respect to plaintiff's breach-of-implied-warranty claims, (1) that under Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), which sets forth specific conflict-of-laws rule for warranty claims, Mississippi law governed the rights and duties of parties with regard to (a) disclaimers of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness, (b) limitation of remedies for breach of such warranties, and (c) necessity of privity of contract to maintain action for breach of warranty; (2) that rule of Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), as expressly stated therein, applied notwithstanding agreement by parties that laws of another state or of foreign nation governed parties' rights and duties; (3) that under Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), application of Mississippi substantive law on privity of contract, warranty disclaimers, and limitation of remedies in warranty action was authorized only if transaction that gave rise to warranty claim bore some reasonable and appropriate relation to Mississippi; (4) that facts of case showed that transactions that gave rise to plaintiff's warranty claim did not bear any relation to Mississippi and did not warrant application of Mississippi substantive law; (5) that under conflict-of-law "center-of-gravity" doctrine, Alabama had most significant relation to transactions in suit; (6) that since Alabama's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Alabama UCC § 2-725(1) and (2)) would be regarded as procedural, Mississippi's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1) and (2)) governed case; and (7) that under Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1) and (2), plaintiff's warranty claim was barred because tender of delivery of cash register that caused plaintiff's injuries had occurred more than six years before accrual of plaintiff's cause of action. Jackson v. National Semi-Conductor Data Checker/DTS, Inc., 660 F. Supp. 65 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Action by hospital patient for damages for personal injuries arising from breach of warranty attaching to drugs manufactured by defendants and administered to plaintiff during her confinement was governed by four-year period of limitations prescribed by New York UCC § 2-725(1) for actions for breach of contract of sale, instead of three-year period prescribed by New York's general personal-injuries limitation statute, since UCC action for breach of contract of sale includes action for personal injuries stemming from breach of warranty (observing that four-year period of limitations prescribed by New York UCC § 2-725(1) might also be applicable because, on basis of record on appeal, a contract for sale of the drugs to plaintiff herself could not be summarily ruled out). McCarthy v. Bristol Labs., 61 A.D.2d 196 (2d Dep't 1978).

In personal injury action based on breach of warranty attaching to boiler manufactured by defendant which, after having been sold by defendant to third person in 1962 and resold by such person in 1964 to plaintiff's employer, exploded and injured plaintiff in May, 1967, two-year statute of limitations for personal injuries, instead of four-year statute prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) for breach of contract, applied and barred plaintiff's claim, since UCC § 2-725(1) does not, under any construction, apply to third-party personal injuries caused by defective product. Salvador v. Atlantic Steel Boiler Co., 256 Pa. Super. 330, 389 A.2d 1148 (1978).

In action for personal injuries sustained from breach of implied warranty in sale of intrauterine device, applicable statute of limitations was four-year statute prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) for breach of contract of sale and not the non-UCC, two-year statute of limitations prescribed for personal injuries generally. Branden v. Gerbie, 62 Ill. App. 3d 138, 379 N.E.2d 7 (1st Dist. 1978).

Airplane passenger could maintain action for personal injuries against airplane manufacturer, based on breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-715, notwithstanding passenger was not in privity with manufacturer, and thus plaintiff could avail herself of 4-year statute of limitations provided in UCC § 2-725 which commenced to run from date of injury. Roberts v. General Dynamics, Convair Corp., 425 F. Supp. 688 (S.D. Tex. 1977).

In action by husband and wife against manufacturer of plastic container for damages resulting when container fell from shelf and contents spilled onto wife's body, UCC § 2-725 statute of limitations for breach of warranty actions was inapplicable because under UCC § 2-318, plaintiffs were beyond scope of statutory warranty protection and action was governed by two-year statute of limitations for actions for injuries to rights of another. Moss v. Polyco, Inc., 522 P.2d 622 (Okla. 1974).

Code's 4 year statute of limitations was applicable to action against manufacturer of contraceptive drug to recover damages for personal injuries resulting from alleged breach of implied warranty that drug was not fit for purpose for which it was sold. Redfield v. Mead, Johnson & Co., 266 Or. 273, 512 P.2d 776 (1973).

UCC § 2-725 is specific statute of limitations dealing with sales contracts, and operated to repeal general statutes which dealt generally with same class or type of actions, but would not affect shorter limitation period of statute dealing specifically with actions brought as consequence of injuries sustained while skiing. Weiner v. Sherburne Corp., 57 F.R.D. 636 (D. Vt. 1972).

Plaintiffs' survival actions for personal injuries resulting from an alleged breach of warranty in sale of pearl kerosene was governed by 4-year limitations statute of UCC § 2-725, rather than general 2-year negligence statute, notwithstanding that damages sought were for fatal personal injuries. Sinka v. Northern Com. Co., 491 P.2d 116 (Alaska 1971).

Four year statute of limitations applied to claims of breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose, in action for injuries sustained by purchaser of allegedly defective ladder; only common-law negligence and strict liability counts of complaint were barred in action commenced more than one year from date of sale of ladder to purchaser. Layman v. Keller Ladders, Inc., 224 Tenn. 396, 455 S.W.2d 594 (1970).

Under a complaint alleging that plaintiff purchased from the defendant a coffee maker; that when the contract of sale was entered into there was an implied warranty from the defendant to the plaintiff that the coffee maker was fit for the purpose for which it was to be used; and that plaintiff was injured when the coffee maker broke causing boiling water to fall on plaintiff's leg causing personal injuries, the essence of the case was breach of contract, rather than negligence, and the four year statute of limitations applicable to implied warranty of fitness applied rather than the three year statute applicable to actions for personal injuries. Bort v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 58 Misc. 2d 889 (1969).

Third party complaint filed more than 4 years after original action was brought against restaurant proprietor for hepatitis allegedly caused by eating raw clams in restaurant was barred by statute of limitations provision that breach of contract action must be commenced within four years after cause of action accrued. Schmitz v. DiNicola, 28 Conn. Supp. 385, 264 A.2d 14 (1969).

Count alleging fall upon ice caused by breach of implied warranty that ice skates were fit for purpose of skating was not within confines of implied warranty sections of Code and four year limitation of Code § 2-725, but was barred by three year statute of limitations as to tort actions. Abate v. Barkers of Wallingford, Inc., 27 Conn. Supp. 46, 229 A.2d 366 (1967).

Where the insurer or the purchaser of a swimming pool installed by the seller in 1955 paid, in 1964, the claim of a person injured by diving into the pool in 1961, and brought an action in 1965 against the seller of the pool to recover the amount paid to the injured person, it was held by a Federal Court applying Massachusetts law that insofar as the action was based on breach of contract and breach of warranty in the sale of the pool, the action was required by c. 260, § 2 to be brought within 6 years after the cause of action accrued, that such cause accrued, by reference also to c. 106, § 2-725(2), when delivery of the pool was made, regardless of the buyer's knowledge of the breach, and that the action brought 10 years after the installation of the pool was barred by the statute of limitations. Wolverine Ins. Co. v. Tower Iron Works, Inc., 370 F.2d 700 (1st Cir. Mass. 1966).

12. —Personal injury actions based on strict liability.

In products liability action by purchaser of automobile against manufacturer for injuries allegedly resulting from manufacturer's breach of express and implied warranties of fitness: (1) cause of action was governed by UCC four-year statute of limitations, § 2-725, rather than general three-year statute; (2) nor was action barred under UCC by lack of privity. Reid v. Volkswagen of Am., Inc., 512 F.2d 1294 (6th Cir. Mich. 1975).

In action for personal injuries based on strict products liability theory arising when child's arm was caught in laundry extractor, UCC § 2-725 statute of limitations governing breach of warranty causes of action relating to sales contracts was inapplicable. Rivera v. Berkeley Super Wash, Inc., 44 A.D.2d 316 (2d Dep't 1974), reargument denied, 45 A.D.2d 734, 357 N.Y.S.2d 1010 (2d Dep't 1974), aff'd sub nom. Victorson v. Bock Laundry Mach. Co., 37 N.Y.2d 395, 373 N.Y.S.2d 39, 335 N.E.2d 275, 91 A.L.R.3d 445 (1975).

Product liability action for personal injuries alleging, inter alia, breach of implied warranties was governed by two-year statute of limitations and not by five-year statute found in UCC § 2-725. Nichols v. Eli Lilly & Co., 501 F.2d 392 (10th Cir. Okla. 1974).

Cause of action for strict products liability was governed by normal three-year tort statute of limitations, commencing at time of injury, and was not barred by four-year contract statute of limitations, UCC § 2-725, commencing at time of sale. Simmons v. Albany Boys Club, Inc., 80 Misc. 2d 19 (1974).

UCC 4-year statute of limitations was not applicable to strict liability claim against helicopter manufacturer. Anderson v. Fairchild Hiller Corp., 358 F. Supp. 976 (D. Alaska 1973).

Code § 2-725 does not apply to strict liability consumer-user action against manufacture for consequential personal injury and property damage, and such an action is controlled by general statutes of limitations. Heavner v. Uniroyal, Inc., 63 N.J. 130, 305 A.2d 412 (1973).

13. —Suits based on sale and delivery of goods.

Four-year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725, and not the two-year statute of limitations imposed by a non-code statute, was applicable to action founded on breach of contract for sale and delivery of materials. Smith v. Post-Tensioned Sys., 537 S.W.2d 144 (Civ. App. 1976).

In action by purchaser of new car for breach of warranty, normal 4 year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725(1) was not reduced by reason of manufacturer's "new vehicle warranty" covering defects in material or workmanship for "period of 12 months or 12,000 miles, which ever first occurs," since provision was not one year statute of limitations but established period during which cause of action might accrue for failure to repair or replace defect in material or workmanship. Dennin v. GMC, 78 Misc. 2d 451 (1974).

Four year statute of limitations provided in UCC § 2-725(1), applied to action to recover for goods sold and delivered. Reiss v. Pacific Steel Pool Corp., 73 Misc. 2d 78 (1973).

Four year statute of limitations provided for in UCC § 2-725(1) was applicable to action to recover for goods sold and delivered, and prevailed over CPLR provision for 6 year statute of limitations. Reiss v. Pacific Steel Pool Corp., 73 Misc. 2d 78 (1973).

14. —Suits based on security of financing agreements.

Four-year period of limitations in District of Columbia UCC § 2-725(1) did not apply to action by United States on behalf of federal Agency for International Development (AID) against seller of steel to recover for breach of financing agreement between agency and seller that was caused by seller's delivery of nonconforming steel to importer in foreign country, even though such financing agreement provided that it was to be governed by District of Columbia law, since agency and seller were not in buyer-seller relationship and no title to specific goods passed under the financing contract. UCC Article 2 does not apply to contracts by which parties obtain financing to buy or to sell goods, even though such financing contracts bear some relationship to separate contract for sale of goods (construing Dist of Col law, and holding that action was governed by six-year limitation period prescribed by 28 USCA § 2415 for contract actions by United States). United States v. Framen Steel Supply Co., 435 F. Supp. 681 (S.D.N.Y. 1977).

Action for breach by buyer of written installment agreement, executed by buyer after having defaulted on original contract of sale, is governed by four-year statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) and not by 15-year, non-UCC statute of limitations for written contracts generally. In such case, installment agreement was subject to scope of UCC Article 2, even though it was not executed contemporaneously with original contract of sale, since under UCC § 2-102, provisions of Article 2 apply to "transactions in goods" and term "transaction," as used in UCC § 2-102, encompasses a far wider activity than a "sale." May Co. v. Trusnik, 54 Ohio App. 2d 71, 375 N.E.2d 72 (1977).

Correct statute of limitation for action by seller against buyer under retail installment sales "security agreement" by which buyer became obligated to pay specified sum in monthly instalments, was UCC §§ 2-725 and not limitation statute applicable to actions upon written contract. Mysel v. Gross, 70 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 10 (Super. 1977).

Action under Code § 9-504(2) to recover surplus from resale of repossessed article was more closely related to security aspects of contract than it was to that part which concerned original sale, so that action was governed, not by 4 year statute of limitations in Code Sales Article, but by general contract statute of limitations of 6 years. Chaney v. Fields Chevrolet Co., 264 Or. 21, 503 P.2d 1239, 59 A.L.R.3d 1199 (1972).

A suit for a deficiency judgment after repossession and sale of automobile subject to Pennsylvania "bailment lease security agreement" is nothing but a simple in personam action for that part of the sales price which remains unpaid, is an action to enforce the obligation of the buyer to pay the full sale price to the seller, and is an obligation existing as essential element of all sales irrespective of whether they are accompanied by a security agreement. Associates Disct. Corp. v. Palmer, 47 N.J. 183, 219 A.2d 858 (1966).

A deficiency action brought against one purchasing an automobile under Pennsylvania bailment lease security agreement must be considered more closely related to the sales aspect rather than to the security aspect of the transaction, and is consequently controlled by the limitation period of this section. Associates Dist. Corp. v. Palmer, 47 N.J. 183, 219 A.2d 858 (1966).

15. When statute begins to run.

In action by buyer of forging machine for seller's breach of both its express performance warranties and its repair-and-replacement-of-parts warranty, where (1) delivery and installation of machine took place in October, 1967, (2) buyer, on December 29, 1967, sent letter to seller which detailed machine's performance defects, (3) seller for five months attempted to repair machine, but stopped such efforts on June 21, 1968, (4) buyer filed suit for breach of seller's warranties on May 29, 1969, and (5) contract between parties contained one-year limitation period for bringing such suit, which was minimum period allowed by UCC § 2-725(1), court held (1) that under UCC § 2-725(2), cause of action for breach of warranty accrues on initial installation of product, regardless of whether it functions properly, as long as seller's warranty does not extend to future performance, (2) that in present case, seller's express performance warranties explicitly extended to future performance for period of one year, since seller had expressly warranted machine's performance for such period, (3) that as a result, buyer's cause of action on such warranties accrued, under UCC § 2-725(2), when buyer discovered, or should have discovered, that machine was defective, as long as such defects occurred during machine's warranty period, (4) that since parties' contract provided for one-year limitation period for bringing suit for breach of contract, and since buyer had discovered and reported machine's defects to seller by letter on December 29, 1967, buyer's failure to institute suit until May 29, 1969, which was more than one year after discovery of defects, caused such suit to be barred under UCC § 2-725(2), (5) that seller was not estopped to assert statute of limitations as defense because of its spending over five months in attempting to repair machine, since such repair efforts did not toll running of statute under Ohio law, which applied to case under UCC § 2-725(4), (6) that buyer's cause of action for seller's breach of its express warranty to repair or replace defective parts was not barred by contract's one-year period of limitations, since seller's repair efforts were terminated on June 21, 1968 and buyer's suit was filed within a year thereafter on May 29, 1969, and (7) that buyer's failure to notify seller of its breach of repair-or-replacement-of-defective-parts warranty, which was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), was fatal to buyer's cause of action on such warranty. Standard Alliance Indus., Inc. v. Black Clawson Co., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 246, 587 F.2d 813 (6th Cir. Ohio 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 923, 99 S. Ct. 2032, 60 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1979).

Where defendant undertook to deliver entire computer system, ready to function immediately, breach of that undertaking occurred upon date of installation of system, not when defendant ceased to attempt to correct deficiencies in system, for purposes of UCC § 2-725, subd 1. Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Where essence of plaintiff's claim was failure to provide computer system operational from installation, and failure was asserted to have been apparent from date of installation, cause of action accrued upon that date. Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Where suit on sales contract was commenced more than four years after contract became in default, but less than four years after last partial payment had been made and accepted, partial payment made on contract commenced running of UCC § 2-725 four-year statute of limitations again under same circumstances that partial payment on any other contract would commence statute of limitations running anew under general law of state, and therefore suit was not barred by statute of limitations. Hamilton v. Pearce, 15 Wash. App. 133, 547 P.2d 866 (1976).

Assuming that implied warranty was associated with washing machine manufacturer by foreign manufacturer, breach of warranty occurred when tender of delivery was made prior to enactment of long-armed statute and prior to its effective date; therefore, use of long-armed statute to obtain jurisdiction over foreign manufacturer would be impermissibly retroactive notwithstanding injury to user of washing machine which occurred in 1971. AB CTC v. Morejon, 324 So. 2d 625 (Fla. 1975), conformed to, 326 So. 2d 459 (Fla. App. 1976).

Operative date for determining whether 4-year Code or 6-year pre-code statute of limitations applied to action for breach of warranty was date when transaction was entered into, rather than date when action accrued. Great Atl. & Pac. Tea Co. v. Rust Eng'g Co., 75 Misc. 2d 920 (1973).

Where the buyer is a political subdivision which cannot make payment for goods until the seller's claim has been audited, a refusal to audit the claim constitutes the breach of the contract by the buyer so that the period of the statute of limitations runs from that date. J.C. Georg Serv. Corp. v. Town of Summit, 28 A.D.2d 578 (3d Dep't 1967).

16. —Date of injury or discovery of breach.

In breach of warranty action to recover damages for defects in roof of plaintiff's new steel plant, where evidence showed (1) that defendant had manufactured and sold insulation and components of roof membrane to plaintiff, and (2) that defendant had also recommended specifications for, and design of, roof and had performed certain inspection services, court held (1) that statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) was inapplicable because action involved dispute over construction contract instead of contract that provided only for sale of raw materials for roof, (2) that even if UCC § 2-725(1) did apply to action, its four-year limitation period would bar plaintiff's breach of warranty claim, since language in defendant's advertising literature concerning built-up roofs did not amount to warranty that explicitly extended to future performance within meaning of future-warranty exception contained in UCC § 2-725(2), on which plaintiff relied, and (3) fact that defendant knew of plaintiff's expectations concerning roof and also that plaintiff might have relied on defendant's design expertise did not transform representations in defendant's advertising literature, which discussed present characteristics of its roofing materials and their successful use in other roofs, into explicit warranties of future performance (applying Illinois law; holding that plaintiff was relegated to its common-law remedies for breach of contract). Jones & Laughlin Steel Corp. v. Johns-Manville Sales Corp., 453 F. Supp. 527 (W.D. Pa. 1978), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 626 F.2d 280 (3d Cir. Pa. 1980).

In action by buyer of forging machine for seller's breach of both its express performance warranties and its repair-and-replacement-of-parts warranty, where (1) delivery and installation of machine took place in October, 1967, (2) buyer, on December 29, 1967, sent letter to seller which detailed machine's performance defects, (3) seller for five months attempted to repair machine, but stopped such efforts on June 21, 1968, (4) buyer filed suit for breach of seller's warranties on May 29, 1969, and (5) contract between parties contained one-year limitation period for bringing such suit, which was minimum period allowed by UCC § 2-725(1), court held (1) that under UCC § 2-725(2), cause of action for breach of warranty accrues on initial installation of product, regardless of whether it functions properly, as long as seller's warranty does not extend to future performance, (2) that in present case, seller's express performance warranties explicitly extended to future performance for period of one year, since seller had expressly warranted machine's performance for such period, (3) that as a result, buyer's cause of action on such warranties accrued, under UCC § 2-725(2), when buyer discovered, or should have discovered, that machine was defective, as long as such defects occurred during machine's warranty period, (4) that since parties' contract provided for one-year limitation period for bringing suit for breach of contract, and since buyer had discovered and reported machine's defects to seller by letter on December 29, 1967, buyer's failure to institute suit until May 29, 1969, which was more than one year after discovery of defects, caused such suit to be barred under UCC § 2-725(2), (5) that seller was not estopped to assert statute of limitations as defense because of its spending over five months in attempting to repair machine, since such repair efforts did not toll running of statute under Ohio law, which applied to case under UCC § 2-725(4), (6) that buyer's cause of action for seller's breach of its express warranty to repair or replace defective parts was not barred by contract's one-year period of limitations, since seller's repair efforts were terminated on June 21, 1968 and buyer's suit was filed within a year thereafter on May 29, 1969, and (7) that buyer's failure to notify seller of its breach of repair-or-replacement-of-defective-parts warranty, which was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), was fatal to buyer's cause of action on such warranty. Standard Alliance Indus., Inc. v. Black Clawson Co., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 246, 587 F.2d 813 (6th Cir. Ohio 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 923, 99 S. Ct. 2032, 60 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1979).

Where limitation period was a controlling issue in homeowner's action against sewage system manufacturer for breach of express warranty, trial court should have made findings of fact as to when homeowner discovered, or should have discovered, malfunction of sewage system. Daughtry v. Jet Aeration Co., 91 Wash. 2d 704, 592 P.2d 631 (1979).

In diversity action instituted to recover damages for malfunctioning of heating and ventilating equipment, where plaintiff, a Pennsylvania corporation, purchased goods from Ohio corporation by order placed at Ohio corporation's Pennsylvania office; where defendant, a Wisconsin corporation, subsequently acquired Ohio corporation and communicated with plaintiff concerning performance of goods in such manner as to cause plaintiff to believe that it was dealing with Wisconsin corporation and not Ohio corporation; where goods were ordered on January 24, 1969, found to be defective on November 24, 1971, and action was commenced in federal district court in Pennsylvania in May, 1976; and where defendant contended that six-year Wisconsin statute of limitations applied to case, (1) district court sitting in Pennsylvania was required to apply Pennsylvania conflict-of-law rules; (2) although it was not clear whether contract was formed in Pennsylvania or Ohio, under Pennsylvania law, if place of formation of contract differed from place of performance, law of place of performance governed; (3) since goods in suit were to be installed in Pennsylvania school, Pennsylvania was place of performance; (4) under Pennsylvania UCC § 2-725(1) and (2), latest date on which four-year statute of limitations applicable to actions for breach of contract of sale began to run was November 24, 1971, when breach was discovered; and (5) action was therefore barred because it was not brought until May, 1976. Bohrer-Reagan Corp. v. Modine Mfg. Co., 433 F. Supp. 578 (E.D. Pa. 1977).

Airplane passenger could maintain action for personal injuries against airplane manufacturer, based on breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-715, notwithstanding passenger was not in privity with manufacturer, and thus plaintiff could avail herself of 4-year statute of limitations provided in UCC § 2-725 which commenced to run from date of injury. Roberts v. General Dynamics, Convair Corp., 425 F. Supp. 688 (S.D. Tex. 1977).

In action by employees under third-party-beneficiary-of-warranty provisions in Alabama version of UCC § 2-318 for silicosis injuries allegedly sustained as result of breach of warranties made in connection with sale of sandblasting hoods and respirators used by plaintiffs in their work, four-year statute of limitations prescribed by Alabama version of UCC § 2-725(1) applied and began to run from time of plaintiffs' injury. Accordingly, (1) since under Alabama law silicosis is deemed to be continuing injury time of which is determined by last date of exposure, and (2) since last date of exposure is deemed to be last date of employment in work causing such injury, statute of limitations in present case began to run on last date plaintiffs used the defective hoods and respirators in their employment. Simmons v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 433 F. Supp. 747 (S.D. Ala. 1976), aff'd sub nom. Love v. American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 560 F.2d 1021 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977), aff'd, 560 F.2d 1022 (5th Cir. Ala. 1977).

Action for personal injuries against manufacturer of propane truck which exploded, based on breach of warranty, was governed by four year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725 and cause of action arose on date of injury. Morton v. Texas Welding & Mfg. Co., 408 F. Supp. 7 (S.D. Tex. 1976).

Cause of action against helicopter manufacturer for breach of express and implied warranties relating to merchantability (failure to supply certain information relating to servicing helicopters as required by contract) accrued when breach was or should have been discovered under UCC § 2-725(2). Klondike Helicopters, Ltd. v. Fairchild Hiller Corp., 334 F. Supp. 890 (N.D. Ill. 1971).

Breach of warranty action relating to purchase of mining equipment was barred by Code § 2-725 where tender of delivery of equipment was made more than six years before filing of action; exception within Code § 2-725(2) for prospective warranties could not be invoked where alleged breach was discovered within few months of buyer's operation of equipment and considerably more than four years prior to filing of action. Bobo v. Page Eng'g Co., 285 F. Supp. 664 (W.D. Pa. 1967), aff'd, 395 F.2d 991 (3d Cir. Pa. 1968).

The period of the statute of limitations begins to run from the knowledge of the wrong or the time when the injured person should have acquired knowledge thereof. Carney v. Barnett, 278 F. Supp. 572 (E.D. Pa. 1967).

In applying the rule that the period of the statute of limitations commences to run when knowledge of the breach should have been acquired, the term "knowledge" refers to the knowledge of the injured person and not to his personal representative, where the injured person dies. Carney v. Barnett, 278 F. Supp. 572 (E.D. Pa. 1967).

An action begun in 1962, predicated on a breach of warranty arising out of the sale of a potato harvester bought in 1956, was barred by the statute of limitations, since even if it be considered that the breach of warranty was not discovered and could not have been discovered until the 1957 harvest, the statute would have run during the potato harvesting season of 1961. Lewis v. Jacobsen, 30 Pa. D. & C.2d 623 (1962).

In an action for breach of warranty the plaintiff must aver the date that harm was sustained, as it is that date on which the statute of limitations begins to run, and a pleading is not sufficient when the plaintiff merely avers the later date on which the plaintiff learned of the cause of the injury. Gionfriddo v. Helene Curtis Indus., Inc., 110 Pitts. Legal J. 171 (Pa. 1962).

17. —Date of sale or delivery.

A cause of action for breach of warranty of title, arising from the sale of a bulldozer accrued when tender of delivery of the bulldozer was made. Huff v. Hobgood, 549 So. 2d 951 (Miss. 1989).

In suit by hospital cashier who was injured while operating cash register manufactured by defendant manufacturer-seller after it had been delivered by buyer to hospital, court held, with respect to plaintiff's breach-of-implied-warranty claims, (1) that under Mississippi UCC § 75-1-105(1), which sets forth specific conflict-of-laws rule for warranty claims, Mississippi law governed the rights and duties of parties with regard to (a) disclaimers of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness, (b) limitation of remedies for breach of such warranties, and (c) necessity of privity of contract to maintain action for breach of warranty; (2) that rule of Mississippi UCC § 75-1-105(1), as expressly stated therein, applied notwithstanding agreement by parties that laws of another state or of foreign nation governed parties' rights and duties; (3) that under Mississippi UCC § 75-1-105(1), application of Mississippi substantive law on privity of contract, warranty disclaimers, and limitation of remedies in warranty action was authorized only if transaction that gave rise to warranty claim bore some reasonable and appropriate relation to Mississippi; (4) that facts of case showed that transactions that gave rise to plaintiff's warranty claim did not bear any relation to Mississippi and did not warrant application of Mississippi substantive law; (5) that under conflict-of-law "center-of-gravity" doctrine, Alabama had most significant relation to transactions in suit; (6) that since Alabama's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Alabama UCC § 2-725(1) and (2)) would be regarded as procedural, Mississippi's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Mississippi UCC § 75-2-725(1) and (2)) governed case; and (7) that under Mississippi UCC § 75-2-725(1) and (2), plaintiff's warranty claim was barred because tender of delivery of cash register that caused plaintiff's injuries had occurred more than six years before accrual of plaintiff's cause of action. Jackson v. National Semi-Conductor Data Checker/DTS, Inc., 660 F. Supp. 65 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Where (1) buyer purchased capsule-filling machine from defendant, (2) machine was delivered on April 10, 1972, and (3) buyer sued for breach of contract and breach of warranty on September 8, 1976, court held (1) that four-year period of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) barred plaintiff's cause of action, (2) that in absence of explicit warranty extending to future performance, such four-year period would be calculated from April 10, 1972, which was date of delivery of machine, and (3) that making of repairs on machine, by itself, was insufficient to toll statute (holding that summary judgment should not have been entered against plaintiff, since plenary hearing should have been held to determine whether defendant was estopped to assert statute of limitations as defense). Biocraft Lab., Inc. v. USM Corp., 163 N.J. Super. 570, 395 A.2d 521 (App. Div. 1978).

Four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1) barred plaintiff airline's action for breach of express and implied warranties in sale and lease to plaintiff of four airplanes, which allegedly had cracks in wings of each aircraft, since (1) under UCC § 2-725(2) such four-year period began to run at time of tender of delivery of airplanes, (2) statute made aggrieved party's knowledge of breach of contract irrelevant, and (3) plaintiff, under facts of case, was precluded from successfully asserting equitable estoppel and fraudulent concealment under UCC § 2-725(4) to toll statute of limitations. Also since, under UCC §§ 2-314 through 2-318, Uniform Commercial Code remedy was available for breach of express and implied warranties, no right to common-law action for breach of such warranties existed. Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Lockheed Aircraft Corp., 430 F. Supp. 134 (D. Alaska 1977).

Action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability of fertilizer was barred by six-year statute of limitations contained in Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1) where buyer bought fertilizer, and fertilizer was delivered to buyer, in May, 1969, but buyer's action for breach of warranty was not filed until June, 1975. In such case, statute began to run from date of tender of delivery, as provided in Mississippi UCC § 2-725(2), and not from date when breach was or should have been discovered, as contended by seller, since provision in Mississippi UCC § 2-725(2) concerning accrual of cause of action on latter date applied only to warranties that "explicitly" extended to future performance of goods and warranty in issue was merely implied warranty. Rutland v. Swift Chem. Co., 351 So. 2d 324 (Miss. 1977).

Where infant was injured on October 28, 1973 by manure spreader manufactured by defendant; where spreader was manufactured in 1961 and sold to infant's parents on December 7, 1966; and where, on May 15, 1974, action for damages for infant's injuries was instituted containing causes based on theory of strict products liability and theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability, (1) cause of action based on breach of warranty was separate and distinct from cause based on strict products liability; (2) three-year statute of limitations governing personal injuries applied to strict products liability claim and did not bar such claim, since action was timely commenced on May 15, 1974; and (3) cause of action based on breach of warranty was barred by four-year statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725, since spreader was purchased in 1966. Ribley v. Harsco Corp., 57 A.D.2d 234 (3d Dep't 1977).

Breach of warranty action, alleging that oral contraceptive caused blindness, was barred by four-year statute of limitations in UCC § 2-725, where plaintiff made her last purchase of the contraceptive more than four years prior to commencing her action. Raymond v. Eli Lilly & Co., 412 F.

Supp. 1392 (D.N.H. 1976), aff'd, 556 F.2d 628 (1st Cir. N.H. 1977).

Breach of warranty action for injuries allegedly caused by defective automobile exhaust pipe was barred by four year statute of limitations of UCC § 2-725(1), notwithstanding that injuries were incurred within four years prior to service of summons and complaint, where more than four years elapsed between date of automobile sale and service of summons and complaint. Weinstein v. GMC, 51 A.D.2d 335 (1st Dep't 1976).

Action for breach of contract to supply steel pier forms for construction of bridge was barred by UCC § 2-725(1) and (2) where supplier delivered it to construction site on November 17, 1970, pier form was set in position on November 19, and next day employees of buyer began pouring concrete into it, but before that process was completed, on or about December 7, pier form collapsed, and where buyer filed action against supplier on November 22, 1974, notwithstanding buyer accepted pier forms for towing only and reserved right to conduct later inspections and to reject goods if they did not conform to specifications of contract. Cause of action for breach of warranty accrues when tender of delivery is made whether or not buyer at that time "accepts" goods, as that term is used in Code, or, on other hand, withholds acceptance until he or she has had opportunity to fully inspect for defects, and this is so even if defect does not appear until after limitations period had run. Fact that buyer's contract with seller expressly incorporated by reference document issued by state roads commission which set standards for construction materials to be used on bridges and included detailed standards for pier forms such as one involved in present lawsuit did not constitute warranty "explicitly extend[ing] to future performance" under UCC § 2-725(2) absent language in contract that explicitly warranted future performance. Raymond-Dravo-Langensfelder v. Microdot, Inc., 425 F. Supp. 614 (D. Del. 1976).

Cause of action for breach of warranty accrues at time of delivery regardless of time when breach is discovered, and third-party action for indemnity, brought 9 years after delivery, was barred. Morrisette v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 114 N.H. 384, 322 A.2d 7 (1974).

In the absence of a warranty explicitly extending to future performance, the cause of action here accrued on the date when tender of delivery occurred. Binkley Co. v. Teledyne Mid-America Corp., 333 F. Supp. 1183 (E.D. Mo. 1971), aff'd, 460 F.2d 276 (8th Cir. Mo. 1972).

Under UCC § 2-725(2) in the absence of a warranty explicitly extending to future performance and where there is no reference to a future time in language of warranty, words do not consist of an "explicit" warranty of future performance in and of themselves—the cause of action accrued on the date when the tender of delivery occurred. Binkley Co. v. Teledyne Mid-America Corp., 333 F. Supp. 1183 (E.D. Mo. 1971), aff'd, 460 F.2d 276 (8th Cir. Mo. 1972).

In breach of warranty action, cause of action accrues when breach occurs, i.e. tender of delivery, regardless of aggrieved party's lack of knowledge; this is consistent with pre-Code law that breach occurred at time of sale and not at time of discovery. Constable v. Colonie Truck Sales, Inc., 37 A.D.2d 1011 (3d Dep't 1971), appeal denied, 30 N.Y.2d 484, 333 N.Y.S.2d 1025, 284 N.E.2d 163 (1972).

Warranty limitations statute running from date of auto sales applies to third-party action where auto dealer sought to recover from manufacturer in strict tort and implied warranty for amount of judgment entered against manufacturer in main action. Ibach v. Grant Donaldson Serv., Inc., 38 A.D.2d 39 (4th Dep't 1971).

Code § 2-725(2) fully supports rule that breach of warranty cause of action accrues at time of delivery of goods. Arrow Transp. Co. v. Fruehauf Corp., 289 F. Supp. 170 (D. Or. 1968).

Statute of limitations within Code § 2-725 begins to run when tender of delivery is made regardless of aggrieved party's lack of knowledge of breach of warranty and regardless of time of accident directly giving rise to damages claimed. Hoeflich v. William S. Merrell Co., 288 F. Supp. 659 (E.D. Pa. 1968).

Buyer's claim to equitable setoff in seller's suit for balance due on open account for non-fat dry milk sales matured under the provisions of this section upon tender of delivery of the commodity. Champlain Milk Prods., Inc. v. M.E. Franks, Inc., 26 A.D.2d 988 (3d Dep't 1966).

The statute of limitations set forth in subsection (1) of this section against an action for breach by a manufacturer of an implied warranty of fitness begins to run from the date when the goods are delivered to the purchaser, and it was immaterial that the buyer of a cylinder of gas did not discover that the valve attached to it was defective until approximately 18 months after its purchase when an explosion occurred causing injuries, where the cylinder was purchased in March of 1956 and suit was not filed until July of 1960. Rufo v. Bastian-Blessing Co., 417 Pa. 107, 207 A.2d 823 (1965).

18. Explicit extension of warranty to future performance.

Warranty of material and workmanship in helicopter engine purchase agreement does not constitute warrant explicitly extending to future performance of helicopter engines, so as to lift bar of statute of limitations in § 75-2-725, where warranty simply guaranteed condition of goods at time of delivery. Crouch v. GE Co., 699 F. Supp. 585 (S.D. Miss. 1988).

An express warranty which makes no reference at all to any future date should not be allowed to extend past the limitations period. Thus, if a manufacturer warrants that a machine will meet certain performance warranties, but does not mention how long such warranties are to continue, the statute of limitations, under UCC § 2-725(2), begins to run when the machine is delivered. However, if an express warranty extends for a specific period of time, the policy reasons behind strict application of the limitations period do not apply. For example, if an automobile is warranted to last for 24,000 miles or four years, the warranty extends to future performance, and if the car fails within the warranty period, the limitations period begins to run from the day the defect is, or should have been, discovered. Standard Alliance Indus., Inc. v. Black Clawson Co., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 246, 587 F.2d 813 (6th Cir. Ohio 1978), cert. denied, 441

In action by buyer of forging machine for seller's breach of both its express performance warranties and its repair-and-replacement-of-parts warranty, where (1) delivery and installation of machine took place in October, 1967, (2) buyer, on December 29, 1967, sent letter to seller which detailed machine's performance defects, (3) seller for five months attempted to repair machine, but stopped such efforts on June 21, 1968, (4) buyer filed suit for breach of seller's warranties on May 29, 1969, and (5) contract between parties contained one-year limitation period for bringing such suit, which was minimum period allowed by UCC § 2-725(1), court held (1) that under UCC § 2-725(2), cause of action for breach of warranty accrues on initial installation of product, regardless of whether it functions properly, as long as seller's warranty does not extend to future performance, (2) that in present case, seller's express performance warranties explicitly extended to future performance for period of one year, since seller had expressly warranted machine's performance for such period, (3) that as a result, buyer's cause of action on such warranties accrued, under UCC § 2-725(2), when buyer discovered, or should have discovered, that machine was defective, as long as such defects occurred during machine's warranty period, (4) that since parties' contract provided for one-year limitation period for bringing suit for breach of contract, and since buyer had discovered and reported machine's defects to seller by letter on December 29, 1967, buyer's failure to institute suit until May 29, 1969, which was more than one year after discovery of defects, caused such suit to be barred under UCC § 2-725(2), (5) that seller was not estopped to assert statute of limitations as defense because of its spending over five months in attempting to repair machine, since such repair efforts did not toll running of statute under Ohio law, which applied to case under UCC § 2-725(4), (6) that buyer's cause of action for seller's breach of its express warranty to repair or replace defective parts was not barred by contract's one-year period of limitations, since seller's repair efforts were terminated on June 21, 1968 and buyer's suit was filed within a year thereafter on May 29, 1969, and (7) that buyer's failure to notify seller of its breach of repair-or-replacement-of-defective-parts warranty, which was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), was fatal to buyer's cause of action on such warranty. Standard Alliance Indus., Inc. v. Black Clawson Co., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 246, 587 F.2d 813 (6th Cir. Ohio 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 923, 99 S. Ct. 2032, 60 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1979).

Plaintiff employee's cause of action for injuries, based on breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose of crane purchased by plaintiff's employer, against manufacturer of crane was barred under UCC § 2-725(1) and (2) where (1) action was commenced more than four years after delivery of crane to employer, (2) "future-performance-of-goods" exception to normal accrual-of-cause-of-action rule contained in UCC § 725(2) did not apply to case, since Uniform Commercial Code did not intend that "implied" warranty could be "explicitly" extended to future performance, but contemplated that such exception should apply only to "express" warranties, and (3) "consumer-goods" exception to normal-accrual-of-cause-of-action rule in UCC § 2-725(2) also did not apply to case, since crane that injured plaintiff was "equipment" and not "consumer goods" under UCC § 2-103(3) and § 9-109(1) and (2). Wright v. Cutler-Hammer, Inc., 358 So. 2d 444 (Ala. 1978).

In action for damages for breach of warranty in sale of underground electric cable, statement respecting cable in defendant's product literature-which stated that "excellent moisture resistant, ozone resistant, and aging characteristics of Everene (Cross-Linked) polyethylene insulation, combined with the...characteristics of [its] Trioseal Jacket, constitute a cable designed to give long and reliable service"-did not create warranty that explicitly extended to future performance of the goods within meaning of UCC § 2-725(2). Homart Dev. Co. v. Graybar Elec. Co., 63 A.D.2d 727 (2d Dep't 1978).

Language in sales contract "if it appears within one year from date of shipment by the company that the equipment...does not meet the warranty specified above..." was a specification of remedy to which buyer would be entitled should breach be discovered within first year, and not a warranty for future performance; thus, suit commenced four years after tender of delivery was barred by statute of limitations. Centennial Ins. Co. v. GE Co., 74 Mich. App. 169, 253 N.W.2d 696 (1977).

Manufacturer's warranty that burial vault would give "satisfactory service at all times" explicitly extended to future performance, so that cause of action for breach accrued not on date of sale but on discovery of breach 12 years after sale, when it was discovered that water, vermin and other matter had leaked into vault. Mittasch v. Seal Lock Burial Vault, Inc., 42 A.D.2d 573 (2d Dep't 1973).

Breach of warranty is breach of contract of sale, and statute of limitations begins to run at time merchandise is delivered, absent any specific and explicit extension of warranty to future performance. Everhart v. Rich's, Inc., 128 Ga. App. 319, 196 S.E.2d 475 (1973).

In absence of warrant explicitly extending to future performance, cause of action for breach of warranty relating to welding machine accrued on date when tender of delivery occurred, despite contention that where machine does not perform when delivered but becomes operable only when installed, a warranty of present performance becomes a warranty of future performance at the date installation is completed and the machine performs properly. Binkley Co. v. Teledyne Mid-America Corp., 460 F.2d 276 (8th Cir. Mo. 1972).

In trespass action for personal injuries allegedly arising from defects in door against defendant-manufacturer and defendant-middleman, attempt by middleman to assert crossclaim against manufacturer more than four years after sale of door did not meet requirements of UCC § 2-725 absent averment of explicit warranty extending to future performance of goods. Coleman v. James A. Clancy & Co., 60 Del. Co. 50 (1972).

Only explicit warranties of future performance can delay accrual of cause of action for breach of warranty under UCC § 2-725(2), and where there was no ex-explicit warranty of future performance provided for in contract none could be inferred from need for future testing to ascertain conformity of goods with contract. Binkley Co. v. Teledyne Mid-America Corp., 333 F. Supp. 1183 (E.D. Mo. 1971), aff'd, 460 F.2d 276 (8th Cir. Mo. 1972).

In absence of warranty of future performance, cause of action under this section accrued upon date of delivery of the last of 50 allegedly defective gasoline engines, and suit for breach of warranty filed more than four years after date of such delivery was barred. Matlack, Inc. v. Butler Mfg. Co., 253 F. Supp. 972 (E.D. Pa. 1966).

A purchaser's counterclaim for breach of an express warranty of the performance of a heating system under extreme conditions was not barred four years after the system was delivered and installed, for the statute did not begin to run until such time as discovery of the breach could be made in winter weather. Perry v. Augustine, 37 Pa. D. & C.2d 416 (1965).

19. —Implied warranty.

Future performance exception to rule that statute of limitations runs from time of delivery is applicable where manufacturer's warranty explicitly provided that implied warranties are "limited to the duration of this [10 year] written warranty." Richardson v. Clayton & Lambert Mfg. Co., 634 F. Supp. 1480 (N.D. Miss. 1986).

In action by buyer of computer system for damages for system's failure to function properly, court held (1) that parties' designation under UCC § 1-105(1) of Massachusetts law to govern their sales contract was immaterial, since buyer's breach-of-contract claims were governed by limitation period contained in UCC § 2-725(1), which had been adopted by both New York and Massachusetts; (2) that contract in suit was not one for performance of services, as alleged by buyer, but was one for purchase of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); (3) that action was not timely commenced by buyer, since breach had occurred in January, 1971 and buyer did not commence suit until August 14, 1975, which was more than four years after cause of action accrued; (4) that UCC § 2-725(2), which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance and provides that discovery of breach must await such performance, did not apply, since warranty under UCC § 2-725(2) must expressly refer to the future and implied warranty alleged by buyer, by its very nature, did not do so; and (5) that seller's attempts to repair computer system did not toll running of statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

An implied warranty of fitness is not a warranty of "future performance," so as to defer accrual of a cause of action for purposes of the statute of limitations. Holdridge v. Heyer-Schulte Corp., 440 F. Supp. 1088 (N.D.N.Y. 1977).

Under the normal rule, warranty causes of action for injuries caused by a defective prosthetic device accrued upon implantation of the device; representations that prosthetic devices were fit for their intended purpose were not warranties of "future performance," so as to defer accrual of cause of action until injury was discovered for purpose of the statute of limitations. Holdridge v. Heyer-Schulte Corp., 440 F. Supp. 1088 (N.D.N.Y. 1977).

Although an express warranty can explicitly extend to future performance of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-725(2), an implied warranty, by its very nature, cannot extend to future performance. Holdridge v. Heyer-Schulte Corp., 440 F. Supp. 1088 (N.D.N.Y. 1977).

In suit instituted on March 24, 1976 against manufacturer of defective prosthetic device implanted in plaintiff's breast on July 6, 1971 for breach of express and implied warranties, implied-warranty cause of action was barred by four-year period of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1), and exception in UCC § 2-725(2) to normal rule for accrual of cause of action for breach of warranty did not apply to case since such exception, which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance of goods, does not comprehend implied warranties (applying New York law; holding that although express warranty allegedly made by defendant apparently did not extend to future performance of prosthetic device in suit, so as to come within UCC § 2-725(2) and thus render timely plaintiff's cause of action for breach of express warranty, court would not decide whether such cause of action was time-barred, but would allow plaintiff to conduct further discovery concerning making of such warranty. Holdridge v. Heyer-Schulte Corp., 440 F. Supp. 1088 (N.D.N.Y. 1977).

In personal injury action seeking damages for alleged breaches of express and implied warranties in connection with sale of new automobile, brought 4 years and 10 months after automobile was purchased, but within 4 years after buyer discovered breach, based on allegations that defect in automobile was plugged gasoline vent which caused gasoline vapors to be gathered by air conditioner and passed into passenger compartment, causing plaintiff's injuries, where manufacturer expressly warranted automobile against defects in material and workmanship in normal use for 12 months or 12,000 miles, whichever occurred first after date of delivery, but did not warrant performance without malfunction during term of warranty and only warranted that manufacturer would repair or replace defective parts, tested in light of plain meaning of language employed in UCC § 2-725(2), it could not be said that warranties, express and implied as alleged in plaintiff's petition, explicitly extended to future performance of plaintiff's automobile and that discovery of breach must have awaited time of such performance; thus, under UCC § 2-725(1) plaintiff's cause of action accrued when breach occurred on tender of delivery and action was barred by statute of limitations. Voth v. Chrysler Motor Corp., 218 Kan. 644, 545 P.2d 371, 93 A.L.R.3d 680 (1976).

Action against machinery seller, alleging breach of warranty and breach of servicing agreement, instituted more than four years after delivery of machinery was time barred under UCC § 2-725(1)(2); even if warranty extended to future performance, where breach was discovered almost immediately upon delivery of machine, causes of action were time barred under UCC § 2-725(1)(2). Gemini Typog- raphers, Inc. v. Mergenthaler Linotype Co., 48 A.D.2d 637 (1st Dep't 1975).

Action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability brought by buyer of tractor more than 4 years after delivery was barred by statute of limitations, UCC § 2-725, where seller made no explicit warranty or representation as to performance of tractor or representations, explicit or otherwise, as to future performance of tractor. Wilson v. Massey-Ferguson, Inc., 21 Ill. App. 3d 867, 315 N.E.2d 580 (4th Dist. 1974).

Wrongful death action against automobile manufacturer based on breach of implied warranty was barred by statute of limitations, UCC § 2-725, where automobile was delivered by dealer to original purchaser more than five years before action was commenced; exception to limitations provision, that breach of warranty occurs when breach is or should be discovered where warranty "explicitly" extends to future performance of goods, does not apply to implied warranties. GMC v. Tate, 257 Ark. 347, 516 S.W.2d 602 (1974).

20. Actions that will toll statute of limitations.

In action by buyer of computer system for damages for system's failure to function properly, court held (1) that parties' designation under UCC § 1-105(1) of Massachusetts law to govern their sales contract was immaterial, since buyer's breach-of-contract claims were governed by limitation period contained in UCC § 2-725(1), which had been adopted by both New York and Massachusetts; (2) that contract in suit was not one for performance of services, as alleged by buyer, but was one for purchase of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); (3) that action was not timely commenced by buyer, since breach had occurred in January, 1971 and buyer did not commence suit until August 14, 1975, which was more than four years after cause of action accrued; (4) that UCC § 2-725(2), which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance and provides that discovery of breach must await such performance, did not apply, since warranty under UCC § 2-725(2) must expressly refer to the future and implied warranty alleged by buyer, by its very nature, did not do so; and (5) that seller's attempts to repair computer system did not toll running of statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Where (1) buyer purchased capsule-filling machine from defendant, (2) machine was delivered on April 10, 1972, and (3) buyer sued for breach of contract and breach of warranty on September 8, 1976, court held (1) that four-year period of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) barred plaintiff's cause of action, (2) that in absence of explicit warranty extending to future performance, such four-year period would be calculated from April 10, 1972, which was date of delivery of machine, and (3) that making of repairs on machine, by itself, was insufficient to toll statute (holding that summary judgment should not have been entered against plaintiff, since plenary hearing should have been held to determine whether defendant was estopped to assert statute of limitations as defense). Biocraft Lab., Inc. v. USM Corp., 163 N.J. Super. 570, 395 A.2d 521 (App. Div. 1978).

Action for breach of implied warranty of fitness for particular purpose of boat sold to plaintiff by defendant, which was filed more than four years after delivery of boat to plaintiff, was not timely under UCC § 2-725(1) because (1) warranty sued on, which was implied only and not explicit, did not extend to future performance of boat within meaning of UCC § 2-725(2), (2) statute of limitations was not tolled by defendant's efforts to repair boat's defects, (3) "time of discovery" rule also did not toll the statute, since plaintiff obviously knew of boat's defects during limitation period, but did not initiate any action thereon, and (4) defendant was not estopped from relying on statute of limitations because it, allegedly, had misled plaintiff into believing that there was only a one-year warranty on the boat and that such warranty had expired (also observing that defendant was under no obligation to inform plaintiff that statute of limitations was running). Tomes v. Chrysler Corp., 60 Ill. App. 3d 707, 377 N.E.2d 224 (1st Dist. 1978).

Under UCC § 2-725(2), a breach of warranty generally occurs on delivery of the goods, regardless of the time of discovery of the breach. However, where there is an agreement to repair or to replace goods, the warranty is not breached until there is a refusal or failure to repair (reversing summary judgment for defendant in action for breach of warranty to repair and replace because question of fact existed as to whether plaintiff's cause had accrued prior to four-year limitation period prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1)). Space Leasing Assocs. v. Atlantic Bldg. Sys., 144 Ga. App. 320, 241 S.E.2d 438 (1977).

Four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1) barred plaintiff airline's action for breach of express and implied warranties in sale and lease to plaintiff of four airplanes, which allegedly had cracks in wings of each aircraft, since (1) under UCC § 2-725(2) such four-year period began to run at time of tender of delivery of airplanes, (2) statute made aggrieved party's knowledge of breach of contract irrelevant, and (3) plaintiff, under facts of case, was precluded from successfully asserting equitable estoppel and fraudulent concealment under UCC § 2-725(4) to toll statute of limitations. Also since, under UCC §§ 2-314 through 2-318, Uniform Commercial Code remedy was available for breach of express and implied warranties, no right to common-law action for breach of such warranties existed. Alaska Airlines, Inc. v. Lockheed Aircraft Corp., 430 F. Supp. 134 (D. Alaska 1977).

In absence of express warranty explicitly guaranteeing future performance or quality of brick which was used in construction of home but which deteriorated, homeowner's cause of action for breach of implied warranty under UCC § 2-314 against manufacturer of brick accrued and limitations statute began to run under UCC § 2-725 from time brick was delivered; however, limitations statute was tolled by manufacturer's absence from state notwithstanding that it could have been served under long arm statute. Beckmire v. Ristokrat Clay Prods. Co., 36 Ill. App. 3d 411, 343 N.E.2d 530 (2d Dist. 1976).

Commencement of action for breach of implied warranties in federal court did not toll running of statute of limitations (UCC § 2-725) against action in state court. Royal-Globe Ins. Cos. v. Hauck Mfg. Co., 233 Pa. Super. 248, 335 A.2d 460 (1975).

Action to recover increased customs duties and fines allegedly incurred as result of mislabeling of 40 drums of resin which plaintiffs ordered from defendant and which were shipped in October, 1964, was not barred by four-year statute of limitations applicable to contract for sale of goods under UCC § 2-725 where suit was commenced by service of summons on February 21, 1968, while complaint, alleging causes of action in negligence and contract, was served on February 23, 1973. Fuchs & Lang Sun Chem. de Venezuela, C.A. v. Schenectady Chems., Inc., 43 A.D.2d 881 (3d Dep't 1974).

In action by purchaser of air conditioning units against seller and manufacturer for breach of warranty where installation of units was completed in April, 1964, discovery of breach was made in July, 1964, and complaint was filed in April, 1969, suit was clearly beyond four-year statutory requirement and statute was not tolled during period defendants attempted to repair units. Zahler v. Star Steel Supply Co., 50 Mich. App. 386, 213 N.W.2d 269, 68 A.L.R.3d 1271 (1973).

Fraud will suspend running of UCC statute of limitations. United States v. Pall Corp., 367 F. Supp. 976 (E.D.N.Y. 1973).

21. Timeliness of institution of particular actions.

In action by buyer of computer system for damages for system's failure to function properly, court held (1) that parties' designation under UCC § 1-105(1) of Massachusetts law to govern their sales contract was immaterial, since buyer's breach-of-contract claims were governed by limitation period contained in UCC § 2-725(1), which had been adopted by both New York and Massachusetts; (2) that contract in suit was not one for performance of services, as alleged by buyer, but was one for purchase of goods within meaning of UCC § 2-106(1); (3) that action was not timely commenced by buyer, since breach had occurred in January, 1971 and buyer did not commence suit until August 14, 1975, which was more than four years after cause of action accrued; (4) that UCC § 2-725(2), which deals with warranty that explicitly extends to future performance and provides that discovery of breach must await such performance, did not apply, since warranty under UCC § 2-725(2) must expressly refer to the future and implied warranty alleged by buyer, by its very nature, did not do so; and (5) that seller's attempts to repair computer system did not toll running of statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1). Triangle Underwriters, Inc. v. Honeywell, Inc., 457 F. Supp. 765 (E.D.N.Y. 1978), rev'd on other grounds, 604 F.2d 737 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Action for damages arising out of sale of defective television equipment was time barred by four-year limitation of UCC § 2-725 where sale took place in April, 1969, buyer became aware of defects in March, 1970, and original complaint was filed on December 4, 1975; buyer's general allegations of fraudulent conduct on part of seller were not sufficient to transform claim into action for fraud and thus avoid statute. Closed Circuit Corp. of Am. v. Jerrold Elecs. Corp., 426 F. Supp. 361 (E.D. Pa. 1977).

Creditor's account claim in probate proceedings clearly was not barred by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1) where invoices which constituted basis of claim bore February, 1974 and March, 1974 dates, and claim was filed in January, 1977. Furniture Dynamics, Inc. v. Estate of Hurley, 560 S.W.2d 486 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Action for damages for breach of contract in sale of mobile home, which was instituted against seller and manufacturer of such home more than four years after cause of action accrued, was barred by four-year statute of limitations set forth in UCC § 2-725(1) (also holding that buyer's laches in bringing suit barred his right to rescission of sales contract and refund of purchase price paid for such home, and that such laches were based on analogous statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1)). Brabender v. Kit Mfg. Co., 174 Mont. 63, 568 P.2d 547 (1977).

Action by partnership and its two partners to recover for economic losses allegedly caused by deficient irrigation equipment leased from one defendant and defective pump parts manufactured by second defendant and sold by third defendant was not barred by UCC § 2-725(1) and (2), notwithstanding such action was not commenced within four years after cause of action accrued, where one partner had filed suit, in his name only, within four-year period, but action was dismissed upon stipulation of parties after trial court denied partner's motion to join partnership and other partner, and where present action by § 2-725(3); original action was not "voluntarily discontinued," within meaning of § 2-725(3), notwithstanding stipulation by which parties agreed that original action be dismissed without prejudice, since partner, to maintain suit, was forced to dismiss action so that another could be filed naming indispensable party plaintiffs. Hiles Co. v. Johnston Pump Co., 93 Nev. 73, 560 P.2d 154 (1977).

In action by seller against guarantor of bankrupt buyer to recover amounts due on dishonored trade acceptances and bills of exchange issued by buyer to pay for goods sold, action was not barred by four-year statute of limitations governing contracts of sale that is set forth in UCC § 2-725(1), but was subject to six-year statute of limitations that applied to contracts generally because (1) defendant's guarantee was undertaking separate from underlying sales contract; (2) UCC Art 2 does not, expressly or by implication, provide that it is applicable to guarantees of contracts of sale; and (3) there was no statute which provided that provisions of Art 2 should supersede statutes of limitation governing contracts generally simply because undertaking is guarantee of contract of sale, rather than some other type of contract (holding that defendant's guarantee covered trade acceptances furnished seller by buyer and that action was timely because commenced within six-year period for bringing action on trade acceptances). American Trading Co. v. Fish, 42 N.Y.2d 20, 364 N.E.2d 1309 (1977).

Where claim by seller for rebates promised by buyer of cottonseed for 1971 accrued in August 1972, 4-year statute of limitations under UCC § 2-725 had not run against claim when filed in May, 1976. Tennessee Valley Cotton Oil Mill v. Oakland Gin Co., 341 So. 2d 153 (Ala. Civ. App. 1976).

In interpleader proceeding, claim of contractor for price of merchandise sold to subcontractor was barred by four year statute of limitations, where all transactions were prior to September 16, 1965 and suit was not filed until April 5, 1973. Gevyn Constr. Corp. v. Affiliated Engrs, Inc., 375 F. Supp. 207 (W.D. Pa. 1974).

22. —Breach of warranty.

Prescriptive periods applicable to claims brought by statutory heirs arising from alleged wrongful death of decedent were not tolled during pendency of prior wrongful death actions, inasmuch as wrongful death statute did not operate to bar any other action unless matter was decided on its merits, and in further view of fact that plaintiffs were active in state court litigation involving same subject matter before the court; plaintiffs' active involvement in state court action and their filing of prior lawsuit in federal court absolutely destroyed their argument that they were prohibited by law from bringing suit, furthermore, their participation in such earlier lawsuits negated any suspension of limitation period applicable under state law. Brown v. Dow Chem. Co., 777 F. Supp. 504 (S.D. Miss. 1989).

In an action by a nursing home against a supplier of roofing material for damages arising out of the cost of replacing a defective roof, the District Court properly granted summary judgment for the defendant on the ground that the action was barred by the applicable statute of limitations where the roofing material was delivered in 1972, there was no express warranty on the material, and the action was not commenced until 1980. Ocean Springs Corp. v. Celotex Corp., 662 F.2d 353 (5th Cir. 1981).

Plaintiff, the subpurchaser of a defective used crane, may not recover its economic loss resulting from the inability to make use of the defective crane from defendant, the manufacturer of the crane, under the theory of breach of warranty since there is no contractual relationship between the parties and therefore no warranty either express or implied under the Uniform Commercial Code; the extended protection of warranty to persons who may reasonably be expected to use, consume or be affected by goods, is afforded only to natural persons who suffer personal injuries (Uniform Commercial Code, § 2-318) or to subpurchasers who justifiably relied upon representations made by the manufacturer to the public through advertising and in labels tagged to the goods themselves (see Randy Knitwear v. American Cyanamid Co., 11 NY2d 5) and plaintiff, which purchased the crane "as is", assumed risks based on the prior use of the crane and cannot show justifiable reliance and, in any event, since the crane was delivered to the initial purchaser in 1970, the action based on breach of warranty is barred by the Statute of Limitations. Steckmar Nat'l Realty & Inv. Corp. v. JI Case Co., 99 Misc. 2d 212 (1979).

In action by buyer of forging machine for seller's breach of both its express performance warranties and its repair-and-replacement-of-parts warranty, where (1) delivery and installation of machine took place in October, 1967, (2) buyer, on December 29, 1967, sent letter to seller which detailed machine's performance defects, (3) seller for five months attempted to repair machine, but stopped such efforts on June 21, 1968, (4) buyer filed suit for breach of seller's warranties on May 29, 1969, and (5) contract between parties contained one-year limitation period for bringing such suit, which was minimum period allowed by UCC § 2-725(1), court held (1) that under UCC § 2-725(2), cause of action for breach of warranty accrues on initial installation of product, regardless of whether it functions properly, as long as seller's warranty does not extend to future performance, (2) that in present case, seller's express performance warranties explicitly extended to future performance for period of one year, since seller had expressly warranted machine's performance for such period, (3) that as a result, buyer's cause of action on such warranties accrued, under UCC § 2-725(2), when buyer discovered, or should have discovered, that machine was defective, as long as such defects occurred during machine's warranty period, (4) that since parties' contract provided for one-year limitation period for bringing suit for breach of contract, and since buyer had discovered and reported machine's defects to seller by letter on December 29, 1967, buyer's failure to institute suit until May 29, 1969, which was more than one year after discovery of defects, caused such suit to be barred under UCC § 2-725(2), (5) that seller was not estopped to assert statute of limitations as defense because of its spending over five months in attempting to repair machine, since such repair efforts did not toll running of statute under Ohio law, which applied to case under UCC § 2-725(4), (6) that buyer's cause of action for seller's breach of its express warranty to repair or replace defective parts was not barred by contract's one-year period of limitations, since seller's repair efforts were terminated on June 21, 1968 and buyer's suit was filed within a year thereafter on May 29, 1969, and (7) that buyer's failure to notify seller of its breach of repair-or-replacement-of-defective-parts warranty, which was required by UCC § 2-607(3)(a), was fatal to buyer's cause of action on such warranty. Standard Alliance Indus., Inc. v. Black Clawson Co., 12 Ohio Op. 3d 246, 587 F.2d 813 (6th Cir. Ohio 1978), cert. denied, 441 U.S. 923, 99 S. Ct. 2032, 60 L. Ed. 2d 396 (1979).

Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1), providing that action for breach of contract of sale must be commenced within six years after cause of action accrued, applies to cause of action for breach of implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for particular purpose attaching to color television set. Maly v. Magnavox Co., 460 F. Supp. 47 (N.D. Miss. 1978).

Action for breach of express warranties attaching to sale of mobile home was barred by UCC § 2-725(1) and (2) where home was purchased on August 3, 1973, but suit was not instituted until September 12, 1977. Steele v. Belmont Trailer Sales, Inc., 445 F. Supp. 53 (E.D. Mo. 1977).

In action by lessee of aircraft, aircraft's lessor-purchaser, and other against both rebuilder and installer of aircraft's defective landing-gear box for breach of warranty and strict liability in tort, where landing-gear box was rebuilt on November 2, 1968 and installed in April, 1969, aircraft was purchased by lessor from installer of landing-gear box on June 3, 1969 and leased to plaintiff on November 6, 1970, and aircraft's left landing gear collapsed on November 23, 1970, while aircraft was in a landing rollout, plaintiff's breach of warranty claim was barred by four-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 2-725(1) (holding that fact that plaintiff's breach of warranty claim was barred did not bar plaintiff's tort claims). Chicago & S. Airlines v. Volpar, Inc., 54 Ill. App. 3d 609, 370 N.E.2d 54 (1st Dist. 1977).

Action by homeowner against contractor and supply company alleging breach of warranty with respect to certain building materials was not barred by UCC § 2-725 even though such building materials were delivered more than four years prior to date when action was commenced; contracts between parties did not provide for "sale" and general six-year limitation period for breach of contract, not four-year period of § 2-725, would apply. DeMatteo v. White, 233 Pa. Super. 339, 336 A.2d 355 (1975).

Action against seller and manufacturer of truck for breach of warranty was barred by UCC § 2-725 where it was filed more than four years after truck was delivered. May Trucking Co. v. International Harvester Co., 97 Idaho 319, 543 P.2d 1159 (1975).

23. —Personal injury actions.

In action against manufacturer for personal injuries sustained by minor when her pajamas caught fire, four-year statute of limitations provided by UCC § 2-725(1) applied and began to run, under UCC § 2-725(2), from date of retail sale of pajamas to plaintiff's mother, instead of date on which manufacturer sold pajamas to retailer. In such case, although Uniform Commercial Code provided no clear answer to question as to when plaintiff's cause of action accrued because it does not specify to whom tender of delivery must be made in order to start running of the statute, nevertheless, since primary purpose for which warranties are made is to protect ultimate consumer, warranty should begin to run when ultimate consumer receives goods and not when retailer obtains goods from manufacturer for resale (applying Pennsylvania law; refusing to adopt interpretation of UCC § 2-725(2) that might allow statute of limitations in UCC § 2-725(1) to run before injured consumer ever received goods that injured her). Patterson v. Her Majesty Indus., Inc., 450 F. Supp. 425 (E.D. Pa. 1978).

In action by consumer, who was allegedly burned when pajamas she was wearing caught fire, against seller, manufacturer of pajamas, and manufacturer of fabric, cross claims of seller and manufacturer of pajamas against manufacturer of fabric were not barred, even though four-year statute of limitations for breach of warranty actions contained in UCC § 2-725 had run. Infante v. Montgomery Ward & Co., 49 A.D.2d 72 (3d Dep't 1975).

24. —Personal injury actions: breach of warranty.

In suit by hospital cashier who was injured while operating cash register manufactured by defendant manufacturer-seller after it had been delivered by buyer to hospital, court held, with respect to plaintiff's breach-of-implied-warranty claims, (1) that under Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), which sets forth specific conflict-of-laws rule for warranty claims, Mississippi law governed the rights and duties of parties with regard to (a) disclaimers of implied warranties of merchantability or fitness, (b) limitation of remedies for breach of such warranties, and (c) necessity of privity of contract to maintain action for breach of warranty; (2) that rule of Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), as expressly stated therein, applied notwithstanding agreement by parties that laws of another state or of foreign nation governed parties' rights and duties; (3) that under Mississippi UCC § 1-105(1), application of Mississippi substantive law on privity of contract, warranty disclaimers, and limitation of remedies in warranty action was authorized only if transaction that gave rise to warranty claim bore some reasonable and appropriate relation to Mississippi; (4) that facts of case showed that transactions that gave rise to plaintiff's warranty claim did not bear any relation to Mississippi and did not warrant application of Mississippi substantive law; (5) that under conflict-of-law "center-of-gravity" doctrine, Alabama had most significant relation to transactions in suit; (6) that since Alabama's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Alabama UCC § 2-725(1) and (2)) would be regarded as procedural, Mississippi's breach-of-warranty statute of limitations (see Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1) and (2)) governed case; and (7) that under Mississippi UCC § 2-725(1) and (2), plaintiff's warranty claim was barred because tender of delivery of cash register that caused plaintiff's injuries had occurred more than six years before accrual of plaintiff's cause of action. Jackson v. National Semi-Conductor Data Checker/DTS, Inc., 660 F. Supp. 65 (S.D. Miss. 1986).

Cause of action against manufacturers of asbestos products by one who alleged that as result of 30 years' work as insulation employee, he had developed asbestosis, and who based such cause on defendants' alleged breach of warranty of merchantability attaching to defendants' sales of asbestos products to plaintiff's employers, was barred by four-year statute of limitations set forth in UCC § 2-725(1), since defendants could only have sold products allegedly involved in plaintiff's injury to plaintiff's employers before termination of plaintiff's employment, and such termination occurred more than four years before service of process in action. McKee v. Johns Manville Corp., 94 Misc. 2d 327 (1978), modified, 78 A.D.2d 577, 432 N.Y.S.2d 422 (4th Dep't 1980), aff'd, 54 N.Y.2d 1008, 446 N.Y.S.2d 244, 430 N.E.2d 1297 (1981), remittitur amended, 55 N.Y.2d 802, 447 N.Y.S.2d 437, 432 N.E.2d 139 (1981), appeal dismissed, cert. denied, 456 U.S. 967, 102 S. Ct. 2226, 72 L. Ed. 2d 840 (1982).

Cause of action for injuries caused by fall of high-lift machine on plaintiff, which was based on breach of express and implied warranties as provided by Uniform Commercial Code, was barred by statute of limitations set forth in UCC § 2-725(1) where more than five years had passed between time of plaintiff's injury and service of process on defendant. Strenk v. Rausch Equip. Corp., 58 A.D.2d 986 (4th Dep't 1977).

Where infant was injured on October 28, 1973 by manure spreader manufactured by defendant; where spreader was manufactured in 1961 and sold to infant's parents on December 7, 1966; and where, on May 15, 1974, action for damages for infant's injuries was instituted containing causes based on theory of strict products liability and theory of breach of implied warranty of merchantability, (1) cause of action based on breach of warranty was separate and distinct from cause based on strict products liability; (2) three-year statute of limitations governing personal injuries applied to strict products liability claim and did not bar such claim, since action was timely commenced on May 15, 1974; and (3) cause of action based on breach of warranty was barred by four-year statute of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725, since spreader was purchased in 1966. Ribley v. Harsco Corp., 57 A.D.2d 234 (3d Dep't 1977).

Four-year period of limitations prescribed by UCC § 2-725(1) did not bar action against supplier of intrauterine device for breach of implied warranties where action was instituted slightly more than two years after product was first used by plaintiff. Hamilton v. Turner, 377 A.2d 363 (Del. Super. 1977).

Breach of warranty action, alleging that oral contraceptive caused blindness, was barred by four-year statute of limitations in UCC § 2-725, where plaintiff made her last purchase of the contraceptive more than four years prior to commencing her action. Raymond v. Eli Lilly & Co., 412 F. Supp. 1392 (D.N.H. 1976), aff'd, 556 F.2d 628 (1st Cir. N.H. 1977).

Breach of warranty action for injuries allegedly caused by defective automobile exhaust pipe was barred by four year statute of limitations of UCC § 2-725(1), notwithstanding that injuries were incurred within four years prior to service of summons and complaint, where more than four years elapsed between date of automobile sale and service of summons and complaint. Weinstein v. GMC, 51 A.D.2d 335 (1st Dep't 1976).

25. Pleading.

Personal injury action arising from breach of warranty in connection with sale of goods must be filed within four years of date of sale, not of injury. Peeke v. Penn Cent. Transp. Co., 403 F. Supp. 70 (E.D. Pa. 1975), aff'd sub nom. Celotex Corp. v. Whiting Corp., 538 F.2d 318 (3d Cir. Pa. 1976), aff'd, 538 F.2d 320 (3d Cir. Pa. 1976), aff'd sub nom. Penn Cent. Transp. Co. v. Celotex Corp., 538 F.2d 320 (3d Cir. Pa. 1976).

In action for damages for injury to property arising out of defendant's sale to plaintiff of allegedly defective roof-coating materials, plaintiff's claim under theory of breach of warranty was not barred by UCC § 2-725(1) where complaint on its face alleged that certain deliveries of such materials were tendered by defendant less than four years before commencement of action. Stiles v. Porter Paint Co., 75 F.R.D. 617 (E.D. Tenn. 1976).

In action for personal injuries allegedly resulting from accident involving product manufactured by defendant, plaintiff's cause of action was founded in tort and was thus barred by two-year statute of limitations where plaintiff failed to plead such facts as would bring UCC § 2-725 statute of limitations into play on theory of "implied warranty." O'Neal v. Black &

Decker Mfg. Co., 523 P.2d 614 (Okla. 1974).

The defense of the statute of limitations will be deemed waived where it is not raised by the defendant in his answer to the plaintiff's complaint and there is a long delay before the defendant seeks to amend his answer to raise the defense of the statute. Basko v. Winthrop Lab., Inc., 268 F. Supp. 26 (D. Conn. 1967).

This section is substantive and not procedural, and in a diversity action brought in Delaware where the plaintiff's injuries arose in Pennsylvania the shorter Delaware statute of limitations applied and the defendant's motion to dismiss was granted. Natale v. Upjohn Co., 236 F. Supp. 37 (D. Del. 1964), aff'd, 356 F.2d 590 (3d Cir. Del. 1966).

Manufacturer defending an action predicated on breach of warranty and negligence would be permitted to amend its answer in order to affirmatively assert the defenses of statute of limitations, contributory negligence, and assumption of risk. Harvey v. Eimco Corp., 32 F.R.D. 598 (E.D. Pa. 1963).

§ 75-2A-103. Definitions and index of definitions.

(1) In this chapter unless the context otherwise requires:

(a) "Buyer in ordinary course of business" means a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the sale to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest or leasehold interest of a third party in the goods, buys in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. "Buying" may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a preexisting contract for sale but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt.

(b) "Cancellation" occurs when either party puts an end to the lease contract for default by the other party.

(c) "Commercial unit" means such a unit of goods as by commercial usage is a single whole for purposes of lease and division of which materially impairs its character or value on the market or in use. A commercial unit may be a single article, as a machine, or a set of articles, as a suite of furniture or a line of machinery, or a quantity, as a gross or carload, or any other unit treated in use or in the relevant market as a single whole.

(d) "Conforming" goods or performance under a lease contract means goods or performance that are in accordance with the obligations under the lease contract.

(e) "Consumer lease" means a lease that a lessor regularly engaged in the business of leasing or selling makes to a lessee who is an individual and who takes under the lease primarily for a personal, family or household purpose, if the total payments to be made under the lease contract, excluding payments for options to renew or buy, do not exceed Twenty-five Thousand Dollars ($25,000.00).

(f) "Fault" means wrongful act, omission, breach or default.

(g) "Finance lease" means a lease with respect to which:

(i) The lessor does not select, manufacture, or supply the goods;

(ii) The lessor acquires the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods in connection with the lease; and

(iii) One (1) of the following occurs:

(A) The lessee receives a copy of the contract by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods before signing the lease contract;

(B) The lessee's approval of the contract by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods is a condition to effectiveness of the lease contract;

(C) The lessee, before signing the lease contract, receives an accurate and complete statement designating the promises and warranties, and any disclaimers of warranties, limitations or modifications of remedies, or liquidated damages, including those of a third party, such as the manufacturer of the goods, provided to the lessor by the person supplying the goods in connection with or as part of the contract by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods; or

(D) If the lease is not a consumer lease, the lessor, before the lessee signs the lease contract, informs the lessee in writing (a) of the identity of the person supplying the goods to the lessor, unless the lessee has selected that person and directed the lessor to acquire the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods from that person, (b) that the lessee is entitled under this chapter to the promises and warranties, including those of any third party, provided to the lessor by the person supplying the goods in connection with or as part of the contract by which the lessor acquired the goods or the right to possession and use of the goods, and (c) that the lessee may communicate with the person supplying the goods to the lessor and receive an accurate and complete statement of those promises and warranties, including any disclaimers and limitations of them or of remedies.

(h) “Goods” means all things that are movable at the time of identification to the lease contract, or are fixtures (Section 75-2A-309), but the term does not include money, documents, instruments, accounts, chattel paper, general intangibles or minerals or the like, including oil and gas, before extraction. The term also includes the unborn young of animals.

(i) “Installment lease contract” means a lease contract that authorizes or requires the delivery of goods in separate lots to be separately accepted, even though the lease contract contains a clause “each delivery is a separate lease” or its equivalent.

(j) “Lease” means a transfer of the right to possession and use of goods for a term in return for consideration, but a sale, including a sale on approval or a sale or return, or retention or creation of a security interest is not a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease.

(k) “Lease agreement” means the bargain, with respect to the lease, of the lessor and the lessee in fact as found in their language or by implication from other circumstances including course of dealing or usage of trade or course of performance as provided in this chapter. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease agreement.

(l) “Lease contract” means the total legal obligation that results from the lease agreement as affected by this chapter and any other applicable rules of law. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease contract.

(m) “Leasehold interest” means the interest of the lessor or the lessee under a lease contract.

(n) “Lessee” means a person who acquires the right to possession and use of goods under a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublease.

(o) “Lessee in ordinary course of business” means a person who in good faith and without knowledge that the lease to him is in violation of the ownership rights or security interest or leasehold interest of a third party in the goods leases in ordinary course from a person in the business of selling or leasing goods of that kind but does not include a pawnbroker. “Leasing” may be for cash or by exchange of other property or on secured or unsecured credit and includes receiving goods or documents of title under a preexisting lease contract but does not include a transfer in bulk or as security for or in total or partial satisfaction of a money debt.

(p) "Lessor" means a person who transfers the right to possession and use of goods under a lease. Unless the context clearly indicates otherwise, the term includes a sublessor.

(q) "Lessor's residual interest" means the lessor's interest in the goods after expiration, termination or cancellation of the lease contract.

(r) "Lien" means a charge against or interest in goods to secure payment of a debt or performance of an obligation, but the term does not include a security interest.

(s) "Lot" means a parcel or a single article that is the subject matter of a separate lease or delivery, whether or not it is sufficient to perform the lease contract.

(t) "Merchant lessee" means a lessee that is a merchant with respect to goods of the kind subject to the lease.

(u) "Present value" means the amount as of a date certain of one or more sums payable in the future, discounted to the date certain. The discount is determined by the interest rate specified by the parties if the rate was not manifestly unreasonable at the time the transaction was entered into; otherwise, the discount is determined by a commercially reasonable rate that takes into account the facts and circumstances of each case at the time the transaction was entered into.

(v) "Purchase" includes taking by sale, lease, mortgage, security interest, pledge, gift or any other voluntary transaction creating an interest in goods.

(w) "Sublease" means a lease of goods the right to possession and use of which was acquired by the lessor as a lessee under an existing lease.

(x) "Supplier" means a person from whom a lessor buys or leases goods to be leased under a finance lease.

(y) "Supply contract" means a contract under which a lessor buys or leases goods to be leased.

(z) "Termination" occurs when either party pursuant to a power created by agreement or law puts an end to the lease contract otherwise than for default.

(2) With respect to a consumer lease, if the court as a matter of law finds that a lease contract or any clause of a lease contract has been induced by unconscionable conduct or that unconscionable conduct has occurred in the collection of a claim arising from a lease contract, the court may grant appropriate relief.

(3) Before making a finding of unconscionability under subsection (1) or (2), the court, on its own motion or that of a party, shall afford the parties a reasonable opportunity to present evidence as to the setting, purpose and effect of the lease contract or clause thereof, or of the conduct.

(4) In an action in which the lessee claims unconscionability with respect to a consumer lease:

(1) A lease contract is not enforceable by way of action or defense unless:

(a) The total payments to be made under the lease contract, excluding payments for options to renew or buy, are less than One Thousand Dollars ($1,000.00); or

(b) There is a writing, signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought or by that party's authorized agent, sufficient to indicate that a lease contract has been made between the parties and to describe the goods leased and the lease term.

(2) Any description of leased goods or of the lease term is sufficient and satisfies subsection (1)(b), whether or not it is specific, if it reasonably identifies what is described.

(3) A writing is not insufficient because it omits or incorrectly states a term agreed upon, but the lease contract is not enforceable under subsection (1)(b) beyond the lease term and the quantity of goods shown in the writing.

(4) A lease contract that does not satisfy the requirements of subsection (1), but which is valid in other respects, is enforceable:

(a) If the goods are to be specially manufactured or obtained for the lessee and are not suitable for lease or sale to others in the ordinary course of the lessor's business, and the lessor, before notice of repudiation is received and under circumstances that reasonably indicate that the goods are for the lessee, has made either a substantial beginning of their manufacture or commitments for their procurement;

(b) If the party against whom enforcement is sought admits in that party's pleading, testimony or otherwise in court that a lease contract was made, but the lease contract is not enforceable under this provision beyond the quantity of goods admitted; or

(c) With respect to goods that have been received and accepted by the lessee.

(5) The lease term under a lease contract referred to in subsection (4) is:

(a) If there is a writing signed by the party against whom enforcement is sought or by that party's authorized agent specifying the lease term, the term so specified;

(b) If the party against whom enforcement is sought admits in that party's pleading, testimony or otherwise in court a lease term, the term so admitted; or

(c) A reasonable lease term.

§ 75-2A-204. Formation in general.

(1) A lease contract may be made in any manner sufficient to show agreement, including conduct by both parties which recognizes the existence of a lease contract.

(2) An agreement sufficient to constitute a lease contract may be found although the moment of its making is undetermined.

(3) Although one or more terms are left open, a lease contract does not fail for indefiniteness if the parties have intended to make a lease contract and there is a reasonable certain basis for giving an appropriate remedy.

§ 75-2A-205. Firm offers.

An offer by a merchant to lease goods to or from another person in a signed writing that by its terms gives assurance it will be held open is not revocable, for lack of consideration, during the time stated or, if no time is stated, for a reasonable time, but in no event may the period of irrevocability exceed three (3) months. Any such term of assurance on a form supplied by the offeree must be separately signed by the offeror.

(1) Unless otherwise unambiguously indicated by the language or circumstances, an offer to make a lease contract must be construed as inviting acceptance in any manner and by any medium reasonable in the circumstances.

§ 75-2A-207. Course of performance or practical construction.

(1) If a lease contract involves repeated occasions for performance by either party with knowledge of the nature of the performance and opportunity for objection to it by the other, any course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection is relevant to determine the meaning of the lease agreement.

(2) The express terms of a lease agreement and any course of performance, as well as any course of dealing and usage of trade, must be construed whenever reasonable as consistent with each other; but if that construction is unreasonable, express terms control course of performance, course of performance controls both course of dealing and usage of trade, and course of dealing controls usage of trade.

(3) Subject to the provisions of Section 75-2A-208 on modification and waiver, course of performance is relevant to show a waiver or modification of any term inconsistent with the course of performance.

§ 75-2A-208. Modification, rescission and waiver.

(1) An agreement modifying a lease contract needs no consideration to be binding.

(2) A signed lease agreement that excludes modification or rescission except by a signed writing may not be otherwise modified or rescinded, but, except as between merchants, such a requirement on a form supplied by a merchant must be separately signed by the other party.

(3) Although an attempt at modification or rescission does not satisfy the requirements of subsection (2), it may operate as a waiver.

(4) A party who has made a waiver affecting an executory portion of a lease contract may retract the waiver by reasonable notification received by the other party that strict performance will be required of any term waived, unless the retraction would be unjust in view of a material change of position in reliance on the waiver.

§ 75-2A-209. Lessee under finance lease as beneficiary of supply contract.

(1) The benefit of a supplier's promises to the lessor under the supply contract and of all warranties, whether express or implied, including those of any third party provided in connection with or as part of the supply contract, extends to the lessee to the extent of the lessee's leasehold interest under a finance lease related to the supply contract, but is subject to the terms of the warranty and of the supply contract and all defenses or claims arising therefrom.

(2) The extension of the benefit of a supplier's promises and of warranties to the lessee (Section 75-2A-209(1)) does not: (i) modify the rights and obligations of the parties to the supply contract, whether arising therefrom or otherwise, or (ii) impose any duty or liability under the supply contract on the lessee.

(3) Any modification or rescission of the supply contract by the supplier and the lessor is effective between the supplier and the lessee unless, before the modification or rescission, the supplier has received notice that the lessee has entered into a finance lease related to the supply contract. If the modification or rescission is effective between the supplier and the lessee, the lessor is deemed to have assumed, in addition to the obligations of the lessor to the lessee under the lease contract, promises of the supplier to the lessor and warranties that were so modified or rescinded as they existed and were available to the lessee before modification or rescission.

(4) In addition to the extension of the benefit of the supplier's promises and of warranties to the lessee under subsection (1), the lessee retains all rights that the lessee may have against the supplier which arise from an agreement between the lessee and the supplier or under other law.

§ 75-2A-210. Express warranties.

(1) Express warranties by the lessor are created as follows:

(a) Any affirmation of fact or promise made by the lessor to the lessee which relates to the goods and becomes part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the goods will conform to the affirmation or promise.

(b) Any description of the goods which is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the goods will conform to the description.

(c) Any sample or model that is made part of the basis of the bargain creates an express warranty that the whole of the goods will conform to the sample or model.

(2) It is not necessary to the creation of an express warranty that the lessor use formal words, such as "warrant" or "guarantee," or that the lessor have a specific intention to make a warranty, but an affirmation merely of the value of the goods or a statement purporting to be merely the lessor's opinion or commendation of the goods does not create a warranty.

(2) Except in a finance lease there is in a lease contract by a lessor who is a merchant regularly dealing in goods of the kind a warranty that the goods are delivered free of the rightful claim of any person by way of infringement or the like.

(3) A lessee who furnishes specifications to a lessor or a supplier shall hold the lessor and the supplier harmless against any claim by way of infringement or the like that arises out of compliance with the specifications.

(a) Pass without objection in the trade under the description in the lease agreement;

(b) In the case of fungible goods, are of fair average quality within the description;

(c) Are fit for the ordinary purposes for which goods of that type are used;

(d) Run, within the variation permitted by the lease agreement, of even kind, quality and quantity within each unit and among all units involved;

§ 75-2A-215. Cumulation and conflict of warranties express or implied.

Warranties, whether express or implied, must be construed as consistent with each other and as cumulative, but if that construction is unreasonable, the intention of the parties determines which warranty is dominant. In ascertaining that intention, the following rules apply:

(a) Exact or technical specifications displace an inconsistent sample or model or general language of description.

(b) A sample from an existing bulk displaces inconsistent general language of description.

(c) Express warranties displace inconsistent implied warranties other than an implied warranty of fitness for a particular purpose.

§ 75-2A-216. Third-party beneficiaries of express and implied warranties.

A warranty to or for the benefit of a lessee under this chapter, whether express or implied, extends to any natural person who is in the family or household of the lessee or who is a guest in the lessee's home if it is reasonable to expect that such person may use, consume or be affected by the goods and who is injured in person by breach of the warranty. This section does not displace principles of law and equity that extend a warranty to or for the benefit of a lessee to other persons. The operation of this section may not be excluded, modified or limited, but an exclusion, modification or limitation of the warranty, including any with respect to rights and remedies, effective against the lessee is also effective against any beneficiary designated under this section.

- (b) When the goods are shipped, marked or otherwise designated by the lessor as goods to which the lease contract refers, if the lease contract is for a lease of goods that are not existing and identified; or
- (c) When the young are conceived, if the lease contract is for a lease of unborn young of animals.

(1) A lessee obtains an insurable interest when existing goods are identified to the lease contract even though the goods identified are nonconforming and the lessee has an option to reject them.

(2) If a lessee has an insurable interest only by reason of the lessor's identification of the goods, the lessor, until default or insolvency or notification to the lessee that identification is final, may substitute other goods for those identified.

(3) Notwithstanding a lessee's insurable interest under subsections (1) and (2), the lessor retains an insurable interest until an option to buy has been exercised by the lessee and risk of loss has passed to the lessee.

(4) Nothing in this section impairs any insurable interest recognized under any other statute or rule of law.

(1) Except in the case of a finance lease, risk of loss is retained by the lessor and does not pass to the lessee. In the case of a finance lease, risk of loss passes to the lessee.

(2) Subject to the provisions of this chapter on the effect of default on risk of loss (Section 75-2A-220), if risk of loss is to pass to the lessee and the time of passage is not stated, the following rules apply:

(a) If the lease contract requires or authorizes the goods to be shipped by carrier

(i) And it does not require delivery at a particular destination, the risk of loss passes to the lessee when the goods are duly delivered to the carrier; but

(ii) If it does require delivery at a particular destination and the goods are there duly tendered while in the possession of the carrier, the risk of loss passes to the lessee when the goods are there duly so tendered as to enable the lessee to take delivery.

(b) If the goods are held by a bailee to be delivered without being moved, the risk of loss passes to the lessee on acknowledgement by the bailee of the lessee's right to possession of the goods.

(c) In any case not within subsection (a) or (b), the risk of loss passes to the lessee on the lessee's receipt of the goods if the lessor, or, in the case of a finance lease, the supplier, is a merchant; otherwise the risk passes to the lessee on tender of delivery.

(a) If a tender or delivery of goods so fails to conform to the lease contract as to give a right of rejection, the risk of their loss remains with the lessor, or, in the case of a finance lease, the supplier, until cure or acceptance.

(b) If the lessee rightfully revokes acceptance, he, to the extent of any deficiency in his effective insurance coverage, may treat the risk of loss as having remained with the lessor from the beginning.

(2) Whether or not risk of loss is to pass to the lessee, if the lessee as to conforming goods already identified to a lease contract repudiates or is otherwise in default under the lease contract, the lessor, or, in the case of a finance lease, the supplier, to the extent of any deficiency in his effective insurance coverage may treat the risk of loss as resting on the lessee for a commercially reasonable time.

(a) If the loss is total, the lease contract is avoided; and

(b) If the loss is partial or the goods have so deteriorated as to no longer conform to the lease contract, the lessee may nevertheless demand inspection and at his option either treat the lease contract as avoided or, except in a finance lease that is not a consumer lease, accept the goods with due allowance from the rent payable for the balance of the lease term for the deterioration or the deficiency in quantity but without further right against the lessor.

§ 75-2A-303. Alienability of party's interest under lease contract or of lessor's residual interest in goods; delegation of performance; transfer of rights.

(1) As used in this section, "creation of a security interest" includes the sale of a lease contract that is subject to Chapter 9, Secured Transactions, by reason of Section 75-9-109(a)(3).

(2) Except as provided in subsection (3) of Section 75-9-705, a provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits the voluntary or involuntary transfer, including a transfer by sale, sublease, creation or enforcement of a security interest, or attachment, levy, or other judicial process, of an interest of a party under the lease contract or of the lessor's residual interest in the goods, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, gives rise to the rights and remedies provided in subsection (4), but a transfer that is prohibited or is an event of default under the lease agreement is otherwise effective.

(3) A provision in a lease agreement which (i) prohibits a transfer of a right to damages for default with respect to the whole lease contract or of a right to payment arising out of the transferor's due performance of the transferor's entire obligation, or (ii) makes such a transfer an event of default, is not enforceable, and such a transfer is not a transfer that materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract within the purview of subsection (4).

(4) Subject to subsections (3) and Section 75-9-407:

(a) If a transfer is made which is made an event of default under a lease agreement, the party to the lease contract not making the transfer, unless that party waives the default or otherwise agrees, has the rights and remedies described in Section 75-2A-501(2);

(b) If paragraph (a) is not applicable and if a transfer is made that (i) is prohibited under a lease agreement or (ii) materially impairs the prospect of obtaining return performance by, materially changes the duty of, or materially increases the burden or risk imposed on, the other party to the lease contract, unless the party not making the transfer agrees at any time to the transfer in the lease contract or otherwise, then, except as limited by contract, (i) the transferor is liable to the party not making the transfer for damages caused by the transfer to the extent that the damages could not reasonably be prevented by the party not making the transfer and (ii) a court having jurisdiction may grant other appropriate relief, including cancellation of the lease contract or an injunction against the transfer.

(5) A transfer of "the lease" or of "all my rights under the lease," or a transfer in similar general terms, is a transfer of rights and, unless the language or the circumstances, as in a transfer for security, indicate the contrary, the transfer is a delegation of duties by the transferor to the transferee. Acceptance by the transferee constitutes a promise by the transferee to perform those duties. The promise is enforceable by either the transferor or the other party to the lease contract.

(6) Unless otherwise agreed by the lessor and the lessee, a delegation of performance does not relieve the transferor as against the other party of any duty to perform or of any liability for default.

(7) In a consumer lease, to prohibit the transfer of an interest of a party under the lease contract or to make a transfer an event of default, the language must be specific, by a writing, and conspicuous.

(1) Subject to Section 75-2A-303, a subsequent lessee from a lessor of goods under an existing lease contract obtains, to the extent of the leasehold interest transferred, the leasehold interest in the goods that the lessor had or had power to transfer, and except as provided in subsection (2) and Section 75-2A-527(4), takes subject to the existing lease contract. A lessor with voidable title has power to transfer a good leasehold interest to a good faith subsequent lessee for value, but only to the extent set forth in the preceding sentence. If goods have been delivered under a transaction of purchase, the lessor has that power even though:

- (a) The lessor’s transferor was deceived as to the identity of the lessor;
- (b) The delivery was in exchange for a check which is later dishonored;
- (c) It was agreed that the transaction was to be a “cash sale”; or
- (d) The delivery was procured through fraud punishable as larcenous under the criminal law.

(2) A subsequent lessee in the ordinary course of business from a lessor who is a merchant dealing in goods of that kind to whom the goods were entrusted by the existing lessee of that lessor before the interest of the subsequent lessee became enforceable against that lessor obtains, to the extent of the leasehold interest transferred, all of that lessor’s and the existing lessee’s rights to the goods, and takes free of the existing lease contract.

(3) A subsequent lessee from the lessor of goods that are subject to an existing lease contract and are covered by a certificate of title issued under a statute of this state or of another jurisdiction takes no greater rights than those provided both by this section and by the certificate of title statute.

A lessee with a voidable leasehold interest has power to transfer a good leasehold interest to a good faith buyer for value or a good faith sublessee for value, but only to the extent set forth in the preceding sentence. When goods have been delivered under a transaction of lease the lessee has that power even though:

- (a) The lessor was deceived as to the identity of the lessee;
- (b) The delivery was in exchange for a check which is later dishonored;

(2) A buyer in the ordinary course of business or a sublessee in the ordinary course of business from a lessee who is a merchant dealing in goods of that kind to whom the goods were entrusted by the lessor obtains, to the extent of the interest transferred, all of the lessor's and lessee's rights to the goods, and takes free of the existing lease contract.

(2) Nothing in this chapter impairs the rights of creditors of a lessor if the lease contract (a) becomes enforceable, not in current course of trade but in satisfaction of or as security for a preexisting claim for money, security, or the like, and (b) is made under circumstances which under any statute or rule of law apart from this chapter would constitute the transaction a fraudulent transfer or voidable preference.

(b) A "fixture filing" is the filing, in the office where a record of a mortgage on the real estate would be filed or recorded, of a financing statement covering goods that are or are to become fixtures and conforming to the requirements of Section 75-9-502(a) and (b);

(c) A lease is a "purchase money lease" unless the lessee has possession or use of the goods or the right to possession or use of the goods before the lease agreement is enforceable;

(d) A mortgage is a "construction mortgage" to the extent it secures an obligation incurred for the construction of an improvement on land including the acquisition cost of the land, if the recorded writing so indicates; and

(e) "Encumbrance" includes real estate mortgages and other liens on real estate and all other rights in real estate that are not ownership interests.

(2) Under this chapter a lease may be of goods that are fixtures or may continue in goods that become fixtures, but no lease exists under this chapter of ordinary building materials incorporated into an improvement on land.

(3) This chapter does not prevent creation of a lease of fixtures pursuant to real estate law.

(4) The perfected interest of a lessor of fixtures has priority over a conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate if:

(a) The lease is a purchase money lease, the conflicting interest of the encumbrancer or owner arises before the goods become fixtures, the interest of the lessor is perfected by a fixture filing before the goods become fixtures or within ten (10) days thereafter, and the lessee has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate; or

(b) The interest of the lessor is perfected by a fixture filing before the interest of the encumbrancer or owner is of record, the lessor's interest has priority over any conflicting interest of a predecessor in title of the encumbrancer or owner, and the lessee has an interest of record in the real estate or is in possession of the real estate.

(5) The interest of a lessor of fixtures, whether or not perfected, has priority over the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate if:

(a) The fixtures are readily removable factory or office machines, readily removable equipment that is not primarily used or leased for use in the operation of the real estate, or readily removable replacements of domestic appliances that are goods subject to a consumer lease, and before the goods become fixtures the lease contract is enforceable; or

(b) The conflicting interest is a lien on the real estate obtained by legal or equitable proceedings after the lease contract is enforceable; or

(c) The encumbrancer or owner has consented in writing to the lease or has disclaimed an interest in the goods as fixtures; or

(d) The lessee has a right to remove the goods as against the encumbrancer or owner. If the lessee's right to remove terminates, the priority of the interest of the lessor continues for a reasonable time.

(6) Notwithstanding subsection (4)(a) but otherwise subject to subsections (4) and (5), the interest of a lessor of fixtures, including the lessor's residual interest, is subordinate to the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer of the real estate under a construction mortgage recorded before the goods become fixtures if the goods become fixtures before the completion of the construction. To the extent given to refinance a construction mortgage, the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer of the real estate under a mortgage has this priority to the same extent as the encumbrancer of the real estate under the construction mortgage.

(7) In cases not within the preceding subsections, priority between the interest of a lessor of fixtures, including the lessor's residual interest, and the conflicting interest of an encumbrancer or owner of the real estate who is not the lessee is determined by the priority rules governing conflicting interests in real estate.

(8) If the interest of a lessor of fixtures, including the lessor's residual interest, has priority over all conflicting interests of all owners and encumbrancers of the real estate, the lessor or the lessee may (i) on default, expiration, termination or cancellation of the lease agreement but subject to the lease agreement and this chapter, or (ii) if necessary to enforce other rights and remedies of the lessor or lessee under this chapter, remove the goods from the real estate, free and clear of all conflicting interests of all owners and encumbrancers of the real estate, but the lessor or lessee must reimburse any encumbrancer or owner of the real estate who is not the lessee and who has not otherwise agreed for the cost of repair of any physical injury, but not for any diminution in value of the real estate caused by the absence of the goods removed or by any necessity of replacing them. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the party see king removal gives adequate security for the performance of this obligation.

(9) Even though the lease agreement does not create a security interest, the interest of a lessor of fixtures, including the lessor's residual interest, is perfected by filing a financing statement as a fixture filing for leased goods that are or are to become fixtures in accordance with the relevant provisions of the Chapter on Secured Transactions (Chapter 9).

§ 75-2A-310. Lessor’s and lessee’s rights when goods become accessions.

(1) Goods are “accessions” when they are installed in or affixed to other goods.

(2) The interest of a lessor or a lessee under a lease contract entered into before the goods became accessions is superior to all interests in the whole except as stated in subsection (4).

(3) The interest of a lessor or a lessee under a lease contract entered into at the time or after the goods became accessions is superior to all subsequently acquired interests in the whole except as stated in subsection (4) but is subordinate to interests in the whole existing at the time the lease contract was made unless the holders of such interests in the whole have in writing consented to the lease or disclaimed an interest in the goods as part of the whole.

(4) The interest of a lessor or a lessee under a lease contract described in subsection (2) or (3) is subordinate to the interest of

(a) A buyer in the ordinary course of business or a lessee in the ordinary course of business of any interest in the whole acquired after the goods became accessions; or

(b) A creditor with a security interest in the whole perfected before the lease contract was made to the extent that the creditor makes subsequent advances without knowledge of the lease contract.

(5) When under subsections (2) or (3) and (4) a lessor or a lessee of accessions holds an interest that is superior to all interests in the whole, the lessor or the lessee may (a) on default, expiration, termination, or cancellation of the lease contract by the other party but subject to the provisions of the lease contract and this chapter, or (b) if necessary to enforce his other rights and remedies under this chapter, remove the goods from the whole, free and clear of all interests in the whole, but he must reimburse any holder of an interest in the whole who is not the lessee and who has not otherwise agreed for the cost of repair of any physical injury but not for any diminution in value of the whole caused by the absence of the goods removed or by any necessity for replacing them. A person entitled to reimbursement may refuse permission to remove until the party seeking removal gives adequate security for the performance of this obligation.

§ 75-2A-401. Insecurity: adequate assurance of performance.

(1) A lease contract imposes an obligation on each party that the other's expectation of receiving due performance will not be impaired.

(2) If reasonable grounds for insecurity arise with respect to the performance of either party, the insecure party may demand in writing adequate assurance of due performance. Until the insecure party receives that assurance, if commercially reasonable the insecure party may suspend any performance for which he has not already received the agreed return.

(3) A repudiation of the lease contract occurs if assurance of due performance adequate under the circumstances of the particular case is not provided to the insecure party within a reasonable time, not to exceed thirty (30) days after receipt of a demand by the other party.

(4) Between merchants, the reasonableness of grounds for insecurity and the adequacy of any assurance offered must be determined according to commercial standards.

(5) Acceptance of any nonconforming delivery or payment does not prejudice the aggrieved party's right to demand adequate assurance of future performance.

§ 75-2A-402. Anticipatory repudiation.

If either party repudiates a lease contract with respect to a performance not yet due under the lease contract, the loss of which performance will substantially impair the value of the lease contract to the other, the aggrieved party may:

- (a) For a commercially reasonable time, await retraction of repudiation and performance by the repudiating party;
- (b) Make demand pursuant to Section 75-2A-401 and await assurance of future performance adequate under the circumstances of the particular case; or
- (c) Resort to any right or remedy upon default under the lease contract or this chapter, even though the aggrieved party has notified the repudiating party that the aggrieved party would await the repudiating party's performance and assurance and has urged retraction. In addition, whether or not the aggrieved party is pursuing one of the foregoing remedies, the aggrieved party may suspend performance or, if the aggrieved party is the lessor, proceed in accordance with the provisions of this chapter on the lessor's right to identify goods to the lease contract notwithstanding default or to salvage unfinished goods (Section 75-2A-524).

§ 75-2A-403. Retraction of anticipatory repudiation.

(1) Until the repudiating party's next performance is due, the repudiating party can retract the repudiation unless, since the repudiation, the aggrieved party has cancelled the lease contract or materially changed the aggrieved party's position or otherwise indicated that the aggrieved party considers the repudiation final.

(2) Retraction may be by any method that clearly indicates to the aggrieved party that the repudiating party intends to perform under the lease contract and includes any assurance demanded under Section 75-2A-401.

(3) Retraction reinstates a repudiating party's rights under a lease contract with due excuse and allowance to the aggrieved party for any delay occasioned by the repudiation.

(1) If without fault of the lessee, the lessor and the supplier, the agreed berthing, loading, or unloading facilities fail or the agreed type of carrier becomes unavailable or the agreed manner of delivery otherwise becomes commercially impracticable, but a commercially reasonable substitute is available, the substitute performance must be tendered and accepted.

(2) If the agreed means or manner of payment fails because of domestic or foreign governmental regulation:

(a) The lessor may withhold or stop delivery or cause the supplier to withhold or stop delivery unless the lessee provides a means of payment that is commercially a substantial equivalent; and

(b) If delivery has already been taken, payment by the means or in the manner provided by the regulation discharges the lessee's obligation unless the regulation is discriminatory, oppressive, or predatory.

§ 75-2A-405. Excused performance.

Subject to Section 75-2A-404 on substituted performance, the following rules apply:

(a) Delay in delivery or nondelivery in whole or in part by a lessor or a supplier who complies with paragraphs (b) and (c) is not a default under the lease contract if performance as agreed has been made impracticable by the occurrence of a contingency the nonoccurrence of which was a basic assumption on which the lease contract was made or by compliance in good faith with any applicable foreign or domestic governmental regulation or order, whether or not the regulation or order later proves to be invalid.

(b) If the causes mentioned in paragraph (a) affect only part of the lessor's or the supplier's capacity to perform, he shall allocate production and deliveries among his customers but at his option may include regular customers not then under contract for sale or lease as well as his own requirements for further manufacture. He may so allocate in any manner that is fair and reasonable.

(c) The lessor seasonably shall notify the lessee and in the case of a finance lease the supplier seasonably shall notify the lessor and the lessee, if known, that there will be delay or nondelivery and, if allocation is required under paragraph (b), of the estimated quota thus made available for the lessee.

(1) If the lessee receives notification of a material or indefinite delay or an allocation justified under Section 75-2A-405, the lessee may by written notification to the lessor as to any goods involved, and with respect to all of the goods if under an installment lease contract the value of the whole lease contract is substantially impaired (Section 75-2A-510):

(a) Terminate the lease contract (Section 75-2A-505(2)); or

(b) Except in a finance lease that is not a consumer lease, modify the lease contract by accepting the available quota in substitution, with due allowance from the rent payable for the balance of the lease term for the deficiency but without further right against the lessor.

(2) If, after receipt of a notification from the lessor under Section 75-2A-405, the lessee fails so to modify the lease agreement within a reasonable time not exceeding thirty (30) days, the lease contract lapses with respect to any deliveries affected.

(a) Is effective and enforceable between the parties, and by or against third parties including assignees of the parties; and

(b) Is not subject to cancellation, termination, modification, repudiation, excuse or substitution without the consent of the party to whom the promise runs.

§ 75-2A-501. Default: procedure.

(1) Whether the lessor or the lessee is in default under a lease contract is determined by the lease agreement and this chapter.

(2) If the lessor or the lessee is in default under the lease contract, the party seeking enforcement has rights and remedies as provided in this chapter and, except as limited by this chapter, as provided in the lease agreement.

(3) If the lessor or the lessee is in default under the lease contract, the party seeking enforcement may reduce the party's claim to judgment, or otherwise enforce the lease contract by self-help or any available judicial procedure or nonjudicial procedure, including administrative proceeding, arbitration, or the like, in accordance with this chapter.

(1) Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the lease agreement may include rights and remedies for default in addition to or in substitution for those provided in this chapter and may limit or alter the measure of damages recoverable under this chapter.

(2) Resort to a remedy provided under this chapter or in the lease agreement is optional unless the remedy is expressly agreed to be exclusive. If circumstances cause an exclusive or limited remedy to fail of its essential purpose, or provision for an exclusive remedy is unconscionable, remedy may be had as provided in this chapter.

§ 75-2A-504. Liquidation of damages.

(1) Damages payable by either party for default, or any other act or omission, including indemnity for loss or diminution of anticipated tax benefits or loss or damage to lessor's residual interest, may be liquidated in the lease agreement but only at an amount or by a formula that is reasonable in light of the then anticipated harm caused by the default or other act or omission.

(2) If the lease agreement provides for liquidation of damages, and such provision does not comply with subsection (1), or such provision is an exclusive or limited remedy that circumstances cause to fail of its essential purpose, remedy may be had as provided in this chapter.

(3) If the lessor justifiably withholds or stops delivery of goods because of the lessee's default or insolvency (Section 75-2A-525 or 75-2A-526), the lessee is entitled to restitution of any amount by which the sum of his payments exceeds:

(a) The amount to which the lessor is entitled by virtue of terms liquidating the lessor's damages in accordance with subsection (1); or

(b) In the absence of those terms, twenty percent (20%) of the then present value of the total rent the lessee was obligated to pay for the balance of the lease term, or, in the case of a consumer lease, the lesser of such amount or Five Hundred Dollars ($500.00).

(4) A lessee's right to restitution under subsection (3) is subject to offset to the extent the lessor establishes:

(2) On termination of the lease contract, all obligations that are still executory on both sides are discharged but any right based on prior default or performance survives.

(3) Unless the contrary intention clearly appears, expressions of “cancellation,” “rescission,” or the like of the lease contract may not be construed as a renunciation or discharge of any claim in damages for an antecedent default.

(1) An action for default under a lease contract, including breach of warranty or indemnity, must be commenced within four (4) years after the cause of action accrued. By the original lease contract the parties may reduce the period of limitation to not less than one (1) year.

(2) A cause of action for default accrues when the act or omission on which the default or breach of warranty is based is or should have been discovered by the aggrieved party, or when the default occurs, whichever is later. A cause of action for indemnity accrues when the act or omission on which the claim for indemnity is based is or should have been discovered by the indemnified party, whichever is later.

(3) If an action commenced within the time limited by subsection (1) is so terminated as to leave available a remedy by another action for the same default or breach of warranty or indemnity, the other action may be commenced after the expiration of the time limited and within six (6) months after the termination of the first action unless the termination resulted from voluntary discontinuance or from dismissal for failure or neglect to prosecute.

(1) Damages based on market rent (Section 75-2A-519 or 75-2A-528) are determined according to the rent for the use of the goods concerned for a lease term identical to the remaining lease term of the original lease agreement and prevailing at the times specified in Sections 75-2A-519 and 75-2A-528.

(2) If evidence of rent for the use of the goods concerned for a lease term identical to the remaining lease term of the original lease agreement and prevailing at the times or places described in this chapter is not readily available, the rent prevailing within any reasonable time before or after the time described or at any other place or for a different lease term which in commercial judgment or under usage of trade would serve as a reasonable substitute for the one described may be used, making any proper allowance for the difference, including the cost of transporting the goods to or from the other place.

(3) Evidence of a relevant rent prevailing at a time or place or for a lease term other than the one described in this chapter offered by one (1) party is not admissible unless and until he has given the other party notice the court finds sufficient to prevent unfair surprise.

(4) If the prevailing rent or value of any goods regularly leased in any established market is in issue, reports in official publications or trade journals or in newspapers or periodicals of general circulation published as the reports of that market are admissible in evidence. The circumstances of the preparation of the report may be shown to affect its weight but not its admissibility.

(a) Cancel the lease contract (Section 75-2A-505(1));

(b) Recover so much of the rent and security as has been paid and is just under the circumstances;

(c) Cover and recover damages as to all goods affected whether or not they have been identified to the lease contract (Sections 75-2A-518 and 75-2A-520), or recover damages for nondelivery (Sections 75-2A-519 and 75-2A-520);

(d) Exercise any other rights or pursue any other remedies provided in the lease contract.

(2) If a lessor fails to deliver the goods in conformity to the lease contract or repudiates the lease contract, the lessee may also:

(a) If the goods have been identified, recover them (Section 75-2A-522);

or

(b) In a proper case, obtain specific performance or replevy the goods (Section 75-2A-521).

(3) If a lessor is otherwise in default under a lease contract, the lessee may exercise the rights and pursue the remedies provided in the lease contract, which may include a right to cancel the lease, and in Section 75-2A-519(3).

(5) On rightful rejection or justifiable revocation of acceptance, a lessee has a security interest in goods in the lessee's possession or control for any rent and security that has been paid and any expenses reasonably incurred in their inspection, receipt, transportation and care and custody and may hold those goods and dispose of them in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner, subject to Section 75-2A-527(5).

(6) Subject to the provisions of Section 75-2A-407, a lessee, on notifying the lessor of the lessee's intention to do so, may deduct all or any part of the damages resulting from any default under the lease contract from any part of the rent still due under the same lease contract.

(1) Under an installment lease contract a lessee may reject any delivery that is nonconforming if the nonconformity substantially impairs the value of that delivery and cannot be cured or the nonconformity is a defect in the required documents; but if the nonconformity does not fall within subsection (2) and the lessor or the supplier gives adequate assurance of its cure, the lessee must accept that delivery.

(2) Whenever nonconformity or default with respect to one or more deliveries substantially impairs the value of the installment lease contract as a whole there is a default with respect to the whole. But, the aggrieved party reinstates the installment lease contract as a whole if the aggrieved party accepts a nonconforming delivery without seasonably notifying of cancellation or brings an action with respect only to past deliveries or demands performance as to future deliveries.

§ 75-2A-511. Merchant lessee's duties as to rightfully rejected goods.

(1) Subject to any security interest of a lessee (Section 75-2A-508(5)), if a lessor or a supplier has no agent or place of business at the market of rejection, a merchant lessee, after rejection of goods in his possession or control, shall follow any reasonable instructions received from the lessor or the supplier with respect to the goods. In the absence of those instructions, a merchant lessee shall make reasonable efforts to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of the goods for the lessor's account if they threaten to decline in value speedily. Instructions are not reasonable if on demand indemnity for expenses is not forthcoming.

(2) If a merchant lessee (subsection (1)) or any other lessee (Section 75-2A-512) disposes of goods, he is entitled to reimbursement either from the lessor or the supplier or out of the proceeds for reasonable expenses of caring for and disposing of the goods and, if the expenses include no disposition commission, to such commission as is usual in the trade, or if there is none, to a reasonable sum not exceeding ten percent (10%) of the gross proceeds.

(3) In complying with this section or Section 75-2A-512, the lessee is held only to good faith. Good faith conduct hereunder is neither acceptance or conversion nor the basis of an action for damages.

(4) A purchaser who purchases in good faith from a lessee pursuant to this section or Section 75-2A-512 takes the goods free of any rights of the lessor and the supplier even though the lessee fails to comply with one or more of the requirements of this chapter.

(1) Except as otherwise provided with respect to goods that threaten to decline in value speedily (Section 75-2A-511) and subject to any security interest of a lessee (Section 75-2A-508(5)):

(a) The lessee, after rejection of goods in the lessee's possession, shall hold them with reasonable care at the lessor's or the supplier's disposition for a reasonable time after the lessee's seasonable notification of rejection;

(b) If the lessor or the supplier gives no instructions within a reasonable time after notification of rejection, the lessee may store the rejected goods for the lessor's or the supplier's account or ship them to the lessor or the supplier or dispose of them for the lessor's or the supplier's account with reimbursement in the manner provided in Section 75-2A-511; but

(a) If, stated seasonably, the lessor or the supplier could have cured it (Section 75-2A-513); or

(b) Between merchants if the lessor or the supplier after rejection has made a request in writing for a full and final written statement of all defects on which the lessee proposes to rely.

§ 75-2A-516. Effect of acceptance of goods; notice of default; burden of establishing default after acceptance; notice of claim or litigation to person answerable over.

(1) A lessee must pay rent for any goods accepted in accordance with the lease contract, with due allowance for goods rightfully rejected or not delivered.

(2) A lessee's acceptance of goods precludes rejection of the goods accepted. In the case of a finance lease, if made with knowledge of a nonconformity, acceptance cannot be revoked because of it. In any other case, if made with knowledge of a nonconformity, acceptance cannot be revoked because of it unless the acceptance was on the reasonable assumption that the nonconformity would be seasonably cured. Acceptance does not of itself impair any other remedy provided by this chapter or the lease agreement for nonconformity.

(3) If a tender has been accepted:

(a) Within a reasonable time after the lessee discovers or should have discovered any default, the lessee shall notify the lessor and the supplier, if any, or be barred from any remedy against the party not notified;

(b) Except in the case of a consumer lease, within a reasonable time after the lessee receives notice of litigation for infringement or the like (Section 75-2A-211) the lessee shall notify the lessor or be barred from any remedy over for liability established by the litigation; and

(c) The burden is on the lessee to establish any default.

(4) If a lessee is sued for breach of a warranty or other obligation for which a lessor or a supplier is answerable over the following apply:

(a) The lessee may give the lessor or the supplier, or both, written notice of the litigation. If the notice states that the person notified may come in and defend and that if the person notified does not do so that person will be bound in any action against that person by the lessee by any determination of fact common to the two (2) litigations, then unless the person notified after seasonable receipt of the notice does come in and defend that person is so bound.

(b) The lessor or the supplier may demand in writing that the lessee turn over control of the litigation including settlement if the claim is one for infringement or the like (Section 75-2A-211) or else be barred from any remedy over. If the demand states that the lessor or the supplier agrees to bear all expense and to satisfy any adverse judgment, then unless the lessee after seasonable receipt of the demand does turn over control the lessee is so barred.

(5) Subsections (3) and (4) apply to any obligation of a lessee to hold the lessor or the supplier harmless against infringement or the like (Section 75-2A-211).

§ 75-2A-517. Revocation of acceptance of goods.

(1) A lessee may revoke acceptance of a lot or commercial unit whose nonconformity substantially impairs its value to the lessee if the lessee has accepted it:

(a) Except in the case of a finance lease, on the reasonable assumption that its nonconformity would be cured and it has not been seasonably cured;
or

(b) Without discovery of the nonconformity if the lessee's acceptance was reasonably induced either by the lessor's assurances or, except in the case of a finance lease, by the difficulty of discovery before acceptance.

(2) Except in the case of a finance lease that is not a consumer lease, a lessee may revoke acceptance of a lot or commercial unit if the lessor defaults under the lease contract and the default substantially impairs the value of that lot or commercial unit to the lessee.

(3) If the lease agreement so provides, the lessee may revoke acceptance of a lot or commercial unit because of other defaults by the lessor.

(4) Revocation of acceptance must occur within a reasonable time after the lessee discovers or should have discovered the ground for it and before any substantial change in condition of the goods which is not caused by the nonconformity. Revocation is not effective until the lessee notifies the lessor.

(5) A lessee who so revokes has the same rights and duties with regard to the goods involved as if the lessee had rejected them.

§ 75-2A-518. Cover; substitute goods.

(1) After a default by a lessor under the lease contract of the type described in Section 75-2A-508(1), or, if agreed, after other default by the lessor, the lessee may cover by making any purchase or lease of or contract to purchase or lease goods in substitution for those due from the lessor.

(2) Except as otherwise provided with respect to damages liquidated in the lease agreement (Section 75-2A-504) or otherwise determined pursuant to agreement of the parties (Sections 75-1-102(3) and 75-2A-503), if a lessee's cover is by a lease agreement substantially similar to the original lease agreement and the new lease agreement is made in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner, the lessee may recover from the lessor as damages (i) the present value, as of the date of the commencement of the term of the new lease agreement, of the rent under the new lease agreement applicable to that period of the new lease term which is comparable to the then remaining term of the original lease agreement minus the present value as of the same date of the total rent for the then remaining lease term of the original lease agreement, and (ii) any incidental or consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default.

(3) If a lessee's cover is by lease agreement that for any reason does not qualify for treatment under subsection (2), or is by purchase or otherwise, the lessee may recover from the lessor as if the lessee had elected not to cover and Section 75-2A-519 governs.

§ 75-2A-519. Lessee's damages for nondelivery, repudiation, default and breach of warranty in regard to accepted goods.

(1) Except as otherwise provided with respect to damages liquidated in the lease agreement (Section 75-2A-504) or otherwise determined pursuant to agreement of the parties (Sections 75-1-102(3) and 75-2A-503), if a lessee elects not to cover or a lessee elects to cover and the cover is by lease agreement that for any reason does not qualify for treatment under Section 75-2A-518(2), or is by purchase or otherwise, the measure of damages for nondelivery or repudiation by the lessor or for rejection or revocation of acceptance by the lessee is the present value, as of the date of the default, of the then market rent minus the present value as of the same date of the original rent, computed for the remaining lease term of the original lease agreement, together with incidental and consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default.

(2) Market rent is to be determined as of the place for tender or, in cases of rejection after arrival or revocation of acceptance, as of the place of arrival.

(3) Except as otherwise agreed, if the lessee has accepted goods and given notification (Section 75-2A-516(3)), the measure of damages for nonconforming tender or delivery or other default by a lessor is the loss resulting in the ordinary course of events from the lessor's default as determined in any manner that is reasonable together with incidental and consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default.

(4) Except as otherwise agreed, the measure of damages for breach of warranty is the present value at the time and place of acceptance of the difference between the value of the use of the goods accepted and the value if they had been as warranted for the lease term, unless special circumstances show proximate damages of a different amount, together with incidental and consequential damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessor's default or breach of warranty.

§ 75-2A-523. Lessor's remedies.

(1) If a lessee wrongfully rejects or revokes acceptance of goods or fails to make a payment when due or repudiates with respect to a part or the whole, then, with respect to any goods involved, and with respect to all of the goods if under an installment lease contract the value of the whole lease contract is substantially impaired (Section 75-2A-510), the lessee is in default under the lease contract and the lessor may:

(a) Cancel the lease contract (Section 75-2A-505(1));

(b) Proceed respecting goods not identified to the lease contract (Section 75-2A-524);

(c) Withhold delivery of the goods and take possession of goods previously delivered (Section 75-2A-525);

(d) Stop delivery of the goods by any bailee (Section 75-2A-526);

(e) Dispose of the goods and recover damages (Section 75-2A-527), or retain the goods and recover damages (Section 75-2A-528), or in a proper case recover rent (Section 75-2A-529);

(f) Exercise any other rights or pursue any other remedies provided in the lease contract.

(2) If a lessor does not fully exercise a right or obtain a remedy to which the lessor is entitled under subsection (1), the lessor may recover the loss resulting in the ordinary course of events from the lessee's default as determined in any reasonable manner, together with incidental damages, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

(3) If a lessee is otherwise in default under a lease contract, the lessor may exercise the rights and pursue the remedies provided in the lease contract, which may include a right to cancel the lease. In addition, unless otherwise provided in the lease contract:

(a) If the default substantially impairs the value of the lease contract to the lessor, the lessor may exercise the rights and pursue the remedies provided in subsection (1) or (2); or

(b) If the default does not substantially impair the value of the lease contract to the lessor, the lessor may recover as provided in subsection (2).

(1) A lessor aggrieved under Section 75-2A-523(1) may:

(a) Identify to the lease contract conforming goods not already identified if at the time the lessor learned of the default they were in the lessor's or the supplier's possession or control; and

(b) Dispose of goods (Section 75-2A-527(1)) that demonstrably have been intended for the particular lease contract even though those goods are unfinished.

(2) If the goods are unfinished, in the exercise of reasonable commercial judgment for the purposes of avoiding loss and of effective realization, an aggrieved lessor or the supplier may either complete manufacture and wholly identify the goods to the lease contract or cease manufacture and lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the goods for scrap or salvage value or proceed in any other reasonable manner.

(1) If a lessor discovers the lessee to be insolvent, the lessor may refuse to deliver the goods.

(2) After a default by the lessee under the lease contract of the type described in Section 75-2A-523(1) or 75-2A-523(3)(a) or, if agreed, after other default by the lessee, the lessor has the right to take possession of the goods. (1) A lessor may stop delivery of goods in the possession of a carrier or other bailee if the lessor discovers the lessee to be insolvent and may stop delivery of carload, truckload, planeload, or larger shipments of express or freight if the lessee repudiates or fails to make a payment due before delivery, whether for rent, security or otherwise under the lease contract, or for any other reason the lessor has a right to withhold or take possession of the goods.

(2) In pursuing its remedies under subsection (1), the lessor may stop delivery until

- (a) Receipt of the goods by the lessee;
- (b) Acknowledgment to the lessee by any bailee of the goods, except a carrier, that the bailee hold the goods for the lessee; or
- (c) Such an acknowledgement to the lessee by a carrier via reshipment or as warehouseman.

§ 75-2A-527. Lessor's rights to dispose of goods.

(1) After a default by a lessee under the lease contract of the type described in Section 75-2A-523(1) or 75-2A-523(3)(a) or after the lessor refuses to deliver or takes possession of goods (Section 75-2A-525 or 75-2A-526), or, if agreed, after other default by a lessee, the lessor may dispose of the goods concerned or the undelivered balance thereof by lease, sale or otherwise.

(2) Except as otherwise provided with respect to damages liquidated in the lease agreement (Section 75-2A-504) or otherwise determined pursuant to agreement of the parties (Sections 75-1-102(3) and 75-2A-503), if the disposition is by lease agreement substantially similar to the original lease agreement and the new lease agreement is made in good faith and in a commercially reasonable manner, the lessor may recover from the lessee as damages (i) accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of the commencement of the term of the new lease agreement, (ii) the present value, as of the same date, of the total rent for the then remaining lease term of the original lease agreement minus the present value, as of the same date, of the rent under the new lease agreement applicable to that period of the new lease term which is comparable to the then remaining term of the original lease agreement, and (iii) any incidental damages allowed under Section 75-2A-530, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

(3) If the lessor's disposition is by lease agreement that for any reason does not qualify for treatment under subsection (2), or is by sale or otherwise, the lessor may recover from the lessee as if the lessor had elected not to dispose of the goods and Section 75-2A-528 governs.

(4) A subsequent buyer or lessee who buys or leases from the lessor in good faith for value as a result of a disposition under this section takes the goods free of the original lease contract and any rights of the original lessee even though the lessor fails to comply with one or more of the requirements of this chapter.

(5) The lessor is not accountable to the lessee for any profit made on any disposition. A lessee who has rightfully rejected or justifiably revoked acceptance shall account to the lessor for any excess over the amount of the lessee's security interest (Section 75-2A-508(5)).

(1) Except as otherwise provided with respect to damages liquidated in the lease agreement (Section 75-2A-504) or otherwise determined pursuant to agreement of the parties (Sections 75-1-102(3) and 75-2A-503), if a lessor elects to retain the goods or a lessor elects to dispose of the goods and the disposition is by lease agreement that for any reason does not qualify for treatment under Section 75-2A-527(2), or is by sale or otherwise, the lessor may recover from the lessee as damages for a default of the type described in Section 75-2A-523(1) or 75-2A-523(3)(a), or, if agreed, for other default of the lessee, (i) accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of default if the lessee has never taken possession of the goods, or, if the lessee has taken possession of the goods, as of the date the lessor repossesses the goods or an earlier date on which the lessee makes a tender of the goods to the lessor, (ii) the present value as of the date determined under clause (i) of the total rent for the then remaining lease term of the original lease agreement minus the present value as of the same date of the market rent at the place where the goods are located computed for the same lease term, and (iii) any incidental damages allowed under Section 75-2A-530, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

(2) If the measure of damages provided in subsection (1) is inadequate to put a lessor in as good a position as performance would have, the measure of damages is the present value of the profit, including reasonable overhead, the lessor would have made from full performance by the lessee, together with any incidental damages allowed under Section 75-2A-530, due allowance for costs reasonably incurred and due credit for payments or proceeds of disposition.

(1) After default by the lessee under the lease contract of the type described in Section 75-2A-523(1) or 75-2A-523(3)(a) or, if agreed, after other default by the lessee, if the lessor complies with subsection (2), the lessor may recover from the lessee as damages:

(a) For goods accepted by the lessee and not repossessed by or tendered to the lessor, and for conforming goods lost or damaged within a commercially reasonable time after risk of loss passes to the lessee (Section 75-2A-219), (i) accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of entry of judgment in favor of the lessor, (ii) the present value as of the same date of the rent for the then remaining lease term of the lease agreement, and (iii) any incidental damages allowed under Section 75-2A-530, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default; and

(b) For goods identified to the lease contract if the lessor is unable after reasonable effort to dispose of them at a reasonable price or the circumstances reasonably indicate that effort will be unavailing, (i) accrued and unpaid rent as of the date of entry of judgment in favor of the lessor, (ii) the present value as of the same date of the rent for the then remaining lease term of the lease agreement, and (iii) any incidental damages allowed under Section 75-2A-530, less expenses saved in consequence of the lessee's default.

(2) Except as provided in subsection (3), the lessor shall hold for the lessee for the remaining lease term of the lease agreement any goods that have been identified to the lease contract and are in the lessor's control.

(3) The lessor may dispose of the goods at any time before collection of the judgment for damages obtained pursuant to subsection (1). If the disposition is before the end of the remaining lease term of the lease agreement, the lessor's recovery against the lessee for damages is governed by Section 75-2A-527 or Section 75-2A-528, and the lessor will cause an appropriate credit to be provided against a judgment for damages to the extent that the amount of the judgment exceeds the recovery available pursuant to Section 75-2A-527 or 75-2A-528.

(4) Payment of the judgment for damages obtained pursuant to subsection (1) entitles the lessee to the use and possession of the goods not then disposed of for the remaining lease term of and in accordance with the lease agreement.

(5) After a lessee has wrongfully rejected or revoked acceptance of goods, has failed to pay rent then due, or has repudiated (Section 75-2A-402), a lessor who is held not entitled to rent under this section must nevertheless be awarded damages for nonacceptance under Sections 75-2A-527 and 75-2A-528.

(1) If a third party so deals with goods that have been identified to a lease contract as to cause actionable injury to a party to the lease contract (a) the lessor has a right of action against the third party, and (b) the lessee also has a right of action against the third party if the lessee:

- (i) Has a security interest in the goods;
- (ii) Has an insurable interest in the goods; or
- (iii) Bears the risk of loss under the lease contract or has since the injury assumed that risk as against the lessor and the goods have been converted or destroyed.

(2) If at the time of the injury the party plaintiff did not bear the risk of loss as against the other party to the lease contract and there is no arrangement between them for disposition of the recovery, his suit or settlement, subject to his own interest, is as a fiduciary for the other party to the lease contract.

(3) Either party with the consent of the other may sue for the benefit of whom it may concern.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-101.

11. In general.

Where a trust deed made specific reference to the indebtedness as evidenced by defendant's note, of even date, the deed falls within the provisions of the Article relating to commercial paper, rather than Article 8 dealing with investment securities. Rago v. Cosmopolitan Nat'l Bank, 89 Ill. App. 2d 12, 232 N.E.2d 88 (1st Dist. 1967).

Negotiable instruments are now governed by Article 3 of the UCC. First Trust & Sav. Bank v. Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co., 214 F.2d 320, 50 A.L.R.2d 1218 (3d Cir. Pa. 1954), cert denied, 348 U.S. 856, 75 S. Ct. 81, 99 L. Ed. 674 (1954).

12. Installment contracts.

Under provisions of consumer credit act prohibiting use of negotiable instruments in consumer credit transactions, instrument entitled "Retail Installment Agreement (Security Interest)," although it contained necessary elements of negotiable instrument set out in UCC § 3-104, was not negotiable instrument, but was retail installment contract and security agreement subject to provisions of Article 9 of UCC, where instrument was drawn by creditor regulated by consumer credit act and contained matters required by consumer credit act, and where bulk of its terms provided for retention of title and preservation of purchase money security interest as prescribed by Article 9. Jefferson v. Mitchell Select Furn. Co., 56 Ala. App. 259, 321 So. 2d 216 (Civ. App. 1975).

13. Holders in due course.

Payees of drafts issued by title company were holders in due course of drafts and were entitled to enforce them against title company, notwithstanding drafts were issued through escrow to payees as creditors of person who funded escrow with forged certified check, where there was no evidence to indicate that payees were not bona fide creditors or that they ought to have been suspicious of title company draft; nor were payees subject to personal defenses under UCC § 3-305(2) on grounds that payees dealt with title company since payees did not participate in immediate transaction by which title company gave out its draft, that is, exchange of forged cashier's check for draft. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Walsh, 34 Ill. App. 3d 458, 340 N.E.2d 106 (1st Dist. 1975).

JUDICIAL DECISIONS

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-103.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1. Applicability.

The present version of Article 3 does not apply to a non-negotiable instrument. Addington v. Estate of Temple, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 138 (Miss. Ct. App. Mar. 28, 2000), reversed on other grounds, In re Estate of Temple, 780 So. 2d 639 (Miss. 2001).

- 2.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-103.

11. In general.

In action arising when vice-president of defendant bank who was authorized to sign bank's serially numbered certificate of deposit forms acquired blank certificate of deposit, inserted his name as payee, signed instrument on behalf of defendant bank with name of another employee authorized to sign certificates of deposit, and then obtained $20,000 loan from plaintiff bank with certificate of deposit given as security for loan, certificate of deposit was investment security governed by UCC

§ 8-102 even though it also met requirements of UCC § 3-103, where certificate was issued in registered form, was one of series, and evidenced obligation of issuer by acknowledging obligation to pay depositor specified sum of money upon presentment at maturity; under UCC §§ 1-201 and 8-205, plaintiff bank was purchaser for value without notice of certificate of deposit and unauthorized signature was effective in its favor where vice-president was employee of issuer entrusted with responsible handling of security who placed unauthorized signature on security in course of its issue. Victory Nat'l Bank v. Oklahoma State Bank, 520 P.2d 675 (Okla. 1973).

Because provisions of Article 4 govern inconsistent provisions of Article 3 to the extent that corresponding provisions cannot be reconciled, bank taking check for deposit by customer without indorsement by customer succeeds to rights of customer as "holder". To same effect, see affirming opinion of Circuit Court of Appeals in 425 F.2d 81. Bowling Green, Inc. v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 307 F. Supp. 648 (D. Mass. 1969), aff'd, 425 F.2d 81 (1st Cir. Mass. 1970), but see, Maine Family Fed. Credit Union v. Sun Life Assurance Co., 727 A.2d 335 (Me. 1999).

Article 3 does not, by virtue of subsection (1) of the instant section apply to "money" as defined by § 1-201(24), and hence it does not apply to Federal Reserve notes which constitute "money" within the Code definition. Commonwealth v. Saville, 353 Mass. 458, 233 N.E.2d 9 (1968).

§ 75-3-103. Definitions.

- (a) In this chapter:

- (1) "Acceptor" means a drawee who has accepted a draft.
- (2) "Drawee" means a person ordered in a draft to make payment.
- (3) "Drawer" means a person who signs or is identified in a draft as a person ordering payment.
- (4) "Good faith" means honesty in fact and the observance of reasonable commercial standards of fair dealing.
- (5) "Maker" means a person who signs or is identified in a note as a person undertaking to pay.

(6) “Order” means a written instruction to pay money signed by the person giving the instruction. The instruction may be addressed to any person, including the person giving the instruction, or to one or more persons jointly or in the alternative but not in succession. An authorization to pay is not an order unless the person authorized to pay is also instructed to pay.

(7) “Ordinary care” in the case of a person engaged in business means observance of reasonable commercial standards, prevailing in the area in which the person is located, with respect to the business in which the person is engaged. In the case of a bank that takes an instrument for processing for collection or payment by automated means, reasonable commercial standards do not require the bank to examine the instrument if the failure to examine does not violate the bank’s prescribed procedures and the bank’s procedures do not vary unreasonably from general banking usage not disapproved by this chapter or Chapter 4.

(8) “Party” means a party to an instrument.

(9) “Promise” means a written undertaking to pay money signed by the person undertaking to pay. An acknowledgment of an obligation by the obligor is not a promise unless the obligor also undertakes to pay the obligation.

(10) “Prove” with respect to a fact means to meet the burden of establishing the fact (Section 75-1-201(8), Mississippi Code of 1972).

(11) “Remitter” means a person who purchases an instrument from its issuer if the instrument is payable to an identified person other than the purchaser.

11. In general.

Indorser is secondary party under UCC § 3-102(1)(d), and his liability is subject to preconditions of (1) presentment under UCC § 3-501(1)(b) and (2) proper notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a). Thus if, without excuse, any necessary presentment or notice of dishonor is delayed beyond time it is due, indorser is discharged from liability under UCC § 3-502(1)(a). Nevada State Bank v. Fischer, 93 Nev. 317, 565 P.2d 332 (1977).

Where contract for sale of cotton provided that risk of loss remained with seller until warehouse receipts "are issued" or "have been issued" and where cotton was burned after delivery to buyer, but one day prior to completion and issuance of warehouse receipts, words in contract relating to "issue", pursuant to definition in UCC § 3-102, meant that warehouse receipts not only must have been complete in form and signed as required by UCC § 7-202, but must have been delivered to seller; thus, seller was entitled to entire proceeds of insurance settlement since loss occurred prior to time warehouse receipts were issued. Livingston v. Hohenberg Bros. Co., 341 So. 2d 104 (Miss. 1976).

Execution of guarantee was not Code transaction; guarantee was not "transaction...which is intended to create a security interest in personal property or fixtures including goods, documents, instruments, general intangibles, chattel paper, or accounts," under UCC § 9-102(1)(a); neither did guarantee of accounts receivable fall within coverage of Article 3 of UCC, §§ 3-102 to 3-805, formalities of which apply only to guarantees of commercial paper. EAC Credit Corp. v. King, 507 F.2d 1232 (5th Cir. 1975).

Trial court erred in granting directed verdict upon check in favor of payee where drawers testified that parties orally agreed that check was not to be effective and should not be presented for payment until drawees received insurance money from destruction of hay crops by fire. Parol evidence was admissible to show that check was not to be operative as binding obligation until occurrence of some condition precedent. Although insurance proceeds had been received by time of trial and, therefore, check was payable at that time, judgment in favor of payee could not be sustained since present action was on check, not on underlying debt, proper presentment to bank was conditioned precedent to drawers' liability and there was no evidence of any presentment subsequent to receipt by drawers of proceeds of insurance. Engelcke v. Stoehsler, 273 Or. 937, 544 P.2d 582 (1975).

Although a federal reserve note is money and is therefore commercial paper under Article 3 of the Code, the delivery of such a note to one of the twelve Federal Reserve Banks is the first delivery to a holder or a remitter, the sense in which issue is used in the Code, and is therefore an issuance for the purpose of a criminal statute, where counterfeit notes are involved. Commonwealth v. Saville, 353 Mass. 458, 233 N.E.2d 9 (1968).

Contracts guaranteeing the payment of the purchase price by a purchaser are not negotiable instruments, and are therefore not governed by any of the provisions of Article 3. Associates Dist. Corp. v. Elgin Organ Ctr., Inc., 375 F.2d 97 (7th Cir. Ill. 1967).

The instant section was referred to in a case in which the drawer of a check sought to hold in conversion a bank, other than the drawee, which had cashed the check upon a forged indorsement, in connection with the proposition that the provision of § 3-419, that an instrument is converted when paid on a forged indorsement was not applicable to the paying bank which was not a payor bank as defined in § 4-105(b). Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 345 Mass. 1, 184 N.E.2d 358, 99 A.L.R.2d 628 (1962).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

12. In general.

The word "holder" in the law of Bills and Notes includes the payee or indorsee of a bill or note who is in possession of it; and, accordingly, a bank, while it retained the ownership and possession of notes secured by a deed of trust, was the holder thereof. Federal Land Bank v. Miller, 199 Miss. 615, 25 So. 2d 11 (1946).

Assignee of deed of trust, owning all of unpaid notes secured thereby except two which were in possession of assignor merely for collection, was legal holder of the unpaid notes within purview of provision in the deed authorizing legal holders of a majority of the unpaid indebtedness secured thereby to appoint a substituted trustee upon death of original one. Baker v. Connecticut Gen. Life Ins. Co., 196 Miss. 701, 18 So. 2d 438 (1944).

otherwise put into circulation. Love v. Mayor & Bd. of Aldermen, 166 Miss. 322, 148 So. 382 (1933).

Ordinarily, a bond, bill or note is not "issued" until delivered to purchaser or § 75-3-104. Negotiable instrument.

(a) Except as provided in subsections (c) and (d), "negotiable instrument" means an unconditional promise or order to pay a fixed amount of money, with or without interest or other charges described in the promise or order, if it:

(1) Is payable to bearer or to order at the time it is issued or first comes into possession of a holder;

(2) Is payable on demand or at a definite time; and

(3) Does not state any other undertaking or instruction by the person promising or ordering payment to do any act in addition to the payment of money, but the promise or order may contain (i) an undertaking or power to give, maintain, or protect collateral to secure payment, (ii) an authorization or power to the holder to confess judgment or realize on or dispose of collateral, or (iii) a waiver of the benefit of any law intended for the advantage or protection of an obligor.

(b) "Instrument" means a negotiable instrument.

(c) An order that meets all of the requirements of subsection (a), except paragraph (1), and otherwise falls within the definition of "check" in subsection (f) is a negotiable instrument and a check.

(d) A promise or order other than a check is not an instrument if, at the time it is issued or first comes into possession of a holder, it contains a conspicuous statement, however expressed, to the effect that the promise or order is not negotiable or is not an instrument governed by this chapter.

(e) An instrument is a "note" if it is a promise and is a "draft" if it is an order. If an instrument falls within the definition of both "note" and "draft," a person entitled to enforce the instrument may treat it as either.

(f) "Check" means (i) a draft, other than a documentary draft, payable on demand and drawn on a bank or (ii) a cashier's check or teller's check. An instrument may be a check even though it is described on its face by another term, such as "money order."

(g) "Cashier's check" means a draft with respect to which the drawer and drawee are the same bank or branches of the same bank.

(h) "Teller's check" means a draft drawn by a bank (i) on another bank, or (ii) payable at or through a bank.

(i) "Traveler's check" means an instrument that (i) is payable on demand, (ii) is drawn on or payable at or through a bank, (iii) is designated by the term "traveler's check" or by a substantially similar term, and (iv) requires, as a condition to payment, a countersignature by a person whose specimen signature appears on the instrument.

(j) "Certificate of deposit" means an instrument containing an acknowledgment by a bank that a sum of money has been received by the bank and a promise by the bank to repay the sum of money. A certificate of deposit is a note of the bank.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-104.

11. In general.

Provisions of UCC §§ 3-104 and 3-109 as to form of instruments and definite time for payment could in no way alter meaning of "definite" and "indefinite" as used in Internal Revenue Code for purpose of valuation of notes in determining tax liability. Caruth v. United States, 566 F.2d 901 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

Whether particular instrument is negotiable within meaning of UCC Art 3 can be determined only by reading UCC §§ 3-104 through 3-112 as a unit. Booker v. Everhart, 294 N.C. 146, 240 S.E.2d 360 (1978).

In order to be a negotiable instrument under UCC Art 3, instrument must precisely meet definition of "negotiable instrument" contained in UCC § 3-104(1). Moreover, in determining whether an instrument meets such definition, only the instrument itself and not any other documents may be looked to, even though the instrument may refer to other documents that allegedly cure defects in instrument's negotiability. First State Bank v. Clark, 91 N.M. 117, 570 P.2d 1144 (1977).

Execution of guarantee was not Code transaction; guarantee was not "transaction... which is intended to create a security interest in personal property or fixtures including goods, documents, instruments, general intangibles, chattel paper, or accounts," under UCC § 9-102(1)(a); neither did guarantee of accounts receivable fall within coverage of Article 3 of UCC, §§ 3-102 to 3-805, formalities of which apply only to guarantees of commercial paper. EAC Credit Corp. v. King, 507 F.2d 1232 (5th Cir. 1975).

Any writing to be a negotiable instrument must be signed by the maker or drawer. Jenkins v. Evans, 31 A.D.2d 597 (3d Dep't 1968).

The negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the presence of a seal. Pitts v. Pitchford, 201 So. 2d 563 (Fla. App. 1967), cert. denied, 207 So. 2d 452 (Fla. 1967).

Where a promissory note authorizes confession of judgment as of any time it is not "an instrument otherwise negotiable," and being non-negotiable its execution under seal imports consideration. Smith v. Lenchner, 204 Pa. Super. 500, 205 A.2d 626 (Super. 1964).

12. Comparison with former law.

Under Code, as formerly, one may bring action upon debt evidenced by commercial paper in form of suing directly on instrument which imports its own consideration without setting forth facts creating obligation evidenced by paper; obligee, however, still has only one cause of action for amount owing him, and filing of action based directly on check will not inhibit him from pleading and proving facts, including consideration for which check was given, and addition of such facts to declaration will not constitute new cause of action. Minner v. Childs, 116 Ga. App. 272, 157 S.E.2d 50 (1967).

The requirement of the NIL of an unconditional order or promise to pay a sum certain of money is continued in the Code. United States v. Farrington, 172 F. Supp. 797 (D. Mass. 1959).

13. Draft or bill of exchange.

"Envelope draft" presented by beneficiary of letter of credit to issuer was not validly drawn in accordance with letter's terms where (1) it did not contain statement, "Drawn Under National Bank of Austin Letter of Credit No. 8274," as required by such letter, and (2) instrument was not a draft under UCC § 3-104(1)(a), since drawer's alleged signature was on back of instrument and not on line in right-hand corner of face of instrument that was provided for drawer's signature (applying Illinois law, and holding that signature on back of instrument was actually indorsement under UCC § 3-402). North Valley Bank v. National Bank, 437 F. Supp. 70 (N.D. Ill. 1977).

Document entitled "collection letter" which made allusion to accompanying draft did not constitute sight draft where it was not unconditional order to pay money and was burdened with additional instructions, and where bank's typed name only signature thereon. Bounty Trading Corp. v. S.E.K. Sportswear, Ltd., 48 A.D.2d 811 (1st Dep't 1975).

Where the defendant unexplainedly came into possession of a stolen and forged check and signed his name as payee and then indorsed it, the check became a bill of exchange, payable upon demand at the drawee bank. People v. White, 55 Misc. 2d 298 (1967).

A bill of exchange is an unconditional order in writing addressed by one person to another, signed by the person giving it, requiring the person to whom it is addressed to pay on demand a sum certain to order or to bearer. Garden Check Cashing Serv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 25 A.D.2d 137 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 941, 277 N.Y.S.2d 141, 223 N.E.2d 566 (1966).

A bill of exchange becomes a check when drawn on a bank payable on demand. Garden Check Cashing Serv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 25 A.D.2d 137 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 941, 277 N.Y.S.2d 141, 223 N.E.2d 566 (1966).

The negotiability of a trade acceptance which otherwise conforms to the statutory requirements is unaffected by a mere reference on the face of the instrument to the transaction from which it arose. Federal Factors, Inc. v. Wellbanke, 241 Ark. 44, 406 S.W.2d 712 (1966).

14. Check.

Where bank customer could withdraw money by inserting card into computer terminal and foundation of relationship between bank and customer was bank's agreement to pay out customer's money according to customer's order, card constituted "check" within meaning of UCC § 3-104, notwithstanding card was non-negotiable. Illinois ex rel. Lignoul v. Continental Ill. Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 536 F.2d 176 (7th Cir. Ill. 1976), cert. denied, 429 U.S. 871, 97 S. Ct. 184, 50 L. Ed. 2d 151 (1976).

The ordinary form of personal check is a negotiable instrument. Middlemas v. Wright, 493 S.W.2d 282 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Under Code provision defining check as draft drawn on bank and payable on demand, negotiable instrument drawn on bank payable to defendants was check. Russ Togs, Inc. v. Gordon, 127 Ga. App. 520, 194 S.E.2d 280 (1972).

Signed letter and telegram satisfied Code § 3-104 (2)(b) requirements for "check", so that bank, required by resolution to transfer funds pursuant to "check", was not negligent in acting pursuant to signed letter and telegram. United Milk Prods. Co. v. Lawndale Nat'l Bank, 392 F.2d 876 (7th Cir. Ill. 1968).

A check is a draft on a bank, payable on demand but revocable until paid or accepted for payment. Mott v. Sewickley Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 211 Pa. Super. 357, 236 A.2d 541 (1967).

That at the time the successful bidder at a public auction issued the city his personal check for the required deposit against his bid there were insufficient funds in his account to pay it did not invalidate the bid when the check was duly paid on presentation to the drawee bank, for the check was not payment at the time of sale but merely a promise of future payment at the time of its presentation. Kensil v. Ocean City, 89 N.J. Super. 342, 215 A.2d 43 (App. Div. 1965).

A check can be a negotiable instrument without constituting immediate payment, and unless the parties agree otherwise, a check is not payment until presented and paid. Kensil v. Ocean City, 89 N.J. Super. 342, 215 A.2d 43 (App. Div. 1965).

15. —Conditions or restrictions.

In action by mother and son against father's executrix to recover on instrument in form of check payable to order of son for $20,000, executed by father in 1969 and delivered to mother, post dated November 4, 1984, where check was endorsed by father to effect that $20,000 should be taken from his estate at death for his son: (1) Under UCC § 3-104, instrument in question was negotiable instrument and, under UCC § 3-114(1) and (2), its negotiability was not affected by fact that it was post dated 15 years, and time when it was payable was determined by stated date. Smith v. Gentilotti, 371 Mass. 839, 359 N.E.2d 953 (1977).

Written instructions on reverse side of checks which were properly dated (i.e., dated as of time of issue), limiting time for deposit to future date, did not preclude instruments from being payable on demand as required by UCC § 3-104(2)(b); instructions on checks could not be regarded as qualified or restrictive endorsements since drawer was not holder of checks and, since instructions were not endorsements, they were not binding on payee or on subsequent holders. Silver Creations, Ltd. v. UPS, 133 N.J. Super. 543, 337 A.2d 641, 88 A.L.R.3d 1093 (L. Div. 1975).

The requirement that a check contained an unconditional promise to pay applies only to the matter of the form of a negotiable instrument, and as between the original parties payment by check is conditional. Mansion Carpets, Inc. v. Marinoff, 24 A.D.2d 947 (1st Dep't 1965).

16. —Instruments missing signature, amount or other elements.

In action by materials supplier against subcontractor to recover entire proceeds of four checks drawn by general contractor and made jointly payable to both supplier and subcontractor, where subcontractor surrendered all four checks to supplier without indorsement and general contractor's bank, at supplier's request, exchanged such checks for two cashier's checks made payable to supplier and subcontractor, (1) bank by exchanging checks originally issued for cashier's checks did not alter rights of parties named in originally issued checks; (2) drawer of original checks (general contractor) was not placed at disadvantage because drawer's account was immediately chargeable on presentation and acceptance of original checks; (3) payees of original checks (supplier and subcontractor) were also not placed at disadvantage because funds in same amount were available to them from the cashier's checks; (4) validity of drawer's order to bank to make payment to payees named in original checks was not in question; and (5) making of cashier's checks payable to payees named therein (supplier and subcontractor) did not circumvent purpose of requirement of indorsements, since indorsements would still be routinely required under UCC § 3-104(2)(b) and UCC §§ 3-201 et seq. to negotiate the cashier's checks. In such case, bank was not negligent in performing customer's orders under rule that bank will be protected if it pays without indorsement as long as payee actually receives money ordered by drawer to be paid. Swan Air Conditioning Co. v. Crest Constr. Corp., 568 P.2d 1330 (Okla. Ct. App. 1977).

Where drawee bank paid checks imprinted with false unauthorized signature stamps, drawer was entitled to recover on bond covering forgery and alteration, despite fact that claim of loss referred to "counterfeit" as opposed to "forged" checks. MBTA Emp. Credit Union v. Employers Mut. Liab. Ins. Co., 374 F. Supp. 1299 (D. Mass. 1974).

Check which was signed by maker but was blank as to payee and amount was not legally a check within meaning of UCC. State v. Kleen, 491 S.W.2d 244 (Mo. 1973).

17. —Payable to order or bearer.

Check executed and delivered is contract in writing by which drawer contracts with payee that bank will pay to latter or his order amount designated on presentation. Mason v. Blayton, 119 Ga. App. 203, 166 S.E.2d 601 (1969).

Instruments not payable to order of bearer were non-negotiable in sense that there could be no holder in due course thereof; however, under Code § 3-805 and official comment thereto, such instruments are treated as negotiable in other respects and are referred to as checks; being checks within Code, such instruments can be subject of crime of larceny by check. Faulkner v. State, 445 P.2d 815 (Alaska 1968).

A person would be a holder in due course of a negotiable instrument if he acquired it for value and without notice where it was payable to bearer. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. v. Walston & Co., 21 N.Y.2d 219, 234 N.E.2d 230 (1967), reargument granted, 21 N.Y.2d 1041 (1968), on reargument, 22 N.Y.2d 672, 291 N.Y.S.2d 366, 238 N.E.2d 754 (1968).

18. —Other matters.

A conservator of an estate had the authority to endorse and negotiate checks made payable to the estate's conservatorship. Great S. Nat'l Bank v. Minter, 590 So. 2d 129 (Miss. 1991).

Negotiable orders of withdrawal ("NOW drafts") requiring savings bank to pay specified sum to named third party which (1) are "payable-through" drafts that designate a commercial bank at which they can be presented for payment, (2) clear through banking system in manner similar to traditional checks, and (3) bear legend that gives bank option to require 14 days' notice before making payment, are not checks within meaning of UCC § 3-104(2)(b), since such drafts are not payable on demand. Pennsylvania Bankers Ass'n v. Secretary of Banking, 481 Pa. 332, 392 A.2d 1319 (1978).

In action by mother and son against father's executrix to recover on instrument in form of check payable to order of son for $20,000, executed by father in 1969 and delivered to mother, post dated November 4, 1984, where check was endorsed by father to effect that $20,000 should be taken from his estate at death for his son: (1) Under UCC § 3-104, instrument in question was negotiable instrument and, under UCC § 3-114(1), and (2), its negotiability was not affected by fact that it was post dated 15 years, and time when it was payable was determined by stated date. Smith v. Gentilotti, 371 Mass. 839, 359 N.E.2d 953 (1977).

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where bank's refusal to sign was because it had no ownership interest in corporation but only security interest in corporation's assets; (3) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; and (4) where bank indorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank and gave owner check payable to corporation for remaining proceeds which owner deposited in corporation's account, buyer's contention that when bank accepted and cashed cashier's checks it became obligated by terms of sale agreement could not be sustained because (1) clear import of Uniform Commercial Code is that negotiable instruments may not be used by parties to express obligations other than obligation stated in UCC § 3-104(1)(b), namely, unconditional promise to pay sum certain; and (2) since terms of sale agreement with respect to such cashier's checks required only that they be made out for specified amounts and be payable to specified copayees, such checks were not affected or modified under UCC § 3-119(1) by terms of sale agreement, but were completely independent of such agreement. In such case, cashier's checks stood on their express terms, bank's acceptance of such checks did not constitute acceptance of terms of separate sale agreement which bank did not sign, and causes of action arising out of such sale agreement were not available against bank. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

Negotiability of check is not affected by fact it is drawn in return for creation of debt obligation from payee to drawer which is secured by collateral, nor is such negotiability affected by promise to maintain or protect collateral, and borrower who accepts check representing proceeds of his loan may freely negotiate check as his own property notwithstanding security agreement which secures his obligation to repay. Johnson v. State, 158 Ind. App. 611, 304 N.E.2d 555 (1973).

Use of waiver of defense clause (often, as here, in fine print and couched in technical language which is difficult for the ordinary consumer to appreciate) cannot impart attributes of negotiability to otherwise negotiable instrument. Fairfield Credit Corp. v. Donnelly, 158 Conn. 543, 264 A.2d 547, 39 A.L.R.3d 509 (1969).

The appellant's printed name and address at the top of the check established that he was named in the instrument and that he clothed his agent with authority to possess, issue, and assign checks drawn upon his account, and respondent took the checks, as a holder in due course free from any and all defenses on the part of the appellant. Jenkins v. Evans, 31 A.D.2d 597 (3d Dep't 1968).

Where an employer signs his name to a blank check the improper completion of the check by an employee and his conversion of the proceeds of the check constitutes the crime of embezzling money, as against the argument that the blank check was not a negotiable instrument as it did not contain any order or promise to pay money and was not payable to order or bearer. State v. Moreno, 156 Conn. 233, 240 A.2d 871 (1968).

A so-called "Personal Money Order-Register Check" (an instrument issued by a bank for the amount of the sum of money deposited with it by the check's purchaser, and showing the name of the bank as drawee but with the names of the drawer and payee left blank) creates the same debtor-creditor relationship between the bank and its customer which any ordinary deposit of funds would create; and the purchaser of the check who, under his contract with the bank, is the sole person who may draw on the fund deposited, and he has a clear right to stop payment prior to the check's acceptance by the bank. Garden Check Cashing Serv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 25 A.D.2d 137 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 941, 277 N.Y.S.2d 141, 223 N.E.2d 566 (1966).

19. Certificate of deposit.

Section 81-5-63 and § 81-12-137, which deal, respectively, with joint deposits in a bank checking account and in a savings account in a savings association, create a presumption of joint tenancy ownership with the right of survivorship. On the other hand, such presumption does not apply to bank issued certificates of deposit held in the names of 2 or more persons, in the absence of express intent on the certificate to create such joint tenancy. Delta Fertilizer, Inc. v. Weaver, 547 So. 2d 800 (Miss. 1989).

Where (1) first bank, which had loaned debtor $20,000 and accepted as collateral nonnegotiable certificate of deposit that first bank had previously issued to debtor, inadvertently delivered renewal certificate to debtor, (2) debtor, instead of returning renewal certificate to first bank, used it as collateral for loan from second bank and gave second bank security interest in renewal certificate that second bank perfected by possession under UCC § 9-304(1), and (3) on debtor's default on both loans, second bank presented renewal certificate to first bank, which dishonored it, court held (1) that second bank was not holder in due course under UCC §§ 3-302(1) and 3-805 because renewal certificate was nonnegotiable under UCC § 3-104(1)(d), (2) that as a result, second bank was mere assignee of renewal certificate and certificate under assignments statute was subject to first bank's right of setoff, (3) that exclusion of right of setoff from Article 9 protection means that claimant of right of setoff (first bank) against collateral (renewal certificate) is not barred from enforcing such right merely because another creditor (second bank) has perfected security interest in collateral by taking possession thereof, since right of setoff is separate from priority provisions of Article 9, and (4) that as a result, second bank held debtor's renewal certificate subject to any defenses of first bank, which "defenses" included first bank's right of setoff. Bank of Crystal Springs v. First Nat'l Bank, 427 So. 2d 968 (Miss. 1983).

In action to determine whether two certificates of deposit should be included in estate of decedent, certificates of deposit were not negotiable under UCC § 3-104 where there were neither payable to order nor to bearer on their face; certificates of deposit were governed by UCC pursuant to UCC § 3-805 where they satisfied all attributes of negotiable instrument except words of negotiability; cousin of decedent was entitled to one of certificates of deposit where decedent had indorsed it in blank and physically delivered it to him, thereby creating presumption of valid and intentional delivery under UCC § 3-201 of inter vivos gift, and where this presumption was not overcome by evidence that periodic interests payments which accrued on certificate continued to be deposited into separate savings account belonging to decedent. Rand v. Moore, 414 So. 2d 885 (Miss. 1981).

Certificate of deposit issued by bank which (1) represented deposit of specified sum by decedent, (2) was payable in the alternative to decedent or to plaintiff-claimant of certificate's proceeds, (3) had not been negotiated to plaintiff in accordance with UCC § 3-116(a), but was still in decedent's possession at time of her death, and (4) contained no reference to survivorship rights, was in decedent's possession as holder in due course and thus was part of her estate when she died (holding that Uniform Commercial Code controls certificates of deposit which comply with UCC § 3-104(2)(c)). Thomas v. Estate of Eubanks, 358 So. 2d 709 (Miss. 1978).

Certificate of deposit which was not payable to order or to bearer, but was payable only on return of instrument properly indorsed, was not negotiable instrument under UCC § 3-104(1)(d) and § 3-110(2). Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust v. Commercial Bank of Liberty, 567 S.W.2d 710 (App. 1978).

Where statutory requirements are met, certificate of deposit becomes negotiable instrument carrying with it obligation on part of depository bank to repay receipt of money given to it by its depositor; thus, where depositor transferred certificates of deposit to lending bank as collateral for loan, security interest of lending bank in certificates of deposit included and extended to unidentified funds on deposit by depositor at depository bank which would pay certificates when due, and depository bank was precluded from setting off against certificates depositor's obligations to depository bank. First Wisconsin Nat'l Bank v. Midland Nat'l Bank, 76 Wis. 2d 662, 251 N.W.2d 829 (1977).

Savings certificates, issued by savings and loan association, which were not payable to order or to bearer were not negotiable instruments under UCC § 3-104; since they were not negotiable, under UCC § 3-805, purchasers of such certificates were not holders in due course and, thus, under UCC § 3-306 such purchasers took certificates subject to defense of failure or want of consideration. Jones v. United Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 515 S.W.2d 869 (Mo. Ct. App. 1974).

Certificate of deposit, which contained unconditional promise to pay certain sum of money absolutely, had all essential elements of promissory note and should be governed by same rules as promissory note with reference to creation of joint-tenancy rights therein. In re Estate of Baxter, 56 Ill. 2d 223, 306 N.E.2d 304 (1973).

20. Note.

Where promissory note was not negotiable under UCC § 3-104(1), liability of signer of such note was not controlled by Uniform Commercial Code provisions governing personal liability of agent who signs on behalf of principal or corporation (see UCC § 3-403). Central States, S.E. & S.W. Areas, Health & Welfare Fund v. Pitman, 66 Ill. App. 3d 300, 383 N.E.2d 793 (3d Dist. 1978).

Note was negotiable notwithstanding it contained acceleration clause and clause confessing judgment on instrument if not paid when due, since UCC §§ 3-109 and 3-112(d), respectively, authorize such clauses. Broadway Mgt. Corp. v. Briggs, 30 Ill. App. 3d 403, 332 N.E.2d 131 (4th Dist. 1975).

Promissory notes which stated "Buyer agrees to pay to Seller..." were not negotiable instruments, assignee of such notes was not holder in due course thereof, and, thus, trial court erred in refusing to consider evidence in support of maker's affirmative defenses. Locke v. Aetna Acceptance Corp., 309 So. 2d 43 (Fla. App. 1975).

Assignee of promissory note qualified as "holder" under UCC § 1-201(20), but provision that judgment could be confessed "at any time hereafter" rendered note non-negotiable under UCC § 3-112(d) and outside scope of Code. Shatz v. Dunn, 18 Ill. App. 3d 390, 309 N.E.2d 702 (5th Dist. 1974).

UCC does not require that negotiable note be payable "to order or to bearer" in haec verba; these are alternative requirements and it is necessary to comply with only one of them. First Nat'l City Bank v. Valentine, 62 Misc. 2d 719 (1970).

A note is an irrevocable promise to pay made by the maker. Mott v. Sewickley Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 211 Pa. Super. 357, 236 A.2d 541 (1967).

21. —Additional powers or provisions.

The provision in a note for "interest after maturity at the highest lawful" rate does not render the note non-negotiable for failure to state a sum certain as required by § 3-104(1)(b) because, there being no agreement in writing for any other rate after default, the interest rate after maturity would be that indicated in c 107, § 3 which would make the note equivalent to one payable "with interest," which latter type of note would clearly be negotiable under c 106. § 3-118(d). Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Ingel, 347 Mass. 119, 196 N.E.2d 847 (1964).

Evidence that a note and a contract completion certificate were "together" at one stage of a transaction does not justify an inference that the note and completion certificate were "part of the same instrument" and that an additional obligation in the completion certificate rendered the note non-negotiable under subsection (1)(b) of the instant section. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Ingel, 347 Mass. 119, 196 N.E.2d 847 (1964).

A clause in a note which makes credit life insurance available to the maker does not affect negotiability of the note under subsection (1)(b) because it is clear that the "no other promise" provision therein refers only to promises by maker. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Ingel, 347 Mass. 119, 196 N.E.2d 847 (1964).

The addition of the power to confess judgment at any time destroyed the negotiability of a note. Atlas Credit Corp. v. Leonard, 15 Pa. D. & C.2d 292 (1957).

22. —Relationship with contracts or other documents.

Where note, executed as separate document along with conditional sales contract, was assigned to bank for valuable consideration and bank sued maker for balance due on note, court held (1) that trial court erred in holding that note and conditional sales contract had merged, thus rendering note nonnegotiable and causing bank not to be holder in due course; (2) that note satisfied requirements of negotiability under UCC § 3-104(1); (3) that under UCC § 3-119(2), negotiability of note was not affected by separate sales contract; and (4) that since bank had paid value in good faith for note on day it was executed and assignment of note had preceded any notice of claim about merchandise sold, bank was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1). Northwestern Bank v. Neal, 271 S.C. 544, 248 S.E.2d 585 (1978).

Two notes which were issued subject to separate agreement between makers and payee were not negotiable instruments within meaning of Article 3 of Uniform Commercial Code. TMA Fund, Inc. v. Bieber, 380 F. Supp. 1248 (E.D. Pa. 1974), appeal dismissed, 520 F.2d 639 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975), aff'd, 532 F.2d 747 (3d Cir. Pa. 1976).

Where note bears legend "as per contract," this fact does not prevent it from containing unconditional promise within provision of § 3-104, subd b, since § 3-105, subd 1(c) provides that promise is not made conditional by fact that instrument refers to or states that it arises out of separate agreement. Such legend does not affect the negotiability of the instrument as would statement that instrument is subject to or governed by any other agreement as is provided by § 105, subd 2(a). D'Andrea v. Feinberg, 45 Misc. 2d 270 (1965).

The negotiability of a note is not affected by the fact that it was originally physically attached to a conditional sales contract. Congress Fin. Corp. v. J-K Coin Op Equip. Co., 353 F.2d 683 (7th Cir. Ind. 1965).

The negotiability of a note is not affected by a variance between it and a written contract where there is nothing in the note to indicate that it is subject to the terms of the contract. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Ingel, 347 Mass. 119, 196 N.E.2d 847 (1964).

23. —Requirement that note be unconditional.

Note was not negotiable instrument under UCC § 3-104(1) where promise to pay contained in instrument was conditional and instrument also contained express restriction that it could not be transferred, pledged, or assigned by payee without written consent of maker. First State Bank v. Clark, 91 N.M. 117, 570 P.2d 1144 (1977).

Writings on reverse side of paid note and on accompanying envelope, signed by decedent, stating that decedent's son and another loaned decedent money to pay note, that decedent wanted this paid out of his estate, and that he owed his son and the other person a certain sum of money, did not fall within classification of promissory note in statute of limitations since writings failed to provide for payment absolutely and unconditionally. Estate of Garrett v. Garrett, 24 Ill. App. 3d 895, 322 N.E.2d 213 (2d Dist. 1975).

In class action, brought by purchasers of promissory notes secured by mortgages, against seller's reorganization trustee, notes met definition of "note" as defined by UCC § 3-104 and were negotiable and unconditional under UCC §§ 3-105, 3-112 and 3-119; purchasers were holders in due course for value under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 and notes were properly negotiated by bankrupt by endorsement and delivery under UCC § 3-202; under UCC § 3-414 reorganization trustee was bound on endorser's contract. Hall v. Security Planning Serv., Inc., 371 F. Supp. 7 (D. Ariz. 1974).

The requirement that the instrument contain an unconditional order or promise to pay a sum certain in money is not retroactive. United States v. Farrington, 172 F. Supp. 797 (D. Mass. 1959).

24. —Time for payment.

"Promissory note" which was payable "upon evidence of an acceptable permanent loan...and upon acceptance of the [loan] commitment," was not payable on demand or at a definite time under UCC §§ 3-108 and 3-109(2), it was therefore not negotiable under UCC § 3-104(1)(c), and thus holder was not entitled to recover against signers of note under UCC § 3-307(2) merely upon production of note and admission of its execution. Barton v. Scott Hudgens Realty & Mtg., Inc., 136 Ga. App. 565, 222 S.E.2d 126 (1975).

Instrument made payable "at the earliest possible time" was not payable at definite time, nor was phrase "at the earliest possible time" equivalent to no time for payment being stated in instrument; hence, it was not negotiable demand note. Williams v. Cooper, 504 S.W.2d 564 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Notes payable to bank which were silent as to time when confession of judgment could occur were non-negotiable and were not governed by UCC. von Frank v. Hershey Nat'l Bank, 269 Md. 138, 306 A.2d 207 (1973).

Instruments payable on demand include those in which no time for payment is stated. Erickson v. Newell, 183 Neb. 641, 163 N.W.2d 286 (1968).

25. Bonds, warrants and other government obligations.

Under UCC § 3-104(1)(b) and (d), bond which was not payable in sum certain, and which also was not expressly payable to order or to bearer, was not negotiable instrument. Cobb Bank & Trust Co. v. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co., 459 F. Supp. 328 (N.D. Ga. 1978), aff'd, 624 F.2d 722 (5th Cir. Ga. 1980).

Warrant issued by governmental levee district directing state comptroller to pay construction company sum certain was "negotiable instrument" under UCC § 3-104(1), and under UCC § 3-105(1)(g), dealing with instruments issued by governmental agencies, unconditional promise to pay contained in warrant was not made conditional by fact that instrument was limited to payment of particular fund or proceeds of particular source. St. James Bank & Trust Co. v. Board of Comm'rs, 354 So. 2d 233 (La. App. 1978).

In action by bank to recover funds paid by it in exchange for warrant issued by governmental levee district, district's contention that even if warrant should qualify as negotiable instrument under UCC § 3-104(1) and § 3-105(1)(g), it was still collection item and bank should not have advanced its funds until warrant cleared state comptroller and funds were paid by state treasurer could not be sustained, since warrant either was or was not a negotiable instrument, and the law does not recognize a particular category of negotiable instruments that are somehow less negotiable because they are bank collection items. St. James Bank & Trust Co. v. Board of Comm'rs, 354 So. 2d 233 (La. App. 1978).

Revenue bonds and coupons with indefinite interest rate provisions are not negotiable instruments because of failure to meet "sum certain" requirement. Brazos River Auth. v. Carr, 405 S.W.2d 689 (Tex. 1966).

Bonds and their coupons issued by public authority which provide for the payment of an indefinite rate of interest are not negotiable, and neither statute authorizing authority to issue negotiable bonds nor a resolution of the authority declaring the bonds to be negotiable alters the fact. Brazos River Auth. v. Carr, 405 S.W.2d 689 (Tex. 1966).

26. Money order.

Money order which was signed by alleged drawer, contained unconditional order to pay sum certain in money, was payable on demand and to order of specified person and was not drawn on bank, was draft or bill of exchange. People v. Peace, 48 Mich. App. 79, 210 N.W.2d 116 (1973).

A bank money order which does not require the signature of the issuer is subject to a stop payment order. Krom v. Chemical Bank N.Y. Trust Co., 38 A.D.2d 871 (3d Dep't 1972).

Money orders which were not "payable to order or to bearer" but made "payable to" named payee were not negotiable. Nation-Wide Check Corp. v. Banks, 260 A.2d 367 (D.C. 1969).

Postal money order resembles negotiable instrument in many but not all respects. See United States v. First Nat'l Bank, 263 F. Supp. 298 (D. Mass. 1967).

Unlike a cashier's check or a traveller's check, both of which are signed by the issuer prior to their issuance, a so-called "Personal Money Order-Register Check" at no time bears the signature of the drawee, who enters into no contract relations with the holder unless and until the instrument is accepted; and a bank issuing such a check is under no obligation to accept or pay the same to a holder, innocent or otherwise, after receipt of a stop-payment order from the purchaser of the check. Garden Check Cashing Serv., Inc. v.

First Nat'l City Bank, 25 A.D.2d 137 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 941, 277 N.Y.S.2d 141, 223 N.E.2d 566 (1966).

A so-called "Personal Money Order-Register Check", which bears no signature whatsoever at the time of its purchase from the drawee bank, does not become a negotiable instrument until the purchaser fills in the name of a payee and signs it himself as the drawer. Garden Check Cashing Serv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 25 A.D.2d 137 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 941, 277 N.Y.S.2d 141, 223 N.E.2d 566 (1966).

Bogus money orders, although meeting the other requirements of this section and simulating negotiable instruments in form, are not negotiable when not payable to order or bearer. Strauss v. State, 113 Ga. App. 90, 147 S.E.2d 367 (1966).

27. Retail installment contract.

Where note, executed as separate document along with conditional sales contract, was assigned to bank for valuable consideration and bank sued maker for balance due on note, court held (1) that trial court erred in holding that note and conditional sales contract had merged, thus rendering note nonnegotiable and causing bank not to be holder in due course; (2) that note satisfied requirements of negotiability under UCC § 3-104(1); (3) that under UCC § 3-119(2), negotiability of note was not affected by separate sales contract; and (4) that since bank had paid value in good faith for note on day it was executed and assignment of note had preceded any notice of claim about merchandise sold, bank was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1). Northwestern Bank v. Neal, 271 S.C. 544, 248 S.E.2d 585 (1978).

Retail installment contract for sale of mobile home and security agreement which were combined into one instrument, and which involved promises, obligations, and powers in addition to those declared by UCC § 3-104(1) to be essential for negotiability of a writing, was not a negotiable instrument. Wickware v. National Mtg. Corp. of Am., 570 P.2d 330 (Okla. 1977).

In action by assignee of retail installment contracts, waiver of defenses clause in contract signed by purchasers was ef-factive where assignee purchased contract for value, in good faith, and without notice of any claim or defense. Although retail installment contracts are not negotiable instruments within meaning of UCC § 3-104, standards set forth in UCC § 9-206(1) relating to such instruments are equally applicable in determining whether assignee is entitled to protection of waiver of defense clause. Personal Fin. Co. v. Meredith, 39 Ill. App. 3d 695, 350 N.E.2d 781 (5th Dist. 1976).

There was sufficient doubt that instrument designated as "Retail Installment Contract & Security Agreement" was negotiable instrument, so as to preclude granting summary judgment in face of allegations of lawful defenses, where there was no clear indication that amount of obligation was payable to order or to bearer, where document provided for repossession of collateral by seller without judicial process contrary to requirements of UCC § 3-104(1)(b), and where seller retained purchase money security interest. Pacific Fin. Loans v. Goodwin, 41 Ohio App. 2d 141, 324 N.E.2d 578 (1974).

Instrument denominated "Retail Installment Contract" which showed "seller" to be business college and described articles sold or services rendered as "Med. Secretary Course," with cash price of $490, and which contained provision waiving defenses against assignee thereof, was not negotiable instrument as defined by UCC §§ 3-104 through 3-112, but came within Retail Installment and Home Solicitation Sales Act. Grimes v. Community Loan & Inv. Corp., 130 Ga. App. 8, 202 S.E.2d 265 (1973).

By c. 255, § 12C, inserted by St. 1961, c. 595, certain notes given in connection with the sale of consumer goods are made non-negotiable. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Ingel, 347 Mass. 119, 196 N.E.2d 847 (1964).

28. Traveler's check.

Traveller's check is negotiable instrument within meaning of UCC Article 3 (see UCC § 3-104(1) and Official Comment 4). Gray v. American Express Co., 34 N.C. App. 714, 239 S.E.2d 621 (1977).

American Express Travellers checks, which party to whom such checks were given as payment for merchandise saw holder sign and countersign, but which holder did not date or make payable to plaintiff and which plaintiff never completed although he had authority to do so, were incomplete and unenforceable as matter of law, since omission of payee's name rendered checks nonnegotiable under UCC § 3-104(1)(d), which requires that any writing to be negotiable instrument must be payable "to order" or "to bearer." (holding, however, that failure to date checks did not affect their negotiability since UCC § 3-114 expressly permits instruments otherwise negotiable to be undated). Gray v. American Express Co., 34 N.C. App. 714, 239 S.E.2d 621 (1977).

29. Withdrawal order.

Negotiable orders of withdrawal ("NOW drafts") requiring savings bank to pay specified sum to named third party which (1) are "payable-through" drafts that designate a commercial bank at which they can be presented for payment, (2) clear through banking system in manner similar to traditional checks, and (3) bear legend that gives bank option to require 14 days' notice before making payment, are not checks within meaning of UCC § 3-104(2)(b), since such drafts are not payable on demand. Pennsylvania Bankers Ass'n v. Secretary of Banking, 481 Pa. 332, 392 A.2d 1319 (1978).

A withdrawal order possesses the attributes of negotiability required by UCC § 3-104(1) since it is an unconditional order to the bank signed by the drawer and depositor to pay a specified sum, and it is payable to order and on demand. Consumers Sav. Bank v. Commissioner of Banks, 361 Mass. 717, 282 N.E.2d 416, 64 A.L.R.3d 1310 (1972).

30. "Draft", "Check" or other terms applied to non-negotiable instruments.

Under UCC § 3-104(1)(b) and (d), bond which was not payable in sum certain, and which also was not expressly payable to order or to bearer, was not negotiable instrument. Cobb Bank & Trust Co. v. American Mfrs. Mut. Ins. Co., 459 F. Supp. 328 (N.D. Ga. 1978), aff'd, 624 F.2d 722 (5th Cir. Ga. 1980).

Where promissory note was not negotiable under UCC § 3-104(1), liability of signer of such note was not controlled by Uniform Commercial Code provisions governing personal liability of agent who signs on behalf of principal or corporation (see UCC § 3-403). Central States, S.E. & S.W. Areas, Health & Welfare Fund v. Pitman, 66 Ill. App. 3d 300, 383 N.E.2d 793 (3d Dist. 1978).

Where defendant contended in prosecution for passing bad checks (1) that statute under which he was being prosecuted applied only to negotiable instruments, (2) that sales drafts in case at bar were not negotiable, and (3) that Uniform Commercial Code supported defendant's view that such drafts were not negotiable, court would conclude that even if Uniform Commercial Code could be resorted to for interpretation of criminal statutes, it did not support defendant's contention, since UCC § 3-104(3) specifically states that terms "draft" and "check" may refer to both negotiable and nonnegotiable instruments. Commonwealth v. Schwartz, 250 Pa. Super. 455, 378 A.2d 1237 (1977).

Draft payable to two named payees without addition of words "or order" or any similar words of negotiability was not negotiable instrument within meaning of UCC. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Branch Banking & Trust Co., 282 N.C. 44, 191 S.E.2d 683 (1972).

31. Confession of judgment.

Demand note with clause authorizing confession of judgment "at any time," whether or not default had occurred (i. e., without demand for payment), was nonnegotiable under UCC § 3-112(1)(d). Cheltenham Nat'l Bank v. Snelling, 230 Pa. Super. 498, 326 A.2d 557 (1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 965, 95 S. Ct. 1955, 44 L. Ed. 2d 453 (1975).

Notes payable to bank which were silent as to time when confession of judgment could occur were non-negotiable and were not governed by UCC. von Frank v. Hershey Nat'l Bank, 269 Md. 138, 306 A.2d 207 (1973).

Obligation permitting confession of judgment at any time, as distinguished from "upon default", is not negotiable within UCC § 3-112(1)(d). Blake-Cadillac Oldsmobile, Inc. v. Cackovic, 54 Pa. D. & C.2d 160 (1971).

The presence of a confession of judgment clause does not affect negotiability where it is so limited that judgment may not be entered before default. Vain v. Gordon, 249 Md. 134, 238 A.2d 872 (1968).

Despite the provisions of subsection (1)(d) judgment notes in use in Pennsylvania are not negotiable when they provide that judgment may be entered before the amount is due, and this subsection is construed to mean that a confession of judgment may be authorized only if the instrument is not paid when due. Smith v. Lenchner, 204 Pa. Super. 500, 205 A.2d 626 (Super. 1964).

A note containing a warrant to confess judgment at any time is a non-negotiable instrument, and hence a note authorizing a confession of judgment "as of any term" was not negotiable. Bittner v. McGrath, 186 Pa. Super. 477, 142 A.2d 323 (Super. 1958).

The addition of the power to confess judgment at any time destroyed the negotiability of a note. Atlas Credit Corp. v. Leonard, 15 Pa. D. & C.2d 292 (1957).

Although the type of authority to confess judgments which will not affect negotiability is stated slightly different in this section, the rule is the same as it was under the Negotiable Instruments Law. Atlas Credit Corp. v. Leonard, 15 Pa. D. & C.2d 292 (1957).

32. Miscellaneous instruments.

Since letters of credit are not negotiable instruments as defined by UCC § 3-104(1), bank did not become holder in due course merely by accepting them as security for loans; bank, as assignee of letters of credit which were not expressly transferable, only had right to receive drafts properly drawn by beneficiary pursuant to UCC § 5-116. Shaffer v. Brooklyn Park Garden Apts., 311 Minn. 452, 250 N.W.2d 172 (1977).

The promise of the maker of an instrument to pay a sum certain is not rendered condition by the grant of authority to the payee or assignee to cancel an insurance policy in the event of default, and apply the return premiums against the unpaid balance. Standard Premium Plan Corp. v. Hirschorn, 56 Misc. 2d 687 (1968).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

33. Decisions under Code 1942 § 42.

The statute applies to negotiable instruments only, to the exclusion of non-negotiable. Fish Meal Co. v. Brondum, 242 Miss. 573, 135 So. 2d 825 (1961).

A check is a negotiable instrument. Presley v. American Guarantee & Liab. Ins. Co., 237 Miss. 807, 116 So. 2d 410 (1959).

Where it was shown that the bank had no actual notice of a warranty and agreement and the breach thereof, the fact that there was stapled to the note, given for the purchase of farm equipment, at the time it was indorsed to the bank a purchase order signed by the maker-purchaser in favor of the seller-payee, on the reverse side of which there was a "warranty and agreement," did not put the bank upon notice as to such warranty and agreement or put it upon inquiry as to whether the warranty and agreement had been breached at the time of purchase, so that the bank as a holder in due course for value, and without notice, was entitled to recover against the maker even though the warranty had actually been breached. Misso v. National Bank of Commerce, 231 Miss. 249, 95 So. 2d 124 (1957).

Where note and mortgage are transferred without recourse, indorser is mere assignor subject to no liability except as an implied guarantor that instruments are genuine, that he has good title to them, and that he is not aware of any illegality. Home Ins. Co. v. Citizens Bank, 181 Miss. 181, 178 So. 589 (1938).

Where insurer purchased from mortgagee a mortgage on insured premises and mortgage note after fire loss, and mortgagee indorsed instruments "without recourse," insurer could not recover from mortgagee as a guarantor on ground that premises were mortgagor's homestead, contrary to recital in mortgage, and that mortgagor's wife had not joined in execution of mortgage, in absence of showing that mortgagee had made any false representations to insurer in regard to those matters. Home Ins. Co. v. Citizens Bank, 181 Miss. 181, 178 So. 589 (1938).

Where first indorser on note payable to bank paid bank receiver certain sum and receiver gave receipt releasing indorser from further liability on note and the compromise settlement was made by authority of chancery court, decree authorizing discharge of first indorser and holding of second indorser was unauthorized where made without second indorser's consent. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

As between the indorsers on a note, the indorser whose name appeared first on back of note was liable first for payment of note and his discharge by receiver of payee bank by authority of chancery court discharged indorser whose name appeared second on back of note. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

Maker, by executing trade acceptances, admitted existence of corporate payee, and its capacity to indorse paper, and could not defeat liability on ground that amended charter changing name of corporation to that used in trade acceptances was not filed until four days after execution of acceptances. Betlyn Sec. Corp. v. Bates, 177 Miss. 41, 170 So. 301 (1936).

Purchaser of trade acceptances for cash consideration before due dates without notice of infirmities or defects in instruments held "holder for value, without notice," notwithstanding certificates were executed in favor of corporation after it had resolved to change its name to that used as payee in certificates, but before corporation had filed its amended charter. Betlyn Sec. Corp. v. Bates, 177 Miss. 41, 170 So. 301 (1936).

Where note was otherwise in form of negotiable instrument, recital on face of note that it was subject to and part of contract of sale, referring to incomplete, unexecuted, conditional sales contract in printed form on back of note, held not to render note non-negotiable. Jones v. First Nat'l Bank, 170 Miss. 857, 155 So. 173 (1934).

In suit on negotiable note, maker's defense based on oral agreement that note was payable in merchandise from maker's store, held not available as against holder in due course, for value and without notice of oral agreement. Jones v. First Nat'l Bank, 170 Miss. 857, 155 So. 173 (1934).

Notes must be payable to order or bearer, and, when payable to order, payee must be named. Moore v. Vaughn, 167 Miss. 758, 150 So. 372 (1933).

Automobile sales contract not payable to order or bearer is not negotiable instrument. J.W. McNees Motor Co. v. Brumfield, 157 Miss. 132, 126 So. 898 (1930).

Maker of automobile purchase contract may defend against it for fraud in procurement against purchaser for value without notice, or contract may be cancelled in equity. J.W. McNees Motor Co. v. Brumfield, 157 Miss. 132, 126 So. 898 (1930).

A statute authorizing discharge of surety or accommodation indorser on creditor's failure to commence proceedings after giving him notice in writing was not repealed by the Negotiable Instruments Act. First Nat'l Bank v. Rau, 146 Miss. 520, 112 So. 688 (1927).

One acquiring demand note for value without notice in reasonable time after execution held "holder in due course." Wilson v. Stark, 146 Miss. 498, 112 So. 390 (1927).

Failure to place federal revenue stamp on instrument does not affect negotiability. Currie-McGraw Co. v. Friedman, 135 Miss. 701, 100 So. 273 (1924).

Negotiable instruments law held not to repeal law declaring void notes given for intoxicating liquors. Elkin Henson Grain Co. v. White, 134 Miss. 203, 98 So. 531 (1924).

Breach of maker's contemporary agreement no defense against bona fide holder. Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Hough Drug Co., 123 Miss. 598, 86 So. 359 (1920).

Failure of consideration no defense against bona fide purchaser. Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Hough Drug Co., 123 Miss. 598, 86 So. 359 (1920).

Failure of corporation payee to file charter as condition to doing business no defense against bona fide holder. Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Hough Drug Co., 123 Miss. 598, 86 So. 359 (1920).

34. Decisions under Code 1942 § 51.

Purchaser of note with unfilled blanks for payee's name and time interest should begin was put on inquiry as to defects, and was not "holder in due course." Moore v. Vaughn, 167 Miss. 758, 150 So. 372 (1933).

35. Decisions Under Code 1942 § 167.

A check is a bill of exchange under this section. Presley v. American Guarantee & Liab. Ins. Co., 237 Miss. 807, 116 So. 2d 410 (1959).

Check payable to attorney or bearer, indorsed by attorney and delivered to plaintiff, was a "bill of exchange," on which drawer was primarily liable and attorney secondarily liable. Parrish v. Feldman, 182 Miss. 77, 180 So. 610 (1938), error overruled, 182 Miss. 81, 181 So. 336 (1938).

A bank properly declined to honor a check (defined in § 226, Code 1942, as a "bill of exchange drawn on a bank payable on demand"), intended as a gift of the amount of money called for, where it was not presented for payment until after the death of the maker. Smythe v. Sanders, 136 Miss. 382, 101 So. 435 (1924).

36. Decisions under Code 1942 § 225.

37. Decisions under Code 1942 § 226.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OPINIONS

A submitted document did not contain an unconditional promise to pay a sum certain in money on demand or at a definite time and, therefore, appeared to be a simple contract, but not a promissory note. Gunn, Feb. 11, 2000, A.G. Op. #2000-0053.

§ 75-3-105. Issue of instrument.

(a) "Issue" means the first delivery of an instrument by the maker or drawer, whether to a holder or nonholder, for the purpose of giving rights on the instrument to any person.

(b) An unissued instrument, or an unissued incomplete instrument that is completed, is binding on the maker or drawer, but nonissuance is a defense. An instrument that is conditionally issued or is issued for a special purpose is binding on the maker or drawer, but failure of the condition or special purpose to be fulfilled is a defense.

(c) "Issuer" applies to issued and unissued instruments and means a maker or drawer of an instrument.

§ 75-3-106. Unconditional promise or order.

(a) Except as provided in this section, for the purposes of Section 75-3-104(a), a promise or order is unconditional unless it states (i) an express condition to payment, (ii) that the promise or order is subject to or governed by another writing, or (iii) that rights or obligations with respect to the promise or order are stated in another writing. A reference to another writing does not of itself make the promise or order conditional.

(b) A promise or order is not made conditional (i) by a reference to another writing for a statement of rights with respect to collateral, prepayment, or acceleration, or (ii) because payment is limited to resort to a particular fund or source.

(c) If a promise or order requires, as a condition to payment, a counter-signature by a person whose specimen signature appears on the promise or order, the condition does not make the promise or order conditional for the purposes of Section 75-3-104(a). If the person whose specimen signature appears on an instrument fails to countersign the instrument, the failure to countersign is a defense to the obligation of the issuer, but the failure does not prevent a transferee of the instrument from becoming a holder of the instrument.

(d) If a promise or order at the time it is issued or first comes into possession of a holder contains a statement, required by applicable statutory or administrative law, to the effect that the rights of a holder or transferee are subject to claims or defenses that the issuer could assert against the original payee, the promise or order is not thereby made conditional for the purposes of Section 75-3-104(a); but if the promise or order is an instrument, there cannot be a holder in due course of the instrument.

11. In general.

In action by bank to recover funds paid by it in exchange for warrant issued by governmental levee district, district's contention that even if warrant should qualify as negotiable instrument under UCC § 3-104(1) and § 3-105(1)(g), it was still collection item and bank should not have advanced its funds until warrant cleared state comptroller and funds were paid by state treasurer could not be sustained, since warrant either was or was not a negotiable instrument, and the law does not recognize a particular category of negotiable instruments that are somehow less negotiable because they are bank collection items. St. James Bank & Trust Co. v. Board of Comm'rs, 354 So. 2d 233 (La. App. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-105 and Official Comment thereto, as far as negotiability is concerned, the conditional or unconditional character of the promise or order is to be determined by what is expressed in the instrument itself. When the instrument itself makes express reference to an outside agreement, transaction, or document, the effect on the instrument's negotiability will depend on the nature of the reference. Booker v. Everhart, 294 N.C. 146, 240 S.E.2d 360 (1978).

Where buy-sell agreement for purchase of dress shop stated that balance was to be financed through SBA participation loan, where buyer did not have loan at time of closing and seller agreed to take note in lieu of cash, and where written act of sale executed at same time stated that sale was made pursuant to agreement executed previously by vendors and vendee, parol testimony of parties concerning their intention was admissible pursuant to UCC § 3-119(1), but buyer-maker did not sustain burden of proof that payment of note was conditioned on his obtaining SBA loan. Demaio v. Theriot, 343 So. 2d 1143 (La. App. 1977), writ denied, 346 So. 2d 218 (La. 1977).

12. Unconditional promises.

An instrument is not made nonnegotiable because it states the obligation in payment of which it is made. Anderson v. Consolidated Auto Wholesalers, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 205 (1967, NY Sup.).

13. —Statement of consideration or “as per” contract.

The recital in a promissory note “as per contract” does not affect its negotiability. New York Plumbers Specialties Co. v. Valco Homes, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 587 (1967, NY Sup.).

Where note bears legend “as per contract,” this fact does not prevent it from containing an unconditional promise within provision of § 3-104, subd b, since § 3-105, subd 1(c) provides that promise is not made conditional by fact that instrument refers to or states that it arises out of separate agreement. Such legend does not affect negotiability of instrument as would statement that instrument is subject to or governed by any other agreement as is provided by § 105, subd 2(a). D’Andrea v. Feinberg, 45 Misc. 2d 270 (1965).

14. —Obligation secured by mortgage.

Where note and mortgage were executed simultaneously, note provided that all terms of mortgage were thereby made part of note, and terms of mortgage made it patent that mortgagees could look only to mortgage property to recover debt, assignees of portion of mortgage note were not holders in due course and were subject to limitation in mortgage precluding deficiency judgment. Stern v. Itkin Bros., 87 Misc. 2d 538 (1975).

In class action, brought by purchasers of promissory notes secured by mortgages, against seller’s reorganization trustee, notes met definition of “note” as defined by UCC § 3-104 and were negotiable and unconditional under UCC §§ 3-105, 3-112 and 3-119; purchasers were holders in due course for value under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 and notes were properly negotiated by bankrupt by endorsement and delivery under UCC § 3-202; under UCC § 3-414 reorganization trustee was bound on endorser’s contract. Hall v. Security Plan- ning Serv., Inc., 371 F. Supp. 7 (D. Ariz. 1974).

15. —Government obligation limited to particular fund for payment.

Warrant issued by governmental levee district directing state comptroller to pay construction company sum certain was “negotiable instrument” under UCC § 3-104(1), and under UCC § 3-105(1)(g), dealing with instruments issued by governmental agencies, unconditional promise to pay contained in warrant was not made conditional by fact that instrument was limited to payment of particular fund or proceeds of particular source. St. James Bank & Trust Co. v. Board of Comm’rs, 354 So. 2d 233 (La. App. 1978).

Promise to pay by governmental agency or unit is unconditional even though limited to particular fund. Brazos River Auth. v. Carr, 405 S.W.2d 689 (Tex. 1966).

16. Conditional promises.

The fact that the payee of an instrument assigns the instrument to another “subject to their acceptance” does not render it conditional, for that is not a condition of payment, but merely a condition precedent before the instrument comes into being—a credit approval—which gives rise to the instrument. Standard Premium Plan Corp. v. Hirschorn, 56 Misc. 2d 687 (1968).

17. —Subject to another agreement.

Promissory note that stated that it was in lieu of property settlement supplementing prior deed of separation and property settlement, and that such prior deed and property settlement were incorporated into note by reference, was not negotiable, since parties by incorporating prior deed and property settlement into instrument made it subject to all conditions that might possibly be contained in incorporated documents, so as to render sum certain agreed to be paid in note “conditional” within meaning of UCC § 3-105(2)(a) (stating that whether documents incorporated into note in suit actually contained any conditions that might affect maker’s promise to pay was immaterial, and that basic point involved is that when a note incorporates other documents by reference into its provisions, essential terms of note cannot be ascertained from face of instrument itself). Booker v. Everhart, 294 N.C. 146, 240 S.E.2d 360 (1978).

Two notes which were issued subject to separate agreement between makers and payee were not negotiable instruments within meaning of Article 3 of Uniform Commercial Code. TMA Fund, Inc. v. Biever, 380 F. Supp. 1248 (E.D. Pa. 1974), appeal dismissed, 520 F.2d 639 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975), aff'd, 532 F.2d 747 (3d Cir. Pa. 1976).

Subd 1(c) is intended to resolve conflict and to reject cases in which a reference to separate agreement has been held to mean that payment of instrument must be limited in accordance with terms of such agreement and hence was conditioned by it. D'Andrea v. Feinberg, 45 Misc. 2d 270 (1965).

It has been said that the probable meaning of subparagraph (2)(a) is that a reference to any other agreement destroys negotiability even though the agreement referred to does not, in fact, impose any condition or contingency upon the promise to pay. Subparagraph (2)(a) however, is to be compared with subparagraph (1)(e) of the instant section. United States v. Farrington, 172 F. Supp. 797 (D. Mass. 1959).

18. —Payment limited to particular source.

In action against endorser of promissory note which was to be repaid from cigarette vending machine sales, summary judgment for payee was reversed where there was factual dispute as to whether parties intended instrument to be paid only out of specific fund, in which case note would be rendered "not unconditional" under UCC § 3-105(2)(b). Rothenberg v. Mellow Music, Inc., 291 So. 2d 234 (Fla. App. 1974).

Agreement to pay "within the next 60 days the sum of $5,000 from the jobs now under construction" did not contain an unconditional promise to pay and therefore was not a negotiable instrument and the language was ambiguous as to whether payment was to be made from gross receipts or solely if profits existed and evidence as to such question would clearly be admissible particularly since the additional terms sought to be developed were not inconsistent with the existing agreement. Webb & Sons v. Hamilton, 30 A.D.2d 597 (3d Dep't 1968).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

19. In general.

Where note and mortgage are transferred without recourse, indorser is mere assignor subject to no liability except implied guaranty that instruments are genuine, he has good title to them, and he is not aware of any illegality. Home Ins. Co. v. Citizens Bank, 181 Miss. 181, 178 So. 589 (1938).

Discharge of indorser whose name appears first on back of note, by receiver of bank on authority of chancery court discharged indorser whose name appeared second on note. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

§ 75-3-108. Payable on demand or at definite time.

(a) A promise or order is “payable on demand” if it (i) states that it is payable on demand or at sight, or otherwise indicates that it is payable at the will of the holder, or (ii) does not state any time of payment.

(b) A promise or order is “payable at a definite time” if it is payable on elapse of a definite period of time after sight or acceptance or at a fixed date or dates or at a time or times readily ascertainable at the time the promise or order is issued, subject to rights of (i) prepayment, (ii) acceleration, (iii) extension at the option of the holder, or (iv) extension to a further definite time at the option of the maker or acceptor or automatically upon or after a specified act or event.

(c) If an instrument, payable at a fixed date, is also payable upon demand made before the fixed date, the instrument is payable on demand until the fixed date and, if demand for payment is not made before that date, becomes payable at a definite time on the fixed date.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC §§ 75-3-108, 75-3-109.

11. In general.

Provisions of UCC § 3-109 as to definite time for payment could in no way alter meaning of “definite” or “indefinite” as used in Internal Revenue Code for purpose of valuation of notes in determining tax liability. Caruth v. United States, 566 F.2d 901 (5th Cir. Tex. 1978).

Where instrument for payment of money was written on personalized check form, individual defendants’ names were printed at top of form and their signatures appeared at bottom right-hand corner, where name of bank and account number were crossed out, but remainder of form was filled in as check would be and was payable to plaintiff's order in amount of $12,000 and where it was dated December 31, 1972, and notation "Note-6% Int." appeared at lower left-hand corner, instrument was negotiable demand instrument under UCC § 3-108, individual defendants were personally liable thereon under UCC § 3-403(2), and parol evidence was inadmissible to disestablish such obligation; however, under UCC § 3-401, corporate defendant, whose signature did not appear on instrument, was not liable on it. Kaminsky v. Van Dusen, 88 Misc. 2d 833 (1976).

Statute of limitations on note payable "30 days after demand" began running on making of note, and suit to enforce note was therefore time barred when brought more than six years after note was executed. Enviro-nics, Inc. v. Pratt, 50 A.D.2d 552 (1st Dep't 1975).

Demand note is payable immediately on date of its execution; thus, bank had right to offset unpaid balance of loan evidenced by demand notes against maker's checking account deposits in bank without prior notice, notwithstanding facts that maker's obligations were secured by collateral pursuant to security agreements, that money had been loaned over period of years, and that bank notified debtors of maker's accounts receivable to pay directly to bank. Allied Sheet Metal Fabricators, Inc. v. Peoples Nat'l Bank, 10 Wash. App. 530, 518 P.2d 734 (1974), review denied, 83 Wash. 2d 1013 (1974), cert. denied, 419 U.S. 967, 95 S. Ct. 231, 42 L. Ed. 2d 183 (1974).

A note payable on demand is due immediately after delivery, without further notice or demand. Flintkote Co. v. Grimes, 281 Ala. 707, 208 So. 2d 87 (1968).

When a note is payable on demand, parol evidence is not admissible to change the maturity of the note. Flintkote Co. v. Grimes, 281 Ala. 707, 208 So. 2d 87 (1968).

A note payable "within ten (10) years after date" is payable at a fixed or determinable future time within the meaning of subd. (1) of this section, for the quoted phrase is the equivalent of "on or before ten (10) years after date," payment could not be demanded until expiration of the ten-year period, and an earlier maturity date could not be established by parol evidence. Ferri v. Sylvia, 100 R.I. 270, 214 A.2d 470 (1965).

12. Payable at sight.

A sight draft is forwarded in commercial transactions in order to insure that payment will occur on or before the delivery of goods. A sight draft is a document written by the seller to be paid to the order of the seller, with the buyer as the drawee; it is not, therefore, an ordinary draft which is drawn and tendered by the drawee. McCullum Aviation, Inc. v. CIM Assocs., 446 F. Supp. 511 (S.D. Fla. 1978).

In action against drawer to recover on draft which provided, before space for payee's name, "at sight when approved pay to order of," "at sight" was equivalent to being payable on demand under UCC § 3-108 and where draft, which was payable through bank, did not authorize bank to make payment under UCC § 3-120, approval referred to in quoted phrase was interpreted to require approval by drawer by insertion of authorized signature rather than approval of bank through which draft was made payable. Oneida Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 76 Misc. 2d 1062 (1974).

13. No time stated.

Where buyer of cattle paid for them with defendant bank's "customer draft" which (1) stated in main body of instrument "upon acceptance, pay to order of (plaintiff seller) $_____", and (2) stated in lower left corner of instrument, "To: Cattle Company, 610-627-7, Covington County Bank, Collins, Mississippi," court held (1) that such draft was "demand item" under UCC § 4-302(a), which deals with liability for late return of "demand item" since (a) it was instrument for payment of money under UCC § 4-104(1)(g), and (b) it was payable on demand under UCC § 3-108 because it specified no time for payment, (2) that under definition of "item" in UCC § 4-104(1)(g), draft in suit did not have to be negotiable to be "demand item," (3) that draft's "order to pay" was not affected by words, "on acceptance," (4) that defendant bank was draft's drawee and thus was “payor bank” under UCC §§ 4-105(b) and 4-302(a) because authorized agent of defendant’s customer (seller-drawer) prepared and signed draft, (5) that UCC § 3-121, which deals with instruments payable “at bank,” was inapplicable because draft in suit did not contain words “payable at,” (6) that draft’s payee (plaintiff seller) did not waive defendant’s compliance with liability provisions of UCC § 4-302(a), and (7) that defendant was liable as “payor bank” under UCC § 4-302(a) because it returned draft, which was dishonored for insufficient funds, after defendant’s midnight deadline. Horney v. Covington County Bank, 716 F.2d 335 (5th Cir. 1983), reh’g denied, 725 F.2d 1006 (5th Cir. 1984).

Where (1) two drafts, drawn by buyer on September 15, 1973 and October 15, 1973, were presented when due by seller-payee to first bank, (2) first bank, after crediting seller’s account with amount of drafts, forwarded them to second bank, which received them on September 21, 1973 and October 8, 1973, (3) second bank thereafter notified first bank on January 3, 1974 of drafts’ dishonor and returned them to first bank, (4) first bank, in turn, notified seller and charged back amount of drafts to seller’s account, and (5) seller sought judgment in the alternative for amount of drafts from either second bank or first bank because drawer was in financial distress and drafts were virtually uncollectible, court held (1) that under UCC § 4-105(b) and (d), second bank was payer bank and not collecting bank by virtue of express language in order sentence of drafts, and fact that collection letter accompanying drafts indicated that they were to be paid “through” second bank, instead of “by” it as drawee, was not controlling, (2) since drafts were sight drafts, they matured under UCC § 3-108 when presented to second bank (payor bank), and thus second bank should have returned drafts immediately after learning that drawer would not honor them, (3) under UCC § 4-302(a), second bank was liable for full amount of drafts, which were effectively presented, because of either its failure to settle for them before midnight of banking day on which they were received or its failure to pay or return drafts before bank’s midnight deadline, (4) second (payor) bank was also liable for interest on drafts, since it had held them for unreasonable period of time (two and a half months) after date on which it should have returned them, and (5) first bank (collecting bank) was not liable under UCC § 4-202(1) for any failure to exercise due care in presenting drafts for payment and returning them to payee. Engine Parts, Inc. v. Citizens Bank, 92 N.M. 37, 582 P.2d 809 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-108, undated promissory notes are not invalid but are payable on demand. Nuri Farhadi, Inc. v. Anavian, 58 A.D.2d 546 (1st Dep’t 1977).

Check was demand instrument under UCC § 3-108 where no date for payment was indicated. Turner v. State, 508 S.W.2d 861 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

In action by holder of note against makers who signed it as accommodation for payee: (1) fact that due date of first monthly installment was omitted did not make instrument incomplete in any “necessary respect” under UCC § 3-115(1) and instrument in which no time for payment was stated was payable on demand under UCC § 3-108; (2) holder’s taking of note dated June 30, 1972, on July 14, 1972, was within “a reasonable length of time after its issue” under UCC § 3-304(3)(c); and (3) since note was not overdue when holder took it, lack of consideration was no defense under UCC §§ 3-304(4)(c) and 3-415(2). Gill v. Commonwealth Nat’l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 521 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref’d n.r.e., (Apr. 3, 1974).

Note which does not state time for payment is demand note; language “interest payable biweekly” does not make note payable at fixed time. Davis v. Dennis, 448 S.W.2d 495 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969).

Note stating no time for payment is payable on demand; allegedly unauthorized addition of words “on demand” held immaterial, since such addition did not alter rights or obligations as between payee and maker. Holliday v. Anderson, 428 S.W.2d 479 (Tex. Civ. App. 1968).

Instruments payable on demand include those in which no time for payment is stated. Erickson v. Newell, 183 Neb. 641, 163 N.W.2d 286 (1968).

An instalment form note in which the spaces for the times and amounts of instalments were left blank is a demand note, due and payable immediately, and this is true irrespective of whether the note is negotiable. Master Homecraft Co. v. Zimmerman, 208 Pa. Super. 401, 222 A.2d 440 (1966).

The absence of a specific maturity date is not a fatal defect. Master Homecraft Co. v. Zimmerman, 208 Pa. Super. 401, 222 A.2d 440 (1966).

The fact that a note set out no date of maturity did not constitute grounds for striking a judgment entered thereon, because under this section a note in which no time for payment is stated is payable on demand. Liberty Aluminum Prods. Co. v. Cortis, 14 Pa. D. & C.2d 624 (1958).

14. Instrument not payable on demand.

"Promissory note" which was payable "upon evidence of an acceptable permanent loan...and upon acceptance of the [loan] commitment," was not payable on demand or at a definite time under UCC §§ 3-108 and 3-109(2), it was therefore not negotiable under UCC § 3-104(1)(c), and thus holder was not entitled to recover against signers of note under UCC § 3-307(2) merely upon production of note and admission of its execution. Barton v. Scott Hudgens Realty & Mtg., Inc., 136 Ga. App. 565, 222 S.E.2d 126 (1975).

Instrument made payable "at the earliest possible time" was not payable at definite time, nor was phrase "at the earliest possible time" equivalent to no time for payment being stated in instrument; hence, it was not negotiable demand note. Williams v. Cooper, 504 S.W.2d 564 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

15. Payable on demand.

"Promissory note" which was payable "upon evidence of an acceptable permanent loan...and upon acceptance of the [loan] commitment," was not payable on demand or at a definite time under UCC §§ 3-108 and 3-109(2), it was therefore not negotiable under UCC § 3-104(1)(c), and thus holder was not entitled to recover against signers of note under UCC § 3-307(2) merely upon production of note and admission of its execution. Barton v. Scott Hudgens Realty & Mtg., Inc., 136 Ga. App. 565, 222 S.E.2d 126 (1975).

16. Acceleration clause.

Acceleration clauses premised on default in payment are enforceable under UCC § 3-109(1)(c). Accordingly, where a suit is based only on a note and the creditor does not bring an action to foreclose on the security for the note, such as a deed of trust, the acceleration clause in the note is enforceable, and the debtor has no statutory or equitable right to cure the money default in order to prevent his equitable interest in the collateral (the land) from being jeopardized. Smith v. Certified Realty Corp., 41 Colo. App. 170, 585 P.2d 293 (1978), aff'd, 198 Colo. 222, 597 P.2d 1043 (1979).

Note was negotiable notwithstanding it contained acceleration clause and clause confessing judgment on instrument if not paid when due, since UCC §§ 3-109 and 3-112(d), respectively, authorize such clauses. Broadway Mgt. Corp. v. Briggs, 30 Ill. App. 3d 403, 332 N.E.2d 131 (4th Dist. 1975).

17. Posted dated check.

In action by mother and son against father's executrix to recover on instrument in form of check payable to order of son for $20,000, executed by father in 1969 and delivered to mother, post dated November 4, 1984, where check was endorsed by father to effect that $20,000 should be taken from his estate at death for his son, endorsement modified check by providing for acceleration of time of payment, as authorized by UCC § 3-109(1)(c), and for direct payment by drawer's estate. Smith v. Gentilotti, 371 Mass. 839, 359 N.E.2d 953 (1977).

III. DECISIONS UNDER CURRENT LAW.

18. In general.

Holder in due course of note, materially altered by blank date of payment being filled in, can recover on it according to original tenor. Wilson v. Stark, 146 Miss. 498, 112 So. 390 (1927).

Demand note providing for interest held not to mature and set statute running till demand. Shapleigh Hdwe. Co. v. Spiro, 141 Miss. 38, 106 So. 209, 44 A.L.R. 393 (1925).

Note endorsed and delivered when overdue is, as regards person issuing or endorsing it, payable on demand and subject to the laws governing such paper. Carter

v. Jennings, 134 Miss. 263, 98 So. 687 (1924).

(a) A promise or order is payable to bearer if it:

(1) States that it is payable to bearer or to the order of bearer or otherwise indicates that the person in possession of the promise or order is entitled to payment;

(2) Does not state a payee; or

(3) States that it is payable to or to the order of cash or otherwise indicates that it is not payable to an identified person.

(b) A promise or order that is not payable to bearer is payable to order if it is payable (i) to the order of an identified person or (ii) to an identified person or order. A promise or order that is payable to order is payable to the identified person.

(c) An instrument payable to bearer may become payable to an identified person if it is specially indorsed pursuant to Section 75-3-205(a). An instrument payable to an identified person may become payable to bearer if it is indorsed in blank pursuant to Section 75-3-205(b).

A conservator of an estate had the authority to endorse and negotiate checks made payable to the estate’s conservatorship. Great S. Nat’l Bank v. Minter, 590 So. 2d 129 (Miss. 1991).

Certificate of deposit which was not payable to order or to bearer, but was payable only on return of instrument properly indorsed, was not negotiable instrument under UCC § 3-104(1)(d) and § 3-110(2). Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust v. Commercial Bank of Liberty, 567 S.W.2d 710 (App. 1978).

Bank was payee of checks made payable to "Pittsburgh National Bank Carpenters Contribution Account" under UCC § 3-117(c), and trustees of money in account named were not payees under UCC § 3-110(1)(e), where, inter alia, agreement which established account clearly created creditor-debtor relationship between trustees of account funds and bank, as depository of trust funds. West Penn Admin., Inc. v. Union Nat'l Bank, 233 Pa. Super. 311, 335 A.2d 725 (1975).

Draft payable to two named payees without addition of words "or order" or any similar words of negotiability was not negotiable instrument within meaning of UCC. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Branch Banking & Trust Co., 282 N.C. 44, 191 S.E.2d 683 (1972).

Postal money order resembles negotiable instrument in many but not all respects. See United States v. First Nat'l Bank, 263 F. Supp. 298 (D. Mass. 1967).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-111.

12. In general.

Judgment by confession entered pursuant to clause in negotiable instrument payable "to the order of Three Thousand Four Hundred Ninety Eight and ⁴⁵/₁₀₀ Dollars" was improper; note was not bearer paper within meaning of UCC § 3-111, and holder could not be determined on face of instrument. Broadway Mgt. Corp. v. Briggs, 30 Ill. App. 3d 403, 332 N.E.2d 131 (4th Dist. 1975).

If an instrument is made payable to an existing person not intended to have any interest in it, and such fact was known to the person making it so payable or known to his employee, the Legislature intended to make such an instrument bearer paper, thereby relieving a drawee or any endorser from the resulting loss and imposing the loss resulting from actions of a dishonest employee on the drawer-employer. Phoenix Die Casting Co. v. Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co., 50 Misc. 2d 152 (1966).

Execution of guarantee was not Code transaction; guarantee was not "transaction ... which is intended to create a security interest in personal property or fixtures including goods, documents, instruments, general intangibles, chattel paper, or accounts," under UCC § 9-102(1)(a); neither did guarantee of accounts receivable fall within coverage of Article 3 of UCC, §§ 3-102 to 3-805, formalities of which apply only to guarantees of commercial paper. EAC Credit Corp. v. King, 507 F.2d 1232 (5th Cir. 1975).

Savings certificates, issued by savings and loan association, which were not payable to order or to bearer were not negotiable instruments under UCC § 3-104; since they were not negotiable, under UCC § 3-805, purchasers of such certificates were not holders in due course and, thus, under UCC § 3-306 such purchasers took certificates subject to defense of failure or want of consideration. Jones v. United Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 515 S.W.2d 869 (Mo. Ct. App. 1974).

Instruments not payable to order or bearer were non-negotiable in sense that there could be no holder in due course thereof; however, under Code § 3-805 and official comment thereto, such instruments are treated as negotiable in other respects and are referred to as checks; being checks within Code, such instruments can be subject of crime of larceny by check. Faulkner v. State, 445 P.2d 815 (Alaska 1968).

Purchaser of trade acceptances for cash consideration before due dates without notice of infirmities or defects in instruments held "holder for value without notice," notwithstanding certificates were executed in favor of corporation after it had resolved to change its name to that used as payee in certificates, but before corporation had filed its amended charter. Betlyn Sec. Corp. v. Bates, 177 Miss. 41, 170 So. 301 (1936).

Maker, by executing trade acceptances, admitted existence of corporate payee, and its capacity to indorse paper, and could not defeat liability on ground that amended charter changing name of corporation to that used in trade acceptances was not filed until four days after execution of acceptances. Betlyn Sec. Corp. v. Bates, 177 Miss. 41, 170 So. 301 (1936).

Notes must be payable to order or bearer, and, when payable to order, payee must be named. Moore v. Vaughn, 167 Miss. 758, 150 So. 372 (1933).

Payment of negotiable instrument to person not in possession is at payer's risk. Sivley v. Williamson, 112 Miss. 276, 72 So. 1008 (1916).

Note payable to bearer is negotiable instrument. Sivley v. Williamson, 112 Miss. 276, 72 So. 1008 (1916).

§ 75-3-110. Identification of person to whom instrument is payable.

(a) The person to whom an instrument is initially payable is determined by the intent of the person, whether or not authorized, signing as, or in the name or behalf of, the issuer of the instrument. The instrument is payable to the person intended by the signer even if that person is identified in the instrument by a name or other identification that is not that of the intended person. If more than one (1) person signs in the name or behalf of the issuer of an instrument and all the signers do not intend the same person as payee, the instrument is payable to any person intended by one or more of the signers.

(b) If the signature of the issuer of an instrument is made by automated means, such as a check-writing machine, the payee of the instrument is determined by the intent of the person who supplied the name or identification of the payee, whether or not authorized to do so.

(c) A person to whom an instrument is payable may be identified in any way, including by name, identifying number, office, or account number. For the purpose of determining the holder of an instrument, the following rules apply:

(1) If an instrument is payable to an account and the account is identified only by number, the instrument is payable to the person to whom the account is payable. If an instrument is payable to an account identified by number and by the name of a person, the instrument is payable to the named person, whether or not that person is the owner of the account identified by number.

(2) If an instrument is payable to:

(i) A trust, an estate, or a person described as trustee or representative of a trust or estate, the instrument is payable to the trustee, the representative, or a successor of either, whether or not the beneficiary or estate is also named;

(ii) A person described as agent or similar representative of a named or identified person, the instrument is payable to the represented person, the representative, or a successor of the representative;

(iii) A fund or organization that is not a legal entity, the instrument is payable to a representative of the members of the fund or organization; or

(iv) An office or to a person described as holding an office, the instrument is payable to the named person, the incumbent of the office, or a successor to the incumbent.

(d) If an instrument is payable to two (2) or more persons alternatively, it is payable to any of them and may be negotiated, discharged, or enforced by any or all of them in possession of the instrument. If an instrument is payable to two (2) or more persons not alternatively, it is payable to all of them and may be negotiated, discharged, or enforced only by all of them. If an instrument payable to two (2) or more persons is ambiguous as to whether it is payable to the persons alternatively, the instrument is payable to the persons alternatively.

A conservator of an estate had the authority to endorse and negotiate checks made payable to the estate's conservatorship. Great S. Nat'l Bank v. Minter, 590 So. 2d 129 (Miss. 1991).

Under UCC § 3-117(3), providing that instrument made payable to named person with additional words describing him is payable to payee unconditionally and additional words have no effect on subsequent parties, check payable to "Shores Corporation of Miami Escrow Acct. for Unit 401D Building C B/O Pablo Goldszmidt," which was indorsed "For deposit only, Shores Corporation of Miami," followed by deposit account number, was validly negotiated instrument, and any subsequent party dealing with it could disregard payee's description and treat instrument as payable unconditionally to payee. Pan Am. Bank v. Goldszmidt, 364 So. 2d 505 (Fla. App. 1978), cert. denied, 373 So. 2d 458 (Fla. 1979).

Cashier's check payable to "Shores Corporation of Miami, Escrow Acct. for Unit 301D Building C B/O Ernesto Yanco," which was indorsed "For Deposit Only, Shores Corporation of Miami," followed by deposit account number, was valid and effective under UCC § 3-117(3), which provides that an instrument made payable to named person with additional words describing him is payable to payee unconditionally and additional words are without effect on subsequent parties. Pan Am. Bank v. Yanco, 364 So. 2d 508 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 3d Dist. 1978).

In action against bank for alleged negligence in cashing cashier's check issued against account in another bank into which plaintiff's funds had wrongfully been deposited, where evidence showed that such check was made payable to "Emil Haliewicz, Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc."; that "Emil Haliewicz" was name of alleged converter of plaintiff's funds and "Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc." was plaintiff's corporate designation; and that such check had been indorsed by Haliewicz by printing "Swiss Baco Skyline Logg. Inc." on back of instrument and signing his name below such printed words, summary judgment in favor of defendant bank would be affirmed because (1) designation of payee as "Emil Haliewicz, Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc." did not constitute joint-payee language under UCC § 3-116; (2) under facts of case, check was payable under UCC § 3-117(c) to "Emil Haliewicz" conditionally; and (3) plaintiff "Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc.," not being a named payee of such check, had no protectable interest therein. Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc. v. Haliewicz, 18 Wash. App. 21, 567 P.2d 1141 (1977).

Bank was payee of checks made payable to "Pittsburgh National Bank Carpenters Contribution Account" under UCC § 3-117(c), and trustees of money in account named were not payees under UCC § 3-110(1)(e), where, inter alia, agreement which established account clearly created creditor-debtor relationship between trustees of account funds and bank, as depository of trust funds. West Penn Admin., Inc. v. Union Nat'l Bank, 233 Pa. Super. 311, 335 A.2d 725 (1975).

Where a promissory note is made payable to one named therein as attorney for plaintiffs but not endorsed to them by the attorney, plaintiffs may enforce payment as holders of the note. Bennett v. Cannon, 114 Ga. App. 479, 151 S.E.2d 828 (1966).

§ 75-3-111. Place of payment.

Except as otherwise provided for items in Chapter 4, an instrument is payable at the place of payment stated in the instrument. If no place of payment is stated, an instrument is payable at the address of the drawee or maker stated in the instrument. If no address is stated, the place of payment is the place of business of the drawee or maker. If a drawee or maker has more than one (1) place of business, the place of payment is any place of business of the drawee or maker chosen by the person entitled to enforce the instrument. If the drawee or maker has no place of business, the place of payment is the residence of the drawee or maker.

11. Instruments "payable through" bank.

An award of summary judgment in favor of plaintiff is affirmed where defendant insurer delivered to its insured a draft drawn on itself and payable through its bank in an attempt to honor its apparent obligation under an automobile theft policy, which draft was payable also to plaintiff due to plaintiff's security interest in the insured vehicle, and plaintiff deposited the draft in its bank account after the insured indorsed the check over to plaintiff thereby extinguishing plaintiff's security interest in the vehicle, following which defendant stopped payment on the draft upon learning that its insured's claim was fraudulent, at which time plaintiff's account was debited with the amount of the dishonored draft and plaintiff demanded of the defendant payment of the draft. Since the check was drawn by the drawer on itself as drawee, payable through its bank, the bank was not authorized to pay the draft, but was merely designated as a collecting bank to present the draft to the drawer-drawee for payment (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-120), and because the draft was not drawn without recourse, and there was no drawee other than defendant itself who accepted responsibility for it, defendant remained liable thereon (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-413, subd [2]); although the draft was principally issued to the insured, plaintiff's name was added as payee only to protect its duly filed security interest in the insured vehicle, and upon issuance of the draft defendant acknowledged its insured's claim that the vehicle had been stolen, thus entitling plaintiff to rely upon that representation and to accept the draft as a holder in due course in payment and release of its lien on the vehicle, constituting the giving of value for the draft (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-302, subd [1]; § 3-303, subds [b], [c]); after defendant stopped payment on the draft it remained liable on it to plaintiff as a holder in due course. GMAC v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 67 A.D.2d 316 (4th Dep't 1979).

Under New Mexico UCC § 3-120 and § 3-121, to make a draft payable "through" or "at" a bank, and thus designate the bank as a mere conduit for payment and not a "payor" bank directly ordered to pay, the drawer of the draft must expressly write the words "through," "pay through," "at," "payable at," or similar words before the name of the bank on the instrument itself. A party who is not the drawer cannot, without authority from the drawer, add these words to the instrument, as by saying "payable through" on some attached document, such as a collection letter, that accompanies presentment of the draft. Engine Parts, Inc. v. Citizens Bank, 92 N.M. 37, 582 P.2d 809 (1978).

Drawee of draft made "payable through" specified bank was "other payor," as that term is used in UCC § 4-207(1), notwithstanding special arrangement between drawee and bank for handling of such drafts, and drawee was, thus, entitled to benefit of collecting bank's warranty of good title to draft in action by drawee against collecting bank on draft on which endorsement of one of draft's payees was forged. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Traders Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 514 S.W.2d 860 (Mo. Ct. App. 1974).

In action against drawer to recover on draft which provided, before space for payee's name, "at sight when approved pay to order of," "at sight" was equivalent to being payable on demand under UCC § 3-108 and where draft, which was payable through bank, did not authorize bank to make payment under UCC § 3-120, approval referred to in quoted phrase was interpreted to require approval by drawer by insertion of authorized signature rather than approval of bank through which draft was made payable. Oneida Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 76 Misc. 2d 1062 (1974).

In action by plaintiff to recover against 2 collecting banks for negligence and breach of warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207, where plaintiff issued 2 drafts payable "through" second collecting bank to order of joint payees, and where one payee deposited drafts in his account with first collecting bank without endorsement of payee entitled to proceeds, first collecting bank forwarded drafts to second collecting bank and second collecting bank presented drafts to plaintiff for acceptance, plaintiff accepted drafts and authorized payment against its account with second collecting bank, and where plaintiff, after being notified that second payee had not received proceeds, issued substitute drafts: (1) since negotiable instrument made payable to payees jointly may be assigned, but not negotiated, without endorsement of all payees and, thus, depositor, collecting banks and plaintiff were assignees, not holders of drafts, who held them subject to rights and claims of real owners; by obtaining payment from plaintiff, (2) second collecting bank was not relieved of liability under UCC § 4-203 on grounds that it acted in accordance with instructions of plaintiff as its transferor since first collecting bank was its transferor and plaintiff its transferee. Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Davis, 126 N.J. Super. 379, 314 A.2d 615 (L. Div. 1974).

Conviction for possession of blank check with intent to defraud was reversed where blank instrument possessed by defendant, stating that it was "payable through" designated bank, did not authorize bank to pay instrument out of drawer's account under UCC § 3-120; instruments possessed by defendant were therefore not checks as defined by UCC § 3-104(2)(b). People v. Burke, 38 Cal. App. 3d 708 (1st Dist. 1974).

Bank which failed to inquire as to legality of copayee's signature on draft, treated draft as though it was negotiable bank check, and paid instrument although draft stated on its face "payable through" particular branch bank, failed to deal with this draft in accordance with reasonable commercial standards practiced in banking business and, therefore, had failed to establish defense to conversion under UCC § 3-419(3). Montgomery v. First Nat'l Bank, 265 Or. 55, 508 P.2d 428 (1973).

Where check was "payable through" bank, payee could not recover from bank on unauthorized endorsement, since bank was collecting bank within UCC § 3-120, and since UCC § 3-419(3) makes it clear that collecting banks bear no liability to the true owner of a draft or check, except for those proceeds which may remain in possession of said bank. Messeroff v. Kantor, 261 So. 2d 553 (Fla. App. 1972).

The fact that a draft is made payable through a bank does not affect the obligation of the drawee to make payment to the payee or other proper holder. Gast v. American Cas. Co., 99 N.J. Super. 538, 240 A.2d 682 (App. Div. 1968).

When an item is payable through a bank, or under the law, and "at" item is deemed so payable, the bank is merely a collecting bank and not a payor bank. Phelan v. University Nat'l Bank, 85 Ill. App. 2d 56, 229 N.E.2d 374 (1st Dist. 1967).

12. Instruments payable at bank.

Where buyer of cattle paid for them with defendant bank's "customer draft" which (1) stated in main body of instrument "upon acceptance, pay to order of (plaintiff seller) $_____, and (2) stated in lower left corner of instrument, "To: Cattle Company, 610-627-7, Covington County Bank, Collins, Mississippi," court held (1) that such draft was "demand item" under UCC § 4-302(a), which deals with liability for late return of "demand item" since (a) it was instrument for payment of money under UCC § 4-104(1)(g), and (b) it was payable on demand under UCC § 3-108 because it specified no time for payment, (2) that under definition of "item" in UCC § 4-104(1)(g), draft in suit did not have to be negotiable to be "demand item," (3) that draft's "order to pay" was not affected by words, "on acceptance," (4) that defendant bank was draft's drawee-and thus was "payor bank" under UCC §§ 4-105(b) and 4-302(a)-because authorized agent of defendant's customer (seller-drawer) prepared and signed draft, (5) that UCC § 3-121, which deals with instruments payable "at bank," was inapplicable because draft in suit did not contain words "payable at," (6) that draft's payee (plaintiff seller) did not waive defendant's compliance with liability provisions of UCC § 4-302(a), and (7) that defendant was liable as "payor bank" under UCC § 4-302(a) because it returned draft, which was dishonored for insufficient funds, after defendant's midnight deadline. Horney v. Covington County Bank, 716 F.2d 335 (5th Cir. 1983), reh'g denied, 725 F.2d 1006 (5th Cir. 1984).

Under New Mexico UCC § 3-120 and § 3-121, to make a draft payable "through" or "at" a bank, and thus designate the bank as a mere conduit for payment and not a "payor" bank directly ordered to pay, the drawer of the draft must expressly write the words "through," "pay through," "at," "payable at," or similar words before the name of the bank on the instrument itself. A party who is not the drawer cannot, without authority from the drawer, add these words to the instrument, as by saying "payable through" on some attached document, such as a collection letter, that accompanies presentment of the draft. Engine Parts, Inc. v. Citizens Bank, 92 N.M. 37, 582 P.2d 809 (1978).

Bank was not "payor bank," as defined in UCC § 4-105(b), with respect to sight drafts which were drawn on buyer of meat and which were sent to bank by seller accompanied by invoices for meat, although drafts stated they were payable at bank, where there were no funds of buyer specifically deposited to seller's credit out of which seller had right to direct bank to make payment. Whitehall Packing Co. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 55 A.D.2d 675 (2d Dep't 1976), appeal dismissed, 41 N.Y.2d 804 (1977), appeal dismissed, 41 N.Y.2d 1009 (1977).

Pointing out it was not necessary to allege presentment and dishonor in the complaint, the court held the failure to give notice of the dishonor of a note discharged the drawer only if the failure to present the note caused a loss because of the insolvency of the bank at which it was payable, and in that event the loss became a matter of defense to be pleaded in the answer with a tender of assignment of the defendant's rights against the bank. County Restaurant & Bar Equip. Co. v. Shaw Mechanical Contractors, 56 Misc. 2d 832 (1968).

A note stated to be payable at a bank is the equivalent of a draft drawn on the bank, and the bank is not only authorized but ordered to make payment. Goldman v. Goldman, 48 Misc. 2d 985 (1966).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

13. In general.

Presentment of note elsewhere than at bank, where payable, is insufficient to hold accommodation indorser. Brewer v. Automobile Sales Co., 147 Miss. 603, 111 So. 578 (1927).

§ 75-3-112. Interest.

(a) Unless otherwise provided in the instrument, (i) an instrument is not payable with interest, and (ii) interest on an interest-bearing instrument is payable from the date of the instrument.

(b) Interest may be stated in an instrument as a fixed or variable amount of money or it may be expressed as a fixed or variable rate or rates. The amount or rate of interest may be stated or described in the instrument in any manner and may require reference to information not contained in the instrument. If an instrument provides for interest, but the amount of interest payable cannot be ascertained from the description, interest is payable at the judgment rate in effect at the place of payment of the instrument and at the time interest first accrues.

In action to recover on unpaid promissory notes secured by mortgage on realty, provision in both notes and mortgage that debtor agreed to pay reasonable attorney's fees arising from default was unenforceable on public policy grounds under well-established rule of Kentucky case law; and such rule was not changed by Kentucky version of UCC § 3-106(1)(e), under which sum payable is "sum certain," even though it is to be paid with costs of collection, or attorney's fee not exceeding 15 percent of amount owing, or $500, whichever is smaller, since such statute means only that attorney's fee greater than that allowed by the statute would render instrument indefinite, and therefore nonnegotiable, for failure to contain sum certain. Nor was such provision in notes and mortgage rendered enforceable by UCC § 9-504(1)(a), dealing with secured party's right to dispose of collateral and apply proceeds to, among other things, "reasonable attorney's fees" incurred by secured party, since UCC § 9-504(1)(a) applies only to personalty that is used as collateral, and in present case collateral consisted of realty. (where court expressly declined to determine what phrase "not prohibited by law" in UCC § 9-504(1)(a) might mean in light of Kentucky case law) Mammoth Cave Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Gerald's, 551 S.W.2d 5 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

In Vermont, it is accepted practice that negotiable instruments may provide for charging the maker with the costs of collection, including attorney's fees. Young v. Northern Terms., Inc., 130 Vt. 258, 290 A.2d 186 (1972).

Provision for a reasonable attorney's fee contained in a promissory note is enforceable. Section 402 of the Personal Property Law as amended July 1, 1967, by the addition of ¶ 6-a (Laws of 1967, Ch 731, §§ 1, 2) is limited to instalment sales contracts. National Bank of N. Am. v. Around the Clock Truck Serv., Inc., 58 Misc. 2d 660 (1968).

A provision in commercial paper for the payment of costs and expenses if "legal proceedings be instituted" is to be interpreted according to general contract law principles as nothing in the Code displaces such principles, and is to be interpreted as requiring that a court action be commenced. Bryant v. Bowles, 108 N.H. 315, 234 A.2d 534 (1967).

The Uniform Commercial Code effects no change in local law with respect to the validity of the provisions of an instrument for attorneys' fees. First Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Heldman, 79 N.J. Super. 65, 190 A.2d 400 (1963).

Subsection (e) of the instant section was referred to as to notes delivered beginning Oct. 1, 1958, the effective date of the Massachusetts Uniform Commercial Code, in Gramatan Nat. Bank & Trust Co. v. Montgomery (1961) 343 Mass 129, 177 NE2d 577, in connection with the proposition that a reasonable attorney's fee may be recovered on an overdue note where the note so provides. Gramatan Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Montgomery, 343 Mass. 129, 177 N.E.2d 577 (1961).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER
UCC § 75-3-106.

12. Unconditional promises.

In suit by holder of note given for purchase of realty against surety, who was original purchaser of such realty and original maker of note sued on prior to its assumption by third party under novation, court held (1) that note was negotiable under UCC § 3-112(1)(b), even though it was secured by mortgage; (2) that even though defendant surety was original maker of note, fact that he had no right, title, or interest in collateral for note entitled him to protection of UCC § 3-606(1) concerning harmful impairment of note's collateral; (2) that holder of note unreasonably impaired value of its collateral by executing subordination agreement and releasing over 700 acres of land, which was part of collateral, without defendant surety's knowledge; and (4) that under UCC § 3-606(1)(b), defendant was discharged by such impairment from liability on note. Hughes v. Tyler, 485 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. 1986).

Where note and mortgage are transferred without recourse, indorser is mere assignor subject to no liability except implied guaranty that instruments are genuine, he has good title to them, and he is not aware of any illegality. Home Ins. Co. v. Citizens Bank, 181 Miss. 181, 178 So. 589 (1938).

Discharge of indorser whose name appears first on back of note, by receiver of bank on authority of chancery court discharged indorser whose name appeared second on note. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

Where chancery court authorized receiver of bank to release first indorser on note, upon payment of certain sum, decree discharging first indorser and holding second indorser, held unauthorized where without second indorser's consent. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

§ 75-3-113. Date of instrument.

(a) An instrument may be antedated or postdated. The date stated determines the time of payment if the instrument is payable at a fixed period after date. Except as provided in Section 75-4-401(c), an instrument payable on demand is not payable before the date of the instrument.

(b) If an instrument is undated, its date is the date of its issue or, in the case of an unissued instrument, the date it first comes into possession of a holder.

Under UCC § 3-122(1)(b), a cause of action on a demand instrument accrues on the date of the instrument, even though no demand is made by the payee (holding that under UCC § 3-114(2), the stated date of demand notes that were antedated determined when notes were payable). Cantonwine v. Fehling, 582 P.2d 592 (Wyo. 1978).

In action by mother and son against father's executrix to recover on instrument in form of check payable to order of son for $20,000, executed by father in 1969 and delivered to mother, post dated November 4, 1984, where check was endorsed by father to effect that $20,000 should be taken from his estate at death for his son Under UCC § 3-104, instrument in question was negotiable instrument and, under UCC § 3-114(1) and (2), its negotiability was not affected by fact that it was post dated 15 years, and time when it was payable was determined by stated date. Smith v. Gentilotti, 371 Mass. 839, 359 N.E.2d 953 (1977).

American Express Travellers checks, which party to whom such checks were given as payment for merchandise saw holder sign and countersign, but which holder did not date or make payable to plaintiff and which plaintiff never completed although he had authority to do so, were incomplete and unenforceable as matter of law, since omission of payee's name rendered checks nonnegotiable under UCC § 3-104(1)(d), which requires that any writing to be negotiable instrument must be payable "to order" or "to bearer." (holding, however, that failure to date checks did not affect their negotiability since UCC § 3-114 expressly permits instruments otherwise negotiable to be undated). Gray v. American Express Co., 34 N.C. App. 714, 239 S.E.2d 621 (1977).

In action for breach of implied warranty of merchantability; brought against installer of home heating and air conditioning system for damages resulting from failure of condensate removal pump to function properly, jury question was presented on issue whether installer was "merchant" within meaning of UCC § 1-104 and UCC § 2-314; fact that installer testified knowledgeably about workings and installation of condensate pumps and that he had recommended that a particular pump be installed in system, supported inference that he had installed and sold other pumps during his years in heating and air conditioning business, but also supported inference that condensate pump sale in question was only one that he had ever made. Storey v. Day Heating & Air Conditioning Co., 56 Ala. App. 81, 319 So. 2d 279 (Civ. App. 1975).

Where purchasers of trailer park gave vendors' agent check in acceptance of vendors' offer to sell, fact that check was postdated for one week did not make purchaser's acceptance a qualified acceptance. How v. Fulkerson, 22 Ariz. App. 467, 528 P.2d 853 (1974).

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-118.

11. In general.

In action by payee against guarantors of promissory note, where guaranties sued on expressly provided that each guaranty applied to renewals of note, that payee could change or renew the original credit, and that payee could release any one or more of the guarantors without notice or demand and without affecting guarantors' liability, guarantors were not released or discharged from liability by UCC § 3-118(f) and UCC § 3-606(1)(a), since these sections of the Uniform Commercial Code apply only to negotiable instruments and do not apply to guaranty contracts, which are not negotiable. First Nat'l Bank v. Energy Equities Inc., 91 N.M. 11, 569 P.2d 421 (Ct. App. 1977).

Code § 3-118 simply establishes certain rules of construction which cannot be altered by parol evidence except in action for reformation, but this section in no way attempts to establish comprehensive parol evidence rule for commercial paper. American Underwriting Corp. v. Rhode Island Hosp. Trust Co., 111 R.I. 415, 303 A.2d 121 (1973).

12. Handwritten, typed and printed terms.

Under Code provision that handwritten terms control typewritten and printed terms, handwritten amendment on face of note which provided that note could be renewed once but would be paid at or before second maturity controlled printed provision of note authorizing extensions without notice to or consent of indorsers. Watson v. First Nat'l Bank, 213 Va. 687, 194 S.E.2d 749 (1973).

Rule that handwritten terms control typewritten terms applies only to terms of instrument itself and not to extraneous matter appearing on document; and it was error to instruct jury that handwritten words "stamped in error" appearing next to bank stamp, "Renewed," across face of note were controlling, in absence of evidence as to who made handwritten entry or when it was done. Pueblo Bank & Trust Co. v. McMartin, 31 Colo. App. 546, 506 P.2d 759 (1972).

13. Words and figures.

In action on note, codefendants who signed instrument as comakers were jointly and severally liable thereon under UCC § 3-118(e), which provides that two or more persons who sign as maker and as part of same transaction are jointly and severally liable, even though instrument contains such words as "I promise to pay." Hubert v. Lawson, 146 Ga. App. 698, 247 S.E.2d 223 (1978).

In action on note whose figures indicated amount payable was $19,896.01, but whose words stated amount due was "Nineteen hundred eight hundred ninety-six _____ and 01/100 Dollars", under UCC § 3-118, words were ambiguous and were therefore controlled by figures. Wall v. East Tex. Teachers Credit Union, 526 S.W.2d 148 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), rev'd, 533 S.W.2d 918 (Tex. 1976).

14. Interest provisions.

Prior chattel mortgagee, after chattel mortgagor's default on loans and mortgagor's sale of collateral at public auction, was not entitled to deduct from sale proceeds amounts denominated "bonus" and "charges," so as to deprive subsequent chattel mortgagee of its rightful share, under UCC § 9-504(1)(c) and (2), of sale's proceeds because (1) such "bonus" and "charges" were actually "interest" on prior mortgagee's loan to debtor within meaning of UCC § 3-118(d), and (2) under New York law, lender was not entitled to collect unearned interest on money loaned in absence of subsequent agreement between lender and debtor. Bostwick-Westbury Corp. v. Commercial Trading Co., 94 Misc.2d 401 (1978).

Circumstances surrounding execution of note supported conclusion that parties did not intend to create interest-bearing instrument, although note on its face recited that interest was to be paid at rate of 6 percent; trial court was not required to award interest at rate of 5 percent as specified in statute on judgments, pursuant to UCC § 3-118(d), since payees' conduct was inconsistent with contention that there was ambiguity with respect to rate of interest intended by parties at time instrument was created. Mendelson v. Flaxman, 32 Ill. App. 3d 644, 336 N.E.2d 316 (1st Dist. 1975).

Money loaned bears interest without any express agreement. In re Nicolazzo Estate, 414 Pa. 186, 199 A.2d 455 (1964).

15. —Date.

Under (1) UCC § 3-118(d), providing that provision for payment of interest means interest at judgment rate at place of payment from date of instrument, and (2) non-UCC statute providing for allowance of interest on money due under judgment from date of judgment's rendition until satisfaction of judgment by payment, notes which contained provision that in event of default of more than 30 days on any one payment, they should bear interest at six per cent for the year of the delinquency provided for penalty interest at six per cent only for the four-month period of delinquency in making payment and not for one full year from date of default. Willis v. Community Developers, Inc., 563 S.W.2d 104 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Although there was no demand made on maker, interest on note must run from date of instrument, where note provided "with interest". In re Carr Estate, 436 Pa. 47, 258 A.2d 628 (1969).

The code reiterates the prior law that where an instrument does not specify the date of which interest runs, it will run from the date of the instrument. Taylor v.

Hamden Hall Sch., Inc., 149 Conn. 545, 182 A.2d 615 (1962).

Subsection (d) of this section has a similar provision to that of § 17(2) of the (Pa.) Negotiable Instruments Law of 1901, which stated that where an instrument provided for the payment of interest, without specifying the date from which the interest was to run, the interest ran from the date of the instrument, and if the instrument was undated, from the issue thereof. Roller v. Jaffe, 387 Pa. 501, 128 A.2d 355 (1957).

16. —Rate.

Where maker of promissory note, on which blank space for amount of interest had been filled in by payee by inserting the number "8," claimed that he had not agreed to pay any interest but did not protest statements showing both principal and interest due on note, trial court's award of interest at legal rate of six per cent was not error in light of (1) failure of parties to agree on specific rate of interest, and (2) trial court's power under UCC § 3-118(d) to charge interest at statutory rate if space in instrument for interest has been left blank. Roberts v. Southern Wood Piedmont Co., 571 F.2d 276 (5th Cir. 1978).

Where a note is stated to be payable "with interest" the rate is the judgment rate. Epstein v. Paskow & Epstein, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1066 (1968, NY Sup).

17. Two or more signers.

Cosigners of a note are usually divided into two categories, principals and sureties. If one is principal, he is commonly designated "maker." Under UCC § 3-118(e), a comaker's liability to the payee is joint and several. As between one another, comakers are presumed to be liable in equal amounts. If one comaker pays the entire judgment entered against all comakers, he is entitled to contribution from each comaker in the amount of his aliquot share of the debt. Caldwell v. Stevenson, 567 S.W.2d 278 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

In action on note, codefendants who signed instrument as comakers were jointly and severally liable thereon under UCC § 3-118(e), which provides that two or more persons who sign as maker and as part of same transaction are jointly and severally liable, even though instrument contains such words as "I promise to pay." Hubert v. Lawson, 146 Ga. App. 698, 247 S.E.2d 223 (1978).

Although each signer of note is liable to payee for entire amount under UCC § 3-118(e), generally as between two signers, each is liable for one-half of amount of instrument. However, if co-obligors shared unequally in consideration received from note, contribution may be prorated according to benefits each co-obligor received (holding that cosigners of note who benefited from consideration from note in proportions of 64% and 36%, respectively, were liable on instrument in similar proportions). Dittberner v. Bell, 558 S.W.2d 527 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 5, 1978).

Since accommodation party under UCC § 3-415(2) is liable in capacity in which he signed instrument, note executed by two persons as comakers, which contained nothing to show that one of them actually signed only as accommodation maker, subjected both under UCC § 3-118(e) to joint and several liability on such obligation. Estrada v. River Oaks Bank & Trust Co., 550 S.W.2d 719 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 27, 1977).

Notwithstanding accommodation party who signed note as maker would otherwise have been jointly and severally liable on note as co-maker under UCC § 3-118 and § 3-415, accommodation party was totally discharged under UCC §§ 3-606 and 9-306 by secured creditor's impairment of collateral where collateral, which was not in possession of secured creditor, was sold by principal debtor with express authority of secured creditor and value of collateral exceeded value of debt. Beneficial Fin. Co. v. Marshall, 551 P.2d 315 (Okla. Ct. App. 1976).

Where bank made loan on condition that debtor-corporation's officers personally endorse notes and that creditor-corporations guarantee payments, and where endorsements of creditor-corporation preceded endorsements of officers of debtor-corporation, endorsees were not liable in order in which they endorsed under presumption raised by UCC § 3-414(2), but were jointly and severally liable under UCC § 3-118(e) in that creditor-corporations signed in same capacity as accommodation parties and as a part of same transaction. Zapp Nat'l Bank v. Metropolitan Planning & Redevelopment Corp., 308 Minn. 309, 242 N.W.2d 96 (1976).

Under UCC § 3-414, second endorser of note was not liable to first endorser and presumption that endorsers were liable in order in which their signatures appeared on note was not overcome even if both endorsers signed note "as a part of the same transaction" under UCC § 3-118, where there was no agreement by second endorser to be jointly liable with first endorser. Wilson v. Turner, 29 N.C. App. 101, 223 S.E.2d 539 (1976), review denied, 290 N.C. 311, 225 S.E.2d 832 (1976).

One who received benefits from proceeds of note was co-signer; she would have been accommodation signer, even though she did receive money or other benefits for use of her name, if she had received no benefits from proceeds of note. Riegler v. Riegler, 244 Ark. 483, 426 S.W.2d 789 (1968).

An obligation signed by husband and wife imposes upon them joint and several liability. Garner v. Tomcavage, 34 Northumb. Legal J. 18 (Pa. 1962).

When two or more persons execute a promissory note, they are jointly and severally liable, under the general rule. Roller v. Jaffe, 387 Pa. 501, 128 A.2d 355 (1957).

18. Extensions.

Two extensions of note, each for same period as note itself, were authorized by UCC § 3-118(f) and were binding on estate of deceased accommodation indorser where note expressly provided that it could be extended from time to time after maturity without notice to any indorsers or sureties. In such case, deceased accommodation indorser is deemed to have consented in advance to such extensions without notice. Bay Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Mason, 349 So. 2d 810 (Fla. App. 1977).

An agreement by the holder of a note to suspend the right to enforce for 113 days, 21 days longer than the period of the original note, was an extension beyond that authorized by UCC § 3-118(f) and when made without the consent of the endorser discharges the endorser under Beermann Bros. Dehy, 188 Neb. 597, 198 UCC § 3-606(1)(a). Citizens State Bank v. N.W.2d 458 (1972).

§ 75-3-115. Incomplete instrument.

(a) "Incomplete instrument" means a signed writing, whether or not issued by the signer, the contents of which show at the time of signing that it is incomplete but that the signer intended it to be completed by the addition of words or numbers.

(b) Subject to subsection (c), if an incomplete instrument is an instrument under Section 75-3-104, it may be enforced according to its terms if it is not completed, or according to its terms as augmented by completion. If an incomplete instrument is not an instrument under Section 75-3-104, but, after completion, the requirements of Section 75-3-104 are met, the instrument may be enforced according to its terms as augmented by completion.

(c) If words or numbers are added to an incomplete instrument without authority of the signer, there is an alteration of the incomplete instrument under Section 75-3-407.

(d) The burden of establishing that words or numbers were added to an incomplete instrument without authority of the signer is on the person asserting the lack of authority.

In Smith v. Franklin Life Ins. Co. (Pa) 29 Lehigh 235, the court quoted § 3-115, in a case involving a receipt and release, in connection with an insurance policy, which had been filled out to accomplish the purpose of the insured. Smith v. Franklin Life Ins. Co., 29 Lehigh 235 (Pa).

12. Date of execution.

Parol evidence is not admissible to show that a note was not executed on the date shown thereon but on a later date and allegedly backdated to the date of the original transaction. Epstein v. Paskow & Epstein, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1066 (1968, NY Sup).

Where, after check was signed, printed date of "195" was completed and altered by handwritten "1964", bank properly cashed check, relying on presumption of Code § 3-114(3) that date is correct and on presumption of Code § 3-118(b) that handwritten terms control printed terms. Newman v. Manufacturers Nat'l Bank, 7 Mich. App. 580, 152 N.W.2d 564 (1967).

13. Blanks which do not render instrument incomplete.

In action by holder of note fact that due date of first monthly installment was omitted did not make instrument incomplete in any "necessary respect" under UCC § 3-115(1) and instrument in which no time for payment was stated was payable on demand under UCC § 3-108. Gill v. Commonwealth Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 521 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 3, 1974).

14. Authorized or ratified completion.

Where makers signed printed note form, leaving blank spaces for date, amount of interest, and duration of note, and where payee later filled in blank spaces, testimony by makers that they did not expressly give payee authority to fill in blanks did not overcome presumption that payee had authority to complete blanks with respect to date and prematurity interest; UCC § 3-115 provides that burden of establishing that any completion is unauthorized is on the party asserting lack of authorization, effect of which is to imply that transferee has authority to complete blanks in instrument. Antrim v. McMurrey, 549 S.W.2d 463 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

In action against guarantor of 11 notes for balance due thereon, even if guarantor signed notes when they were incomplete, under UCC § 3-115(1), they could be subsequently completed if authority to do so had been given. Such authority was implicit where proceeds of note were accepted by obligor without objection. First Nat'l City Bank v. Cooper, 50 A.D.2d 518 (1st Dep't 1975).

Where decedent signed printed blank check containing words necessary to show that it was intended to become negotiable instrument, i.e., "Pay to the order of _____", and check was completed for $3,300 with no material omissions and no ambiguities, under UCC § 3-115(2), burden of showing that amount inserted in proper blanks was not what decedent intended and was beyond amount he authorized was upon his estate; since only evidence offered to show amount intended by decedent was four numerals, "3,300," in handwriting of deceased in blank following printed word "For" in lower left hand corner of check and since there was approximately $6,600 in decedent's checking account at time check was written, there was no evidence sufficient to overcome presumption established by UCC § 3-115(2) and check was, therefore, completed as authorized. Calhoun v. Norris (In re Estate of Norris), 532 P.2d 981 (Colo. Ct. App. 1974).

In action by payee-finance company to recover on note signed in blank by comakers and completed by finance company, note was legally executed and valid under UCC § 3-115 where there was evidence that comakers knew that blank instrument they signed was in fact note and where comakers failed to show that they had not authorized finance company to complete blank note. Charter Fin. Co. v. Henderson, 15 Ill. App. 3d 1065, 305 N.E.2d 338 (5th Dist. 1973), aff'd, 60 Ill. 2d 323, 326 N.E.2d 372 (1975).

Where parties to security agreement indicated their intent that paragraph covering debtor's inventory was to be applicable by including under this printed paragraph typewritten statement, "all petroleum products, tires and other motor vehicle supplies, now owned or after-acquired," secured party's alteration of instrument by insertion of "x" in box prefacing paragraph showing coverage of debtor's inventory was authorized. First Nat'l Bank v. Hull, 189 Neb. 581, 204 N.W.2d 90 (1973).

When a note is delivered to a person with the intention, evidenced by clear circumstances or expression, that he fill in any blanks therein, he becomes an agent for that purpose and binds the principal accordingly. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. v. Eisenstadt, 64 Misc. 2d 397 (1970).

The holder of negotiable instruments had the right to complete the blanks in the instrument if it so desired. The indorsement of a guarantee signed with obvious blanks can be enforced in the absence of fraud or lack of authority. Flushing Nat'l

Bank v. Brightside Mfg., Inc., 59 Misc. 2d 108 (1969).

Holder has right to complete blanks in negotiable instrument. Flushing Nat'l Bank v. Brightside Mfg., Inc., 59 Misc. 2d 108 (1969).

One signing instrument containing blanks is said to have conferred upon transferee of instrument implied authority to complete instrument in accordance with understanding of parties; incompleteness of instrument is no defense in absence of any allegation that transferee acted in excess of implied authority in completing instrument. Davtian v. Barsamian, 106 R.I. 185, 256 A.2d 510 (1969).

Alteration and completion of note by plaintiff-indorsee were assented to, ratified and confirmed by defendant-indorser so that latter was disqualified from attacking validity of note, where there was credible testimony that, at meeting at which note was signed and indorsed, blanks were deliberately left open, subject to being filled in on terms approved by indorsee, and maker and indorser were informed of those terms and accepted them. Fairfield County Trust Co. v. Steinbrecher, 5 Conn. Cir. Ct. 405, 255 A.2d 144 (1968).

The legal effect of giving an incomplete promissory note to another with the authorization to fill in the blanks is the same as delivering a complete instrument. Davis v. Commonwealth, 399 S.W.2d 711 (Ky. 1965), cert. denied, 385 U.S. 831, 87 S. Ct. 67, 17 L. Ed. 2d 66 (1966).

It is no defense that the negotiable instrument had been signed in blank where it was admitted that as completed, the instrument conformed to the agreement made by the parties, as the Code authorizes the completion of incomplete instruments. Chester Valley Refrigeration Co. v. Altieri, 41 Pa. D. & C.2d 90 (1965).

15. Unauthorized completion, generally.

Where an employer signs his name to a blank check the improper completion of the check by an employee and his conversion of the proceeds of the check constitutes the crime of embezzling money, as against the argument that the blank check was not a negotiable instrument as it did not contain any order or promise to pay money and was not payable to order or bearer. State v. Moreno, 156 Conn. 233, 240 A.2d 871 (1968).

Under the Code an unauthorized completion is treated as an alteration of the instrument and governed by the alteration rule stated in UCC § 3-107. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

16. —Particular applications.

In action by cashing bank to recover from drawer and indorser of two checks drawn on insufficient funds, where defendant indorser stole, completed, and cashed at plaintiff bank (where indorser was customer) two checks which had been signed in blank by defendant drawer and delivered by drawer to her husband, and where plaintiff bank had no notice of any defenses against, or claims to, such checks by any person, plaintiff under UCC § 3-302 was holder in due course of such checks and could, under UCC § 3-407 and UCC § 3-115, enforce them as completed. Central State Bank v. Kilroy, 57 A.D.2d 940 (2d Dep't 1977).

Claim in suit to cancel combination note, security agreement, and disclosure statement, which alleged that amount not agreed on was fraudulently inserted in note signed in blank, raised issue that was primarily controlled by UCC § 3-115, which deals with incomplete instruments, and UCC § 3-407, which deals with alteration of instruments. First Am. Bank v. Bishop, 239 Ga. 809, 239 S.E.2d 19 (1977).

Obligor was not shown to have authorized alteration of place of performance of retail instalment contract, where change was not in connection with authority given in contract to complete blanks, and correction authority was given by contract to plaintiff assignee, who did not make alterations, and not to unidentified person who altered provisions. Commercial Credit Corp. v. Bryant, 490 S.W.2d 644 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Where written contract for sale which provided authority for completion of note set term of note at 2 years and made no mention of periodic instalment payments, and president of payee bank added provisions for 7 instalment payments over approximately 16 months, president's completion of note in terms varying authorized time and manner of payment was unauthorized and constituted material alteration; and suit on note filed 10 months prior to maturity date "as authorized" was premature. Bank of New Effington v. Thompson, 502 P.2d 978 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Where the makers of a note, who were inexperienced in even ordinary business affairs, were induced by a salesman to enter into a home improvement contract supposedly with one business concern but without notice to, or consent of, the makers, and after the signing thereof, the name of the concern with whom makers intended to deal was clipped from one copy of the contract and the name of another concern stamped thereon, and makers innocently signed a property loan application in blank, the makers were entitled to the benefit of the rules governing incomplete instruments and alteration of instruments. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Gardiner, 191 Pa. Super. 17, 155 A.2d 405 (1959).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

17. In general.

Where buyer of automobile signed conditional sale contract with blank spaces, expecting seller's salesman to fill in the blanks, he thereby made seller his agent so that balance stated in the contract was binding on buyer. Universal Credit Co. v. Moore, 173 Miss. 740, 163 So. 142 (1935).

Purchaser of note with unfilled blanks for payee's name and time interest should begin was put on inquiry as to defects, and was not "holder in due course." Moore v. Vaughn, 167 Miss. 758, 150 So. 372 (1933).

§ 75-3-116. Joint and several liability; contribution.

(a) Except as otherwise provided in the instrument, two (2) or more persons who have the same liability on an instrument as makers, drawers, acceptors, indorsers who indorse as joint payees, or anomalous indorsers are jointly and severally liable in the capacity in which they sign.

(b) Except as provided in Section 75-3-419(e) or by agreement of the affected parties, a party having joint and several liability who pays the instrument is entitled to receive from any party having the same joint and several liability contribution in accordance with applicable law.

(c) Discharge of one (1) party having joint and several liability by a person entitled to enforce the instrument does not affect the right under subsection (b) of a party having the same joint and several liability to receive contribution from the party discharged.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-116.

11. In general; instruments payable in the alternative.

Certificate of deposit issued by bank which (1) represented deposit of specified sum by decedent, (2) was payable in the alternative to decedent or to plaintiff-claimant of certificate's proceeds, (3) had not been negotiated to plaintiff in accordance with UCC § 3-116(a), but was still in decedent's possession at time of her death, and (4) contained no reference to survivorship rights, was in decedent's possession as holder in due course and thus was part of her estate when she died (holding that Uniform Commercial Code controls certificates of deposit which comply with UCC § 3-104(2)(c)). Thomas v. Estate of Eubanks, 358 So. 2d 709 (Miss. 1978).

12. Instruments payable jointly.

UCC § 3-605(1)(b) allows the holder of an instrument to discharge a party thereto to the extent of the holder's interest in the instrument. However, under UCC § 3-116(b), the holder cannot discharge all interests under an instrument that is payable, but not in the alternative, to both himself and another party (holding that UCC § 3-605(1)(b) does not prohibit person from discharging his interest in an instrument by a renunciation contained in a properly executed will). Cantonwine v. Fehling, 582 P.2d 592 (Wyo. 1978).

Husband and wife held notes as tenants in common where notes were payable to husband and wife and where nothing appeared in instruments evidencing intention to create survivorship. Fehling v. Cantonwine, 522 F.2d 604 (10th Cir. Wyo. 1975).

Note payable to two persons could not be cancelled by one of those persons without authority given by the other. May v. Triangle Oil Co., 96 Idaho 289, 527 P.2d 781 (1974).

Questions of fact precluding summary judgment existed as to whether check proceeds went where intended under UCC

§ 3-116 where negotiable instrument payable to two payees was cashed bearing the forged endorsement of one of the payees. Sullivan v. Wilton Manors Nat'l Bank, 259 So. 2d 194 (Fla. App. 1972).

Both co-payees must endorse a negotiable instrument payable to both. Sullivan v. Wilton Manors Nat'l Bank, 259 So. 2d 194 (Fla. App. 1972).

Instrument payable to joint payees must be endorsed by all of them. Insurance Co. of N. Am. v. Atlas Supply Co., 121 Ga. App. 1, 172 S.E.2d 632 (1970).

All joint payees must join not only for negotiation but also for discharge. Harry H. White Lumber Co. v. Crocker-Citizens Nat'l Bank, 253 Cal. App. 2d 368 (2d Dist. 1967).

Under the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law, requiring the indorsement of all where there are two or more payees or indorsees, and supplemented by the instant section, it was held that where a check was payable to two persons, the indorsement of both persons was necessary to cash the check or otherwise to transfer it. Gill Equip. Co. v. Freedman, 339 Mass. 303, 158 N.E.2d 863 (1959).

Where a check is made payable to two persons and is turned over to one of the payees upon an understanding that the proceeds were to be used for a particular purpose, the payee who received and indorsed the check is responsible for the proper application of the proceeds, and he may not defend on the ground that he gave the check to the other payee, and that he, the first payee, received no benefit from the check. Gill Equip. Co. v. Freedman, 339 Mass. 303, 158 N.E.2d 863 (1959).

13. —Parties necessary for suit on instrument.

Under UCC § 3-116(a), one of joint payees could enforce payment of note without joining other payee. McDonald v. McDonald, 232 Ga. 190, 205 S.E.2d 850 (1974).

Two payees named in note are each indispensable party in suit by one of them on note, if note does not provide that it is payable to them in the alternative. Hinojosa v. Love, 496 S.W.2d 224 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Individual payee was not indispensable party to action on note made payable to individual and/or company. Lohf v. Warner, 495 P.2d 241 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

14. —Liability of bank for payment on single indorsement.

A check made payable to copayees requires the indorsement of both for negotiation (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-116) and an indorsement by only one of the payees is so obviously inadequate that payment by a drawee bank is a departure from reasonable commercial standards. A drawee bank that makes improper payment of a check may plead the equitable defense of unjust enrichment when sued by the drawer if the proceeds actually reached all the payees designated by the drawer. If one of the payees has received none of the proceeds of the check, the drawee bank is answerable to the drawer for the entire amount of the check as the bank has failed to shield itself from its mistake in paying the amount of the check without a proper indorsement. The fact that a copayee who did not receive payment asserts no interest in the check will not benefit the drawee bank as the intent of the drawer is controlling, even if such intent resulted from mistake induced by some third party, not an agent or employee of the drawer. Middle States Leasing Corp. v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 62 A.D.2d 273 (1st Dep't 1978).

Where drawee bank, in violation of UCC § 3-116(b), paid check made out to two payees on indorsement of one payee only and nonindorsing copayee received none of check's proceeds, (1) drawee bank was liable to drawer for entire amount of check, and (2) drawee bank could not successfully assert defense of unjust enrichment of drawer without showing that check's proceeds had been received by both payees (also holding that in drawee bank's third-party action against federal reserve bank, additional time for discovery should have been allowed respecting issue as to whether drawee bank's claim for breach of warranty was made within reasonable time under UCC § 4-207(4)). Middle States Leasing Corp. v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 62 A.D.2d 273 (1st Dep't 1978).

Where check was payable not in the alternative to two payees, bank which paid check on indorsement of one payee only, and which credited entire proceeds of check to account of indorsing payee without other payee's knowledge, was liable in conversion for face amount of check because (1) under UCC § 3-116(b), check could only be negotiated by both payees, and (2) payment of a check on a missing indorsement is equivalent to payment on a forged indorsement, and under UCC § 3-419(1)(c), instrument is converted when it is paid on a forged indorsement (rejecting defense contention that since United States treasury eventually honored check in suit, which was drawn by government agency, such action was evidence of drawer's intent to pay "in the alternative" under UCC § 3-116(a)). Peoples Nat'l Bank v. American Fid. Fire Ins. Co., 39 Md. App. 614, 386 A.2d 1254 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-116(b), unless a check payable to the order of two or more payees is in the alternative, a bank can accept and pay it only on the indorsement of all payees (case involving payment of check, jointly payable to both subcontractor and materialman, without obtaining materialman's indorsement, wherein court also stated that subrogation rights granted by UCC § 4-407(c) to payor bank could not be used to defeat materialman's claim, and that court of appeals correctly held that both collecting and drawee banks were liable to materialman as a matter of law). Trust Co. v. Refrigeration Supplies, Inc., 241 Ga. 406, 246 S.E.2d 282 (1978), on remand, 146 Ga. App. 825, 247 S.E.2d 542 (1978).

In action against bank for alleged negligence in cashing cashier's check issued against account in another bank into which plaintiff's funds had wrongfully been deposited, where evidence showed that such check was made payable to "Emil Haliewicz, Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc."; that "Emil Haliewicz" was name of alleged converter of plaintiff's funds and "Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc." was plaintiff's corporate designation; and that such check had been indorsed by Haliewicz by printing "Swiss Baco Skyline Logg. Inc." on back of instrument and signing his name below such printed words, summary judgment in favor of defendant bank would be affirmed because (1) designation of payee as "Emil Haliewicz, Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc." did not constitute joint-payee language under UCC § 3-116; (2) under facts of case, check was payable under UCC § 3-117(c) to "Emil Haliewicz" unconditionally; and (3) plaintiff "Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc.," not being a named payee of such check, had no protectable interest therein. Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc. v. Haliewicz, 18 Wash. App. 21, 567 P.2d 1141 (1977).

In action pursuant to UCC § 3-419 by co-payee of check for conversion of check by bank which cashed check with co-payee's endorsement forged by other payee, co-payee, which was not a "customer" of bank within meaning of UCC §§ 4-104 and 4-406, was not equitably estopped by policy of commercial reasonableness under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-203, notwithstanding that co-payee waited 10 months after it learned of forgery to inform bank, where (1) check, which was issued to co-payee "and" other payee, was properly payable under UCC § 3-116 only if it contained endorsement of both payees; (2) unauthorized endorsement was, in absence of ratification under UCC § 3-404, no endorsement under UCC §§ 3-202 and 3-404; (3) co-payee did not ratify unauthorized endorsement; and (4) bank's failure to ascertain whether co-payee's signature was authorized was not in accord with reasonable commercial standards of banking business under UCC § 3-419. Atlas Bldg. Supply Co. v. First Indep. Bank, 15 Wash. App. 367, 550 P.2d 26 (1976).

Where draft, made payable to three parties, was paid over forged endorsement of one of the parties, under UCC § 3-116 drawer's debt was not discharged as to party whose endorsement was forged; payment of instrument by drawer-drawee constituted conversion of instrument for which drawer-drawee must respond in damages under UCC § 3-419. Lee v. Skidmore, 49 Ohio App. 2d 347, 361 N.E.2d 499 (1976).

Bank that issued cashiers' check which was purchased by corporation and made payable to it and plaintiff, a third party, was liable to plaintiff where it allowed corporation to return cashiers' check without plaintiff's indorsement and issued two new cashiers' checks payable to corporation only; although bank would have been justified in relying on presumption of continued ownership of check by corporation, absent any unusual circumstances, there were unusual circumstances in present case sufficient to raise duty of inquiry where, inter alia, bank refused to issue original $25,000 cashiers' check to corporation as drawer-purchaser until plaintiff's earnest money check for $25,000, which was deposited in corporation's account, had cleared, corporation at that time had balance of only $13,000 in its account, and, when plaintiff's $25,000 check cleared, bank issued $25,000 cashiers' check payable to plaintiff and corporation; where president of corporation returned cashiers' check for $25,000 about one month later, notified bank that it had not been used for intended purpose, and requested two new cashiers' checks (one for $15,000 and one for $10,000) payable only to corporation, and, at bank's request, president wrote "not used for purpose issued" on reverse side of $25,000 cashiers' check; where plaintiff, a joint payee, did not indorse cashiers' check for $25,000; and where bank failed to make any inquiry and issued $15,000 and $10,000 cashiers' checks payable to corporation only, as requested, and thereby made possible conversion by corporation of $25,000 of plaintiff's money. Gillespie v. Riley Mgt. Corp., 59 Ill. 2d 211, 319 N.E.2d 753 (1974).

In action by plaintiff to recover against 2 collecting banks for negligence and breach of warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207, where plaintiff issued 2 drafts payable "through" second collecting bank to order of joint payees, and where one payee deposited drafts in his account with first collecting bank without endorsement of payee entitled to proceeds, first collecting bank forwarded drafts to second collecting bank and second collecting bank presented drafts to plaintiff for acceptance, plaintiff accepted drafts and authorized payment against its account with second collecting bank, and where plaintiff, after being notified that second payee had not received proceeds, issued substitute drafts, since negotiable instrument made payable to payees jointly may be assigned, but not negotiated, without endorsement of all payees, depositor, collecting banks and plaintiff were assignees, not holders of drafts, who held them subject to rights and claims of real owners; by obtaining payment from plaintiff, second collecting bank became liable to plaintiff on warranty of good title, and when first collecting bank obtained payment from second collecting bank, and depositor received payment from first collecting bank, first collecting bank became liable to second collecting bank and depositor became liable to first collecting bank on similar warranties. Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Davis, 126 N.J. Super. 379, 314 A.2d 615 (L. Div. 1974).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

15. In general.

The collecting bank which honored, and the drawee bank which paid, a check payable to two payees but only indorsed by one, were both liable in tort for conversion provided loss or injury resulted from such acts which violated this section. Kaplan v. Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank, 192 So. 2d 391 (Miss. 1966).

Payee indorsers of notes held liable to purchaser, notwithstanding administrator of joint payee was not expressly authorized to indorse notes by foreign court which had jurisdiction of administration of estate, where purchaser paid payee's interest in proceeds of notes to payee's heirs who assigned to purchaser their interest in notes and sale of notes and disbursement of proceeds was approved by administration court, especially where neither such court nor payee's heirs had repudiated administrator's indorsement. Weston v. Merchants' Bank & Trust Co., 173 Miss. 34, 161 So. 145 (1935).

§ 75-3-117. Other agreements affecting instrument.

Subject to applicable law regarding exclusion of proof of contemporaneous or previous agreements, the obligation of a party to an instrument to pay the instrument may be modified, supplemented, or nullified by a separate agreement of the obligor and a person entitled to enforce the instrument, if the instrument is issued or the obligation is incurred in reliance on the agreement or as part of the same transaction giving rise to the agreement. To the extent an obligation is modified, supplemented, or nullified by an agreement under this section, the agreement is a defense to the obligation.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-119.

11. In general.

UCC § 3-119(1) incorporates into the law of negotiable instruments the ordinary rule that writings contemporaneously executed as a part of the same transaction are to be read together as a single agreement. As between the immediate parties, a negotiable instrument is merely a contract or part of an overall contractual transaction, and any defense to the underlying obligation is also a defense to the negotiable instrument as long as the instrument remains in the hands of one who is not a holder in due course (holding that where indemnity agreement in bail bond case was legally unenforceable against party who signed it, promissory note signed by such party in conjunction with indemnity agreement also was unenforceable). Perry v. Cain, 581 P.2d 891 (Okla. 1978).

UCC § 3-119 applies to negotiable instruments the ordinary rule that writings executed as part of the same transaction are to read together as a single agreement. As between the immediate parties, a negotiable instrument is merely a contract and is no exception to the principle that courts will look to the entire contract in writing. Accordingly, a note may be affected by an acceleration clause, a clause providing for discharge under certain conditions, or any other relevant term in the separate agreement. However, the phrase "may be modified or affected" in UCC § 3-119(1) does not mean that the separate agreement must necessarily be given effect; there is still room for construction of the separate agreement as not being intended to affect the negotiable instrument at all, or as being intended to affect it for a limited purpose only, such as foreclosure or other realization of collateral. And if there is outright contradiction between the two, as where a note is for $1,000 but the accompanying mortgage recites that it is for $2,000, the note may be held to stand on its own feet and not to be affected by the contradiction. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

12. Evidence; "same transaction".

Where buy-sell agreement for purchase of dress shop stated that balance was to be financed through SBA participation loan, where buyer did not have loan at time of closing and seller agreed to take note in lieu of cash, and where written act of sale executed at same time stated that sale was made pursuant to agreement executed previously by vendors and vendee, parol testimony of parties concerning their intention was admissible pursuant to UCC § 3-119(1), but buyer-maker did not sustain burden of proof that payment of note was conditioned on his obtaining SBA loan. Demaio v. Theriot, 343 So. 2d 1143 (La. App. 1977), writ denied, 346 So. 2d 218 (La. 1977).

Evidence may be offered by defendant under UCC § 3-119(1) to show that note sued on had been modified by prior written agreement between parties that was executed as part of same transaction, so as to cause note not to be due at time of suit. However, where such evidence does not demand finding that note was thus modified, trial court does not commit error in finding that note was overdue and unpaid. Eason v. Berger & Co., 143 Ga. App. 482, 238 S.E.2d 593 (1977).

Various instruments pertaining to same transaction, i.e., obtaining permanent financing for land development, although executed at different times and not expressly referring to each other, would be read together as one contract, notwithstanding claim that such documents were inadmissible on ground that they contradicted "no pre-payment" clause in note and thus violated parol evidence rule, where promissory note was not entire contract between parties. Pendleton Green Assocs. v. Anchor Sav. Bank, 520 S.W.2d 579 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Pursuant to UCC § 3-119, defendant in action on cognovit note which he had executed could have presented evidence indicating that note had been modified by real estate contract between defendant and plaintiff; however, reference to "earnest money" on face of note did not itself modify instrument. Robbins v. Avara, 28 Ill. App. 3d 292, 328 N.E.2d 95 (1st Dist. 1975).

In action by bank on promissory note in which defendant showed he was accommodation maker under UCC § 3-415, all written agreements executed at same time as part of same transaction were admissible in action between original parties under UCC § 3-119. Berger v. Mercantile Nat'l Bank, 231 Ga. 680, 203 S.E.2d 479 (1974).

Code § 3-119 applies to negotiable instruments general rule that writings executed as part of same transaction are to be read together as single agreement; and standby agreement executed on August 3 by buyers, sellers, and Small Business Administration and promissory note executed on September 10 by buyers payable to sellers could be said to have arisen out of same transaction, since both were executed as part of plan for financing sale of children's clothing store and standby agreement was intended to limit right of sellers to assert claim for balance due on purchase price still owing after September 10, until written consent of SBA had been obtained or until SBA loan had been fully paid. Sanden v. Hanson, 201 N.W.2d 404 (N.D. 1972).

Renewal of original note was basis of suit by bank for sum due; earlier contract regarding creation of obligated corporate entity and covering letter pertaining to security agreement executed simultaneously with original note were both part of same transaction and were admissible under parol evidence rule. Merchants Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Professional Men's Ass'n, 409 F.2d 600 (5th Cir. Tex. 1969), cert. denied, 396 U.S. 1009, 90 S. Ct. 567, 24 L. Ed. 2d 501 (1970).

13. Other writings read with instrument.

Check bearing unconditional language of release, accompanied by letter of transmittal which set forth basis of dispute between parties, along with appropriate cautionary language that deposit of check constituted acceptance of settlement offer, were to be read together under provisions of UCC § 3-119(1) so that deposit of check constituted accord and satisfaction between parties regardless of any alteration or disclaimer added to check by payee. A.G. King Tree Surgeons v. Deeb, 140 N.J. Super. 346, 356 A.2d 87 (1976).

Maker of promissory note was not liable to transferee of note where note was executed in conjunction with instrument providing that first payment was to be made out of sale of paint (which never materialized) and where transferee, who did not qualify as innocent purchaser for value without notice, was bound by terms of accompanying agreement under UCC § 3-119. Texas State Bank v. Sharp, 506 S.W.2d 761 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e (July 10, 1974).

In determining whether a mortgage note provided for payment of a usurious rate of interest, it should be construed in conjunction with a building contract executed at the same time as the note and as a part of the same transaction. Guaranty Fin. Corp. v. Harden, 242 Ark. 779, 416 S.W.2d 287 (1967).

Where promissory note merely recites installments due but does not indicate how much is interest, it is proper to interpret the note together with the mortgage executed as part of the same transaction in order to determine what part was interest, where rights of a holder in due course were not involved. Guaranty Fin. Corp. v. Harden, 242 Ark. 779, 416 S.W.2d 287 (1967).

14. —Holder in due course.

Where note, executed as separate document along with conditional sales contract, was assigned to bank for valuable consideration and bank sued maker for balance due on note, court held (1) that trial court erred in holding that note and conditional sales contract had merged, thus rendering note nonnegotiable and causing bank not to be holder in due course; (2) that note satisfied requirements of negotiability under UCC § 3-104(1); (3) that under UCC § 3-119(2), negotiability of note was not affected by separate sales contract; and (4) that since bank had paid value in good faith for note on day it was executed and assignment of note had preceded any notice of claim about merchandise sold, bank was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1). Northwestern Bank v. Neal, 271 S.C. 544, 248 S.E.2d 585 (1978).

If assignee of lease concerning computers and computer equipment took assignment for value, in good faith and without notice of concurrent agreement that lease, would not be effective if certain acceptable and satisfactory equipment were not delivered, assignee could recover on lease notwithstanding lessor's alleged failure to deliver equipment where lease provided that lessee would not assert against assignee any defenses, counterclaims or offsets which it might have against lessor. National Bank of N. Am. v. DeLuxe Poster Co., 51 A.D.2d 582 (2d Dep't 1976).

Where note and mortgage were executed simultaneously, note provided that all terms of mortgage were thereby made part of note, and terms of mortgage made it patent that mortgagees could look only to mortgage property to recover debt, assignees of portion of mortgage note were not holders in due course and were subject to limitation in mortgage precluding deficiency judgment. Stern v. Itkin Bros., 87 Misc. 2d 538 (1975).

In class action, brought by purchasers of promissory notes secured by mortgages, against seller's reorganization trustee, notes met definition of "note" as defined by UCC § 3-104 and were negotiable and unconditional under UCC §§ 3-105, 3-112 and 3-119; purchasers were holders in due course for value under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 and notes were properly negotiated by bankrupt by endorsement and delivery under UCC § 3-202; under UCC § 3-414 reorganization trustee was bound on endorser's contract. Hall v. Security Planning Serv., Inc., 371 F. Supp. 7 (D. Ariz. 1974).

15. Separate agreements.

UCC § 3-119(2) rejects decisions which have carried the rule about reading contemporaneous writings together to the point of holding that a clause in a mortgage affecting a note destroys the negotiability of the note. The negotiability of an instrument is always determined solely by what appears on the face of the instrument itself, and if it is negotiable by itself, a purchaser without notice of a separate writing is in no way affected by such writing. If the instrument itself states that it is subject to or governed by any other agreement, it is not negotiable under Article 3; but if it merely refers to a separate agreement or states that it arises out of such an agreement, it is negotiable. Northwestern Bank v. Neal, 271 S.C. 544, 248 S.E.2d 585 (1978).

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where bank's refusal to sign was because it had no ownership interest in corporation but only security interest in corporation's assets; (3) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; and (4) where bank indorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank and gave owner check payable to corporation for remaining proceeds which owner deposited in corporation's account, buyer's contention that when bank accepted and cashed cashier's checks it became obligated by terms of sale agreement could not be sustained because (1) clear import of Uniform Commercial Code is that negotiable instruments may not be used by parties to express obligations other than obligation stated in UCC § 3-104(1)(b), namely, unconditional promise to pay sum certain; and (2) since terms of sale agreement with respect to such cashier's checks required only that they be made out for specified amounts and be payable to specified copayees, such checks were not affected or modified under UCC

§ 3-119(1) by terms of sale agreement, but were completely independent of such agreement. In such case, cashier's checks stood on their express terms, bank's acceptance of such checks did not constitute acceptance of terms of separate sale agreement which bank did not sign, and causes of action arising out of such sale agreement were not available against bank. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

Official Comments to UCC § 3-119 make clear that negotiable instruments will not be affected by terms of separate contract in absence of some express term in such contract. And even then, contradictions between a negotiable instrument and such separate contract may be controlled by negotiable instrument itself. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

In action to recover on notes, under UCC §§ 3-119 and 3-601, question of fact existed as to whether parties entered into written contract which relieved defendants of personal liability on notes, or whether parties performed under oral contract to same effect. DiLeo v. Werb, 50 A.D.2d 570 (2d Dep't 1975).

Written agreement by parties to promissory note executed contemporaneously with note in question which merely recited that corporate maker was attempting to develop foreign source of crude oil for import into United States and, for services rendered to corporation, individuals who were payees of note would be entitled to receive fee of 1 per cent per barrel from expected sale of crude oil, standing alone, did not alter or modify promissory note. Texas Export Dev. Corp. v. Schleder, 519 S.W.2d 134 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Negotiability of check is not affected by fact it is drawn in return for creation of debt obligation from payee to drawer which is secured by collateral, nor is such negotiability affected by promise to maintain or protect collateral, and borrower who accepts check representing proceeds of his loan may freely negotiate check as his own property notwithstanding security agreement which secures his obligation to repay. Johnson v. State, 158 Ind. App. 611, 304 N.E.2d 555 (1973).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-117.

16. In general; liability of guarantor or payment.

Liability of guarantor becomes indistinguishable from that of comaker since guarantor waives presentment, notice of dishonor, and protest and demand upon maker of promissory note. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

Effect of assumption agreement is to make parties thereto liable on promissory note. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

Parties who sign guaranty agreement are sureties on promissory note because of that agreement. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

Cosigners of a note are usually divided into two categories, principals and sureties. If one is a surety, he is usually termed an "accommodation party" (see UCC § 3-415(1)) or a "guarantor" (see UCC § 3-416). A surety (accommodation party) is primarily liable with the principal (maker) to the payee of a note because he lends his name to the note as security (see UCC § 3-415(2)). However, the rights and obligations of a surety are different from those of a principal, one important difference being that if the surety pays the judgment, he stands in the shoes of the creditor and may sue on the judgment itself. In such a case, he has the burden of proving suretyship, and his burden is onerous, since it is presumed that one signs as a comaker unless the suretyship relation between the cosigners appears on the face of the note (holding that plaintiff, who alleged that he was merely surety on note, failed to rebut presumption that he had signed as comaker, since he did not make note part of his summary judgment proof and court thus could not ascertain whether surety relationship alleged actually appeared on face of note). Caldwell v. Stevenson, 567 S.W.2d 278 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

No notice of default must be given guarantor of unsecured demand note; guarantor became liable as original obligor pursuant to UCC § 3-416. Knick v. Green, 545 S.W.2d 269 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.r.e (June 29, 1977).

Under UCC § 3-416(1) payee of note guaranteed by defendant was not required to proceed against maker of note before bringing action against defendant. Brown Univ. v. Laudati, 113 R.I. 299, 320 A.2d 609 (1974).

Language of guarantee "to be responsible for payment of the sums owed pursuant to such loan," was clear and unambiguous in that, by its terms and as matter of law, guarantors were guarantors of payment and not collection; and holder of note could sue them without resort to any other party. Cusick v. Ifshin, 70 Misc. 2d 564 (1972), aff'd, 73 Misc. 2d 127, 341 N.Y.S.2d 280 (1973).

Under New Jersey UCC, guaranty contract indorsed on reverse side of notes obligated guarantor to pay for attorney's fees and to be bound by acceleration clause as provided for in note. Warner-Lambert Pharmaceutical Co. v. Sylk, 471 F.2d 1137 (3d Cir. Pa. 1972).

Note sued upon was signed by party as "guarantor"; held, such party must pay note according to its tenor without resort by holder to any other party as condition precedent. Sadler v. Kay, 120 Ga. App. 758, 172 S.E.2d 202 (1969).

Under the Code, a guaranty of payment is in effect the same as a suretyship undertaking and the guarantor may therefor be sued jointly with the primary party without at first making an attempt to recover from such party. Decatur Coca-Cola Bottling Co. v. Variety Vending Corp., 277 F. Supp. 393 (N.D. Ga. 1967).

When corporate officers guarantee payment of a corporate note, they become primarily liable for the payment of the note to the same extent as the corporation. Reynolds v. Service Loan & Fin. Co., 116 Ga. App. 740, 158 S.E.2d 309 (1967).

The Code makes no distinction with respect to a guarantee of payment in terms of whether the debtor is an individual or a corporation. Reynolds v. Service Loan & Fin. Co., 116 Ga. App. 740, 158 S.E.2d 309 (1967).

17. —Similarity to co-maker.

A guarantor of a note, as an accommodation maker, was liable for the entire balance of the note to an accommodation endorser who paid the note. Comfort Eng'g Co. v. Kinsey, 523 So. 2d 1019 (Miss. 1988).

Liability of guarantor of note was same as comaker, and payee had no duty after default by maker to resort either to collateral or to any other party before seeking payment from guarantors. Rassette v. Jacobson, 39 Mich. App. 172, 197 N.W.2d 330 (1972).

Guarantor's liability is the same as that of a comaker. Rassette v. Jacobson, 39 Mich. App. 172, 197 N.W.2d 330 (1972).

Liability of guarantors of "payment" of loan is indistinguishable from that of a comaker. Etelson v. Suburban Trust Co., 263 Md. 376, 283 A.2d 408 (1971).

18. Liability for guarantee of collection.

Under UCC § 3-416, claim must be prosecuted to judgment and execution returned unsatisfied or maker of note found insolvent in order for there to be recovery on guarantee of collection and not of payment. Floor v. Melvin, 5 Ill. App. 3d 463, 283 N.E.2d 303 (3d Dist. 1972).

19. Limited guaranty.

Under guaranty to bank, guaranteeing only obligations on which debtor was primarily liable, guarantor was not liable, under UCC § 3-416 [3], for obligation to bank of third party, on which debtor was secondarily liable as guarantor. Trego WaKeeney State Bank v. Maier, 214 Kan. 169, 519 P.2d 743 (1974).

20. Words creating guaranty.

Where parent corporation formed wholly-owned subsidiary solely to acquire assets of defendant's business, purchase agreement provision that parent corporation agreed "to cause buyer to purchase and to accept transfer" did not create guaranty under UCC § 3-416. Gladding Corp. v. Register, 293 So. 2d 729 (Fla. App. 1974), cert. discharged, 322 So. 2d 911 (Fla. 1975).

21. Practice and procedure.

In action under UCC § 3-416(1) against guarantor of note because of maker's alleged failure to pay two interest installments on time, where plaintiff demands summary judgment and defendant contends that plaintiff's declaration of default and demand for full payment under acceleration clause is premature because said plaintiff at time held $100,000 fund belonging to debtor, the trial court, in its discretion, may deny said summary judgment where there is a reasonable possibility that recovery by plaintiff will be mitigated or offset by defendant's prevailing on counterclaim. Mock v. Canterbury Realty Co., 152 Ga. App. 872, 264 S.E.2d 489 (1980).

Under both UCC § 3-416(1), dealing with payment by guarantor of instrument under contract of guaranty, and terms of actual contract under which guarantors of notes declared that their guaranty obligations were absolute and unconditional and that creditor could bring suit against any guarantor for payment of obligations of principal without regard to whether creditor had brought suit against principal or any other party primarily or secondarily liable on principal's obligations, trial court did not err in granting summary judgment in favor of creditor without joining principal as indispensable party defendant. Johnson v. First Nat'l Bank, 143 Ga. App. 384, 238 S.E.2d 747 (1977).

In action to enforce guarantor's liability on promissory note, trial court did not err in instructing jury that sole question was whether or not defendant had signed guarantee agreement where, inter alia, defendant did not raise issue of effectiveness of her signature, where jury was presented with guarantee agreement which contained what appeared to be defendant's signature, raising presumption of genuineness under UCC § 3-307, and where, under UCC § 3-416, guarantee agreement obligated defendant to repay loan, interest, and attorneys' fees. Wolfe v. Madison Nat'l Bank, 30 Md. App. 525, 352 A.2d 914 (1976).

Where creditor-payee was urged by defendant indorser to forebear from carrying out replevin against goods of debtor-maker, and did so upon defendant's guarantee of payment and credit, creditor-payee was entitled to introduce parol evidence to establish intent of defendant in signing note, and to sue defendant directly and primarily on the notes not only as accommodation indorser-guarantor but also as de facto co-maker. Jamaica Tobacco & Sales Corp. v. Ortner, 70 Misc.2d 388 (1972).

22. —Defenses; usury.

Guarantor is not party to principal obligation and therefore defense of usury is not available to guarantors. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Lincoln Fin. & Thrift, Inc., 291 F. Supp. 1008 (E.D. Tenn. 1968).

Where the original corporate debtor may not raise the defense of usury, that defense may not be raised by secondary parties who have guaranteed payment of the corporate note and have thus become primarily liable for its payment. Reynolds v. Service Loan & Fin. Co., 116 Ga. App. 740, 158 S.E.2d 309 (1967).

§ 75-3-118. Statute of limitations.

(a) Except as provided in subsection (e), an action to enforce the obligation of a party to pay a note payable at a definite time must be commenced within six (6) years after the due date or dates stated in the note or, if a due date is accelerated, within six (6) years after the accelerated due date.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (d) or (e), if demand for payment is made to the maker of a note payable on demand, an action to enforce the obligation of a party to pay the note must be commenced within six (6) years after the demand. If no demand for payment is made to the maker, an action to enforce the note is barred if neither principal nor interest on the note has been paid for a continuous period of ten (10) years.

(c) Except as provided in subsection (d), an action to enforce the obligation of a party to an unaccepted draft to pay the draft must be commenced within three (3) years after dishonor of the draft or ten (10) years after the date of the draft, whichever period expires first.

(d) An action to enforce the obligation of the acceptor of a certified check or the issuer of a teller's check, cashier's check, or traveler's check must be commenced within three (3) years after demand for payment is made to the acceptor or issuer, as the case may be.

(e) An action to enforce the obligation of a party to a certificate of deposit to pay the instrument must be commenced within six (6) years after demand for payment is made to the maker, but if the instrument states a due date and the maker is not required to pay before that date, the six-year period begins when a demand for payment is in effect and the due date has passed.

(f) An action to enforce the obligation of a party to pay an accepted draft, other than a certified check, must be commenced (i) within six (6) years after the due date or dates stated in the draft or acceptance if the obligation of the acceptor is payable at a definite time, or (ii) within six (6) years after the date of the acceptance if the obligation of the acceptor is payable on demand.

(g) Unless governed by other law regarding claims for indemnity or contribution, an action (i) for conversion of an instrument, for money had and received, or like action based on conversion, (ii) for breach of warranty, or (iii) to enforce an obligation, duty, or right arising under this chapter and not governed by this section must be commenced within three (3) years after the cause of action accrues.

the date of the instrument, even though no demand is made by the payee (holding that under UCC § 3-114(2), the stated date of demand notes that were antedated determined when notes were payable). Cantonwine v. Fehling, 582 P.2d 592 (Wyo. 1978).

Rule that loan of money payable on demand creates present debt, and that statute of limitations begins to run against lender from date of loan, is in accord with UCC § 3-122(1)(b). Hopper v. Hemphill, 19 Wash. App. 334, 575 P.2d 746 (1978).

UCC § 3-122, which provides for accrual of interest from date of maturity of commercial paper, prevailed in action on negotiable promissory note over another statute which gave jury discretion to fix time when interest commenced in any action on contract, where other statute

11. Accrual of cause of action, generally.

Under UCC § 3-122(1)(b), a cause of action on a demand instrument accrues on stated that it applied "except as otherwise provided in § 3-122 of the Uniform Commercial Code." Schwab v. Norris, 217 Va. 582, 231 S.E.2d 222 (1977).

Statute of limitations on note payable "30 days after demand" began running on making of note, and suit to enforce note was therefore time barred when brought more than six years after note was executed. Envionics, Inc. v. Pratt, 50 A.D.2d 552 (1st Dep't 1975).

Demand note was mature and due when issued. Paine-Erie Hosp. Supply, Inc. v. Lincoln First Bank, 82 Misc. 2d 432 (1975).

Under UCC § 3-122, when read in light of § 1-201, all remedies on time instrument fall due at beginning of business day after maturity; thus, bank was not entitled to set off customer's checking accounts towards satisfaction of 30-day promissory note executed by customer and made payable to bank where judgment creditor of customer served writ of execution on bank as garnishee on date that note matured. Bethlehem Acceptance Corp. v. Ed Newman Motor Co., 230 Pa. Super. 441, 331 A.2d 497 (1974).

Having found defendant and third party defendant in effect liable as drawers of unpaid settlement draft, district court could award interest and attorney's fees to plaintiff. Farmers & Merchants Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Pulliam, 481 F.2d 670 (10th Cir. Okla. 1973).

On an installment note, the statute of limitations begins to run against each installment on the day following its maturity date. Oklahoma Brick Corp. v. McCall, 497 P.2d 215 (Okla. 1972).

Cause of action ripens day after note matures without payment, since, in computing limitations period, day on which cause of action accrues is to be excluded. Fox-Greenwald Sheet Metal Co. v. Markowitz Bros., 452 F.2d 1346, 147 U.S. App. D.C. 14 (D.C. Cir. 1971), but see, Steorts v. American Airlines, 647 F.2d 194, 207 U.S. App. D.C. 369 (1981).

Cause of action against endorser of promissory note accrues to holders in due course following dishonor of instrument, and holders need not first recover judgment against maker before proceeding against the endorser. D'Andrea v. Feinberg, 45 Misc. 2d 270 (1965).

12. —Particular cases.

Under UCC § 3-122(1)(a), note for $2500 dated October 29, 1952, which was executed on printed form and which contained in addition to printed clauses a separate paragraph stating that it was due on demand from maker's estate at maker's death, did not mature and was not payable until happening of such death and making of such demand, and non-UCC four-year statute of limitations did not begin to run until date of maker's death (where maker died on November 20, 1976, suit was instituted on March 2, 1977, and court stated that mere fact that note was 25 years old did not render it unenforceable). Thigpen v. Thigpen, 563 S.W.2d 868 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), ref. n.r.e. (July 19, 1978).

Party who stipulated to having signed demand note as both "guarantor and endorser" on November 27, 1968, and against whom demand for payment was made on August 15, 1975, was liable on instrument because (1) nothing in New Jersey UCC precluded person from being liable as both an indorser and a guarantor; (2) New Jersey six-year statute of limitations did not bar suit against defendant, since under New Jersey UCC § 3-122(3) cause of action accrued against defendant, as indorser of note, not on date note was executed but on August 15, 1975, when demand for payment was made on defendant following maker's default; and (3) defendant could not escape liability by contending that since term "indorser" was spelled with an "i" in UCC § 3-122(3) and with an "e" ("endorser") in note sued on, provisions of UCC § 3-122(3) were inapplicable to case (also rejecting defendant's contention that since dishonor, or notice of dishonor, was not required as condition precedent to liability of guarantor, action against him in that capacity accrued on date note was executed). Central Jersey Bank & Trust Co. v. Lady Van Indus., Inc., 154 N.J. Super. 459, 381 A.2d 831 (1977), disapproved, Ligran, Inc. v. Medlawtel, Inc., 86 N.J. 583, 432 A.2d 502 (1981).

Where (1) bank's customer obtained loan from bank to buy car and later sold car and received check in payment, which was credited to customer's account, (2) customer then paid off loan by giving personal check to bank, (3) check credited to customer's account was later dishonored, and (4) customer's checking account lacked sufficient funds to charge back amount of dishonored check, bank as holder in due course of dishonored check had cause of action under UCC § 3-122(3) against customer as indorser of such check, following receipt of notice of check's dishonor. Serve v. First Nat'l Bank, 143 Ga. App. 239, 237 S.E.2d 719 (1977).

Demand note was mature and due when issued. Paine-Erie Hosp. Supply, Inc. v. Lincoln First Bank, 82 Misc. 2d 432 (1975).

In action to recover alleged indebtedness evidenced by check, check was demand instrument under UCC § 3-108 since no date for payment was indicated and, as such, any cause of action on debt accrued on date of instrument under UCC § 3-122. Turner v. State, 508 S.W.2d 861 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Although cause of action accrues in case of demand instrument on its date under UCC § 3-122 (1)(b), where demand note was given to payee with instructions that it was to be held for payment until maker and his wife had died, note was subject to condition precedent and cause of action did not accrue and statute of limitations did not begin to operate until condition was performed; parol evidence was admissible for purpose of showing that promissory note, though absolute in form, delivered to manual possession of payee, was not intended to take effect as binding obligation until happening of stipulated contingency. Washington v. Martin, 503 S.W.2d 330 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

Instrument denominated "Retail Instalment Contract" which showed "seller" to be business college and described articles sold or services rendered as "Med. Secretary Course," with cash price of $490, and which contained provision waiving defenses against assignee thereof, was not negotiable instrument as defined by UCC §§ 3-104 through 3-112, but came within Retail Instalment and Home Solicitation Sales Act. Grimes v. Community Loan & Inv. Corp., 130 Ga. App. 8, 202 S.E.2d 265 (1973).

Where written contract for sale which provided authority for completion of note set term of note at 2 years and made no mention of periodic instalment payments, and president of payee bank added provisions for 7 instalment payments over approximately 16 months, president's completion of note in terms varying authorized time and manner of payment was unauthorized and constituted material alteration; and suit on note filed 10 months prior to maturity date "as authorized" was premature. Bank of New Effington v. Thompson, 502 P.2d 978 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

§ 75-3-119. Notice of right to defend action.

In an action for breach of an obligation for which a third person is answerable over pursuant to this chapter or Chapter 4, the defendant may give the third person written notice of the litigation, and the person notified may then give similar notice to any other person who is answerable over. If the notice states (i) that the person notified may come in and defend and (ii) that failure to do so will bind the person notified in an action later brought by the person giving the notice as to any determination of fact common to the two (2) litigations, the person notified is so bound unless after seasonable receipt of the notice the person notified does come in and defend.

§ 75-3-201. Negotiation.

(a) "Negotiation" means a transfer of possession, whether voluntary or involuntary, of an instrument by a person other than the issuer to a person who thereby becomes its holder.

(b) Except for negotiation by a remitter, if an instrument is payable to an identified person, negotiation requires transfer of possession of the instrument and its indorsement by the holder. If an instrument is payable to bearer, it may be negotiated by transfer of possession alone.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-202.

11. In general.

A money order may be either negotiable or nonnegotiable. If it is negotiable, the term "purchaser," with reference to the instrument, includes under UCC § 3-202(1) one who is a "holder" of the instrument. If a money order is not negotiable, the term "purchaser" will still include virtually all later transferees of the instrument, since such persons will have acquired their interest by some sort of voluntary transaction comprehended by UCC § 3-201. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Schmitt, 441 F. Supp. 440 (N.D. Cal. 1977).

Document purporting to transfer and assign promissory note which was never attached to note did not serve as effective endorsement of note under UCC § 3-202(2); since note was not issued or endorsed to assignee, assignee was not holder of note as defined in UCC § 1-201(20) and, not being holder, assignee could not possibly be holder in due course and assignment of note was therefore subject to defense of failure of consideration. Billas v. Dwyer, 140 Ga. App. 774, 232 S.E.2d 102 (1976).

Where party to litigation admitted owing to opposing party specified sum of money which was paid into registry of court by certified check, but lapse of nine days occurred before check was deposited by court clerk in court's registry account, opponent was not entitled to interest on amount of check during nine-day period; although first party, as drawer, was not discharged until certified check was paid, nevertheless, check was negotiated by delivery to clerk, the named payee, and this had effect of suspending underlying obligation of party pro tanto, until instrument was presented for payment, and, thus, interest claimed by other party would be owing only if check had been dishonored when presented for payment. Huffman Towing, Inc. v. Mainstream Shipyard & Supply, Inc., 388 F. Supp. 1362 (N.D. Miss. 1975).

Where owners of real property subject to vendor's lien entered into agreement with holder of vendor's lien note that bank would pay note upon presentation of necessary documents to enable bank to succeed to full rights of holder, where holder sent note and assignment of note and lien to bank but bank declined to complete transaction because no endorsement had been made upon note itself, and where, after papers were returned to holder, deed of trust on property was foreclosed, tender of payment by owners invoked provisions of UCC § 3-604(1), so as to relieve owners of liability subsequent to such tender to pay interest, costs and attorney's fees. Penny v. Kelley, 528 S.W.2d 330 (Civ. App. 1975).

In class action, brought by purchasers of promissory notes secured by mortgages, against seller's reorganization trustee, notes met definition of "note" as defined by UCC § 3-104 and were negotiable and unconditional under UCC §§ 3-105, 3-112 and 3-119; purchasers were holders in due course for value under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 and notes were properly negotiated by bankrupt by endorsement and delivery under UCC § 3-202; under UCC § 3-414 reorganization trustee was bound on endorser's contract. Hall v. Security Planning Serv., Inc., 371 F. Supp. 7 (D. Ariz. 1974).

Plaintiff-assignee of facsimile copy of promissory note was entitled to maintain action on note against defendant-maker, although plaintiff did not have possession of note, where bank that held note returned it to maker, though it had not been paid, and then subsequently prepared facsimile and assigned it to plaintiff. Plaintiff was not holder of note under UCC § 1-201(20), since he was never in possession of note, but he was transferee of note, though bank did not deliver it to him, and, as such, he could maintain action on note since maker had possession of note and note was in evidence. Scheid v. Shields, 269 Or. 236, 524 P.2d 1209 (1974).

12. Indorsement.

Where a bank, which under UCC § 3-202(1) was holder of note delivered to it with necessary endorsements of both copayees, took such note (1) "for value" under UCC §§ 3-302(1)(a) and 3-303(a) because it had taken it as collateral for loan to note's copayees, and (2) "in good faith" under UCC § 3-302(1)(b) and "without notice" under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) of any claims against note's copayees, court held (1) that bank was holder in due course of such note under UCC § 3-302(1), (2) that under UCC § 3-305(1), bank took note free from all claims to it by any person, and (3) that bank therefore was entitled to priority of payment over judgment creditor of note's copayees in situation where, prior to copayees' transfer of note to bank, judgment creditor of copayees had served writ of garnishment on maker of note. Bricks Unlimited, Inc. v. Agee, 672 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir. 1982).

Bank which took mortgage on assignment without indorsement of note supporting mortgage, and which did not notify maker of note about such assignment until interest payment was due, was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-202(1), providing that instrument payable to order is negotiated by delivery with any necessary endorsement. Second Nat'l Bank v. G.M.T. Properties, Inc., 364 So. 2d 59 (Fla. App. 1978).

Where (1) debtor sold corporate stock on July 25, 1974 to defendants for $180,000, and defendants executed promissory notes under pledge agreement securing payment of stock's purchase price and delivered notes to escrowee, which also received the purchased stock, (2) debtor on March 19, 1975, with knowledge and consent of defendants and escrowee, assigned notes to creditor as collateral to secure payment of prior $60,000 debt, indorsed them to creditor's order, and delivered them to creditor which retained possession of them until August 24, 1976, a date following date on which debtor had fully debt due creditor, (3) on November 5, 1975, when defendants still owed debtor $135,000 on notes and notes were still in creditor's possession as collateral for payment of $28,000 balance then owed by debtor to creditor, debtor entered into agreement with plaintiff law firm and its client under which payments on prior debt owed by debtor to such client were extended, prospective lawsuit was settled, sums thus due to client were collateralized by assignment of debtor's interest in stock-payment notes, and notes themselves and pledge agreement securing them were also assigned to plaintiff on behalf of its client, subject to prior collateral assignment in favor of debtor's first creditor, (4) first creditor on August 24, 1976 acknowledged to escrowee that debtor had fully discharged debt due it, delivered stock-payment notes in suit to plaintiff law firm, but never indorsed notes to plaintiff's order, (5) on August 25, 1976, plaintiff, defendants (purchasers of debtor's stock), debtor, and escrowee executed written acknowledgements of debtor's assignment of notes and pledge agreement to plaintiff, and plaintiff requested that it be paid next installment on notes, which was due on October 1, 1976, (5) on April 5, 1976, IRS assessed delinquent income-tax liability against debtor and filed notice of tax lien on August 4, 1976, (6) on October 1, 1976, escrowee paid installment payment due on notes to IRS, and (7) on October 5, 1976, plaintiff after due notice declared default on notes (because of failure to receive October 1, 1976 installment payment thereon) and under acceleration clause in notes demanded full payment thereof, court held (1) that plaintiff, as nominee for its client, acquired valid collateral assignment of proceeds of notes to extent that proceeds were not required to satisfy first creditor's prior security interest therein, (2) that under UCC § 3-202(3), debtor's indorsement and negotiation of notes to first creditor merely created partial assignment of notes' proceeds and did not divest debtor of ultimate right to all proceeds not required to satisfy debt owed to first creditor, (3) that debtor's remaining interest in notes' proceeds was the interest that debtor had assigned to plaintiff as collateral on November 5, 1975, and that such assignment, under UCC § 9-204(1), gave plaintiff valid security interest in debtor's residuary interest in notes' proceeds, (4) that plaintiff's security interest in notes' proceeds was not perfected until August 24, 1976, when it became perfected under UCC § 9-305 by possession of notes following first creditor's delivery thereof to plaintiff, (5) that IRS tax lien was not superior to plaintiff's perfected security interest in notes, since neither plaintiff nor its client had received any notice of such lien until September 20, 1976, and (6) that neither plaintiff nor its client could accelerate unpaid balance due on notes, since plaintiff, as nominee for its client, was merely holder of security interest in notes and was not "holder" of notes within meaning of UCC § 1-201(20) because of first creditor's failure to indorse them to plaintiff's order (holding that plaintiff was entitled to receive, on behalf of its client, all installment payments due on notes, commencing with installment due on October 1, 1976). Lipkowitz & Plaut v. Affrunti, 95 Misc. 2d 849 (1978).

Where owners of real property subject to vendor's lien entered into agreement with holder of vendor's lien note that bank would pay note upon presentation of necessary documents to enable bank to succeed to full rights of holder, where holder sent note and assignment of note and lien to bank but bank declined to complete transaction because no endorsement had been made upon note itself, and where, after papers were returned to holder, deed of trust on property was foreclosed: (1) tender made by property owners qualified as legal tender under UCC § 2-511(2), unless holder was excused from his obligation to endorse note upon instrument itself; (2) assignment of vendor's lien note, without endorsement upon instrument itself, was not in compliance with provisions of UCC § 3-202(2) or commercial practices governing such transaction. Since holder failed to endorse note, he could not claim failure to tender money in discharge of obligation represented by note, and foreclosure of lien without giving owners reasonable time to comply with demands then made was unauthorized. Furthermore, tender of payment by owners invoked provisions of UCC § 3-604(1), so as to relieve owners of liability subsequent to such tender to pay interest, costs and attorney's fees. Penny v. Kelley, 528 S.W.2d 330 (Civ. App. 1975).

Where note pledged to bank was never indorsed as required by §§ 3-201(3) and 3-202(2), bank was not holder in due course but was simply bona fide assignee for value and without notice. Lane v. Midwest Bancshares Corp., 337 F. Supp. 1200 (E.D. Ark. 1972).

13. —Forged or unauthorized indorsement.

Forged signature of payee on front of check did not preclude defendant's conviction for forgery since UCC § 3-202(2) does not specify any specific location for an indorsement, nor was there any indication that the signature was not intended as an indorsement within the meaning of UCC § 3-402. United States v. Tufi, 536 F.2d 855 (9th Cir. Haw. 1976).

In action pursuant to UCC § 3-419 by co-payee of check for conversion of check by bank which cashed check with co-payee's endorsement forged by other payee, co-payee, which was not a "customer" of bank within meaning of UCC §§ 4-104 and 4-406, was not equitably estopped by policy of commercial reasonableness under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-203, notwithstanding that co-payee waited 10 months after it learned of forgery to inform bank, where (1) check, which was issued to co-payee "and" other payee, was properly payable under UCC § 3-116 only if it contained endorsement of both payees; (2) unauthorized endorsement was, in absence of ratification under UCC § 3-404, no endorsement under UCC §§ 3-202 and 3-404; (3) co-payee did not ratify unauthorized endorsement; and (4) bank's failure to ascertain whether co-payee's signature was authorized was not in accord with reasonable commercial standards of banking business under UCC § 3-419. Atlas

Bldg. Supply Co. v. First Indep. Bank, 15 Wash. App. 367, 550 P.2d 26 (1976).

Where payee of cashier's check specially endorsed check to order of specified corporation and individual, where endorsement of individual was forged, and where collecting bank accepted check and credited it to account of endorsee company, collecting bank could not stand in shoes of either holder or holder in due course, since endorsement of individual endorser was forged, and it was liable to owner of cashier's check (i.e., purchaser of check) under UCC § 3-419(1)(c) for conversion, notwithstanding fact that it placed funds received into account of corporate endorser. Tubin v. Rabin, 382 F. Supp. 193 (N.D. Tex. 1974), supplemented, 389 F. Supp. 787 (N.D. Tex. 1974), aff'd, 533 F.2d 255 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976).

In action by bank against drawer of check deposited with it, where signature of payee as purported indorser was forged and where below it was added signature of another entity, which was authorized signature, forged signature of payee was inoperative to make bank holder nor did presumably valid second signature convert order paper to bearer paper. Sumiton Bank v. Funding Sys. Leasing Corp., 512 F.2d 774 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

Where person who presented check to collecting bank did not have authority to negotiate check, collecting bank could not become holder of check based upon unauthorized endorsement, and hence could not become holder in due course. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

Where plaintiff took draft upon indorsement of one of two named payees and forged indorsement of other payee, transfer conferred upon plaintiff interest of payee who did indorse draft, and no more. First Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Branch Banking & Trust Co., 282 N.C. 44, 191 S.E.2d 683 (1972).

14. —Separate writings as indorsements.

UCC § 3-202(2), requiring indorsement to be on instrument itself or on paper "so firmly affixed" to instrument as to become part thereof, evidences clear intent to restrict use of "allonge" (paper annexed to note for purpose of writing indorsements thereon where instrument itself has insufficient space for such indorsements). Estrada v. River Oaks Bank & Trust Co., 550 S.W.2d 719 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 27, 1977).

Bank which took four notes from debtor, which were executed to debtor by third party and assigned by debtor to bank as collateral for another note that debtor executed to bank, was not holder in due course of such notes where (1) debtor did not indorse notes; (2) debtor's signature on single collateral assignment did not constitute indorsement of notes under UCC § 3-202(2), even though such assignment was stapled to notes and expressly referred to them, since assignment was not "so firmly affixed" to notes as to become extension or part of each note; and (3) doctrine of incorporation by reference would not be extended to indorsements of negotiable instruments. Estrada v. River Oaks Bank & Trust Co., 550 S.W.2d 719 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 27, 1977).

Stapling endorsement to checks was permanent attachment so that it became "a part thereof" within meaning of UCC § 3-202(2) and was sufficient to make assignee of checks holder thereof where checks were endorsed to assignee by name, thus qualifying as special endorsement, where subject endorsement was typed on two legal size sheets of paper, and it would have been physically impossible to place all of this language on two small checks, and where endorsement was affixed by stapling it to checks. Lamson v. Commercial Credit Corp., 187 Colo. 382, 531 P.2d 966 (1975).

The indorsement necessary for negotiation under UCC § 3-202 cannot be on separate paper pinned or clipped to instrument purportedly being indorsed. Tallahassee Bank & Trust Co. v. Raines, 125 Ga. App. 263, 187 S.E.2d 320 (1972).

An endorsement written on a separate sheet of paper not firmly affixed to note, but merely clipped to it, does not meet the requirements of subsec. (2). James Talcott, Inc. v. Fred Ratowsky Assocs., 38 Pa. D. & C.2d 624 (1965).

15. Partial or limited assignments.

When the holder of promissory notes assigned his interest therein as collateral to secure payment of a prior indebtedness, a sum less than the aggregate amount of the notes, and indorsed and delivered them to that creditor, he did not irrevocably divest himself of the ultimate right to all of the proceeds of the notes, but retained ownership of those proceeds not required to satisfy that indebtedness, and, therefore, the negotiation of all of the notes operated only as a partial assignment of the proceeds of the notes; the interest retained by him was capable of being transferred and, when it was transferred by another collateral assignment, the transferee acquired a valid security interest as to his residuary interest in the notes, which security interest was perfected by a subsequent delivery of the notes to it. Lipkowitz & Plaut v. Affrunti, 95 Misc. 2d 849 (1978).

The pledgee of promissory notes to secure a debt is the purchaser of a limited interest under § 3-302(4), and not the holder of a limited assignment under § 3-202(3). Wood v. Willman, 423 P.2d 82 (Wyo. 1967).

A fractional interest in a negotiable instrument may be "assigned" even though an indorsement must be an indorsement of the entire instrument as "indorsement" relates to negotiation and not assignment. D'Orazi v. Bank of Canton, 254 Cal. App. 2d 901 (5th Dist. 1967).

16. Conditional or restrictive indorsement.

Written instructions on reverse side of checks which were properly dated (i.e., dated as of time of issue), limiting time for deposit to future date, did not preclude instruments from being payable on demand as required by UCC § 3-104(2)(b); instructions on checks could not be regarded as qualified or restrictive endorsements since drawer was not holder of checks and, since instructions were not endorsements, they were not binding on payee or on subsequent holders. Silver Creations, Ltd. v. UPS, 133 N.J. Super. 543, 337 A.2d 641, 88 A.L.R.3d 1093 (L. Div. 1975).

The plaintiff's motion for summary judgment in lieu of complaint against an insurance broker brought on five separate "premium finance agreements" was denied, where the assignment of the notes by the broker to plaintiff was controlled by Banking Law § 566 subd 2 which provided that the assigning broker could only be held as an indorser "with recourse" upon an express agreement to that effect, notwithstanding contrary provisions of the Uniform Commercial Code that would be applicable if the instrument was a conventional promissory note. Accordingly, plaintiff was granted leave to serve a complaint. Standard Premium Plan Corp. v. Wolf, 56 Misc. 2d 522 (1968).

§ 75-3-202. Negotiation subject to rescission.

(a) Negotiation is effective even if obtained (i) from an infant, a corporation exceeding its powers, or a person without capacity, (ii) by fraud, duress, or mistake, or (iii) in breach of duty or as part of an illegal transaction.

(b) To the extent permitted by other law, negotiation may be rescinded or may be subject to other remedies, but those remedies may not be asserted against a subsequent holder in due course or a person paying the instrument in good faith and without knowledge of facts that are a basis for rescission or other remedy.

Free right of negotiation inures to benefit of payee of check even though he may have obtained instrument by fraud. Johnson v. State, 158 Ind. App. 611, 304 N.E.2d 555 (1973).

An infant cannot rescind a negotiable instrument as against a subsequent holder in due course. Snyder v. Town Hill Motors, Inc., 193 Pa. Super. 578, 165 A.2d 293 (1960).

Where a minor purchased an automobile from a friend, agreeing to give the latter a check as part payment, and the friend directed the minor to indorse and deliver the check to a motor company as down payment on an automobile for the friend, the motor company, having received the instrument by negotiation from the friend for value, in good faith, and without notice that it was overdue or had been dishonored or that there was any defense against it, was a subsequent holder in due course. The fact that the check was not manually transferred from the minor to the friend and then to the motor company was immaterial; constructive delivery being sufficient. Snyder v. Town Hill Motors, Inc., 193 Pa. Super. 578, 165 A.2d 293 (1960).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

12. In general.

Where the blank spaces in a conditional sales contract and a note sued on were filled in before the instruments were assigned to a purchaser for value in due course, the conditional purchaser could not defend the action upon the ground that the contract when signed by him specified monthly payments totaling less than the balance shown to be due on the contract as filled out. Garnett v. Associates Dist. Corp., 233 Miss. 849, 103 So. 2d 368 (1958).

Defenses existing between original parties were not available against bona fide purchaser, acquiring note and conditional sale contract before maturity. Commercial Credit Co. v. Summers, 154 Miss. 501, 122 So. 541 (1929).

Purchaser after maturity from holder in due course held not affected by agreement for cancellation between maker and payee. Rhymes v. Boggess, 146 Miss. 707, 111 So. 844 (1927).

Purchaser's knowledge that stock for which note was executed was valueless at time of purchase held no defense. McAnge v. Falls, 145 Miss. 471, 110 So. 840 (1927).

Accommodation party liable to holder for value only when he became such before maturity. Rylee v. Wilkinson, 134 Miss. 663, 99 So. 901 (1924).

Failure of consideration no defense against bona fide purchaser. Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Hough Drug Co., 123 Miss. 598, 86 So. 359 (1920).

Failure of corporation payee to file charter as condition to doing business no defense against bona fide holder. Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Hough Drug Co., 123 Miss. 598, 86 So. 359 (1920).

Where note was assigned as security, assignee became holder for value and it became free of any defense existing between maker and payee. First Nat'l Bank v. John McGrath & Sons Co., 111 Miss. 872, 72 So. 701 (1916).

§ 75-3-203. Transfer of instrument; rights acquired by transfer.

(a) An instrument is transferred when it is delivered by a person other than its issuer for the purpose of giving to the person receiving delivery the right to enforce the instrument.

(b) Transfer of an instrument, whether or not the transfer is a negotiation, vests in the transferee any right of the transferor to enforce the instrument, including any right as a holder in due course, but the transferee cannot acquire rights of a holder in due course by a transfer, directly or indirectly, from a holder in due course if the transferee engaged in fraud or illegality affecting the instrument.

(c) Unless otherwise agreed, if an instrument is transferred for value and the transferee does not become a holder because of lack of indorsement by the transferor, the transferee has a specifically enforceable right to the unqualified indorsement of the transferor, but negotiation of the instrument does not occur until the indorsement is made.

(d) If a transferor purports to transfer less than the entire instrument, negotiation of the instrument does not occur. The transferee obtains no rights under this chapter and has only the rights of a partial assignee.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-201.

11. In general.

It is elementary commercial law that a note can be transferred from a holder to a transferee, and that the transferee has at least the same rights as the transferor (holding that transferee of over-due promissory note was proper party to enforce collection of note). Ford Motor Credit Co. v. Soileau, 357 So. 2d 563 (La. App. 1978).

Transfer of instrument vests in transferee such rights as transferor has therein and, thus, payee of check succeeds to all rights of drawer when such check is transferred and delivered to payee. Johnson v. State, 158 Ind. App. 611, 304 N.E.2d 555 (1973).

12. Transferee as acquiring transferor's rights.

Protection of holder-in-due-course status was not transferred by bank to plaintiff under UCC § 3-201(1), with respect to certificate of deposit which plaintiff purportedly purchased from bank and which was dishonored on its maturity by second bank, to which first bank presented it for payment, because of second bank's prior lien thereon, where first bank had no right to sell certificate to plaintiff, was not its true transferor, and true transferor was not a holder in due course. Rozen v. North Carolina Nat'l Bank, 588 F.2d 83 (4th Cir. N.C. 1978).

A money order may be either negotiable or nonnegotiable. If it is negotiable, the term "purchaser," with reference to the instrument, includes under UCC § 3-202(1) one who is a "holder" of the instrument. If a money order is not negotiable, the term "purchaser" will still include virtually all later transferees of the instrument, since such persons will have acquired their interest by some sort of voluntary transaction comprehended by UCC § 3-201. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Schmitt, 441 F. Supp. 440 (N.D. Cal. 1977).

Where (1) draft issued to two copayees by insurance company, as drawer-drawee, was deposited by one copayee in depositary bank, (2) other copayee's indorsement on draft was forged or unauthorized, (3) drawer-drawee, after paying draft when it was processed through banking channels, learned of such forged indorsement, and amount of draft was charged back through banking channels to depositary bank, and (4) depositary bank then sued drawer-drawee for payment of draft, court held that depositary bank was not entitled to recover because (1) under UCC § 3-201(1), depositary bank had only rights of its transferor in draft, which were worthless because copayee whose signature had been forged had lien on draft's entire proceeds, (2) depositary bank did not sustain its burden of proof under UCC § 3-307(1) concerning genuineness of forged indorsement on draft, (3) since one necessary indorsement on draft was missing, depositary bank could not negotiate draft or become holder or holder in due course thereof, and (4) depositary bank had breached its presentment warranty under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) because it claimed through forged or unauthorized indorsement of copayee who had interest in funds represented by draft. Foremost Ins. Co. v. First City Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 374 So. 2d 840 (Miss. 1979).

Plaintiff-assignee of facsimile copy of promissory note was entitled to maintain action on note against defendant-maker, although plaintiff did not have possession of note, where bank that held note returned it to maker, though it had not been paid, and then subsequently prepared facsimile and assigned it to plaintiff. Plaintiff was not holder of note under UCC § 1-201(20), since he was never in possession of note, but he was transferee of note, though bank did not deliver it to him, and, as such, he could maintain action on note since maker had possession of note and note was in evidence. Scheid v. Shields, 269 Or. 236, 524 P.2d 1209 (1974).

Where corporation paid note signed by corporation president but not by corporation, corporation acquired rights of transferee and could not enforce note against maker until date when it could have been enforced by transferor; so that corporation as account debtor was not entitled to set off, since it had had notification of assignment of accounts more than 3 months before claim against assignor on note accrued. Commercial Sav. Bank v. G & J Wood Prods. Co., 46 Mich. App. 133, 207 N.W.2d 401 (1973).

Since bank-transferor was holder in due course and plaintiff-transferee was not prior holder, plaintiff-transferee acquired rights of holder in due course irrespective of question of value. Canyonville Bible Academy v. Lobemaster, 108 Ill. App. 2d 318, 247 N.E.2d 623 (4th Dist. 1969).

One discharging an ordinary negotiable instrument by payment could have the rights of a holder in due course only if his immediate predecessor had similar rights, and where the immediate predecessor was an agent he could not have had the rights of a holder in due course as against the principal. E.F. Hutton & Co. v. Manufacturers Nat'l Bank, 259 F. Supp. 513 (E.D. Mich. 1966).

13. —Fraud or illegality.

In the absence of any fraud or illegality, the accommodation maker of note who paid it and was assigned the note and real estate mortgage securing it became subrogated to the rights of the former holder and could sue the maker on the note and foreclose the mortgage. Simson v. Bilderbeck, Inc., 76 N.M. 667, 417 P.2d 803 (1966).

14. —Notice of claim or defense.

The exclusion from the shelter principle in UCC § 3-201(1) of one who, with notice of prior claims, takes back an instrument from a holder in due course, rests on sound logic. Operation of the shelter principle in favor of such a person would defeat the purpose of subjecting him to defenses of the maker. Without this exception to the shelter principle, one who is not a holder in due course, by a transfer and an agreement to repurchase, could readily avoid the limitations under which he held the instrument in the first place. Rozen v. North Carolina Nat'l Bank, 588 F.2d 83 (4th Cir. N.C. 1978).

Protection of holder-in-due-course status was not transferred by bank to plaintiff under UCC § 3-201(1), with respect to certificate of deposit which plaintiff purportedly purchased from bank and which was dishonored on its maturity by second bank, to which first bank presented it for payment, because of second bank's prior lien thereon, where first bank had no right to sell certificate to plaintiff, was not its true transferor, and true transferor was not a holder in due course. Rozen v. North Carolina Nat'l Bank, 588 F.2d 83 (4th Cir. N.C. 1978).

Where transferee bank's security interest in notes was not obtained prior in time to interest therein that it took by assignment in transfer from transferor bank, transferee bank was not prior holder of note, within meaning of § 3-201, with notice of defenses thereto. Doctors Hosp. of Texarkana, Inc. v. Republic Nat'l Bank, 498 S.W.2d 466 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 17, 1973).

One who took as successor to holder in due course, by reacquiring notes after participating fully in underlying transactions, had actual notice of defense of discharge, so that defense could be asserted, since successor did not have holder in due course status under UCC § 3-302 because of exception within UCC § 3-201(1) relating to transferee who as prior holder had notice of defense. Coplan Pipe & Supply Co. v. Ben-Frieda Corp., 256 So. 2d 218 (Fla. App. 1972).

Where a holder takes with knowledge of a defense, he cannot improve his position by a transfer to a holder in due course and the subsequent reacquisition of the instrument from such holder. Program Aids Co. v. W. R. Bean & Son, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 210 (1967, NY Sup).

One with the rights of a holder in due course of a promissory note, who has not otherwise lost such rights, does not diminish his status by purchasing the note later at a judicial sale, although he may not by virtue of such purchase alone become a due course holder. Finance Co. of Am. v. Wilson, 115 Ga. App. 280, 154 S.E.2d 459 (1967).

A bank which for the second time accepted for deposit to the personal account of the officer of a corporation in receivership a long past due check payable to the corporation's order, at a time when the bank had knowledge of the receivership, could not be a holder in due course when the drawee bank again refused payment. County Trust Co. v. Pascack Valley Bank & Trust Co., 93 N.J. Super. 252, 225 A.2d 605 (App. Div. 1966).

15. —Security interests.

Under UCC §§ 3-201(2), which deals with transfer of security interest in instrument, and 9-207(1), which deals with secured party's duty to preserve collateral in his possession, where payee of note executed by defendant assigned such note to bank as collateral security for loan, (1) payee had no right to compromise or settle note, or to take any action that might diminish bank's interest therein, and (2) bank's title thereto, to extent of debt owed to it by payee, was paramount. Moreover, after balance of payee's debt to bank had been paid by note's maker and bank had returned note to payee, note was still valid and outstanding, although maker was entitled to credit thereon for amount that he had paid bank in order to discharge payee's indebtedness to bank. Vinson v. McCarty, 413 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. 1982).

When the holder of promissory notes assigned his interest therein as collateral to secure payment of a prior indebtedness, a sum less than the aggregate amount of the notes, and indorsed and delivered them to that creditor, he did not irrevocably divest himself of the ultimate right to all of the proceeds of the notes, but retained ownership of those proceeds not required to satisfy that indebtedness, and, therefore, the negotiation of all of the notes operated only as a partial assignment of the proceeds of the notes; the interest retained by him was capable of being transferred and, when it was transferred by another collateral assignment, the transferee acquired a valid security interest as to his residuary interest in the notes, which security interest was perfected by a subsequent delivery of the notes to it. Lipkowitz & Plaut v. Affrunti, 95 Misc. 2d 849 (1978).

Where bank issued cashier's check to individual who had personally guaranteed certain notes which were payable to borrowers from bank and were held by bank as collateral security for loans made to such borrowers, and where guarantor subsequently became bankrupt, bank was, at very least, transferee of unindorsed order instruments which bankrupt had personally guaranteed and, therefore, by virtue of proof that it took notes in proper transactions with holders thereof and "shelter" provisions of UCC § 3-201, bank succeeded to rights of transferors of holders of instruments, to full extent of its security interest; under UCC §§ 3-301 and 3-603(1), holder of instrument, whether or not true owner, could enforce payment thereon and discharge paying party, and thus, if bank could demand payment from guarantor when due, bank was entitled to file in its own right proof of claim in bankruptcy and to assert setoff against cashier's check. In re Johnson, 552 F.2d 1072 (4th Cir. Va. 1977).

Where corporate officer delivered to bank note payable to corporation and where proceeds of note were credited to corporate account and were thereafter drawn against by corporation, transfer of note to bank for value gave bank "the specifically enforceable right to have the unqualified indorsement" of corporation on note, even though bank had no corporate resolution authorizing officer to deal with bank. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

§ 75-3-204. Indorsement.

(a) "Indorsement" means a signature, other than that of a signer as maker, drawer, or acceptor, that alone or accompanied by other words is made on an instrument for the purpose of (i) negotiating the instrument, (ii) restricting payment of the instrument, or (iii) incurring indorser's liability on the instrument, but regardless of the intent of the signer, a signature and its accompanying words is an indorsement unless the accompanying words, terms of the instrument, place of the signature, or other circumstances unambiguously indicate that the signature was made for a purpose other than indorsement. For the purpose of determining whether a signature is made on an instrument, a paper affixed to the instrument is a part of the instrument; provided, however, that an indorsement of instruments representing student loans, including loans that are insured by the United States Secretary of Education under 20 U.S.C.A. 1071, et seq., as amended, or by a state or nonprofit private institution or organization with which the United States Secretary of Education has an agreement under 20 U.S.C.A. 1078(b) as amended, may be made by signed blanket indorsement, rather than in the manner otherwise provided in this subsection, if a notation to that effect is made in the name of the transferee on the instrument representing the student loan.

(b) "Indorser" means a person who makes an indorsement.

(c) For the purpose of determining whether the transferee of an instrument is a holder, an indorsement that transfers a security interest in the instrument is effective as an unqualified indorsement of the instrument.

(d) If an instrument is payable to a holder under a name that is not the name of the holder, indorsement may be made by the holder in the name stated in the instrument or in the holder's name or both, but signature in both names may be required by a person paying or taking the instrument for value or collection.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-201.

11. In general.

Under UCC § 3-203 (dealing with wrong or misspelled names), check mistakenly made payable to “Robert L. Agaliois” instead of “Louis Agaliois” could properly be indorsed by intended payee in his own name, or in name of named payee, or with both such names. Agaliois v. Agaliois, 38 N.C. App. 42, 247 S.E.2d 28 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-203, check with misspelled name of payee was valid and negotiable where check was endorsed with correct spelling. State v. Powell, 220 Kan. 168, 551 P.2d 902 (1976).

Where note pledged to bank was never indorsed as required by §§ 3-201(3) and 3-202(2), bank was not holder in due course but was simply bona fide assignee for value and without notice. Lane v. Mid- west Bancshares Corp., 337 F. Supp. 1200 (E.D. Ark. 1972).

Payee is under no duty to authorize check made out to payee under erroneous designation, and such an unendorsed check would not constitute payment or tender of payment to payee. Moore v. Copeland, 478 S.W.2d 573 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), ref. n.r.e (June 21, 1972).

A transferee who has neglected to obtain the indorsement necessary to make him a holder may enforce a note, foreclose on collateral, and obtain a deficiency judgment against the debtor. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

The instant section purports to give only an indorsee for value, and not the maker of the note, the power to require indorsement in both names under the circumstances stated in the section. Watertown Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Spanks, 346 Mass. 398, 193 N.E.2d 333 (1963).

12. Right to indorsement.

Where corporate officer delivered to bank note payable to corporation and where proceeds of note were credited to corporate account and were thereafter drawn against by corporation, transfer of note to bank for value gave bank “the specifically enforceable right to have the unqualified indorsement” of corporation on note, even though bank had no corporate resolution authorizing officer to deal with bank. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

13. —“For value”.

Where obligor by property settlement agreement and contract agreed for note to be transferred to wife and knew that such transfer was to be made and that no particular method for such transfer was provided, delivery to wife of promissory note payable to her father with intent to invest wife with ownership was effective gift of note and did not require written transfer. Waters v. Waters, 498 S.W.2d 236 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), ref. n.r.e (Jan. 16, 1974).

The assignee of an unindorsed note may enforce the note as against an accommodation party where the transfer was made for value, as in such case he had the right to obtain the necessary indorsement and therefore should be regarded as a holder. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

14. —Payable to order or bearer.

Final clause of UCC § 3-201(3), which provides that until instrument is indorsed there is no presumption that transferee is its owner, is intended to make clear that transferee without indorsement of order instrument is not holder of such instrument and thus is not aided by presumption, provided by UCC § 3-307(2), that holder of instrument is entitled to recover thereon. In such case, terms of obligation do not run to transferee without indorsement, and he must account for his possession of the unindorsed paper by proving transaction through which he acquired it (where transferee of two promissory notes testified only as to some of the circumstances under which she acquired possession of notes, and court ordered new trial of action). Smathers v. Smathers, 34 N.C. App. 724, 239 S.E.2d 637 (1977).

Although, under UCC § 3-201, holder of instrument payable to his order may transfer it for value without endorsing it, mere possession of unendorsed instrument is not prima facie evidence of ownership; thus, if face of instrument indicates title is in any person other than possessor, burden would be on possessor to prove his ownership by a valid transfer. N.E. England Assocs. v. Davis, 333 So. 2d 696 (La. App. 1976).

In action by bank against drawer of check deposited with it, where signature of payee as purported indorser was forged and where below it was added signature of another entity, which was authorized signature, forged signature of payee was inoperative to make bank holder nor did presumably valid second signature convert order paper to bearer paper. Sumiton Bank v. Funding Sys. Leasing Corp., 512 F.2d 774 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

15. When negotiation occurs.

In action by materials supplier against subcontractor to recover entire proceeds of four checks drawn by general contractor and made jointly payable to both supplier and subcontractor, where subcontractor surrendered all four checks to supplier without indorsement and general contractor's bank, at supplier's request, exchanged such checks for two cashier's checks made payable to supplier and subcontractor, (1) bank by exchanging checks originally issued for cashier's checks did not alter rights of parties named in originally issued checks; (2) drawer of original checks (general contractor) was not placed at disadvantage because drawer's account was immediately chargeable on presentation and acceptance of original checks; (3) payees of original checks (supplier and subcontractor) were also not placed at disadvantage because funds in same amount were available to them from the cashier's checks; (4) validity of drawer's order to bank to make payment to payees named in original checks was not in question; and (5) making of cashier's checks payable to payees named therein (supplier and subcontractor) did not circumvent purpose of requirement of indorsements, since indorsements would still be routinely required under UCC § 3-104(2)(b) and UCC §§ 3-201 et seq. to negotiate the cashier's checks. In such case, bank was not negligent in performing customer's orders under rule that bank will be protected if it pays without indorsement as long as payee actually receives money ordered by drawer to be paid. Swan Air Conditioning Co. v. Crest Constr. Corp., 568 P.2d 1330 (Okla. Ct. App. 1977).

Notwithstanding that transferor of notes was a holder, bank that took several unindorsed notes as collateral for loan did not acquire status of holder under UCC § 3-201, which provides that transfer of instrument vests in transferee such rights as transferor had, since statute also distinguishes between mere transfer and negotiation and provides that negotiation conferring holder status occurs only when indorsement is made. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Chess, 58 Cal. App. 3d 555 (2d Dist. 1976).

In action by bank against drawer of check deposited with it, where signature of payee as purported indorser was forged and where below it was added signature of another entity, which was authorized signature, forged signature of payee was inoperative to make bank holder nor did presumably valid second signature convert order paper to bearer paper. Sumiton Bank v. Funding Sys. Leasing Corp., 512 F.2d 774 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

Where note pledged to bank was never indorsed as required by §§ 3-201(3) and 3-202(2), bank was not holder in due course but was simply bona fide assignee for value and without notice. Lane v. Midwest Bancshares Corp., 337 F. Supp. 1200 (E.D. Ark. 1972).

16. —Ownership rights absent indorsement.

In action by corporation and individual plaintiffs, who were sole shareholders of such corporation, to recover on dishonored check made out to individual plaintiffs by one who represented defendant buyers of plaintiff corporation, where (1) plaintiffs, after being informed by defendants that check would not be honored, indorsed check to second corporation with notation, "for funds advanced," (2) second corporation indorsed check to bank for deposit only and sent check to bank for collection, (3) bank, after indorsing and sending check for collection, physically returned it after dishonor to second corporation, and (4) second corporation then physically returned it without indorsement to plaintiffs and assigned to plaintiffs all of second corporation's right, title, and interest therein, trial court properly held (1) that plaintiffs had standing to sue on check, even though they were not holders or transferees for value, since transfers specified in UCC § 3-201(1) are not limited to transfers for value, and (2) that since plaintiffs, although transferees without indorsement, proved transaction by which they had acquired check from holder, they therefore acquired rights of a holder and were entitled, on check's production, to presumption of entitlement to recovery under UCC § 3-307(2) because defendants did not establish defense to recovery. Perry & Greer, Inc. v. Manning, 282 Or. 25, 576 P.2d 791 (1978).

Final clause of UCC § 3-201(3), which provides that until instrument is indorsed there is no presumption that transferee is its owner, is intended to make clear that transferee without indorsement of order instrument is not holder of such instrument and thus is not aided by presumption, provided by UCC § 3-307(2), that holder of instrument is entitled to recover thereon. In such case, terms of obligation do not run to transferee without indorsement, and he must account for his possession of the unindorsed paper by proving transaction through which he acquired it (where transferee of two promissory notes testified only as to some of the circumstances under which she acquired possession of notes, and court ordered new trial of action). Smathers v. Smathers, 34 N.C. App. 724, 239 S.E.2d 637 (1977).

Although, under UCC § 3-201, holder of instrument payable to his order may transfer it for value without endorsing it, mere possession of unendorsed instrument is not prima facie evidence of ownership; thus, if face of instrument indicates title is in any person other than possessor, burden would be on possessor to prove his ownership by a valid transfer. N.E. England Assocs. v. Davis, 333 So. 2d 696 (La. App. 1976).

A transferee who has neglected to obtain the indorsement necessary to make him a holder may enforce a note, foreclose on collateral, and obtain a deficiency judgment against the debtor. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

17. —Presumption of ownership.

In action to determine whether two certificates of deposit should be included in estate of decedent, certificates of deposit were not negotiable under UCC § 3-104 where there were neither payable to order nor to bearer on their face; certificates of deposit were governed by UCC pursuant to UCC § 3-805 where they satisfied all attributes of negotiable instrument except words of negotiability; cousin of decedent was entitled to one of certificates of deposit where decedent had indorsed it in blank and physically delivered it to him, thereby creating presumption of valid and intentional delivery under UCC § 3-201 of inter vivos gift, and where this presumption was not overcome by evidence that periodic interest payments which accrued on certificate continued to be deposited into separate savings account belonging to decedent. Rand v. Moore, 414 So. 2d 885 (Miss. 1981).

A decedent's indorsement in blank on the back of a certificate of deposit combined with physical delivery to his cousin created a presumption of a valid and intentional delivery under §§ 75-3-201 and 75-3-805, which presumption was not overcome by evidence that the periodic interest payments accruing on the certificate continued to be deposited into separate savings accounts belonging to the decedent. Rand v. Moore, 414 So. 2d 885 (Miss. 1981).

Title—that is, the ownership rights—to a negotiable instrument generally does not pass, as between the immediate parties, until there is a manual or actually authorized delivery of the instrument. However, where a negotiable instrument is no longer in the possession of a person whose signature appears thereon, a valid and intentional delivery by that person is presumed until the contrary is proved; holding that check payable to deceased, which deceased before committing suicide indorsed in blank and placed on table (in apartment that she shared with plaintiff) beside handwritten note in which she bequeathed all her possessions to plaintiff, had been validly delivered to plaintiff, since deceased plainly intended to give check to plaintiff and had expected that he would find it on table where she left it). Scherer v. Hyland, 153 N.J. Super. 521, 380 A.2d 704 (1976), aff'd, 75 N.J. 127, 380 A.2d 698 (1977).

§ 75-3-205. Special indorsement; blank indorsement; anomalous indorsement.

(a) If an indorsement is made by the holder of an instrument, whether payable to an identified person or payable to bearer, and the indorsement identifies a person to whom it makes the instrument payable, it is a “special indorsement.” When specially indorsed, an instrument becomes payable to the identified person and may be negotiated only by the indorsement of that person. The principles stated in Section 75-3-110 apply to special indorsements.

(b) If an indorsement is made by the holder of an instrument and it is not a special indorsement, it is a “blank indorsement.” When indorsed in blank, an instrument becomes payable to bearer and may be negotiated by transfer of possession alone until specially indorsed.

(c) The holder may convert a blank indorsement that consists only of a signature into a special indorsement by writing, above the signature of the indorser, words identifying the person to whom the instrument is made payable.

(d) “Anomalous indorsement” means an indorsement made by a person who is not the holder of the instrument. An anomalous indorsement does not affect the manner in which the instrument may be negotiated.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER
UCC § 75-3-204.

11. In general.

Under UCC § 3-204(2), promissory notes originally made payable to order of specified payee became, on payee's in blank indorsement of notes, payable to bearer and negotiable by delivery alone. Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F. Supp. 1108 (S.D.N.Y. 1978), remanded, 607 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In action by bank against drawer of check deposited with it, where signature of payee as purported indorser was forged and where below it was added signature of another entity, which was authorized signature, forged signature of payee was inoperative to make bank holder nor did presumably valid second signature convert order paper to bearer paper. Sumiton Bank v. Funding Sys. Leasing Corp., 512 F.2d 774 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

Stapling endorsement to checks was permanent attachment so that it became "a part thereof" within meaning of UCC § 3-202(2) and was sufficient to make assignee of checks holder thereof where checks were endorsed to assignee by name, thus qualifying as special endorsement, where subject endorsement was typed on two legal size sheets of paper, and it would have been physically impossible to place all of this language on two small checks, and where endorsement was affixed by stapling it to checks. Lamson v.

Commercial Credit Corp., 187 Colo. 382, 531 P.2d 966 (1975).

Where payee of cashier's check specially endorsed check to order of specified corporation and individual, where endorsement of individual was forged, and where collecting bank accepted check and credited it to account of endorsee company, collecting bank could not stand in shoes of either holder or holder in due course, since endorsement of individual endorser was forged, and it was liable to owner of cashier's check (i. e., purchaser of check) under UCC § 3-419(1)(c) for conversion, notwithstanding fact that it placed funds received into account of corporate endorser. Tubin v. Rabin, 382 F. Supp. 193 (N.D. Tex. 1974), supplemented, 389 F. Supp. 787 (N.D. Tex. 1974), aff'd, 533 F.2d 255 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976).

Party to whom presentment was made of check bearing blank rubber stamp endorsement, not restricted to "for deposit only" had right to deliver cash to party making presentment instead of depositing proceeds of check in endorser's account, since blank endorsement constitutes authorized endorsement under UCC § 3-204. Palmer & Ray Dental Supply of Abilene, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 477 S.W.2d 954 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

Where plaintiff's employee made deposits for it at defendant bank but instead of depositing checks at issue she drew cash on them and did not account to plaintiff for such money, blank rubber stamp indorsement of plaintiff affixed to each of checks constituted authorized indorsement, relieving bank of liability for conversion. Palmer & Ray Dental Supply of Abilene, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 477 S.W.2d 954 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

Authorized representative of payee-hospital indorsed note without specifying to whom or to whose order instrument was payable; held, mere delivery is sufficient to constitute transferee holder thereof and to make transfer valid negotiation. Davtian v. Barsamian, 106 R.I. 185, 256 A.2d 510 (1969).

In a case where forged indorsements were placed upon a check, it was said that the forged indorsements were wholly inoperative as the signatures of the payee under §§ 3-404(1) and 1-201(43), and that this was so both as to restrictive indorsements for deposit under § 3-205(c) and as to indorsements in blank under § 3-204(2). Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 345 Mass. 1, 184 N.E.2d 358, 99 A.L.R.2d 628 (1962).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

12. In general.

Where an employee indorsed a check payable to his order, without any restriction or limitation, and subsequently lost the check and a stop payment was ordered by the bank, plaintiff who cashed the check and received the full amount in good faith, was entitled to the amount as against the employee who failed to restrict an indorsement. American Book Co. v. White Sys. of Jackson, 223 Miss. 510, 78 So. 2d 582 (1955).

If it should be ascertained, even after payment of a bill, that any of the indorsements are forged, the drawee can recover back the amount of the bill from the person to whom he paid it; and so each preceding indorser may recover from the person who indorsed the bill to him. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

An indorser, whether for accommodation or for value, guarantees the genuineness of previous indorsements upon a check which he negotiates. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where the proof showed that payee's name on depositor's check was forged, and that defendant indorsed same for accommodation, drawee bank was entitled to recover amount thereof from defendant, notwithstanding that at the time suit was filed such bank had not reimbursed its depositor. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

While a bank is required at its peril to know the signature of its depositor, it is not required to know the signature of the payee named in a check of its depositor, who is unknown to the bank and with whose signature it is not familiar, and under no duty to become familiar. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

§ 75-3-206. Restrictive indorsement.

(a) An indorsement limiting payment to a particular person or otherwise prohibiting further transfer or negotiation of the instrument is not effective to prevent further transfer or negotiation of the instrument.

(b) An indorsement stating a condition to the right of the indorsee to receive payment does not affect the right of the indorsee to enforce the instrument. A person paying the instrument or taking it for value or collection may disregard the condition, and the rights and liabilities of that person are not affected by whether the condition has been fulfilled.

(c) If an instrument bears an indorsement (i) described in Section 75-4-201(b), or (ii) in blank or to a particular bank using the words "for deposit," "for collection," or other words indicating a purpose of having the instrument collected by a bank for the indorser or for a particular account, the following rules apply:

(1) A person, other than a bank, who purchases the instrument when so indorsed converts the instrument unless the amount paid for the instrument is received by the indorser or applied consistently with the indorsement.

(2) A depository bank that purchases the instrument or takes it for collection when so indorsed converts the instrument unless the amount paid by the bank with respect to the instrument is received by the indorser or applied consistently with the indorsement.

(3) A payor bank that is also the depository bank or that takes the instrument for immediate payment over the counter from a person other than a collecting bank converts the instrument unless the proceeds of the instrument are received by the indorser or applied consistently with the indorsement.

(4) Except as otherwise provided in paragraph (3), a payor bank or intermediary bank may disregard the indorsement and is not liable if the proceeds of the instrument are not received by the indorser or applied consistently with the indorsement.

(d) Except for an indorsement covered by subsection (c), if an instrument bears an indorsement using words to the effect that payment is to be made to the indorsee as agent, trustee, or other fiduciary for the benefit of the indorser or another person, the following rules apply:

(1) Unless there is notice of breach of fiduciary duty as provided in Section 75-3-307, a person who purchases the instrument from the indorsee or takes the instrument from the indorsee for collection or payment may pay the proceeds of payment or the value given for the instrument to the indorsee without regard to whether the indorsee violates a fiduciary duty to the indorser.

(2) A subsequent transferee of the instrument or person who pays the instrument is neither given notice nor otherwise affected by the restriction in the indorsement unless the transferee or payor knows that the fiduciary dealt with the instrument or its proceeds in breach of fiduciary duty.

(e) The presence on an instrument of an indorsement to which this section applies does not prevent a purchaser of the instrument from becoming a holder in due course of the instrument unless the purchaser is a converter under subsection (c) or has notice or knowledge of breach of fiduciary duty as stated in subsection (d).

(f) In an action to enforce the obligation of a party to pay the instrument, the obligor has a defense if payment would violate an indorsement to which this section applies and the payment is not permitted by this section.

11. In general.

The drawer of a check may sue a depository bank which accepts the check and pays out the proceeds in violation of a forged restrictive indorsement based on either money had and received or conversion where the indorsement, although forged by an employee of the drawer who supplied the drawer with the name of the payee intending the latter to have no interest in the instrument (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-405, subd [1], par [c]), is nonetheless "effective", since in those cases where the forgery is effective, the depository bank may be deemed to have dealt with valuable property of the drawer, inasmuch as the check is both a valuable instrument and a valid instruction to the drawee to honor the check and debit the drawer's account accordingly; additionally, only a depository bank may be held liable for payment in disregard of a restrictive indorsement (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-419, subd [4]; § 3-206, subd [2]) since that bank is in the best position to ensure that the restriction is satisfied. Underpinning & Found. Constructors, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 46 N.Y.2d 459, 386 N.E.2d 1319 (1979).

Under the common law, a collecting bank as well as a depository bank when presented with restrictive indorsements on checks has a duty to inquire and its failure to do so subjects it to liability, and failure to conform to the standard of care set forth in Section 3-206 of the Uniform Commercial Code, which enjoins a depository bank to pay or apply value given for restrictively indorsed checks according to their tenor, is indicative of bad faith. Accordingly, a complaint which alleges that checks restrictively indorsed were accepted by defendant bank and the proceeds were applied to the credit of accounts other than those indicated in the indorsements, an employee of plaintiff having stolen the checks, restrictively indorsed them and then deposited them to the employee's or his confederate's accounts with the defendant bank, states a cause of action. Underpinning & Found. Constructors, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 61 A.D.2d 628 (1st Dep't 1978), aff'd, 46 N.Y.2d 459, 414 N.Y.S.2d 298, 386 N.E.2d 1319 (1979).

Under UCC § 3-206(3) and other sections of Uniform Commercial Code dealing with restrictive indorsements, depository bank that does not apply instrument consistently with restrictive indorsement thereon is liable in conversion, and any defense afforded by UCC § 3-419(3) would not be available to such bank. C.S. Bowen Co. v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 36 Md. App. 26, 373 A.2d 30 (1977).

Writing which was physically attached to note and which purported to be "for collection purposes" constituted restrictive indorsement under UCC § 3-205. Booker v. Everhart, 33 N.C. App. 1, 234 S.E.2d 46 (1977), review allowed, 293 N.C. 159, 236 S.E.2d 702 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 294 N.C. 146, 240 S.E.2d 360 (1978).

While a postal domestic money order is similar in many respects to a negotiable instrument, it is not so similar in all respects because the restriction contained in such a money order that "more than one indorsement is prohibited by law" is contrary to § 3-301 of the instant chapter relative to the transfer and negotiation of an instrument by a holder, and it is not in harmony with § 3-206(1) which provides that "No restrictive indorsement prevents further transfer or negotiation of the instrument". United States v. First Nat'l Bank, 263 F. Supp. 298 (D. Mass. 1967).

In a case where forged indorsements were placed upon a check, it was said that the forged indorsements were wholly inoperative as the signature of the payee under §§ 30404(1) and 1-201(43), and that this was so both as to restrictive indorsements for deposit under § 3-205(c) and as to indorsements in blank under § 3-204(2). Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 345 Mass. 1, 184 N.E.2d 358, 99 A.L.R.2d 628 (1962).

White Sys. of Jackson*, 223 Miss. 510, 78 So. 2d 582 (1955).

Where a check was genuine and was duly indorsed in blank by the payee named therein, and the check was negotiable even though in possession of a person not entitled thereto, and innocent purchaser for value becomes a holder in due course. Bruce v. State, 217 Miss. 368, 64 So. 2d 332 (1953).

chaser for value becomes a holder in due course. Bruce v. State, 217 Miss. 368, 64 So. 2d 332 (1953).

§ 75-3-207. Reacquisition.

Reacquisition of an instrument occurs if it is transferred to a former holder, by negotiation or otherwise. A former holder who reacquires the instrument may cancel indorsements made after the reacquirer first became a holder of the instrument. If the cancellation causes the instrument to be payable to the reacquirer or to bearer, the reacquirer may negotiate the instrument. An indorser whose indorsement is canceled is discharged, and the discharge is effective against any subsequent holder.

Promissory notes, executed by closely held corporation and endorsed by stockholders of corporation, were not discharged when they were acquired from payee bank by executor of deceased endorser; among other things, instruments were acquired by executor, not be deceased endorser, and executor was, therefore, not prior party to instrument. Eikel v. Bristow Corp., 529 S.W.2d 795 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Where payee of check endorsed it to third party but, instead of transferring check to endorsee, cancelled endorsement and then deposited check in her own account, depository bank, as collecting bank, was under no duty to inquire as to deleted endorsement. Handley v. Horak, 82 Misc. 2d 692 (1975).

Where payee of check from insurer endorsed check to his physician, physician endorsed check but then gave it back to payee for purpose of returning check to insurer on basis that it was of lesser amount than physician felt insurer was obligated to pay under payee's policy, and where payee crossed out physician's restrictive endorsement, re-endorsed check and presented it to bank for payment, bank was not liable in conversion as depository bank for failing to inquire further into title to check. Schoonmaker v. Merchants Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 81 Misc. 2d 967 (1974).

Where several banks orally agreed with peanut company to pay as presented company's checks to growers for peanut purchases, company got possession of checks when banks were reimbursed, not at later time when company, upon discovering forged indorsements on checks, paid grower-payee; and by getting grower-payee to indorse check already in company's possession, and which had ceased to be negotiable instrument, company did not relinquish its claim against bank for wrongfully paying check bearing forged indorsement; to the contrary, company's conduct went to prove damage which company suffered from bank's paying to another its check intended for grower, but of which grower never became holder. Columbian Peanut Co. v. Frosteg, 472 F.2d 476 (5th Cir. Ga. 1973), reh'g denied,

The holder of a note may waive the right to foreclose for past defaults in payment (see UCC § 3-301) if he has regularly accepted late payments and not notified the debtor that future defaults will provide the basis for foreclosure proceedings. Rutherford v. Rutherford, 573 S.W.2d 299 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

In suit to recover on two promissory notes in plaintiff's possession, plaintiff was not "holder" of notes within meaning of UCC § 1-201(20) where notes were not drawn, issued, or indorsed to her or to her order, or to bearer or in blank, and trial court erred in according plaintiff rights of holder under UCC § 3-301. Smathers v. Smathers, 34 N.C. App. 724, 239 S.E.2d 637 (1977).

Assignee of note given for purchase of land in interstate transaction was not holder in due course where facts known to assignee at time of assignment, i.e., apparent multiple violations of Interstate Land Sales Act (15 USCA 1703(b)), should have alerted assignee to possible irregularities in making of note. Stewart v. Thornton, 116 Ariz. 107, 568 P.2d 414 (1977).

Possessor of promissory notes, which were made payable to payee with name different from name of possessor and which were unendorsed by named payee, was entitled to recover on notes pursuant to UCC § 3-301, even though possessor was not a holder under UCC § 1-201(20), where evidence at trial established that name of payee was former name of possessor. Lawson v. Finance Am. Private Brands, Inc., 537 S.W.2d 483 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Joint payee, who in good faith takes instrument for value, without notice of any dishonor or defense, is entitled to enforce instrument against maker

While a postal domestic money order is similar in many respects to a negotiable instrument it is not so similar in all respects because the restriction contained in such a money order that "more than one indorsement is prohibited by law" is contrary to § 3-301 of the instant chapter relative to the transfer and negotiation of an instrument by a holder, and it is not in harmony with § 3-206(1) which provides that "No restrictive indorsement prevents further transfer or negotiation of the instrument". United States v. First Nat'l Bank, 263 F. Supp. 298 (D. Mass. 1967).

A bank which cashed a check endorsed in blank by the payee by crediting the payee's account and by the delivery of cash was entitled to summary judgment in an action against the maker who had issued a stop payment order to the drawee bank. Although the drawer of a check has the right to stop payment of it at any time before it has been certified or paid by the drawee, the drawer remains liable, unless he has a defense good against the holder. Tidwell v. Bank of Tifton, 115 Ga. App. 555, 155 S.E.2d 451 (1967).

Where a promissory note is made payable to one named therein as attorney for plaintiffs but not endorsed to them by the attorney, plaintiffs may enforce payment as holders of the note. Bennett v. Cannon, 114 Ga. App. 479, 151 S.E.2d 828 (1966).

A bank accepting a check from the payee for deposit, crediting the amount thereof to the payee's account and permitting him to withdraw the full amount thereof prior to notice of dishonor is a holder of the check, taking for value, and entitled to recover from the drawer thereon. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

12. Requirements for action.

In order to show right to summary judgment in suit on promissory note in which the defendant has made a general denial, the plaintiff must establish that he is the present legal owner or holder of such note. Under UCC § 1-201(20), a "holder" is the person in possession of a note drawn, issued, or indorsed to him, or to his order or to bearer, or in blank. And under UCC

§ 3-301, even if the holder is not the owner of the note, he may still enforce payment thereof in his own name. Taylor v. Fred Clark Felt Co., 567 S.W.2d 863 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978), ref. n.r.e. (Oct. 25, 1978).

Depository bank's assignee did not have possession of check at time of commencement of action against drawer for amount which depository bank had paid from payee's account against credit created by deposit of drawer's check before that check had been dishonored; held, assignee was not "holder" and could not maintain action against drawer, even though, after commencement of action, payee had given depository bank check and, prior to commencement of action, payee had assigned partial interest in proceeds of check to depository bank. Investment Serv. Co. v. Martin Bros. Container & Timber Prods. Corp., 255 Or. 192, 465 P.2d 868 (1970).

13. Ownership.

Under UCC § 3-301, "ownership" of notes is not indispensable to "holdership" (holding that original payees of two notes were holders under UCC § 1-201(20) because they still had possession of notes). In re Cooke, 37 N.C. App. 575, 246 S.E.2d 801 (1978).

Although a holder does not become the holder in due course of an instrument by purchase of it at a judicial sale or by taking it under legal process, one with the rights of a holder in due course, and who has not lost such rights, does not diminish his status by purchasing an instrument at a judicial sale merely because he could not by virtue of such purchase alone become a due course holder. Finance Co. of Am. v. Wilson, 115 Ga. App. 280, 154 S.E.2d 459 (1967).

A bank which accepts a check for collection and, for that purpose, acts as its depositor's agent is also a holder of the check, and the fact that it does not own the item is immaterial insofar as its status as a holder is concerned. Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Fort Lee Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 89 N.J. Super. 43, 213 A.2d 315 (L. Div. 1965).

14. Guarantee.

Where bank issued cashier's check to individual who had personally guaranteed certain notes which were payable to borrowers from bank and were held by bank as collateral security for loans made to such borrowers, and where guarantor subsequently became bankrupt, bank was, at very least, transferee of unindorsed order instruments which bankrupt had personally guaranteed and, therefore, by virtue of proof that it took notes in proper transactions with holders thereof and "shelter" provisions of UCC § 3-201, bank succeeded to rights of transferors of holders of instruments, to full extent of its security interest; under UCC §§ 3-301 and 3-603(1), holder of instrument, whether or not true owner, could enforce payment thereon and discharge paying party, and thus, if bank could demand payment from guarantor when due, bank was entitled to file in its own right proof of claim in bankruptcy and to assert setoff against cashier's check. In re Johnson, 552 F.2d 1072 (4th Cir. Va. 1977).

Where defendants executed promissory note which was delivered to bank, note was guaranteed by Small Business Administration, defendants defaulted on payments under note, and note was assigned in accord with guarantee agreement to S.B.A., which made payment to bank of 50 per cent of unpaid balance of note, fact that government did not own entire equitable interest in note did not prevent government from maintaining suit on note as its legal owner and holder. United States v. Sellers, 487 F.2d 1268 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

In action by guarantor of renewal and extension promissory notes against maker, fact that guarantor was not holder in due course, because he took notes with notice that they were overdue, did not, under UCC § 3-302, prevent him as holder of notes under UCC § 1-201(20) from enforcing payment in his own name under UCC § 3-301. Blake v. Coates, 292 Ala. 351, 294 So. 2d 433 (1974).

§ 75-3-302. Holder in due course.

(a) Subject to subsection (c) and Section 75-3-106(d), “holder in due course” means the holder of an instrument if:

(1) The instrument when issued or negotiated to the holder does not bear such apparent evidence of forgery or alteration or is not otherwise so irregular or incomplete as to call into question its authenticity; and

(2) The holder took the instrument (i) for value, (ii) in good faith, (iii) without notice that the instrument is overdue or has been dishonored or that there is an uncured default with respect to payment of another instrument issued as part of the same series, (iv) without notice that the instrument contains an unauthorized signature or has been altered, (v) without notice of any claim to the instrument described in Section 75-3-306, and (vi) without notice that any party has a defense or claim in recoupment described in Section 75-3-305(a).

(b) Notice of discharge of a party, other than discharge in an insolvency proceeding, is not notice of a defense under subsection (a), but discharge is effective against a person who became a holder in due course with notice of the discharge. Public filing or recording of a document does not of itself constitute notice of a defense, claim in recoupment, or claim to the instrument.

(c) Except to the extent a transferor or predecessor in interest has rights as a holder in due course, a person does not acquire rights of a holder in due course of an instrument taken (i) by legal process or by purchase in an execution, bankruptcy, or creditor’s sale or similar proceeding, (ii) by purchase as part of a bulk transaction not in ordinary course of business of the transferor, or (iii) as the successor in interest to an estate or other organization.

(d) If, under Section 75-3-303(a)(1), the promise of performance that is the consideration for an instrument has been partially performed, the holder may assert rights as a holder in due course of the instrument only to the fraction of the amount payable under the instrument equal to the value of the partial performance divided by the value of the promised performance.

(e) If (i) the person entitled to enforce an instrument has only a security interest in the instrument and (ii) the person obliged to pay the instrument has a defense, claim in recoupment, or claim to the instrument that may be asserted against the person who granted the security interest, the person entitled to enforce the instrument may assert rights as a holder in due course only to an amount payable under the instrument which, at the time of enforcement of the instrument, does not exceed the amount of the unpaid obligation secured.

(f) To be effective, notice must be received at a time and in a manner that gives a reasonable opportunity to act on it.

(g) This section is subject to any law limiting status as a holder in due course in particular classes of transactions.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-302.

11. In general.

Bank became holder in due course of instrument when it took properly executed check from payee, for value, in good faith, and without notice that there was any defense against it or claim to it by any other person. People v. Lombardi, 13 Ill. App. 3d 754, 301 N.E.2d 70 (1st Dist. 1973).

A collecting bank may be a holder in due course when it takes an instrument for value, in good faith and without notice that it is overdue or has been dishonored or of any defense against it or claim to it on the part of any person. Central Bank & Trust Co. v. First Northwest Bank, 332 F. Supp. 1166 (E.D. Mo. 1971), aff'd, 458 F.2d 511 (8th Cir. Mo. 1972).

A bank's continuing status as a collecting agent does not prevent it from becoming a holder in due course if the bank satisfies the requirements of UCC § 3-302. Waltham Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Flett, 353 Mass. 696, 234 N.E.2d 739 (1968).

A holder through a holder in due course has all the rights of a holder in due course. Brock v. Adams, 79 N.M. 17, 439 P.2d 234 (1968).

Where a purchaser of negotiable securities through a broker has acquired the protected status of a holder in due course, the broker has complied with his contractual obligation of conveying good title to the buyer. White v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 90 N.J. Super. 565, 218 A.2d 655 (L. Div. 1966).

12. Scope.

Agreement to pay "within the next 60 days the sum of $5,000 from the jobs now under construction" did not contain an unconditional promise to pay and therefore was not a negotiable instrument. Webb & Sons v. Hamilton, 30 A.D.2d 597 (3d Dep't 1968).

13. —Trade acceptances and letters of credit.

Bank issuing letter of credit may be enjoined from honoring demand for payment pursuant to UCC § 5-114 even where beneficiary of letter of credit took letter in good faith under UCC § 3-302 since § 302 protects one who takes draft or demand pursuant to letter of credit rather than beneficiary of letter of credit who issues demand. United Technologies Corp. v. Citibank, 469 F. Supp. 473 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

The purchaser of trade acceptances for value, before their due dates and in the regular course of business, and without notice of dishonor or any defenses, is a holder in due course within the meaning of this section. Equitable Dist. Corp. v. Fischer, 12 Pa. D. & C.2d 326 (1957).

14. Taking for value.

Bank which took note for value, in good faith, and without notice of any defenses that maker might have was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1) and, under UCC § 3-305(2), took instrument free from maker's defense of lack of consideration. Worthey v. First State Bank, 573 S.W.2d 279 (Tex. Civ. App. Waco 1978).

Where note, executed as separate document along with conditional sales contract, was assigned to bank for valuable consideration and bank sued maker for balance due on note, court held (1) that trial court erred in holding that note and conditional sales contract had merged, thus rendering note nonnegotiable and causing bank not to be holder in due course; (2) that note satisfied requirements of negotiability under UCC § 3-104(1); (3) that under UCC § 3-119(2), negotiability of note was not affected by separate sales contract; and (4) that since bank had paid value in good faith for note on day it was executed and assignment of note had preceded any notice of claim about merchandise sold, bank was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1). Northwestern Bank v. Neal, 271 S.C. 544, 248 S.E.2d 585 (1978).

Allegations that company which was transferred in exchange for note had never made profit was not sufficient to establish that transfer of note was not for value within meaning of UCC § 3-302, since no facts were alleged relating to worth of company's assets, and allegations that holder of note required payment of substantial portion of note by transferor if maker defaulted, and further required that transferor's terms of transfer be concealed from maker, were insufficient to show that holder had "notice of fraud" within meaning of UCC § 1-201(25). Ritz v. Karstenson, 39 Ill. App. 3d 877, 350 N.E.2d 870 (2d Dist. 1976).

UCC § 4-208 provides for bank to acquire security interest in items presented for collection under certain circumstances; this security interest is considered to be "value" for purposes of becoming holder in due course of item, and if bank meets other requirements of UCC § 3-302 it can become holder in due course of "item and any accompanying documents or the proceeds of either." Commercial Dist. Corp. v. Milwaukee W. Bank, 61 Wis. 2d 671, 214 N.W.2d 33 (1974).

Indorsee of check drawn by insurer in settlement of claim for damage to automobile acquired for indorsee's use by gifts from his grandparents and as to which his mother was record title holder, did not take check "for value," either on theory that he had claim against insured for damage to car or personal property therein, or on theory that he intended to use amount of check for purchase of new car and made "irrevocable commitment to third person" therefor. Bennett v. United States Fid. & Guar. Co., 19 N.C. App. 66, 198 S.E.2d 33 (1973), cert. denied, 284 N.C. 121, 199 S.E.2d 659 (1973).

Nothing in the Uniform Commercial Code abrogates holder in due course status predicated on whether the acceptance preceded or succeeded acquisition of title to a draft. F & M Nat'l Bank v. Boardwalk Nat'l Bank, 101 N.J. Super. 528, 245 A.2d 35 (App. Div. 1968), certification denied, 52 N.J. 492, 246 A.2d 452 (1968).

An employee given a note for his wages is not a holder in due course. Lukens v. Goit, 430 P.2d 607 (Wyo. 1967).

Where seller, in consideration of receipt of cashier's checks aggregating $600,000, made actual physical delivery of certificates evidencing all of his stock in a corporation in escrow to be delivered to the purchaser when the seller had been relieved of his bank guarantees without anything further to be done on his part, the transfer was irrevocable for the only remaining act to complete delivery was solely within the power of the purchaser; and such delivery in escrow constituted an "irrevocable commitment" as provided in clause (c) of § 3-303, and the seller had taken the cashier's checks for value and was a "holder in due course." Crest Fin. Co. v. First State Bank, 37 Ill. 2d 243, 226 N.E.2d 369 (1967).

15. —Satisfaction of antecedent debt.

Where a bank, which under UCC § 3-202(1) was holder of note delivered to it with necessary endorsements of both copayees, took such note (1) "for value" under UCC §§ 3-302(1)(a) and 3-303(a) because it had taken it as collateral for loan to note's copayees, and (2) "in good faith" under UCC § 3-302(1)(b) and "without notice" under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) of any claims against note's copayees, court held (1) that bank was holder in due course of such note under UCC § 3-302(1), (2) that under UCC § 3-305(1), bank took note free from all claims to it by any person, and (3) that bank therefore was entitled to priority of payment over judgment creditor of note's copayees in situation where, prior to copayees' transfer of note to bank, judgment creditor of copayees had served writ of garnishment on maker of note. Bricks Unlimited, Inc. v. Agee, 672 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir. 1982).

When the holder of promissory notes assigned his interest therein as collateral to secure payment of a prior indebtedness, a sum less than the aggregate amount of the notes, and indorsed and delivered them to that creditor, he did not irrevocably divest himself of the ultimate right to all of the proceeds of the notes, but retained ownership of those proceeds not required to satisfy that indebtedness, and, therefore, the negotiation of all of the notes operated only as a partial assignment of the proceeds of the notes; the interest retained by him was capable of being transferred and, when it was transferred by another collateral assignment, the transferee acquired a valid security interest as to his residuary interest in the notes, which security interest was perfected by a subsequent delivery of the notes to it. Lipkowitz & Plaut v. Affrunti, 95 Misc. 2d 849 (1978).

Although antecedent claim may constitute value under UCC § 3-303(b), where no antecedent claim existed, holder of note (1) did not take instrument for value, (2) was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(a), and (3) held note subject to defense of lack of consideration. Quazzo v. Quazzo, 136 Vt. 107, 386 A.2d 638 (1978).

Where holder acquired series of notes from payee, became holder in due course thereof, and accelerated balance due after maker defaulted, but, after discussions between maker, payee, and holder, holder accepted payment partly in cash and partly by way of new note, payable to payee and indorsed over to holder, holder was not holder in due course with respect to new note and was subject to any claims or defenses against payee of which holder had knowledge prior to accepting new note; course of conduct surrounding issuance of new note did not constitute renewal of existing notes, but rather resulted in partial payment and novation with respect to balance due; holder in due course status under old notes disappeared with extinguishment of total debt represented thereby and holder's status with respect to new note was determined by circumstances existing at time it received delivery of new note. Lazere Fin. Corp. v. Crystal Mart, Inc., 78 Misc. 2d 379 (1974).

Attorneys who acquired note as payment for services performed by them for corporate payee could be holders in due course only to extent of amount of value of services performed; and in absence of evidence of value of such services, summary judgment for attorneys was error. Fernandez v. Cunningham, 268 So. 2d 166 (Fla. App. 1972).

Bank which accepted a cashier's check in payment of an antecedent debt would have been a holder in due course where it acted in good faith and without notice that the debtor had committed a fraud in securing the money represented by the check. Nicklaus v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., 258 F. Supp. 482 (E.D. Ark. 1965), aff'd, 369 F.2d 683 (8th Cir. Ark. 1966).

A bank accepting a forged check in payment of an antecedent debt in good faith and without notice of any infirmity in the instrument is a holder in due course. Citizens Bank v. National Bank of Commerce, 334 F.2d 257 (10th Cir. Okla. 1964).

An attorney to whom promissory notes were transferred by his client as a portion of a retainer for services to be performed in the future, and in payment for certain prior legal services the value of which was not disclosed, is not a purchaser for value and cannot be a holder in due course of the notes. Korzenik v. Supreme Radio, Inc., 27 Mass. App. Dec. 25 (1963), aff'd, 347 Mass. 309, 197 N.E.2d 702 (1964).

16. —Receipt of deposit and payment of checks by bank.

A bank which accepts a check from the payee for deposit, credits his account with the amount thereof and permits him to withdraw the full proceeds of the check prior to notice of its dishonor has given value for the check to the extent that it has a security interest in the item and thereupon becomes a holder in due course of the check. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

Under both the Negotiable Instruments Law and the Uniform Commercial Code a bank which received a deposit of two checks and paid checks drawn by the depositor on the total amount of these checks was a holder for value of the two deposited checks, notwithstanding the fact that they were deposited with the usual bank deposit slip reciting that the item was received by the bank for collection only. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., 161 F. Supp. 790 (D. Mass. 1958).

17. —Other banking transactions.

An award of summary judgment in favor of plaintiff is affirmed where defendant insurer delivered to its insured a draft drawn on itself and payable through its bank in an attempt to honor its apparent obligation under an automobile theft policy, which draft was payable also to plaintiff due to plaintiff's security interest in the insured vehicle, and plaintiff deposited the draft in its bank account after the insured indorsed the check over to plaintiff thereby extinguishing plaintiff's security interest in the vehicle, following which defendant stopped payment on the draft upon learning that its insured's claim was fraudulent, at which time plaintiff's account was debited with the amount of the dishonored draft and plaintiff demanded of the defendant payment of the draft. Since the check was drawn by the drawer on itself as drawee, payable through its bank, the bank was not authorized to pay the draft, but was merely designated as a collecting bank to present the draft to the drawer-drawee for payment (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-120), and because the draft was not drawn without recourse, and there was no drawee other than defendant itself who accepted responsibility for it, defendant remained liable thereon (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-413, subd [2]); although the draft was principally issued to the insured, plaintiff's name was added as payee only to protect its duly filed security interest in the insured vehicle, and upon issuance of the draft defendant acknowledged its insured's claim that the vehicle had been stolen, thus entitling plaintiff to rely upon that representation and to accept the draft as a holder in due course in payment and release of its lien on the vehicle, constituting the giving of value for the draft (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-302, subd [1]; § 3-303, subds [b], [c]); after defendant stopped payment on the draft it remained liable on it to plaintiff as a holder in due course. GMAC v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 67 A.D.2d 316 (4th Dep't 1979).

Where creditor bank, on date loan was due and after being informed by debtor that debtor would default, set off credit balances in debtor's accounts against amount of debt; where remittance check of debtor's customer, pursuant to prior agreement between debtor and bank, was taken by bank from debtor's post-office lockbox and indorsed and deposited in debtor's account; where after depositing such check, bank then exercised alleged right of setoff against it; and where customer then issued stop-payment order on check and bank sued customer for payment thereof, alleging that it had acquired holder-in-due-course status as to such check and that its right to receive payment was not affected by debtor's alleged failure to discharge contractual obligations to customer, (1) bank acted prematurely in setting off deposits in debtor's account on date loan was due; (2) although such premature setoff arguably became operative on following day, it did not determine issue as to whether bank was entitled to payment on check; (3) bank was mere holder of check under UCC § 1-201(20) and not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1), since it did not give value for check under UCC § 3-303(b) and UCC § 4-208(1); (4) failure to give value stemmed from fact that bank, after customer issued stop-payment order on check, reversed its provisional credit of check to debtor's account and thus reinstated that part of debtor's obligation against which such credit was set off; and (5) since bank did not give value for check and thus was not holder in due course, it could not recover on check. Marine Midland Bank-New York v. Graybar Elec. Co., 41 N.Y.2d 703, 363 N.E.2d 1139, 97 A.L.R.3d 1104 (1977).

Where defendant bank received check from plaintiff's employee, drawn by plaintiff and made payable to defendant, applied check to discharge employee's personal indebtedness to defendant, and released collateral for loan to employee, defendant gave value for checks, as defined in UCC § 3-302, by surrendering security for employee's indebtedness. Richardson Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 812 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e (Apr. 3, 1974).

Where the drawee of drafts maintained a checking account in a collector bank and made a check payable to the bank's order in purported payment of the drafts, which were stamped "paid" and surrendered to the drawee, delivery of the check constituted payment just as effectively as if cash had been given. The payment to the collecting bank was equivalent to payment of the owner of the instrument, a holder in due course. F & M Nat'l Bank v. Boardwalk Nat'l Bank, 101 N.J. Super. 528, 245 A.2d 35 (App. Div. 1968), certification denied, 52 N.J. 492, 246 A.2d 452 (1968).

Bank which permitted new president and sole stockholder of corporation to cash checks drawn payable to corporation, in derogation of corporate resolution on file with bank which only authorized officers to endorse checks for deposit and collection, was not a holder in due course, and was liable to creditors of bankrupt corporation for total amount of checks which it permitted sole stockholder to cash rather than deposit to corporation's account. Maley v. East Side Bank, 361 F.2d 393 (7th Cir. Ill. 1966).

18. Good faith and notice, generally.

Bank issuing letter of credit may be enjoined from honoring demand for payment pursuant to UCC § 5-114 even where beneficiary of letter of credit took letter in good faith under UCC § 3-302 since § 302 protects one who takes draft or demand pursuant to letter of credit rather than beneficiary of letter of credit who issues demand. United Technologies Corp. v. Citibank, 469 F. Supp. 473 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

Bank which took note for value, in good faith, and without notice of any defenses that maker might have was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1) and, under UCC § 3-305(2), took instrument free from maker's defense of lack of consideration. Worthey v. First State Bank, 573 S.W.2d 279 (Tex. Civ. App. Waco 1978).

Where note, executed as separate document along with conditional sales contract, was assigned to bank for valuable consideration and bank sued maker for balance due on note, court held (1) that trial court erred in holding that note and conditional sales contract had merged, thus rendering note nonnegotiable and causing bank not to be holder in due course; (2) that note satisfied requirements of negotiability under UCC § 3-104(1); (3) that under UCC § 3-119(2), negotiability of note was not affected by separate sales contract; and (4) that since bank had paid value in good faith for note on day it was executed and assignment of note had preceded any notice of claim about merchandise sold, bank was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1). Northwestern Bank v. Neal, 271 S.C. 544, 248 S.E.2d 585 (1978).

Definition of "good faith" as used in § 3-302(1) does not require that, in addition to being honest, holder must exercise due care. Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

Negligence goes to notice requirement for being a holder in due course and not to good faith requirement. Industrial Nat'l

Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

Nothing in Code definition of "good faith" suggests that, in addition to being honest, holder of negotiable instrument must exercise due care to be in good faith; and bank did act in good faith, and was holder in due course, although it failed to exercise ordinary care by violating its own rule of management when its teller cashed checks in question without managerial approval. Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

Assuming that notes were acquired by holder after learning from maker of alleged express agreement, not reflected on notes, that notes were not to be discounted, actual knowledge by holder as to alleged agreement, although it might have aroused suspicion, did not amount to lack of good faith in acquisition of notes. Factors & Note Buyers, Inc. v. Green Lane, Inc., 102 N.J. Super. 43, 245 A.2d 223 (L. Div. 1968).

19. —Particular applications.

A credit corporation did not meet the requirement that a holder in due course must take "in good faith," and "without notice ... of any defenses or claims on the part of any person" where the credit corporation and the seller of the equipment involved had interlocking directorates. Massey-Ferguson, Inc. v. Evans, 406 So. 2d 15 (Miss. 1981).

Where note, executed as separate document along with conditional sales contract, was assigned to bank for valuable consideration and bank sued maker for balance due on note, court held (1) that trial court erred in holding that note and conditional sales contract had merged, thus rendering note nonnegotiable and causing bank not to be holder in due course; (2) that note satisfied requirements of negotiability under UCC § 3-104(1); (3) that under UCC § 3-119(2), negotiability of note was not affected by separate sales contract; and (4) that since bank had paid value in good faith for note on day it was executed and assignment of note had preceded any notice of claim about merchandise sold, bank was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1).

Northwestern Bank v. Neal, 271 S.C. 544, 248 S.E.2d 585 (1978).

In action by cashing bank to recover from drawer and indorser of two checks drawn on insufficient funds, where defendant indorser stole, completed, and cashed at plaintiff bank (where indorser was customer) two checks which had been signed in blank by defendant drawer and delivered by drawer to her husband, and where plaintiff bank had no notice of any defenses against, or claims to, such checks by any person, plaintiff under UCC § 3-302 was holder in due course of such checks and could, under UCC § 3-407 and UCC § 3-115, enforce them as completed. Central State Bank v. Kilroy, 57 A.D.2d 940 (2d Dep't 1977).

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; and (3) where bank endorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank and gave owner check payable to corporation for remaining proceeds which owner deposited in corporation's account, bank in accepting buyer's cashier's checks and dealing with proceeds thereof did not violate good faith requirement of UCC § 3-302(1)(b)-and thus was holder in due course as to such checks and not liable to buyer for fraud and conversion in sale transaction-because (1) checks were valid cashier's checks that showed no sign of alteration or irregularity; (2) although transaction was restructured from what buyer had expected by bank's not becoming party to sale contract, buyer accepted such risk by turning over cashier's checks to owner-seller; (3) there was nothing inherently irregular or suspicious in bank's method of handling such checks and proceeds thereof; (4) bank was not aware of understanding between buyer and owner-seller and did not sign sale contract because bank had nothing to sell; and (5) both trial court's findings and record on appeal did not support buyer's contention that bank had failed to comply with definition of good faith in UCC § 1-201(19) by not being honest in fact in its conduct in sale transaction. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

Where collecting bank had paid out money on forged check by permitting withdrawals from fictitious account, credit allowed for check in fictitious account had been withdrawn within meaning of § 4-208, so that collecting bank was holder for value. Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Hampton State Bank, 497 S.W.2d 80 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 10, 1973).

Where record contained no evidence tending to show that collecting bank in accepting forged check for deposit and permitting withdrawal of funds from fictitious account connived with forger or had any reason to believe that check was not genuine, there was no evidence tending to establish bank's lack of good faith, even if such conduct constituted failure to exercise ordinary care or even gross negligence. Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Hampton State Bank, 497 S.W.2d 80 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 10, 1973).

Where person who presented check to collecting bank did not have authority to negotiate check, collecting bank could not become holder of check based upon unauthorized endorsement, and hence could not become holder in due course. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

Although the makers of notes had been induced to borrow money from the plaintiff bank by fraudulent representations of a bank officer, where those representations were not chargeable to the bank, the bank took the instruments as a holder in due course, subject only to the defense of fraud as to the nature of the instrument. City Nat'l Bank v. Vanderboom, 290 F. Supp. 592 (W.D. Ark. 1968), aff'd, 422 F.2d 221 (8th Cir. Ark. 1970), cert. denied, 399 U.S. 905, 90 S. Ct. 2196, 26 L. Ed. 2d 560 (1970).

Where a bank accepted a check naming its depositor as payee and gave instant credit to the deposit by acceptance of a second check drawn by its depositor on its account with the bank in payment of a note simultaneously returned to the depositor, and the bank had taken the check in good faith without notice of any defense against it or claim to it on the part of any person, or without notice of dishonor; the bank was the holder in due course and had acquired a security interest in the check. Waltham Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Flett, 353 Mass. 696, 234 N.E.2d 739 (1968).

Transferee of negotiable note did not take in good faith and was not holder in due course, where transferee was finance company which was closely connected with dealer whose paper it bought, furnishing form of sale contract and note for use by dealer. American Plan Corp. v. Woods, 16 Ohio App. 2d 1, 240 N.E.2d 886 (1968).

Where a minor purchased an automobile from a friend, agreeing to give the latter a check as part payment, and the friend directed the minor to indorse and deliver the check to a motor company as down payment on an automobile for the friend, the motor company, having received the instrument by negotiation from the friend for value, in good faith, and without notice that it was overdue or had been dishonored or that there was any defense against it, was a subsequent holder in due course. The fact that the check was not manually transferred from the minor to the friend and then to the motor company was immaterial; constructive delivery being sufficient. Snyder v. Town Hill Motors, Inc., 193 Pa. Super. 578, 165 A.2d 293 (1960).

20. —Banking transactions.

In action by cashing bank to recover on check on which payment was subsequently stopped, where check was made payable to named payee as payment for cattle-feeding contract between payee and drawer, another bank holding perfected security interests in all of payee's property called in secured loan to payee and directed payee to turn in all proceeds on payee's accounts receivable and not to pay any of payee's general creditors, payee cashed check in suit at still another bank and paid off certain general creditors, drawer of check stopped payment thereon at request of secured bank, and handwritten part of check stated that it was drawn for $13,430 but check imprinter inadvertently entered "$3,430" on check, cashing bank was holder in due course and entitled to recover under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) because (1) it had no notice under UCC § 1-201(25) of secured bank's claim to check's proceeds from mere publication in biweekly reporting service 17 months previously of secured bank's filing of security agreements on payee's property, even though cashing bank did subscribe to such reporting service; (2) check was negotiable on its face, since it was indorsed by payee and payee's indorsement was not restrictive; (3) statement by payee's wife to officer of cashing bank that check was being cashed to prevent secured bank from "grabbing it" occurred after check was cashed and thus was irrelevant under UCC § 3-304(6) to issue of notice; and (4) cashing bank took check in good faith under UCC § 3-302(1)(b), despite $10,000 error on face of check, since cashing bank had contacted drawee bank to ascertain correct amount of check and to discover whether sufficient funds were on deposit to cover it. McCook County Nat'l Bank v. Compton, 558 F.2d 871 (8th Cir. S.D. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 905, 98 S. Ct. 302, 54 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1977).

21. — —Acceptance of checks on which payment is stopped.

In action under UCC § 3-413(2) against drawer of dishonored check, where (1) drawer wrote check on his account at drawee bank, payable to contractor for building a house, (2) payee deposited check in his account at plaintiff depository bank, (3) plaintiff cashed check, covered overdrafts on payee's account, credited main part of check's proceeds to such account, and paid payee remainder in cash, (4) after plaintiff had cashed check, drawer filed stop-payment order on it, resulting in its dishonor, and (5) plaintiff, despite its normal practice of withholding credit on a check until five days after its deposit, waived such waiting period as to check in suit because it believed drawer to be responsible person and because it had also obtained verification from drawee bank that check was good at that time, court held (1) that plaintiff was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(b) and (c), since at time it cashed check, it had no notice of any defenses thereto and also no reason to believe that drawer would not honor it, (2) that in such circumstances, plaintiff's extension of immediate credit on the check did not manifest bad faith, since the Uniform Commercial Code, although not requiring a depository bank to give immediate credit on a check, encourages such practice by granting the bank rights against drawer of check on which immediate credit is extended, and (3) that since plaintiff was holder in due course, it therefore, under UCC § 3-305(2), took check in suit free from all but a limited number of defenses to it. Frantz v. First Nat'l Bank, 584 P.2d 1125 (Alaska 1978).

In order for notice of defenses to disqualify party from becoming holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c), defenses must be against instrument itself. Thus, bank could recover on checks on which drawer had stopped payment where drawer had no defenses against checks at time bank became holder thereof because checks were regular on their face and represented bona fide transactions in which drawer had received all that he had bargained for. Community Bank v. Ell, 278 Or. 417, 564 P.2d 685 (1977), reh'g denied, 279 Or. 245, 566 P.2d 903 (1977).

Bank which issued a cashier's check to replace a personal check took the personal check in good faith and for value and was thus holder in due course under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 where bank manager ascertained validity of check by telephone call to drawer's bank prior to drawer's placement of stop payment order on check. Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co. v. Murphy, 369 F. Supp. 11 (W.D. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 517 F.2d 1398 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975).

Where bank accepted check from its depositor, forwarded it for collection, drawer stopped payment on check and, during interval between deposit of check and notice of stop payment order, bank granted credit and made payment upon checks drawn by its customer, bank was holder in due course to extent of advances made to its depositor; fact that standard banking practice would have been to withhold payment on check until it had been collected was not sufficient to establish that bank did not exercise good faith in handling check. St. Cloud Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Sobania Constr. Co., 302 Minn. 71, 224 N.W.2d 746 (1974).

Evidence that bank, in cashing 2 checks on which payment was later stopped, violated its own rule requiring teller to gain manager's approval before cashing corporate checks, was insufficient to establish that bank lacked good faith and therefore could not be a holder in due course. Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

Bank took check "in good faith" even though it credited depositor's account immediately so that depositor was able to draw against amount of check before drawer stopped payment thereon, where bank had no knowledge of drawer's claims against depositor. Exchange Nat'l Bank v. Beshara, 236 So. 2d 198 (Fla. App. 1970).

In an action by a bank which had accepted certain checks against the drawer who had stopped payment, the failure of the court to instruct the jury on the elements essential to the status of a holder in due course, or that the plaintiff bank had taken the checks for value and had a security interest therein was error. Peoples Bank v. Haar, 421 P.2d 817 (Okla. 1966).

Bank which received defendant's checks from the payee for value and without notice of any infirmities became a holder in due course, and the fact that the drawer delivered the checks to the payee as a loan on a promise to give back cash the next day and who stopped payment on the checks on ground of failure of consideration resulting from payee's breach of his promise could not thereby defeat the rights of the bank. Texico State Bank v. Hullinger, 75 Ill. App. 2d 212, 220 N.E.2d 248 (4th Dist. 1966).

22. — Acceptance of instruments without proper indorsement.

In corporation's action for defendant bank's conversion of checks accepted by defendant for deposit into checking account of another corporation that plaintiff had employed as collection agency, but which plaintiff had not authorized to indorse, cash, or deposit checks made out to plaintiff, court held (1) that evidence showed that second corporation's indorsement of checks in suit was unauthorized; (2) that evidence did not show that plaintiff had ratified such indorsements or that it was precluded from denying them; (3) that defendant was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c), since checks were deposited by one who was not payee thereof and thus lacked valid indorsements; (4) that defendant could not utilize as defense exception contained in UCC § 3-419(3) because it had failed to act in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to banking business by failing to inquire as to second corporation's authority to indorse and deposit plaintiff's checks into second corporation's account; (5) that defendant could not escape its duty of inquiry by relying on word of its customer (second corporation); and (6) that fact that defendant could proceed against its customer (second corporation) under warranty provisions of UCC §§ 3-417 and 4-207 did not absolve it of its duty of inquiry. National Bank v. Refrigerated Trans. Co., 147 Ga. App. 240, 248 S.E.2d 496 (1978).

Bank which was authorized depository of plaintiff company was liable for face amount of 17 third-party checks made payable to plaintiff which were indorsed without authority by plaintiff's manager and deposited in manager's personal account, since bank under UCC § 3-304(2) had notice of plaintiff's claim against checks as payee thereof and thus could not claim benefits of holder-in-due-course status under UCC § 3-302(1). Mott Grain Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 259 N.W.2d 667 (N.D. 1977).

Depository bank which took bill of exchange without depositor's indorsement was not holder; bank did not become holder in due course by adding indorsement after notice of dishonor, and was subject to defense of payor's right of set off against payee. United Overseas Bank v. Veneers, Inc., 375 F. Supp. 596 (D. Md. 1973).

Where bookkeeper deposited third party checks payable to her employer in her personal bank account, defendant bank was not holder in due course, since it had notice of claim against instrument arising out of bookkeeper's acting for her own benefit, and since it was not a holder for value not having acquired the checks by authorized signature or indorsement. Von Gohren v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 8 Wash. App. 245, 505 P.2d 467 (1973).

Where person who presented check to collecting bank did not have authority to negotiate check, collecting bank could not become holder of check based upon unauthorized indorsement, and hence could not become holder in due course. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

Draft payable to two payees was deposited by one without indorsement by other; held bank did not become "holder" of draft. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Marine Nat'l Bank, 431 F.2d 341 (5th Cir. Fla. 1970).

23. — — Knowledge of underlying nature of conduct resulting in defenses.

Where bank loaned $25,000 to officer of corporation that was heavily indebted to bank and could not borrow such money itself, and where officer's note to bank for such sum, which was used by corporation, was executed allegedly because of fraudulent assurances by bank official that bank would not hold maker of note personally liable thereon but would instead look to corporation for payment, summary judgment on note in favor of bank would be reversed because defendant maker alleged sufficient facts to show (1) that bank was not holder in due course of such note under UCC § 3-302(1)(b), and (2) that bank therefore under UCC § 3-306(b) took note subject to all defenses of maker that would be available in action on simple contract, including defense of fraud in inducement. Thompson v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 142 Ga. App. 174, 235 S.E.2d 582 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 240 Ga. 494, 241 S.E.2d 253 (1978).

Bank that took drafts drawn under letter of credit did not take drafts in good faith as defined by UCC § 1-201(19) and without notice, as defined in UCC § 1-201(25), of defenses against them, and thus bank did not qualify as holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1), where, prior to time bank took draft, attorney gave bank notice by letter that letters of credit were issued pursuant to specific terms and conditions, conditions were explained, and letter warned that conditions had not and would not be fulfilled in foreseeable future; this constituted notice that any certification by beneficiary of letters of credit that payment was due thereunder might well be fraudulent; moreover, bank, having made substantial loans to beneficiary, could not have been unaware of beneficiary's severe financial difficulties. Shaffer v. Brooklyn Park Garden Apts., 311 Minn. 452, 250 N.W.2d 172 (1977).

Bank which sought to recover on checks on which payment had been stopped because of defendant drawer's defense (right of setoff against payee) that was good except as against holder in due course did not establish, as matter of law, that it took checks in good faith so as to be holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(b), where (1) on date two of such checks were deposited by payee, who was plaintiff bank's customer, bank suspected that payee-customer was using business dealings with defendant drawer to kite numerous other checks given by payee-customer to drawer in the course of their dealings; (2) bank on such date commenced not paying payee-customer's checks until they were covered by sufficient funds; (3) bank had long allowed payee-customer to maintain large potential overdrafts in his account; (4) payee-customer's account consisted mainly of checks received from, and given to, defendant drawer of checks in suit; and (5) jury could have found that when bank accepted payee-customer's deposit of checks in suit, bank was attempting to place on defendant drawer probable loss from drawer's dealings with payee-customer, in which dealings bank had acquiesced. Community Bank v. Ell, 278 Or. 417, 564 P.2d 685 (1977), reh'g denied, 279 Or. 245, 566 P.2d 903 (1977).

In action by bank against maker to recover on note, where maker executed note and security agreement in connection with purchase of construction equipment and where equipment dealer assigned note to bank but failed to deliver equipment, bank was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302 and thus its claim on note was subject to defense of failure of consideration under UCC § 3-306; under evidence that bank failed to advise maker of note of its acquisition of note and security agreement, that it placed payment coupon book in hands of dealer and received all monthly payments from dealer, that close working relationship existed between bank and dealer and dealer was clothed with authority to collect and forward all payments due on transaction, and that agency and authority were further shown to exist by bank's authorizing return of machinery to dealer and terminating of balances due on purchase money paper, bank did not, under UCC § 3-307(3), sustain its burden of proving that it was holder in due course and under facts and circumstances known to and participated in by bank in connection with transaction, it could not be said that bank did not have reason to know that defense of failure of consideration existed. Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust Co. v. Riddle, 219 Kan. 550, 549 P.2d 927 (1976).

In action by bank against makers of several notes pledged by third party as collateral for loan, trial court properly found that bank had taken notes in good faith and without notice of makers' alleged defenses, pursuant to UCC § 3-302(1) and definitions contained in UCC § 1-201, subsecs. (19), (25) and (27), where officers and employees of bank who handled the transaction testified that they had no knowledge or information concerning any defenses, and described in detail the investigation which they made and information which they gathered to satisfy themselves that notes were valid and that parties with whom they dealt were reliable; where trial court's findings described in some detail the investigations and inquiries made by bank; where trial court found those investigations were reasonable under the circumstances, and that the bank lacked knowledge to know or believe that alleged defenses existed; and where facts found by trial court established that the bank had no connection with transactions for which notes were given. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Chess, 58 Cal. App. 3d 555 (2d Dist. 1976).

Fact that, during period of rapidly expanding franchising, bank acquired as collateral for loans all notes of franchise company, which notes arose out of sale of franchises, that bank anticipated that loan would be for short-term working capital, that bank had knowledge that there was franchising arrangement between franchising company and makers of notes, that there might be accelerated payment of notes on sale of subfranchises by makers and that notes arose from franchising arrangement, did not justify inference of notice or bad faith as defined by UCC. Third Nat'l Bank v. Hardi-Gardens Supply of Ill. Inc., 380 F. Supp. 930 (M.D. Tenn. 1974).

Payee's depository bank had reason to know that drawer had defense against payee, considering that bank knew that payee was using checks drawn by drawer to cover other checks drawn for drawer's benefit, and this knowledge precluded holder in due course status under UCC § 3-302(1)(c). Oklahoma Nat'l Bank v. Equitable Credit Fin. Co., 489 P.2d 1331 (Okla. 1971).

24. — Withdrawals while depositor's balance is low.

Where payee indorsed checks for deposit, deposited them in its account with bank, and bank thereafter allowed payee to withdraw funds from its account in full amount of checks, notice of fact that payee-depositor's account with bank was overdrawn when withdrawal was allowed would not result in bank's loss of its holder in due course status. Commerce Bank of Univ. City v. EDCO Fin. Servs., 379 F. Supp. 293 (E.D. Mo. 1974), aff'd, 503 F.2d 1047 (8th Cir. Mo. 1975).

That its depositor's account is low in funds, or even overdrawn, does not constitute notice to a collecting bank of an infirmity in the underlying transaction or instrument, and is not evidence of bad faith chargeable to it at the time it permitted withdrawals against the deposited check. Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Fort Lee Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 89 N.J. Super. 43, 213 A.2d 315 (L. Div. 1965).

25. — Instrument so irregular as to give notice of defense.

Assignee of note did not take instrument in good faith within meaning of UCC § 3-302(1)(b), and thus was subject to defenses of fraud and failure of consideration that were applicable to assignor, where evidence showed that (1) although note had face value of $3,000, assignor discounted it to assignee for $500, of which $244 was interest; (2) note was taken by assignee without recourse; and (3) other circumstances existed from which knowledge of improper manner in which assignor had conducted business transaction with defendant maker could be imputed to assignee. Security Cent. Nat'l Bank v. Williams, 52 Ohio App. 2d 175, 368 N.E.2d 1264 (1976).

Bank, as holder of promissory note executed pursuant to contract between payee of note and its corporate maker for sale of barley, was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1) where bank was informed by president of corporate maker, prior to purchase of note, that payee had not yet performed contract, and where instrument was so irregular as to give notice of claim or defense under UCC § 3-304(1)(a); bank was therefore not entitled to cut off maker's underlying contract defense. First Nat'l Bank v. Otto Huber & Sons, 394 F. Supp. 1284 (D.S.D. 1975).

Fact that note is purchased for amount less than face value, or that unusually large discount is accepted, is not of itself sufficient to charge purchaser with notice of existing equities, unless consideration is merely nominal. United States Fin. Co. v. Jones, 285 Ala. 105, 229 So. 2d 495 (1969).

The payee of a promissory note who has knowledge that a transaction between note's maker and another included a grossly excessive cash sales price is not a holder in due course if the pretended sale was intended to cloak a usurious transaction. Mutual Home Dealers Corp. v. Alves, 23 A.D.2d 791 (2d Dep't 1965).

26. — Knowledge of irregularity of underlying transaction.

Assignee of note given for purchase of land in interstate transaction was not holder in due course where facts known to assignee at time of assignment, i.e., apparent multiple violations of Interstate Land Sales Act (15 USCS 1703(b)), should have alerted assignee to possible irregularities in making of note. Stewart v.

Thornton, 116 Ariz. 107, 568 P.2d 414 (1977).

Where assignee of note knew of assignor's operations re underlying transaction, such knowledge might be considered by court on remand in determining whether assignee was acting in good faith so as to qualify as holder in due course. Kennard v. Reliance, Inc., 257 Md. 654, 264 A.2d 832 (1970).

If note is alleged and proven usurious on its face, result would be to show that holder was not holder in due course. Gray v. American Bank, 122 Ga. App. 442, 177 S.E.2d 207 (1970).

Holder in due course was entitled to recover full amount of check that was negotiated to holder as payment on existing indebtedness owed by payee to holder in good faith and without notice of maker's defense of want of consideration, even though holder may have acquired knowledge of maker's defense prior to depositing check. Kemp Motor Sales, Inc. v. Statham, 120 Ga. App. 515, 171 S.E.2d 389 (1969).

As the drawer of a trade acceptance is the other party to the underlying transaction it is apparent that he cannot be a holder in due course because he necessarily has knowledge of defenses arising from his breach of the contract. Program Aids Co. v. W. R. Bean & Son, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 210 (1967, NY Sup).

27. —Knowledge of agent or employee.

Where the agent of a payee corporation was also the corporation's president, general manager, and sole stockholder and had full knowledge of all the facts surrounding the debt owed by the payor to the corporation, such knowledge was imputed to the corporation and precluded it from being entitled to the status of a holder in due course. Dobbs-Maynard Co. v. Jumper, 388 So. 2d 879 (Miss. 1980).

Bank which received check from secretary of debtor corporation as payment for two notes that secretary believed to be corporation's obligations was not holder in due course of such check under UCC § 3-302(1) where bank officer, who received check, knew that one of the two notes was personal obligation of debtor corporation's president. Frye v. F & M Bank, 561 S.W.2d 392 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Where bank took cashier's check from one of its tellers in payment of debt due from teller and where there was evidence from which it could be inferred that assistant cashier of bank took check with knowledge that personal check used by teller to purchase cashier's check was drawn on insufficient funds, bank took cashier's check with notice of its fraudulent procurement and in bad faith, and, thus, did not achieve status of holder in due course. Mid-Continent Nat'l Bank v. Bank of Independence, 523 S.W.2d 569 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

Where agent with authority to gather and transmit information and to prepare drafts and obtain indorsements on them became aware, while acting in its capacity as plaintiff's agent, of special purpose for which bank indorsed draft, plaintiff was charged with notice that bank indorsed draft for special purpose, and could not therefore be holder in due course but took draft subject to bank's defense which could properly be asserted by parol evidence. American Underwriting Corp. v. Rhode Island Hosp. Trust Co., 111 R.I. 415, 303 A.2d 121 (1973).

Although the makers of notes had been induced to borrow money from the plaintiff bank by fraudulent representations of a bank officer, where those representations were not chargeable to the bank, the bank took the instruments as a holder in due course, subject only to the defense of fraud as to the nature of the instrument. City Nat'l Bank v. Vanderboom, 290 F. Supp. 592 (W.D. Ark. 1968), aff'd, 422 F.2d 221 (8th Cir. Ark. 1970), cert. denied, 399 U.S. 905, 90 S. Ct. 2196, 26 L. Ed. 2d 560 (1970).

The fact that a bank financing the sales of a vendor supplied the vendor with printed forms does not make the vendor the agent of the bank so as to impute to the bank the knowledge of the vendor as to defenses of the maker. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

28. —Past due instrument.

The purchaser of a note with knowledge of a default in the making of payments does not qualify as a holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1) and is thus subject, under UCC § 3-306, to any defenses that the maker has against the payee, including the defense of waiver. Matter of Marriage of Rutherford (Civ. App. 1978) 573 S.W.2d 299.

One who takes assignment of note at time when it was past due and was on notice of such fact by virtue of terms of note, is not holder in due course. Wenke v. Norton, 120 Ga. App. 70, 169 S.E.2d 663 (1969).

A person who takes a note with notice that it is overdue is not a holder in due course, and a holder who obtains his title from a holder in due course cannot enforce the instrument when he was party to some fraud or illegality affecting it. Brown v. Scales, 109 Ga. App. 138, 135 S.E.2d 525 (1964).

29. Effect of failure to make inquiry.

In corporation's action for defendant bank's conversion of checks accepted by defendant for deposit into checking account of another corporation that plaintiff had employed as collection agency, but which plaintiff had not authorized to indorse, cash, or deposit checks made out to plaintiff, court held (1) that evidence showed that second corporation's indorsement of checks in suit was unauthorized; (2) that evidence did not show that plaintiff had ratified such indorsements or that it was precluded from denying them; (3) that defendant was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c), since checks were deposited by one who was not payee thereof and thus lacked valid indorsements; (4) that defendant could not utilize as defense exception contained in UCC § 3-419(3) because it had failed to act in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to banking business by failing to inquire as to second corporation's authority to indorse and deposit plaintiff's checks into second corporation's account; (5) that defendant could not escape its duty of inquiry by relying on word of its customer (second corporation); and (6) that fact that defendant could proceed against its customer (second corporation) under warranty provisions of UCC §§ 3-417 and 4-207 did not absolve it of its duty of inquiry. National Bank v. Refrigerated

Trans. Co., 147 Ga. App. 240, 248 S.E.2d 496 (1978).

The fact that a holder does not inquire as to whether the underlying contract has been performed does not prevent him from being a holder in due course. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

The standard of notice contemplated by subsection (1)(c) of the instant section is actual notice and not merely reasonable grounds for belief, and the purchaser of a negotiable note given by a home owner to an aluminum siding company would not be affected by evidence that the purchaser was aware of complaints against the siding company by previous customers nor by evidence of knowledge of a defense acquired after the note had been purchased. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Ingel, 347 Mass. 119, 196 N.E.2d 847 (1964).

30. —Failure in circumstances calling for further inquiry.

In declaratory action to determine rights of holder of promissory note, where (1) maker of note on May 23, 1971 signed contract to purchase lot, received deed to lot, and executed mortgage on lot and note in certain sum payable to named person, which note was substantially discounted and immediately sold to plaintiff; (2) makes rescinded the voidable sales contract two days later, as permitted by federal Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act (15 USCS § 1703(b)), because of his failure to receive property report on lot as of time of signing contract of sale; and (3) maker contended that plaintiff holder had had notice within meaning of UCC § 3-304(1)(b) that maker's obligation under such contract was voidable, plaintiff holder was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) because (1) plaintiff's purchase of note for much less than its full value should have alerted him to possible defense against maker's liability; (2) note was also purchased by plaintiff within the two-day period in which maker could rescind the voidable sales contract; (3) by examining such contract, which was in possession of seller of note, plaintiff could have ascertained that maker of note had not inspected the lot purchased or received a property report thereon, as required by federal law; and (4) under circumstances of case, trial court could reasonably infer bad faith on part of plaintiff in refusing to investigate when facts known to him indicated irregularity respecting such note. Stewart v. Thornton, 116 Ariz. 107, 568 P.2d 414 (1977).

Notice under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) and UCC § 3-304(1)(b) requires some inquiry by purchaser of note where purchaser has actual knowledge of facts that should alert him to possible irregularities concerning such note. Protection afforded holder in due course cannot be used to shield one who simply refuses to investigate when facts known to him suggest an irregularity concerning commercial paper that he purchases. Stewart v. Thornton, 116 Ariz. 107, 568 P.2d 414 (1977).

One who seeks protection as a holder in due course must have dealt fairly and honestly in acquiring the instrument as to the rights of prior parties, and where circumstances are such as to justify the conclusion that the failure to make inquiry arose from the suspicion that inquiry would disclose a vice or defect in the title, the person is not a holder in due course. Norman v. World Wide Distribs., Inc., 202 Pa. Super. 53, 195 A.2d 115 (1963).

Where the evidence showed that the payee of certain notes operated a referral plan which was a fraudulent scheme based on an operation similar to the chain letter racket, and that the holder, which had paid $831 for a $1,079.40 note payable three days after date, knew enough about the referral plan to require it to make further inquiry, the holder, having made no inquiry, held as though it had knowledge of all that the inquiry would have revealed, and was not a holder in due course. Norman v. World Wide Distribs., Inc., 202 Pa. Super. 53, 195 A.2d 115 (1963).

31. Payee as holder in due course, generally.

A holder through a holder in due course has all the rights of a holder in due course. Brock v. Adams, 79 N.M. 17, 439 P.2d 234 (1968).

When there is no valid defense against the payee, the fact that he is only a holder and not a holder in due course is immaterial. Brock v. Adams, 79 N.M. 17, 439 P.2d 234 (1968).

A payee may be a holder in due course. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

Indorsee who surrendered possession of dishonored checks to his indorser cannot be regarded as a "holder" of the instruments. Gluge v. Robinson, 204 Pa. Super. 404, 204 A.2d 279 (1964).

There is no doubt that under the Uniform Commercial Code, the payee of a series of promissory notes may be a holder in due course. Mellen v. Gora, 70 York Leg. Rec. 1 (Pa. 1956).

32. —Particular applications.

Bank issuing letter of credit may be enjoined against making payment upon demand under UCC § 5-114 where there is "fraud in transaction" and party presenting draft is beneficiary or some other party who is not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302. United Technologies Corp. v. Citibank, 469 F. Supp. 473 (S.D.N.Y. 1979).

Payee of cashier's check upon which issuing bank had attempted to stop payment for lack of consideration was entitled to recover amount of check from issuer; recovery based not on payee's status as holder in due course, but on nature of cashier's check as being accepted for payment when issued, within the meaning of UCC § 4-303(a). Able & Assocs. v. Orchard Hill Farms, Inc., 77 Ill. App. 3d 375, 395 N.E.2d 1138 (1st Dist. 1979).

Where delivery of check was conditioned on its acceptance as settlement of note held by payee, and where payee did not deposit check for 11 months, proffered settlement was not accepted within reasonable time and check in question was subject to defense based on its conditional delivery and good against any person not holder in due course under UCC § 3-306(3); payee was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302 in that his own conversation with plaintiff preceding delivery of check, together with notation on check, were ample evidence that payee had actual notice of drawer's defense. Losson v. Whitson, 535 S.W.2d 406 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Payee of four checks was holder in due course and was entitled to recover from drawer of checks under UCC §§ 3-302-3-305 where checks were given to payee in payment for grain shipments by owner of feed and grocery business located on drawer's property, under arrangement whereby drawer furnished money to store owner to buy feed and was given proceeds from resale of grain and right to purchase grain at cost, and where payee had been given approximately 70 checks signed by drawer as payment for grain shipments over past two years. S & C Transp. Co. v. McAlister, 528 P.2d 1140 (Okla. Ct. App. 1974).

Where holder acquired series of notes from payee, became holder in due course thereof, and accelerated balance due after maker defaulted, but, after discussions between maker, payee, and holder, holder accepted payment partly in cash and partly by way of new note, payable to payee and indorsed over to holder, holder was not holder in due course with respect to new note and was subject to any claims or defenses against payee of which holder had knowledge prior to accepting new note; course of conduct surrounding issuance of new note did not constitute renewal of existing notes, but rather resulted in partial payment and novation with respect to balance due; holder in due course status under old notes disappeared with extinguishment of total debt represented thereby and holder's status with respect to new note was determined by circumstances existing at time it received delivery of new note. Lazere Fin. Corp. v. Crystal Mart, Inc., 78 Misc. 2d 379 (1974).

Where (1) bank check was delivered to payee by drawer's agent with drawer's consent and knowledge, (2) check itself contained no restrictions or designations as to its use, and (3) payee, stock brokerage firm, had no trading account with, or indebtedness to, drawer, payee took check without notice of drawer's claims, payee became holder in due course of instrument, and was entitled to summary judgment in action by drawer. Eldon's Super Fresh Stores, Inc. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 296 Minn. 130, 207 N.W.2d 282 (1973).

Plaintiff had notice of defense on note so as to preclude holder in due course status where plaintiff participated in underlying financing arrangement under which notes of which plaintiff was payee were assigned to defendant which executed mortgage to secure note so that plaintiff could receive money from mortgagee and plaintiff ultimately paid mortgagee and obtained assignment of notes and mortgage. Coplan Pipe & Supply Co. v. Ben-Frieda Corp., 256 So. 2d 218 (Fla. App. 1972).

Where the defendant executed a promissory note on February 10, 1964 and subsequently on April 15, 1964 incorporated his construction business, plaintiff who was the holder, but not a holder in due course, of the note was subject to the defense of novation, and proof of that defense was not precluded by the parol evidence rule or the Statute of Frauds. Miles v. Houghtaling, 32 A.D.2d 714 (3d Dep't 1969).

The Code does not displace a statute which declares that the transferee of the buyer's note given as part of a credit sale transaction shall not have the protection from defenses of a holder in due course. Casey v. Philadelphia Auto Sales Co., 428 Pa. 155, 236 A.2d 800 (1968).

Where insurer, after agreeing to pay in full plaintiff buyer's claim that a certain shipment of goods had been damaged in transit, took possession of the goods and sold them at auction to defendant which executed three promissory notes to plaintiff in partial payment therefor, plaintiff, who had no notice of any fact indicating that chicanery had been practiced upon defendant in connection with the sale, was a holder in due course of the notes and entitled to recover thereon despite defendant's claim of fraudulent substitution of goods. Saale v. Interstate Steel Co., 27 A.D.2d 1 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 19 N.Y.2d 933, 281 N.Y.S.2d 340, 228 N.E.2d 397 (1967).

The payee of a promissory note who has knowledge that a transaction between note's maker and another included a grossly excessive cash sales price is not a holder in due course if the pretended sale was intended to cloak a usurious transaction. Mutual Home Dealers Corp. v. Alves, 23 A.D.2d 791 (2d Dep't 1965).

33. Purchaser at judicial sale.

One with the rights of a holder in due course of a promissory note, who has not otherwise lost such rights, does not diminish his status by purchasing the note later at a judicial sale, although he may not by virtue of such purchase alone become a due course holder. Finance Co. of Am. v. Wilson, 115 Ga. App. 280, 154 S.E.2d 459 (1967).

34. Acquisition in taking over estate.

Status of holder in due course cannot be acquired simply by virtue of taking over as administratrix of decedent's estate, since representative of estate is not purchaser for value before maturity without notice and hence can acquire no greater rights than those possessed by decedent during lifetime. Rago v. Cosmopolitan Nat'l Bank, 89 Ill. App. 2d 12, 232 N.E.2d 88 (1st Dist. 1967).

35. Bulk transactions.

Under UCC § 3-302(3)(c), Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC), on making bulk purchase of part of assets of bank closed by commissioner of banking, was not holder in due course of promissory note included in such purchase, since such a transaction does not possess the characteristics of a sale for value, in good faith, and without notice of any defense of note's maker to liability thereon (observing that Official Comment 3 to 3-302(3)(c) states that such subsection has particular application to purchase by one bank of a substantial part of the commercial paper held by another bank which is threatened with insolvency and seeks to liquidate its assets). Henkin, Inc. v. Berea Bank & Trust Co., 566 S.W.2d 420 (Ky. Ct. App. 1978).

When there has been a bulk transfer incident to the liquidation of a going enterprise, or a transfer of a business of which certain promissory notes in issue represent part of the assets transferred, or a transfer by way of gift, then the transferee acquires no more protected interest than the payee had; but when, in the course of an ongoing business interest there is a substantial transfer of notes as a matter of regular commercial dealing, the purchaser is not put on notice that the paper transferred is not fully and freely negotiable. Pugatch v. David's Jewelers, 53 Misc. 2d 327 (1967).

The fact that a holder has financed the vendor's sales in some 500 to 600 transactions and had heard of 3 to 4 complaints of customers is immaterial both because the percentage is so small and also because the character of a holder is affected only by his knowledge with respect to the instrument in question and not other transactions. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

The plaintiff's purchase of four accounts of the face value of $1187.25 for $635 from a paint dealer constituted a bulk transaction not in the regular course of business of the transferor, and plaintiff did not thereby become a holder in due course of defendant's trade acceptance which was included in the purchase; and where the proof showed that the defendant did not receive the goods for which the trade acceptance was executed there was a failure of consideration which barred plaintiff's recovery. Credit Indus. Corp. v. DiNanno, 29 Mass. App. Dec. 40 (1964).

36. Purchaser of limited interest.

Holder of limited interest in instrument is not confined to one with collateral security interest therein as opposed to equity ownership; purchaser of partial interest in promissory note is holder of to extent of interest purchased. Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F. Supp. 1108 (S.D.N.Y. 1978), remanded, 607 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

In bank's suit on promissory note, fact that bank was copayee of note together with corporation form which bank purchased note for valuable consideration did not, under UCC § 3-302(2), destroy bank's status as holder in due course of such note. Ricks v. Bank of Dixie, 352 So. 2d 798 (Miss. 1977).

The pledgee of promissory notes to secure a debt is the purchaser of a limited interest under § 3-302(4), and not the holder of a limited assignment under § 3-202(3). Wood v. Willman, 423 P.2d 82 (Wyo. 1967).

A pledgee of notes is a purchaser of a limited interest and a holder in due course only to the extent of the interest purchased, but he could enforce the notes over defenses only to the extent of his interest, and defenses good against the pledgor remained available insofar as the pledgor retained an interest in the notes. Wood v. Willman, 423 P.2d 82 (Wyo. 1967).

When there has been a bulk transfer incident to the liquidation of a going enterprise, or a transfer of a business of which certain promissory notes in issue represent part of the assets transferred, or a transfer by way of gift, then the transferee acquires no more protected interest than the payee had; but when, in the course of an ongoing business interest there is a substantial transfer of notes as a matter of regular commercial dealing, the purchaser is not put on notice that the paper transferred is not fully and freely negotiable. Pugatch v. David's Jewelers, 53 Misc. 2d 327 (1967).

The plaintiff's purchase of four accounts of the face value of $1187.25 for $635 from a paint dealer constituted a bulk transaction not in the regular course of business of the transferor, and plaintiff did not thereby become a holder in due course of defendant's trade acceptance which was included in the purchase; and where the proof showed that the defendant did not receive the goods for which the trade acceptance was executed there was a failure of consideration which barred plaintiff's recovery. Credit Indus. Corp. v. DiNanno, 29 Mass. App. Dec. 40 (1964).

37. Evidence and burden of proof.

In suit by guardian of three minors against bank for accepting, by assignment, four certificates of deposit owned by minors as collateral for bank's loan to guardian and guardian's husband individually and then appropriating proceeds of certificates to its own use, bank could not successfully claim that it was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) where it was unable to show that it had had no notice of any claim by any person to such certificates. First Nat'l Bank v. Rapides Bank & Trust Co., 145 Ga. App. 514, 244 S.E.2d 51 (1978), overruled on other grounds, 228 Ga. App. 893, 495 S.E.2d 296 (1997).

In action by holder, not in due course, against maker of promissory note, parole evidence was admissible to show that maker was induced to sign note by false and fraudulent representations of original payee. Berry v. Abilene Sav. Ass'n, 513

S.W.2d 872 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Nov. 27, 1974).

In action by payee bank against maker of note, summary judgment was erroneously granted where maker introduced affidavit stating that bank had agreed that renewals on note were with condition that maker would be relieved of liability if sale of corporation was not finalized, raising issue of fraud in the inducement under UCC §§ 3-302, 3-306(2), and 3-408. Viracola v. Dallas Int'l Bank, 508 S.W.2d 472 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e. (July 17, 1974).

Evidence supported conclusion that plaintiff was "beneficial owner" of cashier's check as well as holder in due course, where although he was neither payee nor endorsee of cashier's check or personal check which was consideration for cashier's check, he had paid insurance company payee of both checks full amount of notes issued to insurance company by drawer of personal check and surrendered notes to drawer of personal check, and he requested that cashier's check be made payable to insurance company for deposit only to bank whereupon cashier's check was immediately deposited in plaintiff's agency account. Wertz v. Richardson Heights Bank & Trust, 495 S.W.2d 572 (Tex. 1973).

Bank to which promissory note was negotiated has not met the burden of establishing that it is a holder in due course to the extent entitling it to summary judgment where there remains, among others, the question of the identity of the person who altered the maturity date from 5 days to 45 days after date. Unadilla Nat'l Bank v. McQueer, 27 A.D.2d 778 (3d Dep't 1967).

A bank which took a promissory note given for the installation of 12 jalousie windows was a holder in due course even though it failed to inquire of either the payee or the maker as to the satisfactory completion of the contract, where no evidence was adduced to show that the bank's failure to make such inquiry was a divergence from common banking or commercial practice. First Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 661 (1956).

The defendant must show what knowledge the plaintiff had in order to establish that the plaintiff is not a holder in due course [although note that this is inconsistent with the provision that when a defense is shown to exist the burden is on the plaintiff to establish that he has the rights of a holder in due course. § 3-307(3)]. Potter Bank & Trust Co. v. Henneforth, 74 Montg. County L. Rep. 420 (Pa. 1959).

38. Issues for determination by jury.

Question whether holder of note was holder in due course was one of fact to be determined by trier of facts. Vernon v. Yanks, 303 So. 2d 375 (Fla. App. 1974).

In an action upon a check issued in payment for carpeting and floor tile installed by plaintiff in defendant's residence, where the defendant counter-claimed for breach of warranty based upon work not encompassed by the check, it was obvious that plaintiff was not a holder in due course and the jury should have been permitted to consider defenses to the check based upon the original transaction. Mansion Carpets, Inc. v. Marinoff, 24 A.D.2d 947 (1st Dep't 1965).

Ordinarily, the question whether one is a holder in due course under the requirements of this section is largely one of fact which, together with the credibility of those seeking to establish due course status, is for the jury. Budget Charge Accounts, Inc. v. Mullaney, 187 Pa. Super. 190, 144 A.2d 438 (1958).

Where there was a jury question whether a note was negotiated for the purpose of cutting off a defense of fraud in the inception, thus affecting the good faith of the holder, who claimed the status of a holder in due course, there was no error in opening a judgment entered by confession on the note. Budget Charge Accounts, Inc. v. Mullaney, 187 Pa. Super. 190, 144 A.2d 438 (1958).

A jury question regarding the good faith of a holder of a series of promissory notes was raised when the defendant alleged in his answer that the holder was present during and participated in the business transactions which were the source of the notes, that the holder personally signed one of the agreements executed during the transactions, and that the holder had prior knowledge of the infirmities inherent in the notes; consequently, the plaintiff-holder's motion for judgment on the pleadings would be denied. Mellen v. Gora, 70 York Leg. Rec. 1 (Pa. 1956).

39. Miscellaneous defenses.

In suit by purchaser of promissory note to recover thereon, where note was executed in favor of bank by defendants husband and wife as comakers together with defendant husband's partner and partner's wife to consolidate partnership's outstanding notes; where defendant's partner and partner's wife, who were not parties to suit, executed mortgage to bank on two parcels of realty owned by them as security for such note; where first parcel was subject to prior mortgage of third party and judgment of foreclosure had been entered thereon; where plaintiff at suggestion of partner's wife became sole owner of first parcel by redeeming it and having it conveyed to her by means of a "straw" transaction; where plaintiff found buyer for first parcel, buyer's title search discovered bank's mortgage thereon and note for which such mortgage was given, plaintiff purchased note in order to convey marketable title to buyer, note was indorsed by bank to plaintiff, mortgage on first parcel was released and discharged, mortgage on second parcel was assigned to plaintiff, and plaintiff sold first parcel for substantial profit, (1) under UCC § 3-302, plaintiff was holder in due course of note in suit and could recover thereon unless defendants could establish defense to note; (2) only defense raised by defendants was alleged satisfaction of such note on theory that plaintiff had been made whole by virtue of her resale of collateral property (first parcel); and (3) such defense failed since defendants, although benefiting from proceeds of note to extent of their interest in partnership, had never had any title or interest in the collateral property (first parcel), were not subjected in any way to double liability on note, and their liability thereon would be completely discharged under UCC § 3-603 by paying note (stating that any further dispute about liability in the case would have to be settled in separate action). Ryan v. Stearns, 135 Vt. 385, 376 A.2d 728 (1977), but see Licursi v. Sweeney, 156 Vt. 418, 594 A.2d 396 (1991).

Where (1) first bank, which had loaned debtor $20,000 and accepted as collateral nonnegotiable certificate of deposit that first bank had previously issued to debtor, inadvertently delivered renewal certificate to debtor, (2) debtor, instead of returning renewal certificate to first bank, used it as collateral for loan from second bank and gave second bank security interest in renewal certificate that second bank perfected by possession under UCC § 9-304(1), and (3) on debtor's default on both loans, second bank presented renewal certificate to first bank, which dishonored it, court held (1) that second bank was not holder in due course under UCC §§ 3-302(1) and 3-805 because renewal certificate was nonnegotiable under UCC § 3-104(1)(d), (2) that as a result, second bank was mere assignee of renewal certificate and certificate under assignments statute was subject to first bank's right of setoff, (3) that exclusion of right of setoff from Article 9 protection means that claimant of right of setoff (first bank) against collateral (renewal certificate) is not barred from enforcing such right merely because another creditor (second bank) has perfected security interest in collateral by taking possession thereof, since right of setoff is separate from priority provisions of Article 9, and (4) that as a result, second bank held debtor's renewal certificate subject to any defenses of first bank, which "defenses" included first bank's right of setoff. Bank of Crystal Springs v. First Nat'l Bank, 427 So. 2d 968 (Miss. 1983).

Holder in due course of negotiable note secured by mortgage takes mortgage subject to only those defenses which could be raised by mortgagor against note itself. Colburn v. Mid-State Homes, Inc., 289 Ala. 255, 266 So. 2d 865 (1972).

If note is alleged and proven usurious on its face, result would be to show that holder was not holder in due course. Gray v. American Bank, 122 Ga. App. 442, 177 S.E.2d 207 (1970).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-305.

40. In general.

In action under UCC § 3-413(2) against drawer of dishonored check, where (1) drawer wrote check on his account at drawee bank, payable to contractor for building a house, (2) payee deposited check in his account at plaintiff depository bank, (3) plaintiff cashed check, covered overdrafts on payee's account, credited main part of check's proceeds to such account, and paid payee remainder in cash, (4) after plaintiff had cashed check, drawer filed stop-payment order on it, resulting in its dishonor, and (5) plaintiff, despite its normal practice of withholding credit on a check until five days after its deposit, waived such waiting period as to check in suit because it believed drawer to be responsible person and because it had also obtained verification from drawee bank that check was good at that time, court held (1) that plaintiff was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(b) and (c), since at time it cashed check, it had no notice of any defenses thereto and also no reason to believe that drawer would not honor it, (2) that in such circumstances, plaintiff's extension of immediate credit on the check did not manifest bad faith, since the Uniform Commercial Code, although not requiring a depository bank to give immediate credit on a check, encourages such practice by granting the bank rights against drawer of check on which immediate credit is extended, and (3) that since plaintiff was holder in due course, it therefore, under UCC § 3-305(2), took check in suit free from all but a limited number of defenses to it. Frantz v. First Nat'l Bank, 584 P.2d 1125 (Alaska 1978).

Under UCC §§ 3-305 and 3-306, agreement that any renewal note would be endorsed by all original endorers, if proved, would make note unenforceable against guarantors, where delivery was conditional upon the procurement of all such endorsements. Long Island Trust Co. v. International Inst. for Packaging Educ., Ltd., 38 N.Y.2d 493, 344 N.E.2d 377 (1976).

When an oral agreement is not binding it cannot be raised as a defense to an action on a note. Sholom & Zuckerbrot Queens Leasing Corp. v. Forate Realty Corp., 29 A.D.2d 571 (2d Dep't 1967).

Acceptor's asserted defense of breach of contract is unavailable against the holder in due course of negotiable trade acceptance. Federal Factors, Inc. v. Wellbanke, 241 Ark. 44, 406 S.W.2d 712 (1966).

Makers of promissory notes possessing both the knowledge and opportunity to ascertain their provisions cannot procure the cancellation of the instruments when they have passed into the hands of a holder in due course. Burchett v. Allied Concord Fin. Corp., 74 N.M. 575, 396 P.2d 186 (1964).

The test of a defense under paragraph (c) of subdivision (1) of this section is that the party must have had no reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge; and in determining what is a reasonable opportunity all relevant factors are to be taken into account, including the age and sex of the party, his intelligence, education, and business experience, his ability to read or understand English, the representations made to him and his reason for relying on them or have confidence in the person making them, the presence or absence of any third person who might read or explain the instrument to him, and the apparent necessity, or lack of it for acting without delay. Reading Trust Co. v. Hutchison, 35 Pa. D. & C.2d 790 (1964).

41. Claims to instrument by others.

Where a bank, which under UCC § 3-202(1) was holder of note delivered to it with necessary endorsements of both copayees, took such note (1) "for value" under UCC §§ 3-302(1)(a) and 3-303(a) because it had taken it as collateral for loan to note's copayees, and (2) "in good faith" under UCC § 3-302(1)(b) and "without notice" under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) of any claims against note's copayees, court held (1) that bank was holder in due course of such note under UCC § 3-302(1), (2) that under UCC § 3-305(1), bank took note free from all claims to it by any person, and (3) that bank therefore was entitled to priority of payment over judgment creditor of note's copayees in situation where, prior to copayees' transfer of note to bank, judgment creditor of copayees had served writ of garnishment on maker of note. Bricks Unlimited, Inc. v. Agee, 672 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir. 1982).

Although bank that issued cashier's check to individual who subsequently became bankrupt had no "defense" to instrument within meaning of UCC §§ 3-305(2) and 3-306(c), based on fact that bankrupt had guaranteed certain notes held by bank, this did not preclude bank from setting-off guaranty obligations of bankrupt against amount of cashier's check in action by receiver of bankrupt's estate to collect on cashier's check. In re Johnson, 552 F.2d 1072 (4th Cir. Va. 1977).

42. Defenses of party to instrument with whom holder has not dealt.

Under UCC § 3-305(2), a holder in due course takes the instrument subject to all defenses of any party with whom he has dealt. Brannon v. Langston, 375 So. 2d 231 (Miss. 1979).

Third party who deals with agent exercising special authority to execute instrument by and in name of principal deals, within contemplation of UCC § 3-305(2), with principal himself. Estate of Lucas v. Whiteley, 550 S.W.2d 767 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), ref. n.r.e. (Oct. 5, 1977).

Payees of drafts issued by title company were holders in due course of drafts and were entitled to enforce them against title company, notwithstanding drafts were issued through escrow to payees as creditors of person who funded escrow with forged certified check, where there was no evidence to indicate that payees were not bona fide creditors or that they ought to have been suspicious of title company draft; nor were payees subject to personal defenses under UCC § 3-305(2) on grounds that payees dealt with title company since payees did not participate in immediate transaction by which title company gave out its draft, that is, exchange of forged cashier's check for draft. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Walsh, 34 Ill. App. 3d 458, 340 N.E.2d 106 (1st Dist. 1975).

43. Want or failure of consideration.

Bank which took note for value in good faith, and without notice of any defenses that maker might have was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1) and, under UCC § 3-305(2), took instrument free from maker's defense of lack of consideration. Worthey v. First State Bank, 573 S.W.2d 279 (Tex. Civ. App. Waco 1978).

Under UCC § 3-305(2) and § 3-408, lack of consideration and fraud in the inducement are not good defenses against a holder in due course. However, under UCC § 3-307(3), once a defense other than lack of consideration is raised, holder has burden of proving that he is holder in due course in all respects (action on promissory note, executed in real estate sale transaction, in which makers pleaded affirmative defenses of lack of consideration and fraud in the inducement and also counterclaimed for damages for such fraud). Kreutz v. Wolff, 560 S.W.2d 271 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Payee of check drawn on account of defendant company for labor and materials allegedly furnished to defendant by payee, which check was dishonored by drawee bank for insufficient funds, was not entitled to summary judgment in action to recover on check where defendant's defense was that such labor and materials were actually furnished to another company with similar name which also had same person as its president. Plaintiff payee, who was not holder in due course, was subject under UCC § 3-305(2) to any defense that defendant might make, since he had dealt with defendant; and although fact that defendant's defense was made in affidavit by person who was president of both companies might make such defense appear to be evasive, defense still created factual issue that was central to issue sued on, since there would be no consideration to support check if defendant had never dealt with plaintiff for purchase of such labor and materials. Davis Acoustical Corp. v. Matzen Constr., Inc., 57 A.D.2d 1018 (3d Dep't 1977).

In action by United States to enforce payment of money orders delivered to United States as payee to satisfy taxpayer's tax liability, against bank that issued money orders, United States was holder in due course and, thus, was not subject to defense of failure of consideration where bank issued money orders against check which had not cleared, where money orders were delivered to taxpayer who, although they were intended to be used to meet taxpayer's payroll, delivered them to United States to satisfy his tax liability, and where purchaser of money orders subsequently stopped payment on his check. United States v. Second Nat'l Bank, 502 F.2d 535 (5th Cir. Fla. 1974), cert. denied, 421 U.S. 912, 95 S. Ct. 1567, 43 L. Ed. 2d 777 (1975).

In transaction whereby sole shareholder of small corporation sold all his shares of stock to third person and corporation participated in transaction with purchaser as comaker of promissory note and written security agreement relating to corporate shares and various physical assets of corporation, corporation's execution of promissory note and security agreement was supported by sufficient consideration since seller, as part of sale transaction, agreed to refrain from competition with corporation, granted corporation option to purchase building in which business was conducted, and promised to remain on corporation's board of directors. Miller's Shoes & Clothing v. Hawkins Furn. & Appliances, Inc., 300 Minn. 460, 221 N.W.2d 113, 71 A.L.R.3d 629 (1974).

Where the defendant dealt with the holder in due course, the holder in due course is subject to the defenses that the consideration he was to give had failed, as it is only a failure of consideration with respect to a third person which is a limited defense under the Code. Brotherton v. McWaters, 438 P.2d 1 (Okla. 1968).

When the holder in due course is the indorsee of the defendant indorser, the indorser may raise against the holder in due course the defense of absence or lack of consideration because a defendant may always raise any defense which he has when sued by his indorsee which defense he has against such indorsee. Brotherton v. McWaters, 438 P.2d 1 (Okla. 1968).

Failure of consideration cannot be raised against a holder in due course. National State Bank v. Kleinberg, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 100 (1967, NY Sup); New York Plumbers Specialties Co. v. Valco Homes, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 587 (1967, NY Sup).

The defense of an unsatisfied condition upon which the paper was delivered is not a defense available against a holder in due course. National State Bank v. Kleinberg, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 100 (1967, NY Sup).

Where the buyer's note did not recite the consideration for which it was given, it may be shown that he was the purchaser under a freezer and food contract and that the details of the transaction were such that it was reasonable to conclude that the freezer aspect and the food aspect of the transaction were not severable so that a defense of failure of consideration as to either aspect could be raised by the buyer-maker against an ordinary holder of his note. Continental Supermarket Food Serv., Inc. v. Soboski, 210 Pa. Super. 304, 232 A.2d 216 (1967).

Under the Code the lack of consideration is now a matter of defense as contrasted with the former NIL under which a presumption arose that an instrument was given for consideration. Minner v. Childs, 116 Ga. App. 272, 157 S.E.2d 50 (1967).

A buyer may in the execution of a retail instalment contract waive, as against an assignee, any defenses except those enumerated in §§ 3-305(2) and 9-206(2), and as against the assignee of such a contract the buyer's alleged defenses of failure of consideration and subsequent promise and failure to repair the automobile which was the subject of the contract having been specifically waived in the instrument itself are unavailing. First Nat'l Bank v. Husted, 57 Ill. App. 2d 227, 205 N.E.2d 780 (2d Dist. 1965).

The test of a defense under paragraph (c) of subdivision (1) of this section is that the party must have had no reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge; and in determining what is a reasonable opportunity all relevant factors are to be taken into account, including the age and sex of the party, his intelligence, education, and business experience, his ability to read or understand English, the representations made to him and his reason for relying on them or have confidence in the person making them, the presence or absence of any third person who might read or explain the instrument to him, and the apparent necessity, or lack of it for acting without delay. Reading Trust Co. v. Hutchison, 35 Pa. D. & C.2d 790 (1964).

44. Incapacity of party.

Under UCC § 3-305(2)(b), estate of mental incompetent could avoid liability on promissory note where (1) incompetent's name had been affixed to note pursuant to power of attorney signed by incompetent during his incompetency and (2) plaintiff holders of note had dealt, although in good faith, with incompetent. Estate of Lucas v. Whiteley, 550 S.W.2d 767 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), ref. n.r.e. (Oct. 5, 1977).

Testimony of physical distress, debility or pain will not support inference of mental incapacity unless so severe as to render person unable to comprehend nature of his act and its consequences. Katski v. Boehm, 249 Md. 568, 241 A.2d 129 (1968).

45. Duress.

Under Uniform Commercial Code, defense of duress enjoys an even higher status than defense of lack of consideration. This is because under UCC § 3-305(2)(b), if effect of duress is to make obligation void, defense is not cut off, even by holder in due course (holding that party suing on note, who was not holder in due course, was subject to defense of duress as defense available in action on simple contract). Quazzo v. Quazzo, 136 Vt. 107, 386 A.2d 638 (1978).

In action by homeowner whose promissory note and mortgage were assigned to defendant by contractor and who was threatened with foreclosure when he refused to make further payments until job was completed, constitutional attack on defendant's rights as holder in due course under UCC § 3-305 on ground that statute denied hearing to debtors on underlying validity and acceptable performance of initial contractual obligations was rejected. Hardy v. Gissendaner, 369 F. Supp. 481 (M.D. Ala. 1974), aff'd, 508 F.2d 1207 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

46. Illegality of transaction.

Drawer of check given to pay gambling debt that was legal where incurred was not liable on check since gambling debts owed to a "for-profit" gambling business were unenforceable in forum state and, even if plaintiff-casino was holder in due course, under UCC § 3-305(2) it did not take instrument free of defenses of party to instrument with whom it had dealt. Condado Aruba Caribbean Hotel v. Tickel, 39 Colo. App. 51, 561 P.2d 23 (1977).

Regardless of whether payee's misrepresentations were sufficient to render him guilty of theft by deception, defenses under UCC § 3-305 of illegality and fraudulent misrepresentation were unavailable against bank, as holder-in-due-course of check, where drawer entered into home improvement contract with and gave check to payee upon payee's false representation that he had already purchased materials, where bank cashed check that same day, and where drawer subsequently stopped payment after discovering that no materials had been purchased. Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Brazil, 141 Ga. App. 388, 233 S.E.2d 482 (1977).

Defense that promissory note executed by defendant for purchase of carpet was illegal in that seller of carpet obtained note in violation of injunction not to engage in certain selling procedures was personal defense and, under UCC § 3-305(2)(b), not available against holder in due course who had no knowledge or notice of injunction. New Jersey Mtg. & Inv. Corp. v. Berenyi, 140 N.J. Super. 406, 356 A.2d 421 (App. Div. 1976).

Seller of tires who accepted therefor indorsed payroll check made out to another did not incur injury or damage by accepting check since accepting party was holder in due course, having given value, in good faith and without notice of any claim to instrument on part of any person; theft is not defense against such holder in due course. Watkins v. Sheriff of Clark County, 85 Nev. 246, 453 P.2d 611 (1969).

Under an Arkansas statute making contracts entered into in that state by an unregistered foreign corporation unenforceable, promissory notes executed by a resident to an unregistered foreign corporation as payee in connection with the purchase of merchandise were void ab initio, and the bank to which the notes were assigned was not a holder in due course, and the maker was not liable thereon. Pacific Nat'l Bank v. Hernreich, 240 Ark. 114, 398 S.W.2d 221 (1966).

A note signed as part of an illegal contract transaction, is tainted with illegality, and unenforceable, and an assignee of the note takes it subject to whatever defenses the maker would have against the payee. Valley Bank & Trust Co. v. Sciartelli, 38 Mass. App. Dec. 141 (1967).

47. Misrepresentation or fraud, generally.

Fraud in the essence, or fraud in the factum, is effective as a defense against a holder in due course under this section. First Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 661 (1956).

48. —Standards for determination.

Test of the defense of misrepresentation authorized by UCC § 3-305(2)(c) is whether there was excusable ignorance of the contents of the writing signed. The party signing it must not only have been ignorant of its contents, but must also have had no reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge thereof. In determining what is a reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge; all relevant factors must be taken into account, including the age and sex of the party signing; his intelligence, education, and business experience; his ability to read or to understand English; the representations made to him and his reason for relying on them or having confidence in the person who made them; the presence or absence of any third person who might have read or explained to the instrument to him, or any other possibility of obtaining independent information; and the apparent necessity, or lack of necessity, for acting without delay. Unless the misrepresentation meets this test, the defense is cut off by a holder in due course. Ricks v. Bank of Dixie, 352 So. 2d 798 (Miss. 1977).

Where bank purchased for valuable consideration note payable to bank and transferor of note as copayees, note was properly negotiated, and bank became holder of note in due course, trial court did not err in granting peremptory instruction for bank in bank's suit on note where maker's defense of misrepresentation under UCC § 3-305(2)(c) was supported only by evidence which showed that although maker was experienced businessman with college education, he failed to use ordinary care when he signed note without reading it on assumption that it was mere verification of terms of purchase order. In such case, maker's claim of misrepresentation had no legal substance. Ricks v. Bank of Dixie, 352 So. 2d 798 (Miss. 1977).

In determining whether fraud has been practiced in the inception of a note, a number of factors should be taken into account, including the age and sex of the maker, his intelligence, education and business experience, his ability to read or understand English, representations made to him and his reason to rely on them or have confidence in the person making them, the presence or absence of any third party who might read or explain it to him, and the apparent necessity or lack of it for acting without delay. First Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 661 (1956).

Where the three makers of a promissory note signed it in turn, without reading it or having it read, or seeking information from others present regarding it, and the payee's agent did not refuse to allow the makers to do any of these things, they could not, in relying on a defense of fraud in the inception, assert that they failed to understand the contract which they signed, even though one of the makers had little formal education and another found the print too fine for her to read, and the payee's agent was talking during the execution of the note. First Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 661 (1956).

49. —Misrepresentation as to nature of instrument.

The fact that the maker of a note may not have known that he was signing a note because he failed to read it does not constitute fraud as to the nature of the instrument particularly where the instrument was clearly titled. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

Provisions in this section under which lack of consideration and fraud may not be availed of against a holder in due course replace §§ 54, 94, and 96 of the former Negotiable Instruments Law, under which the "fraud" which the maker of an instrument could raise by way of defense even against a holder in due course was only fraud in the essence or "in the factum", as, for example, where the maker signs a negotiable instrument in belief that it was some other document, not where he was induced to sign by misrepresentation as to fact of liability to the payee. Meadow Brook Nat'l Bank v. Rogers, 44 Misc. 2d 250 (1964).

The concept of fraud as to the nature of the instrument involves an element of tort which requires an examination into the precise manner and mode in which the party was deceived and his actual knowledge at the time of the signing. Banccredit, Inc. v. Bethea, 68 N.J. Super. 62, 172 A.2d 10 (App. Div. 1961).

In New Jersey Mortg. & Invest. Co. v. Dorsey (1960) 60 NJ Super 299, 158 A2d 712, aff'd 33 NJ 448, 165 A2d 297, the court stated with respect to the prior law that the defense of fraud as to the nature of an instrument is based upon the concept that there is no contract because of the fraud; but the court qualified this by saying "provided the maker was not negligent in failing to ascertain the actual character of the instrument," and, after citing of cases, "compare UCC § 3-305(2)(c), Id comment 7." New Jersey Mtg. & Inv. Co. v. Dorsey, 60 N.J. Super. 299, 158 A.2d 712 (1960), aff'd, 33 N.J. 448, 165 A.2d 297 (1960).

The fact that a seller of roofing materials induced the purchaser to execute trade acceptances in payment thereof upon the representation that they were in the nature of a note which would be put through a bank did not constitute a defense to the purchaser, who had cancelled the order for the materials, as against a holder in due course of such trade acceptances, since the circumstances did not show that the maker was induced to sign the acceptances by misrepresentations with neither knowledge nor a reasonable opportunity to obtain knowledge of their character or essential terms. Equitable Disct. Corp. v. Fischer, 12 Pa. D. & C.2d 326 (1957).

50. —Misrepresentation as to other matters.

Where guarantor of promissory note attempts to assert defense of fraud in inducement, rights of purchasers of limited interest in note cannot be defeated on ground that they breached duty to inquire and thus failed to act in good faith because circumstances of which holders had knowledge did not rise to level indicating that failure to inquire revealed deliberate desire to evade knowledge. Corporacion Venezolana de Fomento v. Vintero Sales Corp., 452 F. Supp. 1108 (S.D.N.Y. 1978), remanded, 607 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Fraud in the inducement is an insufficient defense to a waiver of defenses provision in an assignment clause (Uniform Commercial Code, § 9-206, subd [1]) since fraudulent inducement is not a defense "of a type which may be asserted against a holder in due course", in that fraud in the inducement renders an obligation voidable, but not void, and is also not an available misrepresentation defense (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-305, subd [2], pars [b], [c]); however, plaintiff bank, the assignee of an equipment lease and guarantee executed by defendants as part of a franchise agreement with the assignor, a muffler franchisor, is not entitled to summary judgment to recover the balance due and owing under the lease and remains vulnerable to defendants' claim of fraud in the inducement at this juncture since it failed to submit any proof sufficient to meet its burden of establishing that it took the assignment in good faith and without notice of any claims or defenses; defendants' allegations that the assignor entered into the lease and franchise agreements with the express purpose of fleecing the defendants and that plaintiff had notice of the assignor's fraudulent conduct raise a triable issue of fact as to notice sufficient to defeat plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Chase Manhattan Bank v. Finger Lakes Motors, Inc., 102 Misc. 2d 48 (1979).

Defense of misrepresentation authorized by UCC § 3-305(2)(c) is a limited defense and may be asserted against a holder in due course only if a party was induced to sign an instrument because of misrepresentation that is coupled with fact that party signing instrument had neither knowledge of its character or essential terms, nor reasonable opportunity to obtain such knowledge. UCC § 3-305(2)(c) recognizes the defense of "real" or "essential" fraud, which is sometimes called "fraud in the essence" or "fraud in the factum," as being effective against a holder in due course. The defense extends to an instrument that is signed with knowledge that it is a negotiable instrument, but without knowledge of its essential terms. Ricks v. Bank of Dixie, 352 So. 2d 798 (Miss. 1977).

Where bank, as holder in due course, sued on note against maker and indorsers, defense that indorsers induced maker to sign note by misrepresentation was not available against bank as holder in due course pursuant to UCC § 3-305(2). Myers v. Bank of Prattville, 341 So. 2d 726 (Ala. 1977).

Regardless of whether payee's misrepresentations were sufficient to render him guilty of theft by deception, defenses under UCC § 3-305 of illegality and fraudulent misrepresentation were unavailable against bank, as holder-in-due-course of check, where drawer entered into home improvement contract with and gave check to payee upon payee's false representation that he had already purchased materials, where bank cashed check that same day, and where drawer subsequently stopped payment after discovering that no materials had been purchased. Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Brazil, 141 Ga. App. 388, 233 S.E.2d 482 (1977).

Payees of drafts issued by title company were holders in due course of drafts and were entitled to enforce them against title company, notwithstanding drafts were issued through escrow to payees as creditors of person who funded escrow with forged certified check, where there was no evidence to indicate that payees were not bona fide creditors or that they ought to have been suspicious of title company draft; nor were payees subject to personal defenses under UCC § 3-305(2) on grounds that payees dealt with title company since payees did not participate in immediate transaction by which title company gave out its draft, that is, exchange of forged cashier's check for draft. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Walsh, 34 Ill. App. 3d 458, 340 N.E.2d 106 (1st Dist. 1975).

Assignee of promissory note was holder in due course but was not entitled to summary judgment against individual defendants on their purported guarantee of notes, because defense of fraud in inducement had been raised and defendant had pleaded facts tending to establish that defense. Pioneer Credit Corp. v. Bon Bon Cleaners Corp., 38 A.D.2d 743 (2d Dep't 1972).

The statement of a check's drawer that she was induced to execute the check to payee by his knowingly false statement is not a defense to its payment when the instrument is in the hands of a holder in due course. Meadow Brook Nat'l Bank v. Rogers, 44 Misc. 2d 250 (1964).

Under the Georgia rule, fraud in procurement as a defense is confined to fraud of the holder and this view probably applies under the Code. Moore v. Southern Dist. Co., 107 Ga. App. 868, 132 S.E.2d 101 (1963).

The Code extends the concept of fraud as to the nature of the instrument to include an instrument signed with knowledge that it is a negotiable instrument, but without knowledge of its essential terms. Bancredit, Inc. v. Bethea, 68 N.J. Super. 62, 172 A.2d 10 (App. Div. 1961).

51. Procedural matters.

Where maker of promissory note raised defense of fraud in the inducement, holder had burden of showing that it was holder in due course, but having satisfied such burden, it was not subject to such defense. Federal Nat'l Mtg. Ass'n v. Gregory, 426 F. Supp. 282 (E.D. Wis. 1977).

Rights available to holder in due course against maker of notes provided by terms of UCC § 3-305 are enforced only after suit is filed and due notice is given to maker; thus, such rights do not deprive maker of hearing, but contemplate invocation only after opportunity is offered maker for hearing, thus providing ample due process. Fact that makers are barred from interposing certain defenses against holder in due course does not amount to denial of due process since makers are not foreclosed from pursuing their claims for damages or any other relief to which they are entitled against individual with whom they contracted. Hardy v. Gissendaner, 508 F.2d 1207 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

Assignee of promissory notes is not entitled to summary judgment against individual guarantors on their purported guarantee of the notes, because the defense of fraud in the inducement has been raised and guarantors have pleaded facts tending to establish that defense which is available against holder in due course. Pioneer Credit Corp. v. Bon Bon Cleaners Corp., 38 A.D.2d 743 (2d Dep't 1972).

Evidence raised fact questions as to whether note had been secured from makers by misrepresentation; held, makers were entitled to jury trial where their defense was false and fraudulent inducement in signing note. Kearney v. Commerce Inv. Co., 262 A.2d 804 (App. 1970).

On motion for summary judgment, "belief" that holder of note had knowledge of circumstances surrounding maker's financial troubles and incomplete performance was insufficient to show that defense exists within meaning of Code § 3-307(3). Factors & Note Buyers, Inc. v. Green Lane, Inc., 102 N.J. Super. 43, 245 A.2d 223 (L. Div. 1968).

It is unnecessary for the plaintiff to plead the facts showing consideration for the check on which he sues but there is not prohibition against the plaintiff so pleading or from adding such averments by amendment to his complaint. Minner v. Childs, 116 Ga. App. 272, 157 S.E.2d 50 (1967).

52. Miscellaneous claims or defenses.

Where owner of house gave note to builder, following substantial completion of construction, upon assumption that work would be completed and that improperly constructed items would be corrected, and builder indorsed note to bank as security for loan, bank's rights as holder in due course were not cut off by statute making subsequent holders subject to all defenses of consumer, or on theory of "close connectedness." Randolph Nat'l Bank v. Vail, 131 Vt. 390, 308 A.2d 588 (1973).

IV. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-306.

53. In general.

The purchaser of a note with knowledge of a default in the making of payments does not qualify as a holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1) and is thus subject, under UCC § 3-306, to any defenses that the maker has against the payee, including the defense of waiver. Rutherford v. Rutherford, 573 S.W.2d 299 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

Although bank that issued cashier's check to individual who subsequently became bankrupt had no "defense" to instrument within meaning of UCC §§ 3-305(2) and 3-306(c), based on fact that bankrupt had guaranteed certain notes held by bank, this did not preclude bank from setting-off guaranty obligations of bankrupt against amount of cashier's check in action by receiver of bankrupt's estate to collect on cashier's check. In re Johnson, 552 F.2d 1072 (4th Cir. Va. 1977).

Where holder, who bought note from Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation as liquidating agent of bank pursuant to court decree permitting sale of commercial paper held by bank, failed to sustain contention that bank was holder in due course of such note and that he as bank's transferee had acquired such status, claim of defendant maker against payee for misrepresentations made after note's execution, which allegedly caused maker to sustain loss in excess of balance due under note, raised genuine issues of material fact that, under UCC § 3-306(a) and (b), barred recovery by plaintiff. Perry v. Schlaikjer, 5 Mass. App. Ct. 866, 367 N.E.2d 863 (1977).

Where bank negligently failed to perfect its security interest in growing corn crop by omitting description of real estate as required by UCC § 9-402, thereby causing said collateral to be subordinated to interest of third party, this constituted an unjustifiable impairment of such collateral and served to discharge accommodation party from liability to extent of such impairment of collateral under UCC § 3-306. First Sec. Bank & Trust Co. v. Voelker (In re Estate of Voelker), 252 N.W.2d 400 (Iowa 1977).

Written agreement by parties to promissory note executed contemporaneously with note in question which merely recited that corporate maker was attempting to develop foreign source of crude oil for import into United States and, for services rendered to corporation, individuals who were payees of note would be entitled to receive fee of 1 per cent per barrel from expected sale of crude oil, standing alone, did not alter or modify promissory note. Texas Export Dev. Corp. v. Schleder, 519 S.W.2d 134 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Even if defendant's contention that the holder of a promissory note made by defendant was not a holder in due course, where it was found there were no valid claims or defenses to the note, the provision of UCC § 3-306 would in no way require that the holder be limited to only the consideration given by it for the note, and not the amount found to be due to the payees. Brock v. Adams, 79 N.M. 17, 439 P.2d 234 (1968).

54. Particular defenses.

A general partner of a limited partnership breaches its fiduciary duty and violates section 98 (subd [1], par [d]) of the Partnership Law, which provides that a general partner shall have no authority to possess partnership property, or assign his rights in specific partnership property, without the written consent or ratification by all the limited partners, where it indorses and sells negotiable notes to a bank that were given to it as a capital contribution by the limited partners of the limited partnership, these notes to become due in the future, and deposits the proceeds of the sale in its own corporate account; the silence of the limited partners upon their discovery of the sale does not constitute ratification of the general partner's act where there is nothing to show that the limited partners had any reason to suspect that the bank held the notes other than for an indebtedness of the limited partnership in furtherance of its business. Chemical Bank v. Haskell, 68 A.D.2d 347 (4th Dep't 1979), rev'd on other grounds, 51 N.Y.2d 85, 432 N.Y.S.2d 478, 411 N.E.2d 1339 (1980), reargument denied, 51 N.Y.2d 1009 (1980).

In bank's action to recover on promissory notes, where evidence revealed (1) that notes had been executed by defendant members of limited partnership to partnership itself, which had been formed to sell apartment projects, and (2) that corporate developer of project, which was sole general partner and managing agent of the limited partnership, had indorsed notes to itself in its corporate capacity, without required written consent or ratification of all of the limited partners, and has sold notes at discount to plaintiff, (1) plaintiff under UCC § 3-304(2) was not holder of notes in due course, since it knew that transferor had negotiated them to plaintiff without authority for transferor's sole benefit, (2) unauthorized indorsement of notes by limited partnership was wholly inoperative under UCC § 3-404(1) against both partnership itself and its members, and (3) even though partnership was not party defendant to action, in essence it was before the court, in the person of the defendant partners, within meaning of UCC § 3-306(d), since such partners were asserting their own rights and not rights of third person. Chemical Bank v. Ashenburg, 94 Misc. 2d 64 (1978).

In action by payee of bank money order issued by defendant bank for bank's refusal (on maker's stop-payment order) to honor instrument when payee presented it for payment, although bank asserted that payee was not holder in due course of instrument and thus was subject under UCC § 3-306(c) to defense of nondelivery, circumstantial evidence in case was sufficient for jury to conclude that maker had delivered instrument to payee's agent, since maker never explained how payee or his agent had obtained possession of instrument. Saad v. South Side Bank, 62 Ill. App. 3d 493, 379 N.E.2d 46 (1st Dist. 1978).

Under UCC § 9-306(2) secured party had right to require debtors to turn over to secured party for application on note proceeds of insurance check issued for damages to machinery rather than allowing debtors to use proceeds to repair machinery. Northside Properties, Inc. v. Ko-Ko Mart, Inc., 28 N.C. App. 532, 222 S.E.2d 267 (1976), review denied, 289 N.C. 615, 223 S.E.2d 392 (1976).

Assignee for benefit of creditors was not holder in due course of promissory notes made payable to order of assignor; accordingly, under UCC § 3-306 assignee took instruments subject to affirmative defenses, including counterclaim that notes were based on contract between assignor and makers which former breached causing makers to suffer damages. Kaufman v. Sbarro of Sunrise Mall, Inc., 47 A.D.2d 734 (1st Dep't 1975).

In a cause of action based on a commercial draft, inasmuch as no negotiation, assignment, or other transfer of the draft has taken place, all personal and real defenses available against the other two causes of action based upon the underlying agreement are available here as well. Impex Metals Corp. v. Oremet Chem. Corp., 333 F. Supp. 771 (S.D.N.Y. 1971).

Where holder acquired series of notes from payee, became holder in due course thereof, and accelerated balance due after maker defaulted, but, after discussions between maker, payee, and holder, holder accepted payment partly in cash and partly by way of new note, payable to payee and indorsed over to holder, holder was not holder in due course with respect to new note and was subject to any claims or defenses against payee of which holder had knowledge prior to accepting new note; course of conduct surrounding issuance of new note did not constitute renewal of existing notes, but rather resulted in partial payment and novation with respect to balance due; holder in due course status under old notes disappeared with extinguishment of total debt represented thereby and holder's status with respect to new note was determined by circumstances existing at time it received delivery of new note. Lazere Fin. Corp. v. Crystal Mart, Inc., 78 Misc.2d 379 (1974).

The fact that there is a discharge of a party to an original note does not require concluding that accommodation parties thereon are discharged because the liability of the accommodation party may be preserved under UCC § 3-306(1)(a). A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

55. —Defenses available in simple contract.

The purchaser of a note with knowledge of a default in the making of payments does not qualify as a holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1) and is thus subject, under UCC § 3-306, to any defenses that the maker has against the payee, including the defense of waiver. Rutherford v. Rutherford, 573 S.W.2d 299 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

Holder who is not holder in due course has much narrower rights than holder in due course and takes instrument, under UCC § 3-306(b) and § 3-408, subject to all defenses of any party which would be available in action on simple contract, including specifically the defenses of lack and failure of consideration. Kreutz v. Wolff, 560 S.W.2d 271 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Where defenses are raised against note, burden under UCC § 3-307 is on plaintiff to show that he is holder in due course in order to effectively cut off such defenses. If plaintiff fails to sustain his burden, his action is subject under UCC § 3-306(b) to all defenses that would be available on simple contract, as long as such defenses are in some way connected with debt sued on or transaction under which it arose.

Seamans v. Miller, 142 Ga. App. 147, 235 S.E.2d 542 (1977).

In action by real estate broker against clients to recover on promissory note given as commission from sale of property, clients had available all defenses which would be available in action on simple contract, including failure of consideration, since broker was payee of note and was not holder in due course. Duggins v. Simons, 517 S.W.2d 82 (Mo. 1974).

Bank was not absolutely obligated by UCC § 4-303 to honor its own cashier's check when presented by payee who was not holder in due course and was allegedly party to scheme to defraud bank, but was entitled under UCC §§ 3-306 and 3-408 to present defenses which would be available on simple contract including lack of consideration or fraud. TPO, Inc. v. FDIC, 487 F.2d 131 (3d Cir. N.J. 1973).

A holder who is not a holder in due course is subject to all defenses available in an action on a simple contract. Wyatt v. Mount Airy Cem., 209 Pa. Super. 250, 224 A.2d 787 (1966).

56. —Want or failure of consideration.

In action by payee against maker of promissory note, maker was entitled under UCC § 3-306(c) and UCC § 3-408 to show by parol evidence that consideration for note had failed allegedly because of payee's failure to fulfill obligations under business agreement with maker (reversing summary judgment for payee because material issue of fact existed as to alleged failure of consideration for note). Ralph Stachon & Assocs. v. Greenville Broadcasting Co., 35 N.C. App. 540, 241 S.E.2d 884 (1978).

Although plaintiffs, unless they had rights of holder in due course, took instrument subject to defense of want of consideration under UCC §§ 3-306(c) and 3-408, plaintiffs were entitled to recover on instrument under UCC § 3-307(2) where signatures were admitted and where defendant failed to establish defense of want of consideration. Smith v. Gentilotti, 371 Mass. 839, 359 N.E.2d 953 (1977).

In action by bank against maker to recover on note, where maker executed note and security agreement in connection with purchase of construction equipment and where equipment dealer assigned note to bank but failed to deliver equipment, bank was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302 and thus its claim on note was subject to defense of failure of consideration under UCC § 3-306; under evidence that bank failed to advise maker of note of its acquisition of note and security agreement, that it placed payment coupon book in hands of dealer and received all monthly payments from dealer, that close working relationship existed between bank and dealer and dealer was clothed with authority to collect and forward all payments due on transaction, and that agency and authority were further shown to exist by bank's authorizing return of machinery to dealer and terminating of balances due on purchase money paper, bank did not, under UCC § 3-307(3), sustain its burden of proving that it was holder in due course and under facts and circumstances known to and participated in by bank in connection with transaction, it could not be said that bank did not have reason to know that defense of failure of consideration existed. Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust Co. v. Riddle, 219 Kan. 550, 549 P.2d 927 (1976).

Where bank issued $150,000 certificate of deposit to payee under mistaken impression that $150,000 had been deposited in correspondent bank when, in fact, money was not deposited, bank was entitled to rescind certificate of deposit transaction on ground of failure of consideration; since payee gave no value for certificate, payee was not holder in due course under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 and, thus, under UCC § 3-306(c) payee was subject to defense of want or failure of consideration. Amos Flight Operations, Inc. v. Thunderbird Bank, 112 Ariz. 263, 540 P.2d 1244 (1975).

Savings certificates, issued by savings and loan association, which were not payable to order or to bearer were not negotiable instruments under UCC § 3-104; since they were not negotiable, under UCC § 3-805, purchasers of such certificates were not holders in due course and, thus, under UCC § 3-306 such purchasers took certificates subject to defense of failure or want of consideration. Jones v. United Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 515 S.W.2d 869 (Mo. Ct. App. 1974).

In transaction whereby sole shareholder of small corporation sold all his shares of stock to third person and corporation participated in transaction with purchaser as comaker of promissory note and written security agreement relating to corporate shares and various physical assets of corporation, corporation's execution of promissory note and security agreement was supported by sufficient consideration since seller, as part of sale transaction, agreed to refrain from competition with corporation, granted corporation option to purchase building in which business was conducted, and promised to remain on corporation's board of directors. Miller's Shoes & Clothing v. Hawkins Furn. & Appliances, Inc., 300 Minn. 460, 221 N.W.2d 113, 71 A.L.R.3d 629 (1974).

Where bank paid $10,000 to railroad on same day it took promissory note for that amount from defendant, and defendant received notice of that payment and thereafter acknowledged his obligation to bank when he paid bank $1,000 and signed, along with his wife, second renewal note upon which suit was brought, trial court did not err in finding that defense of want of consideration was not established. Unruh v. Nevada Nat'l Bank, 88 Nev. 427, 498 P.2d 1349 (1972).

A note given by maker to payee for damage to the latter's truck which contained the notation that "it is agreed that this note is conditional and does not settle out any claim or demand payee has against the maker" was without consideration. Deems v. Wilson, 114 Ga. App. 341, 151 S.E.2d 230 (1966).

57. —Nonperformance of condition precedent.

In action on check that plaintiff received from person to whom maker had negotiated it, and as to which plaintiff alleged that it was holder in due course, defense that maker and person to whom maker gave check had agreed that check would not be deposited until such person received authorization from maker, if established, would constitute valid defense under UCC § 3-306(c) to plaintiff's claim if plaintiff should fail to prove that it was holder in due course. American State Bank v. Richendifer, 36 Or. App. 199, 584 P.2d 323 (1978).

Where delivery of check was conditioned on its acceptance as settlement of note held by payee, and where payee did not deposit check for 11 months, proffered settlement was not accepted within reasonable time and check in question was subject to defense based on its conditional delivery and good against any person not holder in due course under UCC § 3-306(3); payee was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302 in that his own conversation with plaintiff preceding delivery of check, together with notation on check, were ample evidence that payee had actual notice of drawer's defense. Losson v. Whitson, 535 S.W.2d 406 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Under UCC §§ 3-305 and 3-306, agreement that any renewal note would be endorsed by all original endorsers, if proved, would make note unenforceable against guarantors, where delivery was conditional upon the procurement of all such endorsements. Long Island Trust Co. v. International Inst. for Packaging Educ., Ltd., 38 N.Y.2d 493, 344 N.E.2d 377 (1976).

Parol testimony is admissible as between immediate parties to negotiable instrument to prove that note although regular on its face, was delivered on condition that it be used only to provide working capital for a named corporation and then only in event that four other persons advanced like amount, and that condition precedent was not complied with. Kelley v. Carson, 120 Ga. App. 450, 171 S.E.2d 150 (1969).

Under § 3-401 of the Uniform Commercial Code, no person is liable on an instrument unless his signature appears thereon, and under § 3-306(c), except as to a holder in due course, no person is liable thereon unless there has been a delivery of instrument, and practically the same rule with reference to execution and delivery was in effect under the former Illinois Negotiable Instruments Law. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

58. —Breach of fiduciary duty.

A general partner of a limited partnership breaches its fiduciary duty and violates section 98 (subd [1], par [d]) of the Partnership Law, which provides that a general partner shall have no authority to possess partnership property, or assign his rights in specific partnership property, without the written consent or ratification by all the limited partners, where it indorses and sells negotiable notes to a bank that were given to it as a capital contribution by the limited partners of the limited partnership, these notes to become due in the future, and deposits the proceeds of the sale in its own corporate account; the silence of the limited partners upon their discovery of the sale does not constitute ratification of the general partner's act where there is nothing to show that the limited partners had any reason to suspect that the bank held the notes other than for an indebtedness of the limited partnership in furtherance of its business. Chemical Bank v. Haskell, 68 A.D.2d 347 (4th Dep't 1979), rev'd on other grounds, 51 N.Y.2d 85, 432 N.Y.S.2d 478, 411 N.E.2d 1339 (1980), reargument denied, 51 N.Y.2d 1009 (1980).

Defendants, the limited partners in a partnership formed by the corporate developer of an apartment house project to syndicate the sale of the project, who executed personal promissory notes to the partnership as part of the purchase price for their shares in the partnership of which the corporate developer was the sole general partner and managing agent, may raise as a defense against plaintiff bank in an action on the notes the breach of fiduciary duty by the general partner, which, after first approaching plaintiff bank for a corporate loan, indorsed the notes from the partnership to itself in its corporate capacity and then to plaintiff without the written consent or ratification of all the limited partners in violation of section 98 of the Partnership Law, since plaintiff, by purchasing the notes at a discount with knowledge that the notes were negotiated for the individual purposes of the general partner in breach of its fiduciary duty, is not entitled to the rights of a holder in due course (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-304, subd [2]). The defense of breach of fiduciary duty belongs to defendants as limited partners and makers of the notes and not to the partnership since defendants, who have each been damaged by the breach of the fiduciary duty and stand to lose part of their interest in the partnership assets, are asserting their own rights and not the "claim of any third person". Chemical Bank v. Ashenburg, 94 Misc.2d 64 (1978).

Bank which permitted new president and sole stockholder of corporation to cash checks drawn payable to corporation, in derogation of corporate resolution on file with bank which only authorized officers to endorse checks for deposit, and collection, was not a holder in due course, and was liable to creditors of bankrupt corporation for total amount of checks which it permitted sole stockholder to cash rather than deposit to corporation's account. Maley v. East Side Bank, 361 F.2d 393 (7th Cir. Ill. 1966).

59. —Claims of third persons.

In action on note given in payment for land, where (1) note was signed by both vendees and made payable to vendor, who died thereafter, (2) vendor's wife, individually and as executrix of vendor's estate, transferred note to plaintiff, and (3) defendant vendees contended since vendor's will did not authorize executrix to sell estate's assets, her transfer of note affected only her individual half interest therein, other half interest in note was still owned by vendor's estate, and plaintiff therefore was not entitled to judgment for full amount of note, court held that judgment awarding plaintiff full amount of note was proper under (1) UCC § 3-307(2), dealing with recovery by holder on instrument as to which signatures have been established, in absence of any defense to such recovery, and (2) UCC § 3-306(d), providing that claim of third person to an instrument is not available as a defense to party liable thereon unless such third person defends action for party liable. Cowhouse Dairy, Inc. v. Agristor Credit Corp., 566 S.W.2d 339 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

In action by holder of promissory note to recover payment from maker, maker could not assert defense that holder as trustee of trust estate acquired notes from trust estate in violation of statute; under UCC § 3-306(d), maker could not defend on basis of holder's alleged violation of his fiduciary duty to beneficiary. Furthermore, maker's payment of debt, even though made with knowledge of holder's wrongful acquisition of notes, would discharge maker's liability thereon under UCC § 3-603(1). Harvey v. Casebeer, 531 S.W.2d 206 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Where bank has issued draft for value, delivers it to one who remits it to putative creditor, and thereafter, at remitter's request, stops payment and refunds consideration, this may constitute defense to action on instrument by payee, provided remitter has valid claim to instrument and provided he defends action on behalf of bank, urging such claim. Fulton Nat'l Bank v. Delco Corp., 128 Ga. App. 16, 195 S.E.2d 455 (1973).

60. —Setoff.

Bank which took four notes from debtor which were executed to debtor by third party, under collateral assignment signed by debtor who did not indorse notes themselves, as collateral for note executed by debtor to bank was mere assignee of such notes and not holder or holder in due course thereof; collateral assignment gave bank right to sue on notes, subject under UCC § 3-306(a) to all defenses and equities to which notes were subject while in debtor's hands; and in suit by bank against third party who executed and transferred notes to debtor, third party could introduce evidence of alleged offsets to notes based on unpaid judgment obtained by third party against debtor. Estrada v. River Oaks Bank & Trust Co., 550 S.W.2d 719 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 27, 1977).

Although Uniform Commercial Code does not define "defense" as term is used in UCC § 3-306(b), § 3-306(b) makes available defense of setoff in action by transferee of negotiable instrument unless transferee is holder in due course. Community Bank v. Ell, 278 Or. 417, 564 P.2d 685 (1977), reh'g denied, 279 Or. 245, 566 P.2d 903 (1977).

Where depository bank, as holder of check which defendant drew in favor of bank's depositor and then stopped payment thereon, brought suit on drawer's contract under UCC § 3-413(2), "defenses" which drawer was entitled to assert under UCC § 3-306(b) included only those defenses connected with instrument itself, and did not include setoff based on separate and distinct transactions between drawer and original payee. Bank of Wyandotte v. Woodrow, 394 F. Supp. 550 (W.D. Mo. 1975).

Depository bank which took bill of exchange without depositor's indorsement was not holder; bank did not become holder in due course by adding indorsement after notice of dishonor, and was subject to defense of payor's right of set off against payee. United Overseas Bank v. Veneers, Inc., 375 F. Supp. 596 (D. Md. 1973).

Where employer gives employee a note for gross wages, the employer was entitled to setoff against the payee's claim on the note the amount that should have been deducted for federal withholding taxes. Lukens v. Goit, 430 P.2d 607 (Wyo. 1967).

61. —Fraud or illegality.

In action by Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), as owner-holder of note purchased from bank for which FDIC was receiver, to recover on such note from defendant maker, (1) defendant under UCC § 3-306(d) could not assert FDIC's allegedly illegal acquisition of note as defense, since only the bank in receivership or such bank's shareholders had standing to assert such defense, and (2) if defendant satisfied note by payment to FDIC, he would not risk double liability on note in event bank's sale of note to FDIC should be set aside, but would be discharged from liability under UCC § 3-603(1), (applying South Carolina law; also holding that oral agreement to extend time for paying note was unenforceable under non-UCC statute of frauds). FDIC v. Moore, 448 F. Supp. 493 (D.C.S.C. 1978).

Under an exception to the parol evidence rule, extrinsic evidence may be admitted to show fraud in the inducement of a the written sales contract. UCC § 3-306(b) makes this rule applicable to an action on a promissory note where the holder of the note is not a holder in due course. However, if a negotiable instrument is clear and express in its terms, it cannot be varied by parol agreements or representations by the payee that the maker or a surety will not be liable on the instrument, since such representations do not constitute fraud in the inducement (observing that some sort of trick, artifice, or device must have been employed by the payee, in addition to his representation that the maker would not be liable, to constitute fraud in the inducement of the instrument). Town N. Nat'l Bank v. Broaddus, 569 S.W.2d 489 (Tex. 1978).

Where bank loaned $25,000 to officer of corporation that was heavily indebted to bank and could not borrow such money itself, and where officer's note to bank for such sum, which was used by corporation, was executed allegedly because of fraudulent assurances by bank official that bank would not hold maker of note personally liable thereon but would instead look to corporation for payment, summary judgment on note in favor of bank would be reversed because defendant maker alleged sufficient facts to show (1) that bank was not holder in due course of such note under UCC § 3-302(1)(b), and (2) that bank therefore under UCC § 3-306(b) took note subject to all defenses of maker that would be available in action on simple contract, including defense of fraud in inducement. Thompson v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 142 Ga. App. 174, 235 S.E.2d 582 (1977), rev'd on other grounds, 240 Ga. 494, 241 S.E.2d 253 (1978).

In action by payee bank against maker of note, summary judgment was erroneously granted where maker introduced affidavit stating that bank had agreed that renewals on note were with condition that maker would be relieved of liability if sale of corporation was not finalized, raising issue of fraud in the inducement under UCC §§ 3-302, 3-306(2), and 3-408. Viracola v. Dallas Int'l Bank, 508 S.W.2d 472 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e. (July 17, 1974).

A person who takes a note with notice that it is overdue is not a holder in due course and a holder who obtains his title from a holder in due course cannot enforce the instrument when he was a party to some fraud or illegality affecting it. Brown v. Scales, 109 Ga. App. 138, 135 S.E.2d 525 (1964).

62. Procedural matters.

In action by payee-bank on promissory note which was unconditional on its face, parol evidence could not be used to inject conditions on obligations which were not apparent from face of note, and there was no merit to makers' contention that their agreement with payee bank, to transfer note to newly-formed corporation, was admissible as evidence that note was delivered for special purpose. Tatum v. Bank of Cumming, 135 Ga. App. 675, 218 S.E.2d 677 (1975).

Where holder has made prima facie case showing his right to payment under UCC § 3-306, holder is entitled to temporary injunction to keep funds, located in Illinois and represented by a nonnegotiable certificate of deposit from passing to out-of-state assignee. D. Nelsen & Sons v. General Am. Dev. Corp., 6 Ill. App. 3d 6, 284 N.E.2d 478 (1st Dist. 1972).

Although want or failure of consideration may be raised as a defense in an action upon a negotiable instrument against any person not having the rights of a holder in due course, it must be pleaded as an affirmative defense and may not be raised under a general denial. Rochester Iron & Metal Co. v. Capellupo, 62 Misc. 2d 264 (1969).

The allegation of the defense of failure of consideration in an answer filed, by the maker of the note to an action thereon by a transferee, casts the burden on the plaintiff of establishing that he or some person under whom he claimed was in all respects a holder in due course, and raised a general issue of material fact. Pitillo v. Demetry, 112 Ga. App. 643, 145 S.E.2d 792 (1965).

V. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-302.

63. In general.

The maker's defenses to the payment of a promissory note to the effect that the tractor, the purchase price of which was represented by the promissory note, was defective and was returned to the seller for repairs and thereafter seized in a suit filed against the seller by a finance company, were unavailable against the plaintiff bank which was a holder in due course of the paper. First Nat'l Bank v. Marcinkowska, 279 F. Supp. 251 (N.D. Miss. 1967).

Whether or not one is a holder in due course does not depend upon his diligence or negligence. Securities Inv. Co. v. Cohen, 241 Miss. 549, 131 So. 2d 439 (1961).

Where the blank spaces in a conditional sales contract and a note sued on were filled in before the instruments were assigned to a purchaser for value in due course, the conditional purchaser could not defend the action upon the ground that the contract when signed by him specified monthly payments totaling less than the balance shown to be due on the contract as filled out. Garnett v. Associates Dist. Corp., 233 Miss. 849, 103 So. 2d 368 (1958).

Where an employee indorsed a check payable to his order, without any restriction or limitation, and subsequently lost the check and a stop payment was ordered by the bank, plaintiff who cashed the check and received the full amount in good faith, was entitled to the amount as against the employee who failed to restrict an indorsement. American Book Co. v. White Sys. of Jackson, 223 Miss. 510, 78 So. 2d 582 (1955).

Where a check was genuine and was duly indorsed in blank by the payee named therein, and the check was negotiable even though in possession of a person not entitled thereto, an innocent purchaser for value becomes a holder in due course. Bruce v. State, 217 Miss. 368, 64 So. 2d 332 (1953).

Every holder is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course subject to limitation that if negotiator's title was defective, the holder must prove that he, or his predecessor in title, acquired the title as holder in due course. Credit Indus. Co. v. Adams County Lumber & Supply Co., 215 Miss. 282, 60 So. 2d 790 (1952).

Checks do not become the property of the payee until there has been a valid delivery to it or to its agent or servant authorized to accept it, or something equivalent to delivery and acceptance, and therefore, where checks were delivered to the payee's agent, who was not authorized to accept them on behalf of the payee, the agent was accountable therefor to the maker, and could not be convicted of embezzlement from the payee upon his failure to deliver the checks to it. Reese v. State, 192 Miss. 147, 5 So. 2d 236 (1941).

Where title of one negotiating note was defective, holder had burden of proving they were holders in due course. Cassedy v. Wells, Jones, Wells & Lipscomb, 162 Miss. 102, 137 So. 472, 79 A.L.R. 1133 (1931).

There was no bad faith imputable to purchaser of trust deed and note because purchaser saw affidavit by makers that there was no infirmity. Guaranty Inv. & Loan Co. v. Stevens, 161 Miss. 473, 137 So. 335 (1931).

Where one negotiating loan charged usurious commission, purchaser of notes and trust deed and its assigned held to be holders in due course. Guaranty Inv. & Loan Co. v. Stevens, 161 Miss. 473, 137 So. 335 (1931).

One acquiring demand note for value without notice in reasonable time after execution held holder in due course. Wilson v. Stark, 146 Miss. 498, 112 So. 390 (1927).

That consideration of note is executory contract does not prevent one being holder in due course. Smith v. Ellis, 142 Miss. 444, 107 So. 669 (1926).

64. Decisions under Code 1942 § 57.

The delivery of a note to one of two or more payees will operate as a delivery to all. Vaughn v. Vaughn, 238 Miss. 342, 118 So. 2d 620 (1960).

Where buyer of automobile signed conditional sale contract with blank spaces, expecting seller's salesman to fill in the blanks, he thereby made seller his agent, so that balance stated in the contract was binding on buyer where contract was in hands of a bona fide purchaser for value which took the instrument in due course without notice. Universal Credit Co. v. Moore, 173 Miss. 740, 163 So. 142 (1935).

Payee's negotiation of instrument in violation of agreement with payer no defense as against innocent purchaser for value without notice. Currie-McGraw Co. v. Friedman, 135 Miss. 701, 100 So. 273 (1924).

65. Decisions under Code 1942 § 101.

Where holders in due course at the time of purchasing trade acceptances had no notice or knowledge of any dispute between the defendant and the sellers of merchandise, and made no promise to carry out any agreement that might have been made between such sellers and defendant, either prior to the purchase of the trade acceptances or prior to the receipt of promissory notes, which were a renewal of the indebtednesses represented by the trade acceptances, defendant's defense that the trade acceptances had been given in reliance upon seller's promissory representation fraudulently made without intention of carrying them out could not prevail. Salitan v. Ford, 231 Miss. 616, 97 So. 2d 232 (1957).

§ 75-3-303. Value and consideration.

(a) An instrument is issued or transferred for value if:

(1) The instrument is issued or transferred for a promise of performance, to the extent the promise has been performed;

(2) The transferee acquires a security interest or other lien in the instrument other than a lien obtained by judicial proceeding;

(3) The instrument is issued or transferred as payment of, or as security for, an antecedent claim against any person, whether or not the claim is due;

(4) The instrument is issued or transferred in exchange for a negotiable instrument; or

(5) The instrument is issued or transferred in exchange for the incurring of an irrevocable obligation to a third party by the person taking the instrument.

(b) "Consideration" means any consideration sufficient to support a simple contract. The drawer or maker of an instrument has a defense if the instrument is issued without consideration. If an instrument is issued for a promise of performance, the issuer has a defense to the extent performance of the promise is due and the promise has not been performed. If an instrument is issued for value as stated in subsection (a), the instrument is also issued for consideration.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-303.

11. In general.

Bank which issued a cashier's check to replace a personal check took the personal check in good faith and for value and was thus holder in due course under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 where bank manager ascertained validity of check by telephone call to drawer's bank prior to drawer's placement of stop payment order on check. Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co. v. Murphy, 369 F. Supp. 11 (W.D. Pa. 1974), aff'd, 517 F.2d 1398 (3d Cir. Pa. 1975).

In class action, brought by purchasers of promissory notes secured by mortgages, against seller's reorganization trustee, notes met definition of "note" as defined by UCC § 3-104 and were negotiable and unconditional under UCC §§ 3-105, 3-112 and 3-119; purchasers were holders in due course for value under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 and notes were properly negotiated by bankrupt by endorsement and delivery under UCC § 3-202; under UCC § 3-414 reorganization trustee was bound on endorser's contract. Hall v. Security Planning Serv., Inc., 371 F. Supp. 7 (D. Ariz. 1974).

A bank accepting a negotiated instrument in satisfaction of an antecedent debt is a holder for value and in due course. Citizens Bank v. National Bank of Commerce, 334 F.2d 257 (10th Cir. Okla. 1964).

A bank which accepts a check from the payee for deposit, credits his account with the amount thereof and permits him to withdraw the full proceeds of the check prior to notice of its dishonor has given value for the check to the extent that it has a security interest in the item and thereupon becomes a holder in due course of the check. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

The Code was also cited in a pre-code decision that a bank was not a holder in due course upon merely crediting the depositor's account. Bankers Trust Co. v. Nagler, 16 A.D.2d 477 (1st Dep't 1962).

Under both the Negotiable Instruments Law and the Uniform Commercial Code a bank which received a deposit of two checks and paid checks drawn by the depositor on the total amount of these checks was a holder for value of the two deposited checks, notwithstanding the fact that they were deposited with the usual bank deposit slip reciting that the item was received by the bank for collection only. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co., 161 F. Supp. 790 (D. Mass. 1958).

12. Performance of agreed consideration.

Where trade acceptances were given to attorneys as a retainer for services to be performed by the attorneys, and unknown to the attorneys the trade acceptances had been obtained by fraud, which however, was not such as to constitute a defense against holders in due course under §§ 3-305(2)(c) and 3-306(b) of the instant chapter, and where prior to taking the acceptances the attorneys had rendered some services but there was no evidence as to their value, it was held that the “agreed consideration” under the instant section for the acceptances was the performance of legal services, that under § 3-307(3) once a defense to the instruments was shown to exist, the burden was on the attorneys to show that they were holders in due course, that the attorneys had failed to show the extent to which the agreed consideration had been performed and therefore that they had not shown to what extent they took for value under the instant section, the result being that they had not shown themselves to be holders in due course under § 3-302 of the instant chapter. Korzenik v. Supreme Radio, Inc., 347 Mass. 309, 197 N.E.2d 702 (1964).

Where trade acceptances were transferred to attorneys as a retainer for services to be performed by the attorneys, the fact that one of the attorneys had paid to co-counsel part of the money he collected on the assigned items was not evidence that he had made an irrevocable commitment to a third person within the meaning of the instant section. Korzenik v. Supreme Radio, Inc., 347 Mass. 309, 197 N.E.2d 702 (1964).

13. Credit as value.

Bank's giving provisional credit for check it deposited in account of bank's customer does not constitute parting with value for check under UCC § 3-303. Marine Midland Bank-New York v. Graybar Elec. Co., 41 N.Y.2d 703, 363 N.E.2d 1139, 97 A.L.R.3d 1104 (1977).

Whether bank took note in payment of outstanding loan or as collateral for issuance of loan was immaterial with respect to bank's status as holder in due course since holder who takes negotiable instrument as collateral for loan takes for value within UCC § 3-303(a) and may thereby be holder in due course. Millman v. State Nat'l Bank, 323 A.2d 723 (D.C. 1974).

Where individual testified that greeting service owed him a large sum which he had invested in the business, that certain debentures were assigned to him as payment or security for this debt, and that after making the assignment he paid off some corporate obligations and placed some money in the corporation's account which was used to pay salaries, there was sufficient evidence to show that assignment was for value within UCC § 3-303. Martin Mgt. Corp. v. Farner, 124 Ga. App. 552, 184 S.E.2d 597 (1971).

Value has been given where full amount of credit given for drafts has been withdrawn. F & M Nat'l Bank v. Boardwalk Nat'l Bank, 101 N.J. Super. 528, 245 A.2d 35 (App. Div. 1968), certification denied, 52 N.J. 492, 246 A.2d 452 (1968).

Value was given for full amount of credit extended, whether or not withdrawals were actually made. Washington Trust Co. v. Fatone, 104 R.I. 426, 244 A.2d 848 (1968), appeal denied, appeal dismissed, 106 R.I. 168, 256 A.2d 490 (1969).

The Code adopts the better and majority view that the mere giving of credit without more is not the giving of value. Atkinson v. Englewood State Bank, 141 Colo. 436, 348 P.2d 702 (1960).

14. Payment of, or security for, antecedent claim.

Bank gave value for full amount of check at time that it accepted deposit, where bank and depositor had entered security agreement giving bank floating lien on depositor's chattel paper and where check represented part of proceeds of depositor's conditional sales contract and where bank had made prior loan to depositor in expectation of deposit of check at issue. Bowling Green, Inc. v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 425 F.2d 81 (1st Cir. Mass. 1970), but see, Maine Family Fed. Credit Union v. Sun Life Assurance Co., 727 A.2d 335 (Me. 1999).

Where a bank, which under UCC § 3-202(1) was holder of note delivered to it with necessary endorsements of both copayees, took such note (1) “for value” under UCC §§ 3-302(1)(a) and 3-303(a) because it had taken it as collateral for loan to note's copayees, and (2) “in good faith” under UCC § 3-302(1)(b) and “without notice” under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) of any claims against note's copayees, court held (1) that bank was holder in due course of such note under UCC § 3-

302(1), (2) that under UCC § 3-305(1), bank took note free from all claims to it by any person, and (3) that bank therefore was entitled to priority of payment over judgment creditor of note's copayees in situation where, prior to copayees' transfer of note to bank, judgment creditor of copayees had served writ of garnishment on maker of note. Bricks Unlimited, Inc. v. Agee, 672 F.2d 1255 (5th Cir. 1982).

An award of summary judgment in favor of plaintiff is affirmed where defendant insurer delivered to its insured a draft drawn on itself and payable through its bank in an attempt to honor its apparent obligation under an automobile theft policy, which draft was payable also to plaintiff due to plaintiff's security interest in the insured vehicle, and plaintiff deposited the draft in its bank account after the insured indorsed the check over to plaintiff thereby extinguishing plaintiff's security interest in the vehicle, following which defendant stopped payment on the draft upon learning that its insured's claim was fraudulent, at which time plaintiff's account was debited with the amount of the dishonored draft and plaintiff demanded of the defendant payment of the draft. Since the check was drawn by the drawer on itself as drawee, payable through its bank, the bank was not authorized to pay the draft, but was merely designated as a collecting bank to present the draft to the drawer-drawee for payment (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-120), and because the draft was not drawn without recourse, and there was no drawee other than defendant itself who accepted responsibility for it, defendant remained liable thereon (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-413, subd [2]); although the draft was principally issued to the insured, plaintiff's name was added as payee only to protect its duly filed security interest in the insured vehicle, and upon issuance of the draft defendant acknowledged its insured's claim that the vehicle had been stolen, thus entitling plaintiff to rely upon that representation and to accept the draft as a holder in due course in payment and release of its lien on the vehicle, constituting the giving of value for the draft (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-302, subd [1]; § 3-303, subds [b], [c]); after defendant stopped payment on the draft it remained liable on it to plaintiff as a holder in due course. GMAC v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 67 A.D.2d 316 (4th Dep't 1979).

In action by plaintiff bank against defendant bank for wrongfully stopping payment on $10,000 money order issued by defendant which named plaintiff as payee, where evidence showed (1) that defendant had issued money order at instance of seller of irrigation system, which wished to present buyer's check for $10,000 to defendant while buyer still had sufficient funds in his account with defendant, (2) that at time defendant issued money order, it did not know that buyer had placed stop-payment order on check buyer had given to seller, (3) that seller's agent became aware of such stop order after defendant had issued money order in suit, (4) that seller's agent, on giving money order to plaintiff, asked plaintiff to apply it to loan made by plaintiff to seller, (5) that plaintiff complied with such request, made the necessary credit entries on its loan ledger, and put money order into usual channels for collection, (6) that money order was thereafter returned to plaintiff marked "payment stopped," and (7) that plaintiff thereafter reversed credit entries made with respect to loan to seller and returned principal balance of loan to its original amount, court held (1) that defendant's right both to assert defense of failure of consideration (based on buyer's stopping payment on buyer's check) and to stop payment on money order issued by it depended on whether plaintiff was holder in due course of such money order; (2) that plaintiff was not holder in due course because it had given no "value" for money order within meaning of UCC § 3-303(b), dealing with payment of antecedent claims; (3) that such failure to give value was shown by plaintiff's reversal of provisional credit entries made with respect to loan to seller; (4) that defendant was therefore entitled to stop payment on money order; and (5) that defense of failure of consideration was available to defendant on remand of case to trial court. State Bank v. American Nat'l Bank, 266 N.W.2d 496, 97 A.L.R.3d 706 (Minn. 1978).

Although antecedent claim may constitute value under UCC § 3-303(b), where no antecedent claim existed, holder of note (1) did not take instrument for value, (2) was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(a), and (3) held note subject to defense of lack of consideration. Quazzo v. Quazzo, 136 Vt. 107, 386 A.2d 638 (1978).

Where creditor bank, on date loan was due and after being informed by debtor that debtor would default, set off credit balances in debtor's accounts against amount of debt; where remittance check of debtor's customer, pursuant to prior agreement between debtor and bank, was taken by bank from debtor's post-office lockbox and indorsed and deposited in debtor's account; where after depositing such check, bank then exercised alleged right of setoff against it; and where customer then issued stop-payment order on check and bank sued customer for payment thereof, alleging that it had acquired holder-in-due-course status as to such check and that its right to receive payment was not affected by debtor's alleged failure to discharge contractual obligations to customer, (1) bank acted prematurely in setting off deposits in debtor's account on date loan was due; (2) although such premature setoff arguably became operative on following day, it did not determine issue as to whether bank was entitled to payment on check; (3) bank was mere holder of check under UCC § 1-201(20) and not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1), since it did not give value for check under UCC § 3-303(b) and UCC § 4-208(1); (4) failure to give value stemmed from fact that bank, after customer issued stop-payment order on check, reversed its provisional credit of check to debtor's account and thus reinstated that part of debtor's obligation against which such credit was set off; and (5) since bank did not give value for check and thus was not holder in due course, it could not recover on check. Marine Midland Bank-New York v. Graybar Elec. Co., 41 N.Y.2d 703, 363 N.E.2d 1139, 97 A.L.R.3d 1104 (1977).

Endorsee of check on which payment had been stopped for failure of consideration was not entitled to recover value of check where endorsee, who merely agreed to attempt to collect check and to apply collected funds, if any, to payee's account, did not accept check in payment of payee's antecedent debt and was not holder for value under UCC § 3-303. Wilson Supply Co. v. West Artesia Transmission Co., 505 S.W.2d 312 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e., 511 S.W.2d 261 (Tex. 1974).

Where corporation assigned note to government as security for payment of tax liens, government was holder in due course under UCC § 3-303(b). Coventry Care, Inc. v. United States, 366 F. Supp. 497 (W.D. Pa. 1973).

Bank which accepted a cashier's check in payment of an antecedent debt would have been a holder in due course where it acted in good faith and without notice that the debtor had committed a fraud in securing the money represented by the check. Nicklaus v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., 258 F. Supp. 482 (E.D. Ark. 1965), aff'd, 369 F.2d 683 (8th Cir. Ark. 1966).

A holder takes commercial paper for value to the extent that he acquires a security interest therein or takes it as security for an antecedent claim; and is a holder in due course where he takes the paper for value, in good faith, and without notice that it is overdue, has been dishonored, or is subject to the claim or defense of another person. Finance Co. of Am. v. Wilson, 115 Ga. App. 280, 154 S.E.2d 459 (1967).

A bank accepting a negotiated instrument in satisfaction of an antecedent debt is a holder for value and in due course. Citizens Bank v. National Bank of Commerce, 334 F.2d 257 (10th Cir. Okla. 1964).

A bank which accepts a check from the payee for deposit, credits his account with the amount thereof and permits him to withdraw the full proceeds of the check prior to notice of its dishonor has given value for the check to the extent that it has a security interest in the item and thereupon becomes a holder in due course of the check. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

15. —Antecedent claim as to partial amount.

Bank gave value for full amount of check at time that it accepted deposit, where bank and depositor had entered security agreement giving bank floating lien on depositor's chattel paper and where check represented part of proceeds of depositor's conditional sales contract and where bank had made prior loan to depositor in expectation of deposit of check at issue. Bowling Green, Inc. v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 425 F.2d 81 (1st Cir. Mass. 1970), but see, Maine Family Fed. Credit Union v. Sun Life Assurance Co., 727 A.2d 335 (Me. 1999).

Depository bank took check "for value", at least to extent of $5,024.85, amount which it took in payment of antecedent debt where depositor had overdraft in that amount. Bowling Green, Inc. v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 307 F. Supp. 648 (D. Mass. 1969), aff'd, 425 F.2d 81 (1st Cir. Mass. 1970), but see, Maine Family Fed. Credit Union v. Sun Life Assurance Co., 727 A.2d 335 (Me. 1999).

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; (3) where bank endorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank; and (4) where bank also gave owner its check, payable to corporation, for remaining proceeds of cashier's checks and owner endorsed and deposited such check in corporation's account, bank gave value under UCC § 3-303 for cashier's checks and thus became holder in due course as to such checks so as not to be liable to buyer for fraud and conversion in sale transaction because (1) application of proceeds of cashier's checks to satisfy corporation's liability to bank on notes constituted taking for value under payment of "antecedent claim" provision in UCC § 3-303(b); (2) giving owner check, payable to corporation, for remaining proceeds of cashier's checks constituted taking for value under UCC § 3-303(c); and (3) bank's assignment to buyer, pursuant to owner's instructions, of bank's security interest in corporation's assets constituted taking for value under performance of "agreed consideration" provision in UCC § 3-303(a). In such case, since bank was not party to sale contract but merely applied proceeds of cashier's checks pursuant to instructions of corporation's owner and in compliance with UCC § 3-303, buyer's remedy in contract for failure of consideration in sale transaction would lie only against owner. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

A bank gives value for a note when it reduces the debt owed it by the amount of the note. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Sidney Gotowner, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 953 (1967, NY Sup.).

16. Irrevocable commitment to third person.

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; (3) where bank endorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank; and (4) where bank also gave owner its check, payable to corporation, for remaining proceeds of cashier's checks and owner endorsed and deposited such check in corporation's account, bank gave value under UCC § 3-303 for cashier's checks and thus became holder in due course as to such checks so as not to be liable to buyer for fraud and conversion in sale transaction because (1) application of proceeds of cashier's checks to satisfy corporation's liability to bank on notes constituted taking for value under payment of "antecedent claim" provision in UCC § 3-303(b); (2) giving owner check, payable to corporation, for remaining proceeds of cashier's checks constituted taking for value under UCC § 3-303(c); and (3) bank's assignment to buyer, pursuant to owner's instructions, of bank's security interest in corporation's assets constituted taking for value under performance of "agreed consideration" provision in UCC § 3-303(a). In such case, since bank was not party to sale contract but merely applied proceeds of cashier's checks pursuant to instructions of corporation's owner and in compliance with UCC § 3-303, buyer's remedy in contract for failure of consideration in sale transaction would lie only against owner. Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

Corporation that promised to give 25 per cent interest in prospective business venture in return for $20,000 note did not make irrevocable commitment; thus, it did not give value as required by UCC § 3-303, and failed to prove that it was holder in due course, entitled to priority over government's lien on note for unpaid taxes; agreement to give 25 per cent interest in prospective business venture was so vague and nebulous as to be unenforceable and, in any event, was merely executory contract which corporation could have refused to perform because of failure of consideration, i.e., because government's rights to note had intervened by virtue of its liens and levies and notes were therefore worthless. Coventry Care, Inc. v. United States, 366 F. Supp. 497 (W.D. Pa. 1973).

Payee takes for value by making irrevocable payment of consideration to third person at direction of maker. Ashburn Bank v. Childress, 120 Ga. App. 632, 171 S.E.2d 768 (1969).

Where seller, in consideration of receipt of cashier's checks aggregating $600,000, made actual physical delivery of certificates evidencing all of his stock in a corporation in escrow to be delivered to the purchaser when the seller had been relieved of his bank guarantees without anything further to be done on his part, the transfer was irrevocable for the only remaining act to complete delivery was solely within the power of the purchaser; and such delivery in escrow constituted an "irrevocable commitment" as provided in clause (c) of § 3-303, and the seller had taken the cashier's checks for value and was a "holder in due course." Crest Fin. Co. v. First State Bank, 37 Ill. 2d 243, 226 N.E.2d 369 (1967).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-408.

17. In general.

There is no want of consideration, as distinguished from value, within meaning of UCC § 3-408 when consideration moves before maturity to party accommodated, even though accommodation maker receives no consideration for executing instrument. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

To sustain defense of no consideration against holder, drawer must show that he received nothing in return for note he had promised to pay or that there are circumstances in which consideration is not required to support this promise, e.g., note given in payment of or as security for some antecedent obligation. Srochi v. Kamensky, 118 Ga. App. 182, 162 S.E.2d 889 (1968).

18. Availability of defense.

Holder who is not holder in due course has much narrower rights than holder in due course and takes instrument, under UCC § 3-306(b) and § 3-408, subject to all defenses of any party which would be available in action on simple contract, including specifically the defenses of lack and failure of consideration. Kreutz v. Wolff, 560 S.W.2d 271 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-305(2) and § 3-408, lack of consideration and fraud in the inducement are not good defenses against a holder in due course. However, under UCC § 3-307(3), once a defense other than lack of consideration is raised, holder has burden of proving that he is holder in due course in all respects (action on promissory note, executed in real estate sale transaction, in which makers pleaded affirmative defenses of lack of consideration and fraud in the inducement and also counterclaimed for damages for such fraud). Kreutz v. Wolff, 560 S.W.2d 271 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Document purporting to transfer and assign promissory note which was never attached to note did not serve as effective endorsement of note under UCC § 3-202(2); since note was not issued or endorsed to assignee, assignee was not holder of note as defined in UCC § 1-201(20) and, not being holder, assignee could not possibly be holder in due course and assignment of note was therefore subject to defense of failure of consideration. Billas v. Dwyer, 140 Ga. App. 774, 232 S.E.2d 102 (1976).

Bank was not absolutely obligated by UCC § 4-303 to honor its own cashier's check when presented by payee who was not holder in due course and was allegedly party to scheme to defraud bank, but was entitled under UCC §§ 3-306 and 3-408 to present defenses which would be available on simple contract including lack of consideration or fraud. TPO, Inc. v. FDIC, 487 F.2d 131 (3d Cir. N.J. 1973).

It is immaterial that consideration moves from or to a third party, since to prove failure of consideration under UCC § 3-408, defendants must show that the obligation cannot be enforced against them. Behrens v. Apessos, 39 Mich. App. 426, 197 N.W.2d 886 (1972).

In a suit on a note given for purchase of personal property, a claim of breach of warranty is equivalent to a plea of failure of consideration, and such defense is allowed, as against one who is not a holder in due course, on the principle that consideration of a note to open to inquiry as far as the promise to pay depends upon its existence. Northern Plumbing Supply, Inc. v. Gates, 196 N.W.2d 70 (N.D. 1972).

Where there is a suit on a note and it appears that there was consideration to a corporation and thus to the defendant directors who endorsed the note, the fact that the consideration was furnished by one other than the promisee would not prevent the promisee from maintaining suit on such a note. Edgar v. Edgar Casket Co., 125 Ga. App. 389, 187 S.E.2d 925 (1972).

Failure of consideration on contract is defense to suit on promissory note executed under terms of contract. Farmers Coop. Ass'n v. Garrison, 248 Ark. 948, 454 S.W.2d 644 (1970).

Defense of want or failure of consideration is available to indorser of instrument as well as to drawer. Brotherton v. McWaters, 438 P.2d 1 (Okla. 1968).

An indorser may raise the defense of failure of consideration and that defense is not limited to a drawer or to a person stopping payment on a check. Brotherton v. McWaters, 438 P.2d 1 (Okla. 1968).

19. —Against holder in due course.

Where the defendant dealt with the holder in due course, the holder in due course is subject to the defense that the consideration he was to give had failed, as it is only a failure of consideration with respect to a third person which is a limited defense under the Code. Brotherton v. McWaters, 438 P.2d 1 (Okla. 1968).

20. Adequacy of consideration.

Consideration within meaning of UCC § 3-408 may consist of some benefit to one party or some detriment to the other party (holding that note which consolidated two prior obligations was supported by sufficient consideration). Edmiston v. J.C.G.-Medallion, Inc., 570 S.W.2d 306 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Where (1) debtor-owner of two corporations borrowed funds from bank, executed personal notes evidencing such loans, and funneled loan proceeds into his two corporations, (2) bank subsequently had such corporations execute notes and security agreements to bank covering total amount of money loaned to debtor and also had debtor sign two personal notes that were identical in amount to corporate notes and were due on same date, and (3) bank additionally had debtor and debtor's wife execute personal guaranties of corporate notes, trial court properly held that under UCC § 3-408, corporate notes and security agreements were supported by sufficient consideration, and that such consideration was debtor's antecedent personal debts to bank. However, since there was no evidence that signature of debtor's wife had been a prerequisite to bank's extension of credit to debtor or to debtor's two corporations, and also no evidence that wife had been comaker of any of debtor's prior personal notes that debtor had given to bank, wife's personal guaranty of notes executed by debtor's corporations in favor of bank was void for lack of consideration. H. Watson Dev. Co. v. Bank & Trust Co., 58 Ill. App. 3d 423, 374 N.E.2d 767 (1st Dist. 1978).

Where agreement between seller of stock and buyer stipulated that escrow and collection agent would relinquish proportionate share of stock following each monthly payment, where buyer executed promissory note secured by pledge of stock, and where buyer unilaterally stopped payments, seller was entitled to recover for balance of note as buyer failed to establish defense of want of consideration under UCC § 3-408 by virtue of nondelivery of stock. Wallace v. Ralph Pillow Motors, Inc., 344 So. 2d 949 (Fla. App. 1977).

Although plaintiffs, unless they had rights of holder in due course, took instrument subject to defense of want of consideration under UCC §§ 3-306(c) and 3-408, plaintiffs were entitled to recover on instrument under UCC § 3-307(2) where signatures were admitted and where defendant failed to establish defense of want of consideration. Smith v. Gentilotti, 371 Mass. 839, 359 N.E.2d 953 (1977).

In transaction whereby sole shareholder of small corporation sold all his shares of stock to third person and corporation participated in transaction with purchaser as comaker of promissory note and written security agreement relating to corporate shares and various physical assets of corporation, corporation's execution of promissory note and security agreement was supported by sufficient consideration since seller, as part of sale transaction, agreed to refrain from competition with corporation, granted corporation option to purchase building in which business was conducted, and promised to remain on corporation's board of directors. Miller's Shoes & Clothing v. Hawkins Furn. & Appliances, Inc., 300 Minn. 460, 221 N.W.2d 113, 71 A.L.R.3d 629 (1974).

Promissory note executed by shareholder to partially satisfy overdraft of corporation was supported by consideration under UCC §§ 3-307(2) and 3-408 despite contentions that note was signed at request of bank to protect it from bank examiners and until another loan could be obtained from Small Business Administration. Farmer v. Peoples Am. Bank, 132 Ga. App. 751, 209 S.E.2d 80 (1974).

Under UCC § 3-408, any consideration which would be sufficient to uphold an ordinary contract would be sufficient consideration to validate a promissory note, and this includes any detriment to payee, such as his failure to benefit from sale of property at reduced rate, so long as unclouded and unaffected by fraud or mistake. Hallowell v. Turner, 94 Idaho 718, 496 P.2d 955 (1972).

Under UCC any consideration which would be sufficient to uphold ordinary contract would be sufficient consideration to validate promissory note. Hallowell v. Turner, 94 Idaho 718, 496 P.2d 955 (1972).

An agreement to release a third party from liability is a valid consideration for the obligation incurred by the parties securing the release within UCC § 3-408. Blake-Cadillac Oldsmobile, Inc. v. Cackovic, 54 Pa. D. & C.2d 160 (1971).

Check was drawn upon escrow account; held, transfer of funds resulting therefrom constituted adequate consideration for issuance of cashier's check. Pennsylvania v. Curtiss Nat'l Bank, 427 F.2d 395 (5th Cir. Fla. 1970).

There is no want of consideration, as distinguished from value, within meaning of UCC § 3-408 when consideration moves before maturity to party accommodated, even though accommodation maker receives no consideration for executing instrument. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

A promissory note is supported by consideration when given in payment for prior substantial legal services and the agreement of the payee to refrain from seeking payment against enterprise assets, which act of refraining would reduce the amounts which the makers of the note would have been required to contribute. Miller v. Simoni, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1171 (1968, NY Sup).

Rescission of an option agreement covering only the interest of husband in land owned by both husband and wife amounted to a full legal consideration supporting wife's obligation as co-maker of a promissory note. Haygood v. Stevenson Co., 114 Ga. App. 335, 151 S.E.2d 462 (1966).

21. —Failure of consideration.

Note executed by manager of used car agency was supported by sufficient consideration under UCC § 3-408, and not solely by manager's moral obligation to pay, where payees, in return for manager's promise to pay $7657, agreed to assume and discharge indebtedness of $8500 at bank, which represented sale by manager of automobiles out of trust. Alexander v. DeLacruz, 545 P.2d 518 (Utah 1976).

Where mortgagor executed promissory note for $8,000 on October 18, but mortgagee did not advance funds and, instead, mortgagee and mortgagor went to bank on October 24 and bank loaned mortgagee $8,000 on his personal, unsecured note, which mortgagor cosigned, October 18 note was unenforceable for failure of consideration under UCC § 3-408, notwithstanding mortgagor received proceeds of October 24 note and mortgagee repaid note; since mortgagor's signature obligated him as maker to pay bank's note according to its tenor under UCC § 3-413, regardless of any understanding between mortgagee and mortgagor, execution of second note resulted in abandonment of October 18 note as instrument through which indebtedness between parties should be memorialized and repayment enforced. Anderson v. County Properties, Inc., 14 Wash. App. 502, 543 P.2d 653 (1975).

If maker signed note at payee's behest so that payee could show bookkeeping loss, and not in satisfaction of indebtedness arising out of real estate transaction, there was no consideration for note and this would be complete and meritorious defense under UCC § 3-408 to suit on note by payee. Ritchey v. Mars, 227 Pa. Super. 33, 324 A.2d 513 (1974).

Where a demand note is given to induce forbearance the note is not supported by consideration since the note is immediately due and does not bind the payee to forbear for any period of time. Flintkote Co. v. Grimes, 281 Ala. 707, 208 So. 2d 87 (1968).

A note given by maker to payee for damage to the latter's truck which contained the notation that "it is agreed that this note is conditional and does not settle out any claim or demand payee has against the maker", was without consideration. Deems v. Wilson, 114 Ga. App. 341, 151 S.E.2d 230 (1966).

Defense denying both that there was any consideration for the note originally and that the plaintiff was a holder in due course was meritorious. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

In suit on promissory note executed by defendant to cover balance due plaintiff on automobile repair bill, fact that some of repair parts used were defective does not constitute defense to note on ground of fraud, but at most defendant is entitled to defend because of an alleged failure of consideration of note to extent only of credit due on account of defective condition of repair part and is entitled in no event to deduction for more than cost of new parts and value of labor for installing same. Douglas v. Warren, 44 So. 2d 853 (Miss. 1950).

22. Antecedent obligation, generally.

An accommodation endorsement made by a decedent on a negotiable instrument which represented a consolidation and renewal of two outstanding notes owed by his son was valid since, as security for an antecedent obligation, no consideration was necessary under this section. Wilson v. Planters Bank, 383 So. 2d 1089 (Miss. 1980).

Widow who executed note to bank renewing earlier notes which were given to extinguish her deceased husband's indebtedness to bank could not avoid liability on renewal note on ground that there was no consideration therefor, since UCC § 3-408 declares that no consideration is necessary for instrument given in payment of antecedent obligation. First Nat'l Bank v. Carver, 375 So. 2d 1198 (Miss. 1979).

Where amount of unpaid promissory notes represented a loan, such amount, under UCC § 3-408, constituted obligation owed by makers which existed when notes were executed and thus supplied requisite consideration for notes. Cantonwine v. Fehling, 582 P.2d 592 (Wyo. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-408, note given to payee to discharge antecedent obligation did not require consideration. Cleveland v. Pleasuretime Dev. Corp., 143 Ga. App. 518, 239 S.E.2d 203 (1977).

Promissory note which set forth fact showing it was given for no other consideration but kindness and affection was unenforceable. "Particular kindness" bestowed upon decedent maker by payee of note did not constitute antecedent obligation within meaning of UCC § 3-408, since payee was nephew of decedent maker and law presumed gratuitous any services rendered, absent proof of contract to pay for such services. In re Estate of Wetmore, 36 Ill. App. 3d 96, 343 N.E.2d 224 (5th Dist. 1976).

Note given in connection with settlement of contract dispute was enforceable against makers notwithstanding claim that there was failure of consideration by reason of payee's refusal to honor warranty provision of settlement contract; note was given in payment of and as security for antecedent obligation and, thus, no consideration was necessary under UCC § 3-408, and consideration was given since settlement of disputed claim was sufficient to render entire contract binding. Doyal v. Ben O'Callaghan Co., 132 Ga. App. 336, 208 S.E.2d 136 (1974).

UCC § 3-408 changes previous Tennessee rule in providing that new consideration is not required for a note given in payment of or as security for the antecedent debt of a third party. Musulin v. Woodtek, Inc., 260 Or. 576, 491 P.2d 1173 (1971).

UCC § 3-408 consideration requirement is satisfied by "an antecedent debt of any kind" including the antecedent debt of a third party. Musulin v. Woodtek, Inc., 260 Or. 576, 491 P.2d 1173 (1971).

Want of or failure of consideration is no defense where notes and mortgages were given for antecedent obligation. Northwestern Nat'l Bank v. Steinbeck, 179 N.W.2d 471 (Iowa 1970).

Renewal obligation must be supported by valuable consideration other than original obligation itself in order to bind party who was not obligor upon original instrument; pre-existing debt is sufficient consideration, by itself, to support renewal thereof by obligor upon original debt. Capital City Bank v. Baker, 59 Tenn. App. 477, 442 S.W.2d 259 (1969).

No consideration is necessary for an instrument given in payment of or as security for an antecedent obligation of any parent. Katski v. Boehm, 249 Md. 568, 241 A.2d 129 (1968).

No consideration is necessary for an instrument given in payment of or as security for an antecedent obligation. Hamilton Watch Emp. Fed. Credit Union v. Retallack, 61 Lanc. L. Rev. 159 (Pa. 1967).

An antecedent debt is adequate consideration for a promissory note. Coal Operators Cas. Co. v. Johnson, 213 F. Supp. 146 (E.D. Ky. 1963).

23. —Payment of obligation.

Where makers executed note for $60,000, but received only $10,000 and remaining $50,000 was never advanced, and where makers subsequently executed note for $10,000 and payee returned original note, no consideration beyond antecedent debt of $10,000 was necessary to enforceability of $10,000 note; furthermore, even if additional consideration was necessary, it could be found in return of original note to makers. Pacific Coast Capital Corp. v. Research to Reality, Inc., 57 Mich. App. 75, 225 N.W.2d 177 (1974).

No consideration was necessary for renewal note given in payment of or as security for antecedent obligation, and it was immaterial that at time renewal note was given maker was insolvent and unable to pay obligation at its maturity. State Bank v. Owens, 31 Colo. App. 351, 502 P.2d 965 (1972).

24. Security for obligation.

Under UCC § 3-408, payee's failure to extinguish pre-existing debts did not prevent payee from enforcing promissory notes which were executed to induce payee to extend further credit and to forbear immediate collection of pre-existing debts. GE Co. v. Construction Assocs., 426 F. Supp. 986 (E.D. Mo. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-408, note given to bank by investor incorporation was not required to be supported by consideration where purpose of note was to prevent bank from instituting foreclosure proceedings against corporation, which was in default on antecedent obligation owed to bank (rejecting investor's contention that because he did not receive amount for which note was executed, there was no consideration for note and therefore no liability thereon). Mock v. First City Nat'l Bank, 352 So. 2d 1112 (Ala. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-408 consideration was not required for second note where second note and trust deed were given to secure payment of first note. Tracy Collins Bank & Trust Co. v. Seiger, 546 P.2d 237 (Utah 1976).

Under UCC § 3-408, execution of note to secure the antecedent or existing indebtedness of another needs no consideration, and where father made gift of property to son, son's subsequent note and trust deed to father to secure father's indebtedness on property, were valid as accommodation without a showing of consideration. Kitzer v. Kitzer, 20 Ill. App. 3d 54, 312 N.E.2d 699 (2d Dist. 1974).

In action by guarantor of renewal and extension promissory notes against maker, maker's defense of want or failure of consideration was untenable because, under UCC § 3-408, no consideration was necessary for extension of antecedent obligation. Blake v. Coates, 292 Ala. 351, 294 So. 2d 433 (1974).

Want of consideration was no defense to action on note indorsed by officer of corporate maker, where note represented security for previously existing obligation of corporation. Lumbermen Assocs. v. Palmer, 344 F. Supp. 1129 (E.D. Pa. 1972), aff'd, 485 F.2d 680 (3d Cir. Pa. 1973).

Maker gave note as security for antecedent obligation of corporation in which he had invested; held, no consideration was necessary to establish valid obligation between maker and payee. A.M. Castle & Co. v. Bagley, 24 Utah 2d 136, 467 P.2d 408 (1970).

25. Validity of obligation.

Professional legal services rendered for benefit of third party for which note was executed by maker in consideration thereof constituted valid antecedent debt under UCC § 3-408 upon which payee could successfully sue maker as if payee were holder in due course. Austrian, Lance & Stewart, P.C. v. Hastings Properties, Inc., 87 Misc. 2d 25 (1976).

Where wife of maker of 2 notes signed both notes as co-maker 30 days after notes were executed, at time when all transactions surrounding execution of notes had been completed and there was no factual change between parties except addition of her signature, wife was accommodation maker under UCC § 3-415 and was liable to holders who took notes for value, notwithstanding they were not holders in due course and there was no consideration for wife's signature, since under UCC § 3-408 no consideration was necessary to make her liable as accommodation party. Cissna Park State Bank v. Johnson, 21 Ill. App. 3d 445, 315 N.E.2d 675 (4th Dist. 1974).

Where lessee and sub-lessee executed release of sub-lease and, as part of the consideration for such release, sub-lessee executed promissory note payable to lessee, fact that note was executed one week after release did not raise defense of failure or want of consideration; under UCC § 3-408 no consideration is necessary for instrument or obligation thereon given in payment of or as security for antecedent obligation of any kind. Smith v. Rothstein, 131 Ga. App. 632, 206 S.E.2d 592 (1974).

A promissory note given after a discharge in bankruptcy to pay the discharged debt is binding. Kay v. Golding, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1065 (1968, NY Sup.).

Although an accord and satisfaction wiped out an antecedent pecuniary obligation, a note given in exchange for a prior note in the same amount at a time when the collection of the debt was not legally enforceable, but with intent that the note itself constitute a legally enforceable obligation carried a presumption of consideration and was enforceable. Waters v. Lanier, 116 Ga. App. 471, 157 S.E.2d 796 (1967).

A note promising to pay an amount which has been discharged by bankruptcy "carries a presumption of consideration" and may be enforced. Waters v. Lanier, 116 Ga. App. 471, 157 S.E.2d 796 (1967).

26. Practice and procedure; pleadings.

In action by maker, who had apparently executed note in response to his employer's demand, to declare note unenforceable, maker sufficiently pleaded failure of consideration under UCC § 3-408, where he alleged that note was neither given for purpose of reducing some third person's debt to bank, nor for any other purpose than to prevent termination of his employment. Gerber v. First Nat'l Bank, 30 Ill. App. 3d 776, 332 N.E.2d 615, 79 A.L.R.3d 592 (1st Dist. 1975).

Defendants seeking to reopen judgment by confession on promissory note signed by them failed to allege sufficient facts to clearly show that they had defense to note based on lack of consideration under UCC § 3-307(2) where defendants were heirs of owner of automobile dealership who was indebted to plaintiff on prior promissory note, where defendants were actively managing automobile dealership after owner's death, and where defendants had paid interest owing on prior note up through date of renewal note they executed; under UCC § 3-408, note signed as security for antecedent claim or debt, even though signed by third party, needs no consideration, and defendants failed to demonstrate that note signed by them was not given as security for antecedent debt of deceased owner. First Nat'l Bank v. Achilli, 14 Ill. App. 3d 1, 301 N.E.2d 739 (2d Dist. 1973).

Although want or failure of consideration may be raised in action upon negotiable instrument against any person not having rights of holder in due course, this must be pleaded as affirmative defense and may not be raised under general denial. Rochester Iron & Metal Co. v. Capellupo, 62 Misc. 2d 264 (1969).

A trial was required and plaintiff should be required to file a reply where the defendant, under oath, denied that he had any knowledge as to how his signature got on the note sued on, denied delivery of the note, denied that there was any consideration for the note originally, and denied that the plaintiff was a holder in due course. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

27. —Burden of proof.

In action by hospital on promissory note signed by physician allegedly for advances made by hospital under oral agreement concerning physician's income, (1) despite conflicts in evidence as to meaning of agreement and conditions under which advances would have to be repaid, fact remained that defendant had signed note after conference with hospital's business manager concerning amount owed hospital for advances; (2) under UCC § 3-307(2), production of a note with defendant's signature established entitles a plaintiff to recover in the absence of any defense to the instrument; (3) under UCC § 3-408, since consideration for a note given for an antecedent obligation is presumed, defendant had burden of showing lack of consideration for note sued on; and (4) in view of state of record on appeal, reviewing court could not conclude that trial court's judgment in favor of hospital was contrary to manifest weight of the evidence. Northlake Community Hosp. v. Cadkin, 55 Ill. App. 3d 344, 370 N.E.2d 1094 (1st Dist. 1977).

In action arising over promissory note executed by decedent and made payable to his sister, under UCC § 3-408 burden of proving no consideration was upon executor of Thaker's estate, and in absence of fraud or undue influence, it was assumed that decedent thought that face value of note was reasonable and adequate estimate of his obligation to payee. Harned v. Dawson, 505 S.W.2d 174 (Ky. 1974).

28. —Parol evidence.

In action by payee against maker of promissory note, maker was entitled under UCC § 3-306(c) and UCC § 3-408 to show by parol evidence that consideration for note had failed allegedly because of payee's failure to fulfill obligations under business agreement with maker (reversing summary judgment for payee because material issue of fact existed as to alleged failure of consideration for note). Ralph Stachon & Assocs. v. Greenville Broadcasting Co., 35 N.C. App. 540, 241 S.E.2d 884 (1978).

In action by payee against makers of promissory note, payee could not successfully contend that trial court's inappropriate charge to jury on failure of consideration was so prejudicial as to require new trial, even though record revealed that there was no evidence to support such charge, where charge was based on UCC § 3-408 and only testimony in case concerning consideration was that plaintiff had paid debt of defendants and had taken their note in return. Applying such evidence to the charge, jury could only have concluded that there was no failure of consideration. Stembridge v. Simmons, 143 Ga. App. 90, 237 S.E.2d 514 (1977).

Where creditor-payee was urged by defendant indorser to forebear from carrying out replevin against goods of debtor-maker, and did so upon defendant's guarantee of payment and credit, creditor-payee was entitled to introduce parol evidence to establish intent of defendant in signing note, and to sue defendant directly and primarily on the notes not only as accommodation indorser-guarantor but also as de facto co-maker. Jamaica Tobacco & Sales Corp. v. Ortner, 70 Misc.2d 388 (1972).

Where the parol evidence rule bars proof of an alleged promise, that promise cannot be consideration to support a note. Sonnichsen v. Streeter, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 659, 239 A.2d 63 (1967).

Parol evidence is admissible not to alter the terms of an accord and satisfaction but to show what consideration was given for a note which was given as part of the accord and satisfaction. Waters v. Lanier, 116 Ga. App. 471, 157 S.E.2d 796 (1967).

29. —Instructions.

Trial judge did not err in refusing to give instruction on defense of partial failure of consideration, where maker of note failed to plead this defense, took position at trial that note was given for entirely different reason from that claimed by payee, and based his case on fraud and want of consideration. Holm v. Woodworth, 271 So. 2d 167 (Fla. App. 1972).

30. —Summary judgment.

In action by payee bank against maker of note, summary judgment was erroneously granted where maker introduced affidavit stating that bank had agreed that renewals on note were with condition that maker would be relieved of liability if sale of corporation was not finalized, raising issue of fraud in the inducement under UCC §§ 3-302, 3-306(2), and 3-408. Viracola v. Dallas Int'l Bank, 508 S.W.2d 472 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e. (July 17, 1974).

Maker of note stated in affidavit that he was not indebted to payee at time of execution of note and that payee's records showing indebtedness were incomplete and incorrect; held, there was genuine issue of fact as to consideration so that payee was not entitled to summary judgment. Preston & Fogarty, Inc. v. Morgan, 120 Ga. App. 878, 172 S.E.2d 319 (1969).

Fact that assumption agreement with bank was under seal does not defeat debtor's right to plead and prove want of consideration; in such case, law presumes consideration and burden is upon debtor to prove otherwise; held, factual question as to whether evidence presented sustained defense precluded summary judgment. Wenke v. Norton, 120 Ga. App. 70, 169 S.E.2d 663 (1969).

31. —Waiver and estoppel.

Under Texas UCC, where inequities asserted by comaker of note arose prior to or in connection with antecedent note, comaker waived right to urge these matters by execution of renewal notes. First Nat'l Bank v. Reglin, 266 So. 2d 252 (La. App. 1972).

IV. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

32. Decisions under Code 1942 § 65.

A note credited to the maker's account for goods purchased, and one given in renewal, are supported by a consideration. Stribling Bros. Stribling Bros. Mach. Co. v. Girod Co., 239 Miss. 488, 124 So. 2d 289 (1960).

A debtor by admitting that he signed a promissory note assumed the burden of showing a lack or failure of consideration. Bleuler v. Indian Co., 237 Miss. 574, 115 So. 2d 537 (1959).

Where the most that a debtor could have claimed was that his liability was doubtful, creditor's forbearance to sue was a sufficient consideration to support a promissory note. Bleuler v. Indian Co., 237 Miss. 574, 115 So. 2d 537 (1959).

Burden of proving want of consideration was on person whose name appeared on note apparently as comaker. Milstead v. Maples, 180 Miss. 476, 177 So. 790 (1938).

33. Decisions under Code 1942 § 66.

A note credited to the maker's account for goods purchased, and one given in renewal, are supported by a consideration. Stribling Bros. Stribling Bros. Mach. Co. v. Girod Co., 239 Miss. 488, 124 So. 2d 289 (1960).

Generally, an agreement or promise by the debtor or maker to pay interest to accrue in the future, during the time extended, or for a fixed time, and by which he waives or relinquishes his right to discharge the debt before the expiration of the time specified, constitutes a sufficient consideration for an extension by the holder or payee. Freeman v. Truitt, 238 Miss. 623, 119 So. 2d 765 (1960).

An agreement indorsed on the back of a promissory note payable in full on a certain date, and signed by the maker, by the terms of which the maker agreed to pay the obligation in monthly instalments until the whole obligation plus interest had been paid, was based on sufficient consideration to bind both parties. Freeman v. Truitt, 238 Miss. 623, 119 So. 2d 765 (1960).

Note given by seller of business, after reacquiring it, for goods sold by his supplier to purchasers of business in ignorance of the change of ownership held supported by a sufficient consideration. Bleuler v. Indian Co., 237 Miss. 574, 115 So. 2d 537 (1959).

Where the most that a debtor could have claimed was that his liability was doubtful, creditor's forbearance to sue was a sufficient consideration to support a promissory note. Bleuler v. Indian Co., 237 Miss. 574, 115 So. 2d 537 (1959).

That principal gave agent credit for amount of third person's check to agent constituted consideration sufficient to render principal "holder for value." Railway Express Agency v. Bank of Philadelphia, 168 Miss. 279, 150 So. 525 (1933).

Bank which paid check on forged signature of its depositor should bear loss, as between bank and holder which, without knowledge of forgery, took check from its agent crediting agent's account therefor. Railway Express Agency v. Bank of Philadelphia, 168 Miss. 279, 150 So. 525 (1933).

Statute providing antecedent debt constitutes value held inapplicable, where trustee wrongfully canceled trust deed and took trust deed payable to himself which he assigned as security for his pre-existing debts. Eagle Lumber & Supply Co. v. De Weese, 163 Miss. 602, 135 So. 490 (1931).

34. Decisions under Code 1942 § 67.

Where it was shown that the bank had no actual notice of a warranty and agreement and the breach thereof, the fact that there was stapled to the note, given for the purchase of farm equipment, at the time it was indorsed to the bank, a purchase order signed by the maker-purchaser in favor of the seller-payee on the reverse side of which there was a "warranty and agreement" did not put the bank upon notice as to such warranty and agreement or put it upon inquiry as to whether the warranty and agreement had been breached at the time of purchase, so that the bank as a holder in due course for value, and without notice, was entitled to recover against the maker even though the warranty had actually been breached. Misso v. National Bank of Commerce, 231 Miss. 249, 95 So. 2d 124 (1957).

That principal gave agent credit for amount of third person's check to agent constituted consideration sufficient to render principal "holder for value." Railway Express Agency v. Bank of Philadelphia, 168 Miss. 279, 150 So. 525 (1933).

Bank which paid check on forged signature of its depositor should bear loss, as between bank and holder which, without knowledge of forgery, took check from its agent crediting agent's account therefor. Railway Express Agency v. Bank of Philadelphia, 168 Miss. 279, 150 So. 525 (1933).

35. Decisions under Code 1942 § 69.

Partial failure of consideration is defense pro tanto. Coulson v. Stevens, 122 Miss. 797, 85 So. 83 (1920).

§ 75-3-304. Overdue instrument.

(a) An instrument payable on demand becomes overdue at the earliest of the following times:

- (1) On the day after the day demand for payment is duly made;
- (2) If the instrument is a check, ninety (90) days after its date; or
- (3) If the instrument is not a check, when the instrument has been outstanding for a period of time after its date which is unreasonably long under the circumstances of the particular case in light of the nature of the instrument and usage of the trade.

(b) With respect to an instrument payable at a definite time the following rules apply:

(1) If the principal is payable in installments and a due date has not been accelerated, the instrument becomes overdue upon default under the instrument for nonpayment of an installment, and the instrument remains overdue until the default is cured.

(2) If the principal is not payable in installments and the due date has not been accelerated, the instrument becomes overdue on the day after the due date.

(3) If a due date with respect to principal has been accelerated, the instrument becomes overdue on the day after the accelerated due date.

(c) Unless the due date of principal has been accelerated, an instrument does not become overdue if there is default in payment of interest but no default in payment of principal.

§ 75-3-305. Defenses and claims in recoupment.

(a) Except as stated in subsection (b), the right to enforce the obligation of a party to pay an instrument is subject to the following:

(1) A defense of the obligor based on (i) infancy of the obligor to the extent it is a defense to a simple contract, (ii) duress, lack of legal capacity, or illegality of the transaction which, under other law, nullifies the obligation of the obligor, (iii) fraud that induced the obligor to sign the instrument with neither knowledge nor reasonable opportunity to learn of its character or its essential terms, or (iv) discharge of the obligor in insolvency proceedings;

(2) A defense of the obligor stated in another section of this chapter or a defense of the obligor that would be available if the person entitled to enforce the instrument were enforcing a right to payment under a simple contract; and

(3) A claim in recoupment of the obligor against the original payee of the instrument if the claim arose from the transaction that gave rise to the instrument; but the claim of the obligor may be asserted against a transferee of the instrument only to reduce the amount owing on the instrument at the time the action is brought.

(b) The right of a holder in due course to enforce the obligation of a party to pay the instrument is subject to defenses of the obligor stated in subsection (a)(1), but is not subject to defenses of the obligor stated in subsection (a)(2) or claims in recoupment stated in subsection (a)(3) against a person other than the holder.

(c) Except as stated in subsection (d), in an action to enforce the obligation of a party to pay the instrument, the obligor may not assert against the person entitled to enforce the instrument a defense, claim in recoupment, or claim to the instrument (Section 75-3-306) of another person, but the other person's claim to the instrument may be asserted by the obligor if the other person is joined in the action and personally asserts the claim against the person entitled to enforce the instrument. An obligor is not obliged to pay the instrument if the person seeking enforcement of the instrument does not have rights of a holder in due course and the obligor proves that the instrument is a lost or stolen instrument.

(d) In an action to enforce the obligation of an accommodation party to pay an instrument, the accommodation party may assert against the person entitled to enforce the instrument any defense or claim in recoupment under subsection (a) that the accommodated party could assert against the person entitled to enforce the instrument, except the defenses of discharge in insolvency proceedings, infancy, and lack of legal capacity.

§ 75-3-306. Claims to an instrument.

A person taking an instrument, other than a person having rights of a holder in due course, is subject to a claim of a property or possessory right in the instrument or its proceeds, including a claim to rescind a negotiation and to recover the instrument or its proceeds. A person having rights of a holder in due course takes free of the claim to the instrument.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-304.

11. In general.

Negligence goes to notice requirements for being a holder in due course and not to good faith requirement. Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

In action by customer against bank for conversion, allegations in answer to (1) the authority of customer's employee to indorse tax payable to his corporate employer was limited to "the purpose of depositing the checks in plaintiff's bank account," and (2) that plaintiff was negligent in failing to supervise the activities of its employee and in permitting the particular occurrences, including the alleged unauthorized indorsement of the checks payable to the plaintiff, were insufficient and would be dismissed. Rosenthal v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 30 A.D.2d 650 (1st Dep't 1968).

Actual knowledge by holder of discounted notes that payee had agreed with maker not to discount notes would not preclude holder from becoming holder in due course, since knowledge was not notice of defense or claim against notes within Code § 3-304(4)(b) but merely notice of maker's possible cause of action against payee for breach of agreement not discount. Factors & Note Buyers, Inc. v. Green Lane, Inc., 102 N.J. Super. 43, 245 A.2d 223 (L. Div. 1968).

UCC § 3-304(1)(a) replaces the provision of the NIL requiring that an instrument be "complete and regular on its face". National State Bank v. Kleinberg, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 100 (1967, NY Sup).

12. Incomplete, forged, altered or irregular instruments.

Statements on certificates of deposit that they were payable "none months after date" and were to bear interest "at the rate of none per cent" did not constitute sufficient irregularity under UCC § 3-304(1)(a) to create genuine issue regarding holder's status as holder in due course, notwithstanding claim by issuer of certificates that these terms so deviated from custom or usage in banking industry as to constitute such irregularity, where issuer failed to establish existence of any such alleged custom or usage. Western State Bank v. First Union Bank & Trust Co., 172 Ind. App. 321, 360 N.E.2d 254 (1977).

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; and (3) where bank indorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank and gave owner check payable to corporation for remaining proceeds which owner deposited in corporation's account, bank under UCC § 3-304 was without notice of buyer's alleged defenses (fraud, conversion, and breach of contract) to liability on cashier's checks-and thus was holder in due course as to such checks and not liable to buyer for fraud and conversion in sale transaction—because (1) bank's knowledge that contract of sale accompanied cashier's checks did not constitute notice of buyer's alleged defenses to such checks under "separate agreement" provision of UCC § 3-304(4)(b); (2) bank could reasonably assume that one note discharged by checks' proceeds, although signed by corporation's owner personally, was for benefit of corporation and that application of proceeds to discharge such note pursuant to owner's instructions did not constitute discharge of owner's personal debt, so as to give bank notice under UCC § 3-304(2) of buyer's defenses to liability on checks; and (3) fact that contract of sale was materially altered by striking bank's name from two copies thereof did not give bank notice of buyer's defenses under UCC § 3-304(1)(a), since term "instrument" in UCC § 3-304(1)(a) means "negotiable instrument" and not "contract of sale." Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

Affirmative defense to action against bank for conversion alleging that the authority of corporate employee to indorse checks payable to his corporate employer was limited to "the purpose of depositing the checks in plaintiff's bank account" was insufficient. Rosenthal v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 30 A.D.2d 650 (1st Dep't 1968).

Where at the time a note was negotiated to a bank it was overdue as originally drafted, the bank might still claim the status of a holder in due course and enforce the note if it came to the bank in such a condition that the alteration of the maturity date was not noticeable. Unadilla Nat'l Bank v. McQueer, 27 A.D.2d 778 (3d Dep't 1967).

Bank to which promissory note was negotiated has not met the burden of establishing that it is a holder in due course to the extent entitling it to summary judgment where there remains, among others, the question of the identity of the person who altered the maturity date from 5 days to 45 days after date. Unadilla Nat'l Bank v. McQueer, 27 A.D.2d 778 (3d Dep't 1967).

Bank which permitted new president and sole stockholder of corporation to cash checks drawn payable to corporation, in derogation of corporate resolution on file with bank which only authorized officers to endorse checks for deposit, and collection, was not a holder in due course, and was liable to creditors of bankrupt corporation for total amount of checks which it permitted sole stockholder to cash rather than deposit to corporation's account. Maley v. East Side Bank, 361 F.2d 393 (7th Cir. Ill. 1966).

13. Notice of voidability or discharge of obligation.

Assignee of note given for purchase of land in interstate transaction was not holder in due course where facts known to assignee at time of assignment, i.e., apparent multiple violations of Interstate Land Sales Act (15 USCS 1703(b)), should have alerted assignee to possible irregularities in making of note. Stewart v. Thornton, 116 Ariz. 107, 568 P.2d 414 (1977).

In declaratory action to determine rights of holder of promissory note, where (1) maker of note on May 23, 1971 signed contract to purchase lot, received deed to lot, and executed mortgage on lot and note in certain sum payable to named person, which note was substantially discounted and immediately sold to plaintiff; (2) maker rescinded the voidable sales contract two days later, as permitted by federal Interstate Land Sales Full Disclosure Act (15 USCS § 1703(b)), because of his failure to receive property report on lot as of time of signing contract of sale; and (3) maker contended that plaintiff holder had had notice within meaning of UCC § 3-304(1)(b) that maker's obligation under such contract was voidable, plaintiff holder was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) because (1) plaintiff's purchase of note for much less than its full value should have alerted him to possible defense against maker's liability; (2) note was also purchased by plaintiff within the two-day period in which maker could rescind the voidable sales contract; (3) by examining such contract, which was in possession of seller of note, plaintiff could have ascertained that maker of note had not inspected the lot purchased or received a property report thereon, as required by federal law; and (4) under circumstances of case, trial court could reasonably infer bad faith on part of plaintiff in refusing to investigate when facts known to him indicated irregularity respecting such note. Stewart v. Thornton, 116 Ariz. 107, 568 P.2d 414 (1977).

14. Knowledge of negotiation by fiduciary in breach of duty.

Where (1) plaintiff corporation sent defendant bank executed form and corporate resolution listing plaintiff's accountant as authorized signer of checks against plaintiff's account, (2) plaintiff directed that bank statements and inquiries about account should be sent to accountant, (3) non-UCC banking law provided that notwithstanding UCC § 3-304 (dealing with purchaser's notice of claim to or defense against instrument), drawing of check by corporate agent against corporate account—either in corporation's name or in agent's name to himself as payee—and cashing of check or depositing it in agent's personal account should not constitute notice to bank of defense against or claim to check, provided that bank had on file corporation's authorization showing that agent was authorized to draw checks for limited or unlimited amount and that amount of check cashed or deposited did not exceed such amount, and (4) plaintiff's account between 1968 and 1972 signed many checks against corporation's account and thus converted large sums of money to his own use, court held in action to recover such sums on theory of negligence that clause in UCC § 4-103(1), providing that no agreement can disclaim bank's responsibility for its failure to exercise ordinary care, was not controlling since plaintiff, as permitted by UCC § 4-103(1), had agreed to standard by which defendant's responsibility as to checks drawn against plaintiff's account was to be measured when plaintiff filed signed authorization with bank concerning accountant's authority to draw checks, and checks drawn by accountant had not exceeded maximum limitation contained in such authorization. Allen A. Funt Prods., Inc. v. Chemical Bank, 63 A.D.2d 629 (1st Dep't 1978), aff'd, 47 N.Y.2d 741, 417 N.Y.S.2d 254, 390 N.E.2d 1178 (1979).

Defendants, the limited partners in a partnership formed by the corporate developer of an apartment house project to syndicate the sale of the project, who executed personal promissory notes to the partnership as part of the purchase price for their shares in the partnership of which the corporate developer was the sole general partner and managing agent, may raise as a defense against plaintiff bank in an action on the notes the breach of fiduciary duty by the general partner, which, after first approaching plaintiff bank for a corporate loan, indorsed the notes from the partnership to itself in its corporate capacity and then to plaintiff without the written consent or ratification of all the limited partners in violation of section 98 of the Partnership Law, since plaintiff, by purchasing the notes at a discount with knowledge that the notes were negotiated for the individual purposes of the general partner in breach of its fiduciary duty, is not entitled to the rights of a holder in due course (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-304, subd [2]). The defense of breach of fiduciary duty belongs to defendants as limited partners and makers of the notes and not to the partnership since defendants, who have each been damaged by the breach of the fiduciary duty and stand to lose part of their interest in the partnership assets, are asserting their own rights and not the "claim of any third person". Chemical Bank v. Ashenburg, 94 Misc. 2d 64 (1978).

Bank which cashed check payable to order of "Swiss Baco Skyline, 2416 Holly Lane, Olympia, Wa 98501," where such check was indorsed by alleged converter who wrote "Swiss Baco Skyline" on back of check and signed his name thereafter, was liable as matter of law to payee of check for failing to act in accordance with reasonable commercial standards in accepting check, since bank was deemed to have had notice under UCC § 3-304(2) of claim against instrument because of its knowledge that indorser, although purporting to act in name of payee, actually negotiated check in exchange for personal certificate of deposit. Swiss Baco Skyline Logging, Inc. v. Haliewicz, 18 Wash. App. 21, 567 P.2d 1141 (1977).

Bank which was authorized depository of plaintiff company was liable for face amount of 17 third-party checks made payable to plaintiff which were indorsed without authority by plaintiff's manager and deposited in manager's personal account, since bank under UCC § 3-304(2) had notice of plaintiff's claim against checks as payee thereof and thus could not claim benefits of holder-in-due-course status under UCC § 3-302(1). Mott Grain Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 259 N.W.2d 667 (N.D. 1977).

Where defendant bank received check from plaintiff's employee, drawn by plaintiff and made payable to defendant, applied check to discharge employee's personal indebtedness to defendant, and released collateral for loan to employee fact that information relating to employee's relationship with plaintiff was provided in financial statements given to merchants from whom bank purchased installment contract was insufficient to constitute "notice" to defendant of fiduciary relationship between employee and plaintiff, but, even if it were, under UCC § 3-304(4)(e), this was not sufficient knowledge to place defendant on "notice" of claim or defense to check. Richardson Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 812 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 3, 1974).

Where bookkeeper deposited third party checks payable to her employer in her personal bank account, defendant bank was not holder in due course, since it had notice of claim against instrument arising out of bookkeeper's acting for her own benefit, and since it was not a holder for value not having acquired the checks by authorized signature or indorsement. Von Gohren v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 8 Wash. App. 245, 505 P.2d 467 (1973).

15. Overdue instrument.

In action by holder of note against maker who signed it as accommodation for payee: (1) fact that due date of first monthly installment was omitted did not make instrument incomplete in any "necessary respect" under UCC § 3-115(1) and instrument in which no time for payment was stated was payable on demand under UCC § 3-108; (2) holder's taking of note dated June 30, 1972, on July 14, 1972, was within "a reasonable length of time after its issue" under UCC § 3-304(3)(c); and (3) since note was not overdue when holder took it, lack of consideration was no defense under UCC §§ 3-304(4)(c) and 3-415(2). Gill v. Commonwealth Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 521 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 3, 1974).

Taking of demand note dated June 30, 1972, on July 14, 1972, was within "reasonable length of time after its issue" under UCC § 3-304(3)(c) as matter of law. Gill v. Commonwealth Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 521 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 3, 1974).

Where, by terms of note, holder had reason to know, that note was past due when taken, holder of note was not holder in due course. Srochi v. Kamensky, 118 Ga. App. 182, 162 S.E.2d 889 (1968).

Bank to which promissory note was negotiated has not met the burden of establishing that it is a holder in due course to the extent entitling it to summary judgment where there remains, among others, the question of the identity of the person who altered the maturity date from 5 days to 45 days after date. Unadilla Nat'l Bank v. McQueer, 27 A.D.2d 778 (3d Dep't 1967).

A bank which for the second time accepted for deposit to the personal account of the officer of a corporation in receivership a long past due check payable to the corporation's order, at a time when the bank had knowledge of the receivership, could not be a holder in due course when the drawee bank again refused payment. County Trust Co. v. Pascack Valley Bank & Trust Co., 93 N.J. Super. 252, 225 A.2d 605 (App. Div. 1966).

16. Knowledge that instrument is ante-dated or postdated.

Since UCC § 3-304 specifically provides that knowledge that an instrument is ante-dated or post-dated does not of itself give purchaser notice of defense or claim, knowledge on part of collecting bank that check it accepted for deposit was post-dated imposed no duty on bank to make any investigation to ascertain whether or not maker had any defenses which would have justified him in refusing to pay payee; thus, negligence of collecting bank in failing to make investigation to ascertain reason check was post-dated could not constitute defense to bank's cause of action against maker where bank accepted post-dated check for deposit and permitted its depositor to withdraw funds prior to collection of check, and where, when check was returned with stop payment notation, bank was unable to charge it back against its customer's account. First Nat'l Bank v. McKay, 521 S.W.2d 661 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Where purchasers of trailer park gave vendors' agent check in acceptance of vendors' offer to sell, fact that check was postdated for one week did not make purchaser's acceptance a qualified acceptance. How v. Fulkerson, 22 Ariz. App. 467, 528 P.2d 853 (1974).

Knowledge that a check is postdated does not of itself give the purchaser notice of a defense or claim. National Currency Exch., Inc. v. Perkins, 52 Ill. App. 2d 215, 201 N.E.2d 668 (1st Dist. 1964).

17. Knowledge of collateral agreement.

In action for fraud and conversion in sale of corporation by buyer against owner-seller and bank holding security interest in corporation's assets, (1) where sale contract naming owner and bank as sellers was signed only by owner, although owner had promised buyer that bank would also be party to agreement; (2) where buyer gave owner two cashier's checks, made out to both corporation and bank as copayees, as agreed down payment for corporation's assets but received no bill of sale therefor; and (3) where bank indorsed such checks and, pursuant to owner's instructions, applied most of proceeds thereof to satisfy two notes on which corporation was liable to bank and gave owner check payable to corporation for remaining proceeds which owner deposited in corporation's account, bank under UCC § 3-304 was without notice of buyer's alleged defenses (fraud, conversion, and breach of contract) to liability on cashier's checks-and thus was holder in due course as to such checks and not liable to buyer for fraud and conversion in sale transaction-because (1) bank's knowledge that contract of sale accompanied cashier's checks did not constitute notice of buyer's alleged defenses to such checks under "separate agreement" provision of UCC § 3-304(4)(b); (2) bank could reasonably assume that one note discharged by checks' proceeds, although signed by corporation's owner personally, was for benefit of corporation and that application of proceeds to discharge such note pursuant to owner's instructions did not constitute discharge of owner's personal debt, so as to give bank notice under UCC § 3-304(2) of buyer's defenses to liability on checks; and (3) fact that contract of sale was materially altered by striking bank's name from two copies thereof did not give bank notice of buyer's defenses under UCC § 3-304(1)(a), since term "instrument" in UCC § 3-304(1)(a) means "negotiable instrument" and not "contract of sale." Leininger v. Anderson, 255 N.W.2d 22 (Minn. 1977).

Assignee's knowledge that incomplete security agreement covering conditional sale had been completed was not notice of maker's defense on agreement unless assignee had notice of improper completion. Steelman v. Associates Dist. Corp., 121 Ga. App. 649, 175 S.E.2d 62 (1970).

Actual knowledge by holder of discounted notes that payee had agreed with maker not to discount notes would not preclude holder from becoming holder in due course, since knowledge was not notice of defense or claim against notes within Code § 3-304(4)(b) but merely notice of maker's possible cause of action against payee for breach of agreement not discount. Factors & Note Buyers, Inc. v. Green Lane, Inc., 102 N.J. Super. 43, 245 A.2d 223 (L. Div. 1968).

18. Knowledge of completion of incomplete instrument.

Under UCC § 3-304(4)(f), knowledge by purchaser of instrument that there has been default in payment of any other instrument, except one of the same series, does not of itself give purchaser notice of any defense against, or claim to, instrument purchased; and under UCC § 3-304(4)(d), knowledge that incomplete instrument has been completed also does not create notice of such a defense or claim, unless purchaser had notice that completion was improper. Central State Bank v. Kilroy, 57 A.D.2d 940 (2d Dep't 1977).

Purchaser of conditional sales contract was holder in due course, even though he knew that possessor of contract had filled in blanks therein after contract had been signed. Cook v. Southern Credit Corp., 247 Ark. 981, 448 S.W.2d 634 (1970).

19. Duty to make inquiry.

Notice under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) and UCC § 3-304(1)(b) requires some inquiry by purchaser of note where purchaser has actual knowledge of facts that should alert him to possible irregularities concerning such note. Protection afforded holder in due course cannot be used to shield one who simply refuses to investigate when facts known to him suggest an irregularity concerning commercial paper that he purchases. Stewart v. Thornton, 116 Ariz. 107, 568 P.2d 414 (1977).

Where drawer gave third party his signed blank check with instructions to cash it for $800 and give cash to hotel in payment of hotel bill, but third party made check out for full amount of bill, $3046.03, and delivered it to hotel, fact that check was signed by person who was not party to transaction and that it was completed in different handwriting from that of person who signed check, did not impose any duty on hotel under UCC § 3-304(4)(d) to inquire as to third party's authority. Saka v. Sahara-Nevada Corp., 92 Nev. 703, 558 P.2d 535 (1976).

With respect to Code definition of holder in due course as holder who takes instrument without "notice" of any defense against or claim to it on part of any person, failure to make inquiry about unknown fact may be negligence and lack of diligence, but it is not "notice" of what holder might discover. Eldon's Super Fresh Stores, Inc. v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 296 Minn. 130, 207 N.W.2d 282 (1973).

Where the acquirer of a negotiable instrument has no reason to know of anything improper, he is not required to inquire as to all prior transactions in order that he be deemed to have acted honestly and in good faith. Jaeger & Branch, Inc. v. Pappas, 20 Utah 2d 100, 433 P.2d 605 (1967).

20. Effect of time of notice.

In action by cashing bank to recover on check on which payment was subsequently stopped, where check was made payable to named payee as payment for cattle-feeding contract between payee and drawer, another bank holding perfected security interests in all of payee's property called in secured loan to payee and directed payee to turn in all proceeds on payee's accounts receivable and not to pay any of payee's general creditors, payee cashed check in suit at still another bank and paid off certain general creditors, drawer of check stopped payment thereon at request of secured bank, and handwritten part of check stated that it was drawn for $13,430 but check imprinter inadvertently entered "$3,430" on check, cashing bank was holder in due course and entitled to recover under UCC § 3-302(1)(c) because (1) it had no notice under UCC § 1-201(25) of secured bank's claim to check's proceeds from mere publication in biweekly reporting service 17 months previously of secured bank's filing of security agreements on payee's property, even though cashing bank did subscribe to such reporting service; (2) check was negotiable on its face, since it was indorsed by payee and payee's indorsement was not restrictive; (3) statement by payee's wife to officer of cashing bank that check was being cashed to prevent secured bank from "grabbing it" occurred after check was cashed and thus was irrelevant under UCC § 3-304(6) to issue of notice; and (4) cashing bank took check in good faith under UCC § 3-302(1)(b), despite $10,000 error on face of check, since cashing bank had contacted drawee bank to ascertain correct amount of check and to discover whether sufficient funds were on deposit to cover it. McCook County Nat'l Bank v. Compton, 558 F.2d 871 (8th Cir. S.D. 1977), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 905, 98 S. Ct. 302, 54 L. Ed. 2d 191 (1977).

The fact that the transferor-payee was insolvent is not notice of any defense, as against the contention that because the transferor was insolvent the transfer might give rise to a preference, or that the transferor would not be able to pay the note. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Sidney Gotowner, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 953 (1967, NY Sup.).

Notice, in order to prevent one from being bona fide holder under law merchant, or holder in due course under Commercial Code, means notice at time of taking or at time instrument is negotiated, and not notice arising subsequently; time when value is given for instrument is decisive. Sullivan v. United Dealers Corp., 486 S.W.2d 699 (Ky. 1972).

Where, after bank perfected security interest in company's accounts and their proceeds, company induced debtor to pay his account by giving promissory note for amount owed, and negotiated this note to defendant, defendant did not have actual notice of bank's security interest, was holder in due course, and had priority with respect to note and cash payment over bank's earlier perfected security interest. Citizens Valley Bank v. Pacific Materials Co., 263 Or. 557, 503 P.2d 491 (1972).

Lender who claimed to be purchaser of note from broker was charged with notice of defense of usury, where usurious note for $16,260 was purchased from broker for $11,000. Winter & Hirsch, Inc. v. Passarelli, 122 Ill. App. 2d 372, 259 N.E.2d 312 (1st Dist. 1970).

The fact that subsequent to the paying of value the payee learns of a defense does not operate retroactively to destroy his character as a holder in due course. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

Under the provisions of subsec. (6), subsequent knowledge does not impair holder-in-due-course status. Crest Fin. Co. v. First State Bank, 37 Ill. 2d 243, 226 N.E.2d 369 (1967).

21. Miscellaneous circumstances as constituting notice.

Subcontractor's delivery of certificate of deposit to attorney, as alleged escrow agent, was not delivered to general contractor and thus general contractor did not perfect security interest in certificate prior to four months statutory period preceding subcontractor's bankruptcy where, inter alia, during time that certificate was in possession of attorney, interest was paid to subcontractor rather than general contractor, and where, although attorney was attorney to whom general contractor normally referred its legal matters, attorney also did some legal work for subcontractor. Stein v. Rand Constr. Co., 400 F. Supp. 944 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Where the payee of a note gave the required notice of acceleration upon default, acceptance by the payee of late payments without the required interest, after notice of the acceleration, did not cure default and did not bar acceleration. Colonie Block & Supply Co. v. D.H. Overmyer Co., 35 A.D.2d 897 (3d Dep't 1970).

Where the defendant executed a promissory note on February 10, 1964 and subsequently on April 15, 1964 incorporated his construction business, plaintiff who was the holder, but not a holder in due course, of the note was subject to the defense of novation, and proof of that defense was not precluded by the parol evidence rule or the Statute of Frauds. Miles v. Houghtaling, 32 A.D.2d 714 (3d Dep't 1969).

That its depositor's account is low in funds, or even overdrawn, does not constitute notice to a collecting bank of an infirmity in the underlying transaction or instrument, and is not evidence of bad faith chargeable to it at the time it permitted withdrawals against the deposited check. Citizens Nat'l Bank v. Fort Lee Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 89 N.J. Super. 43, 213 A.2d 315 (L. Div. 1965).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

22. Decisions under Code 1942 § 86.

Holder's positive testimony, together with presumption of indorsement before instrument was overdue, could not be overcome by appearance of ink indorsement on back of note. Gibbons v. Longino & Reid, 153 Miss. 749, 121 So. 490 (1929).

Burden on maker to overcome presumption that undated endorsement of negotiable note was made before maturity. Union Station Trust Co. v. Bostick, 133 Miss. 627, 98 So. 105 (1923).

23. Decisions under Code 1942 § 93.

Where the evidence is in dispute as to whether the holder of a note had notice of any infirmity in the instrument at the time of its acquisition, or had knowledge of facts which would amount to his acquiring it in bad faith, the issue was for the jury to decide. Buntin v. Katz, 252 Miss. 768, 173 So. 2d 659 (1965).

Where it was shown that the bank had no actual notice of a warranty and agreement and the breach thereof, the fact that there was stapled to the note, given for the purchase of farm equipment, at the time it was indorsed to the bank a purchase order signed by the maker-purchaser in favor of the seller-payee, on the reverse side of which there was a "warranty and agreement," did not put the bank upon notice as to such warranty and agreement or put it upon inquiry as to whether the warranty and agreement had been breached at the time of purchase, so that the bank as a holder in due course for value, and without notice, was entitled to recover against the maker even though the warranty had actually been breached. Missou v. National Bank of Commerce, 231 Miss. 249, 95 So. 2d 124 (1957).

Purchaser of note with unfilled blanks for payee's name and time interest should begin was put on inquiry as to defects, and was not "holder in due course." Moore v. Vaughn, 167 Miss. 758, 150 So. 372 (1933).

Defense of fraud to other notes purchased from same payee was not notice to due course holder of invalidity of particular notes. Lamar v. Security Fin. Co., 147 Miss. 658, 112 So. 577 (1927).

24. Decisions under Code 1942 § 96.

Where the blank spaces in a conditional sales contract and a note sued on were filled in before the instruments were assigned to a purchaser for value in due course, the conditional purchaser could not defend the action upon the ground that the contract when signed by him specified monthly payments totaling less than the balance shown to be due on the contract as filled out. Garnett v. Associates Disct. Corp., 233 Miss. 849, 103 So. 2d 368 (1958).

Fraudulent representations upon which a party may predicate any demand for relief must relate to past or presently existing facts, as facts, and cannot consist of promises except in some cases when a contractual promise is made with the present undisclosed intention of not performing it. Salitan v. Horn, 212 Miss. 794, 55 So. 2d 444 (1951).

Fraud is never presumed, but must be directly and specifically charged and clearly proven. Salitan v. Horn, 212 Miss. 794, 55 So. 2d 444 (1951).

Negotiation of note by maker in violation of conditions and agreement of parties to note held breach of faith, rendering maker's title defective. Cassedy v. Wells, Jones, Wells & Lipscomb, 162 Miss. 102, 137 So. 472, 79 A.L.R. 1133 (1931).

Where title of one negotiating note was defective, holders had burden of proving they were holders in due course. Cassedy v. Wells, Jones, Wells & Lipscomb, 162 Miss. 102, 137 So. 472, 79 A.L.R. 1133 (1931).

25. Decisions under Code 1942 § 100.

The maker's defenses to the payment of a promissory note to the effect that the tractor, the purchase price of which was represented by the promissory note, was defective and was returned to the seller for repairs and thereafter seized in a suit filed against the seller by a finance company, were unavailable against the plaintiff bank which was a holder in due course of the paper. First Nat'l Bank v. Marcinkowska, 279 F. Supp. 251 (N.D. Miss. 1967).

In order to make a charge of fraud perpetrated upon the makers of a promissory note applicable to an assignee of the note's payee, and thereby defeat the assignee's right of recovery, it would be necessary to show that assignee participated in or had actual knowledge of the fraud. Nash v. Homeowners Mtg. Corp., 194 So. 2d 211 (Miss. 1967).

The holder of a promissory note transferred by limited indorsement, which set forth the payee's warranty that the consideration for which the note was given had been performed, was entitled to recover against the makers, in the absence of proof of knowledge that the warranty statement was false. Nash v. Homeowners Mtg. Corp., 194 So. 2d 211 (Miss. 1967).

Where the evidence is in dispute as to whether the holder of a note had notice of any infirmity in the instrument at the time of its acquisition, or had knowledge of facts which would amount to his acquiring it in bad faith, the issue was for the jury to decide. Buntin v. Katz, 252 Miss. 768, 173 So. 2d 659 (1965).

Whether or not one is a holder in due course does not depend upon his diligence or negligence. Securities Inv. Co. v. Cohen, 241 Miss. 549, 131 So. 2d 439 (1961).

Where the blank spaces in a conditional sales contract and a note sued on were filled in before the instruments were assigned to a purchaser for value in due course, the conditional purchaser could not defend the action upon the ground that the contract when signed by him specified monthly payments totaling less than the balance shown to be due on the contract as filled out. Garnett v. Associates Dist. Corp., 233 Miss. 849, 103 So. 2d 368 (1958).

Where an employee indorsed a check payable to his order, without any restriction or limitation, and subsequently lost the check and a stop payment was ordered by the bank, plaintiff who cashed the check and received the full amount in good faith, was entitled to the amount as against the employee who failed to restrict an indorsement. American Book Co. v. White Sys. of Jackson, 223 Miss. 510, 78 So. 2d 582 (1955).

If it should be ascertained, even after payment of a bill, that any of the indorsements are forged, the drawee can recover back the amount of the bill from the person to whom he paid it; and so each preceding indorser may recover from the person who indorsed the bill to him. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

While a bank is required at its peril to know the signature of its depositor, it is not required to know the signature of the payee named in a check of its depositor, who is unknown to the bank, and with whose signature it is not familiar and under no duty to become familiar. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

An indorser, whether for accommodation or for value, guarantees the genuineness of previous indorsements upon a check which he negotiates. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where the proof showed that payee's name on depositor's check was forged, and that defendant indorsed the check for accommodation, drawee bank was entitled to recover amount thereof from defendant, notwithstanding that at the time suit was filed bank had not reimbursed its depositor. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where credit association was induced to make loan to property owner's brother on the latter's representation that he was owner of the property, which was used as security, and the association's agent informed a merchant of the loan and asked him to cash the loan check, which was issued in the name of the real owner of the property, the association, its agent and the merchant all believing that the name of the borrower was that appearing on the check, although he was known by a different name, the merchant, in cashing the check upon indorsement by the borrower in the name appearing on the check, was acting in good faith, and so was not chargeable under the statute relating to notice of infirmity in a negotiable instrument or of defect of title of the person negotiating it. Hattiesburg Prod. Credit Ass'n v. McNair, 193 Miss. 615, 10 So. 2d 97 (1942).

Purchaser of note with unfilled blanks for payee's name and time interest should begin was put on inquiry as to defects, and was not "holder in due course." Moore v. Vaughn, 167 Miss. 758, 150 So. 372 (1933).

There was no bad faith imputable to purchaser of trust deed and note because purchaser saw affidavit by makers that there was no infirmity. Guaranty Inv. & Loan Co. v. Stevens, 161 Miss. 473, 137 So. 335 (1931).

No bad faith could be imputed to purchaser of note and trust deed because payee sold them without making profit. Guaranty Inv. & Loan Co. v. Stevens, 161 Miss. 473, 137 So. 335 (1931).

Where one negotiating loan charged usurious commission, purchaser of notes and trust deed and its assignee held to be holders in due course. Guaranty Inv. & Loan Co. v. Stevens, 161 Miss. 473, 137 So. 335 (1931).

Defenses existing between buyer of automobile on conditional sale and original seller, growing out of alleged defects as to car, were not available to buyer in action on the note by the holder, which had purchased it for value and without notice. Commercial Credit Co. v. Summers, 154 Miss. 501, 122 So. 541 (1929).

§ 75-3-307. Notice of breach of fiduciary duty.

(a) In this section:

(1) "Fiduciary" means an agent, trustee, partner, corporate officer or director, or other representative owing a fiduciary duty with respect to an instrument.

(2) "Represented person" means the principal, beneficiary, partnership, corporation, or other person to whom the duty stated in paragraph (1) is owed.

(b) If (i) an instrument is taken from a fiduciary for payment or collection or for value, (ii) the taker has knowledge of the fiduciary status of the fiduciary, and (iii) the represented person makes a claim to the instrument or its proceeds on the basis that the transaction of the fiduciary is a breach of fiduciary duty, the following rules apply:

(1) Notice of breach of fiduciary duty by the fiduciary is notice of the claim of the represented person.

(2) In the case of an instrument payable to the represented person or the fiduciary as such, the taker has notice of the breach of fiduciary duty if the instrument is (i) taken in payment of or as security for a debt known by the taker to be the personal debt of the fiduciary, (ii) taken in a transaction known by the taker to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, or (iii) deposited to an account other than an account of the fiduciary, as such, or an account of the represented person.

(3) If an instrument is issued by the represented person or the fiduciary as such, and made payable to the fiduciary personally, the taker does not have notice of the breach of fiduciary duty unless the taker knows of the breach of fiduciary duty.

(4) If an instrument is issued by the represented person or the fiduciary as such, to the taker as payee, the taker has notice of the breach of fiduciary duty if the instrument is (i) taken in payment of or as security for a debt known by the taker to be the personal debt of the fiduciary, (ii) taken in a transaction known by the taker to be for the personal benefit of the fiduciary, or (iii) deposited to an account other than an account of the fiduciary, as such, or an account of the represented person.

§ 75-3-308. Proof of signatures and status as holder in due course.

(a) In an action with respect to an instrument, the authenticity of, and authority to make, each signature on the instrument is admitted unless specifically denied in the pleadings. If the validity of a signature is denied in the pleadings, the burden of establishing validity is on the person claiming validity, but the signature is presumed to be authentic and authorized unless the action is to enforce the liability of the purported signer and the signer is dead or incompetent at the time of trial of the issue of validity of the signature. If an action to enforce the instrument is brought against a person as the undisclosed principal of a person who signed the instrument as a party to the instrument, the plaintiff has the burden of establishing that the defendant is liable on the instrument as a represented person under Section 75-3-402(a).

(b) If the validity of signatures is admitted or proved and there is compliance with subsection (a), a plaintiff producing the instrument is entitled to payment if the plaintiff proves entitlement to enforce the instrument under Section 75-3-301, unless the defendant proves a defense or claim in recoupment. If a defense or claim in recoupment is proved, the right to payment of the plaintiff is subject to the defense or claim, except to the extent the plaintiff proves that the plaintiff has rights of a holder in due course which are not subject to the defense or claim.

11. In general.

In action on note against corporation in which defendant contended that procedural rule-which provided that when a claim is founded on written instrument that is set out at length in the pleading, instrument's execution is deemed confessed unless party charged with executing instrument specifically denies its execution—was not controlling by virtue of UCC § 3-307(1)(b) in case where signer of instrument has died, court held (1) that there was no merit in such contention because defendant was corporation and had not died, and (2) that UCC § 3-307(1) was also inapplicable because defendant did not specifically deny signature on note in its pleadings, as required by UCC § 3-307(1). Hudspeth v. Tree Mart, Inc., 573 S.W.2d 697 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Subsection (3) of this section is comparable to § 59 of the Uniform Negotiable Instruments Law (repealed § 82 of C 107, Annotated Laws of Massachusetts). Elbar Realty, Inc. v. City Bank & Trust Co., 342 Mass. 262, 173 N.E.2d 256 (1961).

12. Applicability.

Under UCC § 3-307(2), the defendant has the burden of establishing any defenses to liability on the instrument. American State Bank v. Richendifer, 36 Or. App. 199, 584 P.2d 323 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-307(2), the burden of establishing, by a preponderance of the evidence, the defense of failure of consideration for an instrument is on the person asserting such defense. Oak Trust & Sav. Bank v. Annerino, 64 Ill. App. 3d 1030, 381 N.E.2d 1389 (1st Dist. 1978).

In action on promissory note given in payment of real estate brokerage commission, since contract sued on was that of the note and not the brokerage contract, action was for enforcement of note's obligations and thus was governed by UCC § 3-307(2), providing that when signatures are admitted or established, production of instrument entitles holder to recover on it unless defendant establishes defense. Azar-Beard & Assocs. v. Wallace, 146 Ga. App. 671, 247 S.E.2d 154 (1978).

Although shipment of old, unpadded, ripped and mildewed gloves, rather than new boxing gloves ordered by buyer from Pakistani seller, constituted "fraud in the transaction" within meaning of UCC § 5-114(2), Pakistani banks would be entitled to recover proceeds of drafts if they were holders in due course; even though UCC

§ 3-307 is contained in Article Three of Code dealing with negotiable instruments rather than letters of credit, its provisions would control, but "defense" referred to in § 3-307 would be deemed to include only those defenses available under UCC § 5-114(2), i.e., non-compliance of required documents, forged or fraudulent documents or fraud in the transaction; since defense of fraud in transaction was shown, burden shifted to Pakistani banks by operation of UCC § 3-307(3) to prove that they were holders in due course and took drafts without notice of seller's alleged fraud in accord with UCC § 3-302, and since Pakistani banks failed to satisfy burden of proving that they qualified in all respects as holders in due course they were not entitled to obtain payment of drafts. United Bank, Ltd. v. Cambridge Sporting Goods Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 254, 360 N.E.2d 943 (1976), reargument denied, 41 N.Y.2d 901 (1977).

Where the sole issue in an action brought upon a check was whether the signature of one or two of the corporate drawer's officers were required for validity, and the single signature appearing on the instrument, was admittedly an authorized signature, this section did not apply. New Waterford Bank v. Morrison Buick, Inc., 38 Pa. D. & C.2d 371 (1965).

13. Requirement of specific denial.

In action by bank against guarantor of note, where answer of guarantor did not specifically deny signature on instrument, pursuant to UCC §§ 3-307(1) signature on note was admitted. Lipton v. Southeast First Nat'l Bank, 343 So. 2d 927 (Fla. App. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-307(1), specific denial of validity of signatures on promissory note was required to place due execution of instrument in issue. Loveless v. Texas First Mtg. Reit, 531 S.W.2d 870 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Under UCC § 3-307, cognovit note which apparently was signed by secretary of corporation was prima facie valid and binding on corporation; thus, corporation was not entitled to relief from confessed judgment on note where in its motion, affidavit, and proposed answer there was no denial that secretary's signature was authorized nor did affidavit set forth facts sufficient to support finding that signature was not authorized; as a result, corporation must be deemed to have admitted that signature of secretary was authorized. Burkett v. Finger Lake Dev. Corp., 2 Ill. App. 3d 396, 336 N.E.2d 628 (5th Dist. 1975).

Under Code section providing that unless specifically denied in pleading each signature on instrument is admitted, defendant's general denial in action on promissory notes had legal effect of admitting their signatures on notes and payee's indorsement of notes to plaintiff bank. Farmers & Merchants State Bank v. Mann, 87 S.D. 90, 203 N.W.2d 173 (1973).

In an action on a promissory note, the signature of the maker, unless specifically denied in the pleadings, is deemed admitted under UCC § 3-307. Wildfang Miller Motors, Inc. v. Rath, 198 N.W.2d 210 (N.D. 1972).

In an action upon promissory notes in which the answer was a general denial that "the signature is genuine" and a demand for proof that "it" was, a ruling by the court that the denial was not a separate special demand did not harm the defendant where photocopies of the notes were admitted in evidence, thus bringing into operation the presumption of the validity of the signatures and requiring a finding for the plaintiff in the absence of evidence to the contrary, under subsections (1), (1)(b) and (2) of this section. Union Nat'l Bank v. Cannato, 350 Mass. 767, 214 N.E.2d 30 (1966).

14. Proof of genuine signature.

Where (1) draft issued to two copayees by insurance company, as drawer-drawee, was deposited by one copayee in depository bank, (2) other copayee's indorsement on draft was forged or unauthorized, (3) drawer-drawee, after paying draft when it was processed through banking channels, learned of such forged indorsement, and amount of draft was charged back through banking channels to depository bank, and (4) depository bank then sued drawer-drawee for payment of draft, court held that depository bank was not entitled to recover because (1) under UCC § 3-201(1), depository bank had only rights of its transferor in draft, which were worthless because copayee whose signature had been forged had lien on draft's entire proceeds, (2) depository bank did not sustain its burden of proof under UCC § 3-307(1) concerning genuineness of forged indorsement on draft, (3) since one necessary indorsement on draft was missing, depository bank could not negotiate draft or become holder or holder in due course thereof, and (4) depository bank had breached its presentment warranty under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) because it claimed through forged or unauthorized indorsement of copayee who had interest in funds represented by draft. Foremost Ins. Co. v. First City Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 374 So. 2d 840 (Miss. 1979).

Issue of genuineness of signature on check was never raised as defense, and presumption that signature was genuine was not rebutted, where alleged indorser did not deny signing check or recovering proceeds. Gonzalez v. Dumpson, 46 A.D.2d 861 (1st Dep't 1974), appeal dismissed, 36 N.Y.2d 806 (1975).

Where genuineness of signature is put in issue and purported signer has died, party claiming under signature has burden of establishing signature as genuine; held, burden not satisfied where there is no proof at all that "Joseph Carr" on note was deceased "Joseph Carr", and name is hardly uncommon one. In re Carr Estate, 436 Pa. 47, 258 A.2d 628 (1969).

15. Presumption.

The State failed to overcome the presumption in favor of the genuineness of the signatures of the named payee on State issued unemployment checks (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-307) where the State produced the hearsay testimony of the claims examiner for the State Department of Labor who interviewed the supposed payee, an individual not personally known to her, in connection with a claim of forgery, but failed to produce any of the documents signed by the named payee in the possession of the Department of Labor allegedly forming the basis of her comparison with the signatures on the checks, and, consequently, although the signatures on the checks and the signature on the interview form signed in the presence of the State's witness are different, they bear equal claims to authenticity and, therefore, do not constitute the required firsthand evidence of forgery necessary to overcome the presumption; comparison of signatures by the court was precluded by the State's failure to produce "any writing proved * * * to be the handwriting of the person claimed to have made the disputed writing" (CPLR 4536); the State did not exercise those opportunities for self-protection available to it by not possessing properly maintained records containing an authentic signature of the named payee with which to prove the forgery. Freeman Check Cashing, Inc. v. State, 97 Misc. 2d 819 (1979).

The statutory presumption in favor of the genuineness of a signature (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-307) aiding the holder, who has the ultimate burden of establishing the effectiveness of a disputed signature, is overcome when some evidence is introduced tending to prove each and every element of forgery; the proof need not possess any particular degree of "substantiality", persuasiveness or weight, since such tests are essentially subjective. Freeman Check Cashing, Inc. v. State, 97 Misc. 2d 819 (1979).

UCC § 3-307(1) concerns defenses when validity of signature is in issue. Purpose of section is to give presumption of validity of signature to party suing as holder to collect on note or draft, and section cannot be used to burden unnecessarily party who is bringing conversion action resulting from payment of instrument over forged indorsement. Petty v. First Nat'l Bank, 50 Ohio App. 2d 365, 363 N.E.2d 599 (1976).

In conversion action by copayee of check against drawer and bank that paid check over plaintiff's allegedly forged indorsement, where plaintiff contended that his name had been signed to such check by attorney without plaintiff's authorization, and where such attorney admitted signing plaintiff's name but claimed that he had authority to do so, defense contention that since plaintiff was disputing validity of his indorsement, he had burden of overcoming presumption created by UCC § 3-307(1) that indorsement was genuine and authorized could not be sustained because (1) all parties conceded that plaintiff's signature was not genuine, and (2) defendants, who asserted that attorney was authorized to sign plaintiff's name to check, had burden of proving such authority. Petty v. First Nat'l Bank, 50 Ohio App. 2d 365, 363 N.E.2d 599 (1976).

Under UCC § 3-307(1), where purported maker of note denied signature but introduced no evidence to support defense that signature was forged or unauthorized, presumption of validity of signature was not rebutted, and expert testimony is not required to support claim as trial judge, sitting as trier of fact, is entitled to make his own comparison of signatures and form his own opinion as to authenticity. Jax v. Jax, 73 Wis. 2d 572, 243 N.W.2d 831 (1976).

In action by bank to recover on promissory note, testimony by bank officer that he was present during taking of maker's deposition when maker denied that she signed note, even if properly admitted in evidence, was insufficient to overcome presumption of UCC § 3-307(1)(b) that her signature was genuine and, therefore, upon production of instrument, maker was liable to bank, absent any defense. Virginia Nat'l Bank v. Holt, 216 Va. 500, 219 S.E.2d 881 (1975).

In action on promissory notes purportedly bearing signatures of debtor, his wife, and his daughter, presumption that signature of daughter was genuine or authorized was sufficiently rebutted by denial by all defendants that signature on note was hers, along with her assertion that she was without knowledge of the transaction, and sample of her signature. Esposito v. Fascione, 111 R.I. 91, 299 A.2d 165 (1973).

In absence of showing that president of corporation lacked authority, actual or apparent, to bind organization, his signature on promissory note would be presumed to be authorized. B & C Enters. v. Utter, 88 Nev. 433, 498 P.2d 1327 (1972).

Statute presumes signature on negotiable instrument to be genuine or authorized. Arnold v. Bostwick Banking Co., 121 Ga. App. 131, 173 S.E.2d 236 (1970), rev'd on other grounds, 227 Ga. 18, 178 S.E.2d 890 (1970), conformed to, 123 Ga. App. 189, 179 S.E.2d 780 (1971).

In an action by the holder of a promissory note made by defendants payable to "Greenlaw & Sons Roofing & Siding Co."

and indorsed "Greenlaw & Sons by George M. Greenlaw," where the defendant denied the genuineness of the indorsement but offered no evidence affecting the regularity of the indorsement, and where it did not appear that Greenlaw & Sons and Greenlaw & Son Roofing and Siding Co. were not the same company or that the indorsement by Greenlaw was in a name other than his own or under which he individually did business, there was nothing to counter the presumption of the indorsement's regularity existing under subsection (1)(b) of the instant section, the signature of Greenlaw was established under subsection (2) of the instant section, and the plaintiff as a holder within the meaning of § 1-201(20) of the instant chapter was entitled to recover. Watertown Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Spanks, 346 Mass. 398, 193 N.E.2d 333 (1963).

16. Prima facie case for holder.

Where plaintiff payee's supporting affidavit in suit against maker and indorser of promissory note showed that there was no dispute as to genuineness of defendants' signatures, affidavit was not relied on to prove such signatures, plaintiff averred in affidavit that he saw defendants sign note, and defendants did not by counteraffidavit deny or question genuineness of their signatures, plaintiff's production of note as holder entitled it under UCC § 3-307(2) to recover on instrument. First Progressive Bank v. Griffith, 354 So. 2d 703 (La. App. 1978).

In action on note given in payment for land, where (1) note was signed by both vendees and made payable to vendor, who died thereafter, (2) vendor's wife, individually and as executrix of vendor's estate, transferred note to plaintiff, and (3) defendant vendees contended since vendor's will did not authorize executrix to sell estate's assets, her transfer of note affected only her individual half interest therein, other half interest in note was still owned by vendor's estate, and plaintiff therefore was not entitled to judgment for full amount of note, court held that judgment awarding plaintiff full amount of note was proper under (1) UCC § 3-307(2), dealing with recovery by holder on instrument as to which signatures have been established, in absence of any defense to such recovery, and (2) UCC § 3-306(d), providing that claim of third person to an instrument is not available as a defense to party liable thereon unless such third person defends action for party liable. Cowhouse Dairy, Inc. v. Agristor Credit Corp., 566 S.W.2d 339 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

In action by corporation and individual plaintiff, who were sole shareholders of such corporation, to recover on dishonored check made out to individual plaintiffs by one who represented defendant buyers of plaintiff corporation, where (1) plaintiffs, after being informed by defendants that check would not be honored, indorsed check to second corporation with notation, "for funds advanced," (2) second corporation indorsed check to bank for deposit only and sent check to bank for collection, (3) bank, after indorsing and sending check for collection, physically returned it after dishonor to second corporation, and (4) second corporation then physically returned it without indorsement to plaintiffs and assigned to plaintiffs all of second corporation's right, title, and interest therein, trial court properly held (1) that plaintiffs had standing to sue on check, even though they were not holders or transferees for value, since transfers specified in UCC § 3-201(1) are not limited to transfers for value, and (2) that since plaintiffs, although transferees without indorsement, proved transaction by which they had acquired check from holder, they therefore acquired rights of a holder and were entitled, on check's production, to presumption of entitlement to recovery under UCC § 3-307(2) because defendants did not establish defense to recovery. Perry & Greer, Inc. v. Manning, 282 Or. 25, 576 P.2d 791 (1978).

In suit to recover on certificate of deposit that was issued by defendant bank and assigned by holder to plaintiff, wherein defendant alleged that certificate had been purchased with proceeds of loan from defendant to insurance corporation and that when loan became a bad risk, defendant set off amount represented by certificate against such loan, court held that since defendant had failed to set forth specific facts that would place validity of certificate's assignment in issue and had also failed to deny specifically validity of signature made in connection with such assignment, production of certificate entitled plaintiff under UCC § 3-307(2) to recover thereon (also holding that summary judgment was not precluded, since defendant had presented no issue of fact that concerned validity of certificate's assignment). Old S. Life Ins. Co. v. Bank of N.C., 36 N.C. App. 18, 244 S.E.2d 264 (1978).

In action by hospital on promissory note signed by physician allegedly for advances made by hospital under oral agreement concerning physician's income, (1) despite conflicts in evidence as to meaning of agreement and conditions under which advances would have to be repaid, fact remained that defendant had signed note after conference with hospital's business manager concerning amount owed hospital for advances; (2) under UCC § 3-307(2), production of a note with defendant's signature established entitles a plaintiff to recover in the absence of any defense to the instrument; (3) under UCC § 3-408, since consideration for a note given for an antecedent obligation is presumed, defendant had burden of showing lack of consideration for note sued on; and (4) in view of state of record on appeal, reviewing court could not conclude that trial court's judgment in favor of hospital was contrary to manifest weight of the evidence. Northlake Community Hosp. v. Cadkin, 55 Ill. App. 3d 344, 370 N.E.2d 1094 (1st Dist. 1977).

Plaintiffs, suing on irrevocable letters of credit under UCC § 3-307, have burden of proving holder in due course status where defendant establishes defense of fraud as to signatures on drafts. United Bank, Ltd. v. Cambridge Sporting Goods Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 254, 360 N.E.2d 943 (1976), reargument denied, 41 N.Y.2d 901 (1977).

In action by bank to recover on two promissory notes, bank was entitled under UCC § 3-307 to summary judgment unless promisor otherwise properly established a defense, where bank established amounts due on notes and that it was owner and holder of notes, that notes were in default, and that defendant was maker of notes. Hemphill v. Greater Houston

Bank, 537 S.W.2d 124 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Proof that defendant signed promissory note and that it was in possession of plaintiff constituted prima facie case that note had been duly executed and delivered, for valuable consideration, and that defendant was obligated to pay it. Cannon v. Wright, 531 P.2d 1290 (Utah 1975).

In action on promissory note where defendant raised no question as to genuineness of his signature, plaintiff's production of note and defendant's concession as to amount due entitled plaintiff to recover on it pursuant to UCC § 3-307(2). Conran v. Yager, 263 S.C. 417, 211 S.E.2d 228 (1975).

Plaintiff, in action on two promissory notes, was entitled to summary judgment where execution and delivery of notes was conceded and where answer did not specifically deny signatures; under such circumstances, signatures were admitted and holder of note was entitled to recover on them unless defendant established defense. Center Bank v. Mid-Continent Meats, Inc., 194 Neb. 665, 234 N.W.2d 902 (1975).

Production of note signed by defendant with his name only, neither naming party or parties for whom he was allegedly trustee nor showing that he signed in representative capacity, established plaintiff's prima facie right to recover thereon. Jolly v. Egerton, 132 Ga. App. 243, 207 S.E.2d 634 (1974).

In action on promissory note bank met its burden of proof under Code § 3-307(b) by establishing that bank was holder of note on which it sued, that defendant had signed note, that note became due and payable, and that defendant had not paid or offered to pay anything on note. Hensley v. City Bank & Trust Co., 495 S.W.2d 282 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 19, 1973).

Where plaintiff had established prima facie case in action on demand note by producing note and proving signatures, summary judgment for plaintiff was proper where defendant failed to present facts in support of alleged defenses of lack of consideration, failure of consideration, and lack of delivery. Loew v. Minasian, 361 Mass. 390, 280 N.E.2d 688 (1972).

In action on check delivered by defendant to plaintiff but not paid when presented for payment, plaintiff's introduction in evidence of check, signed by defendant as maker and held by plaintiff, established prima facie case for plaintiff. Helman v. Dixon, 71 Misc. 2d 1057 (1972).

Where note was admitted into evidence establishing a prima facie case as to the signature and the authorization therefor, and where no defense was offered, production of the note entitled defendant to recover thereon and a directed verdict on the counterclaim was demanded. Q.S. King Co. v. Minter, 124 Ga. App. 517, 184 S.E.2d 594 (1971).

When the check on which payment has been stopped is introduced in evidence in the action against the drawer and the drawer's signature is not disputed, a prima facie case is made out that the plaintiff is a holder in due course and the drawer has the burden of establishing any defense. Jaeger & Branch, Inc. v. Pappas, 20 Utah 2d 100, 433 P.2d 605 (1967).

In an action by a holder upon a negotiable note against the maker in the Superior Court, where findings in favor of the holder in the District Court made out a prima facie case in favor of the holder under c 231, § 102C, the burden was on the maker, notwithstanding the provisions of subsec (3) of the instant section, to rebut the holder's prima facie case. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Ingel, 347 Mass. 119, 196 N.E.2d 847 (1964).

17. Proof of defenses; in general.

In suit on promissory note for balance due on purchase of insurance, after signature on note had been admitted by defendants, they had under UCC § 3-307(2) burden of establishing any affirmative defense that they might have had to plaintiff's action, and trial did not err in awarding summary judgment against defendants on their failure to rebut prima facie case created against them by their admission of execution of note. Orr v. Woodruff-Robinson, Inc., 142 Ga. App. 861, 237 S.E.2d 463 (1977).

Where defenses are raised against note, burden under UCC § 3-307 is on plaintiff to show that he is holder in due course in order to effectively cut off such defenses. If plaintiff fails to sustain his burden, his action is subject under UCC § 3-306(b) to all defenses that would be available on simple contract, as long as such defenses are in some way connected with debt sued on or transaction under which it arose. Seamans v. Miller, 142 Ga. App. 147, 235 S.E.2d 542 (1977).

Under UCC § 3-307(2), where execution of note and mortgage was established by evidence of notary who drew them, burden of establishing defense was on defendant makers. Adair v. Adair, 192 Neb. 571, 222 N.W.2d 908 (1974).

Where the instruments were produced and the signatures admitted, UCC § 3-307 placed the burden upon defendant to prove its defenses. Arkansas Real Estate Co. v. Heeb, 251 Ark. 113, 471 S.W.2d 327 (1971).

The burden of proof is upon the defendant to establish a defense once the validity of his signature is established or admitted. Gate City Furn. Co. v. Rumsey, 115 Ga. App. 753, 156 S.E.2d 221 (1967).

In a suit upon a promissory note, when the maker by answer admits the execution of the note and pleads an affirmative defense as to the holder's right of recovery, the burden rests upon the maker to establish the allegations of his answer by preponderance or the evidence. Persson v. McCormick, 412 P.2d 619 (Okla. 1966).

Where, in a suit on a promissory note, the defendant, having admitted signing the instrument, offered no evidence either to establish a defense to the holder's right of recovery, or that the holder was not a holder in due course, the question as to whether holder was a holder in due course would not arise until the maker established a defense. Persson v. McCormick, 412 P.2d 619 (Okla. 1966).

18. —Fraud of misrepresentation.

Although shipment of old, unpadded, ripped and mildewed gloves, rather than new boxing gloves ordered by buyer from Pakistani seller, constituted "fraud in the transaction" within meaning of UCC § 5-114(2), Pakistani banks would be entitled to recover proceeds of drafts if they were holders in due course; even though UCC § 3-307 is contained in Article Three of Code dealing with negotiable instruments rather than letters of credit, its provisions would control, but "defense" referred to in § 3-307 would be deemed to include only those defenses available under UCC § 5-114(2), i.e., non-compliance of required documents, forged or fraudulent documents or fraud in the transaction; since defense of fraud in transaction was shown, burden shifted to Pakistani banks by operation of UCC § 3-307(3) to prove that they were holders in due course and took drafts without notice of seller's alleged fraud in accord with UCC § 3-302, and since Pakistani banks failed to satisfy burden of proving that they qualified in all respects as holders in due course they were not entitled to obtain payment of drafts. United Bank, Ltd. v. Cambridge Sporting Goods Corp., 41 N.Y.2d 254, 360 N.E.2d 943 (1976), reargument denied, 41 N.Y.2d 901 (1977).

Plaintiff was entitled to recovery upon presentation of note, showing of present ownership and holding of note, and establishment of defendant's signature thereto, defendant having raised defenses of fraud and/or illegality, which must be raised affirmatively and could not, as here, be raised in affidavit opposing motion for summary judgment. Anderson v. Industrial State Bank, 478 S.W.2d 215 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 14, 1972).

Where testimony of two witnesses was in conflict as to completion of note at time of execution, plaintiff-payee was entitled to judgment, since burden was on defendant-maker to establish defense of unauthorized completion by preponderance of total evidence. Newby v. Armour Agr. Chem. Co., 119 Ga. App. 650, 168 S.E.2d 652 (1969).

Where in action by depositor against bank to recover amount of check charged back against its account, the third party defendant drawer of the check rebutted the presumption of the genuineness of the signature of the payee and demonstrated that the warranty of the depositor as to that genuineness was breached, the depositor's complaint must be dismissed even though the charge back did not occur until 6 months after deposit and long after settlement, and there was no proof that payee's endorsement was a forgery. 622 West 113th St. Corp. v. Chemical Bank New York Trust Co., 52 Misc. 2d 444 (1966).

19. —Want or failure of consideration.

Where guarantor in action on written personal guaranty of loan failed to prove, as affirmative defenses, either failure of consideration or breach by lender of loan agreement by not lending borrower additional funds under such agreement, with allegedly resultant injuries to borrower, lender on production of guaranty instrument was entitled under UCC § 3-307(2) to recover thereon for sums actually loaned to borrower. Crider v. First Nat'l Bank, 144 Ga. App. 536, 241 S.E.2d 638 (1978).

Promissory note executed by shareholder to partially satisfy overdraft of corporation was supported by consideration under UCC §§ 3-307(2) and 3-408 despite contentions that note was signed at request of bank to protect it from bank examiners and until another loan could be obtained from Small Business Administration. Farmer v. Peoples Am. Bank, 132 Ga. App. 751, 209 S.E.2d 80 (1974).

Introduction of note in evidence established prima facie case against maker for face value of note, and burden of proof was on defendant maker to establish defense of lack of consideration. Darden v. Harrison, 495 S.W.2d 49 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), rev'd, 17 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 357, 511 S.W.2d 925 (Tex. 1974).

Once want of consideration is pleaded, there is still presumption that note is valid, and defendant has burden of proving his plea, so that where even evidence of defendant established that assignment of note was part of consideration for execution and delivery of second note, proof of total want of consideration was lacking. Parker v. McGaha, 291 Ala. 339, 280 So. 2d 769 (1973).

The burden of proving a defense of no consideration in a suit brought by the payee of a check returned to him by the drawee bank for insufficient funds rests on the drawer. Buehrer v. Gates, 411 S.W.2d 676 (Ky. 1967).

Where execution and default in performance are established, mere possession and production into evidence of note and trust deed entitles holder to prima facie basis for recovery thereon, with burden of preponderating on defense of failure of consideration shifted to nonholder. Rago v.

Cosmopolitan Nat'l Bank, 89 Ill. App. 2d 12, 232 N.E.2d 88 (1st Dist. 1967).

Payment is defense which must be affirmatively established by maker or payee, once instrument is produced by holder; burden of pleading and proving such defense cannot be sustained by filing of general denial. Harrison v. Morias, 141 Ind. App. 537, 230 N.E.2d 545 (1967).

Where the maker of a trade acceptance asserted the defense of no consideration in his answer, the burden was on the purchaser of the instrument to prove that it was a holder in due course. Credit Indus. Corp. v. DiNanno, 29 Mass. App. Dec. 40 (1964).

After having proved the execution and delivery of certain promissory notes by a decedent, claimants seeking recovery on the notes against the decedent's estate did not have to prove consideration, because the burden was then on the estate to prove a lack of consideration. However, when the claimants, after presenting their notes, went further and introduced testimony in anticipation of the defense of failure of consideration, they relieved the estate of the burden of proving lack or failure of consideration. In re Calanno Estate, 14 Pa. D. & C.2d 153, 8 Fiduc. Rep. 180 (1958).

Under Pennsylvania law the holder of a promissory note under seal, the execution of which by a decedent is proved, is entitled to recover under subdivision (2) of this section, and the defense of want of consideration is unavailable in an action on a sealed instrument. In re Chadwick's Estate, 44 Wash. C. R. 182 (1964).

20. —Miscellaneous defenses.

Asserted unawareness of nature and effect of signature is not defense against holder of instrument when signature is admitted or established. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Bonney, 299 F. Supp. 790 (W.D. Okla. 1969).

Where maker of note testified that he left blank note containing only his signature but no amount and no date with president of bank and said note was filled in and completed without authorization, burden shifted to payee to establish that it was holder in due course under UCC § 3-307. Sea Hoss Marine Enters., Inc. v. Angleton Bank of Commerce, 536 S.W.2d 592 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.r.e. (Sept. 29, 1976).

As a holder within the meaning of UCC § 1-201, subd 20, an escrow agent established a prima facie case on maker's dishonored check under UCC § 3-307 subd 2, and it was no defense either that escrow agent could not himself sue on the check, or that the principal had failed to perform under escrow agreement, where escrow agent had acknowledged receipt of cash, and could sue on check under CPLR § 1004 either as trustee of principal, or as promisee of a third party beneficiary contract, and where maker prevented principal's performance. Helman v. Dixon, 71 Misc. 2d 1057 (1972).

Defense pleaded by a defendant, consisting of a denial of delivery and a denial that the plaintiff was a holder in due course, was sufficient to place the burden of proof on the plaintiff. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

21. Due course as holder's defense.

Just as where a person who establishes holder in due course status is entitled to take free of personal defenses such as fraud, so too can a holder in due course who has already been paid assert his status as a defense under UCC § 3-307 in an action by the drawer to recover back the payment. Nida v. Michael, 34 Mich. App. 290, 191 N.W.2d 151 (1971).

22. —Burden of proving due course.

Where maker of promissory note raised defense of fraud in the inducement, holder had burden of showing that it was holder in due course, but, having satisfied such burden, it was not subject to such defense. Federal Nat'l Mtg. Ass'n v. Gregory, 426 F. Supp. 282 (E.D. Wis. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-305(2) and § 3-408, lack of consideration and fraud in the inducement are not good defenses against a holder in due course. However, under UCC § 3-307(3), once a defense other than lack of consideration is raised, holder has burden of proving that he is holder in due course in all respects (action on promissory note, executed in real estate sale transaction, in which makers pleaded affirmative defenses of lack of consideration and fraud in the inducement and also counterclaimed for damages for such fraud). Kreutz v. Wolff, 560 S.W.2d 271 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

Where party who executed promissory note to bank, which indorsed it to holder for valuable consideration, did not deny execution of note or allege any affirmative defense to holder's suit to recover on note, which was past due and payable, holder could recover under UCC § 3-307(2) without having to prove that it was holder in due course. Little v. Business Data Ctr., Inc., 550 S.W.2d 406 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Where note showed on its face that it was due on date on which it was made and that it provided for rate of interest illegal at that time, plaintiff to whom note had been negotiated failed to sustain burden of proof under UCC § 3-307 that he was holder in due course, and trial court did not err in considering defense that since defendant maker had assumed, under contract pursuant to which note was given, greater obligation than he had contracted for, he could offset such amount in action on note. Seamans v. Miller, 142 Ga. App. 147, 235 S.E.2d 542 (1977).

It is only after it is shown that a defense exists that one claiming the rights of a holder in due course has the burden of establishing that fact. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Watson, 476 S.W.2d 868 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

Evidence indicating possibility of defense is sufficient under UCC § 3-307(2) to place burden on plaintiff of proving himself to be holder in due course, a burden that is satisfied if the trier of fact is persuaded that the existence of the holder in due course elements as defined by UCC § 3-302 is more probable than their nonexistence. Oklahoma Nat'l Bank v. Equitable Credit Fin. Co., 489 P.2d 1331 (Okla. 1971).

Just as where a person who establishes holder in due course status is entitled to take free of personal defenses such as fraud, so too can a holder in due course who has already been paid assert his status as a defense under UCC § 3-307 in an action by the drawer to recover back the payment. Nida v. Michael, 34 Mich. App. 290, 191 N.W.2d 151 (1971).

Person claiming to be holder in due course has affirmative burden of proving that instrument was taken for value in good faith and without notice. Brown v. Kelley, 120 Ga. App. 788, 172 S.E.2d 181 (1969).

Once the defendant establishes that he has some kind of defense, the burden is on the holder to establish that he is a holder in due course. Daric Constr. Corp. v. Radice Constr. Corp., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 763 (1967, NY Sup).

Where the maker of the notes sued on proved that they were given as part of an agreement under which he was to receive a franchise for the sale of certain merchandise, and that none of the merchandise was ever delivered by the payee, the holder of the notes had the burden of proving that he took the notes for value, and without notice of any infirmity. Pugatch v. David's Jewelers, 53 Misc. 2d 327 (1967).

Even if defenses are established so as to overcome right of holder to recover on instrument under Code § 3-307(2), holder should be accorded opportunity of successfully overcoming any defense raised. Gate City Furn. Co. v. Rumsey, 115 Ga. App. 753, 156 S.E.2d 221 (1967).

Where defenses such as payment or that the paper is overdue are asserted by the maker of a note, the burden is upon the party claiming the rights of a holder in due course to prove his status as such. Unadilla Nat'l Bank v. McQueer, 27 A.D.2d 778 (3d Dep't 1967).

One claiming to be the holder of a check in good faith and without knowledge of any defense to its acceptance and payment has the burden of proving it. Peoples Bank v. Haar, 421 P.2d 817 (Okla. 1966).

To overcome a defense of defective workmanship in the article purchased which constituted consideration for the execution of the promissory notes sued on, the holder is under the burden of proving that it is a holder in due course, and where that burden is not met it cannot recover. United Sec. Corp. v. Bruton, 213 A.2d 892 (D.C. 1965).

The provision in subdivision (3) of this section that the holder of a promissory note has the burden of establishing that it is a holder in due course where a defense exists is procedural and not substantive in effect, and it applies to an action brought after the section became effective, although the entire transaction was concluded prior to its effective date. United Sec. Corp. v. Bruton, 213 A.2d 892 (D.C. 1965).

Under subsection (3) of the instant section where indorsees sue upon instruments, and a defense of fraud in the procuring of the instruments is established, the burden is on the plaintiffs to show that they are holders in due course. Korzenik v. Supreme Radio, Inc., 347 Mass. 309, 197 N.E.2d 702 (1964).

The burden of showing that he is a holder in due course is on the one claiming to be such where the defense of fraud appears to be meritorious as to the payee. Norman v. World Wide Distribs., Inc., 202 Pa. Super. 53, 195 A.2d 115 (1963).

Where it appeared that a note was obtained by fraud, one seeking to recover on the note as a holder in due course had the burden of showing that it was a holder in due course. Budget Charge Accounts, Inc. v. Mullaney, 187 Pa. Super. 190, 144 A.2d 438 (1958).

Testimony by the makers of a note, that it was fraudulently executed and used for a purpose not intended, placed the burden on the holder to show that it was a holder in due course, or that some person under whom it claimed was in all respects a holder in due course. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. De Lise, 186 Pa. Super. 398, 142 A.2d 401 (1958).

The holder of a note who introduced no testimony as to the time or circumstances under which it was negotiated did not sustain the burden of showing itself to be a holder in due course; on the other hand, if it had introduced evidence that it received the note for value before maturity and without notice of any claim or defense, a refusal to open a judgment by confession on the note would have been warranted. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. De Lise, 186 Pa. Super. 398, 142 A.2d 401 (1958).

The holder meets the burden of establishing that he is a holder in due course when a petition is filed to open the judgment which he has entered on the instrument and (1) the defendant's own evidence shows that the holder did not have notice of the defect until months after he acquired the instrument, and (2) the defendant, by failing to file a replication, admitted the holder's averments of facts which if true would make the holder a holder in due course. Bachman & Co. v. Brubaker, 56 Lanc. L. Rev. 289 (Pa. 1959).

23. —Failure to show due course.

In action to recover on check issued by defendant and made payable to named corporation, where plaintiff's testimony showed that sole owner of payee corporation had indorsed check in blank and delivered it to plaintiff in payment for personal debt and that defendant had dishonored check by stopping payment thereon, and where defendant testified that payment was stopped at request of payee because check had been stolen from payee's mail and had been fraudulently indorsed, under UCC § 3-307(2) plaintiff's failure to place check in evidence or satisfactorily explain its absence, together with defendant's establishment of good defense, prevented plaintiff from recovering as holder of such check, even though signatures thereon were established by plaintiff. McKirgan v. American Hosp. Supply Corp., 37 Md. App. 85, 375 A.2d 591 (1977).

In action by bank against maker to recover on note, where maker executed note and security agreement in connection with purchase of construction equipment and where equipment dealer assigned note to bank but failed to deliver equipment, bank was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302 and thus its claim on note was subject to defense of failure of consideration under UCC § 3-306; under evidence that bank failed to advise maker of note of its acquisition of note and security agreement, that it placed payment coupon book in hands of dealer and received all monthly payments from dealer, that close working relationship existed between bank and dealer and dealer was clothed with authority to collect and forward all payments due on transaction, and that agency and authority were further shown to exist by bank's authorizing return of machinery to dealer and terminating of balances due on purchase money paper, bank did not, under UCC § 3-307(3), sustain its burden of proving that it was holder in due course and under facts and circumstances known to and participated in by bank in connection with transaction, it could not be said that bank did not have reason to know that defense of failure of consideration existed. Kaw Valley State Bank & Trust Co. v. Riddle, 219 Kan. 550, 549 P.2d 927 (1976).

Where bank accepted check from its depositor, forwarded it for collection, drawer stopped payment on check and, during interval between deposit of check and notice of stop payment order, bank granted credit and made payment upon checks drawn by its customer, bank was holder in due course to extent of advances made to its depositor; fact that standard banking practice would have been to withhold payment on check until it had been collected was not sufficient to establish that bank did not exercise good faith in handling check. St. Cloud Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Sobania Constr. Co., 302 Minn. 71, 224 N.W.2d 746 (1974).

In action by corporate assignee to recover on promissory note, assignee failed to establish that it was holder in due course under UCC § 3-307(3) where assignee claimed only an assignment of unspecified date and did not even allege that it was holder in due course, and where note recited on its face that it was "taken for insurance." College Park Credit Corp. v. Carver, 132 Vt. 524, 322 A.2d 305 (1974).

Purchaser of note had burden of proving holder in due course status, but could not qualify for such status where fact that note was executed in violation of District of Columbia Loan Shark Act was apparent on face of instrument. In re Parkwood, Inc., 461 F.2d 158, 149 U.S. App. D.C. 67 (1971).

Assignee of conditional sales contract and note could not recover "finance charge" or "carrying charge" exceeding 8% per year, where assignee had established neither that he was holder in due course nor that transaction was usurious. Fuller v. Universal Acceptance Corp., 264 A.2d 506 (D.C. 1970).

To show he is a holder in due course, the holder of an instrument satisfies his burden with respect to good faith by testifying that he took the instrument in complete innocence and by disclosing the circumstances of the transfer, and where circumstances revealed plaintiff had actual knowledge of legal deficiencies in the transaction, he was not a holder in due course and consequently took the note subject to defenses raised under provisions of the Secondary Mortgage Loan Act. HIMC Inv. Co. v. Siciliano, 103 N.J. Super. 27, 246 A.2d 502 (1968).

Bank to which promissory note was negotiated has not met the burden of establishing that it is a holder in due course to the extent entitling it to summary judgment where there remains, among others, the question of the identity of the person who altered the maturity date from 5 days to 45 days after date. Unadilla Nat'l Bank v. McQueer, 27 A.D.2d 778 (3d Dep't 1967).

24. Practice and procedure.

Where lender brought action to recover money evidenced by promissory notes purportedly signed by husband, wife, and daughter, denial by all three defendants that signature on note was daughter's constituted sufficient evidence to rebut presumption that signatures were genuine or authorized pursuant to UCC § 3-307(1). McCusker v. Fascione, 117 R.I. 478, 368 A.2d 1220 (1977).

In action to enforce guarantor's liability on promissory note, trial court did not err in instructing jury that sole question was whether or not defendant had signed guarantee agreement where, inter alia, defendant did not raise issue of effectiveness of her signature, where jury was presented with guarantee agreement which contained what appeared to be defendant's signature, raising presumption of genuineness under UCC § 3-307, and where, under UCC § 3-416, guarantee agreement obligated defendant to repay loan, interest, and attorneys' fees. Wolfe v. Madison Nat'l Bank, 30 Md. App. 525, 352 A.2d 914 (1976).

Under UCC § 3-307(1), where purported maker of note denied signature but introduced no evidence to support defense that signature was forged or unauthorized, presumption of validity of signature was not rebutted, and expert testimony is not required to support claim as trial judge, sitting as trier of fact, is entitled to make his own comparison of signatures and form his own opinion as to authenticity. Jax v. Jax, 73 Wis. 2d 572, 243 N.W.2d 831 (1976).

In action on promissory note, where maker of note admitted his signature but asserted defense of lack of consideration, trial court erred in instructing jury where instructions failed to properly identify issue being tried, i. e., lack of consideration, did not properly inform jury that defendant maker had burden of proving lack of consideration, and did not define consideration. Villegas v. Bagwell, 529 P.2d 1011 (Okla. Ct. App. 1974).

The elements constituting a holder in due course are questions of fact for the triers of fact to determine. Northside Bank v. Investors Acceptance Corp., 278 F. Supp. 191 (W.D. Pa. 1968).

25. —Failure to state claim for relief.

Although UCC § 3-307(2) is concerned with evidentiary burdens of proof, it is also determinative of sufficiency of allegations required to state claim for relief in action to recover on negotiable instrument, and, consistent with this statutory provision, assignee of negotiable instrument suing thereon need not plead specific facts from which his assignor derived status of holder in due course. Thus, in action to recover on check, allegations by plaintiff-assignee to effect that her assignor was holder in due course and that instrument had been regularly transferred to her by assignment, were sufficient as to holder status and as to transfer, and complaint sufficiently set forth claim for relief. Blake v. Samuelson, 34 Colo. App. 183, 524 P.2d 624 (1974).

Defendants seeking to reopen judgment by confession on promissory note signed by them failed to allege sufficient facts to clearly show that they had defense to note based on lack of consideration under UCC § 3-307(2) where defendants were heirs of owner of automobile dealership who was indebted to plaintiff on prior promissory note, where defendants were actively managing automobile dealership after owner's death, and where defendants had paid interest owing on prior note up through date of renewal note they executed; under UCC § 3-408, note signed as security for antecedent claim or debt, even though signed by third party, needs no consideration, and defendants failed to demonstrate that note signed by them was not given as security for antecedent debt of deceased owner. First Nat'l Bank v. Achilli, 14 Ill. App. 3d 1, 301 N.E.2d 739 (2d Dist. 1973).

26. —Summary judgment.

In action by equipment rental company in South Carolina court to enforce default judgment rendered against defendants in New York court for amount owed under equipment lease that was secured by defendants' written "guarantee of payment," where such guarantee provided for consensual personal jurisdiction in New York courts in all actions or proceedings based on guarantee, and where answer of one defendant in South Carolina action did not deny genuineness of her signature on guarantee which was sole foundation for New York judgment, production of guarantee, New York judgment thereon, and absence of any assertable defense to guarantee's validity (such as forgery thereon of defendant's signature) entitled plaintiff under UCC § 3-307, as matter of law, to summary judgment in South Carolina action. National Equip., Ltd. v. David Jones Sales, Trucking Div., Inc., 268 S.C. 551, 235 S.E.2d 125 (1977).

Under UCC § 3-307(2), where defendant admitted genuineness of his signature on note and defenses raised in defendant's answer were not supported by the evidence, which was uncontroverted, trial court did not err in granting summary judgment as to principal amount of note and accrued interest thereon. However, since plaintiff offered no evidence on his motion for summary judgment that provisions in note concerning attorney's fees had been complied with, trial court erred in granting summary judgment as to such fees. Bowman v. McDonough Realty Co., 143 Ga. App. 128, 237 S.E.2d 647 (1977).

In action by two makers and all but one coguarantor on promissory note against remaining guarantor for entire amount of unpaid principal balance due, where plaintiffs relied for recovery on UCC § 3-307(2) dealing with effect of admission of signatures on instrument, but complaint showed on its face that persons primarily liable on instrument were seeking to recover from one who was only secondarily liable thereon and plaintiffs did not explain in their pleadings how such liability could arise, trial court committed error in granting judgment on pleadings for plaintiffs. Auerback v. Maslia, 142 Ga. App. 184, 235 S.E.2d 594 (1977).

Where maker of note executed in conjunction with conditional sales contract for purchase of airplane stated in affidavit in response to motion for summary judgment that he believed crash of airplane had resulted from defective manufacture of plane, this was strictly speculation and opinion of maker and as such did not raise fact issue on affirmative defense against holder in due course under UCC § 3-307. Whittenburg v. Cessna Fin. Corp., 536 S.W.2d 444 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.r.e. (Oct. 6, 1976).

Debtor who claimed to have signed promissory note as representative of corporation and not individually was personally liable under UCC §§ 3-307(b) and 3-403(b)(2) where instrument itself did not indicate that debtor was signing in representative capacity and where assertion that he intended to sign, and did sign, in representative capacity was insufficient to raise issue of fact to "otherwise establish" his representative capacity. Seale v. Nichols, 505 S.W.2d 251 (Tex. 1974).

In action by holder of two promissory notes to recover against corporate maker, trial court properly granted summary judgment for holder where corporation did not specifically plead lack of authority of corporate officer to make instrument either in counter-affidavit or in its pleading. Universal Printing Co. v. Sayre & Fisher Co., 501 S.W.2d 180 (Mo. Ct. App. 1973).

The trial court did not err in granting the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment in an action on two promissory notes where the defendant admitted execution but failed to establish an affirmative defense. Freezomatic Corp. v. Brigadier Indus. Corp., 125 Ga. App. 767, 189 S.E.2d 108 (1972).

Action to recover on promissory note; held, defendant's general denial raised substantial fact issue as to ownership of note precluding summary judgment. Blair v. Halliburton Co., 456 S.W.2d 414 (Tex. Civ. App. 1970).

A trial was required and plaintiff should be required to file a reply where the defendant, under oath, denied that he had any knowledge as to how his signature got on the note sued on, denied delivery of the note, denied that there was any consideration for the note originally, and denied that the plaintiff was a holder in due course. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

27. —Damages.

The production of the promissory note sued on entitled the holder to recover unless a defense is established, and the term "recover on it" appearing in subdivision (2) of this section makes it quite clear that the holder is entitled to the full amount sued for, without proof of the amount or of nonpayment, unless the defendant pleads and proves some defense thereto. Persson v. McCormick, 412 P.2d 619 (Okla. 1966).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

28. In general.

Whether or not one is a holder in due course does not depend upon his diligence or negligence. Securities Inv. Co. v. Cohen, 241 Miss. 549, 131 So. 2d 439 (1961).

Where it was shown that the bank had no actual notice of a warranty and agreement and the breach thereof, the fact that there was stapled to the note given for the purchase of farm equipment, at the time it was indorsed to the bank, a purchase order signed by the maker-purchaser in favor of the seller-payee on the reverse side of which there was a "warranty and agreement" did not put the bank upon notice as to such warranty and agreement or put it upon inquiry as to whether the warranty and agreement had been breached at the time of purchase, so that the bank as a holder in due course for value, and without notice, was entitled to recover against the maker even though the warranty had actually been breached. Misso v. National Bank of Commerce, 231 Miss. 249, 95 So. 2d 124 (1957).

Every holder is deemed prima facie to be a holder in due course subject to limitation that if negotiator's title was defective, the holder must prove that he, or his predecessor in title, acquired the title as holder in due course. Credit Indus. Co. v.

Adams County Lumber & Supply Co., 215 Miss. 282, 60 So. 2d 790 (1952).

Purchaser of note with unfilled blanks for payee's name and time interest should begin was put on inquiry as to defects, and was not "holder in due course." Moore v. Vaughn, 167 Miss. 758, 150 So. 372 (1933).

Where title of one negotiating note was defective, holders had burden of proving they were holders in due course. Cassedy

v. Wells, Jones, Wells & Lipscomb, 162 Miss. 102, 137 So. 472, 79 A.L.R. 1133 (1931).

Partners seeking to probate note against estate where title of one negotiating it was defective held not to have met burden showing they were holders in due course. Cassedy v. Wells, Jones, Wells & Lipscomb, 162 Miss. 102, 137 So. 472, 79 A.L.R. 1133 (1931).

§ 75-3-309. Enforcement of lost, destroyed, or stolen instrument.

(a) A person not in possession of an instrument is entitled to enforce the instrument if (i) the person was in possession of the instrument and entitled to enforce it when loss of possession occurred, (ii) the loss of possession was not the result of a transfer by the person or a lawful seizure, and (iii) the person cannot reasonably obtain possession of the instrument because the instrument was destroyed, its whereabouts cannot be determined, or it is in the wrongful possession of an unknown person or a person that cannot be found or is not amenable to service of process.

(b) A person seeking enforcement of an instrument under subsection (a) must prove the terms of the instrument and the person's right to enforce the instrument. If that proof is made, Section 75-3-308 applies to the case as if the person seeking enforcement had produced the instrument. The court may not enter judgment in favor of the person seeking enforcement unless it finds that the person required to pay the instrument is adequately protected against loss that might occur by reason of a claim by another person to enforce the instrument. Adequate protection may be provided by any reasonable means.

UCC § 3-804 permits the owner of lost commercial paper to maintain an action thereon in his own name and recover from any party liable on the instrument on due proof of ownership, the facts that prevent his production of the instrument, and the instrument's terms. The degree of proof required of the plaintiff in such an action is a mere preponderance of the evidence and not clear and convincing evidence. HFC v. Johnson, 56 Ohio App. 2d 14, 381 N.E.2d 215 (1978).

The court may not order payment on a lost negotiable instrument without requiring the payee to post security as required by section 3-804 of the Uniform Commercial Code, since the furnishing of such security is mandatory and not discretionary. Thus, where petitioner payee lost, misplaced or was criminally relieved of two certified checks drawn on respondent bank, which refused to honor replacement checks unless an indemnity bond was posted in twice the amount of the original checks as required by section 3-804, the court despite the onerous and unjust burden thereby imposed has no authority to grant petitioner's application for recovery of the amount of the checks from the bank without the posting of such security. Diaz v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 92 Misc. 2d 802 (1977).

Under New York version of UCC § 3-804, court may not order payment to be made on lost negotiable instrument without requiring payee of such instrument to post security in amount not less than twice the amount allegedly unpaid on the instrument. Diaz v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 92 Misc. 2d 802 (1977).

In action by bank to recover funds credited to defendant's checking account plus cash paid to defendant following defendant's deposit of check which was subsequently dishonored, although bank lost check, it was entitled to maintain action where it presented photostatic copy of original instrument at trial. Laurel Bank & Trust Co. v. Sahadi, 32 Conn. Supp. 172, 345 A.2d 53 (1975).

In an action by a Massachusetts collecting bank against a Puerto Rican firm with offices in New York, which had bought yarn from an Italian corporation, and its New York guarantor, to recover the amount credited to the depository bank in Italy upon receipt of a check drawn on a Tennessee bank, which check was lost after the collecting bank had taken steps to present the check for payment to the Tennessee bank, it was held that since the Puerto Rican firm because of the non-payment of the check never discharged its obligation under its contract of sale with the Italian firm, the Italian firm had cause of action against the Puerto Rican firm and its guarantor, which cause of action was assignable to the collecting bank. National Shawmut Bank v. International Yarn Corp., 322 F. Supp. 116 (S.D.N.Y. 1970).

UCC § 3-804 provision that security "shall" be required is not mandatory and payee of stolen certified check could recover upon furnishing less than security required to protect bank where it seemed almost certain that checks would never be presented or honored. 487 Clinton Ave. Corp. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 63 Misc. 2d 715 (1970).

Where assignee did not have possession of check at time of commencement of action, it could not maintain action against drawer even though, after commencement of action, payee gave depository bank the check and, prior to commencement of action, payee had assigned partial interest in proceeds of check to depository bank. Investment Serv. Co. v. Martin Bros. Container & Timber Prods. Corp., 255 Or. 192, 465 P.2d 868 (1970).

For an indorsee to recover from his indorser upon dishonored checks there must be clear and convincing proof of their ownership, and in the absence of possession, ownership would usually depend upon proof that the indorsee did not voluntarily surrender possession unless he did so conditioned upon payment of the checks, and surrender of the checks to the indorser, without payment, and without even a demand for payment, tells against the retention of ownership and indicates an intention not to hold the indorsee liable on the instruments. Dluge v. Robinson, 204 Pa. Super. 404, 204 A.2d 279 (1964).

§ 75-3-310. Effect of instrument on obligation for which taken.

(a) Unless otherwise agreed, if a certified check, cashier's check, or teller's check is taken for an obligation, the obligation is discharged to the same extent discharge would result if an amount of money equal to the amount of the instrument were taken in payment of the obligation. Discharge of the obligation does not affect any liability that the obligor may have as an indorser of the instrument.

(b) Unless otherwise agreed and except as provided in subsection (a), if a note or an uncertified check is taken for an obligation, the obligation is suspended to the same extent the obligation would be discharged if an amount of money equal to the amount of the instrument were taken, and the following rules apply:

(1) In the case of an uncertified check, suspension of the obligation continues until dishonor of the check or until it is paid or certified. Payment or certification of the check results in discharge of the obligation to the extent of the amount of the check.

(2) In the case of a note, suspension of the obligation continues until dishonor of the note or until it is paid. Payment of the note results in discharge of the obligation to the extent of the payment.

(3) Except as provided in paragraph (4), if the check or note is dishonored and the obligee of the obligation for which the instrument was taken is the person entitled to enforce the instrument, the obligee may enforce either the instrument or the obligation. In the case of an instrument of a third person which is negotiated to the obligee by the obligor, discharge of the obligor on the instrument also discharges the obligation.

(4) If the person entitled to enforce the instrument taken for an obligation is a person other than the obligee, the obligee may not enforce the obligation to the extent the obligation is suspended. If the obligee is the person entitled to enforce the instrument but no longer has possession of it because it was lost, stolen, or destroyed, the obligation may not be enforced to the extent of the amount payable on the instrument, and to that extent the obligee's rights against the obligor are limited to enforcement of the instrument.

(c) If an instrument other than one described in subsection (a) or (b) is taken for an obligation, the effect is (i) that stated in subsection (a) if the instrument is one on which a bank is liable as maker or acceptor, or (ii) that stated in subsection (b) in any other case.

11. In general.

Under UCC § 3-802(1), when an obligee takes a negotiable instrument drawn or made to his order and on which there is no recourse against the obligor, the obligor is discharged from paying the underlying payment obligation. In all other situations, in the absence of a contrary agreement, when an obligee takes a negotiable instrument that is tendered in payment of a promise to pay money, the obligor is not discharged on the underlying promise of payment until the second instrument itself is paid. When the second instrument is due, the first instrument is revived, and failure to pay the second instrument gives rise to a cause of action on either instrument. First Pa. Bank v. Triester, 251 Pa. Super. 372, 380 A.2d 826 (1977).

12. Applicability to various obligations.

The acceptance of promissory notes by a lessor from a lessee and one of two guarantors as conditional payment for an underlying debt obligation in the form of leases operated to suspend the obligation of the second guarantor under a Continuing Guaranty until such time as the notes became due and unpaid. Woods-Tucker Leasing Corp. v. Kellum, 641 F.2d 210 (5th Cir. 1981).

UCC § 3-802(1)(b) applies to the taking of a third person's negotiable note for an existing debt. (where two notes of corporation were taken and applied to individual debt of officer of such corporation). McDowell v. Miller, 557 S.W.2d 266 (Mo. Ct. App. 1977).

13. "Taken" instrument.

Although giving of check is conditional payment and, under UCC § 3-802 (1) (b), where an instrument is "taken for an underlying obligation...the obligation is suspended pro tanto until the instrument is due or if it is payable on demand until its presentment," mailing of ordinary corporate check in Kansas City on February 28 did not constitute payment of promissory note in New York City on March 1 where check did not arrive until March 5 and payee did not accept check, but rejected it at first opportunity. Stream v. CBK Agronomics, Inc., 79 Misc. 2d 607 (1974), modified, 48 A.D.2d 637, 368 N.Y.S.2d 20 (1 Dep't 1975).

14. Pro tanto discharge.

Fact that loan servicing agent of mortgagee accepted check drawn on title company, payment of which was later stopped, as payment for three instalments due on mortgage loan, did not operate to satisfy or discharge mortgagor's underlying obligation: (1) Obligation was merely suspended pending collection or rejection of instrument pursuant to UCC § 3-802(1)(b) and testimony by officer of loan serving agent that agent as matter of practice accepted checks of title companies was not sufficient to raise question of fact as to whether there was any agreement to accept check as satisfaction of underlying obligation; (2) Furthermore, underlying obligation was not pro tanto discharged upon acceptance of check pursuant to UCC § 3-802(1)(a) since there was no showing that title company was in business of receiving deposits subject to demand payments, or that it held itself out as bank. Congress Indus., Inc. v. Federal Life Ins. Co. (Mut.), 114 Ariz. 361, 560 P.2d 1268 (Ct. App. 1977).

Where party to litigation admitted owing to opposing party specified sum of money which was paid into registry of court by certified check, but lapse of nine days occurred before check was deposited by court clerk in court's registry account, opponent was not entitled to interest on amount of check during nine-day period; although first party, as drawer, was not discharged until certified check was paid, nevertheless, check was negotiated by delivery to clerk, the named payee, and this had effect of suspending underlying obligation of party, pro tanto, until instrument was presented for payment, and, thus, interest claimed by other party would be owing only if check had been dishonored when presented for payment.

Huffman Towing, Inc. v. Mainstream Shipyard & Supply, Inc., 388 F. Supp. 1362 (N.D. Miss. 1975).

Where customer of stockbroker caused bank to issue teller's check payable to stockbroker's order in payment of customer's debt and check was mailed to stockbroker's office but was wrongfully appropriated by employee who erased stockbroker's name, substituted his own and collected amount of check from drawee, underlying obligation was discharged under UCC § 3-802(1)(a), and bank, as drawer, had no further responsibility on the instrument. Abraham & Co. v. Dollar Sav. Bank, 48 A.D.2d 807 (1st Dep't 1975), appeal dismissed in part, denied in part, 38 N.Y.2d 795, 381 N.Y.S.2d 870, 345 N.E.2d 342 (1975).

Teller's check, delivered as equivalent of cash, was bank's own direct and primary obligation to plaintiff, and it could not resist enforcement of its contract in order to make setoff or counterclaim available to its depositor who had used check as payment for automobile. Manhattan Imported Cars, Inc. v. Dime Sav. Bank, 70 Misc. 2d 889 (1972).

Under the provision of subd 1(a) of this section where bank draws teller's check on another bank payable to third person, the underlying obligation for which the check is given is discharged even though the issuing bank stops payments on the check. Malphrus v. Home Sav. Bank, 44 Misc. 2d 705 (1965).

15. Suspension of obligation.

Where defendant along with another comaker signed original 90-day promissory note on February 14, 1974 and also 60-day renewal note for same amount on May 15, 1974, and where, in bank's suit on original note after comakers' default on both notes, defendant contended that he was not liable because renewal note that he gave bank had discharged original note, (1) because defendant signed renewal note, bank had recourse against him on renewal note as underlying obligor and defendant was therefore not discharged under UCC § 3-802(1)(a); (2) under UCC § 3-802(1)(b), obligation underlying renewal note was promise to pay original note (on which bank brought suit); and (3) in absence of contrary agreement, as to which defendant offered no evidence, renewal note merely suspended, and did not discharge, defendant's underlying obligation (original note) until renewal note became due (holding that liability on original note had not been discharged by payment or satisfaction). First Pa. Bank v. Triester, 251 Pa. Super. 372, 380 A.2d 826 (1977).

Where guarantor of sales contract signed promissory note to pay balance after default by buyer, execution of note was not payment, but without express agreement to the contrary, obligation was merely suspended, rather than discharged pursuant to UCC § 3-802(1)(b). Knight v. Cheek, 369 A.2d 601 (D.C. 1977).

Even though check was conditional payment, it was sufficient to satisfy provision of divorce decree requiring husband to pay wife one-half of appraised value of certain property since, if check was dishonored, debt still remained. Kelley v. Kelley, 53 Ala. App. 608, 303 So. 2d 108 (Civ. App. 1974).

When an indorser makes payment by check his liability is merely suspended as provided by UCC Sec 3-802. Makel Textiles, Inc. v. Dolly Originals, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 95 (1967, NY Sup).

The defendant's indebtedness to the plaintiff for services performed was not discharged by delivery of the promissory note of a third party indorsed by the defendant "without recourse", and defendant's obligation was merely suspended until the instrument became due at which time the plaintiff had the election of maintaining an action either on the instrument or on the obligation. Central Stone Co. v. John Ruggiero, Inc., 49 Misc. 2d 622 (1966).

16. Election of remedy upon dishonor.

Where payment of check tendered in discharge of defendant's underlying obligation was refused by bank solely for lack of sufficient funds in defendant's account and not for lack of proper indorsement or presentment, formal presentment of check was entirely excused under UCC § 3-511(3)(b) (holding that tendered check was conditional payment only, and that under UCC § 3-802(1)(b), underlying obligation was revived after check's dishonor). Rains v. Lewis, 20 Wash. App. 117, 579 P.2d 980 (1978).

In breach of contract action in which plaintiffs elected to seek recovery on dishonored check, under UCC § 3-802(1)(b), validity of underlying obligation, insofar as it related to check, was not issue in case. Perry & Greer, Inc. v. Manning, 282 Or. 25, 576 P.2d 791 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-802(1)(b), the holder of a note taken for an underlying contract has a choice of remedies: he can sue on the note itself or on the underlying contract (action on note in which court held that since UCC Article 3 has no statute of limitations, six-year period of limitations applicable to actions on an express or implied obligation applied, instead of four-year statute contained in UCC § 2-725(1)). O'Neill v. Steppat, 270 N.W.2d 375 (S.D. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-802(1)(b), personal check given to extend option agreement to purchase land, which was dishonored on presentment, was merely a conditional payment that served only to extent option provisionally until check's presentment, and on dishonor of check, payment failed and option contract lapsed (where grantor of option, who was not required to negotiate check by depositing it, presented it directly to drawee bank for payment). Merriman v. Sandeen, 267 N.W.2d 714 (Minn. 1978).

In action by two subcontractors against owner of land and company which had leased restaurant that it was building on such land to enforce mechanic's lien claims for unpaid labor and materials employed in restaurant's construction, where evidence showed (1) that defendant lessee's procedure was to make progress payments to main contractor on receipt of labor and materials releases executed by all subcontractors working on project, (2) that plaintiffs had executed such releases to main contractor to cover all claims for labor and materials up through specified date, (3) that defendant lessee had then paid main contractor for all work done on project as of such date, and (4) that main contractor had thereafter paid plaintiffs by checks on which payment was subsequently stopped, plaintiffs could not successfully contend that because taking of seemingly solvent party's check is proper and normal commercial practice under UCC § 2-511(3) and UCC § 3-802, and because under such sections if check is dishonored, payee can either sue on check or on underlying obligation, such sections therefore made plaintiffs' lien claim releases conditional as to defendants, and defendants were not entitled to rely on releases as defense to plaintiffs' claims. In such situation, if releases were intended to be conditional, plaintiffs should have inserted in them language appropriate for such purpose (observing that as against main contractor, plaintiff lien claimants retained rights enumerated by UCC § 3-802). Mountain Stone Co. v. H.W. Hammond Co., 39 Colo. App. 58, 564 P.2d 958 (1977).

Where subcontractor accepted note of third party in satisfaction of obligation of primary contractor, made presentment and demand, but note was dishonored, note did not extinguish contractor's debt to subcontractor and subcontractor's right to sue on underlying obligation was revived upon dishonor of note pursuant to UCC § 3-802. Stone Ft. Nat'l Bank v. Elliott Elec. Supply Co., 548 S.W.2d 441 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), ref. n.r.e. (July 13, 1977).

Issuance of check to auto repairman did not operate as assignment of funds and did not extinguish mechanics lien; underlying obligation was resurrected upon dishonor of draft. Leavitt v. Charles R. Hearn, Inc., 19 Ill. App. 3d 980, 312 N.E.2d 806 (1st Dist. 1974).

Mailing of ordinary check in payment of estate tax on last day of expiration of fifteen months from date of death did not constitute "payment" of tax on that day to bring assessable interest within rate of four and one half per cent mandated by tax law. In re Nowicki's Estate, 76 Misc. 2d 384 (1973).

Upon breach of airplane hangar construction contract, assignee was not obliged to proceed on promissory note given to cover balance due on contract, but could instead seek damages for breach of underlying contract. Jones v. Bailey, 1 Mass. App. Ct. 41, 294 N.E.2d 599 (1973).

Where defendant delivered his check to plaintiffs as escrow money on purchase of business, and later gave back business and stopped payment on check, plaintiffs were entitled under UCC to bring action on check. Gaskins v. Duke, 483 S.W.2d 499 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

Between the original parties to a check payment is conditional, and if the instrument is dishonored, an action may be maintained on either the instrument or the underlying obligation. Mansion Carpets, Inc. v. Marinoff, 24 A.D.2d 947 (1st Dep't 1965).

17. Discharge from instrument and obligation.

In action against endorser of dishonored check which covered part of purchase price of automobile under retail installment contract, plaintiff's claim was defeated by his failure to give timely notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a), thus discharging endorser from any liability on draft under UCC § 3-502(1)(a) as well as from liability on underlying obligation under UCC § 3-802(1)(b); argument that no notice of dishonor was required under UCC § 3-501(4) was rejected where draft was endorsed before, not after, maturity. Chandler Motors, Inc. v. Dunham, 127 N.J. Super. 320, 317 A.2d 386 (App. Div. 1974).

18. Practice and procedure.

Subcontractor's receipt of contractor's check and execution of release form that accompanied it did not operate as waiver of subcontractor's lien or bar subcontractor from enforcing it where contractor's check was subsequently dishonored. Westland Homes Corp. v. Hall, 193 Neb. 237, 226 N.W.2d 622 (1975).

A subsequent stop-payment order has no bearing on whether or not an enforceable contract came into being upon the delivery and acceptance of the check. Cohn v. Fisher, 118 N.J. Super. 286, 287 A.2d 222 (L. Div. 1972).

§ 75-3-311. Accord and satisfaction by use of instrument.

(a) If a person against whom a claim is asserted proves that (i) that person in good faith tendered an instrument to the claimant as full satisfaction of the claim, (ii) the amount of the claim was unliquidated or subject to a bona fide dispute, and (iii) the claimant obtained payment of the instrument, the following subsections apply.

(b) Unless subsection (c) applies, the claim is discharged if the person against whom the claim is asserted proves that the instrument or an accompanying written communication contained a conspicuous statement to the effect that the instrument was tendered as full satisfaction of the claim.

(c) Subject to subsection (d), a claim is not discharged under subsection (b) if either of the following applies:

(1) The claimant, if an organization, proves that (i) within a reasonable time before the tender, the claimant sent a conspicuous statement to the person against whom the claim is asserted that communications concerning disputed debts, including an instrument tendered as full satisfaction of a debt, are to be sent to a designated person, office, or place, and (ii) the instrument or accompanying communication was not received by that designated person, office, or place.

(2) The claimant, whether or not an organization, proves that within ninety (90) days after payment of the instrument, the claimant tendered repayment of the amount of the instrument to the person against whom the claim is asserted. This paragraph does not apply if the claimant is an organization that sent a statement complying with paragraph (1)(i).

(d) A claim is discharged if the person against whom the claim is asserted proves that within a reasonable time before collection of the instrument was initiated, the claimant, or an agent of the claimant having direct responsibility with respect to the disputed obligation, knew that the instrument was tendered in full satisfaction of the claim.

§ 75-3-312. Lost, destroyed, or stolen cashier's check, teller's check, or certified check.

(a) In this section:

(1) "Check" means a cashier's check, teller's check, or certified check.

(2) "Claimant" means a person who claims the right to receive the amount of a cashier's check, teller's check, or certified check that was lost, destroyed, or stolen.

(3) "Declaration of loss" means a written statement, made under penalty of perjury, to the effect that (i) the declarer lost possession of a check, (ii) the declarer is the drawer or payee of the check, in the case of a certified check, or the remitter or payee of the check, in the case of a cashier's check or teller's check, (iii) the loss of possession was not the result of a transfer by the declarer or a lawful seizure, and (iv) the declarer cannot reasonably obtain possession of the check because the check was destroyed, its whereabouts cannot be determined, or it is in the wrongful possession of an unknown person or a person that cannot be found or is not amenable to service of process.

(4) "Obligated bank" means the issuer of a cashier's check or teller's check or the acceptor of a certified check.

(b) A claimant may assert a claim to the amount of a check by a communication to the obligated bank describing the check with reasonable certainty and requesting payment of the amount of the check, if (i) the claimant is the drawer or payee of a certified check or the remitter or payee of a cashier's check or teller's check, (ii) the communication contains or is accompanied by a declaration of loss of the claimant with respect to the check, (iii) the communication is received at a time and in a manner affording the bank a reasonable time to act on it before the check is paid, and (iv) the claimant provides reasonable identification if requested by the obligated bank. Delivery of a declaration of loss is a warranty of the truth of the statements made in the declaration. If a claim is asserted in compliance with this subsection, the following rules apply:

(1) The claim becomes enforceable at the later of (i) the time the claim is asserted, or (ii) the ninetieth day following the date of the check, in the case of a cashier's check or teller's check, or the ninetieth day following the date of acceptance, in the case of a certified check.

(2) Until the claim becomes enforceable, it has no legal effect and the obligated bank may pay the check or, in the case of a teller's check, may permit the drawee to pay the check. Payment to a person entitled to enforce the check discharges all liability of the obligated bank with respect to the check.

(3) If the claim becomes enforceable before the check is presented for payment, the obligated bank is not obliged to pay the check.

(4) When the claim becomes enforceable, the obligated bank becomes obliged to pay the amount of the check to the claimant if payment of the check has not been made to a person entitled to enforce the check. Subject to Section 75-4-302(a)(1), payment to the claimant discharges all liability of the obligated bank with respect to the check.

(c) If the obligated bank pays the amount of a check to a claimant under subsection (b)(4) and the check is presented for payment by a person having rights of a holder in due course, the claimant is obliged to (i) refund the payment to the obligated bank if the check is paid, or (ii) pay the amount of the check to the person having rights of a holder in due course if the check is dishonored.

(d) If a claimant has the right to assert a claim under subsection (b) and is also a person entitled to enforce a cashier's check, teller's check, or certified check which is lost, destroyed, or stolen, the claimant may assert rights with respect to the check either under this section or Section 75-3-309.

11. In general.

Renewal of note by person other than original debtor simply means that original debtor has no personal liability on note as subsequently renewed, but in no way operates to cancel original deed of trust, where subsequent renewals were neither signed nor endorsed by original debtors. Cochran v. Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank, 509 So. 2d 1045 (Miss. 1987).

Corporation officer who signed corporate note by placing his name on line below typed name of corporation and after typed word "By," and who indicated capacity in which he signed by writing on another line word "President" after typed word "Individually," was relieved from liability under UCC §§ 3-401(1) and 3-403(2)(a), since handwritten word "President" on "Individually" line characterized officer's act as that of official of corporation. Donald M. Clement Contractor v. Demon, Inc., 364 So. 2d 204 (La. App. 1978).

An undisclosed principal is not liable on a negotiable instrument. Instead, under UCC § 3-401(1), the party who signed the instrument is liable thereon (observing, however, that undisclosed principal may still be liable for the debt under equitable doctrine of quasi-contract). Opelika Prod. Credit Ass'n v. Lamb, 361 So. 2d 95 (Ala. 1978).

Where defendant, after stealing driver's license, social security card, and car registration from her landlord's wallet, took such identification to bank, opened checking account in landlord's name, filled out appropriate signature cards, and made small deposit in the account, and where later, when attempting to purchase a television set, defendant used one of the checks obtained from the bank, signed it with landlord's name, and made check out for amount that exceeded defendant's deposit in the account, defendant was not guilty of forgery, since under UCC § 3-401(2), dealing with making of signature on instruments, only defendant would be liable on such check. People v. Hodgins, 85 Mich. App. 62, 270 N.W.2d 527 (1978).

Where only defendant's signature appeared on promissory note and note did not name any party represented by defendant or demonstrate that defendant had signed it in representative capacity, defendant's unambiguous status as maker of note necessitated conclusion under UCC § 3-401(1), § 3-403(2) and (3), and § 3-413 that he was obligor thereunder and thus appropriate party from whom to seek payment. Marine Midland Bank v. DiMarzo, 57 A.D.2d 733 (4th Dep't 1977).

Any writing to be a negotiable instrument must be signed by the maker or drawer. Jenkins v. Evans, 31 A.D.2d 597 (3d Dep't 1968).

Under § 3-401 of the Uniform Commercial Code, no person is liable on an instrument unless his signature appears thereon and under § 3-306(c), except as to a holder in due course, no person is liable thereon unless there has been a delivery of the instrument, and the same rule with reference to execution and delivery was in effect under the former Illinois Negotiable Instruments Law. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

12. Sufficiency of signature, generally.

In action against issuing bank by holder of money order for face amount thereof, bank was not absolved from liability by UCC § 3-401(1) and (2), dealing with necessity of signature on instrument and use of any word or mark as signature, where money order in suit had bank's name printed on it. Mirabile v. Udoh, 92 Misc. 2d 168 (1977).

Where only defendant's signature appeared on promissory note and note did not name any party represented by defendant or demonstrate that defendant had signed it in representative capacity, defendant's unambiguous status as maker of note necessitated conclusion under UCC § 3-401(1), § 3-403(2) and (3), and § 3-413 that he was obligor thereunder and thus appropriate party from whom to seek payment. Marine Midland Bank v. DiMarzo, 57 A.D.2d 733 (4th Dep't 1977).

Bank that accepted forged checks for collection acted in accordance with reasonable commercial standards under UCC § 3-406, notwithstanding checks were endorsed with typewritten name of payee bank, since checks were regular on their face and bore purported endorsement of named payee; collecting bank was not required to obtain holographic signature of one of payee bank's officers, and written evidence of his authority to endorse, before accepting checks for collection. Furthermore, typewritten endorsement which identified payee bank met requirements of UCC § 4-206, governing transfers between banks. West Penn Admin., Inc. v. Union Nat'l Bank, 233 Pa. Super. 311, 335 A.2d 725 (1975).

Employee's typewritten and handwritten initials on documents contained in benefit file where employee designations of retirement plan beneficiary were contained, constituted signature of employee under provisions of UCC §§ 1-201(39) and 3-401(2). Mohawk Airlines v. Peach, 81 Misc. 2d 211 (1974), modified, 61 A.D.2d 346, 402 N.Y.S.2d 496 (4th Dep't 1978), appeal denied, 44 N.Y.2d 645 (1978), appeal denied, 44 N.Y.2d 838, 406 N.Y.S.2d 758, 378 N.E.2d 121 (1978).

13. Collateral agreements.

Where defendants purchased real property from sellers who had signed note secured by second deed of trust on property, and where the defendants agreed to assume payment of deed of trust, assignee of note and deed of trust could recover against defendants, notwithstanding their signatures did not appear on note, since defendants were liable, not on the note, but on their contract of assumption. City Mtg. Inv. Club v. Beh, 334 A.2d 183 (D.C. 1975).

Subsection (1) of the instant section cannot be read to mean that no person is liable on a debt whose signature does not appear on a note given as collateral security for that debt. In re Eton Furn. Co., 286 F.2d 93 (3d Cir. Pa. 1961).

14. Corporate undertakings.

Although corporation under UCC § 3-401(1) was not liable on note that it did not sign, it was still liable on underlying obligation for which note was given where separate identity of such corporation and its president and sole shareholder could not be disregarded (where lender of funds for which note was given believed that funds would be used in maker's business). Wiebke v. Richardson & Sons, 83 Wis. 2d 359, 265 N.W.2d 571 (1978).

Where instrument for payment of money was written on personalized check form, individual defendants' names were printed at top of form and their signatures appeared at bottom right-hand corner, where name of bank and account number were crossed out, but remainder of form was filled in as check would be and was payable to plaintiff's order in amount of $12,000 and where it was dated December 31, 1972, and notation "Note-6% Int." appeared at lower left-hand corner, instrument was negotiable demand instrument under UCC § 3-108, individual defendants were personally liable thereon under UCC § 3-403(2), and parol evidence was inadmissible to disestablish such obligation; however, under UCC § 3-401, corporate defendant, whose signature did not appear on instrument, was not liable on it. Kaminsky v. Van Dusen, 88 Misc. 2d 833 (1976).

Corporation had sought and been refused bank loan; loan was made for note signed by individual stockholders; stockholders were acting for corporation and proceeds of loan were deposited in corporation's bank account; held, corporation was not liable to bank on note for loan since bank had not secured corporate endorsement on, or guarantee of, note. Potts v. First City Bank, 7 Cal. App. 3d 341 (2d Dist. 1970).

Obligation was solely that of corporation where officers signed notes in representative capacity as clearly set forth in acknowledgment within chattel mortgage. Security Ins. Co. v. Mangan, 250 Md. 241, 242 A.2d 482 (1968).

Where a corporate shareholder did not sign a corporation note as an obligor on the note or as one of the signing officers of the corporation, the dismissal of the complaint in a suit on the note as to that shareholder was proper, since no person is liable on an instrument unless his signature appears thereon. First W. Bank & Trust Co. v. Bookasta, 267 Cal. App. 2d 910 (2d Dist. 1968).

Where corporate name was printed in maker's position on check above two lines for signature of one or more corporate officers, printed corporate name alone was not valid corporate signature. Pollin v. Mindy Mfg. Co., 211 Pa. Super. 87, 236 A.2d 542 (1967).

Notwithstanding that the bankrupt corporation's name did not appear on a note given by its general manager as collateral security for loans made by bank to the general manager, the bankrupt was indebted to the bank where the proceeds of the loan were used for its benefit, and from a course of dealing between the bank and the general manager each understood that when the general manager borrowed money and credited the proceeds to bankrupt's account, the general manager was acting for the account of and in the interest of the bankrupt, his principal. In re Eton Furn. Co., 286 F.2d 93 (3d Cir. Pa. 1961).

Where a note was signed, on successive lines, "John P. Conville," "Doris E. Conville," "Hughesville Mfg. Co., Inc.," and another note was signed, on successive lines, "Hughesville Mfg. Co.," "John P. Conville," "Doris E. Conville," the company was not liable on the notes even though the individuals who signed might have been authorized to sign for it, because the notes did not show that the signatures were made on behalf of the company. Grange Nat'l Bank v. Conville, 8 Pa. D. & C.2d 616 (1957).

15. Joint undertakings.

In action by bank on promissory note executed by husband and wife to evidence loan presently due, bank's claim that son of signers of note, who did not sign it himself, was liable thereon as undisclosed principal because proceeds of loan were used to improve real estate owned by son and his mother could not be sustained under UCC § 3-401(1). In such case, since son's relationship to makers of note and his part ownership of such real estate was known to bank when loan was made, if bank intended him to be liable on note, it should have obtained his signature thereon. Marine Midland Bank v. Anderson, 90 Misc. 2d 909 (1977).

Parties had joined together to build houses on tract of land which they acquired and placed in name of corporation belonging to one member of group; held, each member of group was jointly liable on note executed by corporation owning land. McClung v. Saito, 4 Cal. App. 3d 143 (2d Dist. 1970).

Where one partner executes a note in the name of the firm, other partners are liable thereon although they have not personally signed the note. McCollum v. Steitz, 261 Cal. App. 2d 76 (5th Dist. 1968).

16. Oral agreements.

Political candidate who promised to assume any liability which might be cast upon signers of note if sufficient campaign contributions did not come in to pay note and who received proceeds from note was held accountable on his oral agreement with signers notwithstanding candidate did not sign note and bank made loan only on signatures attached to note and did not look to candidate for its payment. Farmers State Bank v. Conrardy, 215 Kan. 334, 524 P.2d 690 (1974).

17. Practice and procedure.

Suit may not be maintained or judgment obtained on promissory note against undisclosed principal whose signature does not appear thereon; thus, complaint based on promissory note alleging that maker acted as agent of defendants, did not state cause of action against defendants where their names did not appear on note and it was not alleged that note disclosed that agent signed in any capacity other than for himself individually. Ness v. Greater Ariz. Realty, Inc., 21 Ariz. App. 231, 517 P.2d 1278 (1974).

A trial was required and plaintiff should be required to file a reply where the defendant, under oath, denied that he had any knowledge as to how his signature got on the note sued on, denied delivery of the note, denied that there was any consideration for the note originally, and denied that the plaintiff was a holder in due course. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

Although a mere allegation of fraud in a pleading is not sufficient and the party relying on fraud must plead sufficient facts or acts to establish it, where a defendant pleads that he has no knowledge as to how his signature got on the note or as to how the note got in the hands of the plaintiff, it would seem difficult to see how the court could require him to plead facts of which he alleges he has no knowledge. Neboshek v. Berzani, 42 Ill. App. 2d 220, 191 N.E.2d 411 (1st Dist. 1963).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

18. In general.

Where person signing instrument as agent does so with authority he is not liable thereon but if not duly authorized he is personally liable on such instrument. Shemper v. Hancock Bank, 206 Miss. 775, 40 So. 2d 742 (1949).

Where guardian signed instrument as agent for partnership consisting of minor ward and mother, minor was not bound, and since partnership of only one person cannot exist, the partnership was nonexistent and as agent for nonexistent principal guardian is liable personally on note. Shemper v. Hancock Bank, 206 Miss. 775, 40 So. 2d 742 (1949).

§ 75-3-402. Signature by representative.

(a) If a person acting, or purporting to act, as a representative signs an instrument by signing either the name of the represented person or the name of the signer, the represented person is bound by the signature to the same extent the represented person would be bound if the signature were on a simple contract. If the represented person is bound, the signature of the representative is the "authorized signature of the represented person" and the represented person is liable on the instrument, whether or not identified in the instrument.

(b) If a representative signs the name of the representative to an instrument and the signature is an authorized signature of the represented person, the following rules apply:

(1) If the form of the signature shows unambiguously that the signature is made on behalf of the represented person who is identified in the instrument, the representative is not liable on the instrument.

(2) Subject to subsection (c), if (i) the form of the signature does not show unambiguously that the signature is made in a representative capacity or (ii) the represented person is not identified in the instrument, the representative is liable on the instrument to a holder in due course that took the instrument without notice that the representative was not intended to be liable on the instrument. With respect to any other person, the representative is liable on the instrument unless the representative proves that the original parties did not intend the representative to be liable on the instrument.

(c) If a representative signs the name of the representative as drawer of a check without indication of the representative status and the check is payable from an account of the represented person who is identified on the check, the signer is not liable on the check if the signature is an authorized signature of the represented person.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-402, 75-3-403.

11. In general.

Forged signature of payee on front of check did not preclude defendant's conviction for forgery since UCC § 3-202(2) does not specify any specific location for an indorsement, nor was there any indication that the signature was not intended as an indorsement within the meaning of UCC § 3-402. United States v. Tufi, 536 F.2d 855 (9th Cir. Haw. 1976).

Any ambiguity as to the capacity in which a signature is made on an instrument must, under this section, be resolved that it is an indorsement, and unless the instrument itself makes it clear that one signed in some other capacity, the signer must be treated as an indorser. Grange Nat'l Bank v. Conville, 8 Pa. D. & C.2d 616 (1957).

The question of the capacity in which one signed an instrument must be determined from the face of the instrument alone. Grange Nat'l Bank v. Conville, 8 Pa. D. & C.2d 616 (1957).

12. Signature in representative capacity.

In suit on note executed by president of corporation, where (1) on front of note, immediately underneath the word "signatures", the name of the corporation was printed by hand, (2) immediately below the corporation's name, the word "by" was printed by hand and was followed by the president's signature, (3) below such signature appeared the half-printed, half-script word "President," (4) to the right of the president's signature on the front of the note also appeared the corporation's address, (5) on the back of the note, on the first of two printed lines, the president's signature appeared again, followed by the script abbreviation "pres.," and (6) below such signature, the president's address was also set forth, court held that president's indorsement of note was personal indorsement under (1) UCC § 3-402, which provides that unless the instrument clearly indicates that a signature is made in some other capacity, it is an indorsement, and (2) UCC § 3-403(2)(b), which provides that except as is otherwise established between the immediate parties, an authorized representative who signs his own name to an instrument is personally obligated if the instrument does not name the person represented, but does show that the representative signed in a representative capacity. Lanier v. Bank of Virginia—Potomac, 39 Md. App. 589, 387 A.2d 614 (1977).

Under UCC § 3-402, corporate officer's unqualified signature on back of note was endorsement where there was no clear indication within four corners of instrument that he was acting in representative capacity, and under UCC § 3-403(2)(b) parol evidence was not admissible to show that he was acting not individually but in representative capacity. Norfolk County Trust Co. v. Vichinsky, 5 Mass. App. Ct. 768, 359 N.E.2d 59 (1977).

In an action brought prior to the effective date of the UCC, the court held that as between the parties in Maryland although a person who signed a note made by a corporation is prima facie liable to the payee, if there is conflict in the evidence relative to the circumstances, the individual who signed that note is not liable if he affirmatively shows an understanding between him and the payee that there was to be no personal liability, and it observed that this same principle was embodied in the UCC. Leahy v. McManus, 237 Md. 450, 206 A.2d 688 (1965).

13. Indorser or accommodation party.

Where president of corporation signed promissory note as president of corporation and also signed note personally, under UCC § 3-402 president clearly and unambiguously did not sign promissory note in representative capacity but as "accommodation party" under UCC § 3-415(1), making president personally liable on note. Sullivan County Nat'l Bank v. Lieman, 89 Misc. 2d 780 (1977).

In action for balance due on promissory note, where defendant claimed that he was merely accommodation indorser of note and not a comaker but admitted, as note clearly indicated, that he had signed note in lower righthand corner instead of on back where spaces were expressly provided for indorsers, defendant was liable as comaker under UCC § 3-402. Moreover, in such suit defendant's alleged accommodation status was inconsequential, since accommodation maker under UCC § 3-415 is liable on instrument without any resort to his principal. Bankers Trust of S.C. v. Culbertson, 268 S.C. 564, 235 S.E.2d 130 (S.C. 1977).

In action by bank as holder of promissory note against corporation and two individuals who signed note, where it was clear from face of instrument that individual signers intended to sign note other than as endorsers, but there was dispute as to which capacity, parol evidence was admissible to show intention of parties as to capacity in which instrument was signed, and evidence that loan was made directly to two individual signers as principal debtors (i.e., makers), together with evidence concerning structure of corporation, active solicitation of loan by individual signers, and fact that one individual signer was director of bank, was sufficient to show that individual signers signed note as makers rather than accommodation parties. Peoples Bank v. Pied Piper Retreat, Inc., 158 W. Va. 170, 209 S.E.2d 573 (1974).

Parol evidence is admissible to show party's capacity as accommodation party; and, as payee, holder of instrument who has taken it for value has rights of holder in due course as against accommodation party who signed as maker, except where holder has induced maker to become accommodation party, as by actually agreeing that he should not be held liable as principal. Philadelphia Bond & Mtg. Co. v. Highland Crest Homes, Inc., 221 Pa. Super. 89, 288 A.2d 916 (1972).

Where an accommodation party signs in a manner which does not indicate his capacity he is deemed an indorser. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

14. Other matters.

"Envelope draft" presented by beneficiary of letter of credit to issuer was not validly drawn in accordance with letter's terms where (1) it did not contain statement, "Drawn Under National Bank of Austin Letter of Credit No. 8274," as required by such letter, and (2) instrument was not a draft under UCC § 3-104(1)(a), since drawer's alleged signature was on back of instrument and not on line in right-hand corner of face of instrument that was provided for drawer's signature (applying Illinois law, and holding that signature on back of instrument was actually indorsement under UCC § 3-402). North Valley Bank v. National Bank, 437 F. Supp. 70 (N.D. Ill. 1977).

Signature of person who signed promissory note on back under words, "Assenting to Terms and Waivers on the Face of this Note," was endorsement under UCC § 3-402, and signer was liable to bank for debt represented by note, upon default of maker, notwithstanding signer received no consideration for his signature. Community Nat'l Bank v. Dawes, 369 Mass. 550, 340 N.E.2d 877 (1976).

Where indorsers of note indorsed instrument without clear indication of capacity or intention to qualify status, such signatory became indorser by virtue of UCC § 3-402 and liable for payment of instrument upon dishonor by its payor under UCC § 3-414(1); where note provided that "presentment for payment and notice of nonpayment are hereby waived", indorsers automatically waived presentment or notice pursuant to UCC § 3-511(2). First New Haven Nat'l Bank v. Clarke, 33 Conn. Supp. 179, 368 A.2d 613 (1976).

15. In general scope.

Where promissory note was not negotiable under UCC § 3-104(1), liability of signer of such note was not controlled by Uniform Commercial Code provisions governing personal liability of agent who signs on behalf of principal or corporation (see UCC § 3-403). Central States, S.E. & S.W. Areas, Health & Welfare Fund v. Pitman, 66 Ill. App. 3d 300, 383 N.E.2d 793 (3d Dist. 1978).

UCC Sec 3-403(2)(b), in common with the other provisions of Article 3, apply only to negotiable instruments and therefore do not apply to a contract of guaranty of payment of the purchase price by a buyer. Associates Dist. Corp. v. Elgin Organ Ctr., Inc., 375 F.2d 97 (7th Cir. Ill. 1967).

16. Agent's authority.

An agent is not authorized under UCC § 3-403 to endorse commercial paper unless otherwise agreed or the endorsement is usually incident to performance of acts that he is authorized to perform for the principal. If within his authority he receives cash for endorsement and delivery of commercial paper payable to the principal, the payer is not responsible for payment of the amount to the principal or its application to the principal's uses. A payee engaged in business ordinarily should deposit collection items for credit to his account. Farmers Union Coop. Ass'n v. Commercial State Bank, 187 Neb. 376, 191 N.W.2d 168 (1971).

Where administratrix had endorsed check to order of husband's estate, purported further endorsement as trustee of estate by one who was not trustee was unauthorized and ineffective. Salsman v. National Community Bank, 102 N.J. Super. 482, 246 A.2d 162 (1968), aff'd, 105 N.J. Super. 164, 251 A.2d 460 (1969).

Where business name and address were printed at top of check and nothing on face of check indicated limitation on authority of agent to sign checks for business obligation, business was liable to holder in due course for amount of checks, even though used for personal obligations of agent. Jenkins v. Evans, 31 A.D.2d 597 (3d Dep't 1968).

Where the signatures of persons intending to become partners in a business were affixed to a promissory note representing part of the purchase price by one of their number who negotiated the purchase and later became the managing partner of the business, the party who signed their names to the note was a duly authorized agent as provided in subsec. (1), and they could not later contend that the signatures were forgeries. Rehrig v. Fortunak, 39 Pa. D. & C.2d 20 (1966).

17. Agent's liability.

UCC § 3-403(1) does not expressly authorize deceptive agency arrangements whereby the signatory fails to reveal his true identity. (prosecution under 18 USCS § 1014 for making materially false statements in bank-loan application). United States v. Carr, 582 F.2d 242 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1978).

Party who signed note as agent for corporation was not personally liable thereon where letters "L.T.G. De.," which signer placed above his signature on note and which stood for "L.T.G. Development, Inc.," sufficiently named person represented, as required by UCC § 3-403(2)(b). J.P. Sivertson & Co. v. Lolmaugh, 63 Ill. App. 3d 724, 380 N.E.2d 520 (2d Dist. 1978).

UCC § 3-403(3), providing that the name of an organization preceded or followed by the name and office of an authorized individual is signature made in a representative capacity, does not expressly exempt authorized agent who signs in a representative capacity, naming his principal, from personal liability. Grotz v. Jerutis, 13 Ill. App. 3d 543, 301 N.E.2d 60 (1st Dist. 1973).

A representative signing an instrument is liable personally thereon unless the instrument itself clearly shows that he signed only on behalf of another named on the paper. Grange Nat'l Bank v. Conville, 8 Pa. D. & C.2d 616 (1957).

18. —Disclosure of principal.

Under UCC § 3-403(2), president of automobile motor sales corporation was personally liable on checks drawn by him to pay for merchandise furnished to corporation where (1) only the corporation's checking account number appeared on such checks and corporation's name was not written or printed thereon; (2) officer's signature on checks did not indicate that he was signing them in representative capacity; and (3) evidence did not show understanding between payee and drawer that drawer was acting in representative capacity. A.L. Jackson Chevrolet, Inc. v. Oxley, 564 P.2d 633 (Okla. 1977).

Where only defendant's signature appeared on promissory note and note did not name any party represented by defendant or demonstrate that defendant had signed it in representative capacity, defendant's unambiguous status as maker of note necessitated conclusion under UCC § 3-401(1), § 3-403(2) and (3), and § 3-413 that he was obligor thereunder and thus appropriate party from whom to seek payment. Marine Midland Bank v. DiMarzo, 57 A.D.2d 733 (4th Dep't 1977).

In suit on note executed by president of corporation, where (1) on front of note, immediately underneath the word "signatures", the name of the corporation was printed by hand, (2) immediately below the corporation's name, the word "by" was printed by hand and was followed by the president's signature, (3) below such signature appeared the half-printed, half-script word "President," (4) to the right of the president's signature on the front of the note also appeared the corporation's address, (5) on the back of the note, on the first of two printed lines, the president's signature appeared again, followed by the script abbreviation "pres.," and (6) below such signature, the president's address was also set forth, court held that president's indorsement of note was personal indorsement under (1) UCC § 3-402, which provides that unless the instrument clearly indicates that a signature is made in some other capacity, it is an indorsement, and (2) UCC § 3-403(2)(b), which provides that except as is otherwise established between the immediate parties, an authorized representative who signs his own name to an instrument is personally obligated if the instrument does not name the person represented, but does show that the representative signed in a representative capacity. Lanier v. Bank of Virginia—Potomac, 39 Md. App. 589, 387 A.2d 614 (1977).

Under UCC § 3-403, one who signs instrument in representative capacity must, if he is to escape personal liability thereon, set out name of his principal before or after his own name and office. Custom Equip. Co. v. Young, 564 P.2d 1020 (Okla. Ct. App. 1976).

Where officers of corporation admitted execution of note but claimed that note was executed in representative capacity in behalf of corporation and where note did not give name of principal or any indication that note was signed in representative capacity, makers were personally liable on note as matter of law under UCC § 3-403(2)(a). Barden & Robeson Corp. v. Ferrusi, 52 A.D.2d 1061 (4th Dep't 1976).

In action to recover on contract of guaranty on behalf of corporation in which guarantors were officers and thus "representatives" under UCC § 1-201(35), guarantors were personally liable on contract of guaranty under UCC § 3-403, notwithstanding their claims that they signed in representative capacity and that their intention at the time of signing guaranty was not to be bound in their individual capacities, (1) where guaranty did not name any person represented and (2) where there was evidence that bank officials explained to guarantors in detail that personal guaranty would be required of them and that bank relied on their personal obligation in making loan to corporation; burden of proof was on guarantors under UCC § 3-403 to "otherwise establish" that they were not personally liable. Southern Nat'l Bank v. Pocock, 29 N.C. App. 52, 223 S.E.2d 518 (1976), cert.

denied, 290 N.C. 94, 225 S.E.2d 324 (1976).

Corporation is "named" within Code § 3-403(b)(1) by use of its assumed name, and that section does not forbid extrinsic evidence to show further, as between original parties, that signer was not personally obligated on note, where such proof is offered not to vary terms of instrument or to show mistake, but rather to explain ambiguity with respect to capacity of signer. Nichols v. Seale, 493 S.W.2d 589 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), rev'd, 505 S.W.2d 251 (Tex. 1974).

Where body of note did not name maker and there was nothing on face of note which showed agency of signer, fact that name similar to that of corporation asserted to be real maker of note appeared in space for address at bottom left of note did not name person represented within meaning of Code § 3-403(2)(b) so as to make question of fact as to whether signer acted in representative capacity. Southern Oxygen Supply Co. v. de Golian, 230 Ga. 405, 197 S.E.2d 374 (1973).

Under UCC § 3-403(2) provision that there may be individual liability on an instrument which "names the person represented" but does not indicate his representative capacity, the name of the person represented must clearly appear on the face of the instrument, and such was not the case where the notation "Food for Love Acc't" signified an account and suggested a direction to the drawee rather than a notice to the payee alerting it to any representational capacity in which the signature was executed. Star Dairy, Inc. v. Roberts, 37 A.D.2d 1038 (3d Dep't 1971).

Where an individual signed a promissory note as an accommodation indorser and signed as Trustee, his personal liability was unaffected, since he failed to identify the trust for which he was acting. Rushton v. U.M. & M. Credit Corp., 245 Ark. 703, 434 S.W.2d 81 (1968).

19. —Representative capacity; sufficient indication.

Corporation officer who signed corporate note by placing his name on line below typed name of corporation and after typed word "By," and who indicated capacity in which he signed by writing on another line word "President" after typed word "Individually," was relieved from liability under UCC §§ 3-401(1) and 3-403(2)(a), since handwritten word "President" on "Individually" line characterized officer's act as that of official of corporation. Donald M. Clement Contractor v. Demon, Inc., 364 So. 2d 204 (La. App. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-403(3), president of corporation was not personally liable on promissory note where note was signed, "Executive Funding Corporation by Vincent P. Salvione, President." Donaghey v. Executive Funding Corp., 45 Ill. App. 3d 951, 360 N.E.2d 472 (1st Dist. 1977).

Where maker of check was "McCann Industries Inc., Pay Roll Account, (signed) J.Y. McCann" liability was that of corporation and not individual defendant. Bennett v. McCann, 125 Ga. App. 393, 188 S.E.2d 165 (1972).

An officer of a corporation manually signing a check is not bound thereby because the requirement of identifying his principal and his representative capacity are met when the check carries the name and address of the corporate drawer, the notation that it is a payroll check, and carried the drawer's printed name as drawer with lines thereunder for a manual signature; and the difference between a check and a note confirms this conclusion since the check was purportedly drawn on a particular bank account set up for the payment of wages, over which the individual signer would by definition have no control. Mott v. Sewickley Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 211 Pa. Super. 357, 236 A.2d 541 (1967).

Individual who signed check without specifically designating his representative capacity was not individually liable to party cashing check, since check was designated payroll check with corporate name printed at top and in maker's position above individual signature. Pollin v. Mindy Mfg. Co., 211 Pa. Super. 87, 236 A.2d 542 (1967).

Defendant unquestionably indorsed note in his corporate capacity, where his representative capacity and name of corporation were appropriately designated on both sides of note. Trenton Trust Co. v. Klausman, 94 Montg. County L. Rep. 203 (Pa. 1971).

20. — Insufficient indication.

Where words "We promise to pay" in note were followed by typewritten identification of makers as "Walton Drug Co., Inc., d/b/a Touchton Drugs and/or Bob Edrington, Owner," and where owner, who alleged that he signed note in representative capacity only, signed note as "Bob Edrington, President," owner could not escape personal liability on note under UCC § 3-403(3), since use of words "and/or" in identification of makers destroyed any effect that naming of principal (Walton Drug Co.) would have had as limitation on alleged agent's (Edrington's) capacity, especially in view of fact that such "agent" signed instrument on line reserved for his signature as an individual. Havatampa Corp. v. Walton Drug Co., 354 So. 2d 1235 (Fla. App. 1978).

UCC § 3-403(2)(a) requires that an agent or representative must show that he is actually representing someone. If the instrument neither names the entity represented nor shows that the representative signed in a representative capacity, the person who signed the instrument is personally obligated (where check in suit had on its face only the words "Investor's Publishing Co.," and such words were followed only by signatures of defendants with no designation of capacity in which they signed). Sterling Press v. Pettit, 580 P.2d 599 (Utah 1978).

Maker of promissory note who signed instrument with her own name "Anita Willis" on one line, and who also wrote "Anita Willis, Inc." on line below her name, was personally obligated on note under UCC § 3-403(2)(b), notwithstanding appearance on instrument of both her personal signature and also signature of her corporation, since instrument did not show in any way that she had signed it in a representative capacity. DeBlanco v. Dooley, 164 N.J. Super. 155, 395 A.2d 909 (App. Div. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-403(2)(b), signer of blank check, drawn against account of corporation of which signer was president and sole owner without indicating after his signature title of office that he held in such corporation, was personally liable on check. Miller & Miller Auctioneers, Inc. v. Mersch, 442 F. Supp. 570 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

Where only defendant's signature appeared on promissory note and note did not name any party represented by defendant or demonstrate that defendant had signed it in representative capacity, defendant's unambiguous status as maker of note necessitated conclusion under UCC § 3-401(1), § 3-403(2) and (3), and § 3-413 that he was obligor thereunder and thus appropriate party from whom to seek payment. Marine Midland Bank v. DiMarzo, 57 A.D.2d 733 (4th Dep't 1977).

Person who drew checks on corporation that were payable to himself as officer of such corporation for future legal services to be rendered to it, but who failed to sign checks in representative capacity, was personally obligated on such checks under UCC § 3-403(2)(b) to holder in due course who purchased checks without notice of any impediment to their collection, since purpose of UCC § 3-403(2)(b) is to prevent drawer or maker of instrument, who fails to indicate his representative capacity thereon, to contest his individual liability on instrument as against holder in due course. Financial Assocs. v. Impact Mktg. Inc., 90 Misc. 2d 545 (1977).

In suit on two dishonored checks drawn by defendant, where each check was imprinted with name of corporation and was signed by defendant, but neither signature was followed by additional language indicating that defendant had signed only in representative capacity, defendant under UCC § 3-403(2)(b) was personally liable on obligations evidenced by checks in absence of parol evidence showing that he had signed only in representative capacity. Seamon v. Acree, 142 Ga. App. 662, 236 S.E.2d 688 (1977).

President of corporation who signed corporate check, which did not show that he signed in representative capacity, was personally liable on check where he failed to show that he signed instrument in representative capacity; fact that payee had received on numerous occasions other checks drawn on corporation's bank account by other officers of corporation and that payee had never looked to those officers for payment did not constitute evidence of prior understanding or prior dealings between parties sufficient to establish signature in representative capacity, since prior dealings shown were not between president of corporation and payee, but between other officers of corporation and payee. Griffin v. Ellinger, 530 S.W.2d 329 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), writ granted, 19 Tex. Sup. Ct. J. 229 (Tex. 1976), aff'd, 538 S.W.2d 97, 97 A.L.R.3d 791 (Tex. 1976).

Where officer of corporation signed note for loan to corporation in blank designated "Co-Maker," and also signed "Co-Maker's/Guarantor's Statement" which clearly stated that he was personally liable on such note, officer did not sign note in corporate capacity and was liable on note following default by corporation. Citibank E. v. Minbiole, 50 A.D.2d 1052 (3d Dep't 1975).

Drawer was personally obligated on check, notwithstanding his claim that he signed in representative capacity as president or general manager of corporation, where drawer's signature did not show title of his office. American Exch. Bank v. Cessna, 386 F. Supp. 494 (N.D. Okla. 1974).

Debtor who claimed to have signed promissory note as representative of corporation and not individually was personally liable under UCC §§ 3-307(b) and 3-403(b)(2) where instrument itself did not indicate that debtor was signing in representative capacity and where assertion that he intended to sign, and did sign, in representative capacity was insufficient to raise issue of fact to "otherwise establish" his representative capacity. Seale v. Nichols, 505 S.W.2d 251 (Tex. 1974).

Note bearing signature of individual and name of construction company was insufficient to establish that individual had not signed in individual capacity. Vickers v. Fireman's Fund Am. Ins. Co., 445 S.W.2d 530 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969).

Note named person represented but did not show that signer of note was signing in a representative capacity; held, signer was personally bound, and holder in due course could recover against both person represented and signer. O.P. Ganjo, Inc. v. Tri-Urban Realty Co., 108 N.J. Super. 517, 261 A.2d 722 (L. Div. 1969).

Note, bearing signature of individual with corporate name underneath without any indication that individual held any office with corporation, is joint obligation of corporation and individual, who is personally liable thereon. Perez v. Janota, 107 Ill. App. 2d 90, 246 N.E.2d 42 (1st Dist. 1969).

Where a conditional sales contract identified the company the defendant was representing, but did not show he signed the instrument in a representative capacity, the trial judge did not err in finding defendant personally liable. Blayton v. Ford Motor Credit Co., 118 Ga. App. 517, 164 S.E.2d 262 (1968).

A maker who affixes his signature to a promissory note immediately beneath the name of a corporation but with nothing to indicate he executed the instrument on behalf of the corporation in a representative capacity was held personally liable for the payment of the note; but it should be noted that by reason of the Dead Man's Statute it was impossible for the individual maker to testify concerning the transaction. Bell v. Dornan, 203 Pa. Super. 562, 201 A.2d 324 (1964).

A person was liable on the note where he, without indicating that he did so in a representative capacity, signed a promissory note in the following manner and form: "Rischall Electric Co. Inc. [and under this designation] Harold M. Rischall." Universal Lightning Rod, Inc. v. Rischall Elec. Co., 1 Conn. Cir. Ct. 623, 192 A.2d 50 (1963).

Where a note was signed, on successive lines, "John P. Conville," "Doris E. Conville," "Hughesville Mfg. Co. Inc.," and another note was signed, on successive lines, "Hughesville Mfg. Co.," "John P. Conville," "Doris E. Conville," the designated individuals were personally liable thereon, even though they were the authorized representatives of the company and intended to sign for it. Grange Nat'l Bank v. Conville, 8 Pa. D. & C.2d 616 (1957).

21. —Representative and individual capacity.

Fact that individual defendants signed promissory note individually with specificity and then signed note again with their signatures preceded by word, "by," indicated that they also signed note in representative capacity, although note did not reveal identity of person or corporation represented, and thus under UCC

§ 3-403(2)(b) parole testimony was admissible in suit between immediate parties to establish whether individual defendants signed note in representative, as well as individual, capacity; however, evidence, including parole testimony, failed to establish that individual defendants signed in representative capacity so as to obligate corporate defendants. Dynamic Homes, Inc. v. Rogers, 331 So. 2d 326 (Fla. App. 1976).

Individuals cosigned noted on left-hand side beneath name of corporation and in representative capacity as officers thereof; these same individuals signed right-hand side of note individually; held, they were personally liable on note even though they were acting in reliance on manager of corporation that they would not be personally liable. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co. v. Eisenstadt, 64 Misc. 2d 397 (1970).

Where president of corporation twice signed note, once below typewritten name of corporation and once above his own typewritten name, parties clearly intended that president would be personally liable on instrument, and insertion of abbreviation "Pres." was inadvertence performed out of habit or rote not intended to alter undertaking of parties. Corbin v. Safety Container Corp., 93 Montg. County L. Rep. 22 (Pa. 1970).

22. Practice and procedure.

Where seller sought to recover total amount of purchase price (see UCC § 2-709(1)(a)) of pipe and did not seek recovery on check given by buyer in partial payment as to which payment had been stopped, trial court incorrectly held that buyer's personal liability for purchase price was governed by UCC § 3-403(2)(b), dealing with circumstances under which authorized representative can be held personally liable on commercial paper (ovrld on other grounds Reams v. Tulsa Cable Television, Inc. (Okla.) 604 P.2d 373; stating, on remand of cause, that issue was not who was legally liable on check, but who was liable on contract to purchase the pipe). Culpepper v. Lloyd, 583 P.2d 500 (Okla. 1978), overruled on other grounds, Reams v. Tulsa Cable Television, Inc., 604 P.2d 373 (Okla. 1979).

Under the formula in UCC § 3-403(2)(b), if the form of the agent's signature is such that reasonable persons examining the face of the instrument could arrive at different conclusions concerning whether the parties intended the agent to be bound, the agent will be bound, except as is otherwise established between the immediate parties. Havatampa Corp. v. Walton Drug Co., 354 So. 2d 1235 (Fla. App. 1978).

Suit may not be maintained or judgment obtained on promissory note against undisclosed principal whose signature does not appear thereon; thus, complaint based on promissory note alleging that maker acted as agent of defendants, did not state cause of action against defendants where their names did not appear on note and it was not alleged that note disclosed that agent signed in any capacity other than for himself individually. Ness v. Greater Ariz. Realty, Inc., 21 Ariz. App. 231, 517 P.2d 1278 (1974).

In action by corporation against its bank, in which corporation sought to recover proceeds of series of checks drawn on corporation's checking account, each in excess of $300 and each signed by corporation president alone in violation of agreement between corporation and bank that checks in amounts in excess of $300 should bear signature of two specified signatories, one-year statute of limitations contained in UCC § 4-406(4) attached to each separate check bearing unauthorized signature, and new one-year period began to run with each subsequent check at moment it was made available to customer. Neo-Tech Sys. v. Provident Bank, 43 Ohio Misc. 31, 335 N.E.2d 395 (1974).

Where promissory note was signed by corporation president with his signature, followed by dash and printed name of corporation, way in which note was signed was ambiguous; however, there was sufficient evidence to support finding that corporate president was individually and personally liable on note, and testimony of payee to effect that he was loaning money to corporation, not to corporation president, did not constitute judicial admission so as to bar his recovery from corporation president. Geer v. Farquhar, 270 Or. 642, 528 P.2d 1335 (1974).

Where promissory note was signed with handprinted name of sole proprietorship, immediately below which appeared defendants' signatures without disclosing a representative or agency relationship, court erred in denying defendants' motion to open judgment by confession to allow defendants to establish that as between them and payee of note it was agreed that signers signed only in representative capacity, and that at time note was executed, payee knew signers were unauthorized to sign in such capacity, in which case signers would have meritorious defense under Code § 3-404(1); ambiguous evidence was insufficient to meet signers' burden of overcoming presumption of consideration for promissory note. First Nat'l Bank v. Achilli, 14 Ill. App. 3d 1, 301 N.E.2d 739 (2d Dist. 1973).

Where check contained on top left-hand side printed legend "Oste Bros." and beneath it an address, and defendant's signature on bottom right-hand side with nothing to indicate that signature was in representative capacity, burden was on defendant to disprove personal liability. Carleton Ford, Inc. v. Oste, 1 Mass. App. Ct. 819, 295 N.E.2d 402 (1973).

Although defendant's indorsement on promissory note was followed by notation "Sec. & Treas.," apparently connoting his representative capacity, jury should consider, on question of defendant's individual liability, all of circumstances of signing, including fact that complete, correct name of corporate defendant maker was not utilized, that defendant indorsed note on its reverse side, rather than on line for maker on face of note, and that he may have considered there to have been insufficient space in which to indorse on face of note. National Bank v. Ament, 127 Ga. App. 838, 195 S.E.2d 202 (1973).

In suit to hold agent personally liable on note, judgment on pleadings is improper where answer raises factual issue of understanding of parties as to signature in representative capacity and form of signature indicates representative capacity even though principal is not named. Kramer v. Johnson, 121 Ga. App. 848, 176 S.E.2d 108 (1970).

In determining whether a person has signed in a representative capacity, it is necessary to examine the entire instrument. Mott v. Sewickley Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 211 Pa. Super. 357, 236 A.2d 541 (1967).

Where one of the parties to the instrument contended that her signature was affixed in a representative capacity but through accident and mistake or inadvertence that fact was not shown on the note, and the payee contended that such party signed individually and that her signature and that of her husband, in their capacity as officers of the corporation, were omitted inadvertently, the result was that both parties alleged a mistake in the execution of the note, and the lower court properly exercised its discretion in reopening judgment entered by confession on the note. Pittsburgh Nat'l Bank v. Kemilworth Restaurant Co., 202 Pa. Super. 238, 195 A.2d 919 (1963).

23. —Pleading.

Unless specifically denied, the authority of a person to sign a check as agent is admitted. Gate City Furn. Co. v. Rumsey, 115 Ga. App. 753, 156 S.E.2d 221 (1967).

Under an Arkansas pleading statute, a maker sued personally on a promissory note could not, under a plea of general denial, defend on the ground that he had executed the paper in a representative capacity, the exception provided by ¶ (b) of subd (2) of this section, for the point could only be raised under a special plea to that effect. Chiles v. Mann & Mann, Inc., 240 Ark. 527, 400 S.W.2d 667 (1966).

24. —Evidence and burden of proof.

Summary judgment was properly granted to the holder of a series of negotiable promissory notes where an authorized representative signed his own name to the instruments, which named the principal represented but did not show that the representative signed in a representative capacity, since to bring a note within the exception clause of section 3-403 (subd [2], par [b]) of the Uniform Commercial Code, which provides that an authorized representative who signs his own name to an instrument is personally obligated if the instrument names the person represented but does not show that the representative signed in a representative capacity, or if the instrument does not name the person represented but does show that the representative signed in a representative capacity, except as otherwise established between the immediate parties, there must be more than the mere self-serving allegation of the signer's subjective intent to sign as representative; to escape personal liability, the signer must establish an agreement, understanding or course of dealing to the contrary, and without an affirmative demonstration that the taker of the note knew or understood that the signer intended to execute the instrument in a representative status only, there can be no defense that, notwithstanding the form of the note, representative liability was otherwise established between the parties. Rotuba Extruders, Inc. v. Ceppos, 46 N.Y.2d 223, 385 N.E.2d 1068 (1978).

25. —Parol evidence; admissible.

As between the immediate parties to a negotiable instrument, parol evidence is admissible under UCC § 3-403(2)(b) to show the parties' intention where the instrument names the person represented, but does not show that the person who signed the instrument signed it in a representative capacity. In such a case, there is a presumption that the instrument was signed in an individual capacity, and the person who signed it has the burden of overcoming that presumption (holding that trial court committed reversible error in excluding parol testimony concerning understanding of parties as to defendant's capacity in signing note sued on). Rosedale State Bank & Trust Co. v. Stringer, 2 Kan. App. 2d 331, 579 P.2d 158 (1978).

In action by payee against drawer of dishonored corporate checks, where name and address of the corporation appeared at top of each check, and where drawer simply signed his name to each check and there was no indication on any check that drawer's signature had been affixed in representative capacity as officer, director, or shareholder of such corporation, drawer signed checks in individual capacity and was personally liable thereon under UCC § 3-403(2)(b), "except as otherwise established between the immediate parties." In such case, trial court erred in dismissing plaintiff's complaint, and at trial of cause relevant parol evidence would be admissible to show intention of parties as to whether drawer had signed checks in representative capacity. Medley Harwoods, Inc. v. Novy, 346 So. 2d 1224 (Fla. App. 1977).

Parol evidence was admissible to show intention of parties with respect to check which was ambiguous on its face as to whether cosignor had signed as comaker or in representative capacity. Speer v. Friedland, 276 So. 2d 84 (Fla. App. 1973).

In suit by payee of promissory note allegedly signed by individual defendant as representative of corporate defendant, even though there was no indication on instrument that individual defendant's signature was signed in representative capacity, parol evidence was admissible under UCC § 3-403(2)(b) to show that individual defendant had signed in representative capacity because (1) action was between immediate parties to instrument, and (2) name of individual defendant's alleged principal—namely, the corporate defendant—appeared on face of instrument. Sullivan County Wholesalers, Inc. v. Sullivan County Dorms, 59 A.D.2d 628 (3d Dep't 1977).

In action by endorser of promissory note against its maker where plaintiff alleged that he was manager of branch office of life insurance company, that defendant purchased insurance contract for which he executed and delivered note payable to bank, and that plaintiff endorsed note as accommodation party, where note was endorsed without recourse and was signed "Duane S. Wolfram (Manager)", and where plaintiff alleged that he paid note when defendant defaulted at due date: (1) under UCC § 3-403(2)(b) parole evidence was admissible to show whether plaintiff signed note as representative of insurance company or whether he signed note in capacity of sole proprietor making him individually liable and, thus, whether plaintiff had capacity to sue on note. Wolfram v. Halloway, 46 Ill. App. 3d 1045, 361 N.E.2d 587 (1st Dist. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-403(2)(b), comaker of promissory note should have been permitted to produce evidence to show that he had signed note in representative capacity where word "President" appeared after comaker's signature, but name of corporation he purported to represent was not on instrument. Lowry v. Lomire, 143 Ga. App. 479, 238 S.E.2d 594 (1977).

In action by payee of promissory note parol evidence was admissible to show that defendant endorsed note in representative capacity, and not as individual, where name of corporation was typewritten on maker's signature line, president of corporation signed his name on line below with designation "President," and defendant signed his name on third line without indication of agency status, but it was conceded that he signed note as maker in his capacity as officer of corporation, and where signatures of same men, including defendant's endorsement, appeared on reverse side of note in same form. Weather-Rite, Inc. v. Southdale Pro-Bowl, Inc., 301 Minn. 346, 222 N.W.2d 789 (1974).

Face of chattel mortgage note represented corporate obligation that did not personally obligate defendants whose signatures appeared on note with no designation of representative capacity, where parties all testified that it was their intention to create corporate obligation, contemporaneously executed security agreement clearly showed that corporation was party to this loan transaction, and strict application of Code § 3-403(2)(a) would create result that was contrary to clearly understood intentions of original parties. First Bank & Trust Co. v. Post, 10 Ill. App. 3d 127, 293 N.E.2d 907 (1st Dist. 1973).

Evidence concerning intention of parties on issue of personal versus corporate liability should have been admitted in action on note where company was named but defendant's signature did not show any representative capacity. DeGolian v. Southern Oxygen Supply Co., 127 Ga. App. 504, 194 S.E.2d 265 (1972), rev'd on other grounds, 230 Ga. 405, 197 S.E.2d 374 (1973).

Where creditor-payee was urged by defendant indorser to forebear from carrying out replevin against goods of debtor-maker, and did so upon defendant's guarantee of payment and credit, creditor-payee was entitled to introduce parol evidence to establish intent of defendant in signing note, and to sue defendant directly and primarily on the notes not only as accommodation indorser-guarantor but also as de facto co-maker. Jamaica

Tobacco & Sales Corp. v. Ortner, 70 Misc.2d 388 (1972).

Extrinsic evidence was admissible to establish understanding of parties with respect to capacity of corporate officers, where note contained indorsements of all 3 officers and their corporate offices as well as indorsement in corporate name followed by signature and office of one of officers. Trenton Trust Co. v. Klausman, 222 Pa. Super. 400, 296 A.2d 275 (1972).

A note reciting "we promise to pay" and signed with both the name of a corporation and an individual is ambiguous so that as between the parties evidence is admissible to show the character in which the individual signed. Slayton v. Lomar Constr. Corp., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 955 (1967, NY Sup.).

By a Pennsylvania amendment in 1959 the stringent rule of subsection (2) of this section which made a signing agent personally liable unless the instrument itself both named the principal and disclosed the agency relationship was changed to provide that an agent who has complied with one of the two statutory requirements may show the other requirement by evidence outside the instrument, and this rule was applied in the case of a promissory note executed on behalf of a corporation by an individual who did not show that he executed the instrument in a representative capacity. Walton v. William H. Corby, Inc., 33 Pa. D. & C.2d 703 (1963).

26. — Inadmissible.

UCC § 3-403(2)(a), providing that authorized representative who signs his own name to an instrument is personally obligated if instrument neither names person represented nor shows that representative signed in representative capacity, is in accord with Illinois case law which holds that one who signed as maker without qualification cannot introduce, in action by payee to enforce such instrument, parol evidence to alter capacity in which he signed. Metropolitan Lumber Co. v. Dodge, 567 S.W.2d 729 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

To make commercial paper freely negotiable without undue risk, the basic law is that resort to extrinsic proof is impermissible when the face of the instrument itself does not serve to put its holder on notice of the limited liability of a signer. Rotuba Extruders, Inc. v. Ceppos, 46 N.Y.2d 223, 385 N.E.2d 1068 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-402, corporate officer's unqualified signature on back of note was endorsement where there was no clear indication within four corners of instrument that he was acting in representative capacity, and under UCC § 3-403(2)(b) parol evidence was not admissible to show that he was acting not individually but in representative capacity. Norfolk County Trust Co. v. Vichinsky, 5 Mass. App. Ct. 768, 359 N.E.2d 59 (1977).

Where instrument for payment of money was written on personalized check form, individual defendants' names were printed at top of form and their signatures appeared at bottom right-hand corner, where name of bank and account number were crossed out, but remainder of form was filled in as check would be and was payable to plaintiff's order in amount of $12,000 and where it was dated December 31, 1972, and notation "Note-6% Int." appeared at lower left-hand corner, instrument was negotiable demand instrument under UCC § 3-108, individual defendants were personally liable thereon under UCC § 3-403(2), and parol evidence was inadmissible to disestablish such obligation; however, under UCC § 3-401, corporate defendant, whose signature did not appear on instrument, was not liable on it. Kaminsky v. Van Dusen, 88 Misc.2d 833 (1976).

Where corporation admitted liability on promissory notes signed by officers of corporation in their representative capacities, it was error to have allowed parol evidence as to individual liability thereon where completely inconsistent with written instrument. Wright v. Seco Metals, Inc., 38 Mich. App. 410, 196 N.W.2d 341 (1972).

27. — Sufficiency of evidence.

In action on promissory note, defendant who merely signed note with word "by" preceding his name was liable, under UCC § 3-403(2)(a), on note in individual capacity as maker where note did not name person represented or show that defendant had signed instrument in representative capacity. In such case, word "by" preceding defendant's signature, without more on face of note, did not show that defendant had signed note in representative capacity, and extrinsic evidence was not admissible to show that defendant had signed instrument as representative of corporation. Giacalone v. Bernstein, 348 So. 2d 679 (Fla. App. 1977), cert. denied, 354 So. 2d 980 (Fla. 1977).

There was sufficient evidence to raise question of fact as to whether endorser had actual, apparent or implied authority to endorse three checks on behalf of corporate payee where, inter alia, endorser had authority to pick up checks from various customers of payee, including customer who drew checks in question, solicit jobs and make bids on contracts, sign his own name to business letters on payee's stationary, and make deposits for payee in its bank account. W.R. Grimshaw Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 563 P.2d 117 (Okla. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-403(2)(b), authorized representative was liable on note that he signed "Farnan Advertising Public Relations by A. J. Farnan," despite such representative's contention that he was not liable because records of secretary of state showed that true name of principal was "Farnan Advertising Agency, Inc." Farnan v. National Bank, 142 Ga. App. 777, 236 S.E.2d 923 (1977).

In action to obtain deficiency judgment against president of corporation after sale of collateral securing note, corporation president was entitled to introduce parol evidence to establish requisite agency status to avoid personal liability where note was signed "LaFayette Transportation Service (Seal)," followed by signature of corporation president, "x(s) James L. DeBruhl (Seal)," and evidence was sufficient to support finding that payee of note knew or should have known that corporation president was acting for and as president of corporation and that he did not sign note and security agreement as individual, but as president of corporation. North Carolina Equip. Co. v. DeBruhl, 28 N.C. App. 330, 220 S.E.2d 867 (1976), review denied, 289 N.C. 451, 223 S.E.2d 160 (1976).

In action under usury statute by individual signers of corporate promissory note against bank to recover interest and penalty on allegedly usurious loan, whether note was usurious depended on construction of note in accordance with nature of parties' obligations as represented by their signatures and there was sufficient evidence to present disputed fact question as to capacity in which plaintiffs signed note, although five signatures on note were unqualified individual signatures and could leave those signing personally obligated under UCC § 3-403(2)(a), where bank claimed that they signed as guarantors of corporate loan and sought to introduce parol evidence under UCC § 3-415(3) to establish such claim and where there was evidence that it was understood by parties that interest rate being charged was not usurious interest because it was being charged to corporation and not individuals. Pinemont Bank v. DuCroz, 528 S.W.2d 877 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e (Jan. 28, 1976).

Where three-man law partnership was dissolved when one partner left firm but other two partners continued practice under new partnership, where bank account of former partnership was kept open for purpose of depositing receivables of former firm, where check made payable to withdrawn partner and one of his former partners was received by new partnership, bookkeeper rubber-stamped check with indorsement of former partnership, bank deposited proceeds in former partnership account, and where new partnership subsequently withdrew money from former partnership account and withdrawn partner sued bank and former partner alleging conversion of check, judgment in favor of bank and former partner was upheld on two grounds: (1) Since indorsement may be made by agent under UCC § 3-403, and agent's authority may be actual, implied or apparent under UCC § 1-201(43), there was sufficient evidence to support conclusion that apparent authority existed for affixing rubber stamp in lieu of withdrawn partner's signature; (2) Record further supported defense predicated upon UCC § 3-419(3), since there was expert testimony to effect that under circumstances handling of check was in accord with reasonable commercial standards and, although bank knew former partnership had dissolved, it was logical for its account to be kept open for purpose of depositing fees which were subsequently collected for services rendered by old firm. Keane v. Pan Am. Bank, 309 So. 2d 579 (Fla. App. 1975).

In an action brought prior to the effective date of the UCC, the court held that as between the parties in Maryland although a person who signed a note made by a corporation is prima facie liable to the payee, if there is conflict in the evidence relative to the circumstances, the individual who signed that note is not liable if he affirmatively shows an understanding between him and the payee that there was to be no personal liability, and it observed that this same principle was embodied in the UCC. Leahy v. McManus, 237 Md. 450, 206 A.2d 688 (1965).

IV. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-402.

28. In general.

As between the indorsers on a note, the indorser whose name appeared first on back of note was liable first for payment of note and his discharge by receiver of payee bank by authority of chancery court discharged indorser whose name appeared second on back of note. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

Where first indorser on note payable to bank paid bank receiver certain sum and receiver gave receipt releasing indorser from further liability on note and the compromise settlement was made by authority of chancery court decree authorizing discharge of first indorser and holding of second indorser was unauthorized where made without second indorser's consent. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

The two statutory provisions regarding qualified indorsement and indorsement generally must be read together. Divelbiss v. Burns, 161 Miss. 724, 138 So. 346 (1931).

Indorser intending to qualify indorsement without using words "without recourse" must use words clearly expressing such intention. Divelbiss v. Burns, 161 Miss. 724, 138 So. 346 (1931).

Indorsement on note reading "this is to certify that I have this day sold all my right, title and interest to the within note and mortgage" held "general indorsement in due course." Divelbiss v. Burns, 161 Miss. 724, 138 So. 346 (1931).

One writing name in blank on back of note is an endorser. Skinner v. Mahoney, 140 Miss. 625, 106 So. 211 (1925).

One signing an instrument other than as maker, drawer, or acceptor, is endorser unless contrary intent appears. Taylor v. Ross, 129 Miss. 536, 92 So. 637 (1922); Carter v. Jennings, 134 Miss. 263, 98 So. 687 (1924).

29. Decisions under Code 1942 § 60.

Bank not "holder for value" of check endorsed in blank and deposited for collection. Bank of Gulfport v. Smith, 132 Miss. 63, 95 So. 785 (1923).

Bank paying a depositor full amount of check on same day presented becomes holder for value. Bank of Gulfport v. Smith, 132 Miss. 63, 95 So. 785 (1923).

Rights of bank and methods of procedure upon presentation by deposit of check against conditional credit stated. Bank of Gulfport v. Smith, 132 Miss. 63, 95 So. 785 (1923).

"Holder for value" is one who has given value for the instrument. Bank of Gulfport v. Smith, 132 Miss. 63, 95 So. 785 (1923).

Unauthorized alteration of note may be ratified by owner. Coulson v. Stevens, 122 Miss. 797, 85 So. 83 (1920).

Agent authorized to accept and collect note could not alter it or ratify alteration. Coulson v. Stevens, 122 Miss. 797, 85 So. 83 (1920).

"Implied authority" of agent is only that which is proper, usual, and necessary to exercise of authority expressly granted. Coulson v. Stevens, 122 Miss. 797, 85 So. 83 (1920).

30. Decisions under Code 1942 § 61.

Where a note given to a supplier by a corporate wholesaler was signed by the wholesaler's vice president as the vice president, and contained a marginal notation that the note was secured by the signatories signing thereon, and the first part of the notation was part of the printed form of the note, but the last part was typewritten, and the vice president denied that the note contained the typewritten words when it was signed by him, the evidence was insufficient to hold the vice president personally liable on the note. Case apparently decided under former § 61. Laher Spring & Elec. Car Corp. v. Breckenridge, 221 So. 2d 718 (Miss. 1969).

Where person signing instrument as agent does so with authority he is not liable thereon but if not duly authorized he is personally liable on such instrument. Shemper v. Hancock Bank, 206 Miss. 775, 40 So. 2d 742 (1949).

Where guardian signed instrument as agent for partnership consisting of minor ward and mother, minor was not bound, and since partnership of only one person cannot exist, the partnership was nonexistent and as agent for nonexistent principal guardian is liable personally on note. Shemper v. Hancock Bank, 206 Miss. 775, 40 So. 2d 742 (1949).

An officer of a corporation who signed the corporate name by himself to an accommodation note which was beyond the power of the corporation to undertake was not personally liable on the note. Ketcham v. Mississippi Outdoor Displays, Inc., 203 Miss. 52, 33 So. 2d 300 (1948).

If execution of note signed by defendant as administratrix was not authorized by law, defendant was personally liable on note. Orgill Bros. v. Perry, 157 Miss. 543, 128 So. 755 (1930).

An unauthorized signature may be ratified for all purposes of this chapter.

(b) If the signature of more than one (1) person is required to constitute the authorized signature of an organization, the signature of the organization is unauthorized if one of the required signatures is lacking.

(c) The civil or criminal liability of a person who makes an unauthorized signature is not affected by any provision of this chapter which makes the unauthorized signature effective for the purposes of this chapter.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-404.

11. In general.

Under UCC § 3-404(1), forged indorsements are inoperative as signatures of payee, regardless of whether they are indorsements for deposit or indorsements in blank, unless such indorsements are ratified by person whose name is signed or such person is precluded from denying authority to make indorsements. Mott Grain Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 259 N.W.2d 667 (N.D. 1977).

In a case where forged indorsements were placed upon a check, it was said that the forged indorsements were wholly inoperative as the signature of the payee under §§ 3-404(1) and 1-201(43), and that this was so both as to restrictive indorsements for deposit under § 3-205(c) and as to indorsements in blank under § 3-204(2). Stone & Webster Eng'g Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 345 Mass. 1, 184 N.E.2d 358, 99 A.L.R.2d 628 (1962).

12. Payment upon forged signature; liability.

Depository bank which accepted check payable to two joint payees, forwarded check to drawee bank for collection, and credited full amount of check's proceeds to account of joint payee who, without authority of other joint payee, had indorsed check in names of both payees, was liable to joint payee whose signature had wrongfully been indorsed, since unauthorized indorsement of such signature was inoperative under UCC § 3-404(1) and collection of proceeds of check based on an unauthorized indorsement constitutes conversion. Equipment Distribs., Inc. v. Charter Oak Bank & Trust Co., 34 Conn. Supp. 606, 379 A.2d 682 (Super. Ct. 1977).

Bank which was authorized depository of plaintiff was liable to plaintiff in conversion under UCC § 3-404(1) for face amount of 17 third-party checks which were made payable to plaintiff and were indorsed without authority by plaintiff's manager and deposited in manager's personal account, where bank failed to inquire as to manager's authority to negotiate such checks. Mott Grain Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 259 N.W.2d 667 (N.D. 1977).

In action by bank against drawer of check deposited with it, where signature of payee as purported indorser was forged and where below it was added signature of another entity, which was authorized signature, forged signature of payee was inoperative to make bank holder nor did presumably valid second signature convert order paper to bearer paper. Sumiton Bank v. Funding Sys. Leasing Corp., 512 F.2d 774 (5th Cir. Ala. 1975).

Where person who presented check to collecting bank did not have authority to negotiate check, collecting bank could not become holder of check based upon unauthorized endorsement, and hence could not become holder in due course. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

Where an individual was granted a loan from Bank 1 for the purpose of buying a car from his father-in-law, and Bank 1 issued its check for the loan amount made payable to the borrower and his father-in-law, which check was subsequently cashed at Bank 2 upon the borrower's endorsement and an unauthorized endorsement purportedly the signature of the father-in-law, and such check was eventually presented to Bank 1 and paid by it, Bank 2 was liable to Bank 1 under UCC §§ 3-404(1) and 4-207(2)(b). Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 68 Misc. 2d 880 (1972).

Under UCC § 3-404(1), a bank breaches its agreement with a customer when it pays the holder of a forged check, and it is this breach which constitutes the customer's cause of action against a bank to recover sums paid out on checks bearing forged signatures. Hardex-Steubenville Corp. v. Western Pa. Nat'l Bank, 446 Pa. 446, 285 A.2d 874 (1971).

Payments made on forged or unauthorized endorsements are at the peril of the bank unless it can claim protection upon some principle of estoppel. Gotham-Vladimir Adv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 27 A.D.2d 190 (1st Dep't 1967).

As between the payor bank and its customer, the bank bears the risk of making payment upon a forged indorsement of the payee's name. Thompson Maple Prods., Inc. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 211 Pa. Super. 42, 234 A.2d 32, 1967.

Payee of check has cause of action against collecting bank which has paid check made payable to joint payees bearing indorsement by one payee signing his own name and forging that of his joint payee. Harry H. White Lumber Co. v. Crocker-Citizens Nat'l Bank, 253 Cal. App. 2d 368 (2d Dist. 1967).

Since chief clerk of county commissioners, a public official, did not have authority, either actual or implied, to indorse checks belonging to the county or to an institution district, and to receive cash therefor, and the defendant bank, in dealing with the chief clerk, was bound to recognize his lack of authority in that regard, defendant bank was not the holder in due course, and county could recover from defendant bank for its act in paying proceeds of checks belonging to the county and the institution district to the chief clerk. Huntingdon County v. First-Grange Nat'l Bank, 20 Pa. D. & C.2d 418 (1960).

13. Good faith.

In bank's action to recover on promissory notes, where evidence revealed (1) that notes had been executed by defendant members of limited partnership to partnership itself, which had been formed to sell apartment projects, and (2) that corporate developer of project, which was sole general partner and managing agent of the limited partnership, had indorsed notes to itself in its corporate capacity, without required written consent or ratification of all of the limited partners, and has sold notes at discount to plaintiff, (1) plaintiff under UCC § 3-304(2) was not holder of notes in due course, since it knew that transferor had negotiated them to plaintiff without authority for transferor's sole benefit, (2) unauthorized indorsement of notes by limited partnership was wholly inoperative under UCC § 3-404(1) against both partnership itself and its members, and (3) even though partnership was not party defendant to action, in essence it was before the court, in the person of the defendant partners, within meaning of UCC § 3-306(d), since such partners were asserting their own rights and not rights of third person. Chemical Bank v. Ashenburg, 94 Misc. 2d 64 (1978).

Corporate customer of bank failed, under UCC § 4-406(1), to "exercise reasonable care and promptness to examine the statement and items to discover [the] unauthorized signature...on an item," where, in accordance with instructions given by president of corporation, clerk in charge of examining bank statements examined them only to check accuracy of mathematics and "items"-cancelled checks-were not examined at all. Thus, corporation failed to discover and report forgeries under UCC § 4-406(2) and was precluded from recovering against bank unless it could establish, under § 4-406(3), lack of ordinary care on part of bank in paying forgeries. However, corporation failed to establish lack of ordinary care by bank where bank assigned clerk, who was responsible for approximately 200 accounts and who examined all checks from each account daily, comparing signatures on checks with memorization of signature on customer's signature card, where forgeries were sufficiently adroit so as to escape detection by such methods, and where method used by bank was substantially same as that employed by other commercial banks in area. On other hand, customer did establish bank's lack of ordinary care with respect to altered checks where alterations were so mal-adroitly performed that they should have been readily discovered. Nu-Way Servs., Inc. v. Mercantile Trust Co. Nat'l Ass'n, 530 S.W.2d 743 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

14. Ratification.

Where (1) plaintiff lending bank issued cashier's check for $3,500 to borrower as proceeds of automobile loan made to borrower, (2) such check named borrower's alleged employer as payee because of borrower's false representation to plaintiff that borrower was employed by such payee and was purchasing a pickup truck from it, (3) borrower, to whom plaintiff had given check for delivery to borrower's "employer," forged "employer's" indorsement on check and also indorsement of borrower's stepfather, who was connected with borrower's "employer," and deposited proceeds in stepfather's account at defendant bank, (4) stepfather, on discovering that money had been deposited in his account without his knowledge or authorization, demanded that defendant remove such funds from his account, (5) defendant, on complying with such demand, then issued its own cashier's check, payable to borrower, and gave it to borrower's stepfather, who in turn gave it to borrower, (6) defendant then sent cashier's check issued by plaintiff through co-defendant bank for collection, both banks indorsed check "P.E.G.," and plaintiff paid it on presentment, and (7) plaintiff, after subsequently learning that borrower had never worked for alleged employer, that alleged employer had not sold borrower pickup truck, and that signatures of borrower's alleged employer and borrower's stepfather had been forged on check issued by plaintiff, then sued both defendants for failure to return funds which plaintiff had paid to them over the forged indorsements, court held (1) that both defendants as matter of law, by receiving check issued by plaintiff over the forged indorsements, had breached their implied warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) and were liable therefor to plaintiff, (2) that manner in which plaintiff had negotiated loan with borrower and plaintiff's delivery of its cashier's check to borrower, who was not named as payee thereof, did not, as a matter of law, constitute negligence under UCC § 3-406 that had substantially contributed to the making of the unauthorized signatures on such check, (3) that borrower's misrepresentations to plaintiff did not make him an imposter within meaning of UCC § 3-405(1)(a), so as to render effective his forged indorsements on such check, since term "imposter" refers to impersonation and did not extend to false representation that borrower was authorized agent of check's payee, and (4) that borrower's stepfather did not ratify, under UCC 3-404(2), the forged signatures on the check, since stepfather did not have full knowledge of all material facts involved, did not accept any benefit from the unauthorized signatures, and did not exercise any dominion or control over check's proceeds that indicated that he viewed such funds as his own. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, 454 F. Supp. 488 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-404(2), a forged signature may be adopted. The word "ratified" is used in the statute in order to make it clear that the adoption is retroactive, and that it may be found from conduct as well as from express statements. However, the statute makes ratification effective only for the purposes of UCC Article 3. The unauthorized signature becomes valid so far as its effect as a signature is concerned. But although ratification will relieve the actual signer from liability on the signature, it will not, of itself, relieve him from liability to the person whose name is signed. Moreover, it does not in any way affect the criminal law. Thus, while ratification of a signature may be taken into account, along with other relevant facts, in determining punishment, it will not relieve the signer of criminal liability. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, 454 F. Supp. 488 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

In action pursuant to UCC § 3-419 by co-payee of check for conversion of check by bank which cashed check with co-payee's endorsement forged by other payee, co-payee, which was not a "customer" of bank within meaning of UCC §§ 4-104 and 4-406, was not equitably estopped by policy of commercial reasonableness under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-203, notwithstanding that co-payee waited 10 months after it learned of forgery to inform bank, where (1) check, which was issued to co-payee "and" other payee, was properly payable under UCC § 3-116 only if it contained endorsement of both payees; (2) unauthorized endorsement was, in absence of ratification under UCC § 3-404, no endorsement under UCC §§ 3-202 and 3-404; (3) co-payee did not ratify unauthorized endorsement; and (4) bank's failure to ascertain whether co-payee's signature was authorized was not in accord with reasonable commercial standards of banking business under UCC § 3-419. Atlas Bldg. Supply Co. v. First Indep. Bank, 15 Wash. App. 367, 550 P.2d 26 (1976).

Pursuit by plaintiff of forger to recover payments for plaintiff's losses from check did not constitute ratification of unauthorized indorsement under UCC § 3-404.

Twellman v. Lindell Trust Co., 534 S.W.2d 83, 93 A.L.R.3d 943 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

Under UCC § 3-404, payee, a general contractor, ratified unauthorized indorsements of checks by subcontractor so as to preclude recovery from collecting and drawee banks and from drawer of checks where payee made no demand against either banks or drawer after learning of unauthorized indorsements, but continued to do business with subcontractor for six months at which time subcontractor stopped working for payee and payee changed its position of acquiescence and affirmation of subcontractor's acts and attempted to hold drawer and bank liable on basis of subcontractor's lack of authority to negotiate checks. Thermo Contracting Corp. v. Bank of N.J., 69 N.J. 352, 354 A.2d 291 (1976).

In action involving loan to corporation, evidenced by promissory note executed by corporation and individually by its president and three of its principal shareholders, evidence supported finding that one shareholder had ratified his forged signature where, after he discovered forgery, he had benefitted financially from corporation, whose continued survival was made possible by loan, where he delayed exposing forgery to avoid casting suspicion on other two shareholders, and where he assured lender he was doing everything possible to bring loan current and failed to repudiate his signature until he became convinced that corporation was hopelessly insolvent; under UCC § 3-404 a forged signature may be ratified even where the forger is not the agent of the purported signer. Common Wealth Ins. Sys. v. Kersten, 40 Cal. App. 3d 1014 (4th Dist. 1974).

In action to recover payment of check upon unauthorized indorsement, fact that plaintiffs asserted their claim against payee and collecting bank, and refused offer by payee, supported finding that plaintiffs did not intend ratification of unauthorized indorsement. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

When payees accepted payments due them from proceeds of checks, unauthorized endorsements thereon were ratified by persons or companies whose names had been forged. Starkey Constr., Inc. v. Elcon, Inc., 248 Ark. 958, 457 S.W.2d 509 (1970).

Where plaintiff's bookkeeper, in order to conceal her embezzlements, forged a check on his inactive account and deposited it to his credit in an active account where there was an overdraft, the plaintiff was denied recovery against the drawee bank which paid the forged check for, by retaining the sum deposited in his active account, he suffered no damage and, in effect, ratified the unauthorized signature. Wiest v. National Bank, 10 Lycoming R. 125 (Pa. 1966), aff'd, 209 Pa. Super. 751, 226 A.2d 227 (1967).

Partners whose signatures were affixed to a promissory note representing part of the consideration for the purchase price of a business who for many years allowed without demur the party who placed their names on the note to act as sole manager of the business had ratified his signing of the note in their behalf. Rehrig v. Fortunak, 39 Pa. D. & C.2d 20 (1966).

15. Precluding assertion of lack of authority.

Where (1) insurance drafts, payable to two corporate payees, were sent to one corporate payee of which defendant was president and principal stockholder, indorsed while in such payee's possession, and thereafter deposited in another corporation's account with plaintiff bank, and (2) such other corporation was owned by defendant, court held that trial court did not commit error in concluding that defendant was fully responsible under UCC § 3-404(1), dealing with effect of unauthorized signatures, for unauthorized indorsement of second payee in view of (1) evidence by plaintiff that defendant had informed plaintiff's accounts officer that second payee had authorized defendant to indorse and deposit drafts into such other corporation's account with plaintiff, and (2) evidence by second payee that its indorsement of drafts was unauthorized. First Nat'l Bank of Commerce v. Davis, 365 So. 2d 8 (La. App. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-404(1), payee's receipt of proceeds of check bearing payee's forged indorsement might preclude payee's denial of indorsement's authenticity and assertion of forgery and, if denial of signature was precluded, then signature would be operative and collecting bank would not be required to bear any loss from taking check with forged indorsement. Bank of W. v. Wes-Con Dev. Co., 15 Wash. App. 238, 548 P.2d 563 (1976).

In conversion action against both collecting and payor banks to recover amounts of instruments handled by them on forged endorsements, where there was substantial evidence to support finding that plaintiffs had been negligent in failing to discover forging secretary's defalcations as of date approximately 6 months following their commencement, and that such negligence substantially contributed to making of subsequent forged endorsements, plaintiffs were precluded by Code § 3-404 from denying forged signatures were operative endorsements. Cooper v. Union Bank, 9 Cal. 3d 371, 507 P.2d 609 (1973).

Because of bank's negligence in not insisting on written instructions from depositor before canceling unendorsed treasurer's check and transferring funds to another bank upon instructions contained in letter from person claiming to be agent for depositor, depositor was not precluded in action to recover funds represented by treasurer's check from asserting agent's lack of authority. Taylor v. Equitable Trust Co., 269 Md. 149, 304 A.2d 838 (1973).

Where the drawer of checks and his accountant both testified that the proceeds of the checks actually reached the payee corporation which maintained no bank account of its own but used the account of a predecessor corporation, and the drawer who was the majority stockholder in the payee corporation failed to supervise its banking activities, the drawer was not entitled to recover from drawee banks which had paid checks indorsed in name of predecessor rather than the payee corporation. Gotham-Vladimir Adv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 27 A.D.2d 190 (1st Dep't 1967).

16. Practice and procedure.

Where promissory note was signed with handprinted name of sole proprietorship, immediately below which appeared defendants' signatures without disclosing a representative or agency relationship, court erred in denying defendants' motion to open judgment by confession to allow defendants to establish that as between them and payee of note it was agreed that signers signed only in representative capacity, and that at time note was executed, payee knew signers were unauthorized to sign in such capacity, in which case signers would have meritorious defense under Code § 3-404(1); ambiguous evidence was insufficient to meet signers' burden of overcoming presumption of consideration for promissory note. First Nat'l Bank v. Achilli, 14 Ill. App. 3d 1, 301 N.E.2d 739 (2d Dist. 1973).

A judgment entered on a note which is forged is a void judgment and consequently a sale made in execution on the judgment does not pass title to even a good faith buyer. Harris v. Harris, 428 Pa. 473, 239 A.2d 783 (1968).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

17. In general.

If it should be ascertained, even after payment of a bill, that any of the indorsements are forged, the drawee can recover back the amount of the bill from the person to whom he paid it; and so each preceding indorser may recover from the person who indorsed the bill to him. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

While a bank is required at its peril to know the signature of its depositor, it is not required to know the signature of the payee named in a check of its depositor, who is unknown to the bank and with whose signature it is not familiar, and under no duty to become familiar. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

An indorser, whether for accommodation or for value, guarantees the genuineness of previous indorsements upon a check which he negotiates. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where the proof showed that payee's name on depositor's check was forged, and that defendant indorsed same for accommodation, drawee bank was entitled to recover amount thereof from defendant, notwithstanding that at the time suit was filed such bank had not reimbursed its depositor. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where a credit association was induced to make a loan to a property owner's brother on the latter's representation that he was the owner of the property used as security, and the association's agent told a merchant about the loan and asked him to cash the loan check, which was issued in the name of the real owner of the property, the association, its agent and the merchant all believing that the name of the borrower was that appearing on the check, although he was known by a different name, the merchant, in cashing the check upon indorsement by the borrower in the name appearing on the check, was acting in good faith, and so was not chargeable under the statute relating to notice of infirmity in a negotiable instrument or of defect of title of the person negotiating it. Hattiesburg Prod. Credit Ass'n v. McNair, 193 Miss. 615, 10 So. 2d 97 (1942).

Where the drawer delivers a check, draft or bill of exchange to an impostor supposing that he is the person whom he has falsely represented himself to be, and that his false representations as to his ownership or authority in regard to the property offered as security for the loan or a consideration for the paper are true, the impostor's subsequent indorsement of the paper in the name by which the payee is described is to be regarded as a genuine indorsement so far as the rights of subsequent parties who deal with the paper in good faith are dependent thereon. Hattiesburg Prod. Credit Ass'n v. McNair, 193 Miss. 615, 10 So. 2d 97 (1942).

Bank's payment of check to payee's agent on latter's forged indorsement of payee's name after deposit of balance of proceeds above amount of payee's note to personal credit of one receiving check as security for note was payment out of bank's funds, not depositor's account. Hart v. Moore, 171 Miss. 838, 158 So. 490 (1935).

Bank which paid check on forged signature of its depositor should bear loss, as between bank and holder which, without knowledge of forgery, took check from its agent, crediting agent's account therefor. Railway Express Agency v. Bank of Philadelphia, 168 Miss. 279, 150 So. 525 (1933).

§ 75-3-404. Impostors; fictitious payees.

(a) If an impostor, by use of the mails or otherwise, induces the issuer of an instrument to issue the instrument to the impostor, or to a person acting in concert with the impostor, by impersonating the payee of the instrument or a person authorized to act for the payee, an indorsement of the instrument by any person in the name of the payee is effective as the indorsement of the payee in favor of a person who, in good faith, pays the instrument or takes it for value or for collection.

(b) If (i) a person whose intent determines to whom an instrument is payable (Section 75-3-110(a) or (b)) does not intend the person identified as payee to have any interest in the instrument, or (ii) the person identified as payee of an instrument is a fictitious person, the following rules apply until the instrument is negotiated by special indorsement:

(1) Any person in possession of the instrument is its holder.

(2) An indorsement by any person in the name of the payee stated in the instrument is effective as the indorsement of the payee in favor of a person who, in good faith, pays the instrument or takes it for value or for collection.

(c) Under subsection (a) or (b), an indorsement is made in the name of a payee if (i) it is made in a name substantially similar to that of the payee or (ii) the instrument, whether or not indorsed, is deposited in a depository bank to an account in a name substantially similar to that of the payee.

(d) With respect to an instrument to which subsection (a) or (b) applies, if a person paying the instrument or taking it for value or for collection fails to exercise ordinary care in paying or taking the instrument and that failure substantially contributes to loss resulting from payment of the instrument, the person bearing the loss may recover from the person failing to exercise ordinary care to the extent the failure to exercise ordinary care contributed to the loss.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-405.

11. In general.

The Official Comments to UCC § 3-405(1)(c) contemplate that losses resulting from fraudulent employee behavior in causing the issuance of checks to payees intended to have no interest therein should be a risk of the employer's business and not of the banking community, since the employer is in a better position than the banks to prevent the success of such frauds. However, the Official Comments assume that such checks will never be delivered to the payees named therein, whether or not they are real persons or entities (holding that UCC § 3-405(1)(c) had no application where check made payable to bank, under mistaken belief that drawer owed bank amount for which check was drawn, was actually delivered to bank and was negotiated by it). Sun'n Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank, 21 Cal. 3d 671, 582 P.2d 920 (1978).

As carried forward from the Negotiable Instrument Law a negotiable instrument is treated as payable to bearer where if it is payable to the order of a fictitious or nonexistent person, and such fact was known to the person making it so payable. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. v. Walston & Co., 21 N.Y.2d 219, 234 N.E.2d 230 (1967), reargument granted, 21 N.Y.2d 1041 (1968), on reargument, 22 N.Y.2d 672, 291 N.Y.S.2d 366, 238 N.E.2d 754 (1968).

The effect of UCC § 3-405 is to put the loss on the customer and not on the bank. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

The rule that one who makes and delivers a check to an imposter, whom he believes to be the named payee, cannot recover from the drawee bank which pays the check on a forged indorsement by the imposter of the payee's signature will still be the law under the Pennsylvania Uniform Commercial Code. Davis v. Western Union Tel. Co., 35 Wash. C. R. 276 (1954).

12. Purpose.

The purpose of UCC § 3-405 is to promote negotiability. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

13. Indorsement requirement.

In order for the "padded payroll" defense of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) to be applicable, the forged indorsement must be in the exact name of the named payee. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 22 Wash. App. 46, 587 P.2d 617 (1978).

Issuing and collecting banks did not have defense of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) where forged indorsement was not "in the name of a named payee" as specified by statute. Twellman v. Lindell Trust Co., 534 S.W.2d 83, 93 A.L.R.3d 943 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

Code will not exempt drawee bank from liability on check payable to fictitious payee in absence of some indorsement thereon. Wright v. Bank of Cal., 276 Cal. App. 2d 485 (1st Dist. 1969).

14. Imposter-payee requirement.

Where (1) plaintiff bank issued ten cashier's checks for purchase of automobile leases and conditional sales contracts presumably entered into between payee of checks (an existing automobile sales firm) and certain specified third persons, (2) such leases and contracts actually were fictitious, since they involved nonexistent automobiles, lessees, and purchasers, and also unauthorized signatures of such "lessees" and "purchasers," (3) such documents were presented to plaintiff by employee of intended payee of checks and such employee, after receiving checks from plaintiff, which he had authority to do, indorsed each check with words "Sumner Motors," rather than "Sumner Motors, Inc.," which was payee's true name, (4) employee by his indorsement also made checks payable to order of defendant bank, and defendant, on such unauthorized indorsements, permitted checks to be deposited in account maintained by employee with defendant, (5) defendant indorsed each check thus guaranteeing employee's prior indorsement, and presented them to plaintiff, which paid them, and (6) plaintiff, on discovering fictitious nature of documents for which checks were issued, demanded payment from defendant of unpaid balance on such documents, court held (1) that defendant breached its warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) when it presented checks to plaintiff for payment and received payment thereon, (2) that defendant could not avoid liability under "padded payroll" defense of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) because employee of firm that was intended payee of checks did not indorse them in payee's exact name, (3) that defense of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) also was not available to defendant because such employee, in supplying plaintiff with name of payee of checks, did not act as plaintiff's agent, (4) that negligence defense of UCC § 3-406 could not be used by defendant, since it had not acted in accordance with reasonable commercial standards where it accepted and deposited the improperly indorsed checks in account of payee's employee, (5) that since defendant had not acted in accordance with reasonable commercial banking standards, it could not contend that plaintiff had duty under UCC § 4-406(1) to discover the unauthorized indorsements on checks, and (6) that plaintiff could not complain of trial court's failure to award it attorneys' fees under UCC § 4-207(3), since allowance of such fees is discretionary. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 22 Wash. App. 46, 587 P.2d 617 (1978).

Where (1) plaintiff lending bank issued cashier's check for $3,500 to borrower as proceeds of automobile loan made to borrower, (2) such check named borrower's alleged employer as payee because of borrower's false representation to plaintiff that borrower was employed by such payee and was purchasing a pickup truck from it, (3) borrower, to whom plaintiff had given check for delivery to borrower's "employer," forged "employer's" indorsement on check and also indorsement of borrower's stepfather, who was connected with borrower's "employer," and deposited proceeds in stepfather's account at defendant bank, (4) stepfather, on discovering that money had been deposited in his account without his knowledge or authorization, demanded that defendant remove such funds from his account, (5) defendant, on complying with such demand, then issued its own cashier's check, payable to borrower, and gave it to borrower's stepfather, who in turn gave it to borrower, (6) defendant then sent cashier's check issued by plaintiff through co-defendant bank for collection, both banks indorsed check "P.E.C.," and plaintiff paid it on presentment, and (7) plaintiff, after subsequently learning that borrower had never worked for alleged employer, that alleged employer had not sold borrower a pickup truck, and that signatures of borrower's alleged employer and borrower's stepfather had been forged on check issued by plaintiff, then sued both defendants for failure to return funds which plaintiff had paid to them over the forged indorsements, court held (1) that both defendants as matter of law, by receiving check issued by plaintiff over the forged indorsements, had breached their implied warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) and were liable therefor to plaintiff, (2) that manner in which plaintiff had negotiated loan with borrower and plaintiff's delivery of its cashier's check to borrower, who was not named as payee thereof, did not, as a matter of law, constitute negligence under UCC § 3-406 that had substantially contributed to the making of the unauthorized signatures on such check, (3) that borrower's misrepresentations to plaintiff did not make him an imposter within meaning of UCC § 3-405(1)(a), so as to render effective his forged indorsements on such check, since term "imposter" refers to impersonation and did not extend to false representation that borrower was authorized agent of check's payee, and (4) that borrower's stepfather did not ratify, under UCC § 3-404(2), the forged signatures on the check, since stepfather did not have full knowledge of all material facts involved, did not accept any benefit from the unauthorized signatures, and did not exercise any dominion or control over check's proceeds that indicated that he viewed such funds as his own. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, 454 F. Supp. 488 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

In action arising when employee of plaintiff bank secured execution of numerous checks by employer bank as drawer against itself as drawee and payable to defendant bank which, as payee, indorsed them for collection, received payment of funds, and credited them to account held by plaintiff's employee, defendant bank was not protected by UCC § 3-405 where payee's indorsements were genuine and where defendant bank received proceeds of checks and disbursed them to its depositor without inquiry of drawer-owner as to their proper disposition, despite absence of any showing of entitlement to checks or their proceeds on part of depositor, whose name appeared nowhere on instrument; nor was affirmative defense of failure to exercise proper control and supervision over its employees available to defendant bank under UCC §§ 3-406 and 4-406 since checks at issue involved neither unauthorized signatures nor alterations. Federal Ins. Co. v. Groveland State Bank, 44 A.D.2d 182 (4th Dep't 1974), modified, 37 N.Y.2d 252, 372 N.Y.S.2d 18, 333 N.E.2d 334 (1975), reargument denied, 37 N.Y.2d 924 (1975).

Where borrower obtained check, drawn to himself and automobile dealer, by misrepresenting to lender-drawer that he was purchasing automobile, and obtained payment of check upon forged indorsement of dealer from collection bank, which forwarded check to drawee bank, which paid check to collecting bank and charged account of drawer, "imposter rule" of § 3-405 was not applicable as defense to drawee bank's action against collecting bank for repayment under § 4-207. East Gadsden Bank v. First City Nat'l Bank, 50 Ala. App. 576, 281 So. 2d 431, 67 A.L.R.3d 135 (Civ. App. 1973).

Collecting bank which accepted plaintiff bank's cashier's check with unauthorized endorsement could not rely upon protection of imposter rule, where person who presented check to collecting bank did not claim to be payee but only agent of payee. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

Where an individual was granted a loan from Bank 1 for the purpose of buying a car from his father-in-law, and Bank 1 issued its check made payable to the borrower and his father-in-law, and the check was subsequently cashed at Bank 2 upon the borrower's endorsement and an unauthorized endorsement purportedly the signature of the father-in-law, the "impostor payee" provisions of UCC § 3-405 did not apply to the unauthorized endorsement so as to relieve Bank 2 from liability to Bank 1. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 68 Misc. 2d 880 (1972).

15. Imposter's inducement of maker or drawer.

Where (1) drawer signed 27 checks, each naming as payee a firm to which payment was due, (2) drawer's book-keeper, after presenting such checks to drawer and having them signed, forged payee's indorsement thereon and diverted them into personal account at defendant bank, and (3) drawer then sued defendant for wrongfully debiting drawer's account for such checks, bank could not escape liability by reliance on UCC § 3-405(1)(c), which provides that indorsement by any person in name of named payee is effective if employee of drawer supplied drawer with name of payee with intent that payee have no interest in the instrument, since all checks in issue had been prepared as result of bona fide business transactions between named payee and drawer, and thus drawer's employee did not "supply" drawer with name of payee, but simply converted checks to employee's own use (observing that in such case, creditor-payee is the person who supplies drawer with name of payee and that drawer's fraudulent employee, in essence, has simply stolen the checks, thereby rendering his forged indorsements ineffective). Danje Fabrics Div. of Kingspoint Int'l Corp. v. Morgan Guar. Trust Co., 96 Misc. 2d 746 (1978).

Purchaser of cashier's check which was obtained from purchaser by fraud and paid in contravention of stop order was not entitled to recover amount of check from collecting or drawee bank, although check was made payable to "James Baird," an employee of an oil exploration company, whose endorsement was forged on check, where person named "James F. Beaird, Jr.," who posed as employee of oil exploration company, dealt directly with purchaser, purchaser was induced by him to purchase check, check was purchased by purchaser as consideration for oil lease and presented to imposter personally. Covington v. Penn Square Nat'l Bank, 545 P.2d 824 (Okla. Ct. App. 1975).

The words "or otherwise" in subdivision (1)(a) of this section are sufficiently broad to impose liability upon the "innocent" drawer of a check made payable to an imposter and his confederate even though there is no direct communication between the imposter and the drawer, and the impersonation took place in the presence of third persons. Philadelphia Title Ins.

Co. v. Fidelity-Philadelphia Trust Co., 419 Pa. 78, 212 A.2d 222, 23 A.L.R.3d 925 (1965).

16. Signer's intent regarding payee's interest.

In action by corporation, as drawer against drawee bank to recover proceeds of 24 checks paid by bank, where evidence showed (1) that each check that was fraudulently cashed had had plaintiff's signature imprinted on it by facsimile signature machine maintained in plaintiff's accounting department, (2) that operation of such machine was normally under control of either plaintiff's assistant treasurer or one of plaintiff's accountants, (3) that an accountant had actually "signed" three of the 24 checks in issue, but had had nothing to do with placing name of any particular payee on any check, and (4) that accountant was involved in scheme for fraudulently cashing such checks and diverting proceeds thereof, court held (1) that accountant's testimony that he had intended to convert the three checks on which he had impressed plaintiff's signature prior to time checks came to him for impression of such signature was inherently incredible, and (2) that as a result, bank could not successfully defend its action in paying checks by resorting to UCC § 3-405(1)(b), which provides that indorsement by any person in name of named payee is effective if person signing on behalf of drawer intended payee to have no interest in instrument (holding that accountant had not formed intent to misappropriate any particular check until after it had been "signed" by facsimile machine). Dayton, Price & Co. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 64 A.D.2d 563 (1st Dep't 1978), appeal denied, 45 N.Y.2d 712 (1978).

A party may successfully employ the "padded payroll" defense of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) by showing the following: (1) that a person indorsed the check in the name of the named payee, (2) that such person was an agent or employee of the drawer, (3) that such person supplied the payee's name to the drawer, and (4) that such person did not intend that the named payee should have any interest in the check. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 22 Wash. App. 46, 587 P.2d 617 (1978).

Where forger, using stolen, preprinted checks belonging to plaintiff construction company and utilizing plaintiff's facsimile check signature machine (or perfect copy of signature produced by such machine), drew checks in plaintiff's name to order of two probably fictitious sole proprietorships, and where unknown person subsequently desposited such checks, after indorsing them with probably fictitious name in individual and not representative capacity, and then withdrew such funds from depository bank, (1) plaintiff's loss was forged check loss and not indorsement loss; (2) indorsements, whether genuine or fictitious, on checks were effective under UCC § 3-405(1)(b), since named payees were not intended to have any interest in checks; (3) indorser's failure to indorse checks in representative capacity did not shift plaintiff's loss to depository, collecting, and drawee banks under theories of improper payment, breach of title warranty, and conversion, since there were no true payees to demand payment and thus subject plaintiff to double liability; and (4) depository and collecting banks, on satisfying requirement of final payment rule in UCC § 3-418 as to being holders in due course, could assert protection of such rule against plaintiff's causes of action for common-law negligence and restitution in connection with banks' handling of forged checks, despite incomplete indorsements on such checks. Perini Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank, 553 F.2d 398 (5th Cir. Ga. 1977), reh'g denied, 557 F.2d 823 (5th Cir. Ga. 1977).

In customers' action against payor and collecting banks for wrongfully permitting improper charges to be made against customers' savings accounts in payor bank, where attorney of customers' guardian presented to payor bank two withdrawal slips bearing forged signatures of guardian and obtained two cashier's checks payable to guardian; where payor bank failed to compare signatures on withdrawal slips with guardian's signature and in fact had never obtained signature card from guardian; where attorney-forger then presented such cashier's checks bearing forged signatures of guardian, and also indorsements to attorney-forger as "trustee," to collecting bank, opened accounts with such bank and purchased two savings certificates from it, and later withdrew funds from such accounts and redeemed such certificates; and where collecting bank, after indorsing the cashier's checks, presented them to payor bank which honored them, (1) payor bank was liable for charging plaintiff-customers' savings accounts on basis of forged withdrawal slips under same rules which provide that bank paying forged check may not charge amount of check against account of person whose name is forged; (2) payor bank, which was both drawer and drawee of cashier's checks, was liable to payee thereof under UCC § 3-419 for paying checks on basis of forged indorsements of payee; (3) collecting bank was liable on its warranties under UCC § 4-207 to payor bank for obtaining payment of cashier's checks bearing forged indorsements of customers' guardian; and (4) collecting bank could not escape its liability by invoking defenses set forth in UCC § 3-405, substantial negligence rule contained in UCC § 3-406, and final-payment rule set forth in UCC § 3-418. Maddox v. First Westroads Bank, 199 Neb. 81, 256 N.W.2d 647 (1977).

Where borrower who was given line of credit by bank for purchase of cattle executed "bill of sale drafts" drawn on bank with intention that payee of drafts, a cattle seller, would have no interest in them and borrower or his agent placed forged signatures of payee on both face and back of instruments, endorsements on instruments were effective under UCC § 3-405(1)(b); accordingly, warranties given by collecting bank under UCC § 4-207(1) were not breached and collecting bank did not convert instruments. Kansas Bankers Sur. Co. v. Bank of Odessa, 386 F. Supp. 555 (W.D. Mo. 1974).

Collecting bank which guaranteed indorsement of fictitious payee was not liable under § 4-207 for breach of warranty to drawee bank which paid check and thus sustained no insured loss in refunding payment. Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Hampton State Bank, 497 S.W.2d 80 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 10, 1973).

Where plaintiff's assistant comptroller drew checks on plaintiff corporation payable to fictitious company whose name lacked only the term "Inc." in name of plaintiff, but did not intend plaintiff corporation to have any interest in checks which were sent to third party who would endorse checks in payee's name and deposit them in defendant bank in account showing third party as president and authorized signatory, any loss arising from such transaction must fall upon plaintiff corporation which employed dishonest signing agent and no liability attached to defendant bank for accepting deposits made by third party or in dispersing funds thereof on checks written by him. Braswell Motor Freight Lines v. Bank of Salt Lake, 28 Utah 2d 347, 502 P.2d 560 (1972).

Drawer of check could not recover from drawee bank amount of drawer's check paid by bank on forged signature of wife of payee where drawer did not intend wife of payee to have any interest in check, and where entire proceeds of check had been paid to husband-payee whom drawer intended to have full interest in money. Gordon v. State St. Bank & Trust Co., 361 Mass. 258, 280 N.E.2d 152 (1972).

Where payee's name was included on check "in the normal course of [bank] business" and "as a matter of policy" because payee was intended ultimately to receive check proceeds on transfer of title to automobile, payee was intended by drawer to have an interest in check and endorsement of payee's name by another cannot be legally effective. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 68 Misc. 2d 880 (1972).

X pretends to be A; if drawer issues check to X payable to A, imposter defense is available; drawer intended to issue check to X, imposter, albeit in name of A, person impersonated; held, A's forged endorsement is effective; action by drawer's surety to recover from drawee bank for paying checks over forged endorsement, dismissed. Fidelity & Deposit Co. v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 63 Misc. 2d 960 (1970).

A payor-drawee bank cannot recover from the collecting bank for the breach of a warranty that the signature of the payee on the endorsement was genuine where the signature, otherwise a forgery, comes within the imposter provision of UCC § 3-405(1)(b) by which an endorsement forged by the payee is effective as negotiation, because the payor-drawee bank can show no loss as caused by the forgery. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

17. Indorsement by agent or employee of maker or drawer.

The drawer of a check may sue a depositary bank which accepts the check and pays out the proceeds in violation of a forged restrictive indorsement based on either money had and received or conversion where the indorsement, although forged by an employee of the drawer who supplied the drawer with the name of the payee intending the latter to have no interest in the instrument (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-405, subd [1], par [c]), is nonetheless "effective", since in those cases where the forgery is effective, the depositary bank may be deemed to have dealt with valuable property of the drawer, inasmuch as the check is both a valuable instrument and a valid instruction to the drawee to honor the check and debit the drawer's account accordingly; additionally, only a depositary bank may be held liable for payment in disregard of a restrictive indorsement (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-419, subd [4]; § 3-206, subd [2]) since that bank is in the best position to ensure that the restriction is satisfied. Underpinning & Found. Constructors, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 46 N.Y.2d 459, 386 N.E.2d 1319 (1979).

Since the checks stolen, forged and then cashed by plaintiff's accounts payable bookkeeper were legitimate and bona fide payments due and owing to the named payee legitimately based upon open invoices due and owing to the payee, which arose out of the normal business relationship between plaintiff and the payee, and were not based on fraudulent transactions, section 3-405 (subd [1], par [c]) of the Uniform Commercial Code, which provides that an indorsement "by any person in the name of a named payee is effective if * * * an agent or employee of the maker or drawer has supplied him with the name of the payee intending the latter to have no such interest" does not operate to relieve the drawee bank from liability for wrongfully debiting plaintiff's account for the checks containing forged payee's indorsements since, in such an instance, the creditor "supplied" plaintiff with the name of the payee not plaintiff's employee, who stole the checks, thereby making his forged indorsements ineffective. Danje Fabrics Div. of Kingspoint Int'l Corp. v. Morgan Guar. Trust Co., 96 Misc.2d 746 (1978).

Where (1) checks of corporation were required to be issued only on signature of two corporate officers and one of them signed a number of checks in blank each week to accommodate corporation's needs; (2) where one of such presigned, in-blank checks was later signed by other corporate officer who, after making such check payable to first officer without first officer's authorization or knowledge, then indorsed first officer's name on back of check and also added his own indorsement thereunder; and (3) where such check was thus drawn as devious method by second officer of drawing check to his own order or to cash, court would grant second officer's motion to dismiss indictment charging him with forged indorsement of first officer's name. Although UCC § 3-405(2) provides that nothing therein shall affect criminal or civil liability of person who indorses instrument in name of named payee under conditions specified in UCC § 3-405(1), UCC § 3-405(2) did not render second officer's indorsement of payee's signature a forgery, since this was case within scope of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) in which agent of drawer of check had supplied drawer with name of payee who was not intended to have any interest in check, and under UCC § 3-405(1)(c), indorsement by any person in name of payee who is not intended to have any interest in check is effective (observing that criminal liability of second officer might have extended to larceny, a crime not charged in indictment). People v. Hoffman, 91 Misc.2d 525 (1977).

Where employee of insurance company who was authorized to draw and sign drafts in settlement of claims, selected inactive claim files and drew drafts payable to claimant, indorsed name of payee on back of draft and took them to collecting bank where he cashed them, where employee was well known to employees of collecting bank as employee of insurance company with authority to sign drafts for his employer, and where collecting bank did not require employee to personally indorse drafts nor produce payee, under UCC § 3-405(1)(b) forged indorsements were "effective," titles to instruments passed as though there had been no forgery, and collecting bank, as good faith transferee was entitled to payment from parties liable on instrument since undisputed facts established that employee was authorized to draw drafts and that he intended payees to have no interest in instruments. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp. v. Citizens Fid. Bank & Trust Co., 519 S.W.2d 817 (Ky. 1975).

In action by insurance company that issued $20,000 check to one of its policy owners whose name had been supplied by employee with intent that owner have no interest in instrument, UCC § 3-405(1)(c) precluded company from recovering face value of check from bank that had paid it in good faith over forged endorsement; bank's alleged negligence in paying check was irrelevant due to conspicuous absence in UCC § 3-405 of requirement that paying or collecting bank exercise ordinary care and fact that draftsmen of UCC consciously allocated such type of loss to employer. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Marine Nat'l Exch. Bank, 371 F. Supp. 1002 (E.D. Wis. 1974).

Even though at time checks payable to fictitious company were drawn, assistant treasurer who had caused checks to be drawn was employee of drawer and had supplied drawer with names of fictitious payees, neither check was indorsed "in the name of a named payee," so that indorsements were not effective and collecting bank was not relieved of liability by Code § 3-405(1)(c). Travco Corp. v. Citizens Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 42 Mich. App. 291, 201 N.W.2d 675 (1972).

An employee "supplied" to his employer the name of payee intended to have no interest in proceeds of check, thereby making forged endorsement effective as between broker and drawee bank where registered representative of broker initiated normal business practice leading to drawing of check by submitting fraudulent sell order. New Amsterdam Cas. Co. v. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co., 451 F.2d 892 (3d Cir. Pa. 1971).

The drawee bank was not liable for charging a department store's account with checks which its employee had fraudulently caused to be drawn by the store to fictitious suppliers whose endorsements were forged by the employee, for the bank was protected by subsec. (1)(c). May Dep't Stores Co. v. Pittsburgh Nat'l Bank, 374 F.2d 109 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

It is not essential that the agent involved in the impostor situation be on the payroll of the drawer as long as the agent is in fact entrusted by the drawer company with taking the information from the drawer's incoming goods department to its bookkeeping department, on the basis of which information the bookkeeping department prepares checks, which it then entrusts to the agent for delivery to the payees, the "agent" supplying false information of goods not actually received and then forging the names of the payees of the checks entrusted to him, for delivery to the payees. Thompson Maple Prods., Inc. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 211 Pa. Super. 42, 234 A.2d 32, 1967.

In a typical "padded payroll" case where an employee causes a check to be issued payable to a real or fictitious person to whom the check is never to be delivered, and the employee keeps the check and "forges" the indorsement required; the loss is placed upon the employer as a risk of his business enterprise rather than upon the subsequent holder or drawee. Pacific Indem. Co. v. Security First Nat'l Bank, 248 Cal. App. 2d 75 (2d Dist. 1967).

If an instrument is made payable to an existing person not intended to have any interest in it, and such fact was known to the person making it so payable or known to his employee, the Legislature intended to make such an instrument bearer paper, thereby relieving a drawee or any endorser from the resulting loss and imposing the loss resulting from actions of a dishonest employee on the drawer-employer. Phoenix Die Casting Co. v. Manufacturers & Traders Trust Co., 50 Misc. 2d 152 (1966).

18. Bond protection.

Banker's blanket bond provided that any check payable to fictitious payee and endorsed in his name was forged indorsement; held, bond provided coverage for loss sustained by bank which honored checks endorsed with payee's name by person other than payee. Delmar Bank v. Fidelity & Deposit Co., 428 F.2d 32 (8th Cir. Mo. 1970).

19. Parol evidence.

Although there is no indication that note signed in lower right corner was signed other than as comaker, parol evidence was admissible to show that note was indeed signed in capacity of surety or accommodation party. Philadelphia Bond & Mtg. Co. v. Highland Crest Homes, Inc., 221 Pa. Super. 89, 288 A.2d 916 (1972).

§ 75-3-405. Employer's Responsibility for fraudulent indorsement by employee.

(a) In this section:

(1) "Employee" includes an independent contractor and employee of an independent contractor retained by the employer.

(2) "Fraudulent indorsement" means (i) in the case of an instrument payable to the employer, a forged indorsement purporting to be that of the employer, or (ii) in the case of an instrument with respect to which the employer is the issuer, a forged indorsement purporting to be that of the person identified as payee.

(3) “Responsibility” with respect to instruments means authority (i) to sign or indorse instruments on behalf of the employer, (ii) to process instruments received by the employer for bookkeeping purposes, for deposit to an account, or for other disposition, (iii) to prepare or process instruments for issue in the name of the employer, (iv) to supply information determining the names or addresses of payees of instruments to be issued in the name of the employer, (v) to control the disposition of instruments to be issued in the name of the employer, or (vi) to act otherwise with respect to instruments in a responsible capacity. “Responsibility” does not include authority that merely allows an employee to have access to instruments or blank or incomplete instrument forms that are being stored or transported or are part of incoming or outgoing mail, or similar access.

(b) For the purpose of determining the rights and liabilities of a person who, in good faith, pays an instrument or takes it for value or for collection, if an employer entrusted an employee with responsibility with respect to the instrument and the employee or a person acting in concert with the employee makes a fraudulent indorsement of the instrument, the indorsement is effective as the indorsement of the person to whom the instrument is payable if it is made in the name of that person. If the person paying the instrument or taking it for value or for collection fails to exercise ordinary care in paying or taking the instrument and that failure substantially contributes to loss resulting from the fraud, the person bearing the loss may recover from the person failing to exercise ordinary care to the extent the failure to exercise ordinary care contributed to the loss.

(c) Under subsection (b), an indorsement is made in the name of the person to whom an instrument is payable if (i) it is made in a name substantially similar to the name of that person or (ii) the instrument, whether or not indorsed, is deposited in a depository bank to an account in a name substantially similar to the name of that person.

§ 75-3-406. Negligence contributing to forged signature or alteration of instrument.

(a) A person whose failure to exercise ordinary care substantially contributes to an alteration of an instrument or to the making of a forged signature on an instrument is precluded from asserting the alteration or the forgery against a person who, in good faith, pays the instrument or takes it for value or for collection.

(b) Under subsection (a), if the person asserting the preclusion fails to exercise ordinary care in paying or taking the instrument and that failure substantially contributes to loss, the loss is allocated between the person precluded and the person asserting the preclusion according to the extent to which the failure of each to exercise ordinary care contributed to the loss.

(c) Under subsection (a), the burden of proving failure to exercise ordinary care is on the person asserting the preclusion. Under subsection (b), the burden of proving failure to exercise ordinary care is on the person precluded.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-406.

11. In general.

UCC § 3-406 does not make the negligent party liable in tort for damages that result from the alteration. Instead, it estops such party from asserting the alteration against a holder in due course or the drawee. The holder or the drawee is protected by estoppel, and the task of pursuing the wrongdoer is left to the negligent party. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 22 Wash. App. 46, 587 P.2d 617 (1978).

UCC § 3-406 and § 4-406(2) merely preclude a person who was negligent prior to (UCC § 3-406) or after (UCC § 4-406) a check transaction from asserting an unauthorized signature or alteration against the bank (where customer, instead of asserting unauthorized signature or alteration against bank, sued bank on theory that it had negligently permitted customer's accountant to divert proceeds of checks drawn by customer). Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

General pattern of UCC §§ 3-406 and 4-406 is to absolve payor bank, which has been deceived by third party, from liability to its customer if customer's negligence played substantial part in making deception possible; however, bank is absolved from liability only if it has acted with reasonable care or in accordance with reasonable banking standards. Transamerica Ins. Co. v. United States Nat'l Bank, 276 Or. 945, 558 P.2d 328 (1976).

The Code modifies the prior law with respect to the effect of fault of the drawer by adopting as a criterion such negligence as substantially contributes to...the making of an unauthorized signature. Thompson Maple Prods., Inc. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 211 Pa. Super. 42, 234 A.2d 32, 1967.

12. Applicability.

UCC § 3-406 and § 4-406(2) preclude recovery by customer from bank only if bank paid instrument in accordance with reasonable commercial standards (see UCC § 3-406) or ordinary care (see UCC § 4-406(3)) (holding that since bank was negligent as a matter of law in paying checks presented by customer's accountant and thereby permitting accountant to divert proceeds of checks to his own use, bank could not claim benefit of either UCC § 3-406 or § 4-406(2)). Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

In action against collecting bank by payee of check which had been stolen by thief, indorsed by forged payee's signature, and ultimately negotiated to collecting bank, for breach of warranties of genuineness of prior indorsement contained in UCC §§ 3-417(2) and 4-207(2): (1) where payee was suing not as payee but as drawee's assignee, payee was invulnerable to attack by payor bank under UCC §§ 4-406(5) and 3-406; however, (2) where payee had or should have had knowledge of theft and forgery of own check and of thief's identity, three year delay in bringing action on check against collecting bank as assignee of drawee bank for breach of warranty was not "reasonable" under UCC § 4-207(4). Lewittes Furn. Enters., Inc. v. Peoples Nat'l Bank, 82 Misc.2d 1013 (1975).

No distinction is made under UCC § 3-406 as to whether the signature which is forged is the signature of the negligent person or not, so that the Code provision has been applied where the drawer was deemed negligent in permitting a situation to arise in which the forger forged an indorsement of the payee's name. Thompson Maple Prods., Inc. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 211 Pa. Super. 42, 234 A.2d 32, 1967.

13. Negligence; substantial contribution.

The question whether a bank was negligent in paying an item—that is, whether it paid the item in accordance with reasonable commercial standards under UCC § 3-406 and § 4-406—is one that must be decided on the facts of each particular case. The reasonableness of the bank's conduct, of course, may be assessed in light of the plaintiff's conduct. Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

Nowhere does the Uniform commercial Code State in so many words that a bank, whether a collecting bank or payor bank, is liable for negligently paying an item. Hints, however abound in the code. They start with § 1-103, providing that common-law rules of negligence still apply. Section 3-419(3) limits recovery against collecting banks for conversion only if they acted in good faith and followed "reasonable commercial standards." Section 3-406 precludes assertion of a material alteration or unauthorized signature against the party whose negligence substantially contributed to the wrongdoing, but only if the payor is a holder in due course or paid "in good faith and in accordance with the reasonable commercial standards of the drawee's or payor's business." A bank is prohibited from disclaiming "responsibility for its own lack of good faith or failure to exercise ordinary care" under § 4-103(1), apparently on the assumption that such duties exist. Finally, a bank's lack of care shifts the burden for paying over a forged signature or a materially altered item from its customer, who was negligent in discovering the wrongdoing, back to the bank under § 4-406(3). Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

Where (1) plaintiff lending bank issued cashier's check for $3,500 to borrower as proceeds of automobile loan made to borrower, (2) such check named borrower's alleged employer as payee because of borrower's false representation to plaintiff that borrower was employed by such payee and was purchasing a pickup truck from it, (3) borrower, to whom plaintiff had given check for delivery to borrower's "employer," forged "employer's" indorsement on check and also indorsement of borrower's stepfather, who was connected with borrower's "employer," and deposited proceeds in stepfather's account at defendant bank, (4) stepfather, on discovering that money had been deposited in his account without his knowledge or authorization, demanded that defendant remove such funds from his account, (5) defendant, on complying with such demand, then issued its own cashier's check, payable to borrower, and gave it to borrower's stepfather, who in turn gave it to borrower, (6) defendant then sent cashier's check issued by plaintiff through co-defendant bank for collection, both banks indorsed check "P.E.G.," and plaintiff paid it on presentment, and (7) plaintiff, after subsequently learning that borrower had never worked for alleged employer, that alleged employer had not sold borrower a pickup truck, and that signatures of borrower's alleged employer and borrower's stepfather had been forged on check issued by plaintiff, then sued both defendants for failure to return funds which plaintiff had paid to them over the forged indorsements, court held (1) that both defendants as matter of law, by receiving check issued by plaintiff over the forged indorsements, had breached their implied warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) and were liable therefor to plaintiff, (2) that manner in which plaintiff had negotiated loan with borrower and plaintiff's delivery of its cashier's check to borrower, who was not named as payee thereof, did not, as a matter of law, constitute negligence under UCC § 3-406 that had substantially contributed to the making of the unauthorized signatures on such check, (3) that borrower's misrepresentations to plaintiff did not make him an imposter within meaning of UCC § 3-405(1)(a), so as to render effective his forged indorsements on such check, since term "imposter" refers to impersonation and did not extend to false representation that borrower was authorized agent of check's payee, and (4) that borrower's stepfather did not ratify, under UCC § 3-404(2), the forged signatures on the check, since stepfather did not have full knowledge of all material facts involved, did not accept any benefit from the unauthorized signatures, and did not exercise any dominion or control over check's proceeds that indicated that he viewed such funds as his own. Guaranty Bank & Trust Co. v. Federal Reserve Bank, 454 F. Supp. 488 (W.D. Okla. 1977).

Finding of more than ordinary negligence is not necessary under language of UCC § 3-406 before that section operates to preclude recovery on forged indorsement. Commonwealth v. National Bank & Trust Co., 469 Pa. 188, 364 A.2d 1331 (1976).

In action by drawer's assignee against bank to recover amount of nine checks bearing forged indorsements which bank charged to drawer's account, test of conduct amounting to "negligence" within meaning of UCC § 3-406 was whether prudent person in position of drawer's manager, having at his disposal only amount of information and experience manager had concerning purported loan applications, would have foreseen danger of subsequent forgery by automobile dealer and accomplice involved in making purported loans and drawing and issuing checks without conducting credit investigation; if prudent person would have foreseen such danger, then drawer, acting through its manager, could not be said to have properly exercised its duty of ordinary care to bank as required by statute in so making purported loans and in so drawing and issuing checks. Fidelity & Cas. Co. v. Constitution Nat'l Bank, 167 Conn. 478, 356 A.2d 117 (1975).

A customer is precluded from asserting his unauthorized signature against the bank where he has failed to exercise reasonable care. Terry v. Puget Sound Nat'l Bank, 80 Wash. 2d 157, 492 P.2d 534 (1972).

The phrase "substantially contributes" indicates a causal relationship and is the equivalent of the "substantial factor" test applied in the law of negligence generally. Gast v. American Cas. Co., 99 N.J. Super. 538, 240 A.2d 682 (App. Div. 1968).

14. Proximate cause requirement.

Lax conduct of business affairs or negligent delivery of check by drawer to one not payee will not preclude drawer from asserting forged indorsement, unless lax conduct or negligent delivery proximately caused loss; in instant case, person who drew check payable to existing payee, held not negligent in delivering it to payee's agent who subsequently forged payee's endorsement thereon. Society Nat'l Bank v. Capital Nat'l Bank, 30 Ohio App. 2d 1, 281 N.E.2d 563 (1972).

UCC § 3-406 provision precluding drawer from recovering from bank which cashed check on forged indorsement where drawer's negligence substantially contributes to unauthorized alteration is a change from pre-Code law which required that drawer's negligence must have proximately caused conduct of cashing bank. Com. v. National Cent. Bank, 94 Dauph. Co. 359 (Pa. 1972).

15. Non-negligent acts.

Where copayee obtained check, drawn to himself and automobile dealer, from drawer-lender, by misrepresenting that he was purchasing automobile, and by forging copayee's indorsement obtained payment from collecting bank, which forwarded check to drawee bank, which paid check to collecting bank and charged drawee's account, but credited drawee's account upon learning of forged indorsement, there was presented no such negligence of drawer, within meaning of § 3-406, as would preclude drawer from asserting forgery against drawee, so that drawer's failure to assert such defense would not preclude drawee bank under § 4-406(5) from prosecuting its claim against collecting bank. East Gadsden Bank v. First City Nat'l Bank, 50 Ala. App. 576, 281 So. 2d 431, 67 A.L.R.3d 135 (Civ. App. 1973).

In action by holder of forged payroll checks to recover damages from defendant, where defendant's offices were burglarized, blank checks were stolen and imprinted with defendant's check "protectograph," signature of defendant's bookkeeper was forged, and checks were cashed at plaintiff's stores, facts that defendant kept blank checks in unlocked cabinet and that check "protectograph" was in unlocked desk drawer was not sufficient to show that defendant was negligent and that its negligence substantially contributed to making of forgeries under UCC § 3-406; check "protectograph" was not "signature stamp or other automatic signing device" but merely stamped amount of check in manner that made alteration difficult and, although such checks might appear more authentic than usual checks, they still had to be signed by defendant's bookkeeper, whose signature was forged; furthermore, door to defendant's office was locked, as well as its windows and exterior doors to building and, in addition, defendant employed security service to check premises periodically during night. Fred Meyer, Inc. v. Temco Metal Prods. Co., 267 Or. 230, 516 P.2d 80 (1973).

Payee of check was not negligent in following attorney's instructions to endorse check to order of late husband's estate nor in assuming that check would thereafter be deposited in estate account. Salsman v. National Community Bank, 102 N.J. Super. 482, 246 A.2d 162 (1968), aff'd, 105 N.J. Super. 164, 251 A.2d 460 (1969).

The fact that a check is mailed to an attorney by another attorney to obtain a signature does not constitute negligence as there is no reason to foresee that the check will be misappropriated by the client who will then forge the names of the payees thereon. Gast v. American Cas. Co., 99 N.J. Super. 538, 240 A.2d 682 (App. Div. 1968).

Church whose financial secretary forged checks on its account and was the person to whom cancelled checks and bank statements were required to be sent was not negligent in failing to discover the forgeries where the secretary had been a faithful and trusted member of the church for more than 20 years, and secretary's knowledge of the forgeries could not be imputed to the church. Jackson v. First Nat'l Bank, Inc., 55 Tenn. App. 545, 403 S.W.2d 109 (1966).

16. Preclusion; contributing to unauthorized signature.

Where (1) accountant, who was not authorized to sign checks on behalf of plaintiff corporation or to make deposits into any account other than plaintiff's tax and loan account with defendant bank, presented over a period of time a total of eleven checks to defendant which were signed by plaintiff's president, made payable to defendant, and intended to be deposited into plaintiff's tax and loan account, (2) some of such checks were signed in blank by plaintiff's president and filled in by accountant, which he had authority to do, (3) defendant knew about limitation on accountant's authority, but nevertheless permitted accountant on several occasions to deposit part of a check's proceeds into tax and loan account and remainder into either accountant's personal account or some other account, (4) defendant also allowed accountant to purchase cashier's check with proceeds of one check and to have it made payable to payee designated by accountant, and (5) defendant never required accountant to indorse checks presented or made any inquiry into his authority to use plaintiff's funds in unauthorized manner, court held (1) that defendant had been negligent as a matter of law in dealing with plaintiff's funds, (2) that although Uniform Commercial Code does not expressly state that bank is liable for negligently paying item, bank must nevertheless use ordinary care in disbursing depositor's funds, (3) that reasonableness of defendant bank's conduct could be assessed in light of plaintiff's conduct, (4) that under pre-code rule not displaced by UCC, where check is drawn to order of bank to which drawer is not indebted, bank (a) is authorized to pay proceeds only to persons specified by drawer, (b) takes risk in treating check as payable to bearer, and (c) is placed on inquiry as to authority of drawer's agent to receive payment himself, (5) that if drawer clothes agent with apparent authority to receive proceeds of check made payable to bank's order, bank is not liable to drawer for paying proceeds to agent or applying proceeds in manner specified by agent contrary to his actual authority, (6) that in present case, defendant, as a matter of law, had breached contract implied in normal banking relationship with plaintiff and thus had been negligent in its treatment of plaintiff's funds, (7) that plaintiff had not been aware of defendant's conduct in allowing accountant to divert part of proceeds of plaintiff's checks to accountant's use, (8) that plaintiff had not knowingly assented to defendant's practice of treating checks payable to defendant's order as bearer paper if both drawer and bearer were known to defendant's teller, (9) that defendant's negligence in disbursing plaintiff's funds also could not be successfully defended, either under either UCC § 3-406 (dealing with negligence contributing to alteration or unauthorized signature) or UCC § 4-406 (dealing with customer's duty to discover and report unauthorized signature or alteration), on ground that plaintiff had been negligent in signing some checks in blank and not checking accountant's examination of plaintiff's monthly bank statements, since defendant had been negligent as a matter of law in paying proceeds of checks to accountant, and (10) that UCC § 3-406 and § 4-406(2) and (4) were also inapplicable because plaintiff was not asserting unauthorized signature or alteration against defendant. Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson's Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

Where stock brokerage firm, in dealing with attorney as agent for plaintiff, failed to ascertain or verify the scope of attorney's authority and placed checks in his hands on four separate occasions in 6 months period in violation of its own rules and Rules of New York Stock Exchange and principles of sound and prudent business practices, the firm's conduct was not enough to constitute a "substantial factor" in bringing about the forgery of plaintiff's signature and payment of checks over that unauthorized signature. Bagby v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 491 F.2d 192 (8th Cir. Mo. 1974).

Where blank checks were left in unlocked drawer of barber shop, where plaintiffs never inquired among themselves as to missing check blanks, where plaintiffs did not inquire among themselves or of bank as to unusual absence of statement and cancelled checks, plaintiffs were precluded by their own negligence from recovering from bank which had paid out on checks under skilled forged endorsements. Terry v. Puget Sound Nat'l Bank, 80 Wash. 2d 157, 492 P.2d 534 (1972).

Depositor was negligent as matter of law where she failed to inquire of bank as to lack of receipt of monthly statements and cancelled checks after she was informed that bank's records indicated that she had no money in her account; held, depositor's negligence precluded her from asserting bank's lack of authority to pay allegedly forged checks. Myrick v. National Sav. & Trust Co., 268 A.2d 526 (D.C. 1970).

Where employee fraudulently caused employer to draw checks payable to fictitious suppliers, forged indorsements of fictitious payees, cashed checks at bank, and converted proceeds for which bank charged employer's account, bank was protected in suit by employer for allegedly illegally charging account with amount paid on forged indorsements, by Code § 3-405(1)(c). May Dep't Stores Co. v. Pittsburgh Nat'l Bank, 374 F.2d 109 (3d Cir. Pa. 1967).

Where a buyer of logs follows the practice of making out checks to the order of the suppliers on the basis of delivery slips executed by the hauler bringing the logs to its mill, and allow the hauler to have access to blank forms, and then made out the checks on the basis of such forms without question of their accuracy when in fact the slips showed fictitious deliveries, and the buyer then entrusted the hauler with the checks so that he could deliver them to the payee suppliers, whereupon the hauler forged the names of the latter, there was such negligence on the part of the buyer as to bar it from recovering from the bank on which the checks were drawn. Thompson Maple Prods., Inc. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 211 Pa. Super. 42, 234 A.2d 32, 1967.

Bank which paid forged checks drawn on the trust account of a church payable to the order of the forger, many of which checks bore the endorsement of a company operating a race track, was put on inquiry as to whether the sums represented by the checks were being withdrawn for unauthorized purposes, and was guilty of negligence for failing to inquire. Jackson v. First Nat'l Bank, Inc., 55 Tenn. App. 545, 403 S.W.2d 109 (1966).

Where the drawer of a check caused it to be sent to one bearing the same name as the intended payee and the recipient cashed it at the drawee bank and payment was thereafter stopped by the drawer who subsequently compounded his error by issuing another check in the same amount, sending it again to the same wrong addressee, the drawer was guilty of negligence contributed to the indorsement of the check by an unauthorized party and was required to reimburse the drawee for the sum paid out by it. Park State Bank v. Arena Auto Auction, Inc., 59 Ill. App. 2d 235, 207 N.E.2d 158 (2d Dist. 1965).

17. Reasonable commercial standards.

Where (1) plaintiff bank issued ten cashier's checks for purchase of automobile leases and conditional sales contracts presumably entered into between payee of checks (an existing automobile sales firm) and certain specified third persons, (2) such leases and contracts actually were fictitious, since they involved nonexistent automobiles, lessees, and purchasers, and also unauthorized signatures of such "lessees" and "purchasers," (3) such documents were presented to plaintiff by employee of intended payee of checks and such employee, after receiving checks from plaintiff, which he had authority to do, indorsed each check with words "Sumner Motors," rather than "Sumner Motors, Inc.," which was payee's true name, (4) employee by his indorsement also made checks payable to order of defendant bank, and defendant, on such unauthorized indorsements, permitted checks to be deposited in account maintained by employee with defendant, (5) defendant indorsed each check, thus guaranteeing employee's prior indorsement, and presented them to plaintiff, which paid them, and (6) plaintiff, on discovering fictitious nature of documents for which checks were issued, demanded payment from defendant of unpaid balance on such documents, court held (1) that defendant breached its warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) when it presented checks to plaintiff for payment and received payment thereon, (2) that defendant could not avoid liability under "padding payroll" defense of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) because employee of firm that was intended payee of checks did not indorse them in payee's exact name, (3) that defense of UCC § 3-405(1)(c) also was not available to defendant because such employee, in supplying plaintiff with name of payee of checks, did not act as plaintiff's agent, (4) that negligence defense of UCC § 3-406 could not be used by defendant, since it had not acted in accordance with reasonable commercial standards where it accepted and deposited the improperly indorsed checks in account of payee's employee, (5) that since defendant had not acted in accordance with reasonable commercial banking standards, it could not contend that plaintiff had duty under UCC § 4-406(1) to discover the unauthorized indorsements on checks, and (6) that plaintiff could not complain of trial court's failure to award it attorneys' fees under UCC § 4-207(3), since allowance of such fees is discretionary. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank v. Pacific Nat'l Bank, 22 Wash. App. 46, 587 P.2d 617 (1978).

Where bank which was authorized depository of plaintiff company failed to investigate authority of plaintiff's manager to treat as his own 17 checks made payable to plaintiff and to deposit such checks in manager's personal account, bank did not follow reasonable commercial standards of banking business so as to be entitled under UCC § 3-406 to assert, in suit by plaintiff for conversion of such checks, defense of plaintiff's allegedly substantial contributory negligence. Mott Grain Co. v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 259 N.W.2d 667 (N.D. 1977).

In customers' action against payor and collecting banks for wrongfully permitting improper charges to be made against customers' savings accounts in payor bank, where attorney of customers' guardian presented to payor bank two withdrawal slips bearing forged signatures of guardian and obtained two cashier's checks payable to guardian; where payor bank failed to compare signatures on withdrawal slips with guardian's signature and in fact had never obtained signature card from guardian; where attorney-forger then presented such cashier's checks bearing forged signatures of guardian, and also indorsements to attorney-forger as "trustee," to collecting bank, opened accounts with such bank and purchased two savings certificates from it, and later withdrew funds from such accounts and redeemed such certificates; and where collecting bank, after indorsing the cashier's checks, presented them to payor bank which honored them, (1) payor bank was liable for charging plaintiff-customers' savings accounts on basis of forged withdrawal slips under same rules which provide that bank paying forged check may not charge amount of check against account of person whose name is forged; (2) payor bank, which was both drawer and drawee of cashier's checks, was liable to payee thereof under UCC § 3-419 for paying checks on basis of forged indorsements of payee; (3) collecting bank was liable on its warranties under UCC § 4-207 to payor bank for obtaining payment of cashier's checks bearing forged indorsements of customers' guardian; and (4) collecting bank could not escape its liability by invoking defenses set forth in UCC § 3-405, substantial negligence rule contained in UCC § 3-406, and final-payment rule set forth in UCC § 3-418. Maddox v. First Westroads Bank, 199 Neb. 81, 256 N.W.2d 647 (1977).

Specific act of delivering check to someone who was not payee did not necessarily constitute negligence within meaning of UCC § 3-406 nor could plaintiff's actions in trusting person to whom delivery was made be said to have substantially contributed to subsequent forgery nor did payor-drawee bank pay instrument in accordance with reasonable commercial standards where it was readily apparent that first indorsement was by someone other than named payee. Twellman v. Lindell Trust Co., 534 S.W.2d 83, 93 A.L.R.3d 943 (Mo. Ct. App. 1976).

Under UCC § 3-406, insurance company was not precluded from asserting forgery against drawee bank where, on death of its insured, insurance drew check payable to beneficiary of policy and mailed it to insurance broker who forged name of beneficiary, and where check was subsequently paid by drawee bank; sending of check to broker was pursuant to usual practice of giving broker goodwill advantage of delivering check to beneficiary and there was no evidence of prior defalcation by broker or of any prior acts which would have put insurance company on notice of possible misappropriation of funds. Guardian Life Ins. Co. of Am. v. Chemical Bank, 47 A.D.2d 608 (1st Dep't 1975).

Bank that accepted forged checks for collection acted in accordance with reasonable commercial standards under UCC § 3-406, notwithstanding checks were endorsed with typewritten name of payee bank, since checks were regular on their face and bore purported endorsement of named payee; collecting bank was not required to obtain holographic signature of one of payee bank's officers, and written evidence of his authority to endorse, before accepting checks for collection. Furthermore, typewritten endorsement which identified payee bank met requirements of UCC § 4-206, governing transfers between banks. West Penn Admin., Inc. v. Union Nat'l Bank, 233 Pa. Super. 311, 335 A.2d 725 (1975).

In action arising when employee of plaintiff bank secured execution of numerous checks by employer bank as drawer against itself as drawee and payable to defendant bank which, as payee, indorsed them for collection, received payment of funds, and credited them to account held by plaintiff's employee, defendant bank was not protected by UCC § 3-405 where payee's indorsements were genuine and where defendant bank received proceeds of checks and disbursed them to its depositor without inquiry of drawer-owner as to their proper disposition, despite absence of any showing of entitlement to checks or their proceeds on part of depositor, whose name appeared nowhere on instruments; nor was affirmative defense of failure to exercise proper control and supervision over its employees available to defendant bank under UCC §§ 3-406 and 4-406 since checks at issue involved neither unauthorized signatures nor alterations. Federal Ins. Co. v. Groveland State Bank, 44 A.D.2d 182 (4th Dep't 1974), modified, 37 N.Y.2d 252, 372 N.Y.S.2d 18, 333 N.E.2d 334 (1975), reargument denied, 37 N.Y.2d 924 (1975).

Bank which honored unauthorized indorsements by embezzler of employer's checks could not assert UCC § 3-406 defense of contributory negligence against employer where bank failed to comply with reasonable commercial standards of banking business. Hermetic Refrigeration Co. v. Central Valley Nat'l Bank, Inc., 493 F.2d 476 (9th Cir. Cal. 1974).

In action arising out of "joint pay agreement" between general contractor, subcontractor, and supplier in which bank paid check without endorsement of both payees, under UCC § 3-406 drawer's negligence substantially contributed to improper payment where it failed to advise bank of "joint pay agreement" and failed to draw check so as to make it properly payable to joint payees; nor did bank violate reasonable commercial standards where bank employee who handled transaction made inquiries regarding named payee and received reasonable explanation, there was nothing on face of check to justifiably arouse suspicion, and there was no other irregularity in transaction. Dominion Constr., Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 271 Md. 154, 315 A.2d 69 (1974).

Section referred to as example of explicit requirement that party exercise more than "honesty in fact." Industrial Nat'l Bank v. Leo's Used Car Exch. Inc., 362 Mass. 797, 291 N.E.2d 603 (1973).

Because of bank's negligence in not insisting on written instructions from depositor before canceling unendorsed treasurer's check and transferring funds to another bank upon instructions contained in letter from person claiming to be agent for depositor, depositor was not precluded in action to recover funds represented by treasurer's check from asserting agent's lack of authority. Taylor v. Equitable Trust Co., 269 Md. 149, 304 A.2d 838 (1973).

Bank is not negligent in exchanging cashier's check made out to named payee for personal check drawn by its customer to same payee bearing unauthorized endorsement; and bank that issued cashier's check may recover against bank that cashes it upon unauthorized endorsement. Thieme v. Seattle-First Nat'l Bank, 7 Wash. App. 845, 502 P.2d 1240 (1972).

Under UCC § 3-406, a negligent depositor is not precluded from asserting a claim if he establishes that the bank's payment of the forged checks was not in accordance with reasonable commercial standards. Exchange Bank & Trust Co. v. Kidwell Constr. Co., 472 S.W.2d 117 (Tex. 1971).

18. Practice and procedure.

Finding that bank had not been negligent in paying checks on which depositor's signature as drawer had been forged by depositor's bookkeeper, and that bank in defending suit by depositor could therefore utilize affirmative defenses afforded by UCC § 3-406 and UCC § 4-406, would not be upset on appeal where such finding was supported by substantial evidence in record. Parsons Travel, Inc. v. Hoag, 18 Wash. App. 588, 570 P.2d 445 (1977).

Contributory negligence of drawer of checks was not defense to cause of action against bank for conversion nor suffice as finding of proximate cause on common law defense of contributory negligence. DoAll Dallas Co. v. Trinity Nat'l Bank, 498 S.W.2d 396 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Jan. 30, 1974).

Bank certified check which had blank spaces and amount thereof could easily be raised; held, bank was "person" and payee of checks was "holder in due course" entitled to recover if bank's negligence substantially contributed to raising of check; summary judgment precluded. Brower v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 311 F. Supp. 675 (S.D.N.Y. 1970).

Because neither payee nor their attorney was required to anticipate that, as result of escrow mailing, co-payee might appropriate draft and forge endorsements thereon, defense that payee had substantially contributed to making of unauthorized signature was not supported by evidence and should not have been submitted to jury. Gast v. American Cas. Co., 99 N.J. Super. 538, 240 A.2d 682 (App. Div. 1968).

The Code does not attempt to define what is sufficient negligence to bar a person from claiming that there has been a forgery other than to require that it substantially contributes to the making of an unauthorized signature, and beyond that the question is one to be determined by the trier of fact in each case. Thompson Maple Prods., Inc. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 211 Pa. Super. 42, 234 A.2d 32, 1967.

§ 75-3-407. Alteration.

(a) "Alteration" means (i) an unauthorized change in an instrument that purports to modify in any respect the obligation of a party, or (ii) an unauthorized addition of words or numbers or other change to an incomplete instrument relating to the obligation of a party.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c), an alteration fraudulently made discharges a party whose obligation is affected by the alteration unless that party assents or is precluded from asserting the alteration. No other alteration discharges a party, and the instrument may be enforced according to its original terms.

(c) A payor bank or drawee paying a fraudulently altered instrument or a person taking it for value, in good faith and without notice of the alteration, may enforce rights with respect to the instrument (i) according to its original terms, or (ii) in the case of an incomplete instrument altered by unauthorized completion, according to its terms as completed.

Bank could not engage in self-help to remedy its mistake of not including Chapter 13 debtor's backhoe as security for note by simply adding the backhoe to the note without notifying the debtor and seeking debtor's ratification; thus, bank did not have security interest in the equipment. *Courtney v. II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-407.

11. In general.

Dates placed on demand note which related to time when interest would be due did not constitute extension of instrument's due date within meaning of UCC § 3-407(1), dealing with material alteration of instruments (stating that demand note, by its very nature, lacks any specified date of maturity and that demand for payment fixes date of maturity). Citizens Bank v. Landers, 570 S.W.2d 756 (Mo. Ct. App. 1978).

Law as to the burden of explaining the alteration of a negotiable instrument was not changed by the provisions of § 3-307 or of § 3-407. In re Abercrombie Estate, 20 Pa. D. & C.2d 496, 9 Fiduc. Rep. 539 (1960).

12. Physical alteration requirement.

Claim in suit to cancel combination note, security agreement, and disclosure statement, which alleged that amount not agreed on was fraudulently inserted in note signed in blank, raised issue that was primarily controlled by UCC § 3-115, which deals with incomplete instruments, and UCC § 3-407, which deals with alteration of instruments. First Am. Bank v. Bishop, 239 Ga. 809, 239 S.E.2d 19 (1977).

Where loan application spelled out what part of $80,000 loan would be for stock in cooperative lending association and what part for fees, loan of $60,000 plus amount necessary for fees did not constitute material alteration in terms of obligation imposed upon comakers on face of note, allegedly because note was unconditional on its face, while comakers were held accountable for stock purchases and additional loan fees. Turfers, Inc. v. Frederick Prod. Credit Ass'n, 265 Md. 679, 291 A.2d 643 (1972).

13. Materiality; number or relation of parties.

Striking name of copayee-bank from notes was not material or fraudulent alteration and notes might be enforced by holder as altered without joinder of bank. Katski v. Boehm, 249 Md. 568, 241 A.2d 129 (1968).

14. Completion of incomplete instrument.

Where parties to security agreement indicated their intent that paragraph covering debtor's inventory was to be applicable by including under this printed paragraph typewritten statement, "all petroleum products, tires and other motor vehicle supplies, now owned or after-acquired," secured party's alteration of instrument by insertion of "x" in box prefacing paragraph showing coverage of debtor's inventory was authorized. First Nat'l Bank v. Hull, 189 Neb. 581, 204 N.W.2d 90 (1973).

Seller does not have authority to sign purchaser's name to altered contract under UCC § 3-407, even where purpose of alteration is to give purchaser benefit of lower interest rate and lower monthly payments. T.G. Blackwell Chevrolet Co. v. Eshee, 261 So. 2d 481 (Miss. 1972).

Where written contract for sale which provided authority for completion of note set term of note at 2 years and made no mention of periodic instalment payments, and president of payee bank added provisions for 7 instalment payments over approximately 16 months, president's completion of note in terms varying authorized time and manner of payment was unauthorized and constituted material alteration; and suit on note filed 10 months prior to maturity date "as authorized" was premature. Bank of New Effington v. Thompson, 502 P.2d 978 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Check was legally complete when certified even though there were spaces on check making alteration by forger possible; held, certifying bank was not liable to payee for raised amount of check. Wallach Sons v. Bankers Trust Co., 62 Misc. 2d 19 (1970).

Where the makers of a note, who were inexperienced in even ordinary business affairs, were induced by a salesman to enter into a home improvement contract supposedly with one business concern but without notice to, or consent of, the makers, and after the signing thereof, the name of the concern with whom makers intended to deal was clipped from one copy of the contract and the name of another concern stamped thereon, and makers innocently signed a property loan application in blank, the makers were entitled to the benefit of the rules governing incomplete instruments and alteration of instruments. Fidelity Trust Co. v. Gardiner, 191 Pa. Super. 17, 155 A.2d 405 (1959).

15. Writing as signed.

In suit on promissory note, payee's addition to note of acknowledgment of signature of maker and notarization thereof was not material alteration within meaning of UCC § 3-407(1) since it did not change contract of parties, materially affect form of document, time of payment, or sum payable; furthermore, there was no showing that payee acted fraudulently so as to discharge maker under UCC § 3-407(2); rather, addition was ineffectual attempt by payee to acquire security for debt. Thomas v. Osborn, 13 Wash. App. 371, 536 P.2d 8, 88 A.L.R.3d 898 (1975).

Where "at 6%" is added after the words "with interest" there is no material change to the instrument when that is the rate which is applied without such additional notation. Epstein v. Paskow & Epstein, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1066 (1968, NY Sup).

Insertion of word "at" in note before printed name of bank, where insertion did not add place of payment but merely repeated effect of words "at its banking house" already and otherwise contained in note, was not material alteration. Holliday v. Anderson, 428 S.W.2d 479 (Tex. Civ. App. 1968).

There is no alteration where the final payment due on a note is changed from $41,000.00 to $42,000.00 where the balance of the note showed that this was the correct amount and that the changed figure had been merely an arithmetical mistake. National State Bank v. Kleinberg, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 100 (1967, NY Sup).

This section is not applicable unless the alteration made by the holder of a note was fraudulent, and where the alterations consisted of striking out the amount of the note and inserting in pencil a lesser figure, which was the balance remaining after a payment was made and was the amount for which judgment was entered for the holder, and of a red line drawn across the face of the note to indicate that it had been examined by a bank examiner, they were immaterial and did not serve to discharge the makers. Bank of N.M. v. Rice, 78 N.M. 170, 429 P.2d 368 (1967).

Where by endorsement the makers of a promissory note confessed judgment in favor of the payee, and the note was subsequently altered to include confession of judgment in favor of an assignee, such an alteration was not material in that it did not in any way change the obligation of the makers to pay the note, nor did it adversely affect the assignee's rights as a holder in due course. Navitsky v. Gregas, 39 Pa. D. & C.2d 143 (1966).

Where a promissory note in the body thereof provided a due date, and in the upper left hand corner but not in the body of the note, had a box filled out "due 12/21/63" and this date had been marked through in ink and above the box was written in ink "Nov. 15, 1964", such alleged alteration is not material as it did not affect the contract in any manner. M.B. Dale, Inc. v. Dawson County Bank, 112 Ga. App. 560, 145 S.E.2d 619 (1965).

16. Discharge.

For a discharge to occur, there must be an alteration by the holder of the note, which is both fraudulent and material. New Britain Nat'l Bank v. Baugh, 31 A.D.2d 898 (1st Dep't 1969).

17. —Fraud requirement.

Where a note, as executed, contained a clause granting the maker an option for an extension on the instrument, and where the holder, on receiving such note, lined through the extension option, such change was a material change in the instrument under UCC § 3-407(1)(c). However, since UCC § 3-407(2) provides that the only material change that discharges any party to the instrument is a change that is also fraudulent, the question as to whether the holder's lining out the extension option was a fraudulent alteration was one of fact for the jury and precluded the granting of summary judgment in favor of the note's guarantor. Sewell v. Akins, 147 Ga. App. 454, 249 S.E.2d 274 (1978).

Contention of maker of note that change by holder of place of payment of instrument was material alteration that, by itself, discharged maker from liability was untenable, since UCC § 3-407(2)(a) provides that for alteration of instrument to discharge maker, alteration must be both material and fraudulent. Central State Bank v. Powar & Ferraioli Enters., Ltd., 90 Misc. 2d 457 (1977).

There is no "alteration" because there is no fraud when a pencil line is run through the amount of the note after part payment has been made and the then current balance is written in pencil or where a red line is drawn across the face of the note to indicate that the bank examiner had examined the note. Bank of N.M. v. Rice, 78 N.M. 170, 429 P.2d 368 (1967).

In the absence of a showing of fraud a material alteration does not void a promissory note. Van Norden v. Auto Credit Co., 109 Ga. App. 208, 135 S.E.2d 477 (1964).

18. —Ratification.

In action for recovery of mobile home covered by retail instalment contract, even assuming contract had been altered subsequent to its execution, payment by buyers subsequent to receipt of "altered" contract constituted ratification under UCC § 3-407. Morrisette v. Commercial Credit Corp., 345 So. 2d 298 (Ala. Civ. App. 1977).

19. Rights of holder in due course.

In action by cashing bank to recover from drawer and indorser of two checks drawn on insufficient funds, where defendant indorser stole, completed, and cashed at plaintiff bank (where indorser was customer) two checks which had been signed in blank by defendant drawer and delivered by drawer to her husband, and where plaintiff bank had no notice of any defenses against, or claims to, such checks by any person, plaintiff under UCC § 3-302 was holder in due course of such checks and could, under UCC § 3-407 and UCC § 3-115, enforce them as completed. Central State Bank v. Kilroy, 57 A.D.2d 940 (2d Dep't 1977).

Where at the time a note was negotiated to a bank it was overdue as originally drafted, the bank might still claim the status of a holder in due course and enforce the note if it came to the bank in such a condition that the alteration of the maturity date was not noticeable. Unadilla Nat'l Bank v. McQueer, 27 A.D.2d 778 (3d Dep't 1967).

A payee may be a holder in due course even though the note was incomplete as to amount when signed, and where the blanks are filled in and an otherwise incomplete instrument is completed, the loss is placed upon the party who left the instrument incomplete and permitted the holder to enforce it in its completed form. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

The fact that an instrument is incomplete when signed does not prevent a holder from being a holder in due course and such holder may enforce the instrument according to its completed terms. Waterbury Sav. Bank v. Jaroszewski, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 620, 238 A.2d 446 (1967).

A material alteration of a promissory note is no defense against a holder in due course seeking to enforce an incomplete instrument as completed, where the alleged alteration was the filling in of the blanks in the instruments after the makers had signed it. First Nat'l Bank v. Anderson, 7 Pa. D. & C.2d 661 (1956).

20. Liability of bank; risk of alteration.

Bank held not liable for payment of certified check, the amount of which had been altered subsequent to certification, except to the extent of the amount of such certified check at the time it was drawn.

Sam Goody, Inc. v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 57 Misc. 2d 193 (1968).

Holder of check who procures certification warrants to bank that check has not been materially altered, although bank runs risk of loss if check is certified after alteration and then passes to holder in due course, under Code § 3-417. Sam Goody, Inc. v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 57 Misc. 2d 193 (1968).

21. Practice and procedure.

Change of date of demand note executed by partnership, which had been indorsed by all eight partners as individuals on date of instrument's execution, from November 11, 1971 to March 27, 1973 at instance of bank which advanced funds represented by note did not constitute material alteration of instrument under UCC § 3-407(1)(c), even though only two of the eight indorsers were aware of and consented to such change of date, where suit on instrument was commenced within three years of date originally placed thereon and nonconsenting indorsers would therefore not have been able to interpose plea of limitations even if original date had not been changed (stating that court's opinion did not reach question whether such change of date would have been material if action had been commenced more than three years after date originally placed on instrument). Placido v. Citizens Bank & Trust Co., 38 Md. App. 33, 379 A.2d 773 (1977).

Granting of summary judgment in favor of creditor bank on promissory notes executed by principal of defendant guarantors was not error, as against defendants' contention that notes had been materially altered by bank within meaning of UCC § 3-407(1), where (1) evidence introduced by bank, including notes themselves, showed only that bank officials had made certain administrative notations on back of notes for bank's use only, (2) such notations did not change contract of any party to instruments in any respect, and (3) defendants in their turn failed to introduce any evidence which showed that factual dispute existed on issue of alteration. Johnson v. First Nat'l Bank, 143 Ga. App. 384, 238 S.E.2d 747 (1977).

Notwithstanding that promissory note was materially altered, promisor was not discharged under UCC § 3-407 where no issue was requested or submitted to jury as to who altered the note and where promisor failed to establish, in face of conflicting testimony, to jury's satisfaction that intent existed to defraud promisor. Lawler v. FDIC, 538 S.W.2d 245 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.r.e (Dec. 1, 1976).

UCC § 3-407 relating to alteration could not justify the instruction that "Defendants had a legal right to alter the original installment purchase contract executed by the Plaintiff to give the Plaintiff the benefit of a lower interest rate and of lower monthly payments, if such alteration was not made for a fraudulent purpose"; such instruction was erroneous. T.G. Blackwell Chevrolet Co. v. Eshee, 261 So. 2d 481 (Miss. 1972).

Alleged addition to signature on note of words "Fidelity Enterprises, Incorporated, D/B/A" was material alteration or change raising questions of fact with regard to fraudulent or non-fraudulent nature of alteration, precluding summary judgment for bank in action against guarantor on promissory note. Peppers v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 127 Ga. App. 16, 192 S.E.2d 409 (1972).

Where blank logging slips, similar to blank checks were readily available to employees and two pads of such slips were given to employee charged with forgery, there was sufficient evidence to support finding of employer's negligence "substantially contributing" to alleged forgery. Thompson Maple Prods., Inc. v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 211 Pa. Super. 42, 234 A.2d 32, 1967.

When a note is signed in blank it becomes a question of fact whether the instrument was filled in in accordance with the authorization of the makers. Golden Dawn Foods, Inc. v. Cekuta, 1 Ohio App. 2d 464, 205 N.E.2d 121 (1964).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

22. Decisions under Code 1942 § 165.

A plea of alteration after execution is an affirmative defense which defendant has the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence. Tate v. Rouse, 247 Miss. 545, 156 So. 2d 217 (1963).

Where a note is payable with interest, insertion by the payee of the legal rate after its execution, does not vitiate it. Tate v. Rouse, 247 Miss. 545, 156 So. 2d 217 (1963).

That the rate of interest was inserted on a different typewriter than was used in filling other blanks in a note, is insufficient to show that it was subsequent to its execution. Tate v. Rouse, 247 Miss. 545, 156 So. 2d 217 (1963).

Where the blank spaces in a conditional sales contract and a note sued on were filled in before the instruments were assigned to a purchaser for value in due course, the conditional purchaser could not defend the action upon the ground that the contract when signed by him specified monthly payments totaling less than the balance shown to be due on the contract as filled out. Garnett v. Associates Dist. Corp., 233 Miss. 849, 103 So. 2d 368 (1958).

Holder in due course of instrument which has been materially altered may recover according to its original tenor. Gibbons v. Longino & Reid, 153 Miss. 749, 121 So. 490 (1929).

Holder in due course of note, materially altered by blank date of payment being filled in, can recover on it according to original tenor. Wilson v. Stark, 146 Miss. 498, 112 So. 390 (1927).

23. Decisions under Code 1942 § 166.

Where defendant alleges and has the burden of proving an alteration vitiating an instrument, he must establish both the fact of alteration and its vitiating character. Tate v. Rouse, 247 Miss. 545, 156 So. 2d 217 (1963).

A maker's oral statement denied by the payee, that blank spaces for rate of interest were not filled in when he executed notes in suit, are not sufficient to make a jury issue. Tate v. Rouse, 247 Miss. 545, 156 So. 2d 217 (1963).

Where the trial court was warranted in finding that the name of the payee in two demand notes sued upon had been changed by the indorser at the instance of the indorsee and without the consent of one of the makers, this was a material alteration and voided the instrument insofar as such maker was concerned, but a different rule applied as to the indorser. Boxwell v. Champagne, 229 Miss. 355, 91 So. 2d 256 (1956).

The guarantor is released or discharged of liability if, without his consent, the contract of obligation by which the principal therefore is bound to the creditor or obligee has been materially altered in respect of its terms or the manner of execution thereof. Tower Underwriters v. Culley, 211 Miss. 788, 53 So. 2d 94 (1951).

Where there was a contract for operation of a loan business, under which the claimant guaranteed all loans made by the agency and notes were payable at a certain office, the removal of the broker with whom claimant had such contract, after discovery of shortages, to another location with all the records without claimant's consent, relieved the claimant from any liabilities of guarantor because the contract was materially altered by change of place of payment. Tower Underwriters v. Culley, 211 Miss. 788, 53 So. 2d 94 (1951).

§ 75-3-408. Drawee not liable on unaccepted draft.

A check or other draft does not of itself operate as an assignment of funds in the hands of the drawee available for its payment, and the drawee is not liable on the instrument until the drawee accepts it.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-409.

11. In general.

Under UCC § 3-409, check or draft does not operate as assignment of any funds; basic reason for rule is to permit unaccepting drawee to avoid disputes with other than drawer; statement on check that funds are payable at bank does not create obligation on part of drawee to pay check. Atlantic Cement Co. v. South Shore Bank, 730 F.2d 831 (1st Cir. Mass. 1984).

The provisions of subsection (1) of the instant section are in line with § 189 of the old Negotiable Instruments Act of 1901. Commonwealth v. Cohen, 203 Pa. Super. 34, 199 A.2d 139 (1964); cert. denied, 379 U.S. 902, 85 S. Ct. 191, 13 L. Ed. 2d 176 (1964), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 970, 85 S. Ct. 668, 13 L. Ed. 2d 562 (1965).

12. Check as promise of future payment.

Issuance of check to auto repairman did not operate as assignment of funds and did not extinguish mechanics lien; underlying obligation was resurrected upon dishonor of draft. Leavitt v. Charles R.

Hearn, Inc., 19 Ill. App. 3d 980, 312 N.E.2d 806 (1st Dist. 1974).

Where the parties have not, by agreement, made an assignment of funds by the issuance of a check, a garnishment served on the drawee bank before the check is presented for payment gives priority to the garnishment. State Bank v. Stallings, 19 Utah 2d 146, 427 P.2d 744 (1967).

A check can be a negotiable instrument without constituting immediate payment, and unless the parties agree otherwise, a check is not payment until presented and paid. Kensil v. Ocean City, 89 N.J. Super. 342, 215 A.2d 43 (App. Div. 1965).

13. Revocation; stop payment order.

Payee had no interest in cashier's check which had been typed and signed but which was cancelled when bank learned that drawer company was being placed in bankruptcy since, under UCC § 3-409, check itself did not operate as assignment of funds and payee, who never took possession of check, could not qualify as holder under UCC § 1-201(2). Rex Smith Propane, Inc. v. National Bank of Commerce, 372 F. Supp. 499 (N.D. Tex. 1974).

Receipt of check which was to be applied on note owed by corporation and indorsed by stockholder did not of itself operate as assignment of funds in hands of drawee bank and therefore was conditional payment only, which became nullity when payment was stopped, and did not relieve indorsee from liability on note, notwithstanding fact that bank had assured him that amount of check had been paid on note. Del State Bank v. Patton, 513 P.2d 868 (Okla. 1973).

A check does not of itself operate as an assignment of any part of the drawer's funds deposited with the bank upon which it is drawn, but is merely an order upon a bank to pay from the drawer's account, and it may be revoked at any time prior to certification, acceptance or payment. Lambeth v. Lewis, 114 Ga. App. 191, 150 S.E.2d 462 (1966).

14. —Applicability to bank money order.

A bank money order which does not require the signature of the issuer is subject to a stop-payment order. Krom v. Chemical Bank N.Y. Trust Co., 38 A.D.2d 871 (3d Dep't 1972).

Money orders purchased from bank which, when issued, had the amount written on them, but were blank as to date, payee and name and address of maker, and which had printed thereon the bank's name and address, were subject to stop-payment order. Krom v. Chemical Bank N.Y. Trust Co., 38 A.D.2d 871 (3d Dep't 1972).

A so-called "Personal Money Order-Register Check" (an instrument issued by a bank for the amount of the sum of money deposited with it by the check's purchaser, and showing the name of the bank as drawee but with the names of the drawer and payee left blank) creates the same debtor-creditor relationship between the bank and its customer which any ordinary deposit of funds would create; and the purchaser of the check who, under his contract with the bank, is the sole person who may draw on the fund deposited, and he has a clear right to stop payment prior to the check's acceptance by the bank. Garden Check Cashing Serv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 25 A.D.2d 137 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 941, 277 N.Y.S.2d 141, 223 N.E.2d 566 (1966).

15. Drawee's liability; acceptance.

UCC § 3-409(1) means that until a check drawn on a bank is accepted, the bank is not liable thereon. Willow City Farmers Elevator v. Vogel, Vogel, Brantner & Kelly, 268 N.W.2d 762 (N.D. 1978).

Under UCC § 3-409(1), drawee of check is not liable on instrument until he accepts it, and such acceptance is required by UCC § 3-410(1) to be written on the instrument (holding, where check presented to drawee bank was not accepted because of insufficient funds in drawer's account, that drawee bank was not liable to payee because drawee's employee had previously informed payee by telephone that drawer's account contained sufficient funds). Groos Nat'l Bank v. Shaw's of San Antonio, Inc., 555 S.W.2d 492 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Jan. 18, 1978).

Certification of check constitutes acceptance, and this acceptance is bank's signed engagement to pay check upon presentment when properly endorsed; and where certified check was made payable to order of joint payees, and only one payee endorsed check, refusal of bank to pay check was not breach of its obligation on instrument and bank's release of funds which had been held from drawer's account for payment of certified check created no new liability on part of bank. Clinger v. Clinger, 503 P.2d 363 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

Only drawer bank is liable on bank draft until accepted by drawee; although cashier's check is accepted upon issuance there is only one bank involved and therefore only one party bound, as compared with certified check on which both drawer and drawee are bound. Perry v. West, 110 N.H. 351, 266 A.2d 849 (1970).

Unlike a cashier's check or a traveller's check, both of which are signed by the issuer prior to their issuance, a so-called "Personal Money Order-Register Check" at no time bears the signature of the drawee, who enters into no contract relations with the holder unless and until the instrument is accepted; and a bank issuing such a check is under no obligation to accept or pay the same to a holder, innocent or otherwise, after receipt of a stop-payment order from the purchaser of the check. Garden Check Cashing Serv., Inc. v. First Nat'l City Bank, 25 A.D.2d 137 (1st Dep't 1966), aff'd, 18 N.Y.2d 941, 277 N.Y.S.2d 141, 223 N.E.2d 566 (1966).

16. Liability under other obligation.

The fact that a check is not an assignment and does not impose liability on the drawee until it is accepted, does not preclude the liability of the bank for failing to honor its obligation to disperse building funds held by it in escrow. Mid-Continent Cas. Co. v. Jenkins, 431 P.2d 349 (Okla. 1967).

17. Practice and procedure.

Complaint by beneficiary of letter of credit against issuer stated cause of action where it alleged that issuer had breached oral agreement to honor "envelope draft" as presented by beneficiary, which was defective for lack of proper signature of drawer, since UCC § 3-409(2) and Comment 3 to such section, and also under

UCC § 3-410(2) and Comment 3 thereto, issuer could be precluded from raising issue of conformity of draft to letter's terms on grounds of waiver or estoppel. North Valley Bank v. National Bank, 437 F. Supp. 70 (N.D. Ill. 1977).

Payee could not bring action to recover amount of check from drawee bank, where any claim with respect to setoff by drawee bank against balance in bankrupt drawer's checking account belonged to bankrupt's estate on behalf of all creditors, not just payee of check. Dube v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 39 A.D.2d 684 (1st Dep't 1972), aff'd, 33 N.Y.2d 739, 349 N.Y.S.2d 1001, 304 N.E.2d 569 (1973).

Since draft is not assignment under UCC § 3-409(1), check held by payee and drawn by bankrupt was subject to drawee bank's setoff rights. Dube v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 39 A.D.2d 684 (1st Dep't 1972), aff'd, 33 N.Y.2d 739, 349 N.Y.S.2d 1001, 304 N.E.2d 569 (1973).

Where drawee bank had not accepted check either voluntarily or involuntarily, it was entitled, without incurring liability to payee, to set off matured indebtedness against funds in drawer's account. Conn v. Bank of Clarendon Hills, 53 Ill. 2d 33, 289 N.E.2d 425 (1972).

The statute of limitations does not run from the time of delivery of the check but begins to run at the time the check is presented for cashing; or if not presented promptly, within a reasonable time after the delivery of the check, whichever occurs first. Commonwealth v. Cohen, 203 Pa. Super. 34, 199 A.2d 139 (1964), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 902, 85 S. Ct. 191, 13 L. Ed. 2d 176 (1964), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 970, 85 S. Ct. 668, 13 L. Ed. 2d 562 (1965).

The two-year statute of limitations applicable to a conspiracy prosecution in which the cashing of a check was an overt act did not begin to run from the time of the delivery of the check but began to run at the time the check was presented for cashing, and prosecution was not barred where an indictment charging the offense was returned within two years of the time the check was cashed. Commonwealth v. Cohen, 203 Pa. Super. 34, 199 A.2d 139 (1964), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 902, 85 S. Ct. 191, 13 L. Ed. 2d 176 (1964), cert. denied, 379 U.S. 970, 85 S. Ct. 668, 13 L. Ed. 2d 562 (1965).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

18. Decisions Under Code 1942 § 168.

Drafts do not, of themselves, operate as an assignment of funds of a drawee in the hands of the bank and as result the bank therefore could not pay them until they were accepted by the drawee even though the bank had prepared a check for delivery to the forwarding bank, if there should be acceptance. Thack v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 206 F.2d 180, 39 A.L.R.2d 1290 (5th Cir. 1953).

19. Decisions under Code 1942 § 230.

Check, returned to payee bank by drawee bank's correspondent bank after receiving notice of drawee bank's liquidation, held not paid when presented at clearing house, so that drawer could not recover amount thereof from correspondent bank. Campbell v. Love, 168 Miss. 75, 150 So. 780 (1933).

There is no assignment pro tanto, where check is not drawn on particular fund or does not show on face it is assignment of particular fund. Federal Land Bank v. Collins, 156 Miss. 893, 127 So. 570, 69 A.L.R. 1068 (1930).

Check not assignment of maker's funds in bank. Wileman v. King, 120 Miss. 392, 82 So. 265, 5 A.L.R. 584 (1919).

§ 75-3-409. Acceptance of draft; certified check.

(a) "Acceptance" means the drawee's signed agreement to pay a draft as presented. It must be written on the draft and may consist of the drawee's signature alone. Acceptance may be made at any time and becomes effective when notification pursuant to instructions is given or the accepted draft is delivered for the purpose of giving rights on the acceptance to any person.

(b) A draft may be accepted although it has not been signed by the drawer, is otherwise incomplete, is overdue, or has been dishonored.

(c) If a draft is payable at a fixed period after sight and the acceptor fails to date the acceptance, the holder may complete the acceptance by supplying a date in good faith.

(d) "Certified check" means a check accepted by the bank on which it is drawn. Acceptance may be made as stated in subsection (a) or by a writing on the check which indicates that the check is certified. The drawee of a check has no obligation to certify the check, and refusal to certify is not dishonor of the check.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC §§ 75-3-410, 75-3-411.

11. In general; necessity that acceptance be written.

Under UCC § 3-409(1), drawee of check is not liable on instrument until he accepts it, and such acceptance is required by UCC § 3-410(1) to be written on the instrument (holding, where check presented to drawee bank was not accepted because of insufficient funds in drawer's account, that drawee bank was not liable to payee because drawee's employee had previously informed payee by telephone that drawer's account contained sufficient funds). Groos Nat'l Bank v. Shaw's of San Antonio, Inc., 555 S.W.2d 492 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Jan. 18, 1978).

In action by plaintiff to recover against 2 collecting banks for negligence and breach of warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207, where plaintiff issued 2 drafts payable "through" second collecting bank to order of joint payees, and where one payee deposited drafts in his account with first collecting bank without endorsement of payee entitled to proceeds, first collecting bank forwarded drafts to second collecting bank and second collecting bank presented drafts to plaintiff for acceptance, plaintiff accepted drafts and authorized payment against its account with second collecting bank, and where plaintiff, after being notified that second payee had not received proceeds, issued substitute drafts, under UCC § 3-413, plaintiff did not admit genuineness or presence of payees' endorsements by its acceptance of drafts. Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Davis, 126 N.J. Super. 379, 314 A.2d 615 (L. Div. 1974).

Requirements for acceptance as set forth in UCC § 3-410 are fulfilled by affixing of signature by agent of issuing bank. National Newark & Essex Bank v. Giordano, 111 N.J. Super. 347, 268 A.2d 327 (L. Div. 1970).

The acceptance of a check must be in writing, and purported acceptance by means of a telephone conversation is invalid. Georgia Bank & Trust Co. v. Hadarits, 111 Ga. App. 195, 141 S.E.2d 172 (1965), rev'd on other grounds, 221 Ga. 125, 143 S.E.2d 627 (1965), conformed to, 112 Ga. App. 143, 144 S.E.2d 118 (1965).

12. Certification as acceptance.

Where (1) buyer tendered check to seller for less than amount due and attached statement to check which (a) showed reason for deduction from amount owed, and (b) stated that check constituted "payment in full," (2) seller took check, but told buyer that he was not taking it as payment in full, and (3) seller subsequently had check certified, court held that seller had accepted check in full payment of buyer's debt, inasmuch as (1) under UCC § 3-411(1), certification of check constituted acceptance thereof, and (2) such certification is equivalent of collecting or cashing check, in that check's amount is thus placed under creditor's exclusive control and debtor is completely deprived of his money with no right to stop payment on check. Sherwin-Williams Co. v. Sarrett, 419 So. 2d 1332, 42 A.L.R.4th 89 (Miss. 1982).

A creditor's certification of a debtor's checks constituted acceptance thereof within the meaning of § 75-3-411(1) and operated as an accord and satisfaction of the debt, where the creditor certified such checks with full knowledge of statements on the checks listing deductions and stating that the amounts tendered constituted payment in full of the amounts due. Sherwin-Williams Co. v. Sarrett, 419 So. 2d 1332, 42 A.L.R.4th 89 (Miss. 1982).

Under UCC § 3-411(1), certification of check is acceptance by drawee but § 3-411(1) did not apply where payee of check procured its certification. Post Rd. Realty, Inc. v. Zee-Bar, Inc., 117 N.H. 136, 370 A.2d 282 (1977).

Where lessor received check from lessee which stated, on reverse side, that acceptance and endorsement of check constituted full and final settlement of any obligation by lessee to lessor under lease agreement, and where lessor had check certified by issuing bank, act of having check certified constituted acceptance of payment under terms specified on check and lessee was released from further obligation to lessor notwithstanding lessor did not endorse check. Kersh v. Manis Whsle. Co., 135 Ga. App. 943, 219 S.E.2d 604 (1975).

Argument that since certification constituted acceptance under § 3-411, drawer was discharged from any further liability with respect to payment of underlying obligation, and trial court therefore erred in awarding interest on amount of check was without merit where, because of restriction on check that indorsement would amount to acknowledgment that check was in full payment of all claims, payee could not cash check but could only obtain certification. August Bohl Contracting Co. v. Depot Constr. Corp., 42 A.D.2d 812 (3d Dep't 1973).

Certification of check constitutes acceptance, and this acceptance is bank's signed engagement to pay check upon presentment when properly endorsed; and where certified check was made payable to order of joint payees, and only one payee endorsed check, refusal of bank to pay check was not breach of its obligation on instrument and bank's release of funds which had been held from drawer's account for payment of certified check created no new liability on part of bank. Clinger v. Clinger, 503 P.2d 363 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

13. Issuance of instrument as acceptance.

A cashier's check is a draft drawn by a bank, and under UCC § 3-410(1), it is deemed to have been accepted in advance by the mere act of issuance. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

A note, unlike a draft, is not covered by UCC § 3-410(1) and cannot be deemed to have been accepted by the mere act of issuance. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

A bank money order is essentially the same as a cashier's check. It is a bill of exchange drawn by a bank on itself and accepted in advance by the act of issuance, and under UCC § 3-410 and § 4-303, it is not subject to countermand by either its purchaser or the issuing bank. When purchased for adequate consideration, a bank money order, unlike an ordinary check, stands on its own foundation as an independent, unconditional, and primary obligation of the bank and is equivalent to a negotiable promissory note of the bank. Thompson Poultry, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 199 Neb. 8, 255 N.W.2d 856 (1977).

Under UCC §§ 3-413(1); 3-410(1); 4-303(1)(a), cashier's check is accepted by mere act of issuance when it becomes primary obligation of bank, rather than purchaser, to pay it from its own assets upon demand, and purchaser had no authority to countermand cashier's check because of fraud allegedly practiced on purchaser by payee. State ex rel. Chan Siew Lai v. Powell, 536 S.W.2d 14 (Mo. 1976).

14. —Effect on subsequent attempts to stop payment.

The defendant bank, which issued an official, or cashier's, check to the plaintiff in exchange for the personal check of its customer, cannot stop payment on the official check because of its customer's stop order on the personal check; the bank cannot assert the defense of failure of consideration since a cashier's check is deemed accepted in advance by the mere act of issuance. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

Where (1) customer, which had had its tractor-trailer repaired, gave repairman check for repairs, (2) repairman took check to defendant bank, cashed it, used proceeds to purchase official bank check payable to repairman's business firm, and then released tractor-trailer to customer, (3) customer, after dispute with repairman about quality of repairs, attempted to place stop-order on customer's check, and (4) defendant bank, which was unable to implement such stop-order, refused to honor bank check that it had issued to repairman, asserting failure of consideration therefor in repairman's action on such check, court held (1) that bank check in issue was a cashier's check that defendant was obligated to pay on demand, (2) that such check was deemed under UCC § 3-410(1) to have been accepted in advance by mere act of its issuance, and (3) that defendant had no right under UCC § 4-303(1)(a) to terminate its duty to pay it. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

Since under Code § 3-410 cashier's check is accepted when issued, Code § 4-303 has effect of preventing bank from stopping payment on cashier's check once it has been issued. Wertz v. Richardson

Heights Bank & Trust, 495 S.W.2d 572 (Tex. 1973).

Bank held not liable for payment of certified check, the amount of which had been altered subsequent to certification, except to the extent of the amount of such certified check at the time it was drawn. Sam Goody, Inc. v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 57 Misc. 2d 193 (1968).

15. Other matters.

Analogous use of concepts such as finality of checks once "accepted" under UCC §§ 3-410, 4-303 would support irrevocability of electronic funds transfer at time of transfer. Delbrueck & Co. v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 609 F.2d 1047 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Complaint by beneficiary of letter of credit against issuer stated cause of action where it alleged that issuer had breached oral agreement to honor "envelope draft" as presented by beneficiary, which was defective for lack of proper signature of drawer, since UCC § 3-409(2) and Comment 3 to such section, and also under UCC § 3-410(2) and Comment 3 thereto, issuer could be precluded from raising issue of conformity of draft to letter's terms on grounds of waiver or estoppel. North Valley Bank v. National Bank, 437 F. Supp. 70 (N.D. Ill. 1977).

When bank certified check for holder it created novation in which drawer was released and bank was substituted as primary debtor. Jefferies & Co. v. Arkus-Duntov, 357 F. Supp. 1206 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

A drawer cannot stop payment on a check after it had been certified, regardless of who had obtained the certification. Maintenance Serv., Inc. v. Royal Nat'l Bank, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 766 (1967, NY Sup).

Prior to its acceptance by the drawee bank a check in the possession of the payee is subject to garnishment under Wisconsin law. Skalecki v. Frederick, 31 Wis. 2d 496, 143 N.W.2d 520 (1966).

The words "upon acceptance" in a draft or bill of exchange do not render the instrument conditional, since presentment for acceptance may be required for any check or bill of exchange. Merson v. Sun Ins. Co., 44 Misc. 2d 131 (1964).

discharge of disputed claim upon qualified acceptance of check tendered as payment in full. 37 A.L.R.4th 358.

§ 75-3-410. Acceptance varying draft.

(a) If the terms of a drawee's acceptance vary from the terms of the draft as presented, the holder may refuse the acceptance and treat the draft as dishonored. In that case, the drawee may cancel the acceptance.

(b) The terms of a draft are not varied by an acceptance to pay at a particular bank or place in the United States, unless the acceptance states that the draft is to be paid only at that bank or place.

(c) If the holder assents to an acceptance varying the terms of a draft, the obligation of each drawer and indorser that does not expressly assent to the acceptance is discharged.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-412.

11. In general.

In action by plaintiff to recover against 2 collecting banks for negligence and breach of warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207, where plaintiff issued 2 drafts payable "through" second collecting bank to order of joint payees, and where one payee deposited drafts in his account with first collecting bank without endorsement of payee entitled to proceeds, first collecting bank forwarded drafts to second collecting bank and second collecting bank presented drafts to plaintiff for acceptance, plaintiff accepted drafts and authorized payment against its account with second collecting bank, and where plaintiff, after being notified that second payee had not received proceeds, issued substitute drafts: (1) Plaintiff's claim based on breach of warranty of good title was not barred by contributory negligence; (2) warranty of good title was imposed by law even in absence of endorsement, and collecting banks were subject to it; (3) negotiable instrument made payable to payees jointly may be assigned, but not negotiated, without endorsement of all payees and, thus, depositor, collecting banks and plaintiff were assignees, not holders of drafts, who held them subject to rights and claims of real owners; by obtaining payment from plaintiff, second collecting bank became liable to plaintiff on warranty of good title, and when first collecting bank obtained payment from second collecting bank, and depositor received payment from first collecting bank, first collecting bank became liable to second collecting bank and depositor became liable to first collecting bank on similar warranties; (4) under UCC § 3-413, plaintiff did not admit genuineness or presence of payees' endorsements by its acceptance of drafts; (5) under UCC § 4-406, plaintiff had duty to examine drafts for forgeries of its signatures as drawer and any attempts to alter, such as raising amount of draft, but it did not breach any duty it had to check for endorsements and, hence, had no duty to give second collecting bank notice of missing endorsement; (6) second collecting bank was not relieved of liability under UCC § 4-203 on grounds that it acted in accordance with instructions of plaintiff as its transferor since first collecting bank was its transferor and plaintiff its transferee; (7) first collecting bank was not relieved of liability on ground that second collecting bank, as holder of drafts, assented to acceptance by plaintiff which varied terms of drafts and thus discharged first collecting bank under UCC § 3-412(3) since second collecting bank was not "holder" of drafts within meaning of that section; (8) however, since plaintiff waited for 10 weeks after being notified of defendants' breach of warranty and since during interim depositor closed his account with first collecting bank, thus depriving first collecting bank of opportunity to offset loss against depositor's account, under UCC § 4-207(4) plaintiff delayed unreasonably in giving notice and first collecting bank was entitled to offset loss it suffered thereby against plaintiff's claim. Phoenix Assurance Co. v. Davis, 126 N.J. Super. 379, 314 A.2d 615 (L. Div. 1974).

In action by plaintiff to recover against 2 collecting banks for negligence and breach of warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207, where plaintiff issued 2 drafts payable "through" second collecting bank to order of joint payees, and where one payee deposited drafts in his account with first collecting bank without endorsement of payee entitled to proceeds, first collecting bank forwarded drafts to second collecting bank and second collecting bank presented drafts to plaintiff for acceptance, plaintiff accepted drafts and authorized payment against its account with second collecting bank, and where plaintiff, after being notified that second payee had not received proceeds, issued substitute drafts, first collecting bank was not relieved of liability on ground that second collecting bank, as holder of drafts, assented to acceptance by plaintiff which varied terms of drafts and thus discharged first collecting bank under UCC § 3-412(3) since second collecting bank was not "holder" of drafts within meaning of that section. *Phoenix Assurance Co. v. § 75-3-411. Refusal to pay cashier's checks, teller's checks, and certified checks.

(a) In this section, "obligated bank" means the acceptor of a certified check or the issuer of a cashier's check or teller's check bought from the issuer.

(b) If the obligated bank wrongfully (i) refuses to pay a cashier's check or certified check, (ii) stops payment of a teller's check, or (iii) refuses to pay a dishonored teller's check, the person asserting the right to enforce the check is entitled to compensation for expenses and loss of interest resulting from the nonpayment and may recover consequential damages if the obligated bank refuses to pay after receiving notice of particular circumstances giving rise to the damages.

(c) Expenses or consequential damages under subsection (b) are not recoverable if the refusal of the obligated bank to pay occurs because (i) the bank suspends payments, (ii) the obligated bank asserts a claim or defense of the bank that it has reasonable grounds to believe is available against the person entitled to enforce the instrument, (iii) the obligated bank has a reasonable doubt whether the person demanding payment is the person entitled to enforce the instrument, or (iv) payment is prohibited by law.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC §§ 75-3-410, 75-3-411.

11. In general; necessity that acceptance be written.

Under UCC § 3-409(1), drawee of check is not liable on instrument until he accepts it, and such acceptance is required by UCC § 3-410(1) to be written on the instrument (holding, where check presented to drawee bank was not accepted because of insufficient funds in drawer's account, that drawee bank was not liable to payee because drawee's employee had previously informed payee by telephone that drawer's account contained sufficient funds). Groos Nat'l Bank v. Shaw's of San Antonio, Inc., 555 S.W.2d 492 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Jan. 18, 1978).

Requirements for acceptance as set forth in UCC § 3-410 are fulfilled by affixing of signature by agent of issuing bank. National Newark & Essex Bank v. Giordano, 111 N.J. Super. 347, 268 A.2d 327 (L. Div. 1970).

The acceptance of a check must be in writing, and purported acceptance by means of a telephone conversation is invalid. Georgia Bank & Trust Co. v. Hadarits, 111 Ga. App. 195, 141 S.E.2d 172 (1965), rev'd on other grounds, 221 Ga. 125, 143 S.E.2d 627 (1965), conformed to, 112 Ga. App. 143, 144 S.E.2d 118 (1965).

12. Certification as acceptance.

Under UCC § 3-411(1), certification of check is acceptance by drawee but § 3-411(1) did not apply where payee of check procured its certification. Post Rd. Realty, Inc. v. Zee-Bar, Inc., 117 N.H. 136, 370 A.2d 282 (1977).

Where lessor received check from lessee which stated, on reverse side, that acceptance and endorsement of check constituted full and final settlement of any obligation by lessee to lessor under lease agreement, and where lessor had check certified by issuing bank, act of having check certified constituted acceptance of payment under terms specified on check and lessee was released from further obligation to lessor notwithstanding lessor did not endorse check. Kersh v. Manis Whsle. Co., 135 Ga. App. 943, 219 S.E.2d 604 (1975).

Argument that since certification constituted acceptance under § 3-411, drawer was discharged from any further liability with respect to payment of underlying obligation, and trial court therefore erred in awarding interest on amount of check was without merit where, because of restriction on check that indorsement would amount to acknowledgment that check was in full payment of all claims, payee could not cash check but could only obtain certification. August Bohl Contracting Co. v. Depot Constr. Corp., 42 A.D.2d 812 (3d Dep't 1973).

Certification of check constitutes acceptance, and this acceptance is bank's signed engagement to pay check upon presentment when properly endorsed; and where certified check was made payable to order of joint payees, and only one payee endorsed check, refusal of bank to pay check was not breach of its obligation on instrument and bank's release of funds which had been held from drawer's account for payment of certified check created no new liability on part of bank. Clinger v. Clinger, 503 P.2d 363 (Colo. Ct. App. 1972).

13. Issuance of instrument as acceptance.

A cashier's check is a draft drawn by a bank, and under UCC § 3-410(1), it is deemed to have been accepted in advance by the mere act of issuance. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

A note, unlike a draft, is not covered by UCC § 3-410(1) and cannot be deemed to have been accepted by the mere act of issuance. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

A bank money order is essentially the same as a cashier's check. It is a bill of exchange drawn by a bank on itself and accepted in advance by the act of issuance, and under UCC § 3-410 and § 4-303, it is not subject to countermand by either its purchaser or the issuing bank. When purchased for adequate consideration, a bank money order, unlike an ordinary check, stands on its own foundation as an independent, unconditional, and primary obligation of the bank and is equivalent to a negotiable promissory note of the bank. Thompson Poultry, Inc. v. First Nat'l Bank, 199 Neb. 8, 255 N.W.2d 856 (1977).

Under UCC §§ 3-413(1); 3-410(1); 4-303(1)(a), cashier's check is accepted by mere act of issuance when it becomes primary obligation of bank, rather than purchaser, to pay it from its own assets upon demand, and purchaser had no authority to countermand cashier's check because of fraud allegedly practiced on purchaser by payee. State ex rel. Chan Siew Lai v. Powell, 536 S.W.2d 14 (Mo. 1976).

14. —Effect on subsequent attempts to stop payment.

The defendant bank, which issued an official, or cashier's, check to the plaintiff in exchange for the personal check of its customer, cannot stop payment on the official check because of its customer's stop order on the personal check; the bank cannot assert the defense of failure of consideration since a cashier's check is deemed accepted in advance by the mere act of issuance. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

Where (1) customer, which had had its tractor-trailer repaired, gave repairman check for repairs, (2) repairman took check to defendant bank, cashed it, used proceeds to purchase official bank check payable to repairman's business firm, and then released tractor-trailer to customer, (3) customer, after dispute with repairman about quality of repairs, attempted to place stop-order on customer's check, and (4) defendant bank, which was unable to implement such stop-order, refused to honor bank check that it had issued to repairman, asserting failure of consideration therefor in repairman's action on such check, court held (1) that bank check in issue was a cashier's check that defendant was obligated to pay on demand, (2) that such check was deemed under UCC § 3-410(1) to have been accepted in advance by mere act of its issuance, and (3) that defendant had no right under UCC § 4-303(1)(a) to terminate its duty to pay it. Taboada v. Bank of Babylon, 95 Misc. 2d 1000 (1978).

Since under Code § 3-410 cashier's check is accepted when issued, Code § 4-303 has effect of preventing bank from stopping payment on cashier's check once it has been issued. Wertz v. Richardson Heights Bank & Trust, 495 S.W.2d 572 (Tex. 1973).

Bank held not liable for payment of certified check, the amount of which had been altered subsequent to certification, except to the extent of the amount of such certified check at the time it was drawn. Sam Goody, Inc. v. Franklin Nat'l Bank, 57 Misc. 2d 193 (1968).

15. Other matters.

Analogous use of concepts such as finality of checks once "accepted" under UCC §§ 3-410, 4-303 would support irrevocability of electronic funds transfer at time of transfer. Delbrueck & Co. v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 609 F.2d 1047 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1979).

Complaint by beneficiary of letter of credit against issuer stated cause of action where it alleged that issuer had breached oral agreement to honor "envelope draft" as presented by beneficiary, which was defective for lack of proper signature of drawer, since UCC § 3-409(2) and Comment 3 to such section, and also under UCC § 3-410(2) and Comment 3 thereto, issuer could be precluded from raising issue of conformity of draft to letter's terms on grounds of waiver or estoppel. North Valley Bank v. National Bank, 437 F. Supp. 70 (N.D. Ill. 1977).

When bank certified check for holder it created novation in which drawer was released and bank was substituted as primary debtor. Jefferies & Co. v. Arkus-Duntov, 357 F. Supp. 1206 (S.D.N.Y. 1973).

A drawer cannot stop payment on a check after it had been certified, regardless of who had obtained the certification. Maintenance Serv., Inc. v. Royal Nat'l Bank, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 766 (1967, NY Sup).

Prior to its acceptance by the drawee bank a check in the possession of the payee is subject to garnishment under Wisconsin law. Skalecki v. Frederick, 31 Wis. 2d 496, 143 N.W.2d 520 (1966).

The words "upon acceptance" in a draft or bill of exchange do not render the instrument conditional, since presentment for acceptance may be required for any check or bill of exchange. Merson v. Sun Ins. Co., 44 Misc. 2d 131 (1964).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

Bank's payment of check on unauthorized indorsement and charging it to drawer does not constitute acceptance. Federal Land Bank v. Collins, 156 Miss. 893, 127 So. 570, 69 A.L.R. 1068 (1930).

Payee could not sue drawee paying check on unauthorized indorsement without notice of defect. Federal Land Bank v. Collins, 156 Miss. 893, 127 So. 570, 69 A.L.R. 1068 (1930).

§ 75-3-412. Obligation of issuer of note or cashier's check.

The issuer of a note or cashier's check or other draft drawn on the drawer is obliged to pay the instrument (i) according to its terms at the time it was issued or, if not issued, at the time it first came into possession of a holder, or (ii) if the issuer signed an incomplete instrument, according to its terms when completed, to the extent stated in Sections 75-3-115 and 75-3-407. The obligation is owed to a person entitled to enforce the instrument or to an indorser who paid the instrument under Section 75-3-415.

Maker of note is obligated to pay same and agreement by grantee of mortgaged premises to assume and pay mortgage debt does not release grantor-mortgagor of mortgaged premises from liability as maker and maker's status as principal on note is not affected. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

Under UCC § 3-413(1), a promissory note is an unconditional contract of the maker to pay the holder according to the tenor of the instrument. Since the note is an unconditional promise, the contract is complete as written, and parole evidence may not be used to impose conditions that are not apparent on the face of the instrument. For example, an oral agreement between the parties, made contemporaneously with the execution of the note or prior thereto, which relates to a condition not expressed in the note itself, is incompetent to change the contract as represented on the face of the note (where guarantor of note alleged that payee had not obtained another person's signature to note and also had not obtained title to certain automobiles which were to be security for defendant's guaranty). Whiteside v. Douglas County Bank, 145 Ga. App. 775, 245 S.E.2d 2 (1978).

Under UCC §§ 3-413(1); 3-410(1); 4-303(1)(a), cashier's check is accepted by mere act of issuance when it becomes primary obligation of bank, rather than purchaser, to pay it from its own assets upon demand, and purchaser had no authority to countermand cashier's check because of fraud allegedly practiced on purchaser by payee. *State ex rel. Where automobile dealer owed insurance agent $10,000 and gave check to agent for $5,000 in partial satisfaction of debt, transaction did not alter fact that dealer was still indebted to agent for $10,000; under UCC § 3-413(1), it simply changed form of part of debt and check was evidence that maker of check was indebted to payee in amount of $5,000. Chrysler Credit Corp. v. Malone, 502 S.W.2d 910 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

§ 75-3-413. Obligation of acceptor.

(a) The acceptor of a draft is obliged to pay the draft (i) according to its terms at the time it was accepted, even though the acceptance states that the draft is payable "as originally drawn" or equivalent terms, (ii) if the acceptance varies the terms of the draft, according to the terms of the draft as varied, or (iii) if the acceptance is of a draft that is an incomplete instrument, according to its terms when completed, to the extent stated in Sections 75-3-115 and 75-3-407. The obligation is owed to a person entitled to enforce the draft or to the drawer or an indorser who paid the draft under Section 75-3-414 or 75-3-415.

(b) If the certification of a check or other acceptance of a draft states the amount certified or accepted, the obligation of the acceptor is that amount. If (i) the certification or acceptance does not state an amount, (ii) the amount of the instrument is subsequently raised, and (iii) the instrument is then negotiated to a holder in due course, the obligation of the acceptor is the amount of the instrument at the time it was taken by the holder in due course.

Certification of check constitutes acceptance, and this acceptance is bank's signed engagement to pay check upon presentment when properly endorsed; and where certified check was made payable to order of joint payees, and only one payee endorsed check, refusal of bank to pay check was not breach of its obligation on instrument and bank's release of funds which had been held from drawer's account for payment of certified check created no new liability on part of bank. *Clinger v. § 75-3-414. Obligation of drawer.

(a) This section does not apply to cashier's checks or other drafts drawn on the drawer.

(b) If an unaccepted draft is dishonored, the drawer is obliged to pay the draft (i) according to its terms at the time it was issued or, if not issued, at the time it first came into possession of a holder, or (ii) if the drawer signed an incomplete instrument, according to its terms when completed, to the extent stated in Sections 75-3-115 and 75-3-407. The obligation is owed to a person entitled to enforce the draft or to an indorser who paid the draft under Section 75-3-415.

(c) If a draft is accepted by a bank, the drawer is discharged, regardless of when or by whom acceptance was obtained.

(d) If a draft is accepted and the acceptor is not a bank, the obligation of the drawer to pay the draft if the draft is dishonored by the acceptor is the same as the obligation of an indorser under Section 75-3-415(a) and (c).

(e) If a draft states that it is drawn "without recourse" or otherwise disclaims liability of the drawer to pay the draft, the drawer is not liable under subsection (b) to pay the draft if the draft is not a check. A disclaimer of the liability stated in subsection (b) is not effective if the draft is a check.

(f) If (i) a check is not presented for payment or given to a depository bank for collection within thirty (30) days after its date, (ii) the drawee suspends payments after expiration of the 30-day period without paying the check, and (iii) because of the suspension of payments, the drawer is deprived of funds maintained with the drawee to cover payment of the check, the drawer to the extent deprived of funds may discharge its obligation to pay the check by assigning to the person entitled to enforce the check the rights of the drawer against the drawee with respect to the funds.

11. In general.

An award of summary judgment in favor of plaintiff is affirmed where defendant insurer delivered to its insured a draft drawn on itself and payable through its bank in an attempt to honor its apparent obligation under an automobile theft policy, which draft was payable also to plaintiff due to plaintiff's security interest in the insured vehicle, and plaintiff deposited the draft in its bank account after the insured indorsed the check over to plaintiff thereby extinguishing plaintiff's security interest in the vehicle, following which defendant stopped payment on the draft upon learning that its insured's claim was fraudulent, at which time plaintiff's account was debited with the amount of the dishonored draft and plaintiff demanded of the defendant payment of the draft. Since the check was drawn by the drawer on itself as drawee, payable through its bank, the bank was not authorized to pay the draft, but was merely designated as a collecting bank to present the draft to the drawer-drawee for payment (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-120), and because the draft was not drawn without recourse, and there was no drawee other than defendant itself who accepted responsibility for it, defendant remained liable thereon (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-413, subd [2]); although the draft was principally issued to the insured, plaintiff's name was added as payee only to protect its duly filed security interest in the insured vehicle, and upon issuance of the draft defendant acknowledged its insured's claim that the vehicle had been stolen, thus entitling plaintiff to rely upon that representation and to accept the draft as a holder in due course in payment and release of its lien on the vehicle, constituting the giving of value for the draft (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-302, subd [1]; § 3-303, subds [b], [c]); after defendant stopped payment on the draft it remained liable on it to plaintiff as a holder in due course. GMAC v. General Accident Fire & Life Assurance Corp., 67 A.D.2d 316 (4th Dep't 1979).

In action under UCC § 3-413(2) against drawer of dishonored check, where (1) drawer wrote check on his account at drawee bank, payable to contractor for building a house, (2) payee deposited check in his account at plaintiff depository bank, (3) plaintiff cashed check, covered overdrafts on payee's account, credited main part of check's proceeds to such account, and paid payee remainder in cash, (4) after plaintiff had cashed check, drawer filed stop-payment order on it, resulting in its dishonor, and (5) plaintiff, despite its normal practice of withholding credit on a check until five days after its deposit, waived such waiting period as to check in suit because it believed drawer to be responsible person and because it had also obtained verification from drawee bank that check was good at that time, court held (1) that plaintiff was holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(b) and (c), since at time it cashed check, it had no notice of any defenses thereto and also no reason to believe that drawer would not honor it, (2) that in such circumstances, plaintiff's extension of immediate credit on the check did not manifest bad faith, since the Uniform Commercial Code, although not requiring a depository bank to give immediate credit on a check, encourages such practice by granting the bank rights against drawer of check on which immediate credit is extended, and (3) that since plaintiff was holder in due course, it therefore, under UCC § 3-305(2), took check in suit free from all but a limited number of defenses to it. Frantz v. First Nat'l Bank, 584 P.2d 1125 (Alaska 1978).

Lack of acceptance by drawee bank was not defense to action by payee against drawer to recover on dishonored draft, since UCC § 3-507 gave holder immediate right of recourse against drawer upon drawee's refusal to accept draft and since drawer engaged under UCC § 3-413 to pay draft upon dishonor. Baum v. Cotton States Mut. Ins. Co., 141 Ga. App. 636, 234 S.E.2d 178 (1977).

Notwithstanding checks clearly named corporation represented, were drawn on corporate account, and each check was stamped with corporation's "check protector," corporate officer who signed checks was personally liable under UCC §§ 3-403 and 3-413 to payee upon checks' dishonor where, inter alia, checks did not reveal capacity in which officer signed checks and payee's testimony indicated that he was not aware of signer's representative capacity when he received checks in payment for his work as subcontractor. Griffin v. Ellinger, 538 S.W.2d 97, 97 A.L.R.3d 791 (Tex. 1976).

Where depository bank, as holder of check which defendant drew in favor of bank's depositor and then stopped payment thereon, brought suit on drawer's contract under UCC § 3-413(2), "defenses" which drawer was entitled to assert under UCC § 3-306(b) included only those defenses connected with instrument itself, and did not include setoff based on separate and distinct transactions between drawer and original payee. Bank of Wyandotte v. Woodrow, 394 F. Supp. 550 (W.D. Mo. 1975).

Payees of drafts issued by title company were holders in due course of drafts and were entitled to enforce them against title company, notwithstanding drafts were issued through escrow to payees as creditors of person who funded escrow with forged certified check, where there was no evidence to indicate that payees were not bona fide creditors or that they ought to have been suspicious of title company draft; nor were payees subject to personal defenses under UCC § 3-305(2) on grounds that payees dealt with title company since payees did not participate in immediate transaction by which title company gave out its draft, that is, exchange of forged cashier's check for draft. Chicago Title & Trust Co. v. Walsh, 34 Ill. App. 3d 458, 340 N.E.2d 106 (1st Dist. 1975).

As holder in due course of check upon which payment was later stopped, bank had right to recover from drawer amount withdrawn from account opened by deposit of check. People v. Lombardi, 13 Ill. App. 3d 754, 301 N.E.2d 70 (1st Dist. 1973).

The drawee is entitled to accept the date of the check as true where there is nothing to indicate the contrary since the date on an instrument is "presumed to be correct." Newman v. Manufacturers Nat'l Bank, 7 Mich. App. 580, 152 N.W.2d 564 (1967).

A bank accepting a check from the payee for deposit, crediting the amount thereof to the payee's account, and permitting him to withdraw the full amount thereof prior to notice of dishonor, is a holder of the check, taking for value, and entitled to recover from the drawer thereon. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

§ 75-3-415. Obligation of indorser.

(a) Subject to subsections (b), (c), and (d) and to Section 75-3-419(d), if an instrument is dishonored, an indorser is obliged to pay the amount due on the instrument (i) according to the terms of the instrument at the time it was indorsed, or (ii) if the indorser indorsed an incomplete instrument, according to its terms when completed, to the extent stated in Sections 75-3-115 and 75-3-407. The obligation of the indorser is owed to a person entitled to enforce the instrument or to a subsequent indorser who paid the instrument under this section.

(b) If an indorsement states that it is made "without recourse" or otherwise disclaims liability of the indorser, the indorser is not liable under subsection (a) to pay the instrument.

(c) If notice of dishonor of an instrument is required by Section 75-3-503 and notice of dishonor complying with that section is not given to an indorser, the liability of the indorser under subsection (a) is discharged.

(d) If a draft is accepted by a bank after an indorsement is made, the liability of the indorser under subsection (a) is discharged.

(e) If an indorser of a check is liable under subsection (a) and the check is not presented for payment, or given to a depository bank for collection, within thirty (30) days after the day the indorsement was made, the liability of the indorser under subsection (a) is discharged.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-414.

11. In general; indorser's obligation to pay.

Under UCC § 3-414(1), one who indorses a check warrants that on dishonor of the instrument and relevant notice thereof, he will pay the instrument according to its tenor at the time of his indorsement. Consequently, dishonor and notice of dishonor are prerequisites to an indorser's liability. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

Where decedent signed two promissory notes either as co-maker or endorser, both notes contained clause which accelerated payment on death of any of signators of notes, and both notes contained clause under which subscribing party waived presentment, demand for payment and notice of dishonor, upon decedent's death, two notes became due at option of bank that held them and all subscribers of notes were liable for balance due; thus, when life insurance company paid over to bank proceeds of decedent's life insurance policy, under which bank had been named as beneficiary to secure loan to decedent, bank was at liberty to apply proceeds of policy toward payment of notes. In re Estate of Gruder, 89 Misc. 2d 477 (1977).

Under UCC § 3-414(1), accommodation party, by indorsing check drawn by another, agrees that on dishonor of check and any necessary notice of dishonor and protest, she will pay instrument according to its tenor at time of her indorsement. Nevada State Bank v. Fischer, 93 Nev. 317, 565 P.2d 332 (1977).

Where indorsers of note indorsed instrument without clear indication of capacity or intention to qualify status, such signatory became indorser by virtue of UCC § 3-402 and liable for payment of instrument upon dishonor by its payor under UCC § 3-414(1); where note provided that "presentment for payment and notice of nonpayment are hereby waived", indorsers automatically waived presentment or notice pursuant to UCC § 3-511(2). First New Haven Nat'l Bank v. Clarke, 33 Conn. Supp. 179, 368 A.2d 613 (1976).

In class action, brought by purchasers of promissory notes secured by mortgages, against seller's reorganization trustee, notes met definition of "note" as defined by UCC § 3-104 and were negotiable and unconditional under UCC §§ 3-105, 3-112 and 3-119; purchasers were holders in due course for value under UCC §§ 3-302 and 3-303 and notes were properly negotiated by bankrupt by endorsement and delivery under UCC § 3-202; under UCC § 3-414 reorganization trustee was bound on endorser's contract. Hall v. Security Planning Serv., Inc., 371 F. Supp. 7 (D. Ariz. 1974).

There is no requirement that holder of promissory note attempt to collect against collateral before proceeding against indorsers or maker. Hurt v. Citizens Trust Co., 128 Ga. App. 224, 196 S.E.2d 349 (1973).

Indorsement of notes "with recourse" created legal liability to discharge obligation of notes according to tenor. Laukhuf v. Associates Disct. Corp., 443 S.W.2d 725 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969).

Where note provided for payment of attorneys fees, indorsers of note assumed this obligation, and trial court was bound to ascertain such fees. Wiener v. Van Winkle, 273 Cal. App. 2d 774 (2d Dist. 1969).

In a case where it was determined that indorsers upon a note given by a conditional buyer to a conditional seller were not discharged by the seller's assent to an assignment for benefit of creditors by the buyer nor by the seller's repossession and sale of the property, it was said that the liability of the indorsers was governed by subsection (i) of this section. Priggen Steel Bldgs. Co. v. Parsons, 350 Mass. 62, 213 N.E.2d 252 (1966).

12. —Dishonor.

Endorser of forged check warrants that all signatures and certification on check are genuine and authorized and becomes obligated, upon dishonor, to pay instrument according to its tenor. White v. Hancock Bank, 477 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1985).

In action by bank against indorser of check who had deposited check in his account with plaintiff after indorsing it, where (1) drawer lacked authority to draw such check, and (2) defendant indorser after being informed of drawer's lack of authority, refused to pay plaintiff amount represented by check, court held (1) that plaintiff had never dishonored such check under UCC § 3-507(1)(a), (2) that plaintiff had made final payment of check because it had failed to return it or give notice of its dishonor before plaintiff's midnight deadline, (3) that as a result of such final payment, plaintiff, under UCC §§ 4-213(1)(d) and 4-301(1), could not send check back or dishonor it, (4) that since dishonor and notice of dishonor are prerequisites under UCC § 3-414(1) to an indorser's liability, plaintiff's failure to dishonor check or give timely notice of its dishonor completely discharged defendant of liability on his indorsement contract, (5) that since plaintiff had made final payment of check and not given notice of dishonor by its midnight deadline, plaintiff also could not recover from defendant indorser on theory of a bank's right to charge back or obtain a refund under UCC § 4-212(3), (6) that since defendant in-dorser had had no knowledge that drawer's signature was unauthorized, plaintiff could not recover judgment against defendant for breach of his presentment warranties set forth in UCC §§ 3-417(1)(b) and 4-207(1)(b), and (7) since company against whose account check was drawn without authorization was not "drawer or maker" of check under UCC § 4-407(c), plaintiff was not subrogated to such company's rights against defendant. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

Indorser contracts to pay instrument only if dishonored; drawee who mistakenly pays check has recourse only against drawer; warranties made to drawee by presenter and prior transferors of check do not include warranty that drawer of check has sufficient funds on deposit to cover check. Kirby v. First & Merchants Nat'l Bank, 210 Va. 88, 168 S.E.2d 273 (1969).

13. Discharge from liability.

Warranties of §§ 75-3-414, 4-207 may be modified or waived by agreement of parties in accordance with §§ 75-1-102, 75-4-1023; nothing in Uniform Commercial Code suggests that warranties may be waived or lost by violation of duties imposed under §§ 75-4-202, 75-4-204. White v. Hancock Bank, 477 So. 2d 265 (Miss. 1985).

Where currency exchange, on request of accommodation indorser, cashed cashier's check made out to named payee whose indorsement of check was forged, (1) accommodation indorser was not liable to currency exchange under UCC § 3-414 on his contract as indorser because drawee bank's payment of check discharged accommodation indorser's liability; (2) since currency exchange was only transferee and not payor or acceptor of such check, warranties contained in UCC § 3-417(1) did not run to currency exchange; and (3) since accommodation indorser did not receive any consideration for his indorsement, he did not warrant currency exchange under UCC § 3-417(2) that he had good title to check. Oak Park Currency Exch., Inc. v. Maropoulos, 48 Ill. App. 3d 437, 363 N.E.2d 54 (1st Dist. 1977).

14. Drawing without recourse.

Used car dealer's endorsements of notes given to finance broker were not specified to be "without recourse"; held, dealer guaranteed by endorsement that he would pay note upon dishonor. Brown v. Pilini, 128 Vt. 324, 262 A.2d 479 (1970).

When a banking law provides that where a note is given to finance payment of insurance premiums the indorsement by the insurance broker shall be deemed without recourse unless the contrary is expressly stated, such provision applies over the terms of the Uniform Commercial Code under which the "silent" indorsement would be deemed to be with recourse. Standard Premium Plan Corp. v. Wolf, 56 Misc. 2d 522 (1968).

15. Order of liability.

Under UCC § 3-414, liability of payee of promissory note, as endorser of note, was separate and distinct from that of maker or accommodation party; thus, payee-endorser was not indispensable party in action by holder of note against maker and accommodation party, but merely proper party who could be joined at holder's option and whose nonjoinder would not result in prejudice to any party. Inland-Western Inv. Co. v. Winkler Realty Corp., 65 F.R.D. 515 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Indorser liability, absent disclaimer thereof, is secondary only because of rights of presentment and dishonor, notice of dishonor, and protest, which are specifically provided for by UCC § 3-414. However, under UCC § 3-511, such rights can be expressly waived by language on face of instrument. Bankers Trust of S.C. v. Culbertson, 268 S.C. 564, 235 S.E.2d 130 (S.C. 1977).

Where bank made loan on condition that debtor-corporation's officers personally endorse notes and that creditor-corporations guarantee payments, and where endorsements of creditor-corporation preceded endorsements of officers of debtor-corporation, endorsees were not liable in order in which they endorsed under presumption raised by UCC § 3-414(2), but were jointly and severally liable under UCC § 3-118(e) in that creditor-corporations signed in same capacity as accommodation parties and as a part of same transaction. Zapp Nat'l Bank v. Metropolitan Planning & Redevelopment Corp., 308 Minn. 309, 242 N.W.2d 96 (1976).

Under UCC § 3-414, second endorser of note was not liable to first endorser and presumption that endorsers were liable in order in which their signatures appeared on note was not overcome even if both endorsers signed note "as a part of the same transaction" under UCC § 3-118, where there was no agreement by second endorser to be jointly liable with first endorser. Wilson v. Turner, 29 N.C. App. 101, 223 S.E.2d 539 (1976), review denied, 290 N.C. 311, 225 S.E.2d 832 (1976).

Where a prior indorser of a note signed it solely as an accommodation to a subsequent indorser to facilitate the latter securing bank acceptance of the loan, and it was understood between them that the prior indorser would not be liable to the accommodated indorser the estate of the latter indorser who had redeemed the note during his lifetime could not recover from the accommodating party. Niebergall v. A.B.A. Contracting & Supply Co., 24 A.D.2d 799 (3d Dep't 1965).

The estate of a subsequent indorser who redeemed a promissory note during his lifetime cannot recover from a prior indorser where the evidence revealed that the latter signed the note solely as an accommodation for the subsequent indorser to facilitate his securing a loan, and it was understood between them that the prior indorser would not be liable to the accommodated party in the event of default. Niebergall v. A.B.A. Contracting & Supply Co., 24 A.D.2d 799 (3d Dep't 1965).

16. Practice and procedure.

Under UCC § 3-414, liability of payee of promissory note, as endorser of note, was separate and distinct from that of maker or accommodation party; thus, payee-endorser was not indispensable party in action by holder of note against maker and accommodation party, but merely proper party who could be joined at holder's option and whose nonjoinder would not result in prejudice to any party. Inland-Western Inv. Co. v. Winkler Realty Corp., 65 F.R.D. 515 (S.D.N.Y. 1975).

Bank that gave purchasers of cashier's checks timely notice of dishonor of indorsed draft used by purchasers in payment for cashier's checks thereby preserved its right to charge purchasers on their contract of indorsement and their coextensive warranties of transfer, so as to permit offset of any liability by bank to purchasers for wrongful stoppage of payment on cashier's checks. Munson v. American Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 484 F.2d 620 (7th Cir. Ill. 1973).

Trial judge was free to find on conflicting evidence, including at least two documents signed by defendant, that defendant had agreed to indemnify third-party defendant against liability on note and thus had not indorsed note as accommodation to third-party defendant. City Bank & Trust Co. v. Siagel, 1 Mass. App. Ct. 804, 294 N.E.2d 447 (1973).

Corporate officer, who indorsed note to law firm as partial payment of attorney's fees previously incurred by corporation and who contended that he indorsed note individually and not as agent for corporation through unilateral mistake by reason of his lack of legal training, could not testify as to his unilateral mistake of intent and could not escape liability on the note, in absence of allegation that note holder had any knowledge of corporate officer's mistake or that there existed any element of misrepresentation or fraud on part of holder of note or mutual mistake of parties. Bottoms v. Lyons, 487 S.W.2d 813 (Tex. Civ. App. 1972).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

17. Decisions under Code 1942 § 79.

An indorsement "without recourse" does not impair the negotiable character of a promissory note. Nash v. Homeowners Mtg. Corp., 194 So. 2d 211 (Miss. 1967).

A qualified indorser warrants that the signature of the maker of an instrument is not a forgery, and is liable to the indorsee for damages in case of a breach of such warranty. Securities Inv. Co. v. Williams, 193 So. 2d 719 (Miss. 1967).

The assignor of a promissory note who transferred it without recourse is, nevertheless, liable to the assignee for its genuineness, and where the note is a forgery transferor may rescind the sale and recover the purchase price from assignor. Securities Inv. Co. v. Williams, 193 So. 2d 719 (Miss. 1967).

The two statutory provisions regarding qualified indorsement and indorsement generally must be read together. Divelbiss v. Burns, 161 Miss. 724, 138 So. 346 (1931).

Indorser intending to qualify indorsement without using words "without recourse" must use words clearly expressing such intention. Divelbiss v. Burns, 161 Miss. 724, 138 So. 346 (1931).

Indorsement on note reading "this is to certify that I have this day sold all my right, title and interest to the within note and mortgage" held "general indorsement in due course." Divelbiss v. Burns, 161 Miss. 724, 138 So. 346 (1931).

18. Decisions under Code 1942 § 107.

An indorser, whether for accommodation or for value, guarantees the genuineness of previous indorsements upon a check which he negotiates. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

If it should be ascertained, even after payment of a bill, that any of the indorsements are forged, the drawee can recover back the amount of the bill from the person to whom he paid it; and so each preceding indorser may recover from the person who indorsed the bill to him. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where the proof showed that payee's name on depositor's check was forged, and that defendant indorsed same for accommodation, drawee bank was entitled to recover amount thereof from defendant, notwithstanding that at the time suit was filed such bank had not reimbursed its depositor. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Payee of note who indorsed it before maturity for transfer by his signature, preceded by the words "for value received I hereby transfer to" indorsee, was liable thereon as indorser. Perry v. Consumers Lumber & Supply Co., 182 Miss. 112, 180 So. 385 (1938).

Indorser was not relieved of liability on note because of continuance of case against maker during which maker became insolvent, where same firm of attorneys represented maker and indorser, and indorser was informed but made no objection to continuance. Perry v. Consumers Lumber & Supply Co., 182 Miss. 112, 180 So. 385 (1938).

Transfer of nonnegotiable note and deed of trust did not amount to "general indorsement." Allen v. Smith & Brand, 160 Miss. 303, 133 So. 599 (1931).

19. Decisions under Code 1942 § 108.

Check payable to attorney or bearer, indorsed by attorney and delivered to plaintiff, was a "bill of exchange," on which drawer was primarily liable and attorney secondarily liable. Parrish v. Feldman, 182 Miss. 77, 180 So. 610 (1938), error overruled, 182 Miss. 81, 181 So. 336 (1938).

20. Decisions under Code 1942 § 109.

An indorser is not primarily liable, but only secondarily liable. Fish Meal Co. v. Brondum, 242 Miss. 573, 135 So. 2d 825 (1961).

An indorser, whether for accommodation or for value, guarantees the genuineness of previous indorsements upon a check which he negotiates. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

If it should be ascertained, even after payment of a bill, that any of the indorsements are forged, the drawee can recover back the amount of the bill from the person to whom he paid it; and so each preceding indorser may recover from the person who indorsed the bill to him. Citi- zens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where chancery court authorized receiver of bank to release first indorser on note, upon payment of certain sum, decree discharging first indorser and holding second indorser, held unauthorized where without second indorser's consent. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

21. Decisions Under Code 1942 § 233.

Where the holder of accommodation paper, collateral for the note of the accommodated party, extended the time of payment of the latter's note by a binding agreement, without the knowledge or consent of the maker of the accommodation paper, the holder knowing the actual character of the paper at the time of the extension, the accommodation maker could not be held liable, notwithstanding that the accommodated party gave a cross note to the accommodation maker, since the latter was merely given to evidence the transaction. Hederman v. Cox, 188 Miss. 21, 193 So. 19 (1940).

Liability as endorser of note as collateral security for another, not having matured at endorser's death, need not be probated as claim. Sledge & Norfleet Co. v. Dye, 140 Miss. 779, 106 So. 519 (1926).

§ 75-3-416. Transfer warranties.

(a) A person who transfers an instrument for consideration warrants to the transferee and, if the transfer is by indorsement, to any subsequent transferee that:

- (1) The warrantor is a person entitled to enforce the instrument;
- (2) All signatures on the instrument are authentic and authorized;
- (3) The instrument has not been altered;
- (4) The instrument is not subject to a defense or claim in recoupment of any party which can be asserted against the warrantor; and
- (5) The warrantor has no knowledge of any insolvency proceeding commenced with respect to the maker or acceptor or, in the case of an unaccepted draft, the drawer.

(b) A person to whom the warranties under subsection (a) are made and who took the instrument in good faith may recover from the warrantor as damages for breach of warranty an amount equal to the loss suffered as a result of the breach, but not more than the amount of the instrument plus expenses and loss of interest incurred as a result of the breach.

(c) The warranties stated in subsection (a) cannot be disclaimed with respect to checks. Unless notice of a claim for breach of warranty is given to the warrantor within thirty (30) days after the claimant has reason to know of the breach and the identity of the warrantor, the liability of the warrantor under subsection (b) is discharged to the extent of any loss caused by the delay in giving notice of the claim.

(d) A cause of action for breach of warranty under this section accrues when the claimant has reason to know of the breach.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-417.

11. In general.

A payor bank cannot rely on the warranties set forth in UCC §§ 3-417(2) and 4-207(2) because those warranties do not run to payors. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

UCC §§ 4-207 and 3-417 are parallel provisions. Section 4-207 fixes the same warranties for the collection of items through the banking system that § 3-417 establishes for the transfer of commercial paper not collected through the banking system. Sun'n Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank, 21 Cal. 3d 671, 582 P.2d 920 (1978).

A party is not liable for breach of a warranty as to the genuineness of an indorsement unless it is shown that the claimant would not have suffered a given loss if the indorsement had been genuine. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

12. Authorized signatures.

Where (1) draft issued to two copayees by insurance company, as drawer-drawee, was deposited by one copayee in depository bank, (2) other copayee's indorsement on draft was forged or unauthorized, (3) drawer-drawee, after paying draft when it was processed through banking channels, learned of such forged indorsement, and amount of draft was charged back through banking channels to depository bank, and (4) depository bank then sued drawer-drawee for payment of draft, court held that depository bank was not entitled to recover because (1) under UCC § 3-201(1), depository bank had only rights of its transferor in draft, which were worthless because copayee whose signature had been forged had lien on draft's entire proceeds, (2) depository bank did not sustain its burden of proof under UCC § 3-307(1) concerning genuineness of forged indorsement on draft, (3) since one necessary indorsement on draft was missing, depository bank could not negotiate draft or become holder or holder in due course thereof, and (4) depository bank had breached its presentment warranty under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) because it claimed through forged or unauthorized indorsement of copayee who had interest in funds represented by draft. Foremost Ins. Co. v. First City Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 374 So. 2d 840 (Miss. 1979).

Unlike the presentment warranties regarding unauthorized signatures in UCC §§ 3-417(1)(b) and 4-207(1)(b), the transferor warranties in UCC § 3-417(2)(b) and 4-207(2)(b) delete any reference to knowledge on the part of the transferor. In other words, UCC §§ 3-417(1)(b) and 4-207(1)(b) provide that the person or customer warrants that he has no knowledge that the maker's or drawer's signature is unauthorized, while UCC §§ 3-417(2)(b) and 4-207(2)(b) provide that the transferor warrants that all signatures are authorized. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

In action by bank against indorser of check who had deposited check in his account with plaintiff after indorsing it, where (1) drawer lacked authority to draw such check, and (2) defendant indorser, after being informed of drawer's lack of authority, refused to pay plaintiff amount represented by check, court held (1) that plaintiff had never dishonored such check under UCC § 3-507(1)(a), (2) that plaintiff had made final payment of check because it had failed to return it or give notice of its dishonor before plaintiff's midnight deadline, (3) that as a result of such final payment, plaintiff, under UCC §§ 4-213(1)(d) and 4-301(1), could not send check back or dishonor it, (4) that since dishonor and notice of dishonor are prerequisites under UCC § 3-414(1) to an indorser's liability, plaintiff's failure to dishonor check or give timely notice of its dishonor completely discharged defendant of liability on his indorsement contract, (5) that since plaintiff had made final payment of check and not given notice of dishonor by its midnight deadline, plaintiff also could not recover from defendant indorser on theory of a bank's right to charge back or obtain a refund under UCC § 4-212(3), (6) that since defendant indorser had had no knowledge that draw-er's signature was unauthorized, plaintiff could not recover judgment against defendant for breach of his presentment warranties set forth in UCC §§ 3-417(1)(b) and 4-207(1)(b), and (7) since company against whose account check was drawn without authorization was not "drawer or maker" of check under UCC § 4-407(c), plaintiff was not subrogated to such company's rights against defendant. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

In corporation's action for defendant bank's conversion of checks accepted by defendant for deposit into checking account of another corporation that plaintiff had employed as collection agency, but which plaintiff had not authorized to indorse, cash, or deposit checks made out to plaintiff, court held (1) that evidence showed that second corporation's indorsement of checks in suit was unauthorized; (2) that evidence did not show that plaintiff had ratified such indorsements or that it was precluded from denying them; (3) that defendant was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c), since checks were deposited by one who was not payee thereof and thus lacked valid indorsements; (4) that defendant could not utilize as defense exception contained in UCC § 3-419(3) because it had failed to act in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to banking business by failing to inquire as to second corporation's authority to indorse and deposit plaintiff's checks into second corporation's account; (5) that defendant could not escape its duty of inquiry by relying on word of its customer (second corporation); and (6) that fact that defendant could proceed against its customer (second corporation) under warranty provisions of UCC §§ 3-417 and 4-207 did not absolve it of its duty of inquiry. National Bank v. Refrigerated Trans. Co., 147 Ga. App. 240, 248 S.E.2d 496 (1978).

In action by corporation against its bank, in which corporation sought to recover proceeds of series of checks drawn on corporation's checking account, each in excess of $300 and each signed by corporation president alone in violation of agreement between corporation and bank that checks in amounts in excess of $300 should bear signature of two specified signatories, fact that bank failed to comply with signature card requiring two signatories on checks in question, was not sufficient to establish lack of good faith on part of bank, so as to preclude bank's assertion that as to those checks of which corporation was actual payee, corporation breached UCC § 3-417 (1)(b)'s warranty that it had no knowledge that signatures were unauthorized. Neo-Tech Sys. v. Provident Bank, 43 Ohio Misc. 31, 335 N.E.2d 395 (1974).

13. Warranty of good title.

The warranty of good title under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) and § 4-207(1)(a) involves an inquiry as to whether the instrument presented contains all necessary indorsements and whether such indorsements are genuine or otherwise effective. Sun'n Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank, 21 Cal. 3d 671, 582 P.2d 920 (1978).

In action by drawer to recover funds embezzled by employee, where (1) during three-year period, employee prepared nine checks for signature of officer of drawer, each check being made out for small sum supposedly owed to defendant bank, and drawer's officer signed such checks, (2) employee then raised amount of all such checks, (3) defendant bank, although named payee of all such checks, nevertheless allowed checks' proceeds to be deposited in employee's personal account with defendant, (4) checks were then presented by defendant as payee to second bank where plaintiff drawer had its account, and such bank paid checks and charged plaintiff's account for face amount thereof, and (5) plaintiff, which did not discover employee's fraud until June 23, 1973 (over three months after the last check had been altered), sued defendant on March 4, 1974 on theories of mistake, fraudulent misrepresentation, negligence, breach of warranty against material alteration, and breach of warranty of title in order to recover total amount of raised checks, court held (1) that since plaintiff was an "other payor" under UCC § 4-207(1) and "a person who in good faith pays" under UCC § 3-417(1), it could maintain action against defendant based on warranties contained in such code sections, (2) that plaintiff's counts for breach of warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) and § 3-417(1)(a) failed to state cause of action because plaintiff did not allege facts constituting breach of such warranties, (3) that allegation that checks, although payable to defendant, had been irregularly negotiated by plaintiff's employee for her own benefit, if proved, would show sufficient notice on part of defendant to prevent it from being holder in due course that had acted in good faith and thus would render not sustainable defendant's demurrer that it was excepted under UCC § 4-207(1)(c) and § 3-417(1)(c) from warranting that checks had not been materially altered, (4) that since plaintiff challenged negotiation of checks in their raised amounts and not amounts for which they were originally drawn, proper measure of recovery would be difference between raised amounts and amounts for which checks were originally drawn, (5) that plaintiff was barred by one-year statute of limitations in UCC § 4-406(4) from asserting alteration of first eight checks in suit, since each of those checks had been issued sufficiently in advance of filing of action to compel inference that it had been negotiated and returned to plaintiff with accompanying monthly bank statement more than one year before action was commenced, (6) that alleged negotiation of ninth check was within such one-year period, since under UCC § 4-406(4), a new one-year period began to run with each check, (7) that plaintiff's cause of action for negligence for defendant's failure to inquire about checks was maintainable under three-year statute of limitations for negligence actions instead of one-year period prescribed by UCC § 4-406(4), and that suit on first three checks was barred by such three-year statute, (8) that plaintiff's cause of action for mistake of fact (issuing checks in mistaken belief that it owed defendant amounts for which checks were drawn) was not barred by plaintiff's failure to examine its monthly bank statements, as required by UCC § 4-406(1), (9) that since plaintiff's negligence had prevented it from discovering such mistake within three years from issuance of first three checks, recovery could not be had on such checks, although plaintiff could recover full amount of checks four through nine, and (10) that plaintiff's allegations as to fraudulent misrepresentation failed to state cause of action, since they did not sufficiently declare that defendant knew that both it and plaintiff's employee had had no right to negotiate checks. Sun'n Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank, 21 Cal. 3d 671, 582 P.2d 920 (1978).

14. Forged instrument or indorsements.

Where (1) draft issued to two copayees by insurance company, as drawer-drawee, was deposited by one copayee in depository bank, (2) other copayee's indorsement on draft was forged or unauthorized, (3) drawer-drawee, after paying draft when it was processed through banking channels, learned of such forged indorsement, and amount of draft was charged back through banking channels to depository bank, and (4) depository bank then sued drawer-drawee for payment of draft, court held that depository bank was not entitled to recover because (1) under UCC § 3-201(1), depository bank had only rights of its transferor in draft, which were worthless because copayee whose signature had been forged had lien on draft's entire proceeds, (2) depository bank did not sustain its burden of proof under UCC § 3-307(1) concerning genuineness of forged indorsement on draft, (3) since one necessary indorsement on draft was missing, depository bank could not negotiate draft or become holder or holder in due course thereof, and (4) depository bank had breached its presentment warranty under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) because it claimed through forged or unauthorized indorsement of copayee who had interest in funds represented by draft. Foremost Ins. Co. v. First City Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 374 So. 2d 840 (Miss. 1979).

The narrowly circumscribed right of a payor bank to recover its payment of a check with a forged drawer's signature is the result of a policy decision traditionally anchored in the presumption that the payor bank knows, or should know, the signature of its drawer customer (see UCC § 3-417 and Official Comment 4) and thus is in a superior position to detect a forgery before making payment. A further justification for the payor bank's limited right is that it is highly desirable to end a transaction on an instrument when it is paid, rather than to reopen and upset a series of commercial transactions at a later date when the forgery is discovered (see UCC § 3-418 and Official Comment 1). Accordingly, the legislature has determined that the risk of loss with respect to an instrument with a forged drawer's signature generally should lie with the payor bank after payment has been made, and that such risk is a cost incidental to doing business as a bank. Marine Midland Bank v. UMBER, 96 Misc. 2d 835 (1978).

A drawer of a check has no right of action against a collecting bank, albeit a depository bank, when a forged indorsement is involved, the drawer's remedy being to proceed against the drawee bank. Underpinning & Found. Constructors, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 61 A.D.2d 628 (1st Dep't 1978), aff'd, 46 N.Y.2d 459, 414 N.Y.S.2d 298, 386 N.E.2d 1319 (1979).

Where currency exchange, on request of accommodation indorser, cashed cashier's check made out to named payee whose indorsement of check was forged, (1) accommodation indorser was not liable to currency exchange under UCC § 3-414 on his contract as indorser because drawee bank's payment of check discharged accommodation indorser's liability; (2) since currency exchange was only transferee and not payor or acceptor of such check, warranties contained in UCC § 3-417(1) did not run to currency exchange; and (3) since accommodation indorser did not receive any consideration for his indorsement, he did not warrant to currency exchange under UCC § 3-417(2) that he had good title to check. Oak Park Currency Exch., Inc. v. Maropoulos, 48 Ill. App. 3d 437, 363 N.E.2d 54 (1st Dist. 1977).

In action against collecting bank by payee of check which had been stolen by thief, indorsed by forged payee's signature, and ultimately negotiated to collecting bank, for breach of warranties of genuineness of prior indorsement contained in UCC §§ 3-417(2) and 4-207(2): (1) where payee was suing not as payee but as drawee's assignee, payee was invulnerable to attack by payor bank under UCC §§ 4-406(5) and 3-406; however, (2) where payee had or should have had knowledge of theft and forgery of own check and of thief's identity, three year delay in bringing action on check against collecting bank as assignee of drawee bank for breach of warranty was not "reasonable" under UCC § 4-207(4). Lewittes Furn. Enters., Inc. v. Peoples Nat'l Bank, 82 Misc. 2d 1013 (1975).

A bank which gives out money for cashier's checks deposited with it and bearing forged indorsements is liable to the payor bank and to any transferee on its warranty that it has good title to the instruments. Society Nat'l Bank v. Capital Nat'l Bank, 30 Ohio App. 2d 1, 281 N.E.2d 563 (1972).

Drawer of check can directly sue collecting bank which makes payment on check bearing forged signature of payee, where amount of check is charged to account of drawer. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Marine Nat'l Exch. Bank, 315 F. Supp. 520 (E.D. Wis. 1970).

A forged indorsement gives rise to a cause of action in the drawee bank only if the drawer has the right to and does set up forgery as a bar to charging the drawer's account with the amount of the check. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

15. Particular cases.

In action by endorser of promissory note against its maker where plaintiff alleged that he was manager of branch office of life insurance company, that defendant purchased insurance contract for which he executed and delivered note payable to bank, and that plaintiff endorsed note as accommodation party, where note was endorsed without recourse and was signed "Duane S. Wolfram (Manager)", and where plaintiff alleged that he paid note when defendant defaulted at due date, although endorsement "without recourse" absolved endorser from liability on instrument, it did not insulate him from liability based on breach of warranties contained in UCC § 3-417 and, thus, plaintiff may have had obligation to discharge debt notwithstanding his qualified endorsement. Wolfram v. Holloway, 46 Ill. App. 3d 1045, 361 N.E.2d 587 (1st Dist. 1977).

Collecting bank which guaranteed indorsement on checks drawn to nonexistent corporation was liable to drawee bank which paid check in reliance on such indorsement and which was required in prior action to recredit drawer's account. First Bank & Trust Co. v. County Nat'l Bank, 281 So. 2d 515 (Fla. App. 1973).

§ 75-3-417. Presentment warranties.

(a) If an unaccepted draft is presented to the drawee for payment or acceptance and the drawee pays or accepts the draft, (i) the person obtaining payment or acceptance, at the time of presentment, and (ii) a previous transferor of the draft, at the time of transfer, warrant to the drawee making payment or accepting the draft in good faith that:

(1) The warrantor is, or was, at the time the warrantor transferred the draft, a person entitled to enforce the draft or authorized to obtain payment or acceptance of the draft on behalf of a person entitled to enforce the draft;

(2) The draft has not been altered; and

(3) The warrantor has no knowledge that the signature of the drawer of the draft is unauthorized.

(b) A drawee making payment may recover from any warrantor damages for breach of warranty equal to the amount paid by the drawee less the amount the drawee received or is entitled to receive from the drawer because of the payment. In addition, the drawee is entitled to compensation for expenses and loss of interest resulting from the breach. The right of the drawee to recover damages under this subsection is not affected by any failure of the drawee to exercise ordinary care in making payment. If the drawee accepts the draft, breach of warranty is a defense to the obligation of the acceptor. If the acceptor makes payment with respect to the draft, the acceptor is entitled to recover from any warrantor for breach of warranty the amounts stated in this subsection.

(c) If a drawee asserts a claim for breach of warranty under subsection (a) based on an unauthorized indorsement of the draft or an alteration of the draft, the warrantor may defend by proving that the indorsement is effective under Section 75-3-404 or 75-3-405 or the drawer is precluded under Section 75-3-406 or 75-4-406 from asserting against the drawee the unauthorized indorsement or alteration.

(d) If (i) a dishonored draft is presented for payment to the drawer or an indorser or (ii) any other instrument is presented for payment to a party obliged to pay the instrument, and (iii) payment is received, the following rules apply:

(1) The person obtaining payment and a prior transferor of the instrument warrant to the person making payment in good faith that the warrantor is, or was, at the time the warrantor transferred the instrument, a person entitled to enforce the instrument or authorized to obtain payment on behalf of a person entitled to enforce the instrument.

(2) The person making payment may recover from any warrantor for breach of warranty an amount equal to the amount paid plus expenses and loss of interest resulting from the breach.

(e) The warranties stated in subsections (a) and (d) cannot be disclaimed with respect to checks. Unless notice of a claim for breach of warranty is given to the warrantor within thirty (30) days after the claimant has reason to know of the breach and the identity of the warrantor, the liability of the warrantor under subsection (b) or (d) is discharged to the extent of any loss caused by the delay in giving notice of the claim.

(f) A cause of action for breach of warranty under this section accrues when the claimant has reason to know of the breach.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-417.

11. In general.

A payor bank cannot rely on the warranties set forth in UCC §§ 3-417(2) and 4-207(2) because those warranties do not run to payors. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

UCC §§ 4-207 and 3-417 are parallel provisions. Section 4-207 fixes the same warranties for the collection of items through the banking system that § 3-417 establishes for the transfer of commercial paper not collected through the banking system. Sun'n Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank, 21 Cal. 3d 671, 582 P.2d 920 (1978).

A party is not liable for breach of a warranty as to the genuineness of an indorsement unless it is shown that the claimant would not have suffered a given loss if the indorsement had been genuine. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

12. Authorized signatures.

Where (1) draft issued to two copayees by insurance company, as drawer-drawee, was deposited by one copayee in depository bank, (2) other copayee's indorsement on draft was forged or unauthorized, (3) drawer-drawee, after paying draft when it was processed through banking channels, learned of such forged indorsement, and amount of draft was charged back through banking channels to depository bank, and (4) depository bank then sued drawer-drawee for payment of draft, court held that depository bank was not entitled to recover because (1) under UCC § 3-201(1), depository bank had only rights of its transferor in draft, which were worthless because copayee whose signature had been forged had lien on draft's entire proceeds, (2) depository bank did not sustain its burden of proof under UCC § 3-307(1) concerning genuineness of forged indorsement on draft, (3) since one necessary indorsement on draft was missing, depository bank could not negotiate draft or become holder or holder in due course thereof, and (4) depository bank had breached its presentment warranty under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) because it claimed through forged or unauthorized indorsement of copayee who had interest in funds represented by draft. Foremost Ins. Co. v. First City Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 374 So. 2d 840 (Miss. 1979).

Unlike the presentment warranties regarding unauthorized signatures in UCC §§ 3-417(1)(b) and 4-207(1)(b), the transferor warranties in UCC § 3-417(2)(b) and 4-207(2)(b) delete any reference to knowledge on the part of the transferor. In other words, UCC §§ 3-417(1)(b) and 4-207(1)(b) provide that the person or customer warrants that he has no knowledge that the maker's or drawer's signature is unauthorized, while UCC §§ 3-417(2)(b) and 4-207(2)(b) provide that the transferor warrants that all signatures are authorized. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

In action by bank against indorser of check who had deposited check in his account with plaintiff after indorsing it, where (1) drawer lacked authority to draw such check, and (2) defendant indorser, after being informed of drawer's lack of authority, refused to pay plaintiff amount represented by check, court held (1) that plaintiff had never dishonored such check under UCC § 3-507(1)(a), (2) that plaintiff had made final payment of check because it had failed to return it or give notice of its dishonor before plaintiff's midnight deadline, (3) that as a result of such final payment, plaintiff, under UCC §§ 4-213(1)(d) and 4-301(1), could not send check back or dishonor it, (4) that since dishonor and notice of dishonor are prerequisites under UCC § 3-414(1) to an indorser's liability, plaintiff's failure to dishonor check or give timely notice of its dishonor completely discharged defendant of liability on his indorsement contract, (5) that since plaintiff had made final payment of check and not given notice of dishonor by its midnight deadline, plaintiff also could not recover from defendant indorser on theory of a bank's right to charge back or obtain a refund under UCC § 4-212(3), (6) that since defendant indorser had had no knowledge that drawer's signature was unauthorized, plaintiff could not recover judgment against defendant for breach of his presentment warranties set forth in UCC §§ 3-417(1)(b) and 4-207(1)(b), and (7) since company against whose account check was drawn without authorization was not "drawer or maker" of check under UCC § 4-407(c), plaintiff was not subrogated to such company's rights against defendant. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

In corporation's action for defendant bank's conversion of checks accepted by defendant for deposit into checking account of another corporation that plaintiff had employed as collection agency, but which plaintiff had not authorized to indorse, cash, or deposit checks made out to plaintiff, court held (1) that evidence showed that second corporation's indorsement of checks in suit was unauthorized; (2) that evidence did not show that plaintiff had ratified such indorsements or that it was precluded from denying them; (3) that defendant was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c), since checks were deposited by one who was not payee thereof and thus lacked valid indorsements; (4) that defendant could not utilize as defense exception contained in UCC § 3-419(3) because it had failed to act in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to banking business by failing to inquire as to second corporation's authority to indorse and deposit plaintiff's checks into second corporation's account; (5) that defendant could not escape its duty of inquiry by relying on word of its customer (second corporation); and (6) that fact that defendant could proceed against its customer (second corporation) under warranty provisions of UCC §§ 3-417 and 4-207 did not absolve it of its duty of inquiry. National Bank v. Refrigerated Trans. Co., 147 Ga. App. 240, 248 S.E.2d 496 (1978).

In action by corporation against its bank, in which corporation sought to recover proceeds of series of checks drawn on corporation's checking account, each in excess of $300 and each signed by corporation president alone in violation of agreement between corporation and bank that checks in amounts in excess of $300 should bear signature of two specified signatories, fact that bank failed to comply with signature card requiring two signatories on checks in question, was not sufficient to establish lack of good faith on part of bank, so as to preclude bank's assertion that as to those checks of which corporation was actual payee, corporation breached UCC § 3-417 (1)(b)'s warranty that it had no knowledge that signatures were unauthorized. Neo-Tech Sys. v. Provident Bank, 43 Ohio Misc. 31, 335 N.E.2d 395 (1974).

13. Warranty of good title.

The warranty of good title under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) and § 4-207(1)(a) involves an inquiry as to whether the instrument presented contains all necessary indorsements and whether such indorsements are genuine or otherwise effective. Sun'n Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank, 21 Cal. 3d 671, 582 P.2d 920 (1978).

In action by drawer to recover funds embezzled by employee, where (1) during three-year period, employee prepared nine checks for signature of officer of drawer, each check being made out for small sum supposedly owed to defendant bank, and drawer's officer signed such checks, (2) employee then raised amount of all such checks, (3) defendant bank, although named payee of all such checks, nevertheless allowed checks' proceeds to be deposited in employee's personal account with defendant, (4) checks were then presented by defendant as payee to second bank where plaintiff drawer had its account, and such bank paid checks and charged plaintiff's account for face amount thereof, and (5) plaintiff, which did not discover employee's fraud until June 23, 1973 (over three months after the last check had been altered), sued defendant on March 4, 1974 on theories of mistake, fraudulent misrepresentation, negligence, breach of warranty against material alteration, and breach of warranty of title in order to recover total amount of raised checks, court held (1) that since plaintiff was an "other payor"

under UCC § 4-207(1) and “a person who in good faith pays” under UCC § 3-417(1), it could maintain action against defendant based on warranties contained in such code sections, (2) that plaintiff’s counts for breach of warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) and § 3-417(1)(a) failed to state cause of action because plaintiff did not allege facts constituting breach of such warranties, (3) that allegation that checks, although payable to defendant, had been irregularly negotiated by plaintiff’s employee for her own benefit, if proved, would show sufficient notice on part of defendant to prevent it from being holder in due course that had acted in good faith and thus would render not sustainable defendant’s demurrer that it was excepted under UCC § 4-207(1)(c) and § 3-417(1)(c) from warranting that checks had not been materially altered, (4) that since plaintiff challenged negotiation of checks in their raised amounts and not amounts for which they were originally drawn, proper measure of recovery would be difference between raised amounts and amounts for which checks were originally drawn, (5) that plaintiff was barred by one-year statute of limitations in UCC § 4-406(4) from asserting alteration of first eight checks in suit, since each of those checks had been issued sufficiently in advance of filing of action to compel inference that it had been negotiated and returned to plaintiff with accompanying monthly bank statement more than one year before action was commenced, (6) that alleged negotiation of ninth check was within such one-year period, since under UCC § 4-406(4), a new one-year period began to run with each check, (7) that plaintiff’s cause of action for negligence for defendant’s failure to inquire about checks was maintainable under three-year statute of limitations for negligence actions instead of one-year period prescribed by UCC § 4-406(4), and that suit on first three checks was barred by such three-year statute, (8) that plaintiff’s cause of action for mistake of fact (issuing checks in mistaken belief that it owed defendant amounts for which checks were drawn) was not barred by plaintiff’s failure to examine its monthly bank statements, as required by UCC

§ 4-406(1), (9) that since plaintiff’s negligence had prevented it from discovering such mistake within three years from issuance of first three checks, recovery could not be had on such checks, although plaintiff could recover full amount of checks four through nine, and (10) that plaintiff’s allegations as to fraudulent misrepresentation failed to state cause of action, since they did not sufficiently declare that defendant knew that both it and plaintiff’s employee had had no right to negotiate checks. Sun’n Sand, Inc. v. United Cal. Bank, 21 Cal. 3d 671, 582 P.2d 920 (1978).

14. Forged instrument or indorsements.

Where (1) draft issued to two copayees by insurance company, as drawer-drawee, was deposited by one copayee in depository bank, (2) other copayee’s indorsement on draft was forged or unauthorized, (3) drawer-drawee, after paying draft when it was processed through banking channels, learned of such forged indorsement, and amount of draft was charged back through banking channels to depository bank, and (4) depository bank then sued drawer-drawee for payment of draft, court held that depository bank was not entitled to recover because (1) under UCC § 3-201(1), depository bank had only rights of its transferor in draft, which were worthless because copayee whose signature had been forged had lien on draft’s entire proceeds, (2) depository bank did not sustain its burden of proof under UCC § 3-307(1) concerning genuineness of forged indorsement on draft, (3) since one necessary indorsement on draft was missing, depository bank could not negotiate draft or become holder or holder in due course thereof, and (4) depository bank had breached its presentment warranty under UCC § 3-417(1)(a) because it claimed through forged or unauthorized indorsement of copayee who had interest in funds represented by draft. Foremost Ins. Co. v. First City Sav. & Loan Ass’n, 374 So. 2d 840 (Miss. 1979).

The narrowly circumscribed right of a payor bank to recover its payment of a check with a forged drawer’s signature is the result of a policy decision traditionally anchored in the presumption that the payor bank knows, or should know, the signature of its drawer customer (see UCC § 3-417 and Official Comment 4) and thus is in a superior position to detect a forgery before making payment. A further justification for the payor bank's limited right is that it is highly desirable to end a transaction on an instrument when it is paid, rather than to reopen and upset a series of commercial transactions at a later date when the forgery is discovered (see UCC § 3-418 and Official Comment 1). Accordingly, the legislature has determined that the risk of loss with respect to an instrument with a forged drawer's signature generally should lie with the payor bank after payment has been made, and that such risk is a cost incidental to doing business as a bank. Marine Midland Bank v. Ueber, 96 Misc. 2d 835 (1978).

A drawer of a check has no right of action against a collecting bank, albeit a depository bank, when a forged indorsement is involved, the drawer's remedy being to proceed against the drawee bank. Underpinning & Found. Constructors, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 61 A.D.2d 628 (1st Dep't 1978), aff'd, 46 N.Y.2d 459, 414 N.Y.S.2d 298, 386 N.E.2d 1319 (1979).

Where currency exchange, on request of accommodation indorser, cashed cashier's check made out to named payee whose indorsement of check was forged, (1) accommodation indorser was not liable to currency exchange under UCC § 3-414 on his contract as indorser because drawee bank's payment of check discharged accommodation indorser's liability; (2) since currency exchange was only transferee and not payor or acceptor of such check, warranties contained in UCC § 3-417(1) did not run to currency exchange; and (3) since accommodation indorser did not receive any consideration for his indorsement, he did not warrant to currency exchange under UCC § 3-417(2) that he had good title to check. Oak Park Currency Exch., Inc. v. Maropoulos, 48 Ill. App. 3d 437, 363 N.E.2d 54 (1st Dist. 1977).

In action against collecting bank by payee of check which had been stolen by thief, indorsed by forged payee's signature, and ultimately negotiated to collecting bank, for breach of warranties of genuineness of prior indorsement contained in UCC §§ 3-417(2) and 4-207(2): (1) where payee was suing not as payee but as drawee's assignee, payee was invulnerable to attack by payor bank under UCC §§ 4-406(5) and 3-406; however, (2) where payee had or should have had knowledge of theft and forgery of own check and of thief's identity, three year delay in bringing action on check against collecting bank as assignee of drawee bank for breach of warranty was not "reasonable" under UCC § 4-207(4). Lewittes Furn. Enters., Inc. v. Peoples Nat'l Bank, 82 Misc. 2d 1013 (1975).

Drawee bank which paid a forged instrument was not entitled to retain amount paid to it by collecting bank which mistakenly believed it had a legal obligation to reimburse drawee, and which further mistakenly believed that collecting bank's depositor would not object to being charged with funds represented by a forged check. Valley Bank v. Bank of Commerce, 74 Misc. 2d 195 (1973), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 13 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. (Callaghan) 515 (N.Y. App. Term 1973).

A bank which gives out money for cashier's checks deposited with it and bearing forged indorsements is liable to the payor bank and to any transferee on its warranty that it has good title to the instruments. Society Nat'l Bank v. Capital Nat'l Bank, 30 Ohio App. 2d 1, 281 N.E.2d 563 (1972).

Drawer of check can directly sue collecting bank which makes payment on check bearing forged signature of payee, where amount of check is charged to account of drawer. Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Marine Nat'l Exch. Bank, 315 F. Supp. 520 (E.D. Wis. 1970).

A forged indorsement gives rise to a cause of action in the drawee bank only if the drawer has the right to and does set up forgery as a bar to charging the drawer's account with the amount of the check. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. Montgomery County Bank & Trust Co., 29 Pa. D. & C.2d 596 (1962).

15. Particular cases.

In action by endorser of promissory note against its maker where plaintiff alleged that he was manager of branch office of life insurance company, that defendant purchased insurance contract for which he executed and delivered note payable to bank, and that plaintiff endorsed note as accommodation party, where note was endorsed without recourse and was signed “Duane S. Wolfram (Manager)”, and where plaintiff alleged that he paid note when defendant defaulted at due date, although endorsement “without recourse” absolved endorser from liability on instrument, it did not insulate him from liability based on breach of warranties contained in UCC § 3-417 and, thus, plaintiff may have had obligation to discharge debt notwithstanding his qualified endorsement. Wolfram v. Holloway, 46 Ill. App. 3d 1045, 361 N.E.2d 587 (1st Dist. 1977).

Collecting bank which guaranteed indorsement on checks drawn to nonexistent corporation was liable to drawee bank which paid check in reliance on such indorsement and which was required in prior action to recredit drawer’s account. First Bank & Trust Co. v. County Nat’l Bank, 281 So. 2d 515 (Fla. App. 1973).

§ 75-3-418. Payment or acceptance by mistake.

(a) Except as provided in subsection (c), if the drawee of a draft pays or accepts the draft and the drawee acted on the mistaken belief that (i) payment of the draft had not been stopped pursuant to Section 75-4-403 or (ii) the signature of the drawer of the draft was authorized, the drawee may recover the amount of the draft from the person to whom or for whose benefit payment was made or, in the case of acceptance, may revoke the acceptance. Rights of the drawee under this subsection are not affected by failure of the drawee to exercise ordinary care in paying or accepting the draft.

(b) Except as provided in subsection (c), if an instrument has been paid or accepted by mistake and the case is not covered by subsection (a), the person paying or accepting may, to the extent permitted by the law governing mistake and restitution, (i) recover the payment from the person to whom or for whose benefit payment was made or (ii) in the case of acceptance, may revoke the acceptance.

(c) The remedies provided by subsection (a) or (b) may not be asserted against a person who took the instrument in good faith and for value or who in good faith changed position in reliance on the payment or acceptance. This subsection does not limit remedies provided by Section 75-3-417 or 75-4-407.

(d) Notwithstanding Section 75-4-215, if an instrument is paid or accepted by mistake and the payor or acceptor recovers payment or revokes acceptance under subsection (a) or (b), the instrument is deemed not to have been paid or accepted and is treated as dishonored, and the person from whom payment is recovered has rights as a person entitled to enforce the dishonored instrument.

11. In general.

When payor bank has paid a check by failing to return it by bank's midnight deadline, bank may be entitled to relief under UCC § 3-418. Under this statute, payment of a check is final only in favor of holder in due course or one who in good faith has changed his position in reliance on such payment. Blake v. Woodford Bank & Trust Co., 555 S.W.2d 589 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

Where defendant bank received check from plaintiff's employee, drawn by plaintiff and made payable to defendant, applied check to discharge employee's personal indebtedness to defendant, and released collateral for loan to employee, under UCC § 3-418 payment of check in favor of defendant was final since defendant was holder in due course and had changed its position in good faith reliance on payment of check. Richardson Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 812 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), ref. n.r.e. (Apr. 3, 1974).

Payment by drawee bank of check bearing signature of fictitious payee was final within meaning of § 3-418, and drawee could not recover back payment from collecting bank which guaranteed indorsement, so that collecting bank's voluntary refund or payment was not insured loss. Aetna Life & Cas. Co. v. Hampton State Bank, 497 S.W.2d 80 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Oct. 10, 1973).

When a note is given subsequent to the making of the loan, the antecedent application is sufficient to make the later note binding. Epstein v. Paskow & Epstein, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 1066 (1968, NY Sup.).

Where the drawee of drafts maintained a checking account in a collector bank and made a check payable to the bank's order in purported payment of the drafts which were stamped "paid" and surrendered to the drawee, delivery of the check constituted payment just as effectively as if cash had been given. The payment to the collecting bank was equivalent to payment of the owner of the instrument, a holder in due course. F & M Nat'l Bank v. Boardwalk Nat'l Bank, 101 N.J. Super. 528, 245 A.2d 35 (App. Div. 1968), certification denied, 52 N.J. 492, 246 A.2d 452 (1968).

12. Forged instruments or signatures.

In prosecution of union treasurer for embezzling and converting union funds, where (1) checking-account contract between union and bank required that checks be signed by both accused and union president, (2) on 23 occasions, accused signed his own name on check, forged union president's signature, and presented check to bank for payment, and (3) bank failed to detect such forgeries, honored checks, paid proceeds to accused, and debited union's account, defendant could not successfully contend that his check-forging activities constituted conversion of bank's funds, rather than union's funds, under common-law doctrine of Price v. Neal (now codified in UCC §§ 3-418, 4-213, and 4-401) that drawee bank pays its own funds, instead of funds of its depositor, when it honors a forged check because (1) when forged checks were completed by accused and ready for presentation, they constituted commercial paper belonging to union and by appropriating such checks, accused converted union funds, (2) union funds were also converted to accused's use when bank debited union's account after each forged check was honored, and (3) fact that such reductions in union's funds were temporary did not exonerate accused from liability, even though under UCC § 4-406(2)(b) it was ultimately unlikely that union would be able to recover from bank in view of its delay in discovering forgeries and reporting them to bank (construing Wisconsin UCC; holding that common-law doctrine relied on by accused did not place his conduct outside federal statute on which indictment was based). United States v. Pavloski, 574 F.2d 933 (7th Cir. Wis. 1978).

The narrowly limited rights of a payor bank to recover its payment of a check with a forged drawer's signature, the payor bank being bound by its payment if no warranties are applicable or if payment was made to a holder in due course or to a person who had in good faith changed his position in reliance on the payment (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-418), thereby generally placing the risk of loss with respect to such an instrument upon the payor bank as a cost incident to doing business as a bank, are the results of a policy decision anchored in the presumption that the payor bank knows or should know the signature of its customer, the drawer, and is, therefore, in a superior position to detect a forgery before making a payment, and may also be justified on the ground that it is highly desirable to end the transaction on an instrument when it is paid rather than to reopen and upset a series of commercial transactions at a later date when the forgery is discovered. Marine Midland Bank v. UMBER, 96 Misc. 2d 835 (1978).

On plaintiff payor bank's motion for summary judgment in action to recover from indorser amount paid out on check on which drawer's signature had been forged, court held (1) that under UCC § 3-418, plaintiff was bound by its payment if no warranties were applicable and defendant indorser was either holder in due course or one who had in good faith changed his position in reliance on such payment; (2) that since record in case contained no allegations as to defendant's knowledge of forgery of drawer's signature, court could not determine whether defendant had breached its warranty under UCC § 4-207(1)(b) to plaintiff; (3) that record also contained insufficient information as to whether defendant was holder in due course or one who had in good faith changed his position in reliance on plaintiff's payment; and (4) that plaintiff's contention that it was subrogated under UCC § 4-407(c) to rights of drawer of check in suit against holder thereof, because plaintiff had paid check under circumstances giving drawer right to object to such payment, lacked merit since customer's limited warranty under UCC § 4-207(1)(b) that he had no knowledge that drawer's signature was unauthorized is not even given to drawer with respect to drawer's own signature by customer who is holder in due course and has acted in good faith

(see UCC § 4-207(1)(b)(ii)) (holding that summary judgment could not be granted to either plaintiff or defendant). Marine Midland Bank v. UMBER, 96 Misc. 2d 835 (1978).

Where forger, using stolen preprinted checks belonging to plaintiff construction company and utilizing plaintiff's facsimile check signature machine (or perfect copy of signature produced by such machine), drew checks in plaintiff's name to order of two probably fictitious sole proprietorships, and where unknown person subsequently deposited such checks, after indorsing them with probably fictitious name in individual and not representative capacity, and then withdrew such funds from depositary bank, (1) plaintiff's loss was forged check loss and not indorsement loss; (2) indorsements, whether genuine or fictitious, on checks were effective under UCC § 3-405(1)(b), since named payees were not intended to have any interest in checks; (3) indorser's failure to indorse checks in representative capacity did not shift plaintiff's loss to depositary, collecting, and drawee banks under theories of improper payment, breach of title warranty, and conversion, since there were no true payees to demand payment and thus subject plaintiff to double liability; and (4) depositary and collecting banks, on satisfying requirement of final payment rule in UCC § 3-418 as to being holders in due course, could assert protection of such rule against plaintiff's causes of action for common-law negligence and restitution in connection with banks' handling of forged checks, despite incomplete indorsements on such checks. Perini Corp. v. First Nat'l Bank, 553 F.2d 398 (5th Cir. Ga. 1977), reh'g denied, 557 F.2d 823 (5th Cir. Ga. 1977).

In customers' action against payor and collecting banks for wrongfully permitting improper charges to be made against customers' savings accounts in payor bank, where attorney of customers' guardian presented to payor bank two withdrawal slips bearing forged signatures of guardian and obtained two cashier's checks payable to guardian; where payor bank failed to compare signatures on withdrawal slips with guardian's signature and in fact had never obtained signature card from guardian; where attorney-forger then presented such cashier's checks bearing forged signatures of guardian, and also indorsements to attorney-forger as "trustee," to collecting bank, opened accounts with such bank and purchased two savings certificates from it, and later withdrew funds from such accounts and redeemed such certificates; and where collecting bank, after indorsing the cashier's checks, presented them to payor bank which honored them, (1) payor bank was liable for charging plaintiff-customers' savings accounts on basis of forged withdrawal slips under same rules which provide that bank paying forged check may not charge amount of check against account of person whose name is forged; (2) payor bank, which was both drawer and drawee of cashier's checks, was liable to payee thereof under UCC § 3-419 for paying checks on basis of forged indorsements of payee; (3) collecting bank was liable on its warranties under UCC § 4-207 to payor bank for obtaining payment of cashier's checks bearing forged indorsements of customers' guardian; and (4) collecting bank could not escape its liability by invoking defenses set forth in UCC § 3-405, substantial negligence rule contained in UCC § 3-406, and final-payment rule set forth in UCC § 3-418. Maddox v. First Westroads Bank, 199 Neb. 81, 256 N.W.2d 647 (1977).

13. Money orders.

While a postal domestic money order is not similar in all respects to a negotiable instrument because such an order contains a prohibition against more than one indorsement of the order, it sufficiently resembles a negotiable instrument so that the rule of finality of payment embodied in the instant section should be applied to it. Where, therefore, a bank cashed forged postal money orders and received money from the Government, the amounts so paid could not be recovered back by the Government from the bank. United States v. First Nat'l Bank, 263 F. Supp. 298 (D. Mass. 1967).

14. Certification.

Where customer of bank deposited check drawn on another bank in his account with instructions to wire proceeds to third party, depositary bank obtained certification of check from drawee bank, drawee bank subsequently notified depositary bank that it was rescinding its certification, but depositary bank never wired funds in accordance with customer's instructions, gave no consideration for check, and did not change its position as result of cancellation or dishonor, depositary bank was not "holder in due course" under UCC § 4-209 notwithstanding customer owed money to depositary bank and bank had right to set-off such indebtedness against customer's account; since check was "deposited in an account" and since credit given was never withdrawn or applied, depositary bank had no security interest in check under UCC § 4-208 and hence it had not given value under UCC § 3-303 or 4-209 at time it received notice of defense, it was not holder in due course under UCC § 4-209 and certification was not final in favor of depositary bank under UCC § 3-418. Rockland Trust Co. v. South Shore Nat'l Bank, 366 Mass. 74, 314 N.E.2d 438 (1974).

§ 75-3-419. Instruments signed for accommodation.

(a) If an instrument is issued for value given for the benefit of a party to the instrument ("accommodated party") and another party to the instrument ("accommodation party") signs the instrument for the purpose of incurring liability on the instrument without being a direct beneficiary of the value given for the instrument, the instrument is signed by the accommodation party “for accommodation.”

(b) An accommodation party may sign the instrument as maker, drawer, acceptor, or indorser and, subject to subsection (d), is obliged to pay the instrument in the capacity in which the accommodation party signs. The obligation of an accommodation party may be enforced notwithstanding any statute of frauds and whether or not the accommodation party receives consideration for the accommodation.

(c) A person signing an instrument is presumed to be an accommodation party and there is notice that the instrument is signed for accommodation if the signature is an anomalous indorsement or is accompanied by words indicating that the signer is acting as surety or guarantor with respect to the obligation of another party to the instrument. Except as provided in Section 75-3-605, the obligation of an accommodation party to pay the instrument is not affected by the fact that the person enforcing the obligation had notice when the instrument was taken by that person that the accommodation party signed the instrument for accommodation.

(d) If the signature of a party to an instrument is accompanied by words indicating unambiguously that the party is guaranteeing collection rather than payment of the obligation of another party to the instrument, the signer is obliged to pay the amount due on the instrument to a person entitled to enforce the instrument only if (i) execution of judgment against the other party has been returned unsatisfied, (ii) the other party is insolvent or in an insolvency proceeding, (iii) the other party cannot be served with process, or (iv) it is otherwise apparent that payment cannot be obtained from the other party.

(e) An accommodation party who pays the instrument is entitled to reimbursement from the accommodated party and is entitled to enforce the instrument against the accommodated party. An accommodated party who pays the instrument has no right of recourse against, and is not entitled to contribution from, an accommodation party.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-415.

11. In general.

Effect of assumption agreement is to make parties thereto liable on promissory note. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

Parties who sign guaranty agreement are sureties on promissory note because of that agreement. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

To determine whether party is accommodation maker of note under UCC § 3-415(2), entire transaction should be viewed as a whole (where defendant was alleged accommodation maker of original note and also two renewal notes). Stockwell v. Bloomfield State Bank, 174 Ind. App. 307, 367 N.E.2d 42 (1977).

12. What constitutes accommodation maker.

Where sole stockholders of corporation signed promissory note in both personal and corporate capacity, loan was important to preservation of their interest in corporation and note contained clause stating that all signers were principals, individuals signed note in capacity of comakers and knowingly incurred personal liability; accordingly, defenses enumerated in UCC § 3-606 and, in particular, defense that there was unjustifiable impairment of collateral, was not available to them. Wohlhuter v. St. Charles Lumber & Fuel Co., 25 Ill. App. 3d 812, 323 N.E.2d 134 (2d Dist. 1975), aff'd, 62 Ill. 2d 16, 338 N.E.2d 179, 93 A.L.R.3d 1278 (1975).

In action by payee against maker of promissory notes, payee was not entitled to recover where no consideration existed for maker's signature and maker signed and delivered notes so that payee could make financial statement with which to get loan and settle up with maker; fact that maker's signing was not gratuitous was immaterial and fact that notes were not negotiated did not affect maker's accommodation status. Darden v. Harrison, 511 S.W.2d 925 (Tex. 1974).

Trial judge was free to find on conflicting evidence, including at least two documents signed by defendant, that defendant had agreed to indemnify third-party defendant against liability on note and thus had not indorsed note as accommodation to third-party defendant. City Bank & Trust Co. v. Siagel, 1 Mass. App. Ct. 804, 294 N.E.2d 447 (1973).

One might be accommodation maker of note even though note does not indicate that he signed it as accommodation maker. Oregon Bank v. Baardson, 256 Or. 454, 473 P.2d 1015 (1970).

Maker was not accommodation party where only parties to note were maker and payee. Bank of Am. v. Superior Court, 4 Cal. App. 3d 435 (4th Dist. 1970).

Purchaser who did not sign note could not have been accommodation party thereon where auto dealer was maker of note and former owner of auto was payee. McIntosh v. White, 447 S.W.2d 75 (Mo. Ct. App. 1969).

Although it appeared that corporate secretary was jointly liable with corporation as individual maker of note despite questions as to what, if anything, was established between parties and as to whether squiggle appearing under secretary's name could reasonably be understood to mean "secretary", secretary who had signed notes on back above corporate indorsement was also liable to holder as accommodation party. Factors & Note Buyers, Inc. v. Green Lane, Inc., 102 N.J. Super. 43, 245 A.2d 223 (L. Div. 1968).

Where the two makers of a note owned all of the stock of a corporation which received the proceeds of the loan represented by the note it was properly held that the two were co-makers, as against the contention that one was an accommodation party, with the result that there was the right of contribution by the one paying the note against the other maker. MacArthur v. Cannon, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 208, 229 A.2d 372 (1967), certification denied, 154 Conn. 748, 227 A.2d 562 (1967).

Payee of a promissory note who endorsed it to the order of note's purchaser at request of a third person became an accommodation party, as defined in subsec. (1). James Talcott, Inc. v. Fred Ratowsky Assocs., 38 Pa. D. & C.2d 624 (1965).

13. —Party to note.

One cannot be accommodation party where party allegedly accommodated was not party to note. Reaching same result under both Florida and Pennsylvania law without deciding which is applicable. Commerce Nat'l Bank v. Baron, 336 F. Supp. 1125 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

Defendant in action on note could not claim status of accommodation party where person allegedly accommodated was not party to note. Commerce Nat'l Bank v. Baron, 336 F. Supp. 1125 (E.D. Pa. 1971).

Where original loan was made directly to sole shareholders of corporation individually, and not to corporation, entire amount of loan was received by them individually and then transferred to corporation, and corporation was not even party to loan, individual shareholder was not accommodation party and was not entitled to recover as such from corporation. Jones v. San Angelo Nat'l Bank, 518 S.W.2d 622 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 4, 1975).

Makers of notes could not be considered accommodation parties within meaning of UCC, where bank allegedly accommodated was not "another party" to note in question. State Bank v. Sentel, 10 Ill. App. 3d 86, 293 N.E.2d 444 (4th Dist. 1973).

14. —Spouses as accommodation makers.

Where wife of maker of 2 notes signed both notes as co-maker 30 days after notes were executed, at time when all transactions surrounding execution of notes had been completed and there was no factual change between parties except addition of her signature, wife was accommodation maker under UCC § 3-415 and was liable to holders who took notes for value, notwithstanding they were not holders in due course and there was no consideration for wife's signature, since under UCC § 3-408 no consideration was necessary to make her liable as accommodation party. Cissna Park State Bank v. Johnson, 21 Ill. App. 3d 445, 315 N.E.2d 675 (4th Dist. 1974).

Wife was accommodation maker and liable on note which she cosigned to enable husband to get loan; consideration which supported her promise to pay was that moving to accommodated husband. Seaboard Fin. Co. of Conn., Inc. v. Dorman, 4 Conn. Cir. Ct. 154, 227 A.2d 441 (1966).

The instant section was referred to in Rose v. Homsey (1964) 347 Mass 259, 197 NE2d 603, 2 UCCRS 129, in connection with the proposition that under former c 107, § 52 a wife who signed a note executed by her husband, without personally receiving any consideration for it, to aid her husband in his business was an accommodation maker. Rose v. Homsey, 347 Mass. 259, 197 N.E.2d 603 (1964).

15. Liability of accommodation party as indorser.

Accommodation indorser of note, by waiving presentment, demand, protest, and notice of dishonor and also by virtue of language in note making each signer bound thereon as a principal and not as a surety, became primarily liable on note in the contractual sense, and creditor could have looked to him for payment of note in full. In addition, under UCC § 3-415(1) and Official Comment 1, such accommodation indorser, by virtue of his status as accommodation party, was surety of debtor and secondarily liable on note in sense that debtor should have paid note himself (holding that language in note in suit did not constitute waiver of accommodation indorser's suretyship status as to underlying agreement between accommodation indorser and debtor). Warren v. Washington Trust Bank, 19 Wash. App. 348, 575 P.2d 1077 (1978), modified on other grounds, 92 Wash. 2d 381, 598 P.2d 701 (1979).

Cosigners of a note are usually divided into two categories, principals and sureties. If one is a surety, he is usually termed an "accommodation party" (see UCC § 3-415(1)) or a "guarantor" (see UCC § 3-416). A surety (accommodation party) is primarily liable with the principal (maker) to the payee of a note because he lends his name to the note as security (see UCC § 3-415(2)). However, the rights and obligations of a surety are different from those of a principal, one important difference being that if the surety pays the judgment, he stands in the shoes of the creditor and may sue on the judgment itself. In such a case, he has the burden of proving suretyship, and his burden is onerous, since it is presumed that one signs as a comaker unless the suretyship relation between the cosigners appears on the face of the note (holding that plaintiff, who alleged that he was merely surety on note, failed to rebut presumption that he had signed as comaker, since he did not make note part of his summary judgment proof and court thus could not ascertain whether surety relationship alleged actually appeared on face of note). Caldwell v. Stevenson, 567 S.W.2d 278 (Tex. Civ. App. 1978).

Person who signed corporate note in both representative capacity as president of such corporation and also in individual capacity could not escape liability on ground that he was mere accommodation maker who had neither borrowed nor received any money from holder, since under UCC § 3-415(1) accommodation party is always a surety and term "surety" includes a "guarantor." Thus, defendant stood in position of surety, even though he was primarily liable on instrument, since his liability was subject to no conditions precedent. V.I.P. Com. Contractors v. Alkas, 553 S.W.2d 656 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977).

Since accommodation party under UCC § 3-415(2) is liable in capacity in which he signed instrument, note executed by two persons as comakers, which contained nothing to show that one of them actually signed only as accommodation maker, subjected both under UCC § 3-118(e) to joint and several liability on such obligation. Estrada v. River Oaks Bank & Trust Co., 550 S.W.2d 719 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Sept. 27, 1977).

Where president of corporation signed promissory note as president of corporation and also signed note personally, under UCC § 3-402 president clearly and unambiguously did not sign promissory note in representative capacity but as "accommodation party" under UCC § 3-415(1), making president personally liable on note. Sullivan County Nat'l Bank v. Lieman, 89 Misc. 2d 780 (1977).

Accommodation status of signer of note does not affect liability of signer to payee. Bankers Trust of S.C. v. Culbertson, 268 S.C. 564, 235 S.E.2d 130 (S.C. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-415, accommodation party, on indorsing check drawn by another, became liable on instrument in capacity in which she signed it. Nevada State Bank v. Fischer, 93 Nev. 317, 565 P.2d 332 (1977).

Holder of promissory note had no obligation to demand additional collateral from defaulting debtor before he proceeded against accommodation indorser; holder's failure to record note did not constitute "unjustifiable impairment of collateral" under UCC § 3-606(1)(b), relieving accommodation indorser of any further obligation on note, since recording of promissory note would not convert it into security interest in obligor's property, absent collateral, and no collateral accompanied note in question. First State Bank v. Raiton, 377 F. Supp. 859 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

Under UCC §§ 3-415(2) and 3-511(2), holder of 7 demand promissory notes made by corporate maker was entitled to enforcement against two individual accommodation indorsers without presentment, protest or notice of dishonor, where notes provided that maker and indorsers waived presentment, protest and notice of dishonor; there was nothing which permitted accommodation indorsers to escape from effect of waiver provision, which by its express terms was applicable to indorser, merely because they were accommodation indorsers; furthermore, individual accommodation indorsers were not entitled to assert defense of usury inasmuch as it was not available defense for corporate maker of notes. Bank of Del. v. NMD Realty Co., 325 A.2d 108 (Del. Super. 1974).

Liability of accommodation indorser to parties other than one accommodated is same as though accommodation indorser was indorser for value. Fairfield County Trust Co. v. Steinbrecher, 5 Conn. Cir. Ct. 405, 255 A.2d 144 (1968).

Although purchaser of promissory note acquired it under an irregular endorsement which prevented him from becoming a holder, he was still a taker for value before maturity to whom an accommodation party is liable. James Talcott, Inc. v. Fred Ratowsky Assocs., 38 Pa. D. & C.2d 624 (1965).

16. —Liability as maker.

Accommodation party who signed note and deed of trust as maker was bound on such instruments to same extent as his co-maker (see UCC § 3-415(2)). Caito v. United Cal. Bank, 20 Cal. 3d 694, 576 P.2d 466 (1978).

In action for balance due on promissory note, where defendant claimed that he was merely accommodation indorser of note and not a comaker but admitted, as note clearly indicated, that he had signed note in lower righthand corner instead of on back where spaces were expressly provided for indorsers, defendant was liable as comaker under UCC § 3-402. Moreover, in such suit defendant's alleged accommodation status was inconsequential, since accommodation maker under UCC § 3-415 is liable on instrument without any resort to his principal. Bankers Trust of S.C. v. Culbertson, 268 S.C. 564, 235 S.E.2d 130 (S.C. 1977).

Where corporation that signed note failed to show that holder induced it to become accommodation party or that holder actually agreed it would not be held liable as principal, but rather that other co-makers induced it to sign note, even if corporation could show by parol that it was accommodation maker, under UCC § 3-415(2) corporation would have no defense against holder in action on note. First Pa. Bank v. Weber, 240 Pa. Super. 593, 360 A.2d 715 (1976).

Woman who signed promissory note and pledged savings passbook as accommodation for her brother was liable to payee of note as accommodation maker, notwithstanding that as condition for signing note and pledging her collateral, plaintiff required her brother to obtain credit insurance for six-months term of note, note was thereafter extended without notice to her, and her brother died during extended term, where plaintiff voluntarily signed note as maker, without being deceived in any way as to its contents or legal effect thereof, where in note she affirmatively agreed to continue use of her collateral in case of extension thereof and affirmatively agreed to extension or renewal of note without notice to her, and where she did not require, as condition for renewal of note, credit insurance also being extended or renewed. Vinick v. Fourth Nat'l Bank, 531 P.2d 327 (Okla. 1974).

17. Defenses; lack of consideration.

In action by insurance company to recover on renewal note, where both original note and renewal note in suit were executed for value by defendant as maker, plaintiff was payee of both notes, and no other persons were parties to such notes, defendant could not escape liability on renewal note by contending that he was mere "accommodation maker" who had lent his name to another party to an instrument within meaning of UCC § 3-415(1) and was not liable to party accommodated under UCC § 3-415(5), even though evidence showed that defendant did execute both notes to accommodate person who held controlling interest in plaintiff company. Pioneer Ins. Co. v. Gelt, 558 F.2d 1303 (8th Cir. Neb. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-415(2) and Official Comment 3, the obligation of accommodation party is supported by any consideration for which the instrument is taken before it is due. Thus, if two or more signed a note, the defense of no consideration is not available to the one who signed but did not receive any of the proceeds. In such case, the accommodation party is bound by the consideration moving to the other party. Warren v. Washington Trust Bank, 19 Wash. App. 348, 575 P.2d 1077 (1978), modified on other grounds, 92 Wash. 2d 381, 598 P.2d 701 (1979).

Under UCC § 3-415(2), only maker of note, and not accommodation maker, can assert failure of consideration as defense. An accommodation maker's consideration is the receipt by the primary obligor of the proceeds of the loan, and no separate consideration need run to the accommodation maker. Stockwell v. Bloomfield State Bank, 174 Ind. App. 307, 367 N.E.2d 42 (1977).

In action by bank against accommodation party on promissory notes, accommodation party was liable to bank under UCC § 3-415(2), since obligation of accommodation party was adequately supported by monetary consideration furnished to maker of notes, even though it was furnished prior to signature of accommodation party. St. Charles Nat'l Bank v. Ford, 39 Ill. App. 3d 291, 349 N.E.2d 430 (2d Dist. 1976).

Where wife of maker of 2 notes signed both notes as co-maker 30 days after notes were executed, at time when all transactions surrounding execution of notes had been completed and there was no factual change between parties except addition of her signature, wife was accommodation maker under UCC § 3-415 and was liable to holders who took notes for value, notwithstanding they were not holders in due course and there was no consideration for wife's signature, since under UCC § 3-408 no consideration was necessary to make her liable as accommodation party. Cissna Park State Bank v. Johnson, 21 Ill. App. 3d 445, 315 N.E.2d 675 (4th Dist. 1974).

In action by holder of note against makers who signed it as accommodation for payee: (1) fact that due date of first monthly installment was omitted did not make instrument incomplete in any "necessary respect" under UCC § 3-115(1) and instrument in which no time for payment was stated was payable on demand under UCC § 3-108; (2) holder's taking of note dated June 30, 1972, on July 14, 1972, was within "a reasonable length of time after its issue" under UCC § 3-304(3)(c); and (3) since note was not overdue when holder took it, lack of consideration was no defense under UCC §§ 3-304(4)(c) and 3-415(2). Gill v. Commonwealth Nat'l Bank, 504 S.W.2d 521 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973), writ ref'd n.r.e., (Apr. 3, 1974).

In action by bank, as payee of notes executed by used car purchasers, against used car dealer to recover unpaid balance due on notes after purchasers defaulted, where dealer had signed notes on back but was not otherwise party to instrument: (1) dealer's signature constituted indorsement of note under UCC § 3-402; (2) since indorsement was not in chain of title, dealer was accommodation indorser under

UCC § 3-415 and, since bank took notes with knowledge that he was accommodation indorser, dealer's liability was that of surety; (3) as such, dealer was entitled to such defenses to liability on notes as were afforded to sureties by statute, including UCC § 3-606. First Nat'l Bank v. Hargrove, 503 S.W.2d 856 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

An accommodation party cannot claim that there is no consideration for his accommodation as the value received by the principal debtor, the person accommodated, is the consideration for which the accommodation party lends his credit. Hybertsen v. Reimann, 262 Or. 116, 496 P.2d 917 (1972).

Plaintiff-assignee of note was not precluded from recovering on note from defendants-accommodation makers despite argument that plaintiff took assignment of note knowing that it was overdue, was not holder in due course and therefore took instruments subject to defense of want or failure of consideration arising but of contention that defendants received no consideration for adding their signatures to notes as accommodation makers. Hybertsen v. Reimann, 262 Or. 116, 496 P.2d 917 (1972).

Though note was made and indorsed as accommodation and without consideration, absence of consideration is not available as defense to accommodation maker or indorser when instrument is taken for value before it is due. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

The fact that an accommodation party did not receive any consideration is immaterial. Abby Fin. Corp. v. Weydig Auto Supplies Unlimited, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 858 (1967, NY Sup).

An accommodation maker may assert against the holder who is not a holder in due course any defense which an ordinary maker could assert. County Nat'l Bank v. Mathey-Tissot Watch Co., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 490 (1967, NY Sup).

The fact that the maker of the note and not the accommodation maker received the consideration is not a defense to the accommodator. Delbrook Assocs. v. Law, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 88 (1967, NY Sup).

18. —Usury.

In action under usury statute by individual signers of corporate promissory note against bank to recover interest and penalty on allegedly usurious loan, whether note was usurious depended on construction of note in accordance with nature of parties' obligations as represented by their signatures and there was sufficient evidence to present disputed fact question as to capacity in which plaintiffs signed note, although five signatures on note were unqualified individual signatures and could leave those signing personally obligated under UCC § 3-403(2)(a), where bank claimed that they signed as guarantors of corporate loan and sought to introduce parole evidence under UCC § 3-415(3) to establish such claim and where there was evidence that it was understood by parties that interest rate being charged was not usurious interest because it was being charged to corporation and not individuals. Pinemont Bank v. DuCroz, 528 S.W.2d 877 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e. (Jan. 28, 1976).

19. —Fraud.

Where evidence showed that accommodation maker to note was almost illiterate, that nature of transaction was not explained to him by bank, that he did not understand that he was assuming any financial responsibility when he signed the note, and that maker of note falsely and fraudulently misrepresented document, accommodation maker was entitled to present defense of fraud in the factum. United Bank & Trust Co. v. Schaeffer, 280 Md. 10, 370 A.2d 1138 (1977).

20. Discharge from obligation.

Notwithstanding accommodation party who signed note as maker would otherwise have been jointly and severally liable on note as co-maker under UCC § 3-118 and § 3-415, accommodation party was totally discharged under UCC §§ 3-606 and 9-306 by secured creditor's impairment of collaterals where collateral, which was not in possession of secured creditor, was sold by principal debtor with express authority of secured creditor and value of collateral exceeded value of debt. Benefi- cial Fin. Co. v. Marshall, 551 P.2d 315 (Okla. Ct. App. 1976).

Evidence that defendant comaker of note signed as accommodation for other comaker, that he received no benefits from loan, and that note was paid off by second comaker supported conclusion that first comaker was accommodation party under UCC § 3-415(1), who was discharged under UCC §§ 3-601(1)(a) and 3-603 when instrument was paid, and that any contract which may have existed to sue the first comaker on note was, therefore, unenforceable. Marcus v. Wilson, 16 Ill. App. 3d 724, 306 N.E.2d 554 (1st Dist. 1973).

Payment of a note by the accommodation maker did not discharge the obligation which it evidenced, nor did it extinguish the lien of the real estate mortgage by which it was secured. Simson v. Bilderbeck, Inc., 76 N.M. 667, 417 P.2d 803 (1966).

21. Liability to accommodated party.

The accommodated party may not sue the accommodation party nor foreclose a mortgage against him. Ridings v. Motor Vessel "Effort", 387 F.2d 888 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1968).

The fact that the accommodated maker has been declared bankrupt does not relieve an accommodator who signs as co-maker as he has a primary liability to the holder. Delbrook Assocs. v. Law, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 88 (1967, NY Sup).

Whether a signature on a note providing that "makers, endorser and guarantors waive demand, presentment, protest, notice of nonpayment, and all defenses on the ground of extension of time for payment" was in an accommodation maker or accommodation endorser capacity was of no legal consequence, as the liability of an endorser was secondary only with respect to these rights which were waived. Bankers Trust of S.C. v. Culbertson, 268 S.C. 564, 235 S.E.2d 130 (S.C. 1977).

In action by guarantor of renewal and extension promissory notes against maker, maker could not claim that guarantor, because he was stockholder, director and secretary-treasurer of corporate comaker, and also guarantor of notes under separate instrument, was accommodated by maker's signing of notes and could not therefore hold accommodation party (maker) liable under UCC § 3-415(5), because company was other party to notes, not guarantor, and maker lent his name, in execution of notes, to enable company, not guarantor, to obtain renewal and extension. Blake v. Coates, 292 Ala. 351, 294 So. 2d 433 (1974).

Although payee may derive incidental benefit from accommodation, that does not, ipso facto, make payee party accommodated; and where maker obtained extension of its obligation to repay bank as result of defendants' indorsement of its renewal note, mere fact that accommodation indorsement was made at request of bank did not alter maker's position as beneficiary of defendants' indorsement and as party accommodated in this transaction. State Bank v. Owens, 31 Colo. App. 351, 502 P.2d 965 (1972).

Evidence sustained finding that guaranty by individual defendant of two notes of corporate defendant was intended as accommodation for plaintiffs, and as such accommodating party is not liable on notes to party accommodated. T.W. Sommer Co. v. Modern Door & Lumber Co., 293 Minn. 264, 198 N.W.2d 278 (1972).

Assuming that one signing a note as guarantor should be considered as an accommodation party to the instrument and the bank, to whom the note was given, had knowledge of the facts, his remedy after he makes payment is against his codefendants, and as to the bank he is liable in the capacity in which he signed and is estopped by public policy from asserting that the parties agreed that the instrument should not be enforced. National Bank of N. Am. v. Around the Clock Truck Serv., Inc., 58 Misc. 2d 660 (1968).

Even if appellant signed a note only as an accommodation indorser and appellee had knowledge of his capacity, he would still not be relieved of liability. Rushton v. U.M. & M. Credit Corp., 245 Ark. 703, 434 S.W.2d 81 (1968).

The accommodation party is not liable to the party accommodated. United Refrigerator Co. v. Applebaum, 410 Pa. 210, 189 A.2d 253 (1963).

An accommodation party who signs a check for the accommodation of the payee is not liable on the check to the payee.

United Refrigerator Co. v. Applebaum, 410 Pa. 210, 189 A.2d 253 (1963).

22. Rights of accommodation party.

Although an accommodation maker may, on paying the note, recover from the party accommodated under UCC § 3-415(5), this is not his sole recourse, even where a judgment has intervened to extinguish the note by merger. In such a case, the accommodation maker, as the assignee of the judgment creditor, can enforce the judgment against the party accommodated. Anna Nat'l Bank v. Wingate, 63 Ill. App. 3d 676, 381 N.E.2d 19 (5th Dist. 1978).

Assignee of guarantor of promissory note, who paid amount due on note and concurrently received note from payee with payee's assignment endorsed thereon, was entitled to sue payor on instrument; UCC § 3-415 and UCC § 3-603 give both accommodation party and stranger to instrument, respectively, rights of recourse on instrument against payor after they have paid or satisfied note. Collection Control Bureau v. Weiss, 50 Cal. App. 3d 865 (2d Dist. 1975).

Contractor who was accommodation party to note executed to obtain his compensation under a contract had right of recourse under UCC § 3-415(5) against debtor who defaulted notwithstanding that direct action against debtor under the contract would have been barred by Contractor's Registration Act. Ilg v. Andrews, 10 Wash. App. 936, 520 P.2d 1385 (1974).

Evidence supported finding that non-stockholders who signed note to stockholders at request of bank, the non-stockholders having been given an exclusive contract by the corporation to secure permanent financing for construction of shopping center project, were accommodation endorsers with right of recourse to recover from signing stockholders any payments non-stockholders made on note. Hanson v. Cheek, 251 Ark. 897, 475 S.W.2d 526 (1972).

Accommodation maker does not have cause of action against party accommodated until accommodation maker pays instrument. Garland v. Shepherd, 445 S.W.2d 602 (Tex. Civ. App. 1969).

The instant section was referred to, for comparison purposes, in a case decided under the prior law in which it was held that an accommodation maker was not in the position of a surety so as to be discharged by an impairment of collateral by the payee. In the same case the court pointed out that under the Uniform Commercial Code "an accommodation party is always a surety" and that the "suretyship defenses ... are not limited to parties who are 'secondarily liable', but are available to any party who is in the position of a surety, having a right of recourse either on the instrument or dehors it, including an accommodation maker or acceptor known to the holder to be so". Rose v. Homsey, 347 Mass. 259, 197 N.E.2d 603 (1964).

23. —Subrogation rights.

The drafters of UCC § 3-415 considered an accommodation maker to be a surety for the person accommodated. Thus, even apart from the remedy of UCC § 3-415(5), a surety may, after paying the underlying debt, take an assignment of the judgment against himself and the party assured and enforce the judgment against the party assured, thus satisfying the obligation created by payment of the debt. Anna Nat'l Bank v. Wingate, 63 Ill. App. 3d 676, 381 N.E.2d 19 (5th Dist. 1978).

Guarantor who paid notes was subrogated under UCC § 3-415 to rights of creditor and, thus, could sue debtor for reimbursement in county where debtor promised to discharge notes, notwithstanding debtor was resident of another county. Seale v. Hudgens, 538 S.W.2d 459 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976).

Plaintiff who signed notes as accommodation maker and who subsequently paid judgment on notes was entitled under UCC § 3-415 to subrogation interest in mortgages which secured notes. Reimann v. Hybertsen, 275 Or. 235, 550 P.2d 436 (1976), modified, 276 Or. 95, 553 P.2d 1064 (1976).

Accommodation party who pays on instrument is subrogated to rights of holder and should have recourse on instrument, regardless of whether accommodation party received value for his signature or note. In re Appliance Packing & Warehousing Corp., 358 F. Supp. 84 (S.D.N.Y.

1972), aff'd, 475 F.2d 1011 (2d Cir. N.Y. 1973).

In the absence of any fraud or illegality, the accommodation maker of note who paid it and was assigned the note and real estate mortgage securing it became subrogated to the rights of the former holder and could sue the maker on the note and foreclose the mortgage. Simson v. Bilderbeck, Inc., 76 N.M. 667, 417 P.2d 803 (1966).

24. Practice and procedure.

In action by accommodation maker against accommodated party to recover amount paid to holder of note, where holder, after such payment, stamped "paid" on note and delivered it to accommodation maker, (1) under UCC § 3-605(1)(a), holder's indorsement on face of note (by stamping "paid" on note) discharged accommodation maker's liability thereon, (2) such indorsement did not discharge accommodated party's obligation to accommodation maker, since such discharge was not apparent on face of instrument, (3) holder's delivery of note to accommodation maker also did not discharge accommodated party's obligation to accommodation maker under UCC § 3-605(1)(b), (4) under UCC § 3-415(5), accommodation maker, on paying note, had right of recourse thereon against accommodated party, and (5) since accommodation maker was entitled to proceed on the written instrument, trial court erred in applying three-year statute of limitations applicable to actions on oral contracts. Payne v. Payne, 219 Va. 12, 245 S.E.2d 133 (1978).

In action on promissory note, defendant's signature on note as borrower, testimony of bank officer relating to discussions with defendant in connection with loan, credit investigation of defendant conducted by plaintiff, completion of financial statement by defendant, and delivery of money to principal obligor supported finding that defendant was liable on note as accommodation party under UCC § 3-415, even though defendant did not receive any proceeds of loan itself. Barber v. Corpus Christi Bank & Trust, 506 S.W.2d 254 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

In action by bank on promissory note in which defendant showed he was accommoderation maker under UCC § 3-415, all written agreements executed at same time as part of same transaction were admissible in action between original parties under UCC § 3-119. Berger v. Mercantile Nat'l Bank, 231 Ga. 680, 203 S.E.2d 479 (1974).

When an accommodation party is sued he has the burden of proving that the plaintiff is the party who is accommodated, for otherwise the accommodation party is bound by his undertaking. Phareb Assocs. Co. v. Benfari, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 860 (N.Y. App. Term 1967).

25. —Parol evidence.

Payee of promissory note may be an accommodated party under UCC § 3-415(1); the accommodation party would not be liable under UCC § 3-415(5) to such payee and may, under UCC § 3-415(3), prove such accommodation agreement by parol evidence unless holder is holder in due course without notice of accommodation. Gehrig v. Ray, 332 So. 2d 703 (Fla. App. 1976).

Where corporation that signed note failed to show that holder induced it to become accommodation party or that holder actually agreed it would not be held liable as principal, but rather that other co-makers induced it to sign note, even if corporation could show by parol that it was accommodation maker, under UCC § 3-415(2) corporation would have no defense against holder in action on note. First Pa. Bank v. Weber, 240 Pa. Super. 593, 360 A.2d 715 (1976).

In action against maker of note by guarantors who paid note and took assignment, trial court erred in granting summary judgment against maker where maker alleged that he was accommodation maker and thus not liable to guarantors under UCC § 3-415(5). Since guarantors took instrument after it was due in that no payments had been made on it prior to that time, they were not holders in due course and oral proof concerning accommodation character of maker's execution of note could be shown under UCC § 3-415(2), (3). Swida v. Adams, 138 Ga. App. 347, 226 S.E.2d 139 (1976).

Where both principal and accommodation party are before court, it is inequitable to order judicial sale of security of accommodation party if security of principal is adequate to satisfy claim of creditor. Thus, where grantor of tract of land signed notes merely as accommodation party and where proceeds of sale of property owned by principal debtor were sufficient to discharge liabilities on both notes, property which was security for accommodation obligation should not have been subjected to judicial sale notwithstanding there were secondary claims against property held by principal debtor. Bartley v. Pikeville Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 532 S.W.2d 446 (Ky. 1975).

While face of promissory note indicated that 3 parties signed as co-makers, in action between themselves, parties who signed note could show their respective liabilities and relationships by parol evidence under UCC § 3-415(3), and where defendant assumed role of guarantor toward plaintiff accommodation maker, defendant was liable to plaintiff for full amount which plaintiff had paid bank on defaulted note. Brown v. Arcuri, 43 A.D.2d 993 (3d Dep't 1974).

In action by bank as holder of promissory note against corporation and two individuals who signed note: (1) failure of bank to perfect purchase money security interest in collateral given as security for note by properly filing financing statement in manner prescribed by UCC § 9-401 was unjustifiable impairment of collateral as contemplated by UCC § 3-606; (2) however, discharge of party to negotiable instrument by reason of unjustifiable impairment of collateral was defense available only to secondary and accommodation parties; (3) where it was clear from face of instrument that individual signers intended to sign note other than as endorers but there was dispute as to which capacity, parol evidence was admissible to show intention of parties as to capacity in which instrument was signed; and (4) evidence that loan in present case was made directly to two individual signers as principal debtors (i.e., makers), together with evidence concerning structure of corporation, active solicitation of loan by individual signers, and fact that one individual signer was director of bank, was sufficient to show that individual signers signed note as makers rather than accommodation parties. Peoples Bank v. Pied Piper Retreat, Inc., 158 W. Va. 170, 209 S.E.2d 573 (1974).

Where creditor-payee was urged by defendant indorser to forebear from carrying out replevin against goods of debtor-maker, and did so upon defendant's guarantee of payment and credit, creditor-payee was entitled to introduce parol evidence to establish intent of defendant in signing note, and to sue defendant directly and primarily on the notes not only as accommodation indorser-guarantor but also as de facto co-maker. Jamaica Tobacco & Sales Corp. v. Ortner, 70 Misc. 2d 388 (1972).

Parol evidence is admissible to show party's capacity as accommodation party; and, as payee, holder of instrument who has taken it for value has rights of holder in due course as against accommodation party who signed as maker, except where holder has induced maker to become accommodation party, as by actually agreeing that he should not be held liable as principal. Philadelphia Bond & Mtg. Co. v. Highland Crest Homes, Inc., 221 Pa. Super. 89, 288 A.2d 916 (1972).

The accommodation party may not vary by parol evidence his liability as accommodation party. Phareb Assocs. Co. v. Benfari, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 860 (N.Y. App. Term 1967).

Parol evidence is not admissible to show that there was an agreement that the holder would never assert a claim against the accommodating party but would look only to the assets of the corporate borrower for payment. Delbrook Assocs. v. Law, 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 88 (1967, NY Sup).

Where there has been no negotiation of an instrument, an accommodation party may show by parol what the understanding or agreement had been as to his capacity in signing. Deems v. Wilson, 114 Ga. App. 341, 151 S.E.2d 230 (1966).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

26. Decisions under Code 1942 § 70.

An indorser in blank of a note before its delivery is an accommodation endorser secondarily liable thereon, and is discharged to the extent that the payee receives payment on the note from the maker of it, from the proceeds of property conveyed to secure it, or from the proceeds of insurance of such property against fire with loss payable to such payee. Wright v. North River Ins. Co., 23 F.2d 548 (5th Cir. 1928), cert. denied, 277 U.S. 604, 48 S. Ct. 601, 72 L. Ed. 1011 (1928).

Whether or not a person is simply an accommodation signer of the contract, is a question for the jury. Universal C.I.T. Credit Corp. v. Turner, 56 So. 2d 800 (Miss. 1952).

A corporation executing through one of its officers an accommodation note was not liable when so to do was beyond the scope of its corporate authority. Ketcham v. Mississippi Outdoor Displays, Inc., 203 Miss. 52, 33 So. 2d 300 (1948).

An indorser, whether for accommodation or for value, guarantees the genuineness of previous indorsements upon a check which he negotiates. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Where the proof showed that payee's name on depositor's check was forged, and that defendant indorsed same for accommodation, drawee bank was entitled to recover amount thereof from defendant, notwithstanding that at the time suit was filed such bank had not reimbursed its depositor. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

If it should be ascertained, even after payment of a bill, that any of the indorsements are forged, the drawee can recover back the amount of the bill from the person to whom he paid it; and so each preceding indorser may recover from the person who indorsed the bill to him. Citizens Bank v. Miller, 194 Miss. 557, 11 So. 2d 457 (1943).

Whether consideration passed from motor company to one signing conditional sale contract and purchase-money notes in blank as accommodation maker to enable such company to sell paper to credit company for value held immaterial; consideration passing between two companies being sufficient to bind him. Universal Credit Co. v. Thomas, 170 Miss. 21, 154 So. 272 (1934).

Benefit to accommodation indorsers under agreement for loan of money on stock pending its sale constituted good and valuable consideration. Fitzgerald v. Union & Planters' Bank & Trust Co., 153 Miss. 500, 121 So. 148 (1929).

Accommodation party is liable to holder for value only when he became such before maturity. Rylee v. Wilkinson, 134 Miss. 663, 99 So. 901 (1924).

27. Decisions under Code 1942 § 105.

An indorser is not primarily liable, but only secondarily liable. Fish Meal Co. v. Brondum, 242 Miss. 573, 135 So. 2d 825 (1961).

As between the indorsers on a note, the indorser whose name appeared first on back of note was liable first for payment of note and his discharge by receiver of payee bank by authority of chancery court discharged indorser whose name appeared second on back of note. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

An indorser in blank of a note before its delivery is an accommodation indorser secondarily liable thereon, and is discharged to the extent that the payee receives payment on the note from the maker of it, from the proceeds of property conveyed to secure it, or from proceeds of insurance of such property against fire with loss payable to such payee. Wright v. North River Ins. Co., 23 F.2d 548 (5th Cir. 1928), cert. denied, 277 U.S. 604, 48 S. Ct. 601, 72 L. Ed. 1011 (1928).

§ 75-3-420. Conversion of instrument.

(a) The law applicable to conversion of personal property applies to instruments. An instrument is also converted if it is taken by transfer, other than a negotiation, from a person not entitled to enforce the instrument or a bank makes or obtains payment with respect to the instrument for a person not entitled to enforce the instrument or receive payment. An action for conversion of an instrument may not be brought by (i) the issuer or acceptor of the instrument or (ii) a payee or indorsee who did not receive delivery of the instrument either directly or through delivery to an agent or a co-payee.

(b) In an action under subsection (a), the measure of liability is presumed to be the amount payable on the instrument, but recovery may not exceed the amount of the plaintiff's interest in the instrument.

(c) A representative, other than a depository bank, who has in good faith dealt with an instrument or its proceeds on behalf of one who was not the person entitled to enforce the instrument is not liable in conversion to that person beyond the amount of any proceeds that it has not paid out.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-419.

11. In general.
In corporation's action for defendant bank's conversion of checks accepted by defendant for deposit into checking account of another corporation that plaintiff had employed as collection agency, but which plaintiff had not authorized to indorse, cash, or deposit checks made out to plaintiff, court held (1) that evidence showed that second corporation's indorsement of checks in suit was unauthorized; (2) that evidence did not show that plaintiff had ratified such indorsements or that it was precluded from denying them; (3) that defendant was not holder in due course under UCC § 3-302(1)(c), since checks were deposited by one who was not payee thereof and thus lacked valid indorsements; (4) that defendant could not utilize as defense exception contained in UCC § 3-419(3) because it had failed to act in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to banking business by failing to inquire as to second corporation's authority to indorse and deposit plaintiff's checks into second corporation's account; (5) that defendant could not escape its duty of inquiry by relying on word of its customer (second corporation); and (6) that fact that defendant could proceed against its customer (second corporation) under warranty provisions of UCC §§ 3-417 and 4-207 did not absolve it of its duty of inquiry. National Bank v. Refrigerated Trans. Co., 147 Ga. App. 240, 248 S.E.2d 496 (1978).

Effect of Code § 3-419(3) providing that representative, including depository or collecting bank, who has in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to business of such representative dealt with instrument or its proceeds on behalf of one who was not true owner is not liable in conversion or otherwise to true owner beyond amount of any proceeds remaining in his hands is to make applicable to commercial paper general rule that person who deals in good faith with property of another is not liable for conversion. Cooper v. Union Bank, 103 Cal. Rptr. 610 (App. 1972), vacated, 9 Cal. 3d 371, 107 Cal. Rptr. 1, 507 P.2d 609 (1973).

12. Payment upon forged indorsement.

For purposes of a conversion suit, there is little, if any, difference between unauthorized endorsements and forged endorsements. Delta Chem. & Petroleum, Inc. v. Citizens Bank of Byhalia, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 203 (Miss. Ct. App. May 2, 2000).

The drawer of a check may sue a depository bank which accepts the check and pays out the proceeds in violation of a forged restrictive indorsement based on either money had and received or conversion where the indorsement, although forged by an employee of the drawer who supplied the drawer with the name of the payee intending the latter to have no interest in the instrument (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-405, subd [1], par [c]), is nonetheless "effective", since in those cases where the forgery is effective, the depository bank may be deemed to have dealt with valuable property of the drawer, inasmuch as the check is both a valuable instrument and a valid instruction to the drawee to honor the check and debit the drawer's account accordingly; additionally, only a depository bank may be held liable for payment in disregard of a restrictive indorsement (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-419, subd [4]; § 3-206, subd [2]) since that bank is in the best position to ensure that the restriction is satisfied. Underpinning & Found. Constructors, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 46 N.Y.2d 459, 386 N.E.2d 1319 (1979).

Under UCC § 3-419(1)(c), the drawee bank's payment of a check on a forged indorsement constitutes conversion of the instrument as to the payee. O.K. Moving & Storage Co. v. Eglin Nat'l Bank, 363 So. 2d 160 (Fla. App. 1978).

Where (1) third person, between February and April, 1973, stole several checks drawn on plaintiff's account with defendant bank, forged plaintiff's signature on the checks, and cashed them at defendant bank, and (2) plaintiff sued bank in June, 1978, on theory of breach of contract for paying checks without plaintiff's consent, court held, on denying defendant's motion for summary judgment, (1) that under general (non-UCC) statute of limitations, action for breach of contract must ordinarily be commenced within six years, (2) that defendant had acted as plaintiff's drawee bank, (3) that while plaintiff might have initially sued defendant in conversion under UCC § 3-419(1)(c), such action was barred when plaintiff filed its suit, (4) that plaintiff's contract action was timely, since it was filed within the six-year statutory period, and (5) that defendant could not effectively base its "affirmative defense" of statute of limitations on UCC § 4-406(4), which provides that customer who does not within one year after bank statement is made available to him discover and report his unauthorized signature on any item, or who does not within three years from time bank statement is available discover and report any unauthorized indorsement of any item, is precluded from asserting such unauthorized signature or indorsement against bank, since only real issue in case was whether plaintiff's discussing forgeries in suit with officer of defendant in spring of 1973 constituted "report" of such forgeries within time limits prescribed by UCC § 4-406(4), and such issue was one of fact. American Home Assurance Co. v. Scarsdale Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 96 Misc.2d 715 (1978).

Where (1) money given to plaintiff wife in trust for her children was deposited in savings bank trust accounts at defendant savings bank, (2) plaintiff's husband forged plaintiff's signature on both bank signature cards and also on four withdrawal orders against such trust accounts, (3) defendant savings bank honored withdrawal orders by issuing as payment thereon four checks made payable to plaintiff which were drawn on defendant's own account at another bank, (4) plaintiff's husband forged plaintiff's indorsement on such checks and deposited them in his business account at still another bank, and (5) husband's bank then forwarded such checks to defendant's bank which accepted and paid them, in conversion action against defendant bank, plaintiff established prima facie case since defendant could not under UCC § 4-401 debit plaintiff's account for withdrawals made by plaintiff's husband without plaintiff's authorization and under UCC § 3-419(1)(c), instruments were converted when they were paid on forged indorsements. Payment of the four withdrawal orders bearing plaintiff's forged signature was made by defendant when defendant's own bank accepted the four checks drawn by defendant and paid out on them on defendant's account, and fact that defendant did not pay cash over the counter on such withdrawal orders, but ordered its own bank to make payment thereon, did not alter legal effect of transaction. Ahrens v. Westchester Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 58 A.D.2d 799 (2d Dep't 1977).

Drawee bank which paid check made out to two joint payees, which had been indorsed without authority by one joint payee with signatures of both, was liable in conversion to joint payee whose signature had been wrongfully indorsed, since payment of check under forged indorsement constitutes specific act of conversion under UCC § 3-419(1)(c). Equipment Distribs., Inc. v. Charter Oak Bank & Trust Co., 34 Conn. Supp. 606, 379 A.2d 682 (Super. Ct. 1977).

In customers' action against payor and collecting banks for wrongfully permitting improper charges to be made against customers' savings accounts in payor bank, where attorney of customers' guardian presented to payor bank two withdrawal slips bearing forged signatures of guardian and obtained two cashier's checks payable to guardian; where payor bank failed to compare signatures on withdrawal slips with guardian's signature and in fact had never obtained signature card from guardian; where attorney-forger then presented such cashier's checks bearing forged signatures of guardian, and also indorsements to attorney-forger as "trustee," to collecting bank, opened accounts with such bank and purchased two savings certificates from it, and later withdrew funds from such accounts and redeemed such certificates; and where collecting bank, after indorsing the cashier's checks, presented them to payor bank which honored them, (1) payor bank was liable for charging plaintiff-customers' savings accounts on basis of forged withdrawal slips under same rules which provide that bank paying forged check may not charge amount of check against account of person whose name is forged; (2) payor bank, which was both drawer and drawee of cashier's checks, was liable to payee thereof under UCC § 3-419 for paying checks on basis of forged indorsements of payee; (3) collecting bank was liable on its warranties under UCC § 4-207 to payor bank for obtaining payment of cashier's checks bearing forged indorsements of customers' guardian; and (4) collecting bank could not escape its liability by invoking defenses set forth in UCC § 3-405, substantial negligence rule contained in UCC § 3-406, and final-payment rule set forth in UCC § 3-418. Maddox v. First Westroads Bank, 199 Neb. 81, 256 N.W.2d 647 (1977).

Where payee of cashier's check specially endorsed check to order of specified corporation and individual, where endorsement of individual was forged, and where collecting bank accepted check and credited it to account of endorsee company, collecting bank could not stand in shoes of either holder or holder in due course, since endorsement of individual endorser was forged, and it was liable to owner of cashier's check (i. e., purchaser of check) under UCC § 3-419(1)(c) for conversion, notwithstanding fact that it placed funds received into account of corporate endorser. Tubin v. Rabin, 382 F. Supp. 193 (N.D. Tex. 1974), supplemented, 389 F. Supp. 787 (N.D. Tex. 1974), aff'd, 533 F.2d 255 (5th Cir. Tex. 1976).

Where draft, made payable to three parties, was paid over forged endorsement of one of the parties, under UCC § 3-116 drawer's debt was not discharged as to party whose endorsement was forged; payment of instrument by drawer-drawee constituted conversion of instrument for which drawer-drawee must respond in damages under UCC § 3-419. Lee v. Skidmore, 49 Ohio App. 2d 347, 361 N.E.2d 499 (1976).

Depository bank was liable to plaintiff insurance company under UCC § 3-419 for conversion of premium check which had been made payable to plaintiff and delivered to insurance agent representing plaintiff, but which was endorsed by agent with plaintiff's name and deposited in agent's account with depository bank, where agent did not have authority to endorse checks made payable to plaintiff and where plaintiff did not ratify agent's purported endorsement. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. v. South Windsor Bank & Trust Co., 171 Conn. 63, 368 A.2d 76 (1976).

Cashier's check, which established debtor-creditor relationship between drawee bank and payee, represented conditional payment, so that when neither check nor its proceeds ever reached payee or his lawful agent authorized to receive payment, and drawee bank paid check on forged indorsement, drawee bank as payor bank was liable to payee's administratrix for conversion. Myers v. First Nat'l Bank, 42 A.D.2d 657 (3d Dep't 1973).

Purchaser of cashier's checks lost them before delivery to named payees; issuing bank thereafter paid amount of checks on forged endorsements; held, issuing bank would be liable to purchaser or to named payees. Jerman v. Bank of Am. Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n, 7 Cal. App. 3d 882 (2d Dist. 1970).

When the drawee bank pays on a forged indorsement it converts the instrument and is liable for the face of the paper. Gast v. American Cas. Co., 99 N.J. Super. 538, 240 A.2d 682 (App. Div. 1968).

Where check is paid on forged indorsement, payee of forged check has cause of action for conversion against drawee (payor) bank (change in pre-existing California law; recognizing rule; case involves collecting, not drawee, bank). Harry H. White Lumber Co. v. Crocker-Citizens Nat'l Bank, 253 Cal. App. 2d 368 (2d Dist. 1967).

13. —Forged restrictive indorsement.

The drawer of a check may sue a depository bank which accepts the check and pays out the proceeds in violation of a forged restrictive indorsement based on either money had and received or conversion where the indorsement, although forged by an employee of the drawer who supplied the drawer with the name of the payee intending the latter to have no interest in the instrument (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-405, subd [1], par [c]), is nonetheless "effective", since in those cases where the forgery is effective, the depository bank may be deemed to have dealt with valuable property of the drawer, inasmuch as the check is both a valuable instrument and a valid instruction to the drawee to honor the check and debit the drawer's account accordingly; additionally, only a depository bank may be held liable for payment in disregard of a restrictive indorsement (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-419, subd [4]; § 3-206, subd [2]) since that bank is in the best position to ensure that the restriction is satisfied. Underpinning & Found. Constructors, Inc. v. Chase Manhattan Bank, 46 N.Y.2d 459, 386 N.E.2d 1319 (1979).

Under UCC § 3-206(3) and other sections of Uniform Commercial Code dealing with restrictive indorsements, depository bank that does not apply instrument consistently with restrictive indorsement thereon is liable in conversion, and any defense afforded by UCC § 3-419(3) would not be available to such bank. C.S. Bowen Co. v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 36 Md. App. 26, 373 A.2d 30 (1977).

14. Liability of collecting bank to drawer.

While payee is entitled to sue depository bank in conversion for money paid to third party which should have been paid to him, drawer has no such right to sue depository or collecting bank for conversion. Allied Concord Fin. Corp. v. Bank of Am., 275 Cal. App. 2d 1 (2d Dist. 1969).

15. Damages; face amount of instrument.

Under UCC § 3-419(1)(c), when drawee bank takes check without payee's indorsement, delivers cash in amount of check to one who is not authorized to receive it, and ultimately returns check to maker, bank has assumed complete control over check, dealt with it as its own, and withheld it from its rightful owner. Such dealings constitute tortious conversion of check, and payee is entitled to recover its value which, prima facie, is its face value (observing that under allegations of plaintiff's complaint, plaintiff as payee of draft issued by defendant stockbroker was victim of conversion of such draft when broker paid it on forged indorsement). North Carolina Nat'l Bank v. McCarley & Co., 34 N.C. App. 689, 239 S.E.2d 583 (1977).

In action by plaintiff, as co-payee of checks, against defendant, a depository-collecting bank, to recover proceeds of checks allegedly converted by defendant, defendant having accepted checks for collection from its customer, the other co-payee of checks, either without plaintiff's indorsement or bearing forged indorsement of plaintiff, plaintiff was not automatically entitled to damages equal to sum of face value of checks, nor was payment sole defense to conversion claim, and defendant was entitled to credit in mitigation of damages where checks were proceeds from sale of hogs, where plaintiff and other co-payee of checks were engaged in joint venture to raise such hogs, and where proceeds of checks were used to discharge liens to which hogs were subject. Yeager & Sullivan, Inc. v. Farmers Bank, 162 Ind. App. 15, 317 N.E.2d 792 (2d Dist. 1974).

16. Reasonable commercial standards.

A bank and its president were not entitled to a directed verdict in an action alleging a scheme to divert checks payable to two corporations into accounts opened by a part owner of the corporations at the bank in names that were similar to the names of the corporations as the bank president and the part owner were lifelong friends and the bank president admitted that checks made payable to the corporation and bearing the "Inc." name as proper payee should not have been deposited into "non-Inc." sole proprietorship accounts. Delta Chem. & Petro., Inc. v. Citizens Bank, 790 So. 2d 862 (Miss. Ct. App. 2001).

A directed verdict was erroneously granted with respect to the claims of the plaintiff corporations for conversion and negligence since sufficient evidence was presented to overcome any finding from the bench that the defendant bank had sustained the "reasonable commercial standard" defense where a bank officer admitted that checks made payable to a corporate entity and bearing the "Inc." name as proper payee should not be deposited into "non-Inc." sole proprietorship accounts. Delta Chem. & Petroleum, Inc. v. Citizens Bank of Byhalia, — So. 2d —, 2000 Miss. App. LEXIS 203 (Miss. Ct. App. May 2, 2000).

Nowhere does the Uniform Commercial Code state in so many words that a bank, whether a collecting bank or payor bank, is liable for negligently paying an item. Hints, however abound in the code. They start with § 1-103, providing that common-law rules of negligence still apply.

Section 3-419(3) limits recovery against collecting banks for conversion only if they acted in good faith and followed “reasonable commercial standards.” Section 3-406 precludes assertion of a material alteration or unauthorized signature against the party whose negligence substantially contributed to the wrongdoing, but only if the payor is a holder in due course or paid “in good faith and in accordance with the reasonable commercial standards of the drawee’s or payor’s business.” A bank is prohibited from disclaiming “responsibility for its own lack of good faith or failure to exercise ordinary care” under § 4-103(1), apparently on the assumption that such duties exist. Finally, a bank’s lack of care shifts the burden for paying over a forged signature or a materially altered item from its customer, who was negligent in discovering the wrongdoing, back to the bank under § 4-406(3). Bank of S. Md. v. Robertson’s Crab House, Inc., 39 Md. App. 707, 389 A.2d 388 (1978).

Under UCC § 3-419(3), good faith and commercial reasonableness are separate requirements, both of which must be met to support reliance on the statute as a defense. National Bank v. Refrigerated Trans. Co., 147 Ga. App. 240, 248 S.E.2d 496 (1978).

In action against bank for conversion of checks, bank could be exculpated under UCC § 3-419(3) only if it acted in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to banking business. Siegel Trading Co. v. Coral Ridge Nat’l Bank, 328 So. 2d 476 (Fla. App. 1976).

In action pursuant to UCC § 3-419 by co-payee of check for conversion of check by bank which cashed check with co-payee’s endorsement forged by other payee, co-payee, which was not a “customer” of bank within meaning of UCC §§ 4-104 and 4-406, was not equitably estopped by policy of commercial reasonableness under UCC §§ 1-102 and 1-203, notwithstanding that co-payee waited 10 months after it learned of forgery to inform bank, where (1) check, which was issued to co-payee “and” other payee, was properly payable under UCC § 3-116 only if it contained endorsement of both payees; (2) unauthorized endorsement was, in absence of ratification under UCC § 3-404, no endorsement under UCC §§ 3-202 and 3-404; (3) co-payee did not ratify unauthorized endorsement; and (4) bank’s failure to ascertain whether co-payee’s signature was authorized was not in accord with reasonable commercial standards of banking business under UCC § 3-419. Atlas Bldg. Supply Co. v. First Indep. Bank, 15 Wash. App. 367, 550 P.2d 26 (1976).

Where payee’s attorney forged payee’s endorsement on check and collecting bank accepted check, which was for large amount, although attorney never had substantial balance, collecting bank was not relieved of liability by UCC § 3-419(3) for amount of check since bank theoretically retained check proceeds for rightful owner and bank did not act “in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards.” Sonnenberg v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 87 Misc. 2d 202 (1976).

Where three-man law partnership was dissolved when one partner left firm but other two partners continued practice under new partnership, where bank account of former partnership was kept open for purpose of depositing receivables of former firm, where check made payable to withdrawn partner and one of his former partners was received by new partnership, bookkeeper rubber-stamped check with indorsement of former partnership, bank deposited proceeds in former partnership account, and where new partnership subsequently withdrew money from former partnership account and withdrawn partner sued bank and former partner alleging conversion of check, judgment in favor of bank and former partner was upheld on two grounds: (1) Since indorsement may be made by agent under UCC § 3-403, and agent’s authority may be actual, implied or apparent under UCC § 1-201(43), there was sufficient evidence to support conclusion that apparent authority existed for affixing rubber stamp in lieu of withdrawn partner’s signature; (2) Record further supported defense predicated upon UCC § 3-419(3), since there was expert testimony to effect that under circumstances handling of check was in accord with reasonable commercial standards and, although bank knew former partnership had dissolved, it was logical for its account to be kept open for purpose of depositing fees which were subsequently collected for services rendered by old firm. Keane v. Pan Am. Bank, 309 So. 2d 579 (Fla. App. 1975).

Collecting bank acted in commercially reasonable manner in dealing with cashier's check for $7,200, though payee's endorsement was forged, where person from whom check was accepted was good customer of bank for 19 years. Gillen v. Maryland Nat'l Bank, 274 Md. 96, 333 A.2d 329 (1975).

In action by payee against bank which allowed collection of check payable to payee upon forged endorsement, affidavit of bank's employee that it had paid forged check "in usual course of business" was insufficient to satisfy UCC § 3-419(3) requirement that it act in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards. Robert A. Sullivan Constr. Co. v. Wilton Manors Nat'l Bank, 290 So. 2d 561 (Fla. App. 1974).

In action by insurance claimant against insurance carrier on uninsured motorist's coverage where insurer issued draft payable to claimant and her attorney, attorney without authority endorsed name of his client to draft, received payment therefor and absconded without accounting to client, and where claimant was permitted to recover from insurance company, insurance company was entitled to indemnity against collecting bank; collecting bank was liable to insurer as drawee of draft under its warranty of good title under UCC § 4-207(1)(a) and it was not entitled to assert defense of having acted in good faith and in accordance with reasonable commercial standards under UCC § 3-419(3). First Nat'l Bank v. Progressive Cas. Ins. Co., 517 S.W.2d 226 (Ky. 1974).

Bank did not act in commercially reasonable manner, even though it may have acted in good faith, in paying entire proceeds of check to one of two jointly named payees without first obtaining endorsement of both payees, where bank had no authority to pay proceeds to one payee without first securing endorsement of both payees, and absence of one payee's endorsement could have been readily detected by examination of check; bank therefore could be held liable under UCC

§ 3-419(3) for conversion. Berkheimers, Inc. v. Citizens Valley Bank, 270 Or. 807, 529 P.2d 903 (1974).

Amounts which payor bank transfers to collecting bank on forged instrument do not constitute proceeds of instrument, unless true owner ratifies collection; and so, absent such ratification, proceeds remain in hands of payor bank, and payor bank is consequently liable for full amount of instrument notwithstanding Code § 3-419(3). Cooper v. Union Bank, 9 Cal. 3d 371, 507 P.2d 609 (1973).

Bank which failed to inquire as to legality of copayee's signature on draft, treated draft as though it was negotiable bank check, and paid instrument although draft stated on its face "payable through" particular branch bank, failed to deal with this draft in accordance with reasonable commercial standards practiced in banking business and, therefore, had failed to establish defense to conversion under UCC § 3-419(3). Montgomery v. First Nat'l Bank, 265 Or. 55, 508 P.2d 428 (1973).

This section clearly implies that depository or collecting bank is liable in conversion when it deals with instrument or its proceeds on behalf of one who is not true owner without acting in accordance with "reasonable commercial standards", bank did not act in accordance with "reasonable commercial standards" where no inquiry was made as to authority of attorney to endorse check as trustee on behalf of estate and there was no honoring of prior restrictive endorsement of check "for deposit"; use of word "forged endorsement" as constituting conversion under Code § 3-419(1)(c) does not preclude finding of conversion, although unauthorized signature of fictitious trustee does not constitute forgery in strict sense. Salsman v. National Community Bank, 102 N.J. Super. 482, 246 A.2d 162 (1968), aff'd, 105 N.J. Super. 164, 251 A.2d 460 (1969).

17. Liability for remaining proceeds.

In conversion action by true owners of negotiable instruments against collecting bank to recover amounts of instruments handled by it on forged endorsements, Code § 3-419(3) would not shield bank from liability, since inasmuch as full amount of instrument remains in account of drawer when bank pays on forged endorsement, bank manifestly does not part with proceeds of instrument but merely remits other funds from its own account. Cooper v. Union Bank, 9 Cal. 3d 371, 507 P.2d 609 (1973).

Where check was "payable through" bank, payee could not recover from bank on unauthorized endorsement, since bank was collecting bank within UCC § 3-120, and since UCC § 3-419(3) makes it clear that collecting banks bear no liability to the true owner of a draft or check, except for those proceeds which may remain in possession of said bank. Messeroff v. Kantor, 261 So. 2d 553 (Fla. App. 1972).

18. Practice and procedure.

When check is converted under UCC § 3-419(1)(c), payee-owner has sustained injury to property within meaning of general (non-UCC) statute prescribing three-year period of limitations for injuries to persons and property, and such statute begins to run when check is paid on the forged indorsement. Continental Cas. Co. v. Huron Valley Nat'l Bank, 85 Mich. App. 319, 271 N.W.2d 218 (1978).

The exception set forth in UCC § 3-419(3) is an affirmative defense, and the burden of proving it is on the bank. National Bank v. Refrigerated Trans. Co., 147 Ga. App. 240, 248 S.E.2d 496 (1978).

Question whether defendant savings and loan association had acted in accordance with reasonable commercial standards applicable to its business, within meaning of UCC § 3-419(3), presented question of fact that precluded granting of plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Holland Am. Cruises, Inc. v. Carver Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 60 A.D.2d 545 (1st Dep't 1977).

In action by plaintiff to recover from payor and depository banks face amount of check on which plaintiff's indorsement as payee was forged, trial court erred in dismissing action as to payor bank and in granting summary judgment in favor of depository bank where copayee of check forged plaintiff's indorsement on check, deposited it to his account in depository bank, check was forwarded to and was paid by payor bank, and proceeds were credited to account of copayee, and where, although plaintiff admitted receiving proceeds of check, there was evidence that proceeds were applied toward payment of accounts different from that for which check was issued: (1) under UCC § 3-419(1)(c), check was converted by both banks rendering them liable to plaintiff in absence of valid defense; (2) although payee whose indorsement has been forged and who receives and retains proceeds of check, with knowledge of forgery, and with proceeds being applied to obligation which check was issued to pay, has suffered no damage and, accordingly, cannot recover against bank for paying such check, different rule applies where proceeds, even though received by payee, were not applied by forger to obligation which check was issued to discharge. Conwed Corp. v. First-Citizens Bank & Trust Co., 262 S.C. 48, 202 S.E.2d 22 (1974).

19. —Statute of limitations.

Although a conversion action (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-419, subd [1], par [c]) based on defendant bank's cashing of forged checks drawn on plaintiff's account is time-barred under the three-year time limitation (CPLR 214), a breach of contract action based upon defendant's withdrawal of plaintiff's funds without permission or consent of plaintiff is timely within the applicable six-year Statute of Limitations (CPLR 213, subd 2) since plaintiff need not be put to the task of electing the conversion action (CPLR 3002, subd [c]) to the preclusion of the contract action. American Home Assurance Co. v. Scarsdale Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 96 Misc. 2d 715 (1978).

An action by the payee of a check against a collecting bank for wrongfully collecting the instrument over a forged indorsement is timely if brought within six years of accrual, since prior to the enactment of the Uniform Commercial Code, the payee of a negotiable instrument possessed a valid cause of action against a bank which had collected the instrument over the payee's forged indorsement and such an action could be styled in either conversion or contract, the latter theory entitling the payee to the benefit of the six-year Statute of Limitations, and the enactment of the Uniform Commercial Code did not change this; section 3-419 (subd [1], par [c]), which provides that an instrument is converted when it is paid on a forged indorsement, does not abolish the pre-code contract action against a collecting bank, restricting the payee's remedy to a suit in conversion with its three-year Statute of Limitations. Hechter v. New York Life Ins. Co., 46 N.Y.2d 34, 385 N.E.2d 551 (1978).

Payee's action for conversion of check under UCC § 3-419(1)(c) accrued at time defendant bank wrongfully exercised dominion by cashing check notwithstanding payee's ignorance of facts constituting cause of action. Fuscellaro v. Industrial Nat'l Corp., 117 R.I. 558, 368 A.2d 1227 (1977).

Payee's action against drawee bank was barred by limitations statute of 3 years; cause of action for conversion accrued when check was paid on forged endorsement. Gerber v. Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., 64 Misc. 2d 687 (1970).

§ 75-3-501. Presentment.

(a) "Presentment" means a demand made by or on behalf of a person entitled to enforce an instrument (i) to pay the instrument made to the drawee or a party obliged to pay the instrument or, in the case of a note or accepted draft payable at a bank, to the bank, or (ii) to accept a draft made to the drawee.

(b) The following rules are subject to Chapter 4, agreement of the parties, and clearinghouse rules and the like:

- (1) Presentment may be made at the place of payment of the instrument and must be made at the place of payment if the instrument is payable at a bank in the United States; may be made by any commercially reasonable means, including an oral, written, or electronic communication; is effective when the demand for payment or acceptance is received by the person to whom presentment is made; and is effective if made to any one (1) of two (2) or more makers, acceptors, drawees, or other payors.

(2) Upon demand of the person to whom presentment is made, the person making presentment must (i) exhibit the instrument, (ii) give reasonable identification and, if presentment is made on behalf of another person, reasonable evidence of authority to do so, and (iii) sign a receipt on the instrument for any payment made or surrender the instrument if full payment is made.

(3) Without dishonoring the instrument, the party to whom presentment is made may (i) return the instrument for lack of a necessary indorsement, or (ii) refuse payment or acceptance for failure of the presentment to comply with the terms of the instrument, an agreement of the parties, or other applicable law or rule.

(4) The party to whom presentment is made may treat presentment as occurring on the next business day after the day of presentment if the party to whom presentment is made has established a cut-off hour not earlier than 2 p.m. for the receipt and processing of instruments presented for payment or acceptance and presentment is made after the cut-off hour.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-501.

11. In general.

The mere drawing of a check or similar instrument creates no liability thereon, and the drawer's account may not be charged under UCC § 3-501(1)(c) until presentation for payment or demand on the instrument is made. Kane v. Insurance Co. of N. Am., 38 Pa. Commw. 42, 392 A.2d 325 (1978).

Indorser is secondary party under UCC § 3-102(1)(d), and his liability is subject to preconditions of (1) presentment under UCC § 3-501(1)(b) and (2) proper notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a). Thus if, without excuse, any necessary presentment or notice of dishonor is delayed beyond time it is due, indorser is discharged from liability under UCC § 3-502(1)(a). Nevada State Bank v. Fischer, 93 Nev. 317, 565 P.2d 332 (1977).

Indorser of note who waived all notice of dishonor and right of protest became primarily liable along with maker and was not just surety with only contingent liability. Crescent Credit Corp. v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 51 Ala. App. 683, 288 So. 2d 744 (Civ. App. 1974).

In action against endorser of dishonored check which covered part of purchase price of automobile under retail installment contract, plaintiff's claim was defeated by his failure to give timely notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a), thus discharging endorser from any liability on draft under UCC § 3-502(1)(a) as well as from liability on underlying obligation under UCC § 3-802(1)(b); argument that no notice of dishonor was required under UCC § 3-501(4) was rejected where draft was endorsed before, not after, maturity. Chandler Motors, Inc. v. Dunham, 127 N.J. Super. 320, 317 A.2d 386 (App. Div. 1974).

Payee of note payable at bank (treated as equivalent of draft drawn on bank under New York "Alternative A" to Code § 3-121) need not allege presentment and notice of dishonor in complaint against maker or drawer; although Code § 3-501(2) provides that unless excused, in case of drawer, notice of dishonor is necessary, failure to give such notice discharges drawer only as stated in Code § 3-502(1)(b) which becomes matter of defense to be pleaded in answer. County Restaurant & Bar Equip. Co. v. Shaw Mechanical Contractors, 56 Misc. 2d 832 (1968).

A secondary party cannot be held liable unless there has been compliance with UCC § 3-501(1)(b). Standard Premium Plan Corp. v. Wolf, 56 Misc. 2d 522 (1968).

Presentment and notice of dishonor are entirely excused when notes contain waiver by party to be charged. Katski v. Boehm, 249 Md. 568, 241 A.2d 129 (1968).

No demand for payment on the makers of a demand note is necessary prior to the entry of a judgment thereon, and a judgment thus entered will not be stricken on the ground that no default of payment was alleged at or prior to the entry of such judgment. Liberty Aluminum Prods. Co. v. Cortis, 14 Pa. D. & C.2d 624 (1958).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-503.

12. In general.

Where depositary bank delivered check to clearing house on Thursday and clearing house in turn sent check to processing bank which had contract with payor bank to process payor bank's checks at its data processing center, where check was held over and not posted until Friday due to fact that routing numbers had been improperly encoded on face of check, through no fault of depositary bank, and, when check was delivered to payor bank on Monday, payor bank dishonored check and notified both depositary and processing banks that check was being returned, and where processing bank accepted return as timely dishonor and credited amount back, but depositary bank refused to accept back check and to reverse tentative settlement, claiming untimely dishonor, depositary bank was not liable to processing bank for amount of check in that (1) delivery by clearing house to processing bank on Thursday constituted presentment to payor bank; and (2) payor bank was obligated at time of presentment to dishonor checks before midnight of next banking day or be held accountable for amount of item regardless of number or complexity of steps taken by processing bank to make payor bank's checks machine processable for decision to pay or dishonor. Capital City First Nat'l Bank v. Lewis State Bank, 341 So. 2d 1025 (Fla. App. 1977), cert. denied, 357 So. 2d 186 (Fla. 1978).

A secondary party cannot be held liable unless there has been compliance with UCC § 3-503. Standard Premium Plan Corp. v. Wolf, 56 Misc. 2d 522 (1968).

The question of whether presentment of an instrument was made within a reasonable time is to be determined by the nature of the instrument, any usage of business, and the facts of the particular case. Lustbader v. Lustbader, 48 Misc. 2d 133 (1965).

In a case in which it was held that the Negotiable Instruments Law did not abrogate the common-law rule that where an instrument was being collected by a bank on behalf of an indorsee, a written demand mailed by the bank to the maker of the instrument to pay the instrument at the bank on the due date was sufficient to make the offices of the bank the place of payment, so that the neglect of the maker to pay the note at the bank amounted to a dishonor of the instrument, a physical exhibition of the note not being required, it was said that the instant section, although not applicable to the case under consideration, would sanction the presentment procedure followed by the bank in the case under consideration. Batchelder v. Granite Trust Co., 339 Mass. 20, 157 N.E.2d 540 (1959).

13. Time for presentment.

Collecting bank, which held for 52 days after presentment for payment three sight drafts drawn by bank's customer on third-party buyer of goods from bank's customer and such buyer's bank before giving customer notice of drafts' dishonor, acted "seasonably" within meaning of UCC § 4-202(2), since (1) prior course of dealing can establish seasonableness of party's action under UCC §§ 1-205(1) and 3-503(2); and (2) in present case, bank's collection of payment on three prior drafts of customer had been delayed for 48 days, and in seven other prior transactions, bank had experienced delays of nine to 45 days before obtaining payment of customer's drafts. Southern Cotton Oil Co. v. Merchants Nat'l Bank, 670 F.2d 548 (5th Cir. 1982).

Where insurance policy was issued on condition that check for premium be honored and check was dishonored after presentment for payment 14 days later, insurance company was not estopped from voiding policy on ground it unreasonably delayed in presenting check for payment as thirty days is presumed to be reasonable period for initiating collection of uncertified check under UCC 3-503(2).

Genua v. Kilmer, 37 Colo. App. 365, 546 P.2d 1279 (1976).

Trial court erred in granting directed verdict upon check in favor of payee where drawers testified that parties orally agreed that check was not to be effective and should not be presented for payment until drawees received insurance money from destruction of hay crops by fire. Parol evidence was admissible to show that check was not to be operative as binding obligation until occurrence of some condition precedent. Although insurance proceeds had been received by time of trial and, therefore, check was payable at that time, judgment in favor of payee could not be sustained since present action was on check, not on underlying debt, proper presentment to bank was conditioned precedent to drawers' liability and there was no evidence of any presentment subsequent to receipt by drawers of proceeds of insurance. Engelcke v. Stoehsler, 273 Or. 937, 544 P.2d 582 (1975).

Under UCC §§ 3-502 and 3-503(2), obligation of drawer of dishonored uncertified checks was not per se discharged by payee's presentment of checks for payment more than 30 days after date of issue, where record did not show that drawee bank had become insolvent during delay, thereby depriving drawer of funds with which to cover checks. Grist v. Osgood, 90 Nev. 165, 521 P.2d 368 (1974).

Seven days after indorsement is presumed to be a reasonable time within which indorsee must make presentment of dishonored checks to his indorser, and in the absence of such presentment even a holder in due course could not recover. Dluge v. Robinson, 204 Pa. Super. 404, 204 A.2d 279 (1964).

This section provides that presentation of a check within 30 days is presumed to be within a reasonable time. Visnov v. Levy, 2 Pa. D. & C.2d 686 (1955).

14. Other matters.

Where letter of credit provided that drafts issued against it must be negotiated by specified date and that the credit was subject to the Uniform Customs And Practice for Documentary Credits (1962 revision), and where provision of Uniform Customs And Practice for Documentary Credits stated only that documents must be presented within "reasonable time" after issuance, court, in holding that timeliness of presentment of draft was issue of material fact, would take note of UCC § 1-204(2), dealing with reasonableness of time for taking any action, and UCC § 3-503(2), dealing with time for presenting commercial paper. Flagship Cruises, Ltd. v. New England Merchants Nat'l Bank, 569 F.2d 699 (1st Cir. Mass. 1978).

IV. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-504.

15. In general.

Trial court did not err in failing to grant defendant's motion to transfer venue or for change of venue where debtors on mortgage were domiciled in county where property secured by deed of trust was located, but action was brought in different county; notes given by debtors on their face were payable in county where action was brought, and under § 75-3-504, where negotiable instrument is payable in two places, holder has option to present it at either and is not under obligation to notify maker at which of places demand will be made. Haygood v. First Nat'l Bank, 517 So. 2d 553 (Miss. 1987).

V. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-505.

16. In general.

Code provision that drawee to whom the instrument is presented for payment may require identification and evidence of presenter's authority and signed receipt for partial or full payment does not purport to establish any duty on part of bank; specified precautions are merely made available to drawee without danger that dishonor of instrument will be found to have occurred. Wright v. Bank of Cal., 276 Cal. App. 2d 485 (1st Dist. 1969).

VI. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

17. In general.

Under this section, plaintiff in an action to recover damages for gross trespass and the forcible seizure of his automobile by a finance company had the right to demand that the original of the note and conditional sales contract be delivered up to him on and at the time of the payment of the last instalment. Commercial Credit Co. v. Spence, 185 Miss. 293, 184 So. 439 (1938).

Presentment of note elsewhere than at bank, where payable, is insufficient to hold accommodation endorser. Brewer v. Automobile Sales Co., 147 Miss. 603, 111 So. 578 (1927).

18. Decisions under Code 1942 § 112.

A contention that presentation of a note payable on demand, since it was overdue when it was indorsed and delivered to the plaintiff, was excused, in view of testimony of two witnesses that, in matters not related to the note, they had been unable to locate the maker, was untenable, such testimony falling far short of showing the exercise of that reasonable diligence by the holder which would excuse presentment. Carter v. Jennings, 134 Miss. 263, 98 So. 687 (1924).

19. Decisions under Code 1942 § 130.

Dishonor and notice must be alleged and proved to recover against indorsers; declaration simply alleging that defendant indorser without setting up dishonor and notice is insufficient. Carter v. Jennings, 134 Miss. 263, 98 So. 687 (1924).

Unless blank indorser given notice of dishonor of note by maker, he is discharged. Gresham v. State Bank, 31 Miss. 20, 95 So. 65 (1923).

Indorser not obliged to file plea denying dishonor and notice where declaration states no cause of action. Gresham v. State Bank, 31 Miss. 20, 95 So. 65 (1923).

20. Decisions under Code 1942 § 159.

Discharge of indorser whose name appears first on back of note, by receiver of bank on authority of chancery court discharged indorser whose name appeared second on note. Thompson v. Gore, 180 Miss. 560, 178 So. 81 (1938).

21. Decisions under Code 1942 § 227.

A check must be presented for payment within a reasonable time. Presley v. American Guarantee & Liab. Ins. Co., 237 Miss. 807, 116 So. 2d 410 (1959).

One who receives in the regular course of business in good faith and for value, within a reasonable time after date, a check on a bank, drawn payable to order and indorsed in blank by payee, takes it free from equities between original parties of which he had no notice. Hancock v. State Nat'l Bank, 213 Miss. 295, 56 So. 2d 819 (1952).

The transferee of a check is not put upon inquiry and chargeable with notice of possible equities in the drawer, by reason of the fact that the check was dated three, four or five days before the date of transfer. Hancock v. State Nat'l Bank, 213 Miss. 295, 56 So. 2d 819 (1952).

A check was not overdue when it was accepted by the bank and acceptance was timely where it was dated November 29 and was delivered to the bank on December 2, and was credited to the checking account of the party presenting the check, and then the check was forwarded through the banking channels for payment which was refused and check was returned with the words "payment stopped." Under such circumstances the first bank was a holder for value of the check and entitled to recover the amount from the drawer. Hancock v. State Nat'l Bank, 213 Miss. 295, 56 So. 2d 819 (1952).

Generally, reasonable time for presenting check on bank in same business community as recipient is next business day after receipt. Sunflower Compress Co. v. Clark, 165 Miss. 219, 144 So. 477 (1932), error overruled, 165 Miss. 230, 145 So. 617 (1933).

Declaration alleging taxpayer gave tax collector check on bank in collector's town December 12, but that collector did not present check before bank failed December 16, held good against demurrer. Sunflower Compress Co. v. Clark, 165 Miss. 219, 144 So. 477 (1932), error overruled, 165 Miss. 230, 145 So. 617 (1933).

Any damages recoverable by taxpayer for tax collector's failure to present check before failure of bank where such only as were allowed at common law, not under statute requiring presentment within reasonable time. Sunflower Compress Co. v. Clark, 165 Miss. 219, 144 So. 477 (1932), error overruled, 165 Miss. 230, 145 So. 617 (1933).

§ 75-3-502. Dishonor.

(a) Dishonor of a note is governed by the following rules:

(1) If the note is payable on demand, the note is dishonored if presentment is duly made to the maker and the note is not paid on the day of presentment.

(2) If the note is not payable on demand and is payable at or through a bank or the terms of the note require presentment, the note is dishonored if presentment is duly made and the note is not paid on the day it becomes payable or the day of presentment, whichever is later.

(3) If the note is not payable on demand and paragraph (2) does not apply, the note is dishonored if it is not paid on the day it becomes payable.

(b) Dishonor of an unaccepted draft other than a documentary draft is governed by the following rules:

(1) If a check is duly presented for payment to the payor bank otherwise than for immediate payment over the counter, the check is dishonored if the payor bank makes timely return of the check or sends timely notice of dishonor or nonpayment under Section 75-4-301 or 75-4-302, or becomes accountable for the amount of the check under Section 75-4-302.

(2) If a draft is payable on demand and paragraph (1) does not apply, the draft is dishonored if presentment for payment is duly made to the drawee and the draft is not paid on the day of presentment.

(3) If a draft is payable on a date stated in the draft, the draft is dishonored if (i) presentment for payment is duly made to the drawee and payment is not made on the day the draft becomes payable or the day of presentment, whichever is later, or (ii) presentment for acceptance is duly made before the day the draft becomes payable and the draft is not accepted on the day of presentment.

(4) If a draft is payable on elapse of a period of time after sight or acceptance, the draft is dishonored if presentment for acceptance is duly made and the draft is not accepted on the day of presentment.

(c) Dishonor of an unaccepted documentary draft occurs according to the rules stated in subsections (b)(2), (3), and (4), except that payment or acceptance may be delayed without dishonor until no later than the close of the third business day of the drawee following the day on which payment or acceptance is required by those paragraphs.

(d) Dishonor of an accepted draft is governed by the following rules:

(1) If the draft is payable on demand, the draft is dishonored if presentment for payment is duly made to the acceptor and the draft is not paid on the day of presentment.

(2) If the draft is not payable on demand, the draft is dishonored if presentment for payment is duly made to the acceptor and payment is not made on the day it becomes payable or the day of presentment, whichever is later.

(e) In any case in which presentment is otherwise required for dishonor under this section and presentment is excused under Section 75-3-504, dishonor occurs without presentment if the instrument is not duly accepted or paid.

(f) If a draft is dishonored because timely acceptance of the draft was not made and the person entitled to demand acceptance consents to a late acceptance, from the time of acceptance the draft is treated as never having been dishonored.

In action by bank against indorser of check who had deposited check in his account with plaintiff after indorsing it, where (1) drawer lacked authority to draw such check, and (2) defendant indorser, after being informed of drawer's lack of authority, refused to pay plaintiff amount represented by check, court held (1) that plaintiff had never dishonored such check under UCC § 3-507(1)(a), (2) that plaintiff had made final payment of check because it had failed to return it or give notice of its dishonor before plaintiff's was not subrogated to such company's rights against defendant. Dozier v. First Ala. Bank, 363 So. 2d 781 (Ala. Civ. App. 1978).

Lack of acceptance by drawee bank was not defense to action by payee against drawer to recover on dishonored draft, since UCC § 3-507 gave holder immediate right of recourse against drawer upon drawee's refusal to accept draft and since drawer engaged under UCC § 3-413 to pay draft upon dishonor. Baum v. Cotton States Mut. Ins. Co., 141 Ga. App. 636, 234 S.E.2d 178 (1977).

Bank which dishonored check upon presentment, although sufficient funds were in the account, owed no duty to holder of check, and holder's remedy was against drawer and not bank. Stewart v. Citizens & S. Nat'l Bank, 138 Ga. App. 209, 225 S.E.2d 761 (1976).

When an indorser has such knowledge or so participates in the affairs of the primary party that the indorser knows that the commercial paper will not be honored by the primary party it is not required that the holder go through the useless gesture of making a presentment and of notifying the secondary party in order to hold him liable. Makel Textiles, Inc. v. Dolly Originals, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 95 (1967, NY Sup).

When an indorser is the principal officer of the corporate maker and knows personally that payment will not be made by the corporation, there is no necessity for making a presentment of the note for payment and giving the indorser notice of the dishonor. *Makel Textiles, Inc. v. An indorser in blank of a note before its delivery is an accommodation indorser secondarily liable thereon, and is discharged to the extent that the payee receives payment on the note from the maker of it, from the proceeds of property conveyed to secure it, or from proceeds of insurance of such property against fire with loss payable to such payee. Wright v. North River Ins. Co., 23 F.2d 548 (5th Cir. 1928), cert. denied, 277 U.S. 604, 48 S. Ct. 601, 72 L. Ed. 1011 (1928).

§ 75-3-503. Notice of dishonor.

(a) The obligation of an indorser stated in Section 75-3-415(a) and the obligation of a drawer stated in Section 75-3-414(d) may not be enforced unless (i) the indorser or drawer is given notice of dishonor of the instrument complying with this section or (ii) notice of dishonor is excused under Section 75-3-504(b).

(b) Notice of dishonor may be given by any person; may be given by any commercially reasonable means, including an oral, written, or electronic communication; and is sufficient if it reasonably identifies the instrument and indicates that the instrument has been dishonored or has not been paid or accepted. Return of an instrument given to a bank for collection is sufficient notice of dishonor.

(c) Subject to Section 75-3-504(c), with respect to an instrument taken for collection by a collecting bank, notice of dishonor must be given (i) by the bank before midnight of the next banking day following the banking day on which the bank receives notice of dishonor of the instrument, or (ii) by any other person within thirty (30) days following the day on which the person receives notice of dishonor. With respect to any other instrument, notice of dishonor must be given within thirty (30) days following the day on which dishonor occurs.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-501.

11. In general.

Indorser is secondary party under UCC § 3-102(1)(d), and his liability is subject to preconditions of (1) presentment under UCC § 3-501(1)(b) and (2) proper notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a). Thus if, without excuse, any necessary presentment or notice of dishonor is delayed beyond time it is due, indorser is discharged from liability under UCC § 3-502(1)(a). Nevada State Bank v. Fischer, 93 Nev. 317, 565 P.2d 332 (1977).

Indorser of note who waived all notice of dishonor and right of protest became primarily liable along with maker and was not just surety with only contingent liability. Crescent Credit Corp. v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 51 Ala. App. 683, 288 So. 2d 744 (Civ. App. 1974).

In action against endorser of dishonored check which covered part of purchase price of automobile under retail installment contract, plaintiff's claim was defeated by his failure to give timely notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a), thus discharging endorser from any liability on draft under UCC § 3-502(1)(a) as well as from liability on underlying obligation under UCC § 3-802(1)(b); argument that no notice of dishonor was required under UCC § 3-501(4) was rejected where draft was endorsed before, not after, maturity. Chandler Motors, Inc. v. Dunham, 127 N.J. Super. 320, 317 A.2d 386 (App. Div. 1974).

Payee of note payable at bank (treated as equivalent of draft drawn on bank under New York "Alternative A" to Code § 3-121) need not allege presentment and notice of dishonor in complaint against maker or drawer; although Code § 3-501(2) provides that unless excused, in case of drawer, notice of dishonor is necessary, failure to give such notice discharges drawer only as stated in Code § 3-502(1)(b) which becomes matter of defense to be pleaded in answer. County Restaurant & Bar Equip. Co. v. Shaw Mechanical Contractors, 56 Misc. 2d 832 (1968).

Presentment and notice of dishonor are entirely excused when notes contain waiver by party to be charged. Katski v. Boehm, 249 Md. 568, 241 A.2d 129 (1968).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-508.

12. In general.

Notice of dishonor may be given in any reasonable manner; it may be oral or written and in any terms which identify the instrument and state that it has been dishonored. Leaderbrand v. Central State Bank, 202 Kan. 450, 450 P.2d 1 (1969).

The provisions of paragraph (3) of the instant section that "notice may be given in any reasonable manner" and that "it may be oral or written", and the provision of paragraph (4) that "Written notice is given when sent although it is not received", while couched in somewhat different language, follow, in substance the comparable provisions of the former Negotiable Instruments Law, relating to the form and manner of giving notice and the deposit of notice in the post office. Durkin v. Siegel, 340 Mass. 445, 165 N.E.2d 81 (1960).

13. Written notice.

Where (1) bank customer asked bank official, who was not a teller, how customer could get checks made payable to customer "taken care of," (2) official took checks and told another bank employee to put them in for collection and give customer receipts therefor, and (3) employee complied with such order and gave receipts to customer, bank could not successfully contend, in defense of its failure to give customer notice of dishonor of checks by bank's midnight deadline, that receipts constituted written notice of dishonor because (1) receipts were merely bank's written acknowledgment of its acceptance of checks for collection, and (2) since receipts did not indicate that checks had been dishonored, receipts did not comply with UCC § 3-508(3), which requires that written notice of dishonor must bear some terms stating the dishonor. Available Iron & Metal Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 56 Ill. App. 3d 516, 371 N.E.2d 1032 (1st Dist. 1977).

Notice of dishonor required by UCC § 3-508 does not require inclusion of name of holder of dishonored instrument. First-Stroudsburg Nat'l Bank v. Nixon, 53 Pa. D. & C.2d 672 (1971).

14. Oral notice.

Under UCC § 3-508(3), an oral notice of dishonor must be given in a reasonable manner and in terms which state that the instrument has been dishonored. Available Iron & Metal Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 56 Ill. App. 3d 516, 371 N.E.2d 1032 (1st Dist. 1977).

Collecting bank was not entitled to revoke settlement on dishonored checks and charge back account of depository bank where collecting bank gave depository bank only oral notice of dishonor, where although UCC § 3-508 provides that notice of dishonor may be given in any reasonable manner and that it may be oral or written, and although UCC § 4-104(3) provides that § 3-508 applies to interbank transactions, UCC § 4-212, under which collecting bank may revoke settlement given in case of dishonor and charge back amount to its customer if it "sends" notification of fact, required notice of dishonor to be given in writing and, under UCC § 4-102(1), prevailed over conflicting provisions of UCC § 3-508. Valley Bank & Trust Co. v. First Sec. Bank, 538 P.2d 298 (Utah 1975).

Payor bank was not liable to collecting bank for conversion of checks which were returned unpaid to collecting bank, notwithstanding checks were marked "Uncollected funds" rather than "Insufficient Funds" while there were sufficient funds on deposit in customer's account to pay part of checks, where officer of payor bank talked with officer of collecting bank and informed him of payor bank's intention to dishonor checks and make offset against customer's account for obligations due to payor bank, since collecting bank had ample time thereafter to inquire into specifics of dishonor; payor bank gave proper notice under UCC § 3-508(3) and its action of dishonoring checks was legal and timely under clearinghouse rule. Security Trust Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 79 Misc. 2d 523 (1974).

A telephone call from one of the makers of a note, stating that they would not pay unless certain things were done, was sufficient notice of dishonor, because notice under this section may be given in any reasonable manner, oral or written, and in any terms which identify the instrument and state that it has been dishonored. First Pa. Banking & Trust Co. v. De Lise, 186 Pa. Super. 398, 142 A.2d 401 (1958).

15. Timeliness of notice.

In action by plaintiff customer against depository and collecting bank for wrongfully debiting plaintiff's checking account with amount of certain dishonored checks that had apparently been forged, where plaintiff introduced evidence which might indicate that bank had dishonored some or all of such checks after its midnight deadline for taking such action under UCC § 4-211(2) and giving notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-508(2), trial court's premature entry of judgment for bank at conclusion of direct and cross-examination of plaintiff's only witness deprived plaintiff of opportunity to establish prima facie case of proper deposit of such checks and improper debit thereof, so as to shift burden to bank of going forward and showing that it had acted within reasonable time in debiting plaintiff's account without the statutorily required notice within 24 hours following day of deposit. Trading Assocs. v. Trust Co. Bank, 142 Ga. App. 229, 235 S.E.2d 661 (1977).

A secondary party cannot be held liable unless there has been compliance with UCC § 3-508(2). Standard Premium Plan Corp. v. Wolf, 56 Misc. 2d 522 (1968).

16. Certificate of protest as evidence of presentment and notice of dishonor.

This section carries forward the provisions of § 261 of the Negotiable Instruments Law defining a protest as a certificate of dishonor made under the hand and seal of a notary public, and presence of the seal as well as the signature of the notary is essential to constitute such a notice evidence in and of itself of presentment and dishonor. A. & L. Trading Co. v. Herald Square Bakers & Caterers, Inc., 40 Misc. 2d 72 (1963).

Indorsers of a promissory note given by a corporation could not be held liable thereon without due proof of notice of its presentment and dishonor, as to which the burden of proof was on plaintiff, and a certificate of protest signed, but not sealed, by a notary public was insufficient to satisfy the statutory requirement. A. & L. Trading Co. v. Herald Square Bakers & Caterers, Inc., 40 Misc. 2d 72 (1963).

§ 75-3-504. Excused presentment and notice of dishonor.

(a) Presentment for payment or acceptance of an instrument is excused if (i) the person entitled to present the instrument cannot with reasonable diligence make presentment, (ii) the maker or acceptor has repudiated an obligation to pay the instrument or is dead or in insolvency proceedings, (iii) by the terms of the instrument presentment is not necessary to enforce the obligation of indorsers or the drawer, (iv) the drawer or indorser whose obligation is being enforced has waived presentment or otherwise has no reason to expect or right to require that the instrument be paid or accepted, or (v) the drawer instructed the drawee not to pay or accept the draft or the drawee was not obligated to the drawer to pay the draft.

(b) Notice of dishonor is excused if (i) by the terms of the instrument notice of dishonor is not necessary to enforce the obligation of a party to pay the instrument, or (ii) the party whose obligation is being enforced waived notice of dishonor. A waiver of presentment is also a waiver of notice of dishonor.

(c) Delay in giving notice of dishonor is excused if the delay was caused by circumstances beyond the control of the person giving the notice and the person giving the notice exercised reasonable diligence after the cause of the delay ceased to operate.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-511.

11. In general; express waiver.

Where decedent signed two promissory notes either as co-maker or endorser, both notes contained clause which accelerated payment on death of any of signators of notes, and both notes contained clause under which subscribing party waived presentment, demand for payment and notice of dishonor, upon decedent's death two notes became due at option of bank that held them and all subscribers of notes were liable for balance due; thus, when life insurance company paid over to bank proceeds of decedent's life insurance policy, under which bank had been named as beneficiary to secure loan to decedent, bank was at liberty to apply proceeds of policy toward payment of notes. In re Estate of Gruder, 89 Misc. 2d 477 (1977).

Indorser liability, absent disclaimer thereof, is secondary only because of rights of presentment and dishonor, notice of dishonor, and protest, which are specifically provided for by UCC § 3-414. However, under UCC § 3-511, such rights can be expressly waived by language on face of instrument. Bankers Trust of S.C. v. Culbertson, 268 S.C. 564, 235 S.E.2d 130 (S.C. 1977).

Under UCC § 3-511, presentment and notice of acceleration were not required of creditor prior to acceleration of maturity of installment note upon debtor's default, where note and security agreement executed by debtor contained express waivers of presentment of note for payment, demand for payment and notice of intention to accelerate maturity. Sylvester v. Watkins, 538 S.W.2d 827 (Tex. Civ. App. 1976), ref. n.r.e. (Nov. 10, 1976).

Where indorsers of note indorsed instrument without clear indication of capacity or intention to qualify status, such signatory became indorser by virtue of UCC § 3-402 and liable for payment of instrument upon dishonor by its payor under UCC § 3-414(1); where note provided that "presentment for payment and notice of nonpayment are hereby waived", indorsers automatically waived presentment or notice pursuant to UCC § 3-511(2). First New Haven Nat'l Bank v. Clarke, 33 Conn. Supp. 179, 368 A.2d 613 (1976).

Indorser of note who waived all notice of dishonor and right of protest became primarily liable along with maker and was not just surety with only contingent liability. Crescent Credit Corp. v. Union Bank & Trust Co., 51 Ala. App. 683, 288 So. 2d 744 (Civ. App. 1974).

Under UCC §§ 3-415(2) and 3-511(2), holder of 7 demand promissory notes made by corporate maker was entitled to enforcement against two individual accommodation indorsers without presentment, protest or notice of dishonor, where notes provided that maker and indorsers waived presentment, protest and notice of dishonor; there was nothing which permitted accommodation indorsers to escape from effect of waiver provision, which by its express terms was applicable to indorser, merely because they were accommodation indorsers; furthermore, individual accommodation indorsers were not entitled to assert defense of usury inasmuch as it was not available defense for corporate maker of notes. Bank of Del. v. NMD Realty Co., 325 A.2d 108 (Del. Super. 1974).

Where note sued on and incorporation in complaint contained express waiver of presentment and notice, contention that complaint be dismissed for failure to allege presentment and notice of dishonor is without merit. Fett Developing Co. v. Garvin, 119 Ga. App. 569, 168 S.E.2d 212 (1969).

Where an indorsement is made under a waiver of notice of protest, no such notice is required and the indorser cannot object that the notice had been sent to a former address at which he no longer lived. Lizza Asphalt Constr. Co. v. Greenvale Constr. Co., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 954 (1968, NY Sup).

Where the face of the paper contains a waiver of notice of dishonor and protest, a secondary party is not released by the failure to give such notice or make protest. Abby Fin. Corp. v. Weydig Auto Supplies Unlimited, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 858 (1967, NY Sup).

Where promissory note stated on its face "protest waived," such waiver is binding upon all parties, and therefore fact that note was not presented for payment, was not protested for nonpayment, and no notice of protest or nonpayment was given to the indorser does not constitute defense to action to recover on such note. Gerrity Co. v. Padalino, 51 Misc. 2d 928 (1966).

12. Countermanding, dishonoring instrument.

Where buyer of automobile resold it to third party, received check in payment therefor, original seller took possession of automobile from third party and third party notified buyer he was canceling transaction, although ownership of car passed to third party at time payment was accepted and car was delivered, such payment was conditional under UCC § 2-511(3) and, although check was never presented for payment, third party in effect dishonored check and countermanded payment when he notified buyer he was canceling transaction; under UCC § 2-507(2), third party's right to retain or dispose of automobile was conditional upon his making payment due and thus, when his check was dishonored, buyer had right to reclaim automobile by maintaining action in trover against original owner. Lawrence v. Graham, 29 Md. App. 422, 349 A.2d 271 (1975).

Where defendant-indorser of note directed his bank not to honor note, neither he nor his corporation was entitled to notice of protest. Franklin Nat'l Bank v. Eurez Constr. Corp., 60 Misc. 2d 499 (1969).

The indorser of an instrument cannot require notice of dishonor when he had countermanded payment of the instrument. General Bronze Corp. v. Barclay Towers, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 765 (1967, NY Sup).

A bank accepting a check from the payee for a deposit, crediting the amount thereof to the payee's account and permitting him to withdraw the full amount thereof prior to notice of dishonor, is a holder of the check, taking for value, and entitled to recover from the drawer thereon. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

13. Expectation of nonacceptance.

In action by mother and son against father's executrix to recover on instrument in form of check payable to order of son for $20,000, executed by father in 1969 and delivered to mother, post dated November 4, 1984, where check was endorsed by father to effect that $20,000 should be taken from his estate at death for his son, since drawee bank was not authorized to pay check under UCC § 4-405 more than 10 days after drawer's death, if it knew of fact of death, presentment to bank was entirely excused under UCC § 3-511(2) as futile gesture and provision for direct payment merely restated result prescribed by law in accord with UCC §§ 3-413(2) and 3-507(1)(b). Smith v. Gentilotti, 371 Mass. 839, 359 N.E.2d 953 (1977).

Where single corporate officer acted on behalf of corporation as maker of note and on behalf of himself as indorser thereof, it cannot be concluded that dishonor which he made on behalf of corporation was not known to him individually as endorser or that request for extension and forbearance which he made on behalf of corporation was not known to him individually; therefore, he waived second and formal and useless presentment and notice and protest to himself individually as endorser. Trafalgar Square, Ltd. v. Green, 57 Pa. D. & C.2d 166 (1972).

When an indorser is the principal officer of the corporate maker and knows personally that payment will not be made by the corporation, there is no necessity for making a presentment of the note for payment and giving the indorser notice of the dishonor. Makel Textiles, Inc. v. Dolly Originals, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 95 (1967, NY Sup).

Notice of dishonor is unnecessary where the party to whom notice would be given already has knowledge of the matters to which the notice would relate by virtue of his being an officer or a stockholder of the primary party. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

When an indorser is a person who is an officer of the primary party there is no need to notify him of a default by the primary party since he has such knowledge by virtue of his office. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

14. Refusal to pay or accept.

Conduct of makers and indorsers of note constituted waiver of any defect in presentment where both makers and indorsers requested extensions of time for payment of note. Wiener v. Van Winkle, 273 Cal. App. 2d 774 (2d Dist. 1969).

15. Dishonor by nonacceptance.

Where payor bank dishonored check by midnight deadline for reason of insufficient funds in checking account and account remained insufficient, payor bank was, under UCC § 3-511, excused upon subsequent presentment from dishonoring check by midnight deadline otherwise required under UCC §§ 4-104 and 4-302. Goodman v. Norman Bank of Commerce, 551 P.2d 661 (Okla. Ct. App. 1976).

Where a draft has been dishonored by nonacceptance a later presentment for payment and any notice of dishonor and protest for nonpayment are excused unless in the meantime the instrument has been accepted; reference to dishonor of a "draft" "by nonacceptance" includes the dishonor of a check by nonpayment. Leaderbrand v. Central State Bank, 202 Kan. 450, 450 P.2d 1 (1969).

16. —Applicability to various instruments.

Payor bank which did not return before its midnight deadline check that was re-presented to it for payment, after such check had previously been dishonored by payor bank for insufficient funds, was not excused by UCC § 3-511(4) for not meeting midnight deadline because excuse rule of UCC § 3-511(4) applies only to time items, such as drafts, which have been dishonored by nonacceptance, and does not apply to demand items, such as checks, which have been dishonored by nonpayment. Furthermore, since check was not being held for protest, payor bank under UCC § 4-301(1) could revoke provisional settlement for check only by returning it before bank's midnight deadline and not by giving notice of check's dishonor. Therefore, even assuming that further notice of dishonor when check was re-presented was necessary to make drawer liable on check or to revive drawer's liability on underlying contract of sale, provisions of UCC § 3-511(4) excusing notice of dishonor could not apply because notice of dishonor was not available to payor bank as means of revoking its provisional settlement for check. Blake v. Woodford Bank & Trust Co., 555 S.W.2d 589 (Ky. Ct. App. 1977).

In action by payees of dishonored checks against payor bank, under UCC § 4-302 bank was liable on 2 checks for violating "Midnight deadline" rule where bank's vital interest in drawer's financial condition required that it exercise greater degree of diligence under UCC § 4-108(2) than would be required under normal circumstances, where bank's only explanation of delay was vice-president's testimony as to normal operating procedures, and where in light of special relationship between payor bank and drawer, bank could not rely on UCC § 4-103 to escape strict liability rule of UCC § 4-302 by attempting to establish existence of agreement between parties under which payees acquiesced in bank's holding checks sent for collection past "midnight deadline"; bank was liable on remaining four checks which had been presented to bank and payment refused at least once before since under UCC § 3-511(4) notice of dishonor is not excused with respect to demand items; oral notice of dishonor was insufficient to release bank from strict liability rule due to bank's special interest in drawer's financial condition. Sun River Cattle Co. v. Miners Bank, 164 Mont. 237, 521 P.2d 679 (1974), supplemented, 164 Mont. 479, 525 P.2d 19 (1974).

Subsection (4) of Code 1942, § 41A:3-511 [UCC § 3-511] had no application to documentary drafts dishonored by nonpayment. Wiley v. Peoples Bank & Trust Co., 438 F.2d 513 (5th Cir. 1971), on remand, 462 F.2d 179 (5th Cir. 1972).

17. —Particular actions as waiver.

Statement in letter which accompanied notes that the notes could be repaid in stock of the borrowing corporation and further stating that the letter was not intended to create any legally binding obligation between the parties did not constitute an abandonment of the lender's right to present the notes for payment. Thor Dahl Indus. Corp. v. Christianssen, 70 Misc. 2d 684 (1972).

18. Waiver of protest; effect.

Under the provisions of subsecs. (5) and (6) a waiver of protest is also a waiver of presentment and of notice of dishonor, and where the waiver is embodied in the note itself it is binding on all parties, and where note stated on its face that protest was waived, failure of holder to present it for payment, protest nonpayment, and give notice of protest were no defenses to its payment. Gerrity Co. v. Padalino, 51 Misc. 2d 928 (1966).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

19. Decisions under Code 1942 § 123.

Where excuse for presentment of negotiable instrument not shown overdue instrument is not dishonored for nonpayment. Carter v. Jennings, 134 Miss. 263, 98 So. 687 (1924).

20. Decisions under Code 1942 § 150.

Notice of dishonor or defect therein held waived by accommodation endorser, after maturity of note, promising to pay. Brewer v. Automobile Sales Co., 147 Miss. 603, 111 So. 578 (1927).

21. Decisions under Code 1942 § 153.

Notice of dishonor is not dispensed with, where holder falls short of showing reasonable diligence on his own part in endeavoring to locate the maker, although two others, on independent missions, were unable to locate the maker. Carter v. Jennings, 134 Miss. 263, 98 So. 687 (1924).

22. Decisions under Code 1942 § 189.

Where a bank to which a draft had been forwarded for collection had acted in good faith and with due diligence in performance of its duties as collecting agent, and being unable to pay the draft because the drawee had not accepted it, the bank was at liberty to apply the drawee's available funds to the payment of debt to the bank. Thack v. First Nat'l Bank & Trust Co., 206 F.2d 180, 39 A.L.R.2d 1290 (5th Cir. 1953).

§ 75-3-505. Evidence of dishonor.

(a) The following are admissible as evidence and create a presumption of dishonor and of any notice of dishonor stated:

(1) A document regular in form as provided in subsection (b) which purports to be a protest;

(2) A purported stamp or writing of the drawee, payor bank, or presenting bank on or accompanying the instrument stating that acceptance or payment has been refused unless reasons for the refusal are stated and the reasons are not consistent with dishonor;

(3) A book or record of the drawee, payor bank, or collecting bank, kept in the usual course of business which shows dishonor, even if there is no evidence of who made the entry.

(b) A protest is a certificate of dishonor made by a United States consul or vice-consul, or a notary public or other person authorized to administer oaths by the law of the place where dishonor occurs. It may be made upon information satisfactory to that person. The protest must identify the instrument and certify either that presentment has been made or, if not made, the reason why it was not made, and that the instrument has been dishonored by nonacceptance or nonpayment. The protest may also certify that notice of dishonor has been given to some or all parties.

Under UCC § 3-510(b) and state statute governing admissibility of entries on records made in regular course of business, notation "account closed" on check deposited by customer of bank in customer's account was admissible as primary evidence to establish fact stated in such notation. Serve v. First Nat'l Bank, 143 Ga. App. 239, 237 S.E.2d 719 (1977).

Purported stamp or writing of drawee bank on check or accompanying paper stating that acceptance or payment has been refused because there is "no account" is admissible in evidence and creates presumption of dishonor. State v. Young, 203 Kan. 296, 454 P.2d 724 (1969).

The requirement of the New York Negotiable Instruments Law that a protest must be made under the hand and seal of a notary making it is carried over by the instant provision of the Uniform Commercial Code defining a protest as a certificate of dishonor made under the hand and seal of a notary public. A. & L. Trading Co. v. Herald Square Bakers & Caterers, Inc., 40 Misc. 2d 72 (1963).

A notary's unsealed certificate of dishonor is insufficient to establish due mailing thereof to indorsers, and so is the notary's testimony where he did not, himself, attend to the mailing. A. & L. Trading Co. v. Herald Square Bakers & Caterers, Inc., 40 Misc. 2d 72 (1963).

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-601.

11. In general; payment as discharge.

Where bank accepted third party's payment of note, note was marked "Paid" and delivered to third party who later gave it to maker, maker's obligation to bank was effectively discharged under UCC §§ 3-601 and 3-603, notwithstanding third party paid note with funds that he was not authorized to use, especially in light of fact that bank knew source of third party's funds and maker did not. Jacobson v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., 407 F. Supp. 821 (S.D. Iowa 1976).

Payment of note by maker discharged liability of maker and all endorsers on note. Cipra v. Seeger, 215 Kan. 951, 529 P.2d 130 (1974).

Evidence that defendant comaker of note signed as accommodation for other comaker, that he received no benefits from loan, and that note was paid off by second comaker supported conclusion that first comaker was accommodation party under UCC § 3-415(1), who was discharged under UCC §§ 3-601(1)(a) and 3-603 when instrument was paid, and that any contract which may have existed to sue the first comaker on note was, therefore, unenforceable. Marcus v. Wilson, 16 Ill. App. 3d 724, 306 N.E.2d 554 (1st Dist. 1973).

12. Tender of payment.

Indorser of negotiable instrument is entitled to protection afforded him by any specific security for payment of debt that principal debtor may have given holder or which holder may have acquired by operation of law, and if holder releases or voluntarily destroys any part of such security, indorser is discharged to extent that such security would have gone to pay debt (holding that while subordination of second mortgage to rank of third mortgage impaired subrogation rights of indorsers of handnote sued on, indorsers were not thereby discharged from liability on such note under UCC § 3-601(1)(d) and § 3-606(1)(b), since they completely failed to show extent of any prejudice from such subordination and also failed to show that collateral had been released without their knowledge or consent). Poynot v. J & T Devs., Inc., 355 So. 2d 1052 (La. App. 1978).

13. Fraudulent and material alteration.

Where (1) maker of promissory notes negotiated them on strength of guarantor's guaranty thereof and willingness to pledge two certificates of deposit as security for their repayment, and (2) notes contained request by maker for credit life insurance which bank that made loan to maker did not obtain, court held that guarantor was not discharged as surety on notes under UCC § 3-601(1)(f), dealing with discharge of party from liability on an instrument by fraudulent and material alteration of instrument, since bank's failure to procure life insurance for maker did not constitute alteration of terms of notes but was, at most, a violation of bank's obligations thereunder (also holding that although bank's failure to procure the life insurance impaired collateral within meaning of UCC § 3-606(1)(b), guarantor expressly consented to such impairment when he signed guaranty agreement). DeKalb County Bank v. Haldi, 146 Ga. App. 257, 246 S.E.2d 116 (1978).

Where several banks orally agreed with peanut company to pay as presented company's checks to growers for peanut purchases, company got possession of checks when banks were reimbursed, not at later time when company, upon discovering forged indorsements on checks, paid grower-payee; and by getting grower-payee to indorse check already in company's possession, and which had ceased to be negotiable instrument, company did not relinquish its claim against bank for wrongfully paying check bearing forged indorsement; to the contrary, company's conduct went to prove damage which company suffered from bank's paying to another its check intended for grower, but of which grower never became holder.

Columbian Peanut Co. v. Frosteg, 472 F.2d 476 (5th Cir. Ga. 1973), reh'g denied, 474 F.2d 1347 (5th Cir. Ga. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 824, 94 S. Ct. 126, 38 L. Ed. 2d 57 (1973).

14. Discharge under simple contract rules.

Under UCC § 3-601(2), oral agreement to discharge party to negotiable instrument may be given effect where such agreement is supported by consideration. Brannon v. Langston, 375 So. 2d 231 (Miss. 1979).

The import of UCC § 3-601(2) is that in situations other than those listed in UCC § 3-601(1), the law providing for the discharge of a surety or guarantor of a simple contract for the payment of money applies equally to a surety or guarantor of a negotiable instrument. Therefore, a novation that would discharge a surety or guarantor of a simple contract for the payment of money will also discharge a surety or guarantor of a negotiable instrument. Sewell v. Akins, 147 Ga. App. 454, 249 S.E.2d 274 (1978).

Where holder orally agreed to cancel two promissory notes in return for transfer and lease of maker's bowling alley business, notes were discharged by oral agreement under UCC § 3-601(2); since there was valuable consideration involved in oral agreement between holder and maker, such agreement was not required to be in writing in order to discharge two prior promissory notes; it is only when there is gratuitous discharge that UCC § 3-605(1), requiring a writing, applies. Brunswick Corp. v. Briscoe, 523 S.W.2d 115 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

Maker of note was not discharged by novation, although maker claimed that he had entered into new agreement with payee's representative to effect that payee would release him if he returned certain merchandise, where maker admitted that payee's representative stated he had no authority to enter into such agreement and where there was no evidence that payee had ratified agreement. Ampex Corp. v. Appel Media, Inc., 374 F. Supp. 1114 (W.D. Pa. 1974).

Where undisputed evidence shows that farm was sold by foreclosure to someone other than lessor, there was an affirmative showing of failure of consideration on lessor's part under lease and a corresponding discharge of lessee's obligation to pay rent thereunder, which in turn discharged lessee from liability on notes which had been executed in sum of yearly rental and assigned or transferred to bank. Tallahassee Bank & Trust Co. v. Raines, 125 Ga. App. 263, 187 S.E.2d 320 (1972).

15. Party reacquires instrument in own right.

Where amendments to real-estate sales contract and note were executed as part of same transaction and amendments expressly stated that time for closing transaction was being extended in consideration of note, parties to contract thus expressed intent to close sale at later date under same conditions and stipulations contained in contract. Thus, seller's failure to comply with condition precedent to buyer's obligation to close sale constituted failure of consideration for note, which was signed by buyer and buyer's comaker, and furnished comaker with complete defense as matter of law, since UCC § 3-601(2) codifies principle that failure of consideration on underlying contract discharges liability on note. Hunter v. McLelland, 143 Ga. App. 746, 240 S.E.2d 153 (1977).

Under UCC § 3-601(3)(a), liability of all parties on note was discharged when maker reacquired note in his own right by taking assignment thereof. Best Fertilizers of Arizona, Inc. v. Burns, 116 Ariz. 492, 570 P.2d 179 (1977).

Promissory notes, executed by closely held corporation and endorsed by stockholders of corporation, were not discharged when they were acquired from payee bank by executor of deceased endorser; among other things, instruments were acquired by executor, not by deceased endorser, and executor was, therefore, not prior party to instrument. Eikel v. Bristow Corp., 529 S.W.2d 795 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

When the face of the paper authorizes extensions and declares that the secondary party shall not be released thereby, and extension does not release a secondary party. Abby Fin. Corp. v. Weydig Auto Supplies Unlimited, Inc., 4 U.C.C. Rep. Serv. 858 (1967, NY Sup).

16. Practice and procedure.

In action by holder of promissory note executed by principal maker and two comakers against comakers, where note was stamped with legend indicating it had been paid but where there was scrawl in ink across area bearing stamped legend, case would be remanded for determination whether note had been discharged by payment or cancellation; under UCC § 3-603 maker of note does not lose right to assert that note was discharged by payment merely by leaving it in possession of payee when paying it; holder was not entitled to recover on note if it had been paid, but was entitled to recover if the stamp thereon was unintentional or made under mistake or without authority of holder. Household Fin. Co. v. Watson, 522 S.W.2d 111 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

In action to recover on notes, under UCC § 3-119 and 3-601, question of fact existed as to whether parties entered into written contract which relieved defendants of personal liability on notes, or whether parties performed under oral contract to same effect. DiLeo v. Werb, 50 A.D.2d 570 (2d Dep't 1975).

17. Unexcused delay; disclosure.

Indorser is secondary party under UCC § 3-102(1)(d), and his liability is subject to preconditions of (1) presentment under UCC § 3-501(1)(b) and (2) proper notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a). Thus if, without excuse, any necessary presentment or notice of dishonor is delayed beyond time it is due, indorser is discharged from liability under UCC § 3-502(1)(a). Nevada State Bank v. Fischer, 93 Nev. 317, 565 P.2d 332 (1977).

Where accommodation indorser, on May 1, 1970, indorsed check drawn on out-of-state bank which was made payable to drawer; where cashing bank cashed check for payee drawer and initiated collection on check through another bank on same day; where almost 90 days later, on July 28, 1970, collection bank notified cashing bank that check had been dishonored with notice stating "original lost in transit-account closed"; where on July 29, 1970, cashing bank debited accommodation indorser's account for amount of check and notified her in writing of payor bank's dishonor of check; and where record did not disclose which of several banks involved in collection process had lost check or delayed taking action with regard to it, (1) accommodation indorser's liability was discharged under UCC § 3-502(1)(a) because notice of check's dishonor was unreasonably delayed by failure of unknown bank in collection process to observe its midnight deadline under UCC § 4-104(h) for giving such notice, and (2) cashing bank could look for recovery from such unknown bank which had committed violation of law involved. Nevada State Bank v. Fischer, 93 Nev. 317, 565 P.2d 332 (1977).

In action against endorser of dishonored check which covered part of purchase price of automobile under retail installment contract, plaintiff's claim was defeated by his failure to give timely notice of dishonor under UCC § 3-501(2)(a), thus discharging endorser from any liability on draft under UCC § 3-502(1)(a) as well as from liability on underlying obligation under UCC § 3-802(1)(b); argument that no notice of dishonor was required under UCC § 3-501(4) was rejected where draft was endorsed before, not after, maturity. Chandler Motors, Inc. v. Dunham, 127 N.J. Super. 320, 317 A.2d 386 (App. Div. 1974).

Under UCC §§ 3-502 and 3-503(2), obligation of drawer of dishonored uncertified checks was not per se discharged by payee's presentment of checks for payment more than 30 days after date of issue, where record did not show that drawee bank had become insolvent during delay, thereby depriving drawer of funds with which to cover checks. Grist v. Osgood, 90 Nev. 165, 521 P.2d 368 (1974).

Assignee's delay of almost 18 months in presenting note to endorser was unreasonable and endorsers were discharged thereon. Hane v. Exten, 255 Md. 668, 259 A.2d 290 (1969).

Complaint in action against maker of note was not insufficient for failure to allege presentment and dishonor. County Restaurant & Bar Equip. Co. v. Shaw Mechanical Contractors, 56 Misc. 2d 832 (1968).

Where notes were past due when endorsed and no presentment for payment was made within reasonable time after endorsement, endorser was not bound. Sledge & Norfleet Co. v. Dye, 151 Miss. 693, 118 So. 414 (1928).

18. Decisions under Code 1942 § 160.

Mere possession alone by obligors under a note and deed of trust of the written evidence of their indebtedness was insufficient to meet the burden of proof resting on them to show payment, for the reasons that they had not thereby sufficiently proved, under paragraph (4) of this section, any act which would discharge a simple contract for the payment of money, and that they did not become the holders of the note at or after its maturity in their own rights, within the meaning of paragraph (5) of this section, since their complaint alleged, and their proof disclosed, that they came into possession of the note prior to its maturity, at a time when they were under no obligation to pay it. McCaslin v. Willis, 197 Miss. 366, 19 So. 2d 751, 156 A.L.R. 770 (1944).

Where the holder of accommodation paper, collateral for the note of the accommodated party, extended the time of payment of the latter's note by a binding agreement, without the knowledge or consent of the maker of the accommodation paper, the holder knowing the actual character of the paper at the time of the extension, the accommodation maker could not be held liable, notwithstanding that the accommodated party gave a cross note to the accommodation maker, since the latter was merely given to evidence the transaction. Hederman v. Cox, 188 Miss. 21, 193 So. 19 (1940).

Oral release of liability on promissory note for consideration was valid without instrument being delivered up to persons liable thereon. Hazlehurst Oil Mill & Fertilizer Co. v. Booze, 160 Miss. 136, 133 So. 120 (1931).

Statute providing for compromise with one of several joint and several debtors is not repealed by Negotiable Instruments Law. Branton v. O.B. Crittenden & Co., 145 Miss. 531, 111 So. 150 (1927).

Statute providing how an instrument is discharged held not conflicting with statute as to release of one of several joint and several debtors; where one of two joint and several debtors has been released, obligation must be credited with half thereof; plea setting up offset because of release of one of two joint and several debtors is good as partial defense. Branton v. O.B. Crittenden & Co., 145 Miss. 531, 111 So. 150 (1927).

Breach of maker's contemporary agreement no defense against bona fide holder. Despres, Bridges & Noel v. Hough Drug Co., 123 Miss. 598, 86 So. 359 (1920).

One signing note as surety held not estopped to claim benefit of payee bank's agreement that such note should be paid out of first money paid in by maker, because he was silent when after payment made to bank it pledged the note as collateral. Davidson v. Plant, 113 Miss. 482, 74 So. 328 (1917).

Bank's agreement that such note should be paid out of first money paid in by maker held valid. Davidson v. Plant, 113 Miss. 482, 74 So. 328 (1917).

Notes held released by execution and acceptance of new notes in renewal of obligation with a new principal obligor. Davidson v. Plant, 113 Miss. 482, 74 So. 328 (1917).

19. Decisions under Code 1942 § 161.

Stipulation over accommodation indorser's signature held not waiver of right to discharge from liability on creditor's failure to commence proceedings after notice. First Nat'l Bank v. Rau, 146 Miss. 520, 112 So. 688 (1927).

§ 75-3-602. Payment.

(a) Subject to subsection (b), an instrument is paid to the extent payment is made (i) by or on behalf of a party obliged to pay the instrument, and (ii) to a person entitled to enforce the instrument. To the extent of the payment, the obligation of the party obliged to pay the instrument is discharged even though payment is made with knowledge of a claim to the instrument under Section 75-3-306 by another person.

(b) The obligation of a party to pay the instrument is not discharged under subsection (a) if:

(1) A claim to the instrument under Section 75-3-306 is enforceable against the party receiving payment and (i) payment is made with knowledge by the payor that payment is prohibited by injunction or similar process of a court of competent jurisdiction, or (ii) in the case of an instrument other than a cashier's check, teller's check, or certified check, the party making payment accepted, from the person having a claim to the instrument, indemnity against loss resulting from refusal to pay the person entitled to enforce the instrument; or

(2) The person making payment knows that the instrument is a stolen instrument and pays a person it knows is in wrongful possession of the instrument.

Where decedent signed two promissory notes either as co-maker or endorser, both notes contained clause which accelerated payment on death of any of signators of notes, and both notes contained clause under which subscribing party waived presentment, demand for payment and notice of dishonor, upon decedent's death, two notes became due at option of bank that held them and all subscribers of notes were liable for balance due; thus, when life insurance company paid over to bank proceeds of decedent's life insurance policy, under which bank had been named as beneficiary to secure loan to decedent, bank was at liberty to apply proceeds of policy toward payment of notes. In re Estate of Gruder, 89 Misc. 2d 477 (1977).

§ 75-3-603. Tender of payment.

(a) If tender of payment of an obligation to pay an instrument is made to a person entitled to enforce the instrument, the effect of tender is governed by principles of law applicable to tender of payment under a simple contract.

(b) If tender of payment of an obligation to pay an instrument is made to a person entitled to enforce the instrument and the tender is refused, there is discharge, to the extent of the amount of the tender, of the obligation of an indorser or accommodation party having a right of recourse with respect to the obligation to which the tender relates.

(c) If tender of payment of an amount due on an instrument is made to a person entitled to enforce the instrument, the obligation of the obligor to pay interest after the due date on the amount tendered is discharged. If presentment is required with respect to an instrument and the obligor is able and ready to pay on the due date at every place of payment stated in the instrument, the obligor is deemed to have made tender of payment on the due date to the person entitled to enforce the instrument.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-603.

11. In general; what constitutes payment.

Where check is made payable to two payees jointly, only proper negotiation, that is, endorsement by both, results in payment contemplated by Code § 3-603; and collecting bank which negotiated check with endorsement of only one of two joint payees received only such right as its transferor had, and its credit to transferor's account did not operate as discharge of its liability on check. Feldman Constr. Co. v. Union Bank, 28 Cal. App. 3d 731 (2d Dist. 1972).

Maker gave check to payee each month; after check cleared payee again loaned maker same sum in exchange for another note; held, new note was not intended as renewal note but as new and independent note. National Bank of Commerce v. Green, 1 Wash. App. 713, 463 P.2d 187 (1969).

12. Payment as discharge.

Where bank accepted third party's payment of note, note was marked "Paid" and delivered to third party who later gave it to maker, maker's obligation to bank was effectively discharged under UCC §§ 3-601 and 3-603, notwithstanding third party paid note with funds that he was not authorized to use, especially in light of fact that bank knew source of third party's funds and maker did not. Jacobson v. Federal Deposit Ins. Corp., 407 F. Supp. 821 (S.D. Iowa 1976).

In action by holder of promissory note to recover payment from maker, maker could not assert defense that holder as trustee of trust estate acquired notes from trust estate in violation of statute; under UCC § 3-306(d), maker could not defend on basis of holder's alleged violation of his fiduciary duty to beneficiary. Furthermore, maker's payment of debt, even though made with knowledge of holder's wrongful acquisition of notes, would discharge maker's liability thereon under UCC § 3-603(1). Harvey v. Casebeer, 531 S.W.2d 206 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975).

Payment of note by maker discharged liability of maker and all endorser on note. Cipra v. Seeger, 215 Kan. 951, 529 P.2d 130 (1974).

13. —Discharge of accommodation maker.

Evidence that defendant comaker of note signed as accommodation for other comaker, that he received no benefits from loan, and that note was paid off by second comaker supported conclusion that first comaker was accommodation party under UCC § 3-415(1), who was discharged under UCC §§ 3-601(1)(a) and 3-603 when instrument was paid, and that any contract which may have existed to sue the first comaker on note was, therefore, unenforceable. Marcus v. Wilson, 16 Ill. App. 3d 724, 306 N.E.2d 554 (1st Dist. 1973).

Payment of a note by the accommodation maker did not discharge the obligation which it evidenced, nor did it extinguish the lien of the real estate mortgage by which it was secured. Simson v. Bilderbeck, Inc., 76 N.M. 667, 417 P.2d 803 (1966).

14. —Effect of discharge.

In action by Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), as owner-holder of note purchased from bank for which FDIC was receiver, to recover on such note from defendant maker, (1) defendant under UCC § 3-306(d) could not assert FDIC's allegedly illegal acquisition of note as defense, since only the bank in receivership or such bank's shareholders had standing to assert such defense, and (2) if defendant satisfied note by payment to FDIC, he would not risk double liability on note in event bank's sale of note to FDIC should be set aside, but would be discharged from liability under UCC § 3-603(1) (applying South Carolina law; also holding that oral agreement to extend time for paying note was unenforceable under non-UCC statute of frauds). FDIC

v. Moore, 448 F. Supp. 493 (D.C.S.C. 1978).

In suit by purchaser of promissory note to recover thereon, where note was executed in favor of bank by defendants husband and wife as comakers together with defendant husband's partner and partner's wife to consolidate partnership's outstanding notes; where defendant's partner and partner's wife, who were not parties to suit, executed mortgage to bank on two parcels of realty owned by them as security for such note; where first parcel was subject to prior mortgage of third party and judgment of foreclosure had been entered thereon; where plaintiff at suggestion of partner's wife became sole owner of first parcel by redeeming it and having it conveyed to her by means of a "straw" transaction; where plaintiff found buyer for first parcel, buyer's title search discovered bank's mortgage thereon and note for which such mortgage was given, plaintiff purchased note in order to convey marketable title to buyer, note was indorsed by bank to plaintiff, mortgage on first parcel was released and discharged, mortgage on second parcel was assigned to plaintiff, and plaintiff sold first parcel for substantial profit, (1) under UCC § 3-302, plaintiff was holder in due course of note in suit and could recover thereon unless defendants could establish defense to note; (2) only defense raised by defendants was alleged satisfaction of such note on theory that plaintiff had been made whole by virtue of her resale of collateral property (first parcel); and (3) such defense failed since defendants, although benefiting from proceeds of note to extent of their interest in partnership, had never had any title or interest in the collateral property (first parcel), were not subjected in any way to double liability on note, and their liability thereon would be completely discharged under UCC § 3-603 by paying note (stating that any further dispute about liability in the case would have to be settled in separate action). Ryan v. Stearns, 135 Vt. 385, 376 A.2d 728 (1977), but see Licursi v. Sweeney, 156 Vt. 418, 594 A.2d 396 (1991).

15. Extent of discharge.

Where defendants executed promissory note which was delivered to bank, note was guaranteed by Small Business Administration, defendants defaulted on payments under note, and note was assigned in accord with guarantee agreement to S.B.A., which made payment to bank of 50 per cent of unpaid balance of note, fact that government did not own entire equitable interest in note did not prevent government from maintaining suit on note as its legal owner and holder. United States v. Sellers, 487 F.2d 1268 (5th Cir. Tex. 1973).

16. Drawer's liability.

Where checks are returned by the drawee bank to the customer's bank, the latter is the holder as to such checks which it has in its possession but if by inadvertence it returns any of them to the payee, the latter may receive a settlement payment from the drawer of the check which will discharge the checks and bar a subsequent suit by the customer's bank against the drawer, and this is so without regard to the good faith or absence of notice of any defect in title. Chenoweth v. Bank of Dardanelle, 243 Ark. 310, 419 S.W.2d 792 (1967).

Although the drawer of a check has the right to stop payment of it at any time before it has been certified or paid by the drawee, the drawer remains liable, unless he has a defense which is good against the holder. Tidwell v. Bank of Tifton, 115 Ga. App. 555, 155 S.E.2d 451 (1967).

A bank accepting a check from the payee for deposit, crediting the amount thereof to the payee's account and permitting him to withdraw the full amount thereof prior to notice of dishonor is a holder of the check, taking for value, and entitled to recover from the drawer thereon. Pazol v. Citizens Nat'l Bank, 110 Ga. App. 319, 138 S.E.2d 442 (1964).

17. Rights of transferee.

Assignee of guarantor of promissory note, who paid amount due on note and concurrently received note from payee with payee's assignment endorsed thereon, was entitled to sue payor on instrument; UCC § 3-415 and UCC § 3-603 give both accommodation party and stranger to instrument, respectively, rights of recourse on instrument against payor after they have paid or satisfied note. Collection Control Bureau v. Weiss, 50 Cal. App. 3d 865 (2d Dist. 1975).

18. Practice and procedure.

In action on note against two comakers summary judgment against one comaker was improper where other comaker made un rebutted allegation of payment; under UCC § 3-603(2), comaker's defense of payment inured to benefit of other comaker. Barnes v. York, 526 S.W.2d 404 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

In action by holder of promissory note executed by principal maker and two comakers against comakers, where note was stamped with legend indicating it had been paid but where there was scrawl in ink across area bearing stamped legend, case would be remanded for determination whether note had been discharged by payment or cancellation; under UCC § 3-603 maker of note does not lose right to assert that note was discharged by payment merely by leaving it in possession of payee when paying it; holder was not entitled to recover on note if it had been paid, but was entitled to recover if the stamp thereon was unintentional or made under mistake or without authority of holder. Household Fin. Co. v. Watson, 522 S.W.2d 111 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

Where corporation paid note signed by corporation president but not by corporation, corporation acquired rights of transferee and could not enforce note against maker until date when it could have been enforced by transferor; so that corporation as account debtor was not entitled to set-off, since it had had notification of assignment of accounts more than 3 months before claim against assignor on note accrued. Commercial Sav. Bank v. G & J Wood Prods. Co., 46 Mich. App. 133, 207 N.W.2d 401 (1973).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-604.

19. Tender of payment.

Accrual of interest on amount due under promissory note was not stopped under UCC § 3-604(1) by tender of less than full amount owed before the amount tendered was due to be paid. Kohlenberg v. American Plumbing Supply Co., 82 Wis. 2d 384, 263 N.W.2d 496 (1978).

Trial court improperly denied motion to open judgment by confession on promissory note, where maker alleged that he had notice of assignment, he tendered payment to assignees when due, and was ready, willing and able to pay instrument. Lewis v. Palmer, 20 Ill. App. 3d 237, 313 N.E.2d 656 (4th Dist. 1974).

When a party makes a tender of full payment to the holder of a promissory note when or after it is due, he is discharged to the extent of all subsequent liability for interest, costs, and attorney's fees. Still v. Plaza Marina Com. Corp., 21 Cal. App. 3d 378 (5th Dist. 1971).

Reasonable counsel fees incurred by holder of promissory note in successful defense of appeal from judgment for holder may recover from obligor who has expressly agreed to pay such fees in case of default, even though such appeal was prosecuted by co-defendant of obligor; obligor's submission to judgment and his non-participation in prior appeal are not enough to terminate his liability for cost of additional legal services—statute requires tender of full payment. Washington Trust Co. v. Fatone, 106 R.I. 168, 256 A.2d 490 (1969).

20. Decisions under Code 1942 § 129.

Notice given by maker of negotiable notes to payee, of intent to make prepayment, pursuant to provision of mortgage giving privilege to debtor of maturing notes by notice to payee, held not to constitute payee agent of holder of notes to receive payment, where holder was ignorant of giving of notice. Adler v. Interstate Trust & Banking Co., 166 Miss. 215, 146 So. 107, 87 A.L.R. 347 (1933).

Payment to bank of notes made payable there but not left with bank for collection or presented there is not satisfaction, and maker must see that payment is made to legal holder. Adler v. Interstate Trust & Banking Co., 166 Miss. 215, 146 So. 107, 87 A.L.R. 347 (1933).

Maker is charged with notice of defect in title of person in possession of note without endorsement by payee; maker must determine at his peril whether person in possession of note without endorsement by payee is authorized to receive payment. Anderson v. Wm. R. Moore Dry Goods Co., 152 Miss. 312, 119 So. 914 (1929).

"Holder" as used in law relating to payment of negotiable instruments, means person legally in possession thereof, either by indorsement or delivery. Anderson v. Wm. R. Moore Dry Goods Co., 152 Miss. 312, 119 So. 914 (1929).

Payment before maturity binding only on parties receiving payment and privies; duty of maker to require production before making payment. Union Station Trust Co. v. Bostick, 133 Miss. 627, 98 So. 105 (1923).

21. Decisions under Code 1942 § 160.

No presumption that a promissory note has been paid arises from the maker's possession where acquired prior to its maturity. McCaslin v. Willis, 197 Miss. 366, 19 So. 2d 751, 156 A.L.R. 770 (1944).

In action to cancel as cloud on title a deed of trust securing a note claimed by the maker to have been paid in the payee's lifetime, brought against his administratrix, in which the maker introduced testimony as to statements by the payee indicating that the note had been paid, privilege attaching to communications between attorney and client did not make the payee's attorney, who also was the trustee named in the deed of trust, incompetent to testify on behalf of the administratrix as to payee's subsequent instructions in the event that a foreclosure should become necessary. McCaslin v. Willis, 197 Miss. 366, 19 So. 2d 751, 156 A.L.R. 770 (1944).

Where makers of notes, in support of their claim that it had been paid, introduced testimony as to statement of deceased payee against interest that the note was paid, the other party should be permitted to prove contrary statements made by the decedent at a later time. McCaslin v. Willis, 197 Miss. 366, 19 So. 2d 751, 156 A.L.R. 770 (1944).

§ 75-3-604. Discharge by cancellation or renunciation.

(a) A person entitled to enforce an instrument, with or without consideration, may discharge the obligation of a party to pay the instrument (i) by an intentional voluntary act, such as surrender of the instrument to the party, destruction, mutilation, or cancellation of the instrument, cancellation or striking out of the party's signature, or the addition of words to the instrument indicating discharge, or (ii) by agreeing not to sue or otherwise renouncing rights against the party by a signed writing.

(b) Cancellation or striking out of an indorsement pursuant to subsection (a) does not affect the status and rights of a party derived from the indorsement.

I. DECISIONS UNDER UNIFORM COMMERCIAL CODE.

1.-10. [Reserved for future use].

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-605.

11. In general.

UCC § 3-605(1)(b) allows the holder of an instrument to discharge a party thereto to the extent of the holder's interest in the instrument. However, under UCC § 3-116(b), the holder cannot discharge all interests under an instrument that is payable, but not in the alternative, to both himself and another party (holding that UCC § 3-605(1)(b) does not prohibit person from discharging his interest in an instrument by a renunciation contained in a properly executed will). Cantonwine v. Fehling, 582 P.2d 592 (Wyo. 1978).

12. Cancellation or renunciation on face of instrument.

In action by accommodation maker against accommodated party to recover amount paid to holder of note, where holder, after such payment, stamped "paid" on note and delivered it to accommodation maker, (1) under UCC § 3-605(1)(a), holder's indorsement on face of note (by stamping "paid" on note) discharged accommodation maker's liability thereon, (2) such indorsement did not discharge accommodated party's obligation to accommodation maker, since such discharge was not apparent on face of instrument, (3) holder's delivery of note to accommodation maker also did not discharge accommodated party's obligation to accommodation maker under UCC § 3-605(1)(b), (4) under UCC § 3-415(5), accommodation maker, on paying note, had right of recourse thereon against accommodated party, and (5) since accommodation maker was entitled to proceed on the written instrument, trial court erred in applying three-year statute of limitations applicable to actions on oral contracts. Payne v. Payne, 219 Va. 12, 245 S.E.2d 133 (1978).

13. —Intent.

Since UCC § 3-605(1)(a) provides that holder of instrument can discharge debtor by intentionally cancelling instrument, borrower's obligation to lender on note was not extinguished where note, by clerical error, was stamped paid and returned to borrower (holding that lender's writing off borrower's account as bad debt was mere internal accounting procedure that also did not discharge debtor). First Galesburg Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Martin, 58 Ill. App. 3d 113, 373 N.E.2d 1075 (3d Dist. 1978).

Where promissory note was unintentionally marked paid by creditor's employees and sent to debtors, debtors were not discharged from liability under UCC § 3-605(1)(b), since surrender of instrument was not accompanied by creditor's intent to discharge. Peoples Bank of S.C., Inc. v. Robinson, 272 S.C. 155, 249 S.E.2d 784 (1978).

14. Written renunciation; delivery.

UCC § 3-605(1)(b) does not require that delivery of writing renouncing holder's rights in instrument must occur contemporaneously with written renunciation itself, or that such delivery must occur during payee's lifetime (holding that all requirements for effective renunciation of deceased holder's interest in certain promissory notes, as to which holder's will directed forgiveness of makers' liability for payment, were met when will was admitted to probate). Cantonwine v. Fehling, 582 P.2d 592 (Wyo. 1978).

Even though it was payee's intention to release balance due on note if maker survived payee, failure to deliver written release could not be rectified merely by noting abortive attempt to carry out intention. Greene v. Cotton, 457 S.W.2d 493 (Ky. 1970).

15. Surrender of instrument.

Where husband and wife executed promissory note payable to husband's uncle, note was secured by deed of trust on makers' home, and uncle subsequently delivered note to makers, telling them that they should pay him as long as he lived but that after he was gone the home would be theirs, there was sufficient evidence to show that payee renounced his rights by surrendering instrument to parties to be discharged as contemplated by UCC § 3-605. First Nat'l Bank v. Cobler, 215 Va. 852, 213 S.E.2d 800, 96 A.L.R.3d 1137 (1975).

Instrument providing "I will surrender my notes in the amount of $8,500 to John F. Kennedy College" and signed by payee did not indicate outright renunciation of payee's rights under notes, rather, it appeared to refer to UCC § 3-605(1)(b) regarding discharge by surrender of notes; viewed in this light, instrument was unenforceable promise, made without consideration, to surrender notes at some future time and, without actual surrender of notes, they were not discharged. Gorham v. John F. Kennedy College, Inc., 191 Neb. 790, 217 N.W.2d 919 (1974).

16. Oral cancellation or renunciation.

Where holder orally agreed to cancel two promissory notes in return for transfer and lease of maker's bowling alley business, notes were discharged by oral agreement under UCC § 3-601(2); since there was valuable consideration involved in oral agreement between holder and maker, such agreement was not required to be in writing in order to discharge two prior promissory notes; it is only when there is gratuitous discharge that UCC § 3-605(1), requiring a writing, applies. Brunswick Corp. v. Briscoe, 523 S.W.2d 115 (Mo. Ct. App. 1975).

Where defendant signed promissory note payable to her stepfather, now deceased, loan funds came from joint bank account of her mother and stepfather, although funds derived from mother, and defendant alleged cancellation of obligation by mother prior to her death, summary judgment was properly granted to step-father's executor in action on note since depositions established that alleged cancellation by mother was oral and that check for loan was signed by stepfather as drawer; promissory note may not be effectively canceled by simple oral statement. Community Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Gold, 45 A.D.2d 947 (1st Dep't 1974), aff'd, 37 N.Y.2d 831, 378 N.Y.S.2d 29, 340 N.E.2d 465 (1975).

The instant section was referred to in actions upon promissory notes under the prior law, in connection with the plaintiff's contention that an oral release of the notes would not extinguish the notes.

Sherman v. Koufman, 349 Mass. 606, 211 N.E.2d 220 (1965).

17. Other matters.

Where debtor executed new note consolidating amounts owed creditor under several prior notes and, in action on new note following default thereon, defended liability on ground that creditor had not delivered prior notes to debtor, and where creditor's affidavit stated that prior notes had been cancelled and that debtor was not liable on any of them, court held that creditor, under UCC § 3-605(1)(b), effectively renounced its rights under prior notes and that such renunciation would constitute effective defense for debtor in any later action on prior notes. Farmers & Merchants State Bank v. Lloyd, 99 Idaho 416, 582 P.2d 1094 (1978).

Evidence that no specific representations were made to maker of note that he would be relieved of his obligation to bank that held note and that third person would be substituted in his stead, although there was evidence that some understanding had been reached with bank whereby bank would be afforded right to intercept proceeds of maker's stock sale to third person and to deduct amount of note from such funds, did not establish defense of renunciation under UCC § 3-605. Russell v. Northeast Bank, 527 S.W.2d 783 (Tex. Civ. App. 1975), ref. n.r.e. (Jan. 7, 1976).

Bank that issued cashiers' check which was purchased by corporation and made payable to it and plaintiff, a third party, was liable to plaintiff where it allowed corporation to return cashiers' check without plaintiff's indorsement and issued two new cashiers' checks payable to corporation only; although bank would have been justified in relying on presumption of continued ownership of check by corporation, absent any unusual circumstances, there were unusual circumstances in present case sufficient to raise duty of inquiry where, inter alia, bank refused to issue original $25,000 cashiers' check to corporation as drawer-purchaser until plaintiff's earnest money check for $25,000, which was deposited in corporation's account, had cleared, corporation at that time had balance of only $13,000 in its account, and, when plaintiff's $25,000 check cleared, bank issued $25,000 cashiers' check payable to plaintiff and corporation; where president of corporation returned cashiers' check for $25,000 about one month later, notified bank that it had not been used for intended purpose, and requested two new cashiers' checks (one for $15,000 and one for $10,000) payable only to corporation, and, at bank's request, president wrote "not used for purpose issued" on reverse side of $25,000 cashiers' check; where plaintiff, a joint payee, did not indorse cashiers' check for $25,000; and where bank failed to make any inquiry and issued $15,000 and $10,000 cashiers' checks payable to corporation only, as requested, and thereby made possible conversion by corporation of $25,000 of plaintiff's money. Gillespie v.

Riley Mgt. Corp., 59 Ill. 2d 211, 319 N.E.2d 753 (1974).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

18. In general.

Word "renounce," in Negotiable Instruments Law providing renunciation must be in writing unless instrument is delivered up, means release without consideration. Hazlehurst Oil Mill & Fertilizer Co. v. Booze, 160 Miss. 136, 133 So. 120 (1931).

Oral release of liability on promissory note for consideration was valid without instrument being delivered up to persons liable thereon. Hazlehurst Oil Mill & Fertilizer Co. v. Booze, 160 Miss. 136, 133 So. 120 (1931).

§ 75-3-605. Discharge of indorsers and accommodation parties.

(a) In this section, the term "indorser" includes a drawer having the obligation described in Section 75-3-414(d).

(b) Discharge, under Section 75-3-604, of the obligation of a party to pay an instrument does not discharge the obligation of an indorser or accommodation party having a right of recourse against the discharged party.

(c) If a person entitled to enforce an instrument agrees, with or without consideration, to an extension of the due date of the obligation of a party to pay the instrument, the extension discharges an indorser or accommodation party having a right of recourse against the party whose obligation is extended to the extent the indorser or accommodation party proves that the extension caused loss to the indorser or accommodation party with respect to the right of recourse.

(d) If a person entitled to enforce an instrument agrees, with or without consideration, to a material modification of the obligation of a party other than an extension of the due date, the modification discharges the obligation of an indorser or accommodation party having a right of recourse against the person whose obligation is modified to the extent the modification causes loss to the indorser or accommodation party with respect to the right of recourse. The loss suffered by the indorser or accommodation party as a result of the modification is equal to the amount of the right of recourse unless the person enforcing the instrument proves that no loss was caused by the modification or that the loss caused by the modification was an amount less than the amount of the right of recourse.

(e) If the obligation of a party to pay an instrument is secured by an interest in collateral and a person entitled to enforce the instrument impairs the value of the interest in collateral, the obligation of an indorser or accommodation party having a right of recourse against the obligor is discharged to the extent of the impairment. The value of an interest in collateral is impaired to the extent (i) the value of the interest is reduced to an amount less than the amount of the right of recourse of the party asserting discharge, or (ii) the reduction in value of the interest causes an increase in the amount by which the amount of the right of recourse exceeds the value of the interest. The burden of proving impairment is on the party asserting discharge.

(f) If the obligation of a party is secured by an interest in collateral not provided by an accommodation party and a person entitled to enforce the instrument impairs the value of the interest in collateral, the obligation of any party who is jointly and severally liable with respect to the secured obligation is discharged to the extent the impairment causes the party asserting discharge to pay more than that party would have been obliged to pay, taking into account rights of contribution, if impairment had not occurred. If the party asserting discharge is an accommodation party not entitled to discharge under subsection (e), the party is deemed to have a right to contribution based on joint and several liability rather than a right to reimbursement. The burden of proving impairment is on the party asserting discharge.

(g) Under subsection (e) or (f), impairing value of an interest in collateral includes (i) failure to obtain or maintain perfection or recordation of the interest in collateral, (ii) release of collateral without substitution of collateral of equal value, (iii) failure to perform a duty to preserve the value of collateral owed, under Chapter 9 or other law, to a debtor or surety or other person secondarily liable, or (iv) failure to comply with applicable law in disposing of collateral.

(h) An accommodation party is not discharged under subsection (c), (d), or (e) unless the person entitled to enforce the instrument knows of the accommodation or has notice under Section 75-3-419(c) that the instrument was signed for accommodation.

(i) A party is not discharged under this section if (i) the party asserting discharge consents to the event or conduct that is the basis of the discharge, or (ii) the instrument or a separate agreement of the party provides for waiver of discharge under this section either specifically or by general language indicating that parties waive defenses based on suretyship or impairment of collateral.

II. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER UCC § 75-3-606.

11. In general.

This section does not impose duty upon mortgagee, in mortgage covering real estate collateral, who is not in possession of real estate, to look after, care for, maintain and upkeep same, because to do so would have chilling effect on business. West Point Corp. v. New N. Miss. Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 506 So. 2d 241 (Miss. 1986).

This section recognizes that release of one guarantor does not release another when release is made with consent of latter; specific agreement at time of execution of note as to liability notwithstanding release of any other guarantor is equivalent to such consent and is binding. Rauch v. First Nat'l Bank, 244 Ark. 941, 428 S.W.2d 89 (1968).

It is immaterial whether or not the surety is compensated in applying § 3-606. Philco Fin. Co. v. Patton, 248 Or. 310, 432 P.2d 686 (1967).

The fact that a second commercial paper is executed for the original debt does not in itself discharge the original paper. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

12. Applicability.

In action by payee against guarantors of promissory note, where guaranties sued on expressly provided that each guaranty applied to renewals of note, that payee could change or renew the original credit, and that payee could release any one or more of the guarantors without notice or demand and without affecting guarantors' liability, guarantors were not released or discharged from liability by UCC § 3-118(f) and UCC § 3-606(1)(a), since these sections of the Uniform Commercial Code apply only to negotiable instruments and do not apply to guaranty contracts, which are not negotiable. First Nat'l Bank v. Energy Equities Inc., 91 N.M. 11, 569 P.2d 421 (Ct. App. 1977).

Although term "any party" as used in UCC § 3-606 was intended to include parties who sign negotiable instruments ostensibly as makers but who are in fact sureties or accommodation makers, provisions of § 3-606(1)(b) do not apply to comakers; thus, defense of impairment of collateral under § 3-606 was not available to individuals who cosigned corporate note where they executed note as comakers rather than as accommodation parties. Wohlhuter v. St. Charles Lumber & Fuel Co., 62 Ill. 2d 16, 338 N.E.2d 179, 93 A.L.R.3d 1278 (1975).

13. Party to instrument.

Where purchaser of airplane executed chattel mortgage and promissory note in favor of bank, guarantors executed guarantee and bank failed to record chattel mortgage with federal aviation authority for more than two years; guarantors were not "[parties] to the instrument" within meaning of UCC § 3-606, since guarantee, signed by guarantors, was not negotiable instrument and promissory note in question did not incorporate or even make reference to guarantee. National Bank v. Alford, 65 Mich. App. 634, 237 N.W.2d 592 (1975).

Phrase, "any party to the instrument," as used in UCC § 3-606 embraces parties to instrument in addition to drawers and indorsers if they are in position of known surety, but maker of note secured by mortgage does not become surety following transfer of mortgaged property and assumption of debt by another; thus, in action by holder of note secured by mortgage to recover deficiency following default in payment and foreclosure sale, where mortgaged premises had been sold to assuming grantee, discharge benefits of UCC § 3-606 were not available to maker. Commerce Union Bank v. May, 503 S.W.2d 112 (Tenn. 1973).

In action by bank, as payee of notes executed by used car purchasers, against used car dealer to recover unpaid balance due on notes after purchasers defaulted, where dealer had signed notes on back but was not otherwise party to instrument: (1) dealer's signature constituted indorsement of note under UCC § 3-402; (2) since indorsement was not in chain of title, dealer was accommodation indorser under UCC § 3-415 and, since bank took notes with knowledge that he was accommodation indorser, dealer's liability was that of surety; (3) as such, dealer was entitled to such defenses to liability on notes as were afforded to sureties by statute, including UCC § 3-606. First Nat'l Bank v. Hargrove, 503 S.W.2d 856 (Tex. Civ. App. 1973).

The term "any parts to an instrument" is broad enough to include all makers and indorsers. Rushton v. U.M. & M. Credit Corp., 245 Ark. 703, 434 S.W.2d 81 (1968).

Where a corporate note was executed by its president who endorsed it personally, subsequent agreements extending the time of payment signed by the president only in his corporate capacity were not effective to release him from his personal liability as endorser. London Leasing Corp. v. Interfina, Inc., 53 Misc. 2d 657 (1967).

14. Discharge of surety.

Plaintiff bank's failure to perfect its security interest in certain inventory and equipment of defendants, makers of two promissory notes delivered to plaintiff, unjustifiably impaired the collateral (Uniform Commercial Code, § 3-606) and pro tanto discharged the defendants as accommodation parties; although the fine print of the provisions in the notes on which the plaintiff relied to excuse its failure to secure the collateral did not render those provisions unenforceable since the print is not illegible and the defendants could be expected to understand the provisions in the notes, the creditor's failure to file a lien resulting in a loss of collateral pro tanto discharges the surety, unless excused by clear and unequivocal language in the agreement between the parties. Plaintiff's failure to properly file the financing statement was not relieved by the consent of the defendants, since a release of collateral, which defendants had consented to in the notes, is not equated with the failure to file a lien, and the provisions in the notes that no omission to do any act not requested by the obligors shall be deemed a failure to exercise reasonable care and that the bank shall not be deemed to waive any of its rights or remedies unless in writing and signed are directed toward a waiver of the plaintiff's rights, not the performance of an obligation of the plaintiff owing to the defendants. Additionally, although defendants could have filed the financing statement themselves, the creditor has an obligation to preserve the value and validity of the lien of collateral, and defendants could well have assumed that plaintiff would file properly; as between plaintiff and defendants, the loss for failure to file should fall on the party whose conduct was primarily responsible for the incidence of the loss. Executive Bank v. Tighe, 66 A.D.2d 70 (2d Dep't 1978).

Where (1) maker of promissory notes negotiated them on strength of guarantor's guaranty thereof and willingness to pledge two certificates of deposit as security for their repayment, and (2) notes contained request by maker for credit life insurance which bank that made loan to maker did not obtain, court held that guarantor was not discharged as surety on notes under UCC § 3-601(1)(f), dealing with discharge of party from liability on an instrument by fraudulent and material alteration of instrument, since bank's failure to procure life insurance for maker did not constitute alteration of terms of notes but was, at most, a violation of bank's obligations thereunder (also holding that although bank's failure to procure the life insurance impaired collateral within meaning of UCC § 3-606(1)(b), guarantor expressly consented to such impairment when he signed guaranty agreement). DeKalb County Bank v. Haldi, 146 Ga. App. 257, 246 S.E.2d 116 (1978).

Contention of guarantor of note that he was discharged from liability under UCC

§ 3-606(1)(a) - providing that party to instrument is discharged from liability if holder releases certain other parties without such party's consent—because signature of coguarantor was forged was not sustainable, since holder's failure to insure genuineness of signatures on note did not constitute release of party whose signature was forged or agreement by holder not to sue such party. Residential Indus. Loan Co. v. Brown, 559 F.2d 438 (5th Cir. Ga. 1977).

An agreement by the holder of a note to suspend the right to enforce for 113 days, 21 days longer than the period of the original note, was an extension beyond that authorized by UCC § 3-118(f) and when made without the consent of the endorser discharges the endorser under UCC § 3-606(1)(a). Citizens State Bank v. Beermann Bros. Dehy, 188 Neb. 597, 198 N.W.2d 458 (1972).

Under the Code, an accommodation party is released by an extension granted a secondary party in the absence of an effective reservation of rights against him. Parnes v. Celia's, Inc., 99 N.J. Super. 179, 239 A.2d 19 (App. Div. 1968).

15. Discharge of original parties.

Notwithstanding that technically there remained on paper sufficient realty-collateral to secure the loan, the holder of a promissory note unreasonably impaired the value of realty-security so as to release the original maker when he subsequently executed an agreement subordinating his right to payment, released a part of the realty-security in exchange for partial payment of note's principal, and allowed an increase in the interest rate. Hughes v. Tyler, 485 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. 1986).

Where (1) law partnership, prior to dissolution, borrowed money by means of unsecured note that was executed by all three partners, (2) after dissolution of partnership and default on note, renewal note was executed and signed by all partners, (3) thereafter, all subsequent renewal notes were signed only by one partner, and (4) issue was whether last renewal note so signed was binding on all partners or only on partner who signed such note, court held that under UCC § 3-606(1)(a), acceptance by lender (plaintiff) of renewal notes signed only by one partner without knowledge and consent of other partners, even if executed by signing partner on behalf of partnership, discharged nonsigning partners, since under the statute, "any party to the instrument" (including party primarily liable as well as one secondarily liable) would be discharged under such circumstances. United Counties Trust Co. v. Podvey, 160 N.J. Super. 244, 389 A.2d 515 (L. Div. 1978).

Husband, who was comaker with wife of promissory note secured by automobile owned by wife, was not discharged under UCC § 3-606(1)(a) by note holder's release of collateral to wife where husband failed to show that he had right of contribution or recourse against wife in event he was compelled to pay note. Beneficial Fin. Co. v. Husner, 82 Misc. 2d 550 (1975).

Where sole stockholders of corporation signed promissory note in both personal and corporate capacity, loan was important to preservation of their interest in corporation and note contained clause stating that all signers were principals, individuals signed note in capacity of comakers and knowingly incurred personal liability; accordingly, defenses enumerated in UCC § 3-606 and, in particular, defense that there was unjustifiable impairment of collateral, was not available to them. Wohlhuter v. St. Charles Lumber & Fuel Co., 25 Ill. App. 3d 812, 323 N.E.2d 134 (2d Dist. 1975), aff'd, 62 Ill. 2d 16, 338 N.E.2d 179, 93 A.L.R.3d 1278 (1975).

Where bank held partnership note and where two or three days before note was due bank was informed that one partner was buying other partner's interest in partnership and was assuming all liabilities of business and that withdrawing partner did not want note extended and would not sign renewal note, evidence that bank twice accepted payment of interest from continuing partner after note was due did not establish that bank made enforceable promise not to sue continuing partner and, thus, withdrawing partner was not discharged under UCC § 3-606. Glover v. National Bank of Commerce, 258 Ark. 771, 529 S.W.2d 333 (1975).

In action on promissory note against husband and wife as comakers in which plaintiffs entered into joint stipulation dismissing with prejudice claim against husband after he received discharge in bankruptcy, such dismissal by plaintiffs of their action against husband did not operate to discharge wife under UCC § 3-606 because any judgment taken against husband on indebtedness already discharged in bankruptcy would have been rendered null and void under Bankruptcy Act. Wirth v. Heavey, 508 S.W.2d 263 (Mo. Ct. App. 1974).

Payee renounced his rights to $2,000 of $10,000 note by letter to maker of note stating that it was payee's "understanding" that $2,000 was to be applied against debt of third party to maker and that in exchange third party would pay payee $2,000. Ferguson v. D.S.A. Inc., 430 S.W.2d 553 (Tex. Civ. App. 1968).

This section, discharging "any party to the instrument" for impairment of recourse or of collateral without such party's consent, is broad enough to include all makers and endorser; whether party seeking relief is accommodation endorser is immaterial. Rushton v. U.M. & M. Credit Corp., 245 Ark. 703, 434 S.W.2d 81 (1968).

The execution of a refinancing modification and extension agreement does not in itself discharge the parties to the original note. A.J. Armstrong Co. v. Janburt Embroidery Corp., 97 N.J. Super. 246, 234 A.2d 737 (L. Div. 1967).

16. Impairment of collateral.

Notwithstanding that technically there remained on paper sufficient realty-collateral to secure the loan, the holder of a promissory note unreasonably impaired the value of realty-security so as to release the original maker when he subsequently executed an agreement subordinating his right to payment, released a part of the realty-security in exchange for partial payment of note's principal, and allowed an increase in the interest rate. Hughes v. Tyler, 485 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. 1986).

A holder of a promissory note is not at liberty to dispose of the collateral as he sees fit to the detriment of a nonprotected party, and then expect the nonprotected party to make up the difference between the impaired collateral and the debt.

Hughes v. Tyler, 485 So. 2d 1026 (Miss. 1986).

Bank's assignment of partnership note to corporation in consideration for execution of corporation note to bank while retaining deed of trust which is collateral for partnership note does not impermissibly impair collateral where deed of trust is still in full force and effect and may be foreclosed at proper time and where if corporation pays note to bank it will be entitled to assignment of deed of trust by bank. Smith & Hitt Constr. Co. v. Fowler, 466 So. 2d 896 (Miss. 1985).

In an action by a bank against the endorser of two promissory notes executed by the corporate maker of whom the endorser was secretary and treasurer, the trial court erred in failing to direct a verdict for the endorser where the bank neglected to file its security interest with the office of the secretary of state as required by § 75-9-401(c) even though the collateral agreement included all furniture, appliances and fixtures owned by the maker and where the bank thereby discharged the endorser by impairing the collateral as provided in § 75-3-606(1)(b). Huey v. Port Gibson Bank, 390 So. 2d 1005 (Miss. 1980).

Under UCC § 3-606(1)(b), the unjustifiable impairment of collateral for the instrument must be without the consent of the party claiming discharge on the instrument. Accordingly, an accommodation party cannot successfully claim discharge on a note under UCC § 3-606(1)(b) where the note specifically provided that the holder of the instrument could surrender any collateral therefor without affecting the accommodation party's liability (where secured party surrendered collateral for note by failing to perfect its security interest). Haney v. Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank, 362 So. 2d 1250 (Miss. 1978).

Availability of defense of impairment of collateral under UCC § 3-606(1)(b) is not limited to accommodation party, but is expressly made available to any party to the instrument. Mikanis Trading Corp. v. Block, 59 A.D.2d 689 (1st Dep't 1977).

Bank was not entitled to recover against endorser of two promissory notes where bank breached its duty to endorser when it released collateral under security agreement securing notes without knowledge or consent of endorser and where value of collateral released by bank was sufficient to satisfy outstanding indebtedness represented by notes which endorser had endorsed. Guida v. Exchange Nat'l Bank, 308 So. 2d 148 (Fla. App. 1975).

Where automobile dealer assigned and indorsed contract of sale and note to bank, together with insurance policy which was itself collateral for note, and bank failed to replace policy after it was canceled, or to notify dealer of policy's cancellation, bank impaired collateral under UCC § 3-606(1)(b) and thus discharged dealer's indorsement. Arlington Bank & Trust v. Nowell Motors, Inc., 511 S.W.2d 415 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

In suit by automobile dealership against bank to recover funds paid bank under assigned and indorsed contract of sale when purchaser of vehicle failed to pay in accordance with provisions of note, automobile dealership was entitled to discharge on its indorsement under UCC § 3-606(a)(2) where bank violated contractual duty to preserve insurance policy which was collateral for note by failing to replace policy which had been canceled. Arlington Bank & Trust v. Nowell Motors, Inc., 511 S.W.2d 415 (Tex. Civ. App. 1974).

Plaintiff's failure to file financing statement in accordance with Article 9 of Code rendered his security interest in collateral subordinate to that of Trustee in Bankruptcy, and produced unjustifiable impairment of collateral, discharging defendants from obligation as personal guarantors of indebtedness on chattel mortgage notes. First Bank & Trust Co. v. Post, 10 Ill. App. 3d 127, 293 N.E.2d 907 (1st Dist. 1973).

Car salesman, who had taken chattel mortgage as security for payment of note but failed or neglected to file mortgage, leaving accommodation maker of note unprotected, discharged accommodation maker, since chattel mortgage was impaired "collateral". Shaffer v. Davidson, 445 P.2d 13 (Wyo. 1968).

The instant section was referred to, for comparison purposes, in a case decided under the prior law in which it was held that an accommodation maker was not in the position of a surety so as to be discharged by an impairment of collateral by the payee. In the same case the court pointed out that under the Uniform Commercial Code "an accommodation party is always a surety" and that the "suretyship defenses ... are not limited to parties who are 'secondarily liable', but are available to any party who is in the position of a surety, having a right of recourse either on the instrument or dehors it, including an accommodation maker or acceptor known to the holder to be so." Rose v. Homsey, 347 Mass. 259, 197 N.E.2d 603 (1964).

17. —Notice of impairment.

Guarantor of note was not discharged from liability by UCC § 3-606(1)(b), despite his contention that collateral securing underlying debt had been impaired by holder of note, where (1) alleged impairment of collateral—namely, mechanic's lien filed against realty constituting collateral—had occurred before guarantor signed guarantee of note, and (2) promisee had had nothing to do with filing of such lien. Residential Indus. Loan Co. v. Brown, 559 F.2d 438 (5th Cir. Ga. 1977).

18. Extent of discharge.

Indorser of negotiable instrument is entitled to protection afforded him by any specific security for payment of debt that principal debtor may have given holder or which holder may have acquired by operation of law, and if holder releases or voluntarily destroys any part of such security, indorser is discharged to extent that such security would have gone to pay debt (holding that while subordination of second mortgage to rank of third mortgage impaired subrogation rights of indorsers of handnote sued on, indorsers were not thereby discharged from liability on such note under UCC § 3-601(1)(d) and § 3-606(1)(b), since they completely failed to show extent of any prejudice from such subordination and also failed to show that collateral had been released without their knowledge or consent). Poynot v. J & T Devs., Inc., 355 So. 2d 1052 (La. App. 1978).

Where co-debtor who had guaranteed loans to corporation brought action against bank and other debtor alleging that bank and other debtor conspired to impair collateral for notes by disposing of inventory without proper payment arrangements, among other things, but where alleged indebtedness of corporation to bank was settled and compromised subsequent to award of damages by jury, pursuant to UCC § 3-606 co-debtor was entitled to relief only to extent impairment affected his liability on behalf of corporation and, thus, co-debtor was not entitled to affirmative relief as there was no indebtedness to bank by corporation at time of judgment. Cleburne Nat'l Bank v. Kenedco, Inc., 547 S.W.2d 67 (Tex. Civ. App. 1977), writ ref'd n.r.e., (June 22, 1977).

In action by holder against individual indorser and guarantor of promissory note in which defendant contended that he had been completely discharged from liability under UCC § 3-606(1)(b) because of holder's unjustifiable impairment of collateral by failing to perfect security interest therein, defendant was discharged from liability only to extent of such unjustifiable impairment. Thus, since extent of impairment of collateral was its value as evidenced by amount for which it was sold at public auction, plaintiff was still entitled to judgment for difference between amount outstanding on note and amount realized on sale of collateral, plus interest. Mikanis Trading Corp. v. Block, 59 A.D.2d 689 (1st Dep't 1977).

In creditor's suit against guarantor of note secured by mortgage on debtor's realty, creditor's failure to record mortgage for one year impaired both value of such collateral and also guarantor's right as surety to be subrogated to all of creditor's rights against debtor, including right to proceed against any security of debtor in creditor's hands. In such case under UCC § 3-606(1)(b), if impairment of collateral can be measured in monetary terms, monetary amount of impairment will measure extent of guarantor's discharge from liability on note. However, if monetary amount of impairment cannot be ascertained, guarantor will be discharged of all liability on instrument (remanding cause for determination of extent of impairment of collateral). Langeveld v. L.R.Z.H. Corp., 74 N.J. 45, 376 A.2d 931, 95 A.L.R.3d 949 (1977).

Notwithstanding accommodation party who signed note as maker would otherwise have been jointly and severally liable on note as co-maker under UCC § 3-118 and § 3-415, accommodation party was totally discharged under UCC §§ 3-606 and 9-306 by secured creditor's impairment of collateral where collateral, which was not in possession of secured creditor, was sold by principal debtor with express authority of secured creditor and value of collateral exceeded value of debt. Beneficial Fin. Co. v. Marshall, 551 P.2d 315 (Okla. Ct. App. 1976).

Payee discharged maker of note to extent of security released to one guarantor as part of transaction in which payee obtained part payment, where maker had not consented to release of security. Magnolia Homes Mfg. Corp. v. Montgomery, 451 F.2d 934 (8th Cir. Mo. 1971).

On discharge, guarantor has right to sell collateral at public or private sale without notice, but under UCC § 3-606 they could not dispose of the collateral at substantially less than its reasonable value without consent of maker of note. Magnolia Homes Mfg. Corp. v. Montgomery, 451 F.2d 934 (8th Cir. Mo. 1971).

19. Actions not impairing collateral.

Airplane seller's surety obligations under aircraft repurchase agreement, executed in connection with seller's assignment of aircraft security agreement covering purchase price of airplane to secured party, were not discharged under UCC § 3-606 by secured party's failure to repossess despite buyer's lateness in making payments and secured party's knowledge that buyer was permitting aircraft to be used for commercial purposes; UCC does not impose duties upon creditors not in possession of collateral. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. Hatton, 429 F. Supp. 997 (N.D. Tex. 1977).

Note owner's unjustifiable delay in recording mortgage, which occasioned a loss of priority of mortgage, impaired value of mortgage as collateral, and diminished right of subrogation of guarantor, will discharge such guarantor to degree commensurate with impairment of said collateral measured by monetary loss, or will completely discharge such guarantor where impairment not capable of measurement by monetary loss. Langeveld v.

Holder of promissory note had no obligation to demand additional collateral from defaulting debtor before he proceeded against accommodation indorser; holder's failure to record note did not constitute "unjustifiable impairment of collateral" under UCC § 3-606(1)(b), relieving accommodation indorser of any further obligation on note, since recording of promissory note would not convert it into security interest in obligor's property, absent collateral, and no collateral accompanied note in question. First State Bank v. Raiton, 377 F. Supp. 859 (E.D. Pa. 1974).

Where bank took promissory note which was signed by defendant, corporation president, in her representative capacity and also personally indorsed by her, in exchange for $5,600 corporate loan which was secured by security interest in corporation's inventory and stock in trade, evidence did not establish that bank unjustifiably impaired collateral so as to discharge defendant within meaning of UCC § 3-606(1)(b), since defendant, as corporate president, was in better position than bank to protect collateral in possession of corporation. Tampa Bay Bank v. Loveday, 526 S.W.2d 480 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1974).

Payee-holder of note, executed by corporate debtor and secured by security agreement covering equipment and fixtures, had no duty under UCC to accommodation indorsers to file security agreement to protect collateral for indorsers; nor did payee-holder's failure to file security agreement constitute unjustifiable impairment of collateral under UCC § 3-606, thus discharging accommodation indorsers upon bankruptcy of debtor, where security agreement itself provided that debtor would pay cost of filing security agreement, where payee-holder was not relying on collateral primarily but was relying on indorsers, where indorsers were interested in loan, one indorser being seller of equipment and lessor of building in which it was located and others being officers and directors of corporate debtor, and where bankruptcy of corporate debtor was voluntary, indicating that indorsers had knowledge of financial situation of maker of note. First Citizens Bank & Trust Co. v. Larson, 22 N.C. App. 371, 206 S.E.2d 775 (1974), cert. denied, 286 N.C. 214, 209 S.E.2d 315 (1974).

Bank's failure to record leases and assignment did not impair collateral (assigned leases) so as to release unconditional indorser of promissory note. Hurt v. Citizens Trust Co., 128 Ga. App. 224, 196 S.E.2d 349 (1973).

20. Express reservation vitiating impairment.

In action against guarantor to recover balance due on loan, where guarantor, instead of making good on its guaranty, advised creditor to dispose of collateral over extended period of time through liquidator specially recommended by guarantor, but creditor sold collateral at public auction and net proceeds of sale were insufficient to pay off balance due on loan, guarantor could not successfully contend that because of creditor's failure to follow guarantor's recommendation for disposing of collateral, collateral was thereby unjustifiably impaired so as to discharge guarantor under UCC § 3-606(1)(b), since guarantor had waived its right to claim such discharge by consenting in its guaranty to auction sale as appropriate method for disposal of collateral. Moreover, such consent was not vitiated by creditor's alleged failure to meet its obligation under UCC § 9-504(3) to dispose of collateral in commercially reasonable manner—which obligation assertedly was not met because of creditor's failure to follow guarantor's recommendation which purportedly would have resulted in a higher price for the collateral—since UCC § 9-507(2) expressly states that fact that different method of disposition would have produced a better price does not of itself establish that sale was not made in a commercially reasonable manner. In addition, UCC § 9-507(2) also states that disposition of collateral that has been approved in any judicial proceeding shall conclusively be deemed to be commercially reasonable, and in present case sale of collateral had been approved by court in debtor's receivership proceedings, and guarantor had not attempted to restrain such sale after creditor had committed itself to an auction sale. Rhode Island Hosp. Trust Nat'l Bank v. National Health Found., 119 R.I. 823, 384 A.2d 301 (1978).

In suit on installment note and security agreement executed by defendant as note's comaker, defendant was not discharged from liability under UCC § 3-606(1)(b) on ground that plaintiff had wrongfully impaired note's collateral where instrument contained provision authorizing plaintiff to release collateral without consent of or notice to defendant and without any effect on defendant's liability. In such case, consent is deemed to have been given in advance and right to claim discharge from liability is waived. McBurnett v. National City Bank, 142 Ga. App. 505, 236 S.E.2d 179 (1977).

Where payee assigned promissory note to credit corporation with recourse and subject to agreement that credit corporation could, without notice to payee, grant extension of time for payment, where maker defaulted after several extensions of time had been granted by credit corporation, and where credit corporation sued payee for indebtedness represented by note and assignment, payee was precluded from relying on defense that credit corporation had unjustifiably impaired collateral under UCC § 3-606(1)(b) by granting extensions of time to maker since payee had given its consent to such extensions of time, without notice. Commercial Credit Equip. Corp. v. Southeastern Uni-Loader, Inc., 134 Ga. App. 156, 213 S.E.2d 536 (1975).

In action by bank on corporate notes made in connection with $100,000 corporate loan, against guarantors of those notes following maker-corporation's bankruptcy, bank's failure to perfect its security interest in corporation's liquor license did not constitute impairment of collateral sufficient to discharge sureties under UCC § 3-606(1)(b) on theory that had bank perfected, sureties, as bank's subrogees, would have prevailed over corporation's trustee in bankruptcy, where, under guaranty agreement, bank was not required to perfect or even to acquire security interests in any of corporation's property as prerequisite to guarantors' liability, guarantors had waived their right to subrogation, bank had expressly reserved right to waive and release security at any time, there was no absence of good faith on part of bank within meaning of UCC § 1-201(19), and there was nothing unreasonable in terms of guaranty agreement. American Bank of Commerce v. Covolo, 88 N.M. 405, 540 P.2d 1294 (1975).

Endorsers and guarantors of note secured by deed of trust on 2 separate properties were not discharged as guarantors by holder's release of one property as collateral, where note contained advance consent contemplated by § 3-606. Tolzman v. Gwynn, 22 Md. App. 564, 324 A.2d 179 (1974).

Guarantor-indorser of note secured by collateral was not discharged thereon by bank's failure to file financing statement where, under provisions of guaranty agreement and collateral note, guarantor consented to impairment of collateral. Greene v. Bank of Upson, 231 Ga. 287, 201 S.E.2d 463 (1973).

Even if bank disbursed funds from account without authority, such action would not have discharged guarantors under § 3-606(1)(b), where guaranty agreement and note contained provision authorizing bank to surrender or release collateral. Twisdale v. Georgia R.R. Bank & Trust Co., 129 Ga. App. 18, 198 S.E.2d 396 (1973).

Where loan for which note was given was also secured by bill of sale conveying certain furnishings and equipment, and note provided that holder might without notice surrender all or any part of collateral, temporary loan of equipment by maker to another would not effect pro tanto discharge as to guarantors of note. Liberty Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Interstate Motel Developers, Inc., 346 F. Supp. 888 (S.D. Ga. 1972).

Evidence that when 1965 model automobile which was pledged as collateral for note burned, insurance company with consent of holder of note provided owner with 1966 model automobile in substitution, would support finding that collateral was not impaired by substitution so as to discharge cosigner from his obligation upon default. Hunter v. Community Loan & Inv. Corp., 127 Ga. App. 142, 193 S.E.2d 55 (1972).

Failure to file a security interest did not release endorers of a promissory note where they had consented to a release of the collateral by the creditors. Lafayette Bank & Trust Co. v. Silver, 58 Misc. 2d 891 (1969).

Under terms of instrument in question defendant had consented to surrender or release of collateral and could not urge Code provisions regarding unjustifiable impairment of collateral, as grounds for discharge; hence, trial judge did not err in granting plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. Reeves v. Hunnicutt, 119 Ga. App. 806, 168 S.E.2d 663 (1969).

21. Express reservation; notice.

"Agreement not to execute" entered into by comaker and holder of note did not serve to discharge other comaker since agreement contained express reservation of rights against other comaker; and notification to other comaker was not prerequisite to validity of reservation of rights against comaker. Hallowell v. Turner, 95 Idaho 392, 509 P.2d 1313 (1973).

There is no requirement under the Code that notice be given an accommodation party that rights against him have been reserved when an extension of time is given the primary party. Parnes v. Celia's, Inc., 99 N.J. Super. 179, 239 A.2d 19 (App. Div. 1968).

Indorsers upon a note given by a conditional buyer to a conditional seller were not discharged under subsection (1)(a) of this section by the creditor's assent to an assignment for benefit of creditors by the debtor, nor by the creditor's acceptance of a dividend thereunder, where the creditor made an express reservation of rights against the indorsers both in the note and in the letter of assent to the assignment. Priggen Steel Bldgs. Co. v. Parsons, 350 Mass. 62, 213 N.E.2d 252 (1966).

22. Practice and procedure.

Where bank held partnership note and where two or three days before note was due bank was informed that one partner was buying other partner's interest in partnership and was assuming all liabilities of business and that withdrawing partner did not want note extended and would not sign renewal note, evidence that bank twice accepted payment of interest from continuing partner after note was due did not establish that bank made enforceable promise not to sue continuing partner and, thus, withdrawing partner was not discharged under UCC § 3-606. Glover v. National Bank of Commerce, 258 Ark. 771, 529 S.W.2d 333 (1975).

In action by bank as holder of promissory note against corporation and two individuals who signed note: (1) failure of bank to perfect purchase money security interest in collateral given as security for note by properly filing financing statement in manner prescribed by UCC § 9-401 was unjustifiable impairment of collateral as contemplated by UCC § 3-606; (2) however, discharge of party to negotiable instrument by reason of unjustifiable impairment of collateral was defense available only to secondary and accommodation parties; (3) where it was clear from face of instrument that individual signers intended to sign note other than as endorers but there was dispute as to which capacity, parol evidence was admissible to show intention of parties as to capacity in which instrument was signed; and (4) evidence that loan in present case was made directly to two individual signers as principal debtors (i.e., makers), together with evidence concerning structure of corporation, active solicitation of loan by individual signers, and fact that one individual signor was director of bank, was sufficient to show that individual signers signed note as makers rather than accommodation parties. Peoples Bank v. Pied Piper Retreat, Inc., 158 W. Va. 170, 209 S.E.2d 573 (1974).

There was no direct evidence of value of property covered by corporate co-maker's mortgage released by payee without individual maker's consent; even assuming that generally value of mortgaged property exceeded amount of debt, it was not error for trial court to have found that individual maker had failed to prove value of security released. Christensen v. McAtee, 256 Or. 333, 473 P.2d 659 (1970).

When it is claimed that there has been a reservation of rights against an accommodation party, such reservation may be shown by a letter written by the holder to the accommodated party and other circumstances of the transaction. Parnes v.

Celia's, Inc., 99 N.J. Super. 179, 239 A.2d 19 (App. Div. 1968).

Judgment in action on note could be rendered against surety on pleadings, where surety alleged substitution of collateral by principal but failed to timely allege that substitution increased surety's risk by impairing collateral. Buffington v. Nalley Disct. Co., 117 Ga. App. 820, 162 S.E.2d 212 (1968).

Defense asserting oral agreement to forgive debt not germane since there was no written renunciation of note or surrender thereof; therefore motion to strike defense from answer, granted. Bihlmire v. Hahn, 43 F.R.D. 503 (E.D. Wis. 1967).

III. DECISIONS UNDER FORMER STATUTES.

23. In general.

Release of an unlimited indorser after judgment discharges subsequent limited indorsers. Fish Meal Co. v. Brondum, 242 Miss. 573, 135 So. 2d 825 (1961).

So long as the holder of a promissory note does not put himself in a position whereby he could not sue immediately for the amount due, an extension of the time of payment does not discharge an endorser. Barnett v. First Nat'l Bank, 201 Miss. 613, 29 So. 2d 922 (1947).

When the holder of accommodation paper extends the time of its payment by a binding agreement with the accommodated party without the knowledge or consent of the maker or indorser, the holder knowing the actual character of the paper at the time of the extension, the accommodation maker or indorser is thereby discharged from liability. Hederman v. Cox, 188 Miss. 21, 193 So. 19 (1940).

Agreement to extend time of payment must be positive, and supported by new and valuable consideration, in order to release surety. Graham v. Pepple, 132 Miss. 612, 97 So. 180, 30 A.L.R. 1278 (1923).
